Hundreds of rockets rain down on Kabul

By JOHN JENNINGS
Associated Press Writer

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Rebels rained shells on the capital today, killing or wounding at least 1,000 people before government forces captured their positions, Defense Ministry officials said.

Fundamentalist Hezb-e-Islami rebels, led by Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, were blamed for what the Defense Ministry said was the worst assault on Kabul since Muslim insurgents replaced President Najibullah last April.

Instead of bringing peace after 14 years of civil war, the fall of the Communist government only set the stage for a power struggle between rival rebel groups.

After nearly 12 hours of relentless rocketing, pro-government forces claimed they repulsed a Hezb-e-Islami offensive that began before dawn today.

"We have captured most of Hekmatyar's positions from which he has fired on the city and brought such great bloodshed," said Haji Dilali, a Defense Ministry spokesman.

"From now on we want people to be assured that they will be spared these kinds of attacks," he said.

Isatullah, a Hezb-e-Islami commander, had said earlier that his rebels launched their offensive to counter attacks by pro-government troops. Defense Ministry officials refused to comment on the charge.

Thousands of frightened residents commandeered donkeys, horse-drawn carts and battered old trucks to flee the capital during the overnight bombardment.

Several witnesses said they saw dozens of bodies partially buried in the rubble of neighborhoods destroyed by the incessant rocketing.

Doctors fled a government-run hospital in the heart of the worst hit area, leaving behind hundreds of screaming patients, said another eyewitness.

The Red Cross hospital was forced to suspend surgery after shells hit it on Saturday, agency spokesman Jean-Michael Mono said. He said the hospital treated at least 700 people over the weekend, but he couldn't say how many of those had died.

One western military expert said he heard at least 600 rockets slam into the capital within an hour today. As the day wore on the shelling began to ease and by early evening only the sounds of sporadic fire could be heard.

Muslim factions are bitterly divided along religious, ethnic and tribal lines. Almost 4,000 people, mostly civilians, have been killed or wounded since the rebels ousted the Communists, their common enemy.

At least a half dozen cease-fire agreements have been crafted since May. All have been broken and there was no indication that a lasting peace was in sight.

The latest round of fighting began last week, pitting rival Sunni and Shiite rebels against each other as well as pro-government forces against Hezb-e-Islami.

All the combatants fire indiscriminately. They have mountains of arms and ammunition accumulated during their civil war, most from the United States and Saudi Arabia.

Defense ministry officials said rival Sunni and Shiite guerrillas seemed to be observing a truce Monday, although they weren't optimistic it would last.

Hekmatyar threatened last week to close Kabul's airport unless the Islamic government evicted a commando-style militia led by Gen. Rashid Dostam, who controls the airport.

Dostam once fought for Najibullah. He is reviled by Hekmatyar's forces as a Communist traitor.

Since then Hekmatyar's forces have pounded the airport almost daily destroying several aircraft and closing it to commercial traffic.

Optimist Club provides alternatives

By MARK SPENCER

All summer long, 804 Pampa children participated in neatly organized summer baseball and softball programs.

Last week, 100 little leaguers from four states competed in a double elimination tournament at Optimist Park on a field that was manicured like a major league stadium and had seating for nearly 1,000 people.

This fall and winter, about 700 Pampa youths will converge on the hardwood and the football fields for enjoyable basketball and football games.

Very few of these kids sent or will send thank you notes to the games' organizers. And none of the approximate 180 members of the Pampa Optimist Club expect them to do so.

They enjoy being the people behind the scenes of the children's smiles.

Everything we do is done on a total volunteer basis from the guy on the P.A. system to the one who sweeps up the trash after its over," Optimist Club member Brenda Moody said. "We're here to help the kids. Our motto is 'Friend of the Youth'. That's what we try to be."

It's not always easy, however.

Before games, the volunteers often have to cut their own work days short to clean up a seating area or mow playing fields. Afterwards, they stay late, make sure every last light is turned off and put every piece of trash in its proper place.

"The satisfaction is watching your own kid and the other kids grow up together doing something safe and fun," Moody said. "If what we are doing has saved just one kid from roaming the streets or trying drugs or whatever, it's worth it."

These days, most of the volunteers are parents of the children who play the games.

Donations aid parks program

By ANGELA LEGGETT
Staff Writer

Utility bill donations have provided the Community Services Department of Pampa nearly $35,000 to spend on a 1992-93 Parks Development Program for park improvements.

"The program is aimed at the development of parks throughout the city for the enjoyment of children, adults and families," said Reed Kirkpatrick, parks director.

Funds for the project will be used primarily from utility bill donations, park officials said. The estimated date of completion for the project is April 1, 1993.

"Parks throughout Pampa will be enhanced with the addition of cook-out grills, picnic tables, water fountains, park benches, spring seesaws, swing sets, and modular playground equipment," said Bill Hildebrandt, director of community services. "Additions to each park will depend largely on the usage of the park."

Completion of the project will take quite a bit of extra equipment, he said. Assembly and installation will be taken care of in-house.

The department's 11 full-time employees will be working on the project throughout the winter.

There will be a few limitations, Hildebrandt said. But, in the winter afternoons the temperature is usually above freezing and the workers will be able to complete outdoor projects.

The utility bill donation program has existed for two and a half years. Of each $1 donated, 75 cents is placed in a special account to be used exclusively for park improvements. The remaining portion is divided between 15 cents to Clean Pampa, Inc. and 10 cents for seasonal decoration, park officials said.

"During the first 18 months, donations received for park improvements were spent on revitalizing a previously dormant sprinkler repair and installation project," Hildebrandt said in a news release Friday. "At that time, only 30 percent of Pampa parks had active sprinkler systems."

To date, utilizing thousands of hours of labor and over $50,000 in parks donations, two-thirds of Pampa's 31 parks have operating sprinkler systems, Hildebrandt said.

Deciding what to spend the funds on required the directors to tour the parks, take inventory of what is at each park, how often the items are used and decide what they need.

Improvements will include sand-blasting and repainting the Marcus Sanders swimming pool and a new heater for the M.K. Brown swimming pool.

"A project of annual tree planting and replacement also will be initiated in early 1993," Hildebrandt said. "In the initial year, trees will be added to areas weakened by disease, extreme weather and other conditions during the past several years. The renovation of the dilapidated parks and recreation building 'rounds out' an aggressive parks improvements effort."

The city of Pampa has 31 parks covering 320 acres, including 134 acres for Recreation Park.

The idea of $1 donations through utility bills came from another town.

"Borger had a similar idea," Kirkpatrick said. "We discussed it at a Clean Pampa meeting and presented it to the Parks Board and eventually to the commissioners."

Hildebrandt said paying a dollar is a volunteer program.

City Manager Glen Hackler said, "Pampa's parks are one of our greatest assets. We are committed to a level of program and services which continues this commitment to a superior quality of life."

City Commission to air budget

Pampa City Commission will conduct a public hearing Tuesday for the proposed 1992-93 annual operating budget and program of services for the city of Pampa.

The item is scheduled for the 6 p.m. regular meeting of the commission.

The operating budget and program of services, if approved, will continue the efficient and effective delivery of services to the residents of Pampa while maintaining an emphasis on enhanced quality of life and an aggressive infrastructure maintenance program, said Glen Hackler, city manager.

As presented, the 1992-93 fiscal year budget relies on no tax or revenue increases to support the proposed program of services. The effective tax rate will be reduced from .66 per $100 valuation to .5963 per $100 valuation as a result of the recently-passed "one-half cent sales tax for property tax reduction."

City commissioners will consider the first reading of Ordinance No. 1209 and Ordinance No. 1210 relative to the adoption of the Southern Standard building and fire prevention codes.

"The standard building code, used in conjunction with the standard fire prevention code, can reasonably assure a community that the safety, health and welfare of the public is being provided for when the requirements outlined in these documents are maintained," Hackler said.

New business will also include considering bids for the purchase of an optical disk filing and retrieval system. Commissioners will consider acceptance of a $400 bid for delinquent tax property at 511 Oklahoma.

Minutes from the previous regular meeting and work session are also scheduled for consideration.

The meeting will be held in the City Commission room on the third floor of City Hall. A work session at 4 p.m. Tuesday is scheduled in the third floor conference room at City Hall.

Items on the work session agenda include discussion of the administrative aspects of the Pampa Economic Development Corp., the Gray County Appraisal District budget and desalinization of Lake Meredith.

Plutonium storage at Pantex not a violation, says official

AMARILLO (AP) — The interim storage of plutonium recovered from dismantled nuclear weapons at the Pantex Plant does not violate federal environmental law and is within the present scope of the plant's mission, Energy Secretary James Watkins has told Texas officials.

Watkins made the remarks in response to a claim by Texas Attorney General Dan Morales.

The attorney general had said the department's plan to dismantle thousands of weapons and store their plutonium cores at Pantex violates the National Environmental Policy Act because no site-specific environmental-impact statement on dismantlement had been completed by the Energy Department.

Pantex, located 17 miles northeast of Amarillo in Carson County, is the final assembly and disassembly plant for the nation's nuclear warheads.

In a letter, Watkins recently said that the department's plutonium storage plans are consistent "with both the letter and spirit of NEPA."

"Plans and processes at the Pantex Plant are being pursued on the basis of rigorous engineering analyses and strict compliance with all applicable laws and regulations," Watkins said. "Should the continuing evaluation of these processes result in a determination that additional environmental analyses are required, appropriate actions will be taken to meet all legal requirements."

The letter also disputed Morales' contention that boosted dismantlement efforts spurred by Bush administration arms cuts constitute a "fundamental change" in the plant's mission.

"The prime Pantex Plant mission is, and always has been, both assembly and disassembly of nuclear weapons," Watkins said, noting that more than 50,000 weapons have been retired and disassembled at Pantex in the past 40 years.

Worker demand, high-explosive disposal, generation of waste and security operations are not affected by increased dismantlement, Watkins said, but those operations will continue to be scrutinized.

An environmental assessment of interim storage of plutonium at Pantex is expected to be completed later this year and will be forwarded to Gov. Ann Richards for a 30-day review period, officials say.

Watkins also said any operational changes not covered by the 1983 environmental impact statement will be addressed by "activity-specific NEPA reviews."

Chopper crash kills Marines in Kuwait

KUWAIT CITY (AP) — A U.S. Marine helicopter crashed during joint military exercises with Kuwait on Sunday, killing its two-man crew, the Navy said.

The crewmen, both based at Camp Pendleton, Calif., were Capt. John A. Beving, 28, and 1st Lt. David L. Jones, 30, according to a statement from the camp. Beving's parents live in Silver Springs, Md., and Jones' wife lives in Dublin, Ohio, the statement said.

Their AH-1W Cobra helicopter crashed at about 2 a.m. (7 p.m. EDT Saturday) at a training site eight miles south of the Kuwait-Iraqi border, according to a statement released by the U.S.

Navy's Central Command office here.

The cause of the crash is still under investigation, but the statement said the Cobra was unarmed and conducting a routine training flight at the time of the accident.

About 1,900 Marines landed in Kuwait Aug. 4 to take part in desert exercises with their Kuwaiti counterparts. The joint exercises are scheduled to last through Aug. 15.

The maneuvers have been billed as routine training. But officers on both sides have said they also are a warning to Iraq, which invaded Kuwait two years ago and was forced to retreat by a U.S.-led multinational army.

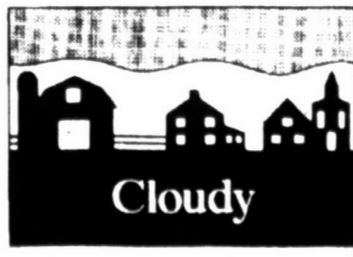

A soldier looks over a Cobra helicopter in Saudi Arabia in December 1990, similar to the one which crashed over the weekend in Kuwait.

Lawyers' group provides forum for Anita Hill, Hillary Clinton

By RICHARD LORANT
 Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Hillary Clinton was greeted like a conquering hero, but the women of the American Bar Association saved their loudest applause for award recipient Anita Hill.

An overflow crowd of 1,200, most of them women lawyers, gave Ms. Hill the first of several standing ovations when she took her seat at a Sunday luncheon for the ABA's Commission on Women in the Profession.

Ms. Hill, a University of Oklahoma law professor, was honored for her testimony against former boss Clarence Thomas at his Supreme Court confirmation hearing last year.

Mrs. Clinton, a founder of the women lawyers' commission, also drew plenty of cheers with a keynote speech. She criticized the Bush administration, saying it paid lip service to family values while failing to help women and families weather hard economic times.

The wife of Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton said Ms. Hill's testimony had "transformed consciousness and changed history. ... All women who care about equality of opportunity, about integrity and morality in the workplace are in Professor Anita Hill's debt."

Ms. Hill urged members of the audience to speak out against sexual harassment.

"We must, even at some individual risk, participate in the education of our colleagues," Hill said. "Whether we move forward to change or revert back to the status quo is most assuredly up to us as a profession."

The awards luncheon was part of an annual ABA convention that ends Wednesday.

On Saturday, the ABA honored retired Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall with an award honoring pioneers in law who have fought for personal liberties and civil rights. The new award will be named in future years for Marshall.

Ms. Hill was one of six recipients of this year's Margaret Brent awards, which were established last year in honor of the 17th century lawyer who was the first woman attorney in colonial America and a champion of women's rights.

Another award winner, Rep. Patsy Takemoto Mink of Hawaii, said thousands of women were stirred to action by "the moment of agony and anguish and despair that Professor Hill endured in the U.S. Senate."

Also receiving the award were Nashville lawyer Margaret Behm, federal appeals Judge Betty Fletcher of Seattle, Dean Herma Hill Kay of the University of California Berkeley law school and Georgia Supreme Court Justice Leah Sears-Collins.

Police continue search for suspect in robbery

Pampa Police Department is continuing an investigation of a robbery that occurred late Saturday night at Taylor Mart, 1340 N. Hobart.

Sgt. John Goes, in a press release, said that at 11:20 p.m., a subject entered the Taylor Mart and tried to open one of the cash registers. The clerk tried to stop the man, and he then tried to take the entire cash register.

Following a struggle, the cash register fell to the floor and the subject fled the store on foot with an undetermined amount of cash.

Goes said no injuries were reported and the investigation is continuing.

The suspect is estimated to be 5 feet 2 to 5 feet 5 inches tall, possibly Hispanic, with dark collar-length hair.

Serbs agree to detention camp inspections

By TONY SMITH
Associated Press Writer

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — As Western powers move toward agreement on authorizing the use of force in strife-torn Bosnia, Serb leaders are trying to defuse the furor over allegations of murder, rape and beatings at detention camps.

French Foreign Ministry spokesman Maurice Gourdault-Montagne said today that a resolution on using force to protect aid shipments was likely to be put before the U.N. Security Council on Wednesday.

France, Britain and the United States — all wary of becoming bogged down in Bosnia-Herzegovina's civil war, but unable to ignore reports of brutality there — continued to discuss the resolution today.

Serbs, Muslims and Croats have battled for more than five months in Bosnia.

Yugoslav Premier Milan Panic toured an army barracks on the outskirts of Belgrade, the Serbian and Yugoslav capital, on Sunday to try to dispel claims by Bosnia's Muslim-led government that the barracks held 2,500 prisoners.

Panic, a U.S. citizen, said Serbs were the "victims of an ongoing propaganda campaign."

The fear of provoking Western military intervention has apparently prompted Serb leaders to agree to open the detention camps in Bosnia for inspection.

Journalists escorted by Serb officials on visits to several such camps over the weekend saw gaunt and frightened Muslim prisoners, but no evidence of atrocities.

Red Cross officials said Sunday that they had received permission to inspect Serb-run detention camps.

"We are going to proceed without delay in the coming days," said Claudia Grassi, an official of the International Committee of the Red Cross in Belgrade.

In Geneva, Red Cross spokesman Pierre Gauthier said he hoped inspections of prison camps in Bosnia could be started this week.

But there were fears Serbs might hide evidence of any human rights violations before the inspectors arrive.

The U.N. Human Rights Commission agreed today to take up alleged abuses in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Pierre Mehu, spokesman for the commission, said the two-day session would begin Thursday.

Morris B. Abram, the U.S. ambassador to the human rights commission, said in Geneva today: "The atrocities in former Yugoslavia are events I never thought we would have to revisit." Abram, who requested the human rights inquiry, was a prosecutor at the Nuremberg war crimes trials.

In remarks prepared for delivery to another U.N. human rights panel, Abram cited "the exile of whole groups of people for no other reason than their ethnic background, the detention camps, the execution of children" in the former Yugoslavia.

Bush administration officials said Sunday that they're moving closer to an agreement with other members of the Security Council on a resolution authorizing the use of military force, if necessary, to assure the delivery of relief supplies in Bosnia.

"We're working hard with the British and French," National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft said. He said that if the United States resorts to force in the region, it "would be primarily air power."

Permanent members of the Security Council were expected to meet informally in New York today to discuss the issue.

Earlier U.N. efforts to stop the fighting have not been successful. A U.N. arms embargo has not stemmed the flow of weapons to Bosnia-Herzegovina, largely because the biggest arms suppliers are not governments or defense firms.

Among those reputed to be dealing in weapons are elements in the former Soviet and East bloc armed forces, various militias in Lebanon and the Mafia, the experts say. In addition, the federal army, which is accused of backing the Serbs, has a largely self-sufficient arms industry.

Early today, heavy machine gun and mortar fire rocked the north of Sarajevo. The Bosnian capital had been mostly quiet Sunday, but fighting was reported on the fringes of the former republic.

Serbs opposed to Bosnia's independence have captured about two-thirds of Bosnia's territory and have surrounded Sarajevo.

Muslims and Croats voted Feb. 29 to break away from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia. The war has claimed the lives of at least 8,000 people and more than 1 million have been forced to flee their homes.

In Bihac, a city in northwest Bosnia, aid officials expressed concern about a Serb blockade that is keeping supplies from reaching about 300,000 residents, mostly Muslim.

"Some say we are in a very big concentration camp," said Philippe Noel, head of the Red Cross in Bihac and Velika Kladusa, the region's two main cities.

If the blockade continues, he told an AP reporter who got into the city with an aid convoy, "it could end very badly."

The Belgrade-based news agency Tanjug on Sunday reported heavy fighting near Bosanska Gradiska, on the Bosnian-Croatian border. Some 20 Serbs and dozens of Croat fighters were said to have been killed.

Farther east, Croatian officials said 14 people were killed in air attacks by Serb forces on Bosanski Brod.

Serb military sources also were quoted by Tanjug as reporting heavy fighting around Gorazde, the last Muslim stronghold in eastern Bosnia. Gorazde has been besieged for more than three months.

Investigators: More research needed on bovine growth hormone

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government should suspend the use of a genetically engineered growth hormone that increases cows' milk production, say congressional investigators concerned about human safety.

The General Accounting Office also called on the Food and Drug Administration to halt the marketing of beef and milk from research animals treated with synthetic bovine growth hormone — or BGH.

Evaluate the potential risks to consumers before resuming its use, urged the GAO.

Congress' watchdog agency said research on BGH has failed to consider whether its use will result in increased residues of antibiotics in milk and meat. The Associated Press obtained an advance copy of the report, which was scheduled to be released today.

Treatment with BGH increases the incidence of mastitis — an inflammation of the udder, GAO said. Mastitis is often treated with antibiotics.

"As a consequence, higher levels of antibiotic residues in milk and beef could result," GAO said.

"Concern exists now about whether antibiotic levels in milk are already too high from present antibiotic usage," the report said. "Nevertheless, there has been no examination of whether (BGH) use will increase antibiotic levels in milk or beef beyond that which currently exist and, if so, to what degree those levels are acceptable."

In a separate report last week, GAO said government inspectors are routinely testing milk for just four of the 82 drugs used to treat dairy cows. As a result, consumers could face several health risks.

The FDA has approved the use of BGH for research and since 1985 has allowed the sale and consumption of milk and beef products from cows treated with the drug. There is no requirement, however, that those products be labeled as coming from cows treated with BGH.

Wider approval of BGH has been expected this year.

Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., said it's "outrageous that FDA allows the milk industry to sell this experimental milk to an unknowing public."

"I am profoundly disturbed by FDA's failure to adequately study the risk to consumers from antibiotic residues in the milk of (BGH) treated cows," said Weiss, chairman of the House Government Operations subcommittee on human resources.

The FDA did not respond Friday to requests for reaction to the study and Weiss' comments.

The FDA considers milk produced from cows treated by BGH, also known as bovine somatotropin (bST), to be safe for human consumption. GAO said it agreed that BGH does not appear to represent a direct human safety risk.

Investigators said FDA must examine the degree to which antibiotics must be used to treat cows receiving the hormone, and the effects of the treatment on the nation's milk and beef supply.

Pending those studies, GAO said, commercial sales of beef and milk products from BGH-tested cows should be stopped. FDA should also study the feasibility of labeling food products derived from animals being tested with drugs.

"The American people have a right to know what is in the milk they drink and the beef they eat," said Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich. and chairman of the Government Operations Committee.

"The administration's refusal to stop the practice of marketing unlabeled food products derived from animals tested with investigational drugs is simply irresponsible and potentially dangerous."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, said GAO's message is clear: "FDA has a lot more work to do before it can even begin considering whether or not bST is safe and can be approved."

"The burden is on FDA to answer the questions raised in the GAO report," Leahy said.

BGH has been found to increase milk production an average of 10 percent to 25 percent.

AIDS dental clinic booms

AUSTIN (AP) — Austin's first free dental clinic for people with AIDS has an "incredible" waiting list and is attracting about 30 new patients a month with serious dental problems, a dentist who helped organize the clinic says.

Chris Fabre, who helped organize the Austin/Travis County HIV Dental Project, said, "We have an incredible waiting list."

"Especially for services we can't provide, such as HIV-related periodontal (gum) treatments."

The clinic is a program of AIDS Services of Austin and opened in April near the University of Texas.

Stephen Bundren, 44, one of about 150 patients seen at the small clinic, is a former state employee who has had AIDS for seven years.

With only Social Security income, he lost his health insurance when he failed to pay on time. Inability to pay and widespread fear of contracting the blood-borne disease left Bundren without dental care.

"Nobody ever denied me dental care because of AIDS," said Bundren, who said he felt it was his duty to inform private dentists of his illness when seeking care.

"It was always just, 'We're not taking any new patients,'" he said. "The clinic is a godsend. I don't know what we'd do without this."

To return the favor, he serves as a client representative on the clinic's board of directors.

With a contribution of $8,000, the Tenth District Dental Society, the professional group of many Austin-area dentists, is among the clinic's biggest backers.

There are six dentists who volunteer at the clinic, but the Austin American-Statesman reported that four of them declined to have their names revealed.

Fabre said some of them previously faced staff revolts when they tried to care for AIDS patients in their practices. Fabre has paid a price for publicity about his involvement with the clinic.

"I've lost a number of patients over this," he said. "And it's not been the easiest thing to find staff for the clinic. But I think most dentists are doing a good job, and I hope they continue to do so."

The clinic offers teeth cleaning, X-rays and routine dental services. Fabre also takes referrals of patients with Kaposi sarcoma lesions, a cancer common to AIDS. He tries to shrink the lesions by injecting them with a chemotherapy agent.

"There's nobody else who knows how to do it or, really, wants to do it," he said.

Clinic staff use tongs to move sharp, blood-contaminated instruments and steam heat to clean them.

Fabre hopes a new fund-raising effort will help improve the clinic's ventilation system to prevent transmission of tuberculosis, which is common in people with AIDS.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Innovation served best by free market

Can America's nuclear power industry be revived after 14 years of dormancy?

A federal appeals court in Washington has upheld pending Nuclear Regulatory Commission rules to streamline the licensing process for future nuclear reactors. The decision could help the nuclear power industry overcome political opposition that has stymied construction of new plants in the United States for more than a decade.

Under the NRC's present system, nuclear energy plants must be separately licensed for construction and then operation. Public hearings are held before construction is approved and after a plant has been completed. This sets up a perverse situation in which anti-nuclear activists can kill a reactor after it has been built. The process costs investors and ratepayers millions of dollars.

The new NRC rules change this. They replace the dual licensing process with a single review procedure.

Public hearings will be conducted before ground is broken on a new reactor, but opponents won't get two chances to kill a plant. These measures will reduce regulatory delay in licensing reactors by up to 10 years and make nuclear energy companies more attractive to investors.

The new rules are a welcome development in the nation's feeble effort to achieve energy self-sufficiency. The more the United States turns to nuclear energy to generate electricity, the less it will have to rely on foreign oil.

Since the first oil embargo in 1973, nuclear plants have reduced America's dependence on imported oil by 740,000 barrels a day. This adds up to savings of $125 billion during the last two decades. Nuclear energy continues to save the nation $13 million a day in foreign oil payments.

If these kinds of savings can be achieved with 122 nuclear plants providing 20 percent of the nation's electricity, there are considerable economic returns to be realized by generating 40 percent of electricity from atomic energy.

Aside from the considerable economic dividends, nuclear energy offers environmental benefits.

Each nuclear plant helps cut greenhouse gas emissions. The plants now in operation reduce the amount of pollutants spewed into the atmosphere by more than 19,000 tons a day. If nuclear energy were abandoned in favor of fossil fuels, the environment would have to absorb an additional 128 million tons of carbon dioxide every year.

Safety concerns have hung over the industry since the accident at Three Mile Island. The NRC now has standardized reactor design.

The new generation of nuclear plants that will be built during the next decade will be safer and simpler than those built during the 1970s. In the unlikely event of an accident, the new light-water reactors will rely much less on pumps, valves, emergency generators and plant personnel to maintain safety than do present models. This represents a quantum improvement in safety.

The U.S. cannot rely exclusively on nuclear power to meet all its future electrical-generation needs. But if this nation aims to achieve the twin goals of energy self-sufficiency and a cleaner environment, nuclear energy must be a central part of the equation.

"You're NOT taking the FAX MACHINE!"

Sticking with George

For more than 40 years, as newspaper editor and syndicated columnist, I have been promoting a conservative view of public affairs. Out of that background, with those credentials, I want to cry at the top of my lungs: Stick with George! Stand by the president! This campaign has just begun.

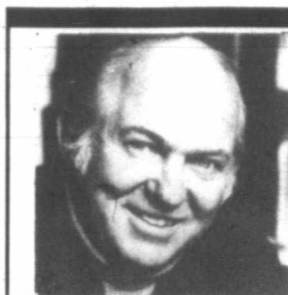

Certain guidelines govern the expression of editorial opinion. Within those guidelines I expect to support George Bush not begrudgingly, or reluctantly, or indifferently, but with a whole heart.

In the liberal view, Bill Clinton surely is the better choice, for Clinton is a liberal's liberal. The notion that Clinton is some sort of "moderate" is a notion that honest campaigning will dispel.

In the conservative view, George Bush is the obvious choice. On the political right, the alternative to the president of the United States is not the governor of Arkansas. The alternatives are to stay home or to cast what is feebly called a "protest vote." Those who stay home are summer soldiers. Those who waste their votes on Ross Perot are political babies. Behold their little tantrums.

Lately the papers have been full of the case against George Bush. Columnist George Will, who despises the president, wants him to quit. Paul Gigot, writing in The Wall Street Journal, says Bush is certain to lose. Fred Barnes, writing in The New Republic, asserts that Bush has "lost control." Around the country, various editors are joining the trendy lynch mob.

Let me make a case for George. I have known the president since he served in the House 25 years ago. I know him to be a good man - good in every sense of the word. His instincts are sound. His character is solid. These are intangibles, but they bear the weight of granite.

Neither Bush nor Clinton qualifies as a man of political principle. Philosophy is not their forte. This is not unusual. As a reporter, based in Washington, I have known hundreds of men at the highest levels of political life. Political philosophy mattered deeply to a few. The names of Barry Goldwater, Hubert Humphrey, Ronald Reagan and Pat Moynihan spring to mind. I cannot recall many others.

Let me express the exasperation of countless conservatives who are fed up — fed to the teeth — with the incessant grousing and grumbling of the political right. Let me name names: the Heritage Foundation and Human Events, for two. National Review has waxed from cool to tepid. Selective criticism of Bush is one thing — heaven knows I have jumped on the gentleman often enough — but this unceasing drumbeat of negativism cannot be justified in the name of objectivity.

I am even more fed up with the liberal bias of the national media. Let me tell you, out of a lifetime in the news business, that Eugene McCarthy was right. He said the top people in both print journalism and TV are birds on a wire. When one flies, they all fly.

For more than a year, the opinion makers have been flying in one direction. It is said that beauty lies in the eye of the beholder. Ugliness lies beside it. A reporter for The New York Times describes Bush's July 31 speech in California as "tepid." That makes it tepid. The reporter, deadpan, inserts a descriptive note: Bush's 1,000 listeners at a Rotary Club breakfast were "overwhelmingly white." Does any knowledgeable person suppose that little spin would have been added to a piece about Clinton?

When the country reads, day after day, over and over and over, that Bush is a loser, that he has no program, that his campaign is in disarray, that his approval ratings are sliding, you can bet that his approval ratings will slide. Under this wet blanket of "analysis," the most vigorous candidacy is certain to be smothered.

Bush repeatedly has submitted attractive programs to Congress. The Congress has killed them. In March and April he sought to eliminate scores of pork-barrel appropriations. Democratic leaders massacred his request. Bush has urged innovations in education. Congress has spurned them. Through effective use of his veto, Bush has kept a bad legislative record from getting worse.

A dilemma is the unavoidable choice between two equally undesirable alternatives. By that definition, conservatives face no dilemma at all. George Bush is not going to withdraw. He is going to stay in the race. If his old supporters will cheer him on, he can win it yet.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, August 10, the 223rd day of 1992. There are 143 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
Two hundred years ago, on Aug. 10, 1792, during the French Revolution, mobs in Paris attacked the palace of Louis XVI. The king was taken into custody, put on trial for treason later that year, and executed the following January.

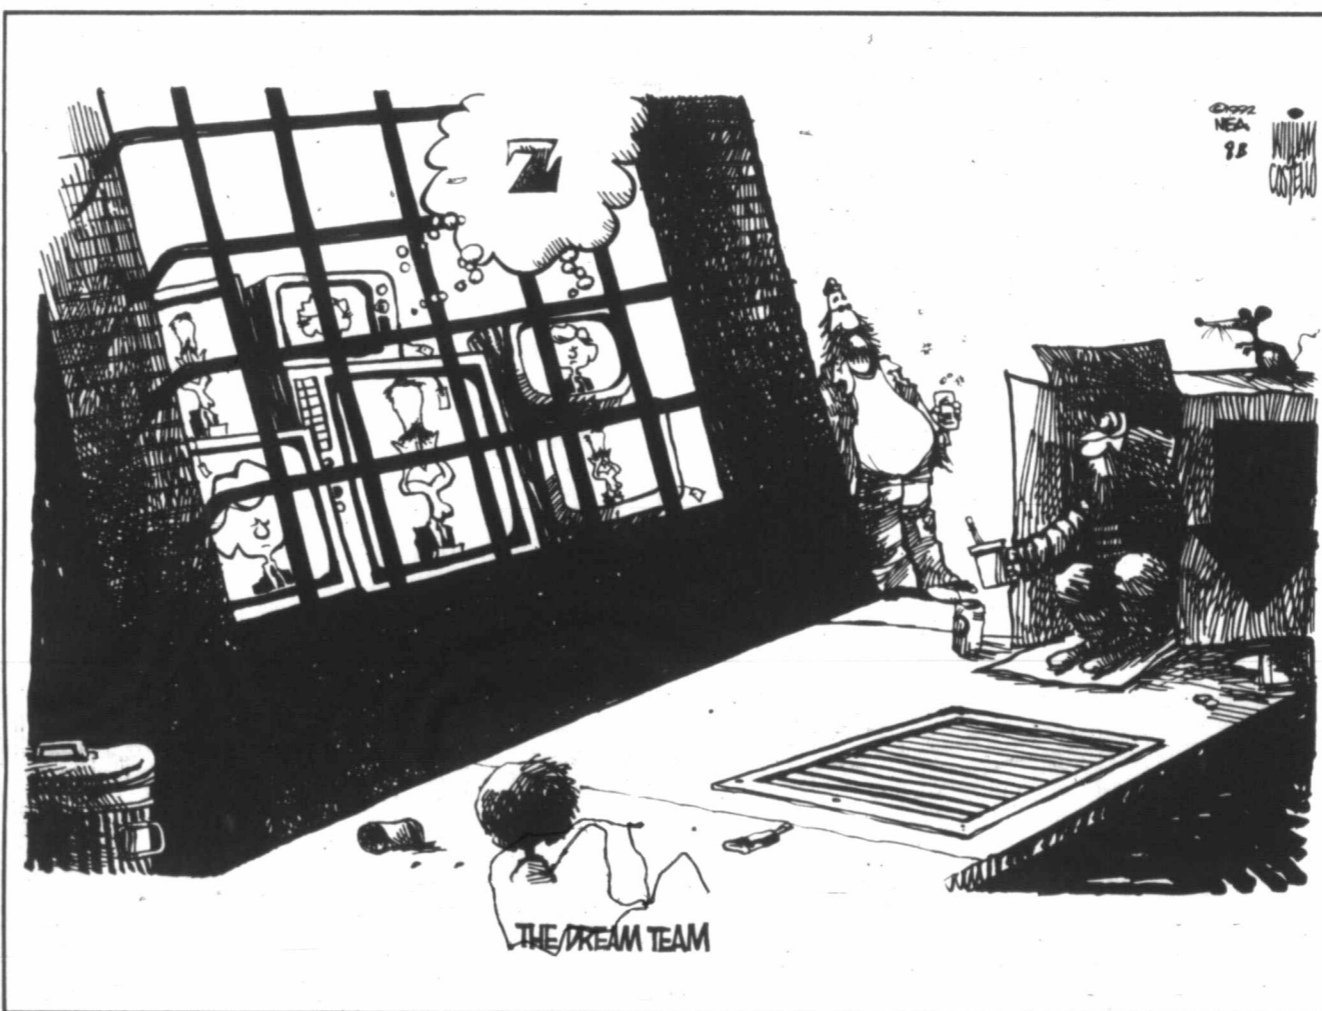

On this date:
In 1821, Missouri became the 24th state.

In 1846, Congress chartered the Smithsonian Institution, named after English scientist Joseph Smithson, whose bequest of half a million dollars had made it possible.

In 1874, Herbert Clark Hoover, the 31st president of the United States, was born in West Branch, Iowa.

In 1885, Leo Daft opened America's first commercially operated electric streetcar, in Baltimore.

In 1921, Franklin D. Roosevelt was stricken with polio while at his summer home on the Canadian island of Campobello.

Perot as a gadfly

Gov. Clinton forgets that he was a sacrificial lamb. When the Democrats thought they didn't have a chance against then popular incumbent Bush, New York Gov. Mario Cuomo and Maine Rep. George Mitchell decided to sit this one out and wait four more years.

From that void emerged Bill Clinton. He may imagine that he is "Mister Smith" going to Washington to "make a change," but if he is elected, the entrenched old guard of Democrats on Capitol Hill will promptly let him know otherwise.

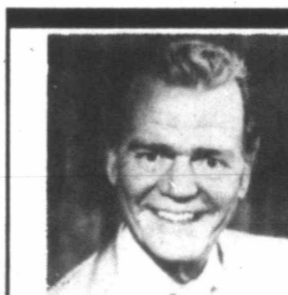

He's not a thrilling choice for American voters either way.

If Bush is re-elected he will disappear overseas for four more years, showing up every 18 months for some ceremonial veto.

Ross Perot, as a gadfly, can be of help. He promised "change."

Before the sudden meltdown of his campaign, Perot had huddled with enough strategies to develop an economic plan for balancing our nation's budget within five years.

It would cost everybody something.

Paul Harvey

A 50-cent-a-gallon increase in federal gasoline taxes.

Reductions in Social Security for upper-income Americans.

He wanted to overhaul the State Department, to charge our embassies around the world with promoting foreign trade instead of foreign aid.

As I say, it would cost everybody something.

Sharply higher taxes on alcohol and tobacco. Boaters would pay higher fees for using inland waterways. Timber interests would pay more for logging public lands.

Sugar, peanut and many other farm subsidies would be eliminated.

Perot would encourage investment by reducing capitol gains tax.

He would terminate dozens of federal programs including the space program, but increase investment in new roads, new bridges.

He would limit mortgage deductions in homes of $200,000 or more.

In five years, the Perot plan would reduce our nation's deficit by $800 billion.

The deficit would thus be reduced to zero.

Our government would be paying its way for the first time in generations.

The Democrats at their convention and since are parroting the battle-cry: "Change!"

President Bush is seeking to trump that ace by reciting to voters a litany of "changes" that he proposed and which the Democrat-controlled Congress rejected.

The President's campaign chairman, Bob Teeter, says we'll not see any "change" from a Congress which has been "unchanged" for decades.

Dear George: Say this in Houston

Draft of a proposed acceptance speech for President Bush to give to the Republican National Convention in Houston:

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen. I accept your nomination.

These past three and a half years have not been without their successes, for which I believe the American people are grateful. But as we are all aware, our national economy is in poor shape.

Like almost every president since the end of the second world war, I have had to cope with a Congress dominated by the opposite party. This has made rational government virtually impossible. In recent years, the gridlock has been made still worse by Congress's efforts to control foreign policy decisions that are traditionally the province of the executive branch, by criminalizing any steps taken by the executive that run counter to the wishes of Congress.

My first and biggest mistake was failing to ask the voters in 1988 to either give me a Congress that would work with me, or give the presidency to Gov. Dukakis and let a Democratic Congress work with him.

My second mistake was to assume that, even with a Congress under Democratic control, I could promise not to raise taxes and keep that promise.

My third mistake, when Congress refused the necessary budget cuts, was to agree not to let the Gramm-Rudman sequestrations take place as provided by law, but to accept instead a compromise with Congress whereby expenditures would supposedly be "capped" once a one-time tax increase was passed.

As a result, the economy has languished, and Congress has cynically refused to pass the measures that would invigorate it, preferring to let this country suffer until I can be replaced with a Democrat.

But I am president until Jan. 20, 1993, and I am through making these particular mistakes.

First and foremost, therefore, I most solemnly appeal to the American people: If you vote to reelect me, vote also for Republican senators and congressmen who can alone be counted on to support my plans. If you want a Democratic Congress at all costs, give the presidency to Gov. Clinton.

Second, beginning today, I propose to do everything in my power to put into effect the proposals I have repeatedly made to Congress to restore the country's economic health. To help me, I have asked HUD Secretary Jack Kemp to take over the Treasury portfolio, and Congressman Vin Weber to become Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

I will call Congress into special session, whenever it adjourns between now and election day, to enact those proposals. This country has problems that can't wait.

Furthermore, to help end the sick and tragic business of criminalizing foreign policy differences between Congress and the White House, I am issuing today a formal amnesty for all present and former officials of the executive branch charged, or hereafter charged, with alleged crimes growing out of the Iran-Contra controversy or subsequent investigations thereof.

I have also reissued today President Reagan's executive order on the family, requiring that all executive policies be examined to determine their effect on America's families, and have amended it to vest the compliance overview function in the office of the vice president.

Finally, I have today revoked President Johnson's executive order requiring racial quotas in hiring for federal agencies. I hereby reiterate my firm opposition to quotas, anywhere.

If the American people agree with the steps I have described, there is one critically important way in which they can affirm their support: Oust this worthless Congress. I have wasted years trying to work with it, but I will not waste another day. My fellow Americans: Do your job, and with the help of God I will do mine.

Thank you.

Cambern claims city title

By MARK SPENCER
Sports Editor

Although a couple of golfers made quite a bit of noise around him, Ken Cambern's game was rather silent at Sunday's final round of the Third Annual Pampa News Championship.

Yet his steady round paved a steady course to first place in the Championship flight at Hidden Hills Golf Course with a 2-over par round of 73 Sunday and a two-day stroke total of 145.

Camborn claimed his first city championship by four shots over Scott White and two-time defending champion Barry Terrell. White was awarded second place in a scorecard playoff.

"I knew I was going to be right there with the leaders in the end," said Cambern, who led after Saturday's first round. "I just wanted to play a solid game."

Camborn's steadiness proved to be a key factor during the second straight day of the tournament played with strong winds out of the South.

After starting the day with a two-stroke lead, Cambern played even par through six holes and was still leading White and Terrell by two strokes when he took a bogey on the par-4 seventh hole. White drove his tee shot past the green but managed to get home in two shots for a birdie cutting Cambern's lead to one.

Meanwhile, Terrell was even through eight holes and lying two strokes behind Cambern when the golfers approached the ninth tee box.

Terrell birdied the hole and White tapped in for a par leaving Cambern with a putt of about six feet for par. The ball hit the left edge of the cup and forced Cambern to bogey the hole. He entered the back nine tied with White and Terrell.

This three-horse race was quickly whittled to two, however.

White's tee shots on holes No. 10 and 11 both sailed out of bounds, and he bogeyed the par-3 No. 12. After the 13th hole, Terrell and Cambern were deadlocked, and White was four shots back.

It was on the very next hole where the tournament was decided.

Terrell teed off into the left rough and had to hit his second shot out of a sandy lie. Cambern, however, hit a marvelous second shot that landed just inches from the pin and rolled to about five feet away.

Terrell found the back edge of the green with his second shot but had trouble once he got there leaving his par putt inches short of the hole. His bogey and Cambern's ensuing birdie putt gave Cambern a two-shot lead with four holes to play.

Camborn never relinquished his lead from that point, but that didn't mean it wasn't interesting.

Camborn tried to cut the dogleg right par-4 16th hole and found his tee shot in an unforgiving place.

"I was down in a hole, like a pot-hole or something," he said. "I took a sand wedge and tried to hit down on it. I just wanted to give myself an opportunity for a good chip on my third shot."

Camborn turned his thoughts into reality and saved par on the hole to maintain his two-stroke lead over Terrell.

Then, Cambern tried to make it really interesting on the par-4 17th when he topped his drive about 30 yards past the creek in front of the tee box. He was followed by Terrell who blistered his drive straight down the middle of the fairway.

"I thought that was my chance," Terrell said. "I really did."

But the two golfers had a reversal of luck on their second shots.

Camborn hit a fairway wood to within 15 yards of the green. Terrell didn't.

"I stepped up there and shanked it," Terrell said of his second shot that landed in the heavy rough to the right of the green. "When he stepped up there and hit a good shot, that was all she wrote for me."

Camborn finished with a par on Nos. 17 and 18 for his round of 2-over 73, four strokes ahead of Terrell and White, who had rallied from his disastrous start on the back nine to finish with a round of 75.

Two other flight champions were crowned Sunday.

Joan Terrell claimed the Ladies flight with a two-day stroke total of 165. She shot a round of 85 Saturday and an 80 Sunday in claiming her title.

Ronnie Wood carded identical rounds of 78 to claim the Senior's flight.

Harvesters start football practices today

By MARK SPENCER
Sports Editor

The Pampa High School Harvesters, coming off the best season in school history a year ago, reported for their first team football practice of the 1992 season at 9 a.m. and will undergo their first on-field workouts at 5 o'clock tonight at the school's practice fields.

"I'm thrilled to field a team this year with so many richly talented players," Pampa Coach Dennis Cavalier said. "We're all really excited about this season."

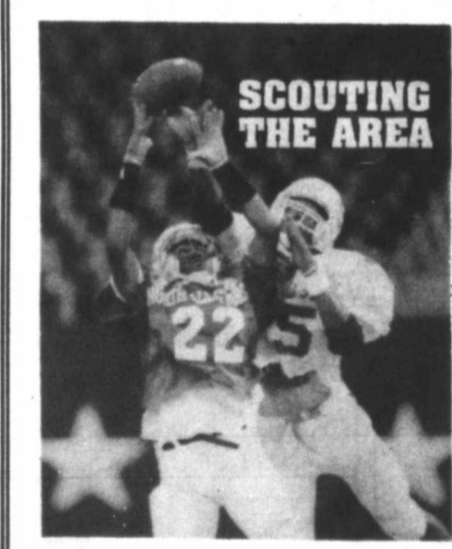

The Harvesters return 18 lettermen to a team that went 11-3 last season and claimed the district 1-4A title a year ago.

Before talking of more possible championships, however, Cavalier said the team had to return to the work habits the Pampa High teams had developed during his tenure as head coach.

That begins with this week's practice schedule.

In the mornings, the Harvesters will lift weights and do other conditioning work Monday and Wednesday. Tuesday and Thursday mornings are tentatively scheduled for team meetings.

In the afternoons, the team will be on the PHS practice fields from 5 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. working on

Football previews start Tuesday

Starting Tuesday, the Pampa News will feature an area high school football team each day in a series of articles called "Scouting the Area."

This year promises to be an exciting year for high school football players and fans in the Texas Panhandle, and there are many interesting things to anticipate.

For instance, the Pampa High School Harvesters are coming off their best season ever a year ago and now must learn how to accept their new role as the team to beat in District 1-AAAA.

Also, White Deer has had two straight 1-9 records. But the Bucks have undergone some changes since last season and are now highly optimistic about their chances in 1992.

There will also be articles on Groom, McLean, Wheeler, Canadian, Lefors and Miami.

Tomorrow's Pampa News takes a deeper look at the Harvesters' upcoming season. Look each day after for a story on your favorite area team.

offense, defense and the kicking game in helmets, T-shirts and shorts.

"We have to go four days without pads," Cavalier said. "Our idea on this is to spend the most amount of time teaching the players what they need to know and the least amount of time on drill work as it relates to playing football. We're even de-emphasizing conditioning except on a gradually increasing basis."

Friday marks the first day Texas high schools are allowed to practice in pads, and the Harvesters will take full advantage of the situation.

They will have their first on-field contact drills Friday at 9 a.m. and return that night at 6 o'clock for their annual "Pride Drill."

The drill pits six offensive players against five defensive players in a 10-yard square. The offense gets four downs to score in what has been in the past a highly emotional drill for the players and fans.

"It's a full-contact, close-quartered, knock-down dragout," Cavalier said. "The players really get into it. There's a lot of contact, but the momentum of longer runs isn't there. Because of that, it's been relatively an injury-free drill. It's a way of getting some of the jitters out."

In conjunction with the drill, the Harvesters' Booster Club will be sponsoring a membership drive and all of the Pampa High School fall teams will be introduced.

As in the regular season, the Harvesters will meet Saturday for a brief workout to help stretch out their muscles and report any injuries.

Pampa's first preseason scrimmage is Aug. 21 against Lubbock Estacado at Harvester Stadium. Times for the junior varsity and varsity scrimmage have not been determined.

Olympics transformation

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) - An era of amateurism passed into an age of professionalism, the Olympics transformed forever, as the Barcelona Games ended with a raucous celebration and a sober warning.

The highlight of the spectacular closing ceremonies wasn't the pyrotechnics or pomp, but Barcelona mayor Pasqual Maragall's emotional call for Games that don't sell out to sponsors.

"We ask," Maragall said, "that sport will not be the victim of the arrogance of culture, nor culture the victim of the arrogance of money, nor cities the victims of the arrogance of commercialism."

The Dream Team, gold in hand and logos on uniforms, chafed under such criticism.

"When you hire 12 Clint Eastwoods to come over here and do the job, you don't ask them what bullets they put in their guns," Michael Jordan said.

And coach Chuck Daly argued that the presence of pros could do nothing but enhance the Olympics.

"There's 183 countries and 3 billion people watching these games," Daly said. "And somewhere out there now is a 13-year-old who wants to be a Michael or a Magic, a Larry or a Patrick.

"That's the role of these games," he said. "That's what happens in all of these sports. It gives people a dream."

The once-powerful Soviet sports empire exited with glory and an eagerness to cut deals in the West as the Unified Team immediately disbanded after again winning the most golds (45) and total medals (112).

Ukrainian pole vaulter Sergei Bubka already has a contract with Nike, despite his stunning failure in the Games. Belarusian gymnast Vitaly Scherbo, winner of six golds, plans to sign with Mercedes, and basketball player Alexander Volkov is expected to make $3 million to play in Italy.

"It will be hard for anyone to ever be as strong as the Soviet team once was," Unified basketball coach Yuri Selikov said.

The United States emerged from its two-decade Olympic funk, finishing only four behind in the closest medals race since America won in 1964 in Tokyo. Now it stands poised to rule the sports world in Atlanta in 1996 after arguably its greatest Summer Games.

Mayor trying to keep Giants from moving

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Mayor Frank Jordan has rearranged his staff and schedule in a last-ditch effort to save the San Francisco Giants from moving to St. Petersburg, Fla.

Jim Lazarus, Jordan's chief of staff, and Ron Blatman, director of economic development, will work fulltime on finding a way to keep the baseball team in the San Francisco Bay area, the mayor said Sunday.

On Friday, it was announced that Giants owner Bob Lurie had agreed in principle to sell the team for a reported $113 million to a group of Florida investors. The deal must be approved by major league baseball owners, who are expected to vote on the move at a meeting in September.

Jordan told the San Francisco Chronicle he also would reshuffle his schedule to work on bringing together a group of local investors to buy the Giants.

"There are those who know there is no tomorrow, that everything is on the table, and here is our one last chance," Jordan told the newspaper.

Jordan, who spoke with baseball commissioner Fay Vincent on Friday, has asked to address the baseball owners at their meeting in St. Louis. Three-quarters of the National League owners and a majority of the American League owners must approve the sale, along with Vincent.

Lurie said he will not consider other offers until the owners vote.

"This is the bottom of the ninth (inning) and San Francisco is at the plate," Jordan said. "Let's see how we handle it."

Jordan said he spoke this weekend to developer Walter Shorenstein and Warren Hellman, the principals involved in attracting investors. The mayor also said he would work to gather statewide support to keep the team and create a citizens' Committee to Save the Giants.

Renters can save energy, too

Renters - you can conserve energy in your place of residence and in turn, save yourself money! Whether you pay for utilities yourself or they are included in your rent, you pay for them! That's why it's important to learn how much energy you use and how to save. If you pay for your utilities directly, there are many simple suggestions that will help you save on electricity and gas.

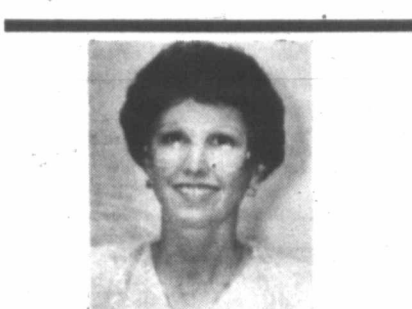

If your landlord pays for utilities and they are included in your rent, take steps to avoid wasting energy. If you save, you reduce the landlord's cost of operation and that can help prevent rent increases.

Cooling and Heating

The easiest way to save is to set your thermostat up to 78 degrees during the summer and down to 65 degrees for winter days and 55 degrees for winter nights. Thermostat set-up and set-back can save from 9 to 15 percent of your cooling and heating bills.

For summer cooling: (1) Use fans to supplement your air condition. Air movement allows you to set your thermostat 6 to 8 degrees higher and maintain the same comfort level. (2) Keep the sun's heat out of your home by lowering shades or closing drapes and curtains.

For winter heating: (1) Use the sun to heat your residence. Open curtains and shades when the sun is shining and close them at night or on overcast days to keep out the cold. (2) Use your fireplace sparingly. In a typical, open-hearth fireplace, about 85-90 percent of the firewood's heating value is lost up the chimney in the form of hot combustion flue gases. In addition, heated room air is drawn out of the living space to keep the fire burning. (3) When the fire is out, close the flue damper.

Homemakers' News

Year round: (1) Seal cracks around windows and doors with inexpensive weather stripping. (2) Change or clean filters on air handling systems regularly. Dirty filters can cause excessive wear on your cooling and heating circulation system, reduce cooling or heating efficiencies, and increase the amount of energy needed to cool or heat your home.

Water Heating

Check the temperature of your hot water. If it is above 140 degrees, you can save energy by simply lowering the thermostat setting on the water heater. For most purposes, the medium setting should provide sufficient hot water. Replace washers on leaky faucets to save hot water. If you use a dishwasher, stop the machine before it gets to the dry cycle and let dishes dry in the air. Run the dishwasher only when full, and if it has an energy-saver cycle, be sure to use it. A 4-minute shower uses less water than a bath. Put a flow thermostat in your showerhead and save even more by cutting water flow from 8 gallons per minute to 2 or 3 gallons per minute.

Food Preparation and Storage

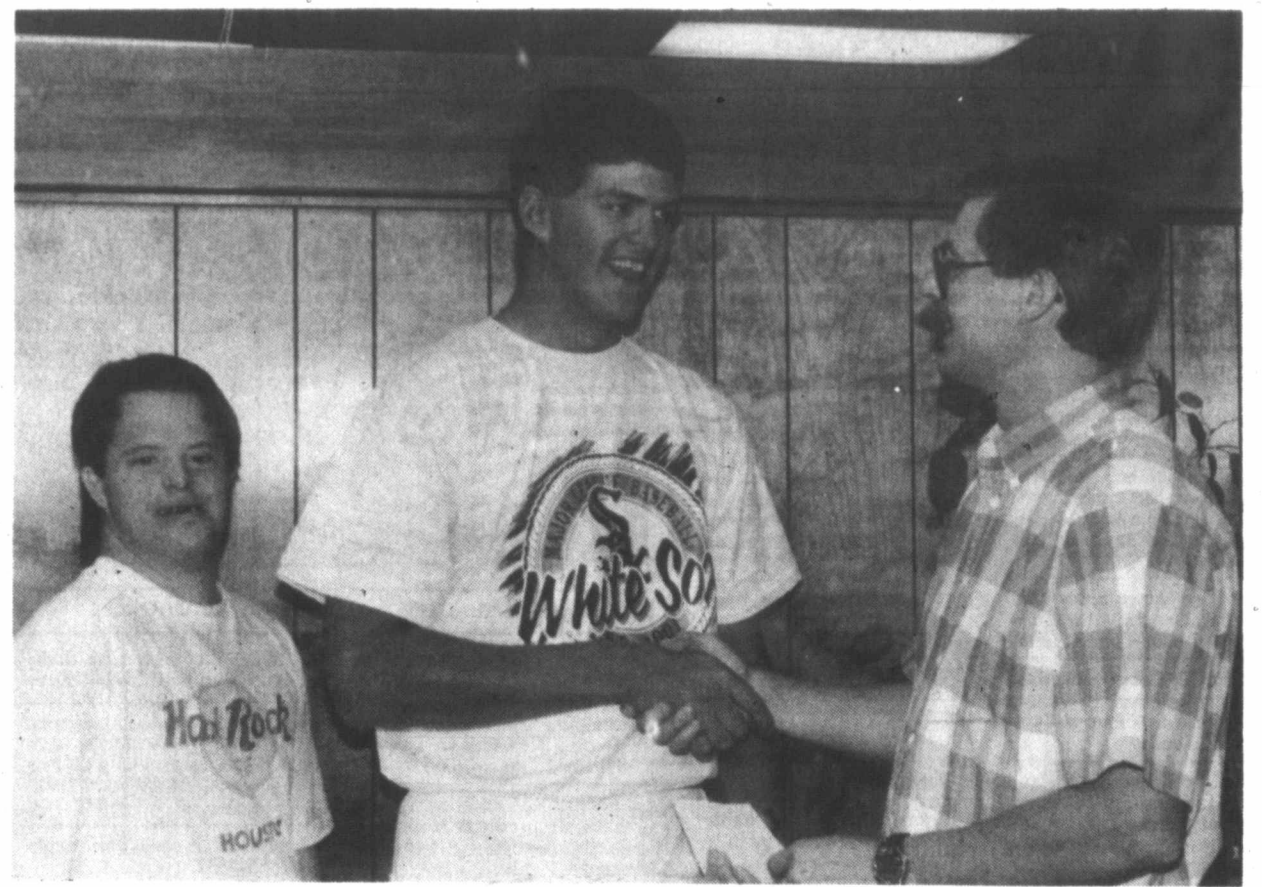

(1) Toaster ovens, microwave ovens, and slow cookers use less energy than the range-top or oven. (2) Clean burner pans often on your range so they reflect more heat. (3) Keep the freezer as full as possible to save energy. (4) Defrost the freezer when the ice is a quarter of an inch thick. More ice on the walls begins to act like a layer of insulation and decreases the efficiency of the freezer.

Lighting

(1) Always turn off lights when not using them. (2) Use energy-saver light bulbs that require 10 percent less electricity. (3) Use lower wattage bulbs if possible and use fluorescent lights when you can. They are 3 to 5 times more efficient and last up to 12 times as long. New compact fluorescent bulbs are now available for use in table lamps and other fixtures designed for incandescent bulbs. Plus, you can take your more efficient bulbs with you when you move.

For more information on energy efficiency and resources, contact your Gray County Extension Service.

Thanks a bunch

Tactlessness is epidemic, Cosmo says

By COSMOPOLITAN
For AP Special Features

Foot-in-mouth disease is even more epidemic than the common cold — everybody has blurted out a stupid or tactless remark and then wished it could be called back.

To find some of the best and most common examples, Cosmopolitan conducted an informal and unscientific poll and came up with these examples of things you may wish you had not said:

— Age often can be a touchy subject that prompts verbal miscues. Among the examples in the survey: "So what was it really like in the '60s? I was only a toddler at the time."

"Your husband? I thought he was your son."

— Beauty may be skin deep and in the eye of the beholder, but it also is an area where a lot of gaffes occur, as in:

"Personality is so much more important than looks — you're lucky to have him."

"He's so gorgeous — don't you ever worry about his cheating on you?"

— Sometimes it's your own ship you sink with a loose lip, as in: "I think it would be fun to take your kids on vacation with us."

"Sure, we can just grab a beer after the movie. I almost never eat dinner anyway."

"Well, you can stay for one more drink."

"Always call me when you're feeling depressed."

"We'll get a tax break if you put the condo in your name only? OK, go ahead."

"Who needs jewelry? That's just for gold diggers."

"Of course, I don't mind taking the subway in my evening gown."

"If I don't get an office with two windows, I quit."

"And you can have the ring back, too."

There also are the stupidities other people could kill you for. For instance:

"You have to see this movie — I couldn't stop crying when he died at the end."

"You're beginning to sound just like your mother."

— Then there are those statements that involve sex and are bound to make the hearer wonder:

"Sex doesn't mean that much to me either. It's communication, friendship, that count."

"You don't expect a girl never to have had a sex life before you came along, do you?"

— Sometimes there are the questions you shouldn't ask, particularly if you think you know the answer, including:

"What were you and Margaret Jane doing out there in the gazebo?"

"I just happened to push the play button on your answering machine. Who is Sheryl?"

— On-the-job miscues include:

"If I were you, Mr. Tillinghast, I'd fire everyone in this department."

"It's amazing you can get anything done in this mess."

Then there is the line that probably has caused more marital discord than any other. It goes:

"For once in your life, why couldn't you simply ask directions?"

Borers infest fruit, shade trees

One of the more distinctive pests to trees are shade and fruit tree borers. Generally, these insects attack trees that are injured or stressed for some reason. Most of the trees in our area will fall into this category this year. Freeze injury has weakened many of our trees making them susceptible to these pests. Borers are not limited to stressed trees and can attack healthy vigorous plants.

PEACH TREE BORERS

If you have peach or apricot trees, you will have peach tree borers if you're not treating for them. These borers are the larvae stage of a moth that are black with a single orange stripe down their backs. Peach tree borer adults are in the area usually about this time of year. Eggs are laid around the base of the trees and hatch in about 10 days. Newly hatched larvae bore into the bark near the hatching site and begin feeding. This is the best time to treat the damaging larvae.

Sign of borer damage is evident by oozing sap at the base of the tree. Prevention of the buildup of larvae and injury to the tree are goals that can be achieved with proper timing and insecticides. Chlorpyrifos (Lorsban) is the best product available for control and should be painted on thoroughly to the bottom one third of the tree. This should be applied after harvest or towards the middle to end of August. If fruit is on the tree during application, wait 14 days before harvest.

SHADE TREE BORERS

These borers are similar in some ways, but are the larvae stage of beetles instead of moths. The most predominant borers include round-headed or flatheaded borers. Some roundheaded beetles that attack shade trees include cottonwood, poplar, locust, and reheaded ash borers.

Signs of attack from roundheaded borers on trees include tunneling holes as large as or larger than pencils burrowed into heartwood and a discharge of sap from the tunnel opening. Injury caused by flatheaded borers consist of shallow, long winding, oval galleries beneath the bark, usually on the sunny side of the tree. Tunnels made by the larvae do not have outside exit holes although the sawdust-like frass may be visible in cracks in the bark or where the bark sloughs from the tree.

The presence of shade tree borers usually is not evident until it is too late to prevent extensive damage. Preventing borer attack is important. Management practices include: pruning dead or dying branches, maintaining tree health with proper fertilizer and watering, selecting trees and shrubs suited to the area and less susceptible to borer attack (ash, cottonwood, poplar, maple, and linden are especially susceptible), and protecting newly planted trees with paper, burlap, aluminum foil, or newspapers. This will also help prevent sunscald and mechanical injury. Where borers are a recurring problem, trunks and limbs up to 1/2 inch in diameter should be sprayed with a chemical. Use insecticide products containing Lindane or Dursban. Apply first application in April, and make application every 6-8 weeks through August.

For more information concerning borers, call the Gray County Extension Office.

Mom's discipline of fear victimizes man, child

DEAR ABBY: I was sitting in the terminal area of the Atlanta airport recently, waiting to board my flight. Across from me there was a woman telling a little girl to be quiet. The woman pointed at me and said, "Do you see that man over there? If you don't sit down and be quiet, he's going to grab you and throw you into the river!"

I didn't appreciate that comment at all, so I stood up to look for another place to sit. The little girl then started to scream bloody murder and tried to hide behind her mother. She was screaming, "Mommy, Mommy, don't let that bad man hurt me!"

That made me furious, so I said, "Lady, you should be ashamed of yourself. Don't say things like that to your child — that's child abuse!"

A security officer came over to us and asked the woman if she wanted to have me arrested. All the people in that area, not knowing what had taken place, thought I was some kind of pervert or child molester. The child was so upset, I actually took a later flight so I would not cause her further apprehension.

With so much about child abuse these days, a statement like the one the mother used to quiet her daughter is very believable to a small child. While kids need to beware of strangers, they shouldn't be senselessly terrified of "boogie men" that parents use to keep them in line. That child was a victim, and so was I! Please print this, Abby.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

NO BOOGIE MAN

DEAR NO BOOGIE MAN: I agree. The mother, in her ignorance, did victimize both you and the child. And it was very likely a technique she uses often to scare the child into line.

How much more effective it would have been if she had told her daughter that her behavior was not acceptable, and that if she did not settle down immediately, she would not get to do some activity she enjoyed — and then, as a responsible parent, followed through.

Once a child realizes that the mother's word is no good, the child will disregard any lesson the parent tries to impart. A parent's word should be gospel. The parent who cries "wolf" will lose credibility (and control) as soon as the child learns to reason.

DEAR READERS: Credit Georgia's Gov. Zell Miller with one of the best quotes to have come out of the Democratic National Convention in New York on July 13:

"I know what Dan Quayle means when he says it's best for children to have two parents. 'You bet it is!'"

"And it would be nice for them to have trust funds, too."

"But we all can't be born rich, handsome and lucky ... and that's why we have a Democratic Party ..."

"I made it because Franklin Delano Roosevelt energized this nation."

"I made it because Harry Truman fought for working families like mine."

"I made it because John Kennedy's rising tide lifted even our tiny boat."

"I made it because Lyndon Johnson showed America that people who were born poor didn't have to die poor."
