House barely approves tax bill

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House today barely approved a catchall tax bill whose future was clouded by a Senate filibuster that also threatened plans to ring down the curtain on the contentious 102nd Congress.

In fact, opponents promised they would try to talk to death the only three major bills awaiting final action in the Senate — an energy bill and a package of Western water projects in addition to the $27 billion tax measure. Republican leaders predicted that if the tax bill made its way through the muddle, it would be vetoed.

Both the House and Senate worked through the night, clearing away a pile of bills after voting for the first time to override a veto by President Bush. By votes of 74-25 in the Senate and 308-114 in the House, they enacted a cable-television regulation bill that Bush had rejected.

After approving the tax bill on a 208-202 vote, the House moved ahead with plans to adjourn for the year by midday. The Senate faced the possibility of having to return Thursday, following the Yom Kippur holy day, to complete the three bills.

Even before the Senate got the tax bill, Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., had begun a talkathon to protect a home-state industry.

The final tax bill had been stripped of his amendment to help companies such as Smith-Corona, which has announced it is closing its Cortland, N.Y., plant. Smith-Corona says it is being forced out by unfair competition from foreign-owned firms that assemble in this country typewriters made from foreign parts.

"If you think I'm going to roll over on this, you're wrong," D'Amato said at the start of a night-long speech.

But House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., said today that the House would not agree to alter the tax bill to satisfy D'Amato. That meant that unless the New Yorker abandoned his filibuster, the tax measure's future was grim.

"We're out of time here," Gephardt said. "We can't go back and do anything to the bills. The conferees (who wrote the compromise tax bill) considered the questions and did the best they could. Time's up."

The energy bill, which would set new conservation standards for light bulbs and electric products and facilitate construction of nuclear power plants, is under attack from Nevada lawmakers. Democratic Sens. Harry Reid and Richard Bryan of Nevada have promised to go all-out to block the bill unless it is stripped of a provision they say would weaken health standards for a nuclear-waste dump 100 miles northeast of Las Vegas.

And the water bill, which the House passed by voice vote, was threatened by opposition from Sen. John Seymour, R-Calif. The bill authorizes numerous water projects in 17 Western states but is anathema to California farm interests because it would divert scarce Central Valley Project water to municipal and conservation uses.

The embattled tax bill began as Bush's "enterprise zone" plan for improving inner cities and blighted rural areas in the wake of the Los Angeles riots last April. Lawmakers added many projects of their own — and three dozen targeted tax increases worth $27 billion over five years to pay for them.

Those tax increases, House Republican Leader Robert Michel of Illinois predicted, will lead to a veto.

In addition to authorizing 50 enterprise zones, with incentives for businesses and investors to create jobs, the bill would make tax-deductible Individual Retirement Accounts available to all but the richest workers; provide incentives for real estate investment; repeal luxury taxes on yachts and furs, and renew a dozen tax breaks for business and individuals that expired in June.

The House passed and sent to the Senate a bill raising the ceiling on Federal Housing Administration-insured home mortgages to $151,725 in about 20 high-cost areas. The present ceiling is $124,875.

Congress cleared for Bush's signature the last of the 13 money bills that will finance the government over the next 12 months. They appropriate:

—$14 billion for foreign aid. Israel would get $3 billion; Egypt, $2.1 billion, and the former Soviet republics, up to $417 million. The bill guarantees $10 billion of loans that would be used to build housing and create jobs for Jewish immigrants in Israel.

—$250 billion for defense, including $3.8 billion for the Strategic Defense Initiative anti-missile system and money to continue building a 20-plane fleet of B-2 Stealth bombers. The legislation also would help pay for a post-Cold War scaling back of the armed services, including money for early retirements, and helping military communities adjust to the reductions.

Workers using heavy equipment to search air crash site

By ROBERT J. WIELAARD
Associated Press Writer

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — More than 500 police officers and firefighters started a full-scale hunt for bodies today after stabilizing a 10-story apartment building that was sliced in two by an Israeli jumbo jet.

Officials feared the death toll from the crash of an El Al cargo plane Sunday could exceed 250, most of them residents of the low-income housing project. That would make it the worst plane crash in terms of casualties on the ground.

Two more bodies were recovered from the mountain of rubble by midday, bringing the confirmed death toll to 14, said Cecs Hullenaar, spokesman for the City Hall crisis center.

Workers had been carefully digging by hand because of fears the building might collapse. Cranes were used to pull down tottering slabs of concrete and other rubble, and experts said today the danger of collapse had been reduced.

Authorities also were looking for the Boeing 747's flight data recorder, which could explain why the plane lost two engines after taking off from Schiphol Airport. It crashed as the pilot tried vainly to return for a landing.

A spokesman for Swissair said in Zurich today that Boeing Co. warned airlines last week of possible problems with the engine mounts of 747s, before the El Al crash. Boeing said Monday that a notice had been issued but it was not clear from the statement when it went out.

Workers began digging deep into the wreckage to search apartments that were sealed off by falling concrete.

Teams filled stretchers with bits of charred human remains that were barely recognizable as fingers, legs and other body parts. The stench of burnt flesh hung in the cold, damp air at the site in the suburb of Bijlmermeer.

Mayor Ed van Thijn said the crash and the ensuing fire were so ferocious that a full identification of all victims could prove impossible.

"We may never know who they are," he said at a dawn news conference at City Hall.

Huib Winghagen, a city spokesman, said the recovery operation was now "going ahead at full speed" but stressed that searchers had to be wary of the building's precarious state.

Windhagen declined to predict how long the operation would take, but officials previously said it would last several days.

Officials said 80 apartments were ripped away altogether and 150 others were heavily damaged. More than 150 families were left homeless.

"It is a horrible sight," said Carel Boer, head of a fire department rescue team.

Police said the first 12 bodies recovered were those of three men, three women, one child and five whose sex could not be immediately determined.

The task of identifying victims was expected to be difficult, because many are believed to be illegal aliens. The apartment complex is home to many immigrants from Suriname, Ghana, the Netherlands Antilles, Cape Verde and Pakistan.

Officials said they would not take action against victims' relatives who might be illegal aliens if they helped with identifications.

The European Community announced today that it would provide $1.4 million in food, medicine, shelter and cash for the victims' families.

The disaster could be the worst plane crash involving casualties on the ground. Hutton Archer, spokesman for the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal, said the crash of a Boeing 707 cargo plane in 1976 killed 77 people on the ground and injured 78 seriously in Santa Cruz, Bolivia.

The El Al 747-200 slammed into the angle of the V-shaped building 14 minutes after takeoff. The pilot had reported one starboard engine on fire six minutes after takeoff and the other starboard engine ablaze six minutes later.

The engines fell into a lake as the pilot dumped fuel and tried to control the plane for an emergency landing. The four people on the plane died.

Investigators said it was too early to say why the engines caught fire. "Our first impression is that it was technical malfunction," said Transportation Minister Hanja Marij-Weggen.

Speculation about the cause ranged from engine problems to birds sucked into the turbines.

El Al spokesman Nachman Kheman said in a statement that the plane was in "excellent mechanical condition." He said the airline would not comment on possible causes before the investigation was complete.

Late Monday, Seattle-based Boeing said it issued a service bulletin asking airlines to inspect pins that connect engine pylons to the wings of 747-200s, -300s and -300s.

The pins are designed to break off and allow an engine to fall if the engine malfunctions, avoiding damage to the wing.

A Boeing spokesman cited similarities between Sunday's crash and one last December in which a China Airlines 747-200 dropped two engines from its right wing shortly after takeoff in Taiwan. Five crew members were killed in that crash.

"We have not found any evidence linking these fuse pins to either accident," the spokesman, Christopher Villiers, said. "This is just a precaution at this point."

Swissair said today it received the warning last week, citing only the Taiwan crash.

Airborne effort to Bosnia continues

By MARK J. PORUBCANSKY
Associated Press Writer

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Planes carrying food set out for Bosnia today, as Serb shelling and heavy cloud cover over the capital, Sarajevo, threatened the delivery of the desperately needed aid.

In Geneva, a U.N. official predicted children in Sarajevo would start dying in a month unless massive supplies of food arrive. And in New York, the U.N. Security Council was to vote today on a resolution that could lead to war crimes trials.

Serb artillery pounded Sarajevo's Trg Pero Kosoric section for the second day as the first aircraft — two U.S. C-130 transport planes — neared the city. Sporadic shelling and heavy machine gun fire sounded from other sections of the capital.

Low clouds showered rain on the city today, but it was unclear if bad weather would hinder the relief effort.

Fighting today between rebel Serbs and Muslim-led government troops seemed much less intense than on Monday, when fierce artillery battles set many parts of the city ablaze and pounded the suburb of Dobrinja near the airport.

Troops loyal to Bosnia's Muslim-dominated government on Monday repelled an attack by Serb militiamen, tanks and mortars on Trg Pero Kosoric, a square in the southern part of Sarajevo. But they were forced to abandon important positions in the Bosnian electric power authority headquarters, which burned down.

Shelling also started fires at New Town's city hall, a post office, five high-rise apartment buildings and an Orthodox church. Sarajevo's Holiday Inn hotel, housing many journalists, also was hit.

Bosnian government military sources said the simultaneous attacks on the southern and northwestern suburbs probably signaled a new effort by Serb forces to divide the Bosnian capital.

Five U.N. relief planes landed Monday amid the bombardment, in a desperate race to bring food, fuel and building supplies before winter weather sets in.

The war in the breakaway Yugoslav republic heads into its first winter with a death toll that already has climbed above 14,000. Violence broke out after ethnic Serbs set out to quash a Feb. 29 independence vote by Bosnia's majority Muslims and Croats.

This afternoon, the U.N. Security Council plans to consider setting up a war crimes commission to weigh whether atrocities committed in Bosnia should become the subject of a war crimes trial. A similar commission set up by the allies during World War II led to the Nuremberg trials of Nazi war criminals.

Serbs, Croats and Muslims have all been accused of massacres, torture and "ethnic cleansing," the practice of driving people from their homes to create ethnically homogenous zones. But Serbs are widely regarded as the chief aggressors.

In Geneva, Sir Donald Acheson warned that the health of the half-million people living in the Sarajevo area might reach a critical state by mid-November, and that the capital's young were most at risk.

Sarajevo needs at least 240 tons of food daily, he said, but only about 40 tons a day reached the city over land routes during a monthlong suspension of the aid airlift, which resumed Saturday. The relief flights were halted after an Italian plane was downed, killing all four crewmen.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic threatened Monday to pull out of ongoing peace talks in Geneva if a "no-fly" zone is imposed over Bosnia's air space, as the West has proposed. Bosnia's Muslim-led defenders have no aircraft.

McLean-Alanreed museum plans historical tour, rally

McLEAN — The first denominational church in Gray County was First United Methodist Church in McLean.

The first hotel was the Thut Hotel in Lefors.

The first town incorporated in Gray County was McLean and the first county seat was Lefors.

These facts and more are scheduled to be presented in informational sheets during a historical tour and poker run set Saturday as a fund-raising project of the McLean-Alanreed Area Museum.

The event is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. with the tour scheduled to take two to three hours. McClellan Creek is scheduled to be the site of concessions from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Poker run prizes are scheduled for 3:30 p.m. at the museum.

Maps for the tour and poker run will be available for separate fees and maps can be purchased to use as a tour anytime later without guides. The tour will have a concession chuck wagon at McClellan Creek as a rest stop.

Historical sheets will be provided at no charge, according to Ginger Rawlins, tour chairman.

Although the event is a fund-raising project of the McLean-Alanreed Area Museum, it is also designed for people interested in fall foliage and history of the area. The tour includes the restored Phillips 66 Station, prisoner of war camp, Kellerville oil derrick, historical markers for the first post office in Gray County and an Indian battlefield. It also will include the location of petrified wood home and Whitefish Creek bed and breakfast establishment.

For more information, contact museum president F.J. Hess after 5 p.m. at (806) 779-2268.

Fire prevention tip of the day

This week is Fire Prevention Week across the nation. The following tip is provided by Pampa Fire Department.

Does your home have an ABC or ABCD fire extinguisher in the kitchen and/or workshop?

Are there newspapers or other combustible materials stored near the furnace, water heater, or other heat source?

Texas Fire Incident Reporting System 1991 reported the leading causes of residential fires to be careless cooking, heating equipment, arson and careless smoking.

Hearst buys San Antonio competitor

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Hearst Corp., which publishes the San Antonio Light, announced today it has bought the rival Express-News for $185 million from media magnate Rupert Murdoch's News Corp.

Hearst said it would seek a buyer for the Light, a daily and Sunday newspaper that has lost $60 million since 1987. If no buyer is found, Hearst said, it would "reluctantly close the paper."

"Despite vigorous efforts to reverse the trends, Hearst has concluded that the Light's losses are irreversible particularly in view of the fact that the number of cities which can support two competing daily newspapers continues to shrink," Hearst said in a statement.

News Corp. has owned the Express-News since 1973; Hearst acquired the Light in the early 1920s.

The Light, which publishes morning and afternoon editions, has a cir-ulation of about 148,591 daily and 221,186 on Sundays. The Express-News, which also publishes morning and afternoon editions, has a circulation of about 188,797 daily and 284,728 Sunday.

Hearst said all Express-News employees will be offered continued employment. If the Light were closed, Hearst would offer severance benefits.

The deal is subject to federal anti-trust review.

Temptations singer Kendricks dies Monday of lung cancer at age 52

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Eddie Kendricks, whose clear falsetto punctuated such hits for the Temptations as "Get Ready" and "The Way You Do the Things You Do," has died of lung cancer at 52.

Kendricks, who died Monday, founded the group in Detroit in 1961 along with Otis Williams, Melvin Franklin, Paul Williams and Elbridge Bryant. David Ruffin replaced Bryant in 1964, and the group signed with the Motown label.

The Temptations had their first No. 1 hit with "My Girl" in 1965, followed by "It's Growing" and "Since I Lost My Baby" that same year.

"Eddie just had that great, great tenor voice that just was so captivating," Esther Edwards, the Temptations' first manager and the sister of Motown founder Berry Gordy Jr., said recently. "He had such admirers, men and women. But the ladies really loved Eddie and his style. ... He just had a sweet, melodious, captivating, tender sound."

The Temptations went on to become Motown's most successful male group, with more than a dozen hits.

Among Motown's groups, the Temptations ceded chart supremacy only to the Supremes, who started as the Primettes, a sister act to the Temptations' initial incarnation as the Primes.

"While the Four Tops covered the frenetic side of the Motown sound and the Miracles monopolized its romantic side, the Temptations quite simply stood as the finest vocal group in '60s soul," Joe McEwen and Jim Miller wrote in the Rolling Stone Illustrated History of Rock and Roll. "They could outdress, outdance and outsing any competition in sight."

Kendricks began a solo career in 1971 but rejoined the group in 1982 for a reunion tour. He was reunited with the band again in 1989 as it was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

Eddie Kendricks, 52, a founding member and lead singer of the Temptations singing group, died Monday night of lung cancer.

Kendricks and Ruffin began working together after their 1985 album, "Live at the Apollo," with the pop duo Hall and Oates.

Paul Williams killed himself in 1973, two years after he was asked to leave the group because of alcoholism and related health problems.

Ruffin died last year of a drug overdose, shortly after completing a European tour with Kendricks and another former Temptation, Dennis Edwards.

Kendricks, a Birmingham native, underwent surgery last year to have a lung removed. He said the disease was caused by 30 years of smoking, and he urged children not to smoke.

"A lot of people were saying it was HIV ... or drugs," Kendricks said. "It was just from smoking."

Kendricks is survived by his parents and a sister.

Grandma pregnant with test-tube twins

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — A 53-year-old woman became pregnant with twins through in-vitro fertilization, and a doctor said she had the same chance of a successful pregnancy as a younger woman.

Mary Shearing, who has three children and two grandchildren from a previous marriage, was going through menopause when she became pregnant.

The twins were conceived using her current husband's sperm and eggs donated by a woman in her 20s. The donor's name was not made public.

A checkup Monday showed that Mrs. Shearing and the fetuses were doing well in the fifth month of pregnancy, said Dr. David Diaz, medical director of Martin Luther Hospital's reproductive medicine program.

Diaz said Mrs. Shearing's good health and fitness give her an equal chance of a successful childbirth as a younger woman. Mrs. Shearing, a former amateur bodybuilder, described herself as fit and active.

Mrs. Shearing said she wanted to have a child with her husband, Don. They were married seven years ago and she miscarried three years later. She and her husband said they decided to go public to encourage older women who might be considering pregnancy.

"The age consideration, while it's important, is not something you run your life by," said Mrs. Shearing.

Four embryos were transferred to Mrs. Shearing and two survived. Hormones were used in the first trimester to sustain the pregnancy, but medication was discontinued after the embryos were established.

The twins normally would be due

Feb. 5, 1993, but Mrs. Shearing is expected to deliver in mid-December, primarily because of anticipated complications with multiple births.

A study published in The Journal of the American Medical Association last month said older women's wombs are able to sustain pregnancy if donated eggs are used. The study suggested that infertility problems in older women were principally due to their eggs, not their wombs.

Three Texas congressmen object to reported 'blackmail' by Sammons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three Texas congressmen claim that a cable television company tried to intimidate them in an attempt to change their position on cable regulation.

Reps. John Bryant, Martin Frost and Pete Geren voted late Monday to override President Bush's veto of a bill to re-regulate cable despite an attempt by Sammons Communications Inc. and the industry to change their minds.

The three were among the majority, as Congress overrode a Bush veto for the first time in his presidency on a 308-114 House vote and 74-25 Senate vote.

"I will vote to override President Bush's veto of the Cable Television Consumer Protection Act," said Bryant, D-Dallas, earlier in the day. "I will vote that way in spite of the extraordinary efforts of the cable industry and certain specific cable companies to intimidate me and other members into doing their bidding."

Fellow Dallas Democrat Frost said it was "disappointing that the cable industry has resorted to bullying tactics to create opposition to this consumer protection bill."

Sammons president Mark Weber defended his company's actions and said Bryant had no reason to complain because Sammons isn't operating in his district.

Weber issued letters last week to Geren and Frost informing them that he would write customers to inform them how the lawmakers had voted.

Weber also included a sample of the information expected to be included in the bills customers will receive by Nov. 1 — just two days before the election.

"Whether we like it or not, Congress does control our pocketbooks. While we cannot control how they vote, we can control who votes," Weber writes.

Weber defended his actions in a statement issued Monday following a Capitol Hill press conference held by Bryant and Geren.

"We feel our congressman (Geren) should represent the cable systems in his area, of which Sammons is the largest operator," Weber said. "We feel he's let us down and let our subscribers in the area down."

Sammons has about 104,000 subscribers in Fort Worth and 5,000 in Duncanville, said company spokeswoman DeAnna Causey. The company, which does business in 16 states, also has cable systems in Denton, Park Cities, Pampa, Borger and Dumas. Letters were not sent to the lawmakers representing those areas — Republican Reps. Dick Armey, Joe Barton and Sam Johnson — because they voted last month against the bill. They also voted against the override, as did the state's five other GOP House members.

Bush/Quayle bandwagon plans Pampa stop

A rally for the re-elect Bush/Quayle effort is set for 10:30 a.m. Saturday in Pampa.

The rally will be a part of a day-long bus tour of the Texas Panhandle by the Bush/Quayle Victory '92 Committee. Successive rallies will also be held that day in Amarillo, Teel Bivins, Congressman Larry Perryton, Dalhart, Dumas and Borger. Similar Bush bandwagon tours are planned Saturday across the state.

Along with about 40 Bush supporters from the Panhandle, tour participants will include State Sen.

The rally in Pampa is planned at Gray County Republican headquarters, 119 W. Foster.

Program aids senior citizens in holiday season

Southwest Airlines will reunite hundreds of senior citizens who demonstrate a strong economic need for assistance with family and friends this holiday season by awarding complimentary tickets through its 13th annual "Home For the Holidays" program.

Applications are available to area seniors who are 65 years old or older and who cannot afford to travel home. They can be picked up at senior centers or by calling the Panhandle Area Agency on Aging (PAAA) in Amarillo at 372-2281 or toll free outside of Amarillo at 1-800-642-6008.

The PAAA has joined forces with Southwest Airlines to administer the program. Completed applications must be received at the PAAA by Oct. 20 for consideration.

A limited number of applications per city from each of 34 cities served by Southwest will be selected to receive a complimentary round trip ticket based on their need for economic assistance and reason for travel. Past recipients may apply and only one application per person will be considered.

USAir keeps flying despite strike

By ALAN FLIPPEN

Picket lines went up around the country, including USAir hubs in Charlotte, N.C., and at the new Pittsburgh International Airport, where police said 25 people were arrested for trespassing and three for carrying brass knuckles.

Job security was the main issue. USAir wants to use lower-paid workers to push jets to and from gates; the union, whose members have been without a contract for 1 1/2 years, fears those workers eventually could replace Machinists.

"We're willing to take pay cuts. It's just that we don't think 2,500 people need to lose their jobs," said Nancy Silva, a picketing Machinist in Los Angeles.

USAir said three-quarters of its 2,600 daily flights took off Monday and passengers whose flights were canceled were given tickets on other USAir flights or other airlines. But few of them were happy about the arrangements.

"I called at 4:30 and they said, 'Oh, yes, it's going to leave,'" said Alice Stewart, who flew to Pittsburgh from Washington. "Then I got there at 5 and they said it was canceled." She arrived on another flight, two hours late.

"Look at that. Canceled, canceled, canceled. Every 15 minutes it changes," said Philadelphia-bound Sherry Parisi, who was stuck in Charlotte.

Other passengers called their travel agents for help.

"People are panicked. They think the world is coming to an end," said Kim Krieger, an agent in Washington, Pa.

USAir said its overseas flights to London, Frankfurt and Paris were not affected, nor were the USAir Express and USAir Shuttle services.

The airline, which operates in 40 states, is asking all employees for wage, benefit and work rule concessions so it can cut costs by about $400 million this year. Pilots agreed to salary concessions in June.

USAir Chairman Seth E. Schofield accused the Machinists of being "unwilling to make the same contribution and sacrifices as other USAir employee groups during this difficult economic period."

The airline lost more than $700 million in the past two years.

At New York's La Guardia Airport, aircraft mechanic Charles Migliore, 30, said his wife is expecting a child next month without any medical coverage.

"Things are going to be all right, but I wasn't going to sign the contract because it was like signing my own death warrant," he said.

At the Pittsburgh airport, passengers had more time to enjoy the mall-like atmosphere in the $800 million Midfield Terminal, which opened Thursday. The amenities range from fast-food restaurants and fern bars to stores selling books, cosmetics, jewelry, sunglasses and gifts.

Sandy Martin had to wait four hours for a flight to Tampa, Fla., after her morning flight was canceled. She had breakfast at a restaurant and browsed in a Christmas gift shop. "It makes the layover a lot easier," she said.

Is Wall Street catching a case of the blues?

NEW YORK (AP) — After months of shrugging off poor economic news, Wall Street may finally be coming down with a serious case of the blues.

The Dow Jones average plunged more than 100 points Monday morning before regaining some ground, but finished the day at its lowest level in nine months. The tumble raised concerns that stocks could be headed for a bigger drop.

"How many times can you shrug your shoulders?" asked Dennis E. Jarrett, chief market analyst at Kidder, Peabody & Co.

But prices were higher today on the Tokyo and London stock exchanges.

In Tokyo, the 225-issue Nikkei Stock Average broke an eight-session streak of losses with a gain of 116.60 points to close at 17,268.10. At midday in London, the Financial Times-Stock Exchange 100-share index was up 41.7 points, or 1.6 percent, at 2,488.

In New York on Monday, the Dow regained most of the day's lost ground to finish with a loss of 21.61 points at 3,179.00.

The big drop in the morning was particularly worrisome because of a 53.76-point decline on Friday. Many saw Wall Street as sending a message to policy-makers to lower interest rates one more time to stimulate economic recovery.

"We're in the midst of renewed weakness which may tip over into recession again," said Lincoln Anderson, an economist at Fidelity Investments in Boston. "The stock market's evaluating that in the face of no change in either fiscal or monetary policy, and it's creating concern."

Lower interest rates can make stocks seem more valuable in comparison to investments such as savings accounts and money market funds.

Whether the Federal Reserve got the message from the stock market could be seen as early as this afternoon. The Fed's policy-making Open Market Committee was to meet, and could vote to lower interest rates again.

The Fed has lowered its key discount rate once this year — to 3 percent — and has dropped another indicator, the federal funds rate, three times this year and 17 times since the recession began in July 1990. Economists foresee another cut in that rate, which is what banks charge each other for overnight loans.

While a barrage of cuts have left interest rates at their lowest levels in 20 years, they have not succeeded in encouraging consumers and companies to borrow and spend enough to lift the economy from its doldrums.

However, economists say that without the cuts, the economy could be in even worse condition, and they maintain that still lower rates could help.

Despite Monday's rebound, it was the Dow average's lowest finish since the first trading day this year, Jan. 2, when the indicator closed at 3,172.41.

In the last three weeks, the Dow average of 30 industrial stocks has fallen nearly 200 points, or 5.8 percent.

The stage for lower interest rates was set last week, when economic reports showed severe weakness in manufacturing and further contraction in employment in September.

Bush, cable industry lose as Congress overrides veto

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's perfect string of sustained vetoes came to an end as Congress, throwing off four years of frustration, voted decisively to override him on a bill re-regulating cable TV prices.

Republicans in both the House and Senate joined Democrats in voting Monday night to enact a bill designed to answer public outrage over skyrocketing rates and indifferent service from local cable companies.

"Good for the House, good for the Senate, good for the Republicans who voted to override," Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton said.

Bush attributed the vote to effective lobbying by the TV broadcast networks on Capitol Hill.

"I think I was right on principle," Bush said in an interview on ABC's "Good Morning America." "I think the approach I had would have kept the networks against cable, and the networks did a very good job of convincing people that their approach would keep costs down."

The bill requires the Federal Communications Commission to set rates for basic cable service in communities where cable companies operate as monopolies. It also is designed to enhance competition from other companies that can deliver expanded programming similar to cable and allow television stations to seek payment for cable's use of their signals.

The FCC has 180 days to adopt price-regulation procedures.

Supporters said the new law will encourage competition in communities that now have cable monopolies and result in lower bills to consumers.

But Bush and other opponents said it would just stifle competition and lead to higher rates. They depicted the struggle as between differing special interests: broadcasters on one side; cable companies on the other.

"The cable industry will do its best to live with this ill-considered legislation, but in the end, we don't think our subscribers will thank the Congress for it," said James P. Mooney, president of the National Cable Television Association.

Bush's veto loss, the first of his presidency, was one of the final acts of the 102nd Congress, which was moving toward adjournment for the year.

It was a pointed political embarrassment, barely a month before the election.

"This is an effort to embarrass President Bush 30 days before the election," Senate Republican leader Bob Dole said before the vote. "I urge my colleagues to sustain the president's veto. He hasn't asked for much."

In the Senate, the vote was 74-25. The House, which followed a few hours later, the vote was 308-114.

The majorities were well over the two-thirds needed to override Bush — margins Congress had never before mustered in his previous 35 vetoes.

Twenty-four of the Senate's 43 Republicans abandoned Bush. In the House, 77 Republicans voted to override Bush, while 85 voted to sustain him.

Bush had focused on the Senate in trying to persuade nine senators who supported the bill earlier to back him on the veto. But his efforts, including a high-profile Sunday morning breakfast with nine GOP senators, came to naught as the vote mirrored exactly the Senate's vote two weeks earlier.

Dole, R-Kan., claimed he had gained commitments from seven GOP senators — he did not name them — to switch to back the president. But he said he could not secure the two more switches he needed and, as a result, none were called upon to actually switch their votes.

Supporters of the bill in both parties insisted that the issue was consumer interests, not politics.

"This is not a partisan piece of legislation," said Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., co-author of the bill. "It is an issue between the cable industry and the consumers of our country."

Consumer groups praised the action.

"This is a tremendous victory for consumers," said Gene Kimmelman of the Consumer Federation of America.

But Bush's loyalists acknowledged more was at stake, and they pleaded with Republicans to stand with the president to avoid weakening him.

"There's something in the air here. You can smell it — politics, pure and simple," complained Rep. Norman Lent, R-N.Y., who led Bush's forces on the House floor.

In fact, much of the debate was among Republicans themselves. In the Senate, Democrats led a Republican, Danforth, serve as floor manager for the override effort.

Beneath the strong support for the bill was deep public sentiment against cable television companies, who supporters of the bill argued have raised charges to consumers at a pace three times the rate of inflation.

Adding to that sentiment was a perception among many lawmakers that the cable television industry had dealt with both consumers and Congress with high-handed arrogance.

"It is an industry that has abused their monopoly position," said Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D. "The sports fans of America are mad, and when the sports fans of America are mad, Congress must wake up."

Lott appears for pre-trial hearing on July 1 courthouse shootout

FORT WORTH (AP) — George Lott had bandages on his face for a courtroom appearance on Monday because of a jailhouse fight several days ago, jail officials say.

Lott, 45, had a bandage on the left side of his face, extending from his forehead to his cheek, when he arrived in court for a pre-trial hearing on capital murder charges relating to a July 1 courtroom shootout that left two attorneys dead and two judges and another attorney injured.

Chief Deputy John Pempsell said Lott was being brought out of a one-man rotation cell Thursday when he started a fight with another inmate. The other inmate, who was not identified, said he did not want to fight Lott but finally hit the bespectacled 45-year-old Lott when he taunted him.

Pempsell said he did not know why the fight began. Lott was examined in jail, and a physician decided Lott did not need to go to a hospital for treatment, officials said.

Lott has been indicted on capital murder and three other charges related to the shootings three months ago in the old Tarrant County Courthouse.

Assistant District Attorney Chris Marshall, 41, and Dallas lawyer John Edwards, 33, were killed. Two judges, Clyde Ashworth and John Hill, and another prosecutor, Steven Conder, were wounded.

In an interview with a Dallas television station several hours after the shootings, Lott said that he was the gunman and that he was upset over how a battle over custody of his daughter had been handled by the courts. However, Lott has declined in court to claim any responsibility.

Lott's criminal trial is scheduled for Jan. 11. It is expected that the trial will be moved out of town, probably to West Texas, but no change-of-venue motions have been filed.

Lott had difficulty speaking clearly during Monday's brief hearing. Judge Sharen Wilson granted three motions filed by Lott, a nonpracticing attorney defending himself in the case.

In his handwritten requests to the court, Lott had asked for information on prosecution witnesses. Specifically, he wanted to know if any had made deals with the prosecution or if any potential witnesses had criminal records.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less: It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Candidates must prove big point

The recent attention paid to Bill Clinton's draft status 20 years ago might well serve to help Americans focus on an unfinished bit of business from our Cold War victory: ending draft registration.

Clinton and President Bush should both endorse a proposal now in Congress to repeal mandatory registration. Repeal would save taxpayers the $28.6 million now spent on the program.

It helps to recall how draft registration was reinstated. In 1979, the Soviet Red Army invaded Afghanistan. To avoid looking wimpish, in 1980 President Jimmy Carter and the Democratic Congress reinstated mandatory draft registration.

At the time, candidate Ronald Reagan strongly opposed the renewed registration. Reagan wrote to Congress: "Perhaps the most fundamental objection to draft registration is moral. Only in the most severe national emergency does the government have a claim to the mandatory service of its young people."

"In any other time, a draft or draft registration destroys the very values that our society is committed to defending." Sound words, then and now.

Why didn't Reagan act on his pledge? Since 1981, Poland has become free, the Soviet Union has disintegrated, and the U.S. military has risen unchallenged across the globe. Now is the time for Bush to finish the work, begun in 1981 when he was vice president, of repealing draft registration.

Clinton, meantime, has proposed making a potential draft even more restrictive. But Clinton's own history shows why he should, instead, promise simply to end draft registration.

A draft army allows politicians and military planners to become careless, counting on an endless supply of young men to fight. Hence in the unpopular Vietnam War, which Clinton did all he could to avoid, the White House and Pentagon pursued a costly "graduated response" strategy that marched to defeat.

By contrast, a fully professional army, as we have now, forces the military and the politicians to weigh more carefully when and where to commit American troops.

Each candidate promises that the world would be safer under his administration. To prove his sincerity, each should call for eliminating draft registration, showing the world America's peaceful intentions.

Candidate Bush vs. President Bush

George Bush has big plans. He's going to cut government spending with tough decisions on entitlements. He's going to sue the budget savings to give everyone a tax cut. He's going to roll back burdensome federal regulation. He's going to lighten the tax load on small business. He's going to reform the health care system.

There's more. Bush plans to let taxpayers designate 10 percent of their taxes to reduce the national debt. He wants to get tough with people who stay on welfare forever. He will expand job training. He intends to lead an education revolution giving parents greater freedom to decide where to send their kids to school.

All we have to do is elect him president. Ronald Reagan made a career out of campaigning against Washington, even when he was sitting atop the federal government, but Ronald Reagan never ran against Ronald Reagan. Candidate Bush is running this year by promising to undo much of what President Bush has done over the last 44 months and to get cracking on all the urgent problems that President Bush has shamefully neglected.

The message to voters: You didn't like Bush's first term? Good. The second one won't be anything like it.

The problem is not that Bush's ideas are lousy; it's that Bush obviously doesn't believe in them with any fervor, if he believes in them at all, and that he's rarely willing to break a sweat to turn his proposals into programs — or to stop his opponents on Capitol Hill from getting what they want.

Taxes, which Bush has offered as the place where he and Bill Clinton really part company, illustrate his operating style. He came into office with one clear, unbending policy: no new taxes. But when the federal deficit got out of hand, he could think of only one remedy: new taxes. So he went begging to congressional Democrats, who refused to discuss any deficit-cutting measures until Bush publicly called for a tax increase — which he obediently did.

Or take federal regulation. Earlier this year, Bush announced a moratorium on new dictates from meddlesome bureaucrats — stanching a flood of regulations produced over the previous three years by faithful appointees of George Bush.

Or take spending, where Clinton is supposed to do his impression of a drunken sailor. Candidate Bush campaigned in 1988 on a proposal for a "flexible freeze" in federal outlays. "Flexible" was an understatement: Under Bush, federal spending has grown faster than it did during under the godfather of the Great Society, Lyndon Johnson.

At this year's Republican convention, the president blamed Congress for larding the budget with "pork barrel projects that waste your money" and vowed to enforce a spending freeze all by himself, through his veto power. This is the same president who has never vetoed a bill because it spent too much.

It is also the same president who, four days after his convention pledge, was out on the campaign trail conniving to bribe the voters with their own money, offering a $2 billion-a-year job training measure. Not longer after that, he was handing out slabs of pork himself, trying to ingratiate himself with Floridians by offering to rebuild the unneeded Homestead Air Force Base that was abruptly dismantled by Hurricane Andrew.

Now he promises to balance the budget through a cap on entitlements that would save $300 billion over five years. Great idea — why did it take him four years to think of it? Besides being tardy, this concept also lacks the crucial particulars: Bush hasn't troubled himself to decide which entitlements would be affected and who would lose out — except to assure retirees that the biggest entitlement, Social Security, would be off-limits.

The steadfastly non-partisan Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget says Bush will be lucky to get a cap that would save half as much as he envisions, assuming he would expend all the effort needed to get it through Congress. But given Bush's record, we can expect this proposal to have about the same shelf life as unrefrigerated ice cream. For Bush, there is no connection between politics and policy: You offer whatever you must to get elected, but when it comes time to run the country, you pay no attention to any of those inconvenient promises.

Americans who preferred Bush in 1988 have every reason to feel like the voter in the old joke who said, "My friend told me if I voted for Barry Goldwater, there would be American troops in Vietnam and rioting in the cities. I did, and he was right." An intelligent voter may conclude that Bush, whatever his failings, will govern far better than Bill Clinton would. But only a nitwit would believe that he will govern much better than George Bush has.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, Oct. 6, the 280th day of 1992. There are 86 days left in the year. The Jewish Day of Atonement, Yom Kippur, begins at sunset.

Today's Highlight in History: One hundred years ago, on Oct. 6, 1892, Alfred, Lord Tennyson, the best-known poet of the Victorian age, died in Haslemere, England, at age 83.

On this date: In 1683, 13 families from Krefeld, Germany, arrived in present-day Philadelphia to begin Germantown, one of America's oldest settlements. In 1884, the Naval War College was established in Newport, R.I. In 1889, the Moulin Rouge in Paris first opened its doors to the public. In 1891, Charles Stewart Parnell, the "Uncrowned King of Ireland," died in Brighton, England.

Paying Dews on a debt

Several years ago, I wrote a book about my father, a veteran of World War II and Korea, who died in 1970.

Capt. Lewis M. Grizzard, Sr. was a highly decorated soldier, but after he returned from Korea, where he had survived a bloody rout of his company by the Chinese and had survived only because a young Chinese soldier, attempting to surrender to the Americans, had hidden him from the enemy in a cave for six weeks. He was a changed man.

He began to drink heavily. He couldn't handle the family finances and borrowed large sums of money. He eventually left the Army or the Army left him.

My mother could no longer cope with my father's problems and had a 6-year-old on her hands. She moved us to her parents' home and eventually divorced my father.

I wasn't certain I could write the book. I didn't know if there was enough there. And there was so much about my father I didn't know.

He roamed the country from 1954 until his death. He taught school, sold shirts, ran restaurants — and the drinking just got worse. It was a stroke that killed him.

In order to write the book I felt I needed to know more about Korea, the forgotten war. So I bought an oral history of Korea as told by those Americans who were there.

It was a huge volume. I took it off a shelf at the bookstore and opened it to the middle.

The first name I saw was that of Sgt. Robert Dews. Bobby Dews had been my father's first sergeant when he returned from Korea and was stationed at Fort Benning.

My dad's new assignment after Korea had been to run the athletic program at Benning. Bobby Dews also played baseball for him.

I would hear Daddy speak of his talent and friendship on many occasions.

The sergeant noticed a byline of mine when I was with the Atlanta Journal sports department 20 years ago. I went by Lewis Grizzard Jr. back then. He wrote me a letter. He told me of his connection to Daddy and that he knew of his recent death.

He also wrote, "No matter what happened to the captain after Korea, never judge him too harshly. He had been through two wars and had seen so much blood, gore and death. It haunted him and the only way he could forget for a time, was by drinking.

"I sat by him at his desk at Benning and saw his hands shake. Many times, I'd say, 'Captain, let's go for a ride and get you out of here.'

"But he'd always go back to the bottle. I wish I could have done more for him."

I knew there was something providential about opening that huge book to a page where Sgt. Dews name appeared, so I began my own book.

During the writing I said a lot of things and felt a lot of things I needed to say and feel.

They buried Robert P. Dews, Sr. the other day. He was 77.

He had a minor league baseball career after he left the Army. His son, Bobby Jr., followed. He currently is the Braves' minor league field coordinator.

I learned of the sergeant's death too late to make the funeral. But I did want to write something in his honor. Something that could never square my father's debt to him. Something that would say a little boy who used to sit on the bench next to his daddy during Ft. Benning baseball games is thankful for what he tried to do for his daddy.

I guess Sgt. Dews was Capt. Grizzard's best friend. The preachers say we'll all be reunited.

Oh, let it be so.

Men won't dance - don't ask them

I haven't decided if I'd like Al Gore to ever be president, but he is my choice for Baby Boomer Dream Mate of the Century. He's tall, handsome, has a great sense of humor AND he can dance. On the last night of the Democratic Convention, he spontaneously grabbed up wife Tipper and started doing a sort of Texas-two-step-fox-trot number — like he'd done it BEFORE, even!

Mercy, if there was ever a No. 1 category on the wish list of baby boom women, a man who can dance has to be it. Men of our generation do not generally dance much, especially if they have to touch us to do it. (Unless it is what they call a "slow dance," which means they basically have a death grip on our shoulders and are leaning all their weight on us while shuffling to the music.)

Ironically — by some quirk of fate, nurture and/or perhaps even nature — most of the women of our generation love to dance, and not just among a gaggle of other women (which has become somewhat acceptable since we became liberated and discovered that if we gotta dance, this may be our only shot).

Now understand, I'm not assigning blame about this mismatched social agenda to either gender. We girls were reared on movies featuring Fred and Ginger, alongside boys who were conditioned to flip the channel at the first sign of a tap shoe to a station where Mickey Mantle was cantering along a base path.

But the burning question in my mind — ever since I was old enough to notice that in the news clips from the '40s and '50s all the men were jitterbugging and swinging their partners as if it were the last dance they'd every do — was, "What happened?" How could a generation of men who did such a passionate hiplock to the strains of "I-I-I-I'll be seeing you..." rear sons who would rather be pummeled with baseball bats than dance?

Perhaps it was the music we grew up with the '60s, inspiring a series of jolting movements done with your partner about three feet away, rather than the commanding throw-and-pull-you-woman-back macho motions of the men who spawned these sons. A guy was left out there pretty much in the spotlight in the '60s to try a bunch of body movements that didn't make much sense in relation to the physical laws of the universe. And invariably, whatever girl he was unlucky enough to be dancing with would be transformed into a Rockette upon hitting the floor, leaving the poor guy to hunch awkwardly alone.

Of course, that inequity begs the question, "Why were 15-year-old girls in 1965 ready for Radio City Music Hall while boys the same age could barely get up from their chairs? Simple. While the boys were comparing batting stances, girls were in their bedrooms and basement rec rooms practicing the latest steps they'd seen on American Bandstand. Since we didn't know any better be though maybe the boys we knew were also home practicing steps, so that we'd have someone to dance with.

Little did we know that those guys on Bandstand were really aliens from the star Arcturus and that no real red-blooded American boys leaned to dance or — God forbid! — actually practiced.

A few years later, after a lot of not dancing in high school, we married those men and didn't even dance at our own weddings. As with most objectionable habits, we thought that after we were married we'd CHANGE our husbands and they'd suddenly begin to see the wisdom of things like picking up their underwear and dancing. They didn't change any more than we did, and we've contented ourselves to make them miserable every time the band strikes up at company Christmas parties and wedding receptions.

Personally, I've changed my ploy and written to the St. Louis Cardinals with the suggestion that they devote one of their promotions to a "Big Band Night," with free dance lessons taught by Mr. and Mrs. Jack Buck up in Party Room A. You'd be surprised how many of those empty seats all those wives and girlfriends could fill, and how many men wouldn't mind dancing if they saw someone associated with the major leagues doing it near home plate.

Clinton, Gore target South and TV; Bush, Perot trail in polls

By JOHN KING
AP Political Writer

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP)— One caller wanted Bill Clinton's view on Ross Perot's re-entry into the presidential race, another his assessment of a trade agreement with Mexico. The woman calling from Las Vegas just wanted to say hello to her son, the Democratic presidential nominee.

For Clinton and running mate Al Gore, 90 minutes on "Larry King Live" Monday night offered a national television audience for a grab-bag discussion of their ideas and criticism of President Bush on issues ranging from his veto of the cable TV bill to his pre-war treatment of Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein.

But, for a show billed as an opportunity for voters to question the candidates, only six callers got through as King did most of the asking — and one of the callers was Clinton's mother, Virginia Kelley.

Clinton and Gore made the latest foray into TV-talk politics after a daylong bus caravan across central Florida as they tried to pad a narrow lead in a state that last supported a Democrat for president in 1976.

The Democrats were wrapping up their Florida trip with a morning rally at the University of Florida before heading onto Nashville and another unorthodox campaign appearance — this time on "Donahue."

Bush took his campaign to the airwaves with an early morning appearance on ABC's "Good Morning America" and was asked to comment on a story in today's Washington Post which quotes budget director Richard Darman as calling "sheer idiocy" the president's repudiation of the 1990 tax increase.

"I can simply say he's got my full confidence," Bush said. He added that he hadn't read the report. "So I'm not going to get caught up in some Washington Post gossip story," Bush said.

Bush also said "many" in his administration offered to resign if it would help him win reelection. But he stopped short of confirming the Post's report that Darman saw repudiation of the tax deal as a vote of no confidence and offered his own resignation. The story said Darman felt the agreement with congressional Democrats to raise taxes and cut the budget was intellectually and morally right.

With the election exactly four weeks from today, three new national polls showed Clinton holding leads of 8 points, 13 points and 17 points over Bush. Independent Ross Perot ran a distant third in all three.

A Harris Poll of 1,015 likely voters nationwide put Clinton's support at 53 percent to 36 percent for Bush and 9 percent for Perot. The ABC News-Washington Post poll had Clinton at 48 percent, Bush at 35 percent and Perot again at 9 percent. A New York Times-CBS News Poll showed 46 percent for Clinton, 38 percent for Bush and 7 percent for Perot.

The polls were taken Friday through Sunday, after Perot reentered the campaign. The margin of sampling error was plus or minus 3 percentage points for Harris; 4 points for the ABC-Post poll of 799 likely voters; and 3 percentage points for the CBS-Times poll of 934 likely voters.

As Clinton and Gore fielded questions Monday night, Clinton told a Vermont caller that he had some worries that Perot's late entry could split the anti-Bush vote, saying it was "easier for Bush to win a three-way race." Still, Clinton said: "We're prepared to debate all comers on the merits of our ideas."

With the first of three presidential debates set for Sunday in St. Louis, Clinton said he was eager to engage Bush. And he disputed the president's assertion, made in Florida over the weekend, that Bush's military service made him more qualified to be commander-in-chief.

"That's a matter of honest disagreement. But I just disagree and history indicates we have had a lot of good commanders in chief with no military service," Clinton said.

Clinton also upped the ante somewhat in his rhetorical war with Bush over the president's dealings with Saddam Hussein prior to the Persian Gulf War, saying a special prosecutor should investigate the Bush administration's favorable trade dealings with Iraq and the extent to which Bush continued helping Saddam after his administration learned he was using agriculture credits for military purposes.

Asked by King if there should be "a special prosecutor, special investigation," of the administration's pre-war trade agreements with Saddam, Clinton responded, "I think there should be."

TV networks expect to lose money in debates

NEW YORK (AP) — The winners of the presidential and vice presidential debates are unknown, but three losers already are certain: the broadcast TV networks covering the events.

ABC, CBS and NBC, which will carry the four 90-minute debates without commercials, could lose a combined $15 million in advertising revenue. Highly rated money-makers such as ABC's "Full House," CBS's "60 Minutes" and NBC's "Cheers" will be bumped to make way for the candidates.

Although none of the networks gave a loss prediction, one network official called the $15 million figure "not too far off target."

Accompanying financial losses will be sustained by many local affiliates, which for two of the debates will pre-empt programming in the "prime access" period at 7 p.m. EDT, when lucrative syndicated shows are usually aired.

Additional headaches for CBS could arise from conflicts with its must-air live coverage of the Major League Baseball divisional playoffs. For instance, the kickoff debate Sunday at 7 p.m. EDT is wedged between two playoff games, with the first starting at 4 p.m. EDT. In addition, there could be a conflict if the American League playoffs go to a seventh game the following Thursday, when the second presidential debate is to begin a half-hour later.

The schedule for the presidential debates is: Sunday, Oct. 11, at 7 p.m. EDT; Thursday, Oct. 15, at 9 p.m.; and Monday, Oct. 19 at 7 p.m., in, respectively, St. Louis, Richmond, Va., and East Lansing, Mich. The vice presidential debate takes place in Atlanta at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Oct. 13.

Although the debates come at the beginning of a new TV season, most of the pre-emptions will be of established shows, not new fare, and should have no lasting impact, according to David Poltrack, CBS's Vice President for Research and Planning.

Overall, "the effect from viewer disruption shouldn't be very severe, and seems to be pretty balanced" across the three networks, Poltrack said.

During the concentrated lineup of debates, the Big Three will likely lose viewers to other channels counter-programming with entertainment shows, and that will likely include rival broadcast network Fox, despite its recently launched news operation.

"We have not been invited to cover the debates" by the Commission on Presidential Debates, said Jeff DeRome, East Coast Director of Publicity for Fox.

He said the network would probably stick with its regular entertainment schedule on Sunday and Thursday nights. It has no prime-time programs Mondays and Tuesdays.

2 die over AIDS incident

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston man killed a woman and then shot himself to death after the woman allegedly told him she was infected with the AIDS virus, police say.

The body of Anthony Robin Harris, 31, was found in his apartment Monday, according to homicide Lt. Dennis Gafford.

Officers found a note on Harris alluding to the woman, 31, and sheriff's deputies went to her apartment in northwest Harris County and found her body in the living room. She had been stabbed at least once in the neck.

Her name was withheld pending notification of relatives, police said.

Deputy M.A. Woods said the woman was clothed, and a butcher knife and baseball bat lay next to her body. It has not been determined if the bat had been used to beat her or she had used it in defense, Woods said.

There were signs of a struggle, he said, but no sign of forced entry.

The woman was probably killed Monday morning, Woods said. Her body was less than an hour after Harris' mother called police when she found a message from him on her answering machine.

"They live out of town and hadn't been able to reach him," Gafford said of Harris' parents. "They were concerned because of a conversation they had with him. He didn't necessarily mention suicide, but he was very despondent."

Officers said a note was found on Harris' body.

The note mentioned the woman and prompted authorities to check on her.

Court may reconsider church-state boundaries

By LAURIE ASSEO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court may use an Arizona school case to rethink its two-decades-old standard barring excessive government entanglement with religion, legal experts say.

Opening its 1992-93 term Monday, the court agreed to decide whether public schools must pay for sign-language interpreters for deaf children who attend parochial schools.

The justices accepted another church-state case from New York, which asks whether religious meetings may be barred from public school buildings during non-school hours if non-religious meetings are allowed.

There's a good chance the court could use the Arizona case to create a new standard for deciding when government and religion have become too entangled, said Mark Chopko, general counsel of the U.S. Catholic Conference.

The Supreme Court in 1971 fashioned a test for deciding whether government has violated the Constitution's ban on establishing a religion. The test says a law or governmental practice is invalid if it does not have a secular purpose, primarily promotes religion or fosters excessive entanglement with religion.

Larry and Sandra Zobrest asked Tucson's Catalina Foothills School District in 1987 to give their son James a sign-language interpreter to help him at Salpointe Catholic High School.

School officials said they would pay for an interpreter if James attended a public school but not if he continued attending a parochial school. James finished school with help from an interpreter financed by his parents, who want to be reimbursed.

A federal judge and the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled against the Zobrests.

Oliver Thomas, general counsel of the Baptist Joint Committee, agreed the justices could use the case to revise the 1971 test.

But they also could stop short, he said, simply by ruling that the First Amendment clause guaranteeing the free exercise of religion neither requires nor forbids school districts to pay for interpreters in parochial schools.

The New York case began in 1989 when school officials in the Suffolk County town of Center Moriches would not let Lamb's Chapel, an Evangelical Christian Church, show films about Christian family values in a school building during evening hours.

The school district's policy is based on a state rule allowing school facilities to be used for political and civic meetings and elections — but not religious meetings.

The church sued, but lower courts ruled for the school officials.

The case should be viewed as one about free speech, said Catholic University law professor Robert Destro. "You can't discriminate against speech based on its content," he said.

In other action Monday, the court:

—Agreed to decide whether the Bush administration may continue picking up Haitian refugees at sea and returning them to Haiti without asylum hearings. The administration says the refugees are fleeing poverty, not political persecution, but a federal appeals court ruled they are entitled to hearings.

—Rejected the appeal of a South Carolina man found to be mentally ill but nevertheless sentenced to death for killing two children and injuring nine others during an armed rampage at an elementary school.

Judge delays 'gag rule' order pending appeal of similar case

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge says it would be a waste of time for him to consider whether the government acted legally in restricting what federally financed family planning clinics can tell patients about abortion because a higher court is considering the same issue.

U.S. District Judge Charles Richey said Monday he will wait until that court gives its decision on the Bush administration's so-called gag rule.

"In declining to act at this time, this court is not abdication of its judicial obligation, but merely abstaining temporarily," Richey wrote.

"The four thousand family planning clinics, and their officers and directors, are entitled to have promptly, at the earliest possible opportunity, a clear and unambiguous decision as to what they may and may not do on their premises," Richey wrote.

In the other case, Richey in May ordered the government to halt enforcement of its rule, which tells family planning clinics receiving federal aid that only physicians can advise women on the option of abortion.

In issuing that order, Richey said the government acted illegally in establishing the rule because it failed to follow procedures that would have allowed for public comment. The administration argued that the rule was not really a change in federal regulations but was guidance in how to apply regulations already on the books.

The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia overturned Richey's order.

Other matters in that case, however, are still before the appeals court.

On Monday Richey said it would be "a waste of judicial resources" to rule in the latest case before the appeals court finished the other case.

The two cases were brought by different groups but were based on the same legal questions. Opponents said the rule effectively cut off all discussion of abortion in the clinics because most do not have doctors on staff.

"While we are disappointed that Judge Richey was not able to rule today, we remain confident that the merits of this case will win out," said David Andrews, acting president of Planned Parenthood of America Federation.

The government took the opposite view.

"We're very pleased by the decision and look forward to having these issues resolved by the Court of Appeals," said Michael Astrue, general counsel for the Department of Health and Human Services.

The Supreme Court already has said that this rule does not violate constitutional protection of free speech.

Last week the administration's rule survived a challenge on Capitol Hill, where the House sustained President Bush's veto of a bill that would have nullified the gag rule.

3 found dead in plant blaze

MEROM, Ind. (AP) — Rescuers who climbed up the 740-foot smokestack of a power plant today found the bodies of three workers who died there in an explosion and a fire.

The accident Monday injured 25 workers at the Merom Generating Station, about 75 miles north of Evansville, state police said. Authorities earlier had reported 32 injuries.

State police said the blast was apparently touched off by welding equipment.

The missing men were found about 275 feet up the concrete smokestack, state police 1st Sgt. Mark Hartman said. They had been working there on a platform inside one of two fiberglass flues.

The rescue workers began climbing the smokestack after the fire was extinguished Monday night.

Children's books about Columbus abound

BOSTON (AP) — To mark the 500th anniversary of the voyage of Christopher Columbus, the editors of The Horn Book Magazine and "The Horn Book Guide" have compiled a list of 11 children's books about Columbus.

About 3,500 trade children's books are sent to the Horn Book offices each year. Reviewers include librarians, teachers, booksellers, authors and illustrators.

— "Follow the Dream" by Peter Sis (Knopf). This distinctive picture book focuses on the idea that Christopher Columbus spent his life trying to fulfill his dreams of adventure and discovery. On large, intricate pages, Sis vividly renders Columbus' vision of a new world. Full of simplicity, energy and idealism.

— "I, Columbus: My Journal 1492-93" by Peter and Connie Roop; illustrated by Peter Hanson (Walker) Ages 8 to 12. This introduction to Columbus uses excerpts from his own log of his first voyage. The narrative clearly describes not only Columbus' triumph in finding a western land, but also the frustrations he faced. Hanson's delicate sketches add charm, insight and appeal.

— "Where Do You Think You're Going, Christopher Columbus?" by Jean Fritz; illustrated by Margot Tomes. (Putnam) Ages 8-12. This short biography, first published more than 10 years ago, remains one of the best. Fritz succeeds in capturing the essence of Columbus — vain, stubborn, deeply religious — and setting him in the context of his own time.

— "Christopher Columbus: How He Did It" by Charlotte and David Yue. (Houghton) Ages 10-12. Columbus' feats are described in the context of the technical knowledge of navigation, astronomy, mapping and shipbuilding available in the late 15th century. The book is age appropriate and has an attractive presentation.

— "The Tainos: The People Who Welcomed Columbus" by Francine Jacobs; illustrated by Patrick Collins. (Putnam) Ages 10-12. The Tainos welcomed Columbus to the Greater Antilles in 1492. Jacobs evenhandedly describes the conduct of the European explorers, allowing children — who will find much of this information new — to draw their own conclusions about the subsequent momentous clash between the two cultures.

— "Morning Girl" by Michael Dorros. (Hyperion) Ages 12-14. In this novel about a close Taino family, the author draws readers inside another culture, making them care deeply about 12-year-old Morning Girl and rendering the story's conclusion — Morning Girl's guileless welcome of Columbus and his men — heartbreaking. Moving and poignant, written with great perception and humanity.

— "Christopher Columbus: Voyager to the Unknown" by Nancy Smiler Levinson. (Lodestar) Ages 12-14. This dramatic biography portrays Columbus' seamanship, original ideas and determination while reporting as well on his character flaws and brutal treatment of the native peoples he encountered. Cleanly designed and filled with maps and reproductions, the book describes each of Columbus' four voyages.

— "If You Were There in 1492" by Barbara Brenner. (Bradbury) Ages 10-12. Everyday life in Spain is detailed in a personal, you-are-there text that describes food and clothing, education, arts and entertainment, and other aspects of the culture and civilization. Columbus' many activities are related throughout. The book ends with Oct. 12, 1492, the date Columbus landed in the New World.

— "The High Voyage: The Final Crossing of Christopher Columbus" by Olga Litovinsky. (Delacorte) Ages 12-14. Fernando, the illegitimate son of Christopher Columbus, was 13 years old when he joined his father's ill-fated fourth voyage to the Indies in 1502. This highly readable novel is based on an actual book, "The Life of the Admiral Christopher Columbus," written by Fernando.

— "The Discoverers of America" by Harold Faber. (Scribner's) Young Adult. This ambitious account details the "great era of exploration, conquest and colonization" of North and South America. Among the many topics covered in its far-reaching discussion are the early voyages of the Norsemen, Columbus and others; the conquest of Mexico and Peru; the exploration of Brazil, Canada, Alaska and Hawaii.

— "Columbus and the World Around Him" by Milton Meltzer. (Watts) Ages 12-16. Meltzer's biography for older readers explores the implications Columbus' "discovery" had on the peoples of both the Old and the New Worlds, and how his fateful journey affects our world today. A perceptible, serious account.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Survivors' pay will fade away unless soldiers plan ahead

DEAR ABBY: As a military retiree, I know that many thousands of military and retired military read your column before they have their first cup of coffee in the morning. You could help the wives of those retired military by printing this letter in your column.

To all you military retirees: Retired pay stops when a retiree dies! The only way your survivors are assured of continuing to receive a part of that pay is for you to participate in the Survivor Benefit Plan. You can still enroll in SBP until March 31, 1993. SBP is sponsored and run by the Department of Defense, not by an insurance company.

For more information, call the following numbers and ask for the phone number of the closest Retired Affairs Office for your branch of service:

ARMY: 1-800-428-2290
NAVY: 1-800-255-8950
AIR FORCE: 1-800-642-6916
MARINES: 1-800-336-4649

Most Retired Affairs Offices are prepared to help any military retiree, regardless of his or her branch of service.

DONALD E. GOTIMER, USN (RET.)

DEAR DONALD: I'm sure many readers will thank you for having written this letter. And on their behalf, I thank you.

Readers: My staff checked these numbers with the Defense Department and was assured the numbers are correct. However, the lines are often busy, so be prepared to spend some time getting through.

DEAR ABBY: I am dating a wonderful gentleman. His wife died a year and a half ago, and every widow and divorcee in town is after him. My ex-husband and I were friendly with him and he deceased wife.

He is 70, but looks much younger, as he is in fine physical condition. (He walks four miles a day — rain or shine.) Of course, there is a problem, or why would I be writing a Dear Abby letter?

To put it bluntly, this man smells bad. He smells of stale perspiration — as though he needs some kind of underarm deodorant.

Perhaps it's his clothing that smells.

He looks immaculate: manicured fingernails, wears clean shirts and freshly pressed, well-tailored suits, etc. I can't figure out how he can be so neglectful of his personal hygiene.

I really care about this man — he treats me like a queen. But I don't know how to handle this delicate problem. What would you do, Abby?

MAJOR PROBLEM

DEAR MAJOR: I would tell him plainly and candidly that he has an offensive odor about him. If he insists that he showers or bathes daily, suggest that perhaps he needs an underarm deodorant. Also tell him if he doesn't change his underwear daily, he should.

If you find he does practice good hygiene and the odor is still present, tell him you care about him, and because body odor can be a symptom of a serious medical problem, he should see his physician for a thorough checkup.

DEAR ABBY: "Inhibited and Embarrassed" — the recently widowed 50-year-old woman who had a radical mastectomy — expressed her fear of rejection if she becomes involved with a new man. She asked if your male readers would write their honest thoughts about getting involved with a woman whose body is "disfigured."

These words from "The Little Prince" by Antoine de Saint-Exupery best express mine: "It is only with the heart that one can see rightly; what is essential is invisible to the eye."

ARTHUR H. PRINCE, MEMPHIS, TENN.

DEAR MR. PRINCE: Thank you for writing. The quote is absolutely true.

To get Abby's booklet "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a long-business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Dinosaur under arrest by FBI

By 3-2-1 CONTACT Magazine For AP Special Features

She's big. She's bad. She's under arrest. We're not talking about a criminal on "America's Most Wanted." We're talking about a dinosaur skeleton named Sue.

The FBI seized Sue last May. The problem was, she was found where she shouldn't have been: on the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe reservation.

But how was Sue to know? After all, she'd been there for 65 million years and nobody seemed to mind.

Nobody did, that is, until scientists dug her up two years ago.

They moved the Tyrannosaurus rex to the Black Hills Institute in South Dakota. That's when the trouble began.

The United States government says only it could give permission to unearth Sue since she was found on federal property. The Sioux say they own Sue. And the scientists at Black Hills Institute say they legally paid for the right to dig up her bones. Who's right? It may take years in court to find out.

In the meantime, the FBI has Sue under careful guard, with no visitors allowed. And that's rattling lots of scientists' bones.

Younger children included in 4-H through Clover Kids

Boys and girls in kindergarten through second grade can now experience 4-H through the 4-H Clover Kids program. The informal educational program begin in the state of Texas and in Gray County last year.

4-H Clover Kids is designed to be a family-centered activity. It is a place where K-2 aged youth, parents and leaders have fun, and learn to work together in club meetings, activities and special events. As with other 4-H program, Clover Kids is a "learn by doing" educational experience.

4-H Clover Kids were involved in a variety of educational activities in four Clover Kids clubs last year. Educational activities included tours of local places of interest, arts and crafts, science activities, international nights, dog and rabbit programs, foods programs and other similar activities. One group participated in the Festival of Trees.

Activities planned for Clover Kids are non-competitive. Research in youth development clearly indicates that competition at this age level is not developmentally appropriate. Youth in kindergarten through second grade need to be involved in activities where the risk of failure is minimized. They need to experience some degree of success through the activities in which they participate. Clover Kids keep this philosophy in focus.

4-H Clover Kids in Gray County are organizing now. This year there will be three groups in Pampa and one in Lefors.

The Pampa groups will meet the first Monday of each month, the second and fourth Tuesday, and the first Thursday of the month. The Lefors group will meet the second Thursday of the month. All groups are meeting at 7 p.m. and plan to be finished in an hour.

Clover Kids group leaders this year include Linda Justice, Monday night group; Sharon Price and Christy Pritchett, Tuesday night group; Judy Herpeche, Thursday night group; and Lendi Jackson and Debra Kent, Lefors group.

4-H Clover Kids is fun and educational. To join, call the Extension Office at 669-8033 for specific meeting plans and to enroll or receive additional information.

Involvement in Clover Kids program is open to all youth regardless of socioeconomic level, race, color, sex, religion, handicap or national origin.

"Pre-arrangement? At my age?"

Yes! Today, more people are recognizing that pre-arrangement is a thoughtful and prudent decision...one that should not be postponed. They have learned that pre-arranging the funeral service is a demonstration of love and consideration that can ease the anxieties of their families.

Funding the pre-arranged service heightens the wisdom of the decision. Funding protects your resources from the impact of inflation...permitting you to pre-arrange, at present-day prices, exactly the kind of service you prefer...and be assured an adequate fund for the future payment. We shall be pleased to provide informed counsel and attentive answers to your questions...and, literature that will be helpful to you and those close to you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your focus today is likely to be on things that affect your status and finances — just where it should be. Bright ideas could enhance your reputation and your resources.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You have the ability to sway others to your way of thinking today, especially if it regards an issue in which you truly believe. Let your voice be heard.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) If a reliable counselor talks to you today about ways to open up a second source of income, perk up your ears and strive to be totally attentive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) One of the reasons others are so fond of you is due to your gift for making everyone feel important. You'll be able to use this attribute in several encounters today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You can do whatever you set your mind to today, provided you believe in your abilities. Give it a test by aiming for something lofty that's within your reach.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Participating in some type of vigorous physical activity today could revitalize your zest for life and challenge you mentally. Don't be a couch potato.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your faculty for improving things that others begin will be operative today. There could be three instances where you'll use this gift effectively.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) If you have something significant to negotiate with another today, don't let it become a committee involvement. Best results will be achieved on a one-to-one basis.

High-flying Eagles bring Cowboys back to Earth

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It took three years, but Herschel Walker finally got the revenge he has insisted he never wanted.

The 30-year-old Walker ran for 86 yards and a pair of touchdowns on 19 carries Monday night as the Philadelphia Eagles routed the Dallas Cowboys 31-7.

Meanwhile, the Eagles' top-rated defense frustrated Troy Aikman and the Dallas offense with two interceptions and a fumble recovery, leading to 21 points. Another interception in the end zone snuffed a Dallas drive.

It's well documented history how Dallas traded Walker during the 1989 season to the Minnesota Vikings for five players and eight draft choices. The Cowboys used Walker's talent as bait to get started on a massive rebuilding program.

Walker, a taciturn type who rarely shows emotion on or off the field, sort of gave away his intense feeling after scoring a third-period touchdown that gave the Eagles a 17-7 lead. He raised the ball above his head as if to spike it, then stopped abruptly.

"This was just another football game," said Walker, who during the week before the game consistently tossed aside any revenge motive.

He said of the aborted end zone spike: "Everything is sort of spontaneous in football."

"As I said when I joined this team in preseason, my mission is to help win and go 16-0," he said. "The Cowboys are a good football team, but I haven't been with them for three years."

"We've been playing well, but what is so good about that is that we didn't play great tonight and we can get better."

The Eagles' defense held Emmitt Smith, the NFC's leading rusher, to 67 yards on 19 carries and harassed Aikman into an ineffective night. Aikman completed 19 of 38 for 256 yards, most of it when the game was out of hand.

"Right now I feel a little sore," Aikman said. "Their defense gave us a lot of fits. This is a tough loss. We have to get over it and come back."

Aikman hasn't had much luck against Philadelphia. In 1990, they put him out of action with a separated shoulder, and last year sacked him 11 times in the first of two games between the rivals. He's now 0-6 vs. Philadelphia.

The Eagles came out of the game 4-0 and the lead in the NFC East. Dallas lost for the first time and is 3-1 after having their regular season eight-game winning streak snapped.

"It was a big-hitting football game, and we put pressure on them which eventually paid off," Eagles coach Rich Kotite said. "We were swarming to the ball and we played smart with a lot of good judgment."

Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson said his team "made too many mistakes. There is no way you can make that many and expect to win. We gave them too many opportunities and they have too much talent for us to turn the ball over as much as we did. Philly is the most talented team in the league. Nothing they did surprised me."

On Walker, Johnson said merely, "I thought he did a good job."

The Eagles took a 7-0 lead when John Booty intercepted Aikman on Dallas' first series and returned 22 yards to the Cowboys' 14. Cunningham scrambled 11 for a first down at the 3, then scored on a 2-yard bootleg run.

Dallas took the ensuing kickoff and drove 84 yards on eight plays to tie the game. The key play was a 59-yard completion from Aikman to Michael Irvin that went to the Eagles' 25. Aikman threw seven yards to Jay Novacek for the score.

Philadelphia went ahead 10-7 on Roger Ruzek's 40-yard field goal. They held on with the help of an interception in the end zone by Wes Hopkins that aborted a Dallas drive.

The second half was all Philadelphia. Walker ran nine yards in the third period to make it 17-7, then went 16 yards in the fourth for a 24-7 lead. Keith Byars finished the Philadelphia scoring with a 12-yard scoring run.

Pirates' Bonds leans on teammates after carrying them to postseason

ATLANTA (AP) — Don't worry, Barry Bonds told the Pittsburgh Pirates all season, I'll get you to the playoffs. Guaranteed. For the third year in a row. No problem.

Now it's the Pirates' turn to deliver Bonds to his first World Series.

Last year their pitching staff took the Atlanta Braves to a land beyond even the wildest dreams of their fans: the World Series. Now it's the Braves' turn to carry their pitching staff — not the other way around — into the hunt for the world championship.

The National League's first playoffs rematch since the Los Angeles Dodgers and Philadelphia Phillies met in 1977-78 begins tonight in a stadium — Atlanta-Fulton County — that will be torn down in four years. Both the Pirates and Braves hope that's not a portent of things to come in a postseason series with a variety of big-name characters and intriguing subplots.

Certainly this is a series that will produce one very big winner — and a very big loser — from two teams that combined for 194 victories.

"There's pressure on them," Braves pitcher Tom Glavine said. "But there's pressure on us."

No doubt. Just two years ago, the Braves were a last-place team that drew less than a million fans. They're now one of the showcase franchises in baseball, a team that attracted 3 million-plus and won a major league-high 98 games.

The Pirates can tell you what that's worth in the postseason. They won 98 games last year, only to run aground in the playoffs for the second straight season.

That's why these playoffs, this October, is so important to the Pirates, who might not be back this way again soon. To Atlanta, anything less than winning the World Series would be a mega-disappointment.

"We've got some unfinished business," Atlanta's Terry Pendleton said. "Every team has a goal, and after barely missing winning it all last year, our goal is to go back and win it all this time."

Pittsburgh's Doug Drabek, the Pirates' starting pitcher tonight against Atlanta, throws during a practice for the National League Championship Series.

All the Pirates' winning lately has been in the regular season. Only one NL franchise, the 1976-78 Phillies, has lost three straight playoffs, and Pittsburgh doesn't want to make it two.

"Winning is the only thing that matters," said Andy Van Slyke, who hit .324 during the season but is only a .155 postseason hitter. "To lose three years in a row in the playoffs would be very disappointing."

Especially when they don't know when they will make it back again. Lose this October, and they'll almost surely lose Bonds and Doug Drabek to free agency, too. And they would be far tougher to replace than Bobby Bonilla and John Smiley.

"Nobody's worried about that," said Drabek (15-11), who starts tonight against right-hander John Smoltz (15-12). "We're just focusing on ... we've got another chance, and hopefully we'll get over the hill this time."

Lemieux latest to sign big contract

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mario Lemieux's got his contract. Now all the Pittsburgh Penguins need to start the season is a coach.

"We'll have a coaching announcement at 11 (a.m. today)," general manager Craig Patrick said during Monday's news conference announcing Lemieux's stunning new contract, which will earn him about $42 million over seven years.

The coaching decision seemed to be almost an afterthought in the wake of Lemieux's precedent-setting deal.

The Penguins have been without a coach since winning the Stanley Cup last season under Scotty Bowman, who had served on an interim basis in place of cancer-stricken Bob Johnson. Negotiations on a new contract with Bowman had broken down over the summer, but he reportedly was still in the running for the job.

Lemieux's contract and the mystery of the new Penguins' coach has taken some of the spotlight away from tonight's season opener between the Penguins and Philadelphia Flyers.

The game marks the debut of highly-acclaimed Eric Lindros for the Flyers, who will go head-to-head against Lemieux in a battle of the two highest-paid players in hockey.

Lindros had earlier signed a six-year contract worth about $21 million.

With the announcement of Lemieux's new contract at a splashy midtown press conference, the Pittsburgh megastar just about doubled Lindros' deal.

Penguins owner Howard Baldwin wouldn't have had it any other way.

"Mario Lemieux is quite simply the greatest hockey player in the world today," Baldwin said. "We would be remiss if we allowed Mario to leave Pittsburgh and take him away from our fans."

Lemieux, who just happened to turn 27 on Monday, beamed throughout the announcement. The contract superseded a five-year, $12 million deal that Lemieux had signed with the Penguins three years ago.

"It was a great birthday present," Lemieux said. "I will remember this for a long time."

Mario Lemieux signed a $42 million contract Monday.

Dykes hasn't given up on Tech

LUBBOCK (AP) — Texas Tech may have let Texas A&M escape with a 19-17 last-second victory, but head coach Spike Dykes hasn't given up on the Red Raiders' chances of representing the Southwest Conference in the Cotton Bowl.

"I don't think the conference race is over," Dykes said Monday. "A lot of things can still happen."

Dykes is optimistic despite a game this week in Raleigh, N.C., against 25th-ranked North Carolina State.

"I think that playing North Carolina State is probably good," Dykes said.

"We know that if we don't play extremely well, we don't have a chance. We probably need to get ready to play, and play in a hurry, and play somebody good. I just hope we get the same kind of effort this week (as against A&M)."

Tech, now 2-3 and 1-1 in the Southwest Conference, led the fifth-ranked Aggies 16-14 last weekend, but A&M kicker Terry Venetoulis kicked a 21-yard field goal on the last play of the game in College Station.

It was the Aggies' first game to be decided on a final-play score since the NCAA began keeping record of such things in 1971.

However, A&M has beaten Tech in the final minute at least twice. In 1962, the Red Raiders kicked a field goal, breaking a scoreless tie, but the Aggies returned the ensuing kickoff for a touchdown and a 7-3 victory. In 1967, A&M scored to erase a 24-21 lead for a victory that gave the Aggies the Cotton Bowl berth instead of the Raiders.

Last week's narrow escape also allowed A&M to extend its consecutive regular-season win streak to 14, tying Alabama's and Miami's streaks.

Dykes had nothing but praise for his team's effort.

"I don't know if we've played any better than that in a long time. We certainly had some guys who made some awfully good plays, repeatedly. We don't have anything to hang our heads about. We gave it our best shot, and that's all you can do."

Quarterback Robert Hall completed 17 of 30 passes for 228 yards and no interceptions against A&M's league-leading defense. Wide receiver Lloyd Hill, who came into the game leading the nation in receiving yards per game, caught six passes for 117 yards, including a 41-yard pass for a touchdown.

Tech had no turnovers and was accessed just one penalty. A&M had one turnover and no penalties.

North Carolina State also is coming off a loss to a ranked team (16-13 to No. 17 Georgia Tech) on a last-second field goal.

Dykes says his biggest concern is the Wolfpack's speed.

"They're wild and woolly. They've got a lot of team speed on offense. They've got a lot of weapons. They'll drive you crazy."

Tech and N.C. State both feature prolific offenses: the Wolfpack (4-2) is averaging 392.7 yards of total offense per game of total offense. Texas Tech, the SWC's second-most productive unit, averages 392.8.

Tarkanian takes stand in hearing

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Former UNLV basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian says he warned his players to stay away from a convicted sports fixer who played a role in his departure from the school.

Testifying before a legislative subcommittee, Tarkanian also said he had no improper contact with Richard "The Fixer" Perry, who he said he initially knew as Sam Perry, a summer league coach from New York who brought prep star Lloyd Daniels to the university.

Tarkanian said he learned that Sam Perry and Richard Perry were the same person when Time magazine published a story about Perry having lunch with team members.

"When we found out, I told the team on several occasions to stay away from him," Tarkanian said Monday. "I told them, 'The perception will be damaging to you and damaging to the program.'"

Tarkanian ended up announcing plans to coach only one more year at UNLV after a newspaper published photos in June 1991 of Perry in a hot tub with three former UNLV players. The school is currently awaiting possible NCAA sanctions for alleged infractions centering on Daniels.

Tarkanian, now coach of the NBA's San Antonio Spurs, was the first witness called to testify before a special legislative subcommittee looking into circumstances surrounding his resignation.

He told the subcommittee that he blamed UNLV president Robert Maxson with orchestrating events leading up to the resignation and trying to "dismantle" the program he had built for 19 years.

"When I resigned, I was happy about it," Tarkanian said. "It wasn't until the other stuff came out that I was bitter."

Perry was convicted of fixing harness races in New York in 1974 and of conspiring to fix Boston College basketball games in 1984. He now lives in Las Vegas.

Tarkanian said university officials never told him to make any changes in his program because of possible NCAA violations. And he predicted the current NCAA probe will find no major violations.

Tarkanian and his backers have accused Maxson of driving the coach away from the school in a power struggle between academics and athletics.

"We were on the verge of having a dynasty that could never be matched," Tarkanian said, reviewing the successes of his teams, including four trips to the Final Four and a national championship.

Harbaugh hopes to audible

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Bears quarterback Jim Harbaugh lives for the day he makes his next audible, coach Mike Ditka notwithstanding.

"I'm not going to let it affect me," Harbaugh said of Ditka's sideline tirade Sunday when Harbaugh changed a play that led to a 35-yard interception touchdown by Todd Scott and Minnesota's eventual 21-20 victory over the Chicago Bears.

"It's not going to discourage me or take away my confidence," Harbaugh said Monday. "I'll audible again when it's within the framework of our offense. I've seen Coach Ditka get emotional before. I put it behind me as soon as we went out after the next kickoff."

"It doesn't linger. Maybe that's hard for some people to believe; I've been through it before. It doesn't diminish my faith in what I can do."

But Ditka was still burning over the play Monday and said he didn't regret ripping into Harbaugh.

"I'm a man of few regrets," Ditka said.

"You don't audible on the other team's turf when half the guys don't hear it."

"He was dead wrong. It was the last thing I said Saturday night, and he understood me. Besides, the play that was called was an outstanding play."

Ditka had called for a long pass, and Harbaugh changed it to a hitch pass to Neal Anderson. Anderson did not hear the change, and Scott intercepted the ball.

"If it had not been discussed, I would have had no problem," said Ditka. "Audibles are part of football. But audibles are to get from a bad play to a better play. Not from a good play to a worse play. We went backwards."

And how.

The Vikings scored two more touchdowns to win and boost their record to 4-1. The loss dropped the Bears to 2-3.

Ditka said he hadn't talked to Harbaugh since his blowup.

"I plan on talking to him, but there's not much to talk about. He saw something; it didn't work. At the moment, it bothered me. It still bothers me. I'm mad. It turned the tide."
