Dr. Joe Donaldson: Red tape strangles noble call

By JOHN McMILLAN
Staff Writer

"I would have a difficult time recommending medicine to any young person," Dr. Joe Donaldson, a physician with 44 years of professional experience, confided after lunch at the Pampa Country Club. Dr. Donaldson is not one to retire blandly from private practice. If anything, his frankness seems to have come to the front in his recent departure from a medical practice in Pampa. Several years ago, Donaldson recalled, he visited a high school Pampa High School and the students interested in medicine that being a physician was the greatest profession in the world. Today, however, the same doctor says he would decline if invited to give a presentation during a career night event at Pampa High. A letter to his patients written by Donaldson before closing his private practice on Oct. 31, 1992, offers some insight into the transformation of Donaldson's attitude toward a medical career.

"... The bureaucrats in Washington and to a lesser degree in Austin are suffocating this country with regulations and 'red tape.' If I and other M.D.'s are not competent to do a simple urinalysis in their office without government supervision, then I certainly feel that it is time to quit..." Noting the "constant threat of legal suits and alleged 'malpractice,'" Donaldson wants that "the proud and greatest profession in the world" to be "outside" the "medical profession." Donaldson, who was active in the Texas Medical Association and political issues relating to medicine for more than two decades, plans to send copies of that letter to state and federal officials. His communication with the government will not end there. In an ironic twist to his career, the 75-year-old Donaldson has accepted a position as a physician at the R.H. (Rufe) Jordan state prison near Pampa. Although he expects his relationship with the inmate patients to be "entirely different" from his relationship with private-practice patients, Donaldson said, "If there's something wrong with them, you treat them the same way you'd treat anybody else." Donaldson's mien reveals few, if any, outward signs of frustration over government regulations in medicine. He smiles, good country doctor's sense, and he engages in repartee with other country club members as he retires from private practice with a certain mellowness. "I'm going to have more time to dance with my wife now," Donaldson jokes with a longtime friend in the country club's dining room. Donaldson already has a dance partner: He's been married to Johnnie Donaldson since February 1946. The veteran physician explained during lunch on Thursday that he believes the greater amount of attention to patients offered by a small-town physician can provide as good a medical care as patients receive in a big city. The small-town doctor, Donaldson noted, is more involved with the entire life circumstances of the patient, including where he works and who his relatives are. Please see DOCTOR, page 2

Clinton defers to Bush on European trade war

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — President-elect Clinton today pressed ahead with the task of building his administration while staying out of President Bush's way on a trade war with Europe and pardons in the Iran-Contra scandal. Clinton, who soon will step down as governor of Arkansas, held a morning meeting at the Capitol with his state Cabinet and got a standing ovation. "It's largely a visit to catch up with them on state business and thank them for their work during the last 13 months, as well as to lay out how he sees the next two months playing out," said Clinton spokesman Mike Gaudin. The president-elect ignored questions about his plans for an economic summit with business leaders and economists. Similarly, he sidestepped questions about sensitive issues facing Bush. "I just don't think I should say much right now," Clinton said Sunday after Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas joined other Republicans in calling on Bush for pardons for former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and other defendants in the case. "These decisions have to be made," Clinton added, shrugging off questions about pardons in the Iran-Contra arms-for-hostages scandal and Bush's plans to impose punitive tariffs on French wines and other exports.

Senior Clinton aides said today it was possible, but unlikely, that Clinton could convene an economic summit with business leaders before Thanksgiving. One senior adviser said Clinton would not necessarily name his top economic advisers prior to the meeting. The Clinton aides said among the first orders of transition business this week would be creating "cluster groups" to study government policy and help more senior transition aides build a government. Likely subject areas for the groups include economic policy, national security, foreign policy, health care and agriculture, said the aides, speaking privately. After a weekend of jogging, golf and going to a Tom Selleck movie, "Mr. Baseball," with his family, Clinton was conferring today with the director of his transition team, Warren Christopher, and meeting with his state-government Cabinet. Clinton went jogging before day-break today, running through a slight mist along downtown streets, even dodging cars at one intersection. He then stopped at a YMCA to exercise before beginning his meetings. Al Gore, the vice president-elect, was flying in for talks with Clinton after a weekend at his home in Tennessee. With 72 days remaining before he takes power, Clinton tried to dampen expectations of swift action on filling senior White House and Cabinet jobs. "I'm going to work hard but not rush decisions," Clinton said. "I was so exhausted after the election I couldn't read very much for two days."

Christopher said he expected the major appointments would not come before December, and that the first emphasis would be on the economic-policy team. Vernon Jordan, chairman of the transition board, also suggested an early December timetable but said some announcements could come as early as Thanksgiving. He hinted at a bipartisan tone in the administration. "We will have a diverse government," Jordan said. "This government will reflect the best talents in America, and that diversity includes everybody, including Republicans."

Jordan said he did not exclude the possibility of seeking foreign policy advice from James A. Baker III, who was the architect of Middle East peace talks before quitting as secretary of state to run Bush's campaign. Jordan and Christopher made the rounds of television talk shows offering a general blueprint of Clinton's plans. One of Clinton's first moves in the next few weeks will be to summon economists and business leaders to Little Rock for a summit on fixing the economy, officials said. "It will be an attempt to make an audit of where we stand now, to get advice from these individuals who run big companies or who are well known in the economics field as he moves through this process," Christopher said. The experts also will be sounded out on Clinton's intentions to create an economic security council, patterned after the National Security Council that coordinates policy-making on foreign policy and defense matters, officials said. "Economic decision-making will be given a higher priority," Christopher said. Offering a preview of a Clinton administration, Jordan said planners would design a White House staff that is 25 percent smaller than the existing one, in accordance with one of Clinton's campaign promises. Jordan said Clinton could move quickly to lift the Bush administration's "gag order" on abortion counseling and restrictions on fetal-tissue research. In a separate interview, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said he favored lifting the ban on homosexuals in the military — a position Clinton also endorsed during the campaign.

Pampa City Commission to consider Clean Cities advisory committee

Pampa City Commission will consider adopting a resolution approving the formation of a regional advisory committee for Clean Cities 2000 and appointing the city manager as the city's representative. The appointment is scheduled to be discussed in a regular meeting at 6 p.m. Tuesday in the City Commission Room on the third floor of City Hall. Other items on the agenda include:

- A resolution directing the staff to prepare a service plan and to publish notice for a public hearing relative to annexation of the unincorporated portion of Red Deer Creek.
- The second and final reading of solid waste rates for the state correctional facilities located outside the city of Pampa.
- Delinquent tax property of 513 W. Wilks.

- Previous minutes.
- The city manager's report.
- In a 4 p.m. work session, where no action can be taken, members are scheduled to discuss:
 - City planning strategies.
 - Golf cart replacements.
 - Wastewater process.
 - Traffic and parking around Pampa schools.
 - Miscellaneous information.

Court refuses to let AIDS patients use federal law

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today refused to let AIDS sufferers use a federal pension-protecting law to sue when their employers change health-care plans to escape costs of treating the disease. The court, over two dissenting votes, let stand rulings that the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) does not bar cost-cutting employers from curtailing or ending coverage for any ailment. Justices Harry A. Blackmun and Sandra Day O'Connor voted to hear arguments in the case, but four votes are needed to grant such review. Asked for its views, the Bush administration urged the justices to leave the lower court rulings intact. Nothing in ERISA prohibits an employer from amending health plans to cut costs even if those changes disadvantage people with AIDS or other diseases, government lawyers said. But they noted that newer federal laws such as the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, may forbid such practices. That law took effect for most employers last July. The law says employers cannot discriminate against AIDS victims by changing pay and "other terms, conditions and privileges of employment." In other action, the court: — Agreed to decide whether a Florida man's possession of a gun during a bank robbery may be treated as a "crime of violence" and be used to stiffen his prison sentence. In voting to review the case, the court seemed to set the stage for an important ruling on the sentencing powers of federal judges. It apparently must decide whether commentaries authored by the federal sentencing commission to explain sentencing guidelines are as binding as the guidelines themselves. — Refused to revive an invasion-of-privacy lawsuit against an auto parts plant in Michigan that required all its employees to undergo drug testing. The court, without comment, rejected an appeal by a group of former employees who said plant managers had not linked any accidents or disciplinary problems to drug use. — Agreed to decide whether Oklahoma may impose income and motor vehicle taxes on Sac and Fox Indians who work and keep their cars on tribal land.

Two unidentified Vietnam War veterans embrace in front of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Sunday in Washington, D.C.

Name reading under way at Vietnam veterans' wall

WASHINGTON (AP) — The names of the 58,183 Americans who died in the Vietnam War are being read in a poignant ceremony marking the 10th anniversary of the black granite monument where those names are inscribed. At noon Sunday, the first of 1,000 volunteers stood at the Vietnam Veterans' Memorial, known as "The Wall," and began reading names. The reading continues around the clock until 9 a.m. EST Wednesday, Veterans Day. Among the volunteers were activist Jesse Jackson; CNN correspondent Peter Arnett, who covered the war; ABC reporter Jack Smith; and Jan Scruggs, a Vietnam veteran who worked to get the memorial built and organized the 10th anniversary ceremonies. Vietnam veterans visiting the wall were choked with emotion. "It was a very traumatic experience for me... My fellow schoolmates that we went with... the four of us that went over there, three of them didn't come back. It was like really moving for me," said Stewart Green, who served from 1967 to 1968 and in 1969-70. Another veteran, William Wright, told a reporter: "I can see troops in formation and it all comes back... It hurts; it hurts a lot." Some 2.5 million people visit The Wall every year, making it the most popular memorial in the nation's capital. It also has become an emotional shrine for many Vietnam veterans, their relatives and friends. Other events planned for Veterans Day and the memorial's 10th anniversary include a parade Wednesday and reunions for servicemen and women. In 1979, Scruggs, fearing that those killed in the war would fade into obscurity, began working to build a memorial that would list every one of them by name. And for the past year, Scruggs has worked full time organizing the 10-year commemoration, which began Friday. "Last summer I began thinking about the 10th anniversary of this memorial, and how this was really an opportunity to finish the job I had started — this whole idea of healing the nation's wounds, of doing something positive to help the nation put Vietnam behind it," said Scruggs, who lives in Columbia, Md., and makes his living as a motivational speaker. One project that makes it easier for people to be reunited is an electronic database set up near the memorial and at hotels. Veterans can register their names, addresses and where they're staying in the Washington area so friends can locate them.

French refinery explosion claims five lives today

MARSEILLE, France (AP) — A series of explosions apparently caused by a gas leak severely damaged an oil refinery near Marseille early today, killing five workers, injuring at least eight and leaving one missing, authorities said. The blasts halted operations at the La Mede refinery, the second-largest of three in France run by the state-controlled oil company Total SA.

The most powerful of the blasts shattered windows in nearby towns and was felt in Marseille, 18 miles away. Fires continued to burn in late afternoon, but officials said they had been contained and there was little danger of further explosions. Thick smoke rose over the plant. Work crews used pumps and floating barriers in an attempt to prevent polluted water and chemicals from seeping into a nearby lagoon that feeds into the Mediterranean Sea. According to Total officials, several buildings at La Mede were destroyed. Those killed were working in a control room, officials said. It was the worst toll at a French refinery since 18 workers died in a 1966 blast that destroyed the Feysin refinery outside Lyon. At a news conference, Total executives said initial indications were that the blast resulted from a gas leak in one of the gas treatment units. They said the refinery would be shut down for at least several weeks, but said it was too early to assess the full extent of damage.

Corley was cited for failure to stop and render aid. Two passengers in VanDellene's vehicle were transported by American Medical Transport to Coronado Hospital, where they were treated and released.

Heavy fighting around airport delays relief flights to Sarajevo

By TERRY LEONARD
Associated Press Writer

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Relief flights into Sarajevo were temporarily halted Sunday by heavy fighting near the airport. The city was without water and electricity for a third straight day.

Government radio said there also was continued fighting in central Bosnia and renewed clashes in the western part of the country.

The head of the local Red Cross, meanwhile, appealed to the United Nations to provide escorts for more than 6,000 people trying to flee the besieged capital. Winter is setting in, and food and medicine are in short supply.

A 10-truck aid convoy bound for Sarajevo was stopped near Mostar because of the fighting, a U.N. official in the Croatian port of Split said, and a group of Danish U.N. peacekeepers were stopped by Serbs on the road from Belgrade.

In Belgrade, Yugoslav federal Premier Milan Panic urged the West to ease sanctions imposed in May against Yugoslavia for fueling the Bosnian war. He said this would give him political leverage to defeat Slobodan Milosevic, the hard-line nationalist president of Serbia, in Dec. 20 elections.

"Time is running out," said Panic, a U.S. citizen who formerly headed a California pharmaceuticals firm. "If (Western nations) don't help, they will soon have more Bosnians in the Balkans, but I will not be here to prevent it."

Panic, named premier in July in a bid by Yugoslav leaders to improve the country's image, has quickly built his popularity. Panic could either challenge Milosevic directly for the Serbian presidency, or head a party list for either the federal or Serbian parliaments.

Milosevic, a former Communist who advocates a "Greater Serbia," has been widely blamed for supporting the Bosnian Serb rebels, as well as for pushing for attacks by Yugoslavia — now comprising only of Serbia and Montenegro — against Croatia and Slovenia last year.

Bosnia's civil war began in April after minority ethnic Serbs rebelled against a vote by the republic's Muslims and Croats to secede from Yugoslavia. More than 14,000 people have been killed in the fighting.

Serbs have taken control of two-thirds of the country, with much of the rest occupied by ethnic Croats, who the past month have broken from an alliance with the Muslim-led government. The government now controls only about a half-dozen cities and towns.

Heavy artillery barrages erupted about 5 a.m. near the Sarajevo airport and subsided about two hours later, U.N. officials said.

A French U.N. officer, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the airport was closed to incoming flights. But Mike Aitchinson, a U.N. flight officer in Zagreb, the staging point for the relief missions, blamed bad weather and said flights resumed 90 minutes later.

Iran has sent at least three plane loads of food, clothes and other essentials to Bosnian Muslims, the Islamic Republic News Agency reported Sunday. The Islamic nation also plans to open an aid office in the Croatian capital, Zagreb, to speed distribution, the report said.

There has been concern about Iranian aid since September, when Croatian officials seized a plane load of arms and ammunition sent from Tehran in violation of a U.N. embargo.

Government radio said Bosnia's heaviest fighting Sunday again was in Olovo and Maglaj, towns north-northwest of Sarajevo. Clashes also were reported in Mostar and Capljina, both predominantly Croat areas of western Herzegovina.

Olovo has been the scene of intense battles for weeks, as ethnic Serbs seek to take Tuzla, a key point in the Serb supply line.

Apart from the western suburbs near the airport, Sarajevo was relatively quiet Sunday, with only occasional gunfire echoing off surrounding hills.

On Saturday, ethnic Croats frustrated by repeated delays of a promised evacuation convoy tried to walk out of Sarajevo but were turned back by armed guards.

Pava Barisic, head of the Red Cross head in Sarajevo, appealed for U.N. escorts for the convoys and asked the International Committee of the Red Cross to use its influence.

The army originally approved the evacuation effort but changed its mind, fearing able-bodied men would flee and thus reduce the pool of eligible fighters, Red Cross organizers said.

An agreement was reached over the weekend to resume convoys this week.

Bosnian officials said a Serb commander had threatened to destroy the city unless the government allowed ethnic Serbs to leave immediately for Belgrade. Serbs denied issuing an ultimatum.

Michael Jordan is highest-paid athlete

NEW YORK (AP) — Basketball is practically a sideline for Michael Jordan, No. 1 on Forbes' annual list of the world's highest-paid athletes.

The really big bucks come from product endorsements, which earned Jordan an estimated $32 million in 1992. That's on top of the $3.9 million he made dribbling and slam dunking, Forbes said in its ranking of 40 athletes Sunday.

The 29-year-old Chicago Bulls star has a contract with Nike Inc. for about $20 million, the most lucrative endorsement deal in sports.

Deals with Wilson Sporting Goods, Gatorade, General Mills, McDonald's and other companies make up the rest of his take.

No. 2 on the third annual list was boxer Evander Holyfield, with $28 million.

Auto racers Ayrton Senna and Nigel Mansell were third and fourth, with Senna earning $22 million and Mansell taking home $14.5 million. Golfer Arnold Palmer, who makes most of his money from endorsements, was fifth with $11.1 million.

The highest-ranking woman on the list was tennis star Monica Seles at No. 10. The winner of this year's Australian, French and U.S. opens made $8.5 million.

The minimum needed to make this year's list grew from $3.9 million to $4.6 million.

Among those who dropped off the list: Mike Tyson, who is in jail on a rape conviction.

11-year-old saves sisters from burning house

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — An 11-year-old boy used a bicycle pump to break a bedroom window and save his younger sisters from a fire this weekend.

Joshua Tidwell couldn't open the front door of his home when the fire began Saturday afternoon. So he called 911, broke the window and climbed out with Rebecca, 6, and Brittany, 2. He said the pump looked like a good tool.

"That's why I used that instead of my skateboard," Joshua said. Assistant Fire Marshall George E. Robinson Jr. said the blaze started from an extension cord hooked to a computer.

Clifford Tidwell had advised his son of escape routes to use in case of fire. "I told him we may never have to use this, but you never know," Tidwell said.

Tidwell and his wife, Karen, had to work Saturday and left the children by themselves for about two hours. Tidwell said he believed Joshua was a responsible boy.

"Obviously he proved that today," Tidwell said. Damage to the rental house was estimated at $15,000, Robinson said. The only injuries were minor cuts to Rebecca's arms from the window's broken glass, Robinson said.

Lefors school board trustees set Tuesday meeting

LEFORS — Lefors Independent School District Board of Trustees is scheduled to meet in regular session on Tuesday.

Items on the agenda include reviewing a report of property value in the district and voting to select a member to the Gray County Appraisal District Board of Directors.

Two executive sessions, one for a "school employee to address the board" and another to "discuss school personnel" are listed on the agenda. Routine items of consideration are minutes of prior meetings and monthly expenditures.

The board meets at 7 p.m. in the elementary school library.

Doctor

Donaldson, a Cleburne native who has lived and practiced medicine in Pampa since 1949, expressed a heartfelt appreciation for this town. "I've enjoyed the community, the people, and my activities involved in the community, and I wouldn't have traded my life in Pampa, Texas, for any place in the world."

Referring to his announcement of plans to close his private practice in the Medical Arts Clinic at Coronado Center, Donaldson said, "I've had more hugs and kisses and tears in the last month than I've had in a lifetime."

But the worrisome topic of government regulations is never far from his thoughts, it seems. Donaldson opined that the growth in federal regulation of medical practices undermines one of the strongest attributes of the small-town doctor — the individual attention that he offers patients.

"There's no two patients that are alike ...," Donaldson observed. "You can't sit there and write (regulations) in Washington that are going to be effective for any individual patient or any individual doctor."

Donaldson recalled that he once ordered the transfer of a patient to an Amarillo hospital for coronary bypass surgery, only to receive a call from an insurance company that had interpreted Medicare regulations to say the man could only be allowed one day in an Amarillo hospital. The Pampa physician replied firmly that the man had suffered a heart attack, and that Donaldson would not discuss the matter further.

"It's not a bunch of doctors in Washington who write the criteria — it's probably a bunch of lawyers and bureaucrats," Donaldson complained. "What's missing in those regulations, the Pampa doctor said, is common sense."

For all the advances in medical science over the past several decades, a visitor to Donaldson receives the distinct impression that his favorite era for practicing medicine was during the 1950s.

"I don't think the average doctor was aware of the bureaucracy until Medicare came in (in 1966)," Donaldson recalled. The relationship between the patient and doctor was better in the era before Medicare, he said.

Government beset by violence of drug traffickers, rebels

By TOM WELLS
Associated Press Writer

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Beset by the violence of drug traffickers and shaken by renewed, vigorous attacks from leftist guerrillas, the government has resorted once again to a state of emergency.

But there's little reason to believe the tactic will be any more successful now than in the past.

AP Analysis

Cesar Gaviria, president since August 1990, declared a national state of emergency Sunday after leftist rebels detonated bombs and staged a series of weekend attacks that killed at least 30 people and injured about 70.

Under the emergency, which will last 90 days, the president will be able to take action against the rebels without consulting Congress or the courts.

In a nationally televised address Sunday evening, Gaviria announced that his administration would attack the rebels' finances, prohibit the press from publishing rebel statements and punish local officials who negotiate with insurgents.

He also offered bounties for information leading to the capture of guerrilla leaders.

Gaviria said, in addition, that his government will increase spending and create new army units to combat Colombia's 35-year-old insurgency.

"I know that all of Colombia is waiting for firm action against the terrorists, against the murderers and kidnapers, against this band of delirious fanatics who failed to read in the papers about the sad end of communist totalitarianism," Gaviria said.

But Gaviria's "firm hand" may strike many as a desperate attempt to appear in control. Colombia has been under states of siege or emergency for most of the last 40 years — yet the killing continues.

Many people fear that a breakdown in government could result in the kind of unrestrained violence that claimed at least 250,000 lives in a civil war in the early 1950s.

Colombian officials often refer to guerrillas as bandits, refusing to acknowledge the severity of the problem.

The largest guerrilla group in Colombia, the Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces, is believed to have as many as 10,000 combatants. Another rebel force, the National Liberation Army, has an estimated 5,000 fighters.

Policemen carry a coffin Sunday, at Bogota's police air base, of one of 26 policemen killed Saturday during an attack by leftist rebels on a petroleum camp in southern Colombia.

Another four leftist guerrilla groups have negotiated peace terms with the government over the last three years.

The remaining guerrilla forces are incapable of overthrowing the Colombian government, but they are disruptive.

Colombian guerrillas have never been able to sustain their attacks for any more than a few weeks before they have to retreat into the mountains to rest, rearm and let peasant fighters tend crops.

The National Liberation Army has blown up the country's main oil pipelines scores of times in the last five years, depriving the government of hundreds of millions of dollars in oil revenue.

The Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces emphasizes raids on towns and public works such as high voltage electric towers.

Not all of the violence is by guerrillas.

The Medellin cocaine cartel has killed hundreds of people considered obstacles to their multibillion-dollar empire.

The victims have included a justice minister, the government's top prosecuting attorney, two presidential candidates, a newspaper owner who crusaded against drug trafficking and scores of police officers.

Gore seeks more than coat-holder role in Clinton's administration

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Al Gore harbors high hopes that his new job will be a "partnership," not a dead end.

No one is more invested in President-elect Clinton's promise of an alliance to change America than is Vice President-elect Gore, who desperately wants a substantive role in the new administration.

In his victory speech last week, Clinton promised: "We're going to do our best to give you a new partnership for a new America."

The expectation of that partnership was a major attraction for the 44-year-old Gore.

"I'm not especially enamored of the job of vice president as it has traditionally been carried out," said Gore, who is giving up a Senate seat from Tennessee. "But both of us have an understanding of how we can work together well and I can help him."

Gore brings extensive inside knowledge of how Washington works from his 16 years in the House and Senate. In addition, he has highly regarded expertise in arms control, the environment and high-technology.

Gore, who grew up in Washington as the son of a senator, sought the Democratic presidential nomination in 1988. But he dropped out after a series of primary losses and chose not to run this year, citing his son's long recovery from a near-fatal accident in April 1989.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Gore said he accepted Clinton's offer to join the Democratic ticket because he believed he could improve the Arkansas governor's chances of winning, and because "everything I care about would be better off in a Clinton-Gore administration and worse off in a Bush-Quayle administration."

So far, there has been no word on Gore's role in the new administration.

Historically, vice presidents have spent much of their time campaigning for congressional candidates, doing political work for the president or carrying out ceremonial duties, such as attending funerals.

"It's up to the president" to break from that tradition, said Walter Mondale, who is credited with redefining the office when he served under Jimmy Carter. "From everything I can tell, the relationship between Clinton and Gore is excellent, and that's a good start."

Vice President Dan Quayle heads the White House Council on Competitiveness, which looks critically at the effect of government regulations on business and industry, and the Space Council, which oversees the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

But such jobs are "probably less important than giving advice across the board," said Erwin Hargrove, a Vanderbilt University political scientist.

Some areas seem natural assignments for Gore: the environment, a subject on which he has written a best-selling book; technology, an area on which he has focused in the Senate; and arms control.

But it also would seem logical for Gore to represent the new administration on Capitol Hill.

"I think the fact that he's had experience up there helps a lot," said Mondale. "He knows the institution. If he seems to be close to the president, people will deal with him."

Sen. Thad Cochran said he'd be surprised if Gore did not take an active role in dealing with Congress.

"Because of his experience and his knowledge of the process and Clinton's lack of experience as a member of Congress, I think he will be a very valuable resource for the new administration," the Mississippi Republican said.

But Hargrove said vice presidents usually are "not very good" at representing the administration on Capitol Hill.

"The president has to do that himself," he said. "He cannot delegate that responsibility because it really won't work. The big boys in Congress want to deal with the president."

Al Gore

Besides that, Hargrove said he didn't believe Gore's strong suit had been getting things done in Congress.

"His personality more fits the problem-solving kind of approach," he said.

Cochran said that while Clinton must deal directly with Congress he will need an edge to get the kind of "quick start" that helped President Reagan deal effectively with Congress in his first term.

"That's where Gore comes in," Cochran said. "He can help acquaint the president with the process and then sell the president's program to the Democratic leadership. I think we can expect that to happen."

Lawmakers to try again on school finance plan

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawmakers who have struck out three times with school funding plans at the Texas Supreme Court return to the Capitol Tuesday for another try.

They're being asked to pass state leaders' so-called "Fair Share Plan" for public education.

The plan by Gov. Ann Richards, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and lame-duck House Speaker Gib Lewis includes shifting about $400 million in local tax property tax money from school districts with high property wealth to poorer ones.

It also anticipates less of a state funding increase than many school officials say is needed.

School groups already have pronounced themselves disappointed and dismayed over the plan, saying it would result in massive local property tax increases.

"We stand ready to continue working with the state's leadership to develop a plan that will bring equity and adequacy to our schools. This plan, I am sorry to say, will bring neither," said Jim Nelson, president of the School Finance Working Group, which includes about a dozen school organizations.

Richards said, "When you lay out a school plan there is always criticism ... We all live under financial constraints, every single one of us, and the state of Texas and its government is no different."

The plan anticipates new state revenue of about $650 million over the next two years, which is more than $3 billion short of the amount school districts expected under the current law.

Consequently, school groups say the plan would result in a local property tax increase of as much as $3 billion to meet increasing student enrollment and other costs. They say the state's share of public education funding would decrease from 46 percent to 43 percent in 1994-95 under the plan.

Bullock said the plan leaves all property tax decisions in local school districts' hands. But he acknowledged, "Local property taxes will go up."

Neither he nor Weizsaecker appeared to have been struck.

Berlin police said the disruptions were the work of the city's far-left anarchists, who advocate the dissolution of Germany and frequently try to disrupt official gatherings.

East Berliner Doris Schmid, 48, among those who responded to Weizsaecker's call to march, wore a picture of famed Holocaust victim Anne Frank pinned to her jacket. But her assessment of her country's current state was bleak:

"I think it is tragic that the situation is so bad that we have to go into the streets. I think it is too late for us."

The rally was boycotted by Kohl's arch-conservative Bavarian coalition partner, the Christian Social Union, which derided it as a weak and meaningless gesture.

The party instead demanded that the government tighten the nation's asylum laws to stem a record tide of foreign refugees who have born the brunt of the more than 1,600 rightist attacks on foreigners this year.

A dozen nations, including those near major maritime passages like South Africa, Chile, Argentina and Malaysia, have banned the Akatsuki Maru from their territorial waters.

France, a leader in nuclear technology, treats fuel for several countries. The Akatsuki Maru's plutonium was extracted from spent Japanese reactor fuel at a plant near Cherbourg run by France's state-owned nuclear-fuel processing agency.

The shipment is the first of 30 tons to be shipped back to Japan this decade under a $4 billion contract.

Lawmakers are wrestling with school funding again because the Texas Supreme Court in January said the current system violates the state constitution.

That system also transfers local property tax money from wealthier to poorer school districts, but the redistribution occurs within counties or groups of counties. The "Fair Share Plan" would transfer about the same amount of money on a statewide basis, with the authorization of a constitutional amendment.

The Supreme Court gave lawmakers until June 1, 1993, to come up with a plan to balance the funding.

It was the third time a school funding law has been rejected since the court in 1989 said there must be a close correlation between a school district's tax effort and the educational resources available to it.

"The threat of the courts closing the public schools of Texas on June 1 of next year is a very real threat," Richards said.

In hopes of freeing the state from court battles over the funds spent by rich and poor school districts, Richards said the special session's first priority is putting a school finance equity standard in the state constitution.

The proposed standard would require that for 95 percent of the local and state money put into public education, school districts that tax at a particular level get the same amount of revenue. Extra money raised and spent by school districts outside of an equalized system could not amount to more than 5 percent of the total.

State aid and local property tax money makes up the bulk of the $16 billion-a-year school funding system.

The proposed amendment also would help pay for new school facilities through a state bond program, besides authorizing the transfer of local property tax money from wealthier to poorer school districts.

Passing the amendment would require approval by two-thirds of the 181 lawmakers and by voters in an election.

Troubled Germany marks anniversaries after rally spoiled

BERLIN (AP) — Germany had little stomach for celebrating today's third anniversary of the Berlin Wall's fall after a huge rally against right-wing violence and intolerance was spoiled by egg-hurling anarchists.

Berlin today gave honorary citizenship to Mikhail S. Gorbachev, Ronald Reagan and Helmut Kohl — the Soviet, U.S. and German leaders credited with bringing east and west Germany together.

Today also marked the anniversary of Kristallnacht, or the night of breaking glass in 1938 when Nazi brownshirts rampaged across Germany, destroying Jewish businesses and beating up Jews. That was noted today with the unveiling of a plaque commemorating the Passauer Strasse Synagogue, one of many burned by the Nazis.

The Frankfurter Rundschau called Sunday's spoiled rally in Berlin, which was attended by 350,000 people, a "catastrophe" with "disgusting, undignified scenes."

This country currently seems to be more threatened by itself than we perceive," the newspaper observed.

Nov. 9 is known as the "day of fate" in Germany, and Sunday's events could not help but evoke a sense that the lessons of an ugly and shameful past have been lost on too many.

The euphoria of unification gave way long ago to worries about the cost of merging the country's bankrupt formerly Communist eastern lands with its long-prosperous west.

The burden has been compounded by the cost of providing for tens of thousands of foreign asylum seekers, which has bred resentment among many and fueled attacks on foreigners by right-wing extremists.

In speeches on Sunday, political leaders drew parallels between the atmosphere surrounding anti-foreigner violence that has claimed 11 lives so far this year and the days of the doomed Weimar Republic, when economic crisis contributed to Nazism's rise.

President Richard von Weizsaecker, who sponsored the rally, declared that the Weimar Republic had failed "because there were too few democrats for too long. It should never come to that again. It is high time to be on guard. We are all called to action."

Without naming names, Weizsaecker criticized Germany's leaders as failing to deal resolutely with the refugee issue.

But Weizsaecker's stirring call for courageous action was drowned out at times by whistling and booing. A tiny minority in the crowd threw eggs and rocks, and Weizsaecker had to deliver his speech behind a wall of clear plastic shields held by riot police.

The radicals also cut a cable, briefly interrupting the speech.

Across the nation, viewers watching on live television saw police charge the protesters and Weizsaecker add to a speech decrying neo-Nazi outrages a denunciation of "left-wing screamers."

Earlier, police had to whisk a grim-faced Kohl out of a march when he was greeted by insults and boos and eggs and stones flew from the crowd.

security forces and environmentalists. Its voyage home is expected to take two months.

Greenpeace said the freighter and the Shikishima were sailing southwest in the Atlantic and could reach Portugal's Azores Islands by Wednesday. Japan has not disclosed the route, for security reasons.

Greenpeace says that, considering the dangers of the cargo, it will not interfere with the Akatsuki Maru's progress. But it plans to track the ship and warn nations when it nears their waters.

It said the Shikishima had protested the Solo's action by radio, and warned the Greenpeace ship to keep safe distance.

A speck of plutonium inhaled can kill a human. It is also the key ingredient in nuclear weapons. Though France insists the shipment is not weapons quality, Greenpeace says it could be used to make 120 crude bombs.

The Akatsuki Maru left the French port of Cherbourg late Saturday after a day of clashes between Greenpeace tracking ship collides with plutonium ship's escort

PARIS (AP) — Despite a collision with an armed escort ship, a Greenpeace boat stuck close today to a freighter taking highly toxic plutonium to Japan.

Japan is shipping 1.7 tons of plutonium home to fire up a new generation of nuclear fast-breeder reactors. Greenpeace opposes the shipment and is tracking the freighter Akatsuki Maru along its secret route.

Greenpeace says the plutonium poses huge dangers ranging from a spill to an attack by terrorists seeking nuclear bomb-making material.

On Sunday, Greenpeace said, the escort ship Shikishima rammed its ship, the Solo, in the English Channel. It said the Japanese warship's helicopter landing decks were damaged, but reported no injuries.

The Solo's captain, Albert Kuiken, said the Shikishima was badly dented on the starboard side. He said a side railing also was ripped off and described damage to the Solo as light.

In Tokyo today, Japan's coast guard issued a statement saying the

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Revolution in China a more positive one

China's first revolution in this century, the communist takeover of 1949, brought a blood bath, oppression and economic stagnation. Its second revolution, a capitalist revolution now under way, promises to bring rising prosperity, greater individual freedom and, eventually, self-government.

The recent Communist Party Congress in Beijing was full of flowery rhetoric about the glories of socialism, but its words stood in contrast to the growing role of the free market in the Chinese economy. In farming, industry and retail trade, economic freedom is spreading through Mainland China, fueling a dramatic climb in living standards.

China remains far from an open, market economy, with nationalized industries and meddlesome bureaucrats still dominant, but the trend points decidedly to economic freedom.

According to a recent report in The New York Times, the state sector now accounts for only about one-third of overall economic output in China. In the last decade, the share of private industrial production has jumped from 1 percent to 10 percent, and the share produced by quasi-private collectives has jumped from 21 percent to 36 percent. The state share of industrial production has dropped from 78 percent to just over half.

In all the major cities, but in particular in the southern provinces near Hong Kong, private businesses are flourishing. In the rural areas, where most Chinese live, farms have decentralized and prices controls have been loosened. These market incentives have so stimulated food production that China now produces enough to feed its 1.1 billion people. Economic growth in the last decade has averaged almost 8.7 percent annually, a rate doubles living standards every nine years.

Within this surge of economic freedom could be the seeds of destruction for the ruling communist order. A dramatically rising GNP is more than just a number. For China, it means millions of families joining the middle class. It means greater access to education, including higher education. It means more commercial contacts with outsiders. It means more cars, telephones, fax machines, VCRs and personal computers in private hands, all of which tend to undermine central authority and control. It also means rising expectations among citizens, who tend to want personal and civic freedoms to match their new-found economic independence.

We've seen this connection between capitalism and other freedoms in countries around the world. In South Korea and Taiwan, civil liberties and representative government have followed in the wake of four decades of rising free-market prosperity. In Mexico, demands for greater political plurality are motivated in large measure by the rising economic prosperity brought on by the President Carlos Salinas' market reforms.

The free world, led by the United States, should continue to pressure the Chinese government to grant more civil and political freedom to its 1.1 billion subjects. But in the end, it may be the internal dynamism of the free market that finally frees the Chinese people.

"I kinda miss the political experts telling me what I think."

Alger Hiss? Guilty as charged

Last week the newspapers gave new prominence to an old story of the trial and conviction of Alger Hiss. This time the headlines told us that Hiss had been "vindicated" or "exonerated" by new evidence from Moscow.

Don't believe it for a minute. The most recent eruption in the Hiss case came from a Russian historian, Dmitri Volkogonov, who searched Soviet archives looking for evidence that in the '30s Hiss supplied classified documents to the Soviets. He found none: "Not a single document, and a great amount of material has been studied, substantiates the allegations that Mr. A. Hiss collaborated with the intelligence services of the Soviet Union."

Then Volkogonov added a positive statement that no good historian should make: "Mr. A. Hiss have never and nowhere been recruited as an agent of the intelligence service..."

The Russian historian, or course, cannot prove a negative. No one today can prove that Hiss was "never and nowhere recruited" to serve as a Soviet spy. In the Byzantine mazes of Soviet espionage, incriminating documents could lie in files unknown to Volkogonov. Given the sensational nature of the Hiss case, relevant documents could well have been destroyed.

The proof is on the positive side. In congressional hearings and in Hiss' dramatic trial, Whittaker Chambers provided overwhelming evidence of Hiss' guilt. Like the Sacco-Vanzetti case and the murder of John F. Kennedy, the Hiss affair keeps rumbling and bubbling. A key figure dies, someone writes a book, the public broadcasting people produce a pro-Hiss film. The case is likely to live forever.

For good reason. The story of Alger Hiss and

James J. Kilpatrick

Whittaker Chambers symbolizes the most towering story of this century, the conflict between democratic freedom and communist slavery. The pity is that Chambers never lived to see freedom win. Today the hearings and the trials are remembered only as a contest between two dissimilar men — Hiss, the well-tailored diplomat, and Chambers, the courier spy.

Hiss was slim, elegant, patrician, a kind of cloisonne man. He was private schools, Harvard Law, clerk to Justice Holmes, a lower level diplomat in the State Department, finally head of the Carnegie Endowment for World Peace. Behind the enameled surface he was something else, an idealist whose sympathies lay with the communist cause.

In "Witness," one of the most important books of this century, Chamber described such flower children of the '30s. They were spiritual vagrants, he said, whose traditional faith had been leached out. "They were looking for an intellectual night's lodging."

Chambers was the opposite of Hiss in every way. Born to a middle-class family in Philadelphia in 1901, he grew up as a bookish boy in a broken home. Following high school, he ran away. He became a common laborer, traveled widely, identified himself with the proletariat. In 1925 he became convinced "that only surgery could now save the wreckage of mankind, and that the Communist Party was history's surgeon." In 1934, he moved underground as courier for the party's "Ware Group" in Washington.

He stayed in the party for 13 years. At last, "slowly, reluctantly, in agony," he repudiated communism and deserted the party. He caught on with Time, became a senior editor — a quiet man, rumpled, jowly, taciturn. At last Chambers concluded that he owed everything he knew about the communist apparatus in the United States. He would atone.

Summoned before a House committee, he identified Alger Hiss as one of his sources. The shock resounded through Washington. Hiss belligerently denied everything. Liberal media leaped to his defense. Only a handful of congressmen were willing to hear Chambers' evidence, but in absorbing detail his allegations checked out at every turn.

Those who followed the story at the time will remember the gripping drama of their confrontation. There was the damning typewriter, the old Ford coupe, the documents in Hiss' handwriting, the microfilm, the prothonotary warbler. It all comes back. Hiss' world collapsed in the rubble of his lies, and he went to prison for perjury.

The charge was true then. It remains untouched by the Russian historian's statement a week ago. Chambers died in 1961. Hiss lives on, a pitiful relic of the age of the Cold War, still denying his insignificant treason to an audience that ceased to care a long time ago.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, Nov. 9, the 314th day of 1992. There are 52 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
On Nov. 9, 1938, bands of Nazis began roaming the streets of Germany and Austria, looting and burning synagogues as well as Jewish-owned stores and houses in a pogrom that became known as "Kristallnacht" ("Crystal Night").

On this date:
In 1872, fire destroyed nearly a thousand buildings in Boston.

In 1918, Germany's Kaiser Wilhelm II announced he would abdicate. He then fled to the Netherlands.

In 1935, United Mine Workers president John L. Lewis and other labor leaders formed the Committee for Industrial Organization as part of the American Federation of Labor.

In 1953, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld a 1922 ruling that major-league baseball did not come within the scope of federal antitrust laws.

In 1953, author-poet Dylan Thomas died in New York at age 39.

Immigration backlash worldwide

America's open door historically brought to our shores the hardy, the courageous and the capable to cross-pollinate our society with vigor and industriousness.

Recent years, illegal immigration beyond what our border patrols can handle has swamped the American job market with non-citizens.

Little is said in Congress because most members fear negative response from their own foreign-born constituency.

Yet, in the ethnic neighborhoods of American cities, we are hearing rumblings of resentment from legal immigrants who fear losing jobs to the illegal ones.

Politicians ignore such simmering resentment at their own peril.

Already, both in Europe and Asia, opposition to an increasing influx of outsiders had erupted into ugliness.

"Germany for Germans" has again become a familiar battle cry of demonstrators in several cities.

In the East German port of Rostok mobs stormed, stoned and firebombed buildings housing Romanian Gypsies.

Paul Harvey

They trapped a hundred Vietnamese "guest workers" in a building and set it afire.

Other disturbances in Berlin and Hamburg resulted in the arrests of hundreds of rioters, injuries to hundreds of police.

Bonn officials confirm instances against foreigners multiplied tenfold this past year, to some 1,500 altercations.

Germany, which took in 256,000 asylum seekers last year, is now contemplating a constitutional amendment to curtail immigration.

And it will happen because now even opposition Social Democrats agree that some such amendment is needed.

France is becoming inhospitable to foreigners. Britain is expelling immigrants who cannot prove political persecution in their former homelands.

India is slamming the door on the hundreds of thousands of Bangladeshis wanting in, most of whom have migrated illegally to India in the past five years.

Resentment against "outsiders" is dormant as long as their services are needed. With recession and unemployment the latent resentment festers. It starts small.

As when in our United States we are hearing Texans talk about overcrowded schools...

New Yorkers grumble about mushrooming relief rolls...

And North Carolinians talk about the influx of migrant farm workers bringing parasitic disease from Central America.

It cannot all be dismissed as neo-Nazism.

Unemployed West Germans surveyed so resent the uninvited influx of East Germans that they would if they could rebuild the wall!

An effort for starving Somalia

A full-page advertisement in The New York Times a few days ago caused me to reflect on Cain's contemptuous response to the Almighty's inquiry about his brother's disappearance: "Am I my brother's keeper?" That story did not have a happy ending.

But history has decreed otherwise. Through the ages, the Cain-Abel biblical tragedy has become a defining hallmark of our moral obligation to suffering neighbors, friends and foreign refugees.

Today, our political, religious and national heritages incorporate an answer confirming that we are our brothers' — and sisters' — keepers.

That enlarged definition of our humanity was the reason the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee for Somali Relief took out a full-page ad in The New York Times.

"Help us build a humane refugee center for 20,000 Somalis," the ad implored its readers. After the center is completed, it will be handed over to the U.N. High Commissioner on Refugees.

Although titled "An Appeal to American Jews," the ad touched thousands of non-Jews like myself. Humanity is indivisible when suffering is universal.

There is a universality of horror in the face of a people's suffering that may result in 1.5 million Somalis starving to death. There is a universality of compassion for the 80 percent of all Somali children who are barely able to eke out an existence due to severe malnutrition.

If any people on this earth understand what it is to suffer recurring threats to their existence and still prevail, it is the Jewish people. Nobody could even begin to fault world Jewry if it concentrated its resources and energies on just trying to maintain a secure and stable Israel as an eternal sanctuary for Jews in the diaspora.

When thousands of Ethiopian Jews, the Falashas, were endangered by starvation and religious persecution, Israelis mounted Operation Exodus and rescued them for resettlement in Israel.

But 99 percent of the Somali people are Sunni Moslems. That religious fact is irrelevant to the sponsoring agency, the Jewish Coalition for Somali Refugee Relief.

"As Jews, we cannot stand silent in the face of Somali suffering — especially during this High Holy Day season," the ad said. "Our own history cries out to us to do all we can to save these people before it's too late. To recognize their pain with the compassion of a fellow victim (my emphasis)."

A few weeks ago, I wrote about the countrywide starvation in Somalia that threatens to decimate its future. "Thousands of children are dying each day," a very dear friend, Somali's vice president, Omar Mohallim Mohammed, told me and my wife during a recent reunion. (We had not seen each other in 22 years.)

It's possible that my heart particularly reaches out to Somalia because of our love for Omar, but it is natural humanitarian instincts that govern the desire to save unknown babies across the ocean.

Those same instincts inspired the Jewish Coalition's ad.

They also inspired Widespread Jewish involvement in the Black-Jewish coalition that orchestrated many of the civil rights victories. But in the past few years, that once glorious coalition has fallen on hard times. Anti-Semitism among a few black artists and a deadly silence about it among most black leaders, as well as Jewish opposition to affirmative action and a shift in Jewish concerns toward Israel's survival, have crippled the coalition.

But the Jewish Coalition's humanitarian efforts on behalf of a starving Somalia — an African nation — teaches a lesson to Americans living in the African diaspora: The skin color of ethnicity is no barrier to global love.

If you agree, please send a donation to the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee — Somali Relief, 711 Third Ave., New York, NY 11017.

It will reaffirm a biblical tradition that as Americans we are our brothers' and our sisters' keepers.

Childhood diabetes: Diet is key

Helping your children learn to eat right keeps them healthy and teaches them how to take control of their health. Eating right is especially important for children with diabetes because diabetes interferes with the way the body uses food. This makes diet one of the cornerstones of diabetes management.

The dietary goals for children with insulin-dependent (IDDM or type I) diabetes are to maintain:

- Normal growth and development - Diabetes requires that special attention be paid to your child's eating habits by studying food choices and portion sizes. In addition to balancing food with insulin, your child's diet must also provide the calories and nutrients needed to maintain normal growth and development, as well as a desirable weight.

- Consistency - How much your child eats is as important as when it is eaten. A meal plan will help your child maintain a day-to-day consistency in the amount of carbohydrate, protein and fat eaten as well as establish a schedule for meals and snacks. The meal plan will guide your child's food choices to provide a consistent mix of foods while still allowing your child to enjoy variety. The American Diabetes Association meal plan booklet "Exchange Lists for Meal Planning" can be ordered. Meal plans such as "exchange" diets are not written in stone, so if the initial plan isn't right for your child, don't hesitate to talk to your physician or dietician and work out another plan that fits the child's lifestyle. Each list contains foods that have about the same amount of carbohydrate, protein, fat and calories. So they can be substituted - or exchanged - for one another. The six lists are: starch/bread, meat and meat substitutes, vegetables, fruit, milk and fat.

- Balance - a consistent food intake will help ensure that there is glucose in the bloodstream at the times when your child's insulin is peaking (working the hardest), or during those times when your child is most active, such as during a school recess. To avoid upsetting this balance, your child should never skip a meal.

With the exchange lists, your child can enjoy balanced meals that are as appealing and appetizing as you want to make them. The exchange system is easy enough for most school-age children to understand. And giving children choices about what they can eat may encourage them to follow their meal plan. Choices and flexibility may also help foster a healthy attitude about eating which your child can carry into adulthood.

Contact the Gray County Extension Office at 669-8033 for help in identifying other educational materials and publications about diabetes and assistance in planning menus using the exchange lists.

Next week's column will focus on dietetic foods and diabetics.

Happy birthday to you!

Nelle W. Baird celebrated her 101 birthday on Nov. 5. She was born in Smith County, Tenn., the first of nine children born to Dr. and Ella Smith Williams. She and her first husband Robert Gill moved to Pampa in 1933 and operated grocery stores in the Lefors oil field and in Pampa until his death in 1944. In 1948, she married A.J. Earp, a farmer. He died in 1951. She married Ernest Baird in 1960 and they lived on a farm until they moved into Pampa in 1971. He died in 1988. She was active in First Baptist Church as long as her health permitted. For the last 3 1/2 years, she has lived at Coronado Nursing Center. Two of her sisters live in Pampa and one brother lives in Tennessee.

'Dance Through Time' mixes old and new

By BILL HALEY
Guest Reviewer

The Pampa Community Concert Association presented "Dance Through Time" Nov. 2 in M.K. Brown Auditorium. The dances programmed were not so much of the professional type as seen on Broadway as of the folk genre engaged in by amateurs.

The half was a compendium of dances in vogue from the 15th through the 19th centuries. These are the Galliards, Contracances, Quadrilles, Hornpipes and Cotillions. All of these were designed for groups divided into couples. They required considerable skill and stamina and were frequently enacted before audiences as were those Monday night.

Where did these dances originate? The answer is that they are in the realm of folk art and nobody really knows the time or place of their beginning.

The second half was the 20th century all the way. They were of the ballroom type which is popular today. One of them called the Castles was surely named for Vernon and Irene Castle, a famous dance duo of World War I days. Others carried colorful and sometimes disturbing titles like the Tango, Black Bottom, Charleston, Jitterbug and Rhumba. In one shocker the boy clipped the girl on the chin causing her to fall to the floor on her back, then dragging her along the floor with her heels at his hips. Was the young lady in any way impaired by such unchivalrous conduct? Not in the least. She simply arose in order to start all over.

It was an exciting evening and an enactment of days which are familiar to most of us. The dances were entertaining, exciting and possibly revolting at times. As I see it, the high point was an all too short but very accurate recreation of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers a colossal dance team of pre-World War II days.

IRS scams cost taxpayers mega bucks

By GOOD HOUSEKEEPING
For AP Special Features

When the voice on the telephone identifies itself as the Internal Revenue Service, don't panic — it may be an imposter.

Con artists posing as IRS agents, according to an article by Virginia Maida Randall in the current issue of Good Housekeeping, have swindled thousands of dollars from unsuspecting taxpayers around the country. Reports of these crimes have increased, Johnell Hunter of the Internal Revenue Service in Washington, D.C., said.

However, according to the IRS office in Nashville, Tenn., many schemes go unreported because victims are too embarrassed to tell anyone what has happened to them; other victims wait too long to call authorities, so the impersonators escape.

Here are three recently reported scams:

- An imposter called workers and said they were eligible for tax refunds, but the refunds were being held because they owed back taxes. The victims paid the nonexistent back taxes after the caller threatened with arrest.

- Taxpayers got calls from a phony IRS agent who claimed he was conducting an audit. The victims gave the caller their Social Security numbers and other information about their credit cards and checking accounts.

The caller then called the credit card companies and requested new cards in the victims' names with different addresses. In one case the scam artist stole $850 from the victim's checking account using the information the victim had given him on the phone. The crook was arrested at a post office when he tried to pick up the new credit cards.

- A gang of eight imposters called taxpayers, telling them they had won a "cash sweepstakes" but that they could not collect the prize until the tax was paid. The gang netted more than $22,000 before they were caught.

To avoid being taken in by someone claiming to be from the IRS, here are some points to remember:

- Taxpayers are always notified of an audit by letter — never by phone.

- All IRS employees carry identification that they must show taxpayers if they visit their homes or offices.

- IRS employees never ask that tax payment checks be made out in their names.

- Legitimate payment checks should be made out to "The Internal Revenue Service," spelled out in full. The initials "IRS" are easy for criminals to alter.

- Legitimate payment checks should also specify what the payment is for (excise taxes, employment taxes, late charges, etc.) and for what year. The taxpayer's Social Security number should appear on any check sent to the IRS.

- If you think you have been targeted by a thief posing as an IRS agent, call the service's toll-free Inspection Hotline, 800-366-4484.

Modern-day Santa is looking for a few good souls

DEAR ABBY: A few years ago, I bumped into an old friend in a supermarket around holiday time. "What are you doing for Christmas this year?" I asked. He replied, "Every year, the wife and I take the money we would have spent on each other and we give a needy family a Christmas tree, a Christmas dinner with all the trimmings, toys for the kids, and gifts for the entire family. "Last year, 'our' family had nine children, and it was the first Christmas they had a tree."

I thought it was a great idea and asked if I could help. He then proceeded to help me by finding another family that was down on their luck.

Over the years, this has become my ritual. Many people get depressed around the holidays. I never am, and when people ask me what I want for Christmas, I say, "I'd like for some underprivileged family to have a good Christmas ... do you want to help?"

I'm telling this story because all it took was a small seed planted in me to bring happiness to others. There are a lot of people who slip through the cracks, children who don't receive toys from Toys for Tots, children whose names aren't hanging on a Christmas tree in a mall somewhere. I find these people through my church.

You can't believe the warm feeling you get when you walk into a home on Christmas Eve and know that had you not put forth the effort, that family would have had nothing. To me, that's what the Christmas spirit is all about.

Abby, please help me plant some more seeds.

ANONYMOUS IN AUSTIN

DEAR ANONYMOUS: Thank you for a terrific suggestion to pass along to those who have the resources and desire to prove that the spirit of Christmas is still alive and flourishing.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: How do you get to know a lovely new daughter-in-law? She is very quiet. She never initiates a conversation, and only answers "yes" or "no."

NEW MOTHER-IN-LAW

DEAR MOTHER-IN-LAW: She is probably very shy and somewhat intimidated, so it's up to you to initiate a conversation. And when you do, don't ask questions that can be answered with a "yes" or "no."

Invite her over to your place, and ask if she wants to go shopping with you — for groceries, clothes or whatever. The more time you spend together, the better acquainted you will be in due time. You don't say whether she has parents in town; if she hasn't, do whatever you can to acquaint her with her new surroundings. Just make her feel accepted and a welcome addition to your family.

DEAR ABBY: My husband never misses your column. He gets the paper first, and you are the first thing he reads. He just loves it when you apologize for making a mistake. He says, "It takes a big person to admit when they were wrong — you should try it some-time, honey."

He really liked your column on hugging. He took your advice and started to hug me. He is 6 foot 3 and weighs 260 pounds. I am 5 foot 4 and weigh 115 pounds. He got so carried away with the hugging business, he broke three of my ribs. I am still taped up.

HURTING IN CHEYENNE, WYO.

DEAR ABBY: I can't seem to forget the letter from that girl who wrote to you saying that she hated her freckles. I identified with her because I, too, grew up hating my red hair and freckles — millions of them! Then a young man who thought I was attractive enough to date sent me two dozen roses and enclosed this Dorothy Parker (I think) verse:

"Men lose their hearts and send their roses
"To girls with freckles on their noses"

Abby, I still remember that poem fondly — and quote it enthusiastically as needed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Use your common sense today regarding health matters. If there is something you know you shouldn't be eating, drinking or doing, use self-discipline to avoid it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Be very careful today that you're not caught in the middle of a situation where a friend is using you as a pawn in political maneuvers.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Be on guard where your career is concerned today. There is a possibility a crafty associate might try to take credit for something you recently accomplished.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You might encounter someone today who loves to play one-upmanship games. Don't let this individual catch you in the web, because you could come out second-best.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Manage your resources with extreme care today, especially if someone else is involved in a situation that, by them doing something which might backfire, could cost you personally.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If most people you're involved with today disagree with your way of doing things, it's time to review your procedures. You might be afflicted with a case of unproductive tunnel vision.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) This is one of those days when others might try to palm their responsibilities off on you. Be cooperative and do your part, but don't be a doormat.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If you get involved in a competitive sport or activity today, you might be tempted to try to make it more exciting by betting on the outcome. This could be an unwise move.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Instead of taking the line of least resistance today, you might be inclined to do things the hard way. Life is tough enough without adding self-imposed penalties.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) In an important exchange of information today, both you and the party you're talking to might be so interested in personal thoughts that you won't listen to one another.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) If someone offers you a business proposal today, don't act on it impulsively, regardless of how good it sounds. This deal could be better for the other guy than it is for you.

Cowboys' running back Emmitt Smith (22) goes airborne to the one-yard line in the first quarter Sunday against the Lions.

Dallas ends Silverdome jinx

Detroit suffers worst home loss in 28 years

By HARRY ATKINS
AP Sports Writer

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) - The Dallas Cowboys repaid an old debt Sunday, even if they didn't want to admit it. Emmitt Smith scored three touchdowns and the Cowboys avenged a pair of losses to Detroit last season with a 37-3 rout Sunday, the Lions' worst home loss in 28 years.

"It's nice to win a game anytime, but we weren't really looking at this from a revenge factor," Smith said. "We were just looking for a win. And this is a very big win, because we've started the second half of the season 1-0 and this is good for our momentum."

Not since the Lions lost 34-0 to Johnny Unitas and the Baltimore Colts at Tiger Stadium in 1964 had they been beaten so badly at home.

Last season, Detroit defeated the Cowboys 34-10 in the eighth game of the regular season, then bombed them 38-6 in the NFC playoffs.

This time, Smith scored twice in the first half as Dallas rolled to a 20-3 lead. The Cowboys kicked a field goal with 20 seconds left in the game to complete the romp.

"We really downplayed the revenge factor all week," Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson said. "It wasn't a very good feeling walking into the Silverdome yesterday, but we try to take each opponent on a week-to-week basis."

"It's a different year. There are different players. And it's a different situation. If there is a revenge factor in football, it's not with this football team."

Detroit's Barry Sanders gained 108 yards on 18 carries against the NFL's best defense against the run. It was only the second time this season the Dallas defense had given up 100 yards rushing in a game.

But it didn't help the struggling Lions (2-7), who finished with 201 total yards.

The Cowboys (8-1), who rolled up 158 of their 398 total yards on the ground, led 14-0 after one quarter and never were threatened.

"Dallas is just a good football team, and they are better than we are," Detroit coach Wayne Fontes said. "After last season, this should have been a classic confrontation. They have progressed just like we wanted to. But we've had some terrible breaks in the last year."

Smith, who gained 67 yards on 19 carries, has 12 touchdowns this season, tying the club record he shares with Tony Dorsett and Herschel Walker.

Troy Aikman, getting plenty of time to throw, completed 16 of 25 passes for 214 yards, including a 15-yard TD strike to Michael Irvin. Aikman, who had one interception, also downplayed the revenge factor.

"When we played them last year, we made some turnovers, and they beat us pretty handily," Aikman said. "But I think we would start getting into trouble if we started thinking we need a win just because of revenge."

Irvin had five catches for 114 yards and rookie Curvin Richards, in mop-up duty after Smith was finished, gained 82 yards on 16 carries.

Rodney Peete completed just 6 of 10 passes for 69 yards with two interceptions before going out with a slight concussion in the third quarter. Erik Kramer finished up, but clicked on only 3 of 7 passes for 21 yards, with one interception.

"Rodney's OK, but I was going to make the change anyway," Fontes said. "We are having a lot of trouble scoring. But that isn't just Rodney. There are 10 other guys out there with him."

Detroit lost its fourth straight game in the Silverdome. The Lions were undefeated a year ago at home.

"I'm just numb," Lions flanker Willie Green said. "I never thought we'd go through this again. Not after what we did last year."

Jeff Campbell lost a fumble on the first play of the game. On their second possession, the Lions drove from their own 1 yard line to the Dallas 35 before Thomas Everett made the first of his two interceptions.

Lin Elliott, who had field goals of 25 and 42 yards for Dallas, appeared to have kicked a 30-yarder to start the scoring in the first quarter. But the Lions' Jerry Ball was flagged for holding, giving Dallas a first down at the Detroit 7. Smith scored on the next play.

Aikman began the Cowboy's next possession with a 38-yard strike to Alvin Harper, giving Dallas first-and-goal at the 4. Smith gained 3 on the first snap and scored on the next, capping a 42-yard drive in three plays.

The Lions' only score came on Jason Hanson's 36-yard field goal with 9:12 left in the second quarter. Dallas settled for Elliott's two field goals for a 20-3 halftime lead.

With Aikman and Irvin hooking up on a 57-yard strike, the Cowboys opened the third quarter by racing 75 yards in four plays for Smith's final TD, a 1-yard dive.

Later in the quarter, Aikman completed 5 of 5 for 47 yards in a 73-yard, 10-play drive that ended in his TD toss to Irvin for a 34-3 lead.

Elliott finished off the scoring with a 30-yard field goal.

Career appears to be over for NFL's sackmaster

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) - For a decade, he was LT, the killer linebacker. He was the Terminator before Schwarzenegger, the prototype for the modern NFL sackmaster.

Even in the last two seasons, when his skills clearly were fading and his determination ebbing, Taylor could be a factor. He came alive only in spurts, but Taylor still made offensive coordinators wary, made quarterbacks and runners and receivers and blockers nervous.

He probably won't ever do any of that again. On Sunday, as a silenced crowd of 72,038 watched, LT's career probably ended with a ruptured Achilles tendon. The man who terrorized offenses was victimized by the fragility of the human body.

"It's like taking a guide wire and putting a tremendous load on it and it snaps," said team physician Dr. Russell Warren.

"I'm saddened that Lawrence has to end his career on a golf cart going out of Giants Stadium," said his former coach, Bill Parcells, now an announcer for NBC. "In deference to all the great players I have coached, I would have to say that Lawrence Taylor is the greatest player I ever coached."

The NFL's career sacks leader went down in the third quarter of the New York Giants' 27-7 victory over Green Bay. He blocked a pass by Brett Favre, then fell to the turf as his right heel ripped.

The injury will require surgery and at least four months to mend. Since Taylor, 33, already had said he was through after this season, his Hall of Fame-caliber career appears over.

His teammates, who talked little about their third straight win and mostly about losing Taylor, are hoping he has a change of heart.

"We've got to have him back," defensive end Eric Dorsey said. "He's really like the standout player on our defense. When our whole team was down with our (2-4) record, he was our motivation. He was the one that kept us going.

"We've got to have him back."

Don't count on it.

"It's a complete disruption of the Achilles tendon," said Dr. Russell Warren, who added that Taylor would undergo surgery on Tuesday. "I would expect a full recovery in this type of athletic injury. It shouldn't be the reason he does not come back."

"I think he is quite disappointed in it happening at this juncture of his career. You could actually feel the hole. ... You squeeze the muscle and the foot doesn't move properly."

Taylor left the stadium before the end of the game wearing a cast.

49ers' Young growing weary of 'scrambler' tag

By ED SHEARER
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA (AP) - Steve Young of the San Francisco 49ers is getting a little weary of his scrambler tag.

"It's almost always the first thing people ask me about," Young said of his running ability that sets him apart from most NFL quarterbacks.

"I like to think I'm growing into the position, but ... I guess it's still all about perceptions."

Young and the 49ers will try to beat the Atlanta Falcons for the second time in three weeks tonight in Atlanta's first Monday night football appearance in eight years.

The Niners buried the Falcons 56-17 in San Francisco, amassing 590 yards. Young played three quarters, completing 18 of 28 passes for 399 yards and three touchdowns. He also had to scramble twice, gaining another 28 yards.

After replacing the injured Joe Montana last year, Young finished the season with the NFL's best quarterback rating, 101.8. He also leads this year with a 109.9 rating and could become the first to lead the league in passing rating two years in a row since Ken Anderson of Cincinnati in 1981 and 1982.

"You know, it's amazing that I still fight this image of me because we don't depend — or even want to depend — on my feet," Young said.

"Our best plays happen when I don't have the ball at the end. Look at the first Falcons game this year. I think I only ran one time."

He probably remembered a 26-yard run and forgot a 2-yarder.

The Falcons also worry about Young's running ability.

"He's the ultimate dilemma because no matter what people think, you simply can't rush and contain at the same time," defensive end Tim Green said. "Against him, it's more about damage control than containment."

Despite the recent rout, the 49ers (6-2) are only a 7-point favorite in their first visit to the Georgia Dome where a capacity crowd of 71,594 is expected.

The Falcons carry a 3-5 record into the game, missing one star who played in San Francisco and getting one who didn't back in the lineup.

Pro Bowl quarterback Chris Miller was lost for the season in a victory over the Los Angeles Rams last week when he tore ligaments in his left knee, requiring surgery. He'll be replaced by Billy Joe Toller, who threw for 86 yards in the winning drive against the Rams last week.

Two-sport star Deion Sanders was not available for the first meeting because of his other career — playing with the Atlanta Braves in their World Series loss to the Toronto Blue Jays.

Sanders missed last week's victory over the Rams because of a bruised foot, but he is expected to be back in the lineup tonight, giving a boost to the secondary Young picked to pieces in the earlier game.

Another starter who missed the 56-17 game also returns for the Falcons, safety Scott Case, who has been sidelined with a torn chest muscle. He played sparingly last week when the Falcons went to their nickel defense.

Unbeaten Aggies drawing little national attention

By The Associated Press

Texas A&M is unbeaten, untied and unloved in the national championship picture.

While top-ranked Miami and No. 2 Alabama appear on course for a possible showdown in the Sugar Bowl, the fourth-ranked Aggies (9-0) are getting little attention despite beating everyone on their schedule — Louisville, a 40-18 loser on Saturday, was their latest victim.

The Aggies' problem is that their conference, the Southwest, is among the weakest in the country and their out-of-conference schedule includes only one ranked team — No. 15 Stanford, which lost to Texas A&M in the Pigskin Classic on Aug. 26.

After playing Houston in the Astrodome on Thursday, the Aggies play host to Texas Christian on Nov. 21 and play at Texas on Thanksgiving Day before a potential Cotton Bowl date on Jan. 1.

But unless something happens between now and then, the Aggies won't wind up No. 1 even if they're a perfect 13-0.

"We set our goal to repeat as the SWC champions and let someone else worry about the polls," coach R.C. Slocum said. "We are worried about Houston right now."

"We can see the end of the season. It's in our view. A lot of teams have already packed it in, but it's still exciting for us. This is the best we've played so far this season."

The Aggies were one of five teams that moved up a notch when Washington fell from first to sixth following a 16-3 loss at Arizona.

In Saturday's other Top 25 games: Alabama downed LSU 31-11; No. 3 Michigan beat Northwestern 40-7; No. 5 Florida State trounced Maryland 69-21; No. 7 Nebraska crushed No. 20 Kansas 49-7; No. 8 Notre Dame routed No. 17

Boston College 54-7; No. 10 Syracuse defeated Virginia Tech 28-9; No. 11 Florida beat Southern Mississippi 24-20; No. 13 Colorado blanked Oklahoma State 28-0; No. 14 North Carolina State beat Virginia 31-7; No. 15 Stanford downed No. 18 Southern Cal 23-9; No. 16 Mississippi State beat Arkansas 10-3; No. 19 Ohio State stopped Minnesota 17-0; No. 21 Washington State edged Arizona State 20-18; No. 24 Hawaii beat Colorado State 24-13 and Clemson beat No. 25 North Carolina 40-7.

College roundup

Miami, No. 12 Georgia, No. 22 Penn State and No. 23 Tennessee were idle.

Corey Pullig, the first true freshman to start at quarterback for Texas A&M in four years, completed 14 of 22 passes for 128 yards and rushed for 20 more yards on eight carries, showing poise beyond his experience.

"I was really proud of him," said Greg Hill, who rushed for 142 yards and scored three touchdowns. "We all kept him pumped up. They probably weren't expecting us to pass as much as we did. But they hit hard."

He replaced starter Jeff Granger, who suffered a concussion in last week's 41-7 victory over Southern Methodist. Granger played the fourth quarter and is in the running to start Thursday's game.

No. 2 Alabama 31, LSU 11

At Baton Rouge, the Crimson Tide (9-0, 6-0 SEC) won its 19th straight, assuring the Tigers (1-8, 1-6) of their worst season ever. Alabama's winning streak is the second-longest in the nation, trailing only Miami's 26-game string.

No. 3 Michigan 40, Northwestern 7

At Evanston, Ill., Elvis Grbac threw three TD passes to Derrick Alexander as Michigan clinched at least a share of the Big Ten title with its 19th straight conference victory. The Wolverines (8-0-1, 6-0) have regular-season games remaining against Illinois and Ohio State. The Wildcats fell to 2-7, 2-4.

No. 5 Florida State 69, Maryland 21

Florida State (8-1, 8-0 ACC) rolled up an ACC-record 858 yards and 40 first downs in drubbing the Terrapins (2-8, 1-6). Charlie Ward passed for 395 yards and four touchdowns.

No. 9 Arizona 16, No. 6 Washington 3

At Tucson, the Wildcats' defense held the Huskies to a field goal, while Steve McLaughlin, who missed a last-play field goal against Miami in Arizona's 8-7 loss, kicked three FGs. The Wildcats (6-2-1, 4-1 Pac-10) snapped the Huskies' (8-1, 5-1) 22-game winning streak.

No. 7 Nebraska 49, No. 20 Kansas 7

Freshman Tommie Frazier tossed three touchdown passes as Nebraska rolled over a ranked conference opponent for the second straight week. The win gave Nebraska (7-1, 4-0 Big Eight) the inside track on a berth in the Orange Bowl and left Kansas (7-2, 4-1) 0-20 against Nebraska coach Tom Osborne.

No. 8 Notre Dame 54, No. 17 Boston College 7

Boston College's undefeated season ended abruptly at South Bend, Ind., as Notre Dame (7-1-1) scored on its first five possessions and led 37-0 at halftime over the Eagles (7-1-1).

No. 10 Syracuse 28, Virginia Tech 9

The Orangemen and Miami, who meet at Syracuse in two weeks, are the only teams still undefeated in Big East play. Syracuse made it 10 straight conference wins and improved to 8-1 overall by holding off Virginia Tech (2-6-1, 1-4).

No. 11 Florida 24, Southern Mississippi 20

Errict Rhett's 3-yard TD run in the fourth period and a late defensive stand helped Florida (6-2) shake off Southern Mississippi (6-4) and extend the nation's second-longest home winning streak to 17 games.

No. 15 Stanford 23, No. 18 Southern Cal 9

Rob Johnson's 27-yard interception return in the fourth quarter locked up the win for Stanford (7-3, 4-2 Pac-10) and prevented the Trojans (5-2-1, 4-2) from moving into a first-place tie with Washington.

No. 13 Colorado 28, Oklahoma St. 0

At Boulder, Colorado rebounded from its humiliating loss to Nebraska. The Buffaloes (7-1-1, 3-1-1 Big Eight) scored a touchdown in each quarter. The Cowboys (4-5, 2-3) turned over the ball eight times.

No. 14 North Carolina State 31, Virginia 7

Mike Reid blocked a punt, forced a fumble and stuffed a big fourth down play to help NC State (7-2-1 overall, 4-2 ACC) take a 17-0 halftime lead. Virginia (6-4, 4-4) lost its fourth straight ACC game.

No. 16 Mississippi St. 10, Arkansas 3

At Starkville, Miss., Mississippi State's defense held Arkansas (2-6-1, 2-4-1 SEC) to a field goal and scored the Bulldogs' only touchdown on a fumble return. Mississippi State (7-2, 4-2) faces Alabama on Saturday.

No. 19 Ohio State 17, Minnesota 0

Robert Smith rushed for 119 yards and both touchdowns for Ohio State (7-2, 4-2 Big Ten). Minnesota (1-7, 1-5) hasn't won at Ohio Stadium since 1949.

No. 21 Washington State 20, Arizona State 18

Tight end Bob Brasher of Arizona State (4-5, 4-2 Pac 10) dropped a conversion pass with 2:29 left, allowing Washington State (7-2, 4-2) to hold on.

No. 24 Hawaii 24, Colorado St. 13

At Honolulu, the Rainbows (7-1, 5-1 WAC) stayed in first place in the conference and broke into the Top 25 by beating Colorado State (3-7, 2-5).

Clemson 40, No. 25 North Carolina 7

At Clemson, the Gamecocks (5-4, 3-4 ACC) set a school record for time of possession — 42:58 — and ran 50 more plays than the Tar Heels (7-3, 4-3).

Patriots' coach could miss rest of season

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - Dante Scarnecchia says it's important that New England coach Dick MacPherson stay away from the team. MacPherson's already feeling lousy.

Scarnecchia, the special teams and tight ends coach, filled in for the hospitalized MacPherson in Sunday's 31-14 loss to the New Orleans Saints that dropped the Patriots record to 0-9.

And they didn't get any healthier. Quarterback Tommy Hodson, playing because Hugh Millen has a separated left shoulder, fractured the thumb on his throwing hand and may be lost for the season.

Safety Jerome Henderson dislocated his right shoulder.

The rest of the team had a big headache.

"You can't sit around and say there's a dark cloud over us. All teams have bad things happen to them," defensive end Brent Williams said.

But this bad? "Everybody wanted to win it for coach Mac," nose tackle Tim Goad said. "But when it rains it pours, and it's pouring now."

The Patriots had season lows of 122 offensive yards and six first downs. They punted 11 times and had two interceptions and two fumbles. Hodson, playing behind an offensive line that was shuffled because of injuries, was sacked five times.

"We didn't get enough protection for the quarterback," said Pat Harlow, who moved from right tackle to left tackle to replace Bruce Armstrong, a two-time Pro Bowler.

Armstrong, injured a week earlier in a 16-7 loss at Buffalo, underwent right knee surgery last Wednesday that is expected to sideline him at least until the 1994 season and could end his career.

MacPherson was hospitalized Wednesday with acute diverticulitis and expects to have surgery this week. The intestinal ailment could keep him out all year.

"Coach Mac needs to get away from all this, and he certainly doesn't need to talk to us," Scarnecchia said.

The Patriots played without eight injured starters, and now Hodson is sidelined.

He'll wear a cast for from four to six weeks on the right thumb he fractured in the first quarter.

He stayed in the game until Scott Zolak, last year's fourth-round draft pick, replaced him in the fourth quarter.

"Why not put another guy in? I didn't get anything done," Hodson said.

Scarnecchia said the team would monitor Millen's condition during the week before determining who would start at Indianapolis next Sunday.

Zolak, seeing his first NFL action, entered the game because "we felt like we needed some kind of spark at that point," Scarnecchia said. "We needed, obviously, a big spark."

"It's not always the guy pulling the trigger where the problem lies. We're not supporting him very well."

Zolak may get his turn next Sunday, when Scarnecchia will get his second turn, as an unloveable as he finds it.

"As a football team and as a staff, our hearts are toward coach Mac," he said. "We hope he's out here soon."

Chad Augustine of Pampa is a freshman member of the 1992 Southwestern Oklahoma State University football team in Weatherford. The Bulldogs, coached by Paul Sharp, are ranked No. 5 in the nation and are looking to qualify for the NAIA playoffs, which begin Nov. 21. Augustine was a first-team, all-district center for the Harvesters a year ago.

Becker wins Paris Open championship

By SALVATORE ZANCA
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) - The real Boris Becker has resurfaced at last.

Becker won the Paris Open title by displaying the type of tennis that kept him ranked in the top three for most of the last seven years until recently.

The German outgunned defending champion Guy Forget 7-6 (7-3), 6-3, 3-6, 6-3 Sunday to win the title for the third time in the seven-year history of the tournament.

More important for Becker was the return to the level of tennis that he has been known for after dropping down in the world rankings.

Two weeks ago, Becker fell to No. 10 in the ATP Tour rankings, his lowest level since he won Wimbledon for the first time in July 1985 as a 17-year-old.

Since then, he won Wimbledon twice more and added Australian Open and U.S. Open titles. He was No. 1 in the world briefly in 1991; but since then has seen his game slip.

"I had a bad period for my standard," Becker said. "You don't always win, and I had a down period for the last six months."

Becker said he started to work harder with a new coach, Gunther Bresnik, but wondered if it would be worth it.

"I am a normal human being and I have doubts, too," Becker said. "To come back the way I have this week is just great for me."

It was Becker's 35th career title, and he did it in impressive fashion.

All Becker did in five matches was beat John McEnroe; old nemesis Brad Gilbert; the No. 1 player in the world, Jim Courier; the hottest player on the tour, Goran Ivanisevic, and then top it off by beating defending Paris Open champion Forget before a partisan French crowd.

"The way I played in the last five days is top three level," Becker said. "It's been the best week of the year for me."

Becker had previously won three tournaments this year, but he was seeded ninth at the Paris Open. The top three players in the world — Courier, Pete Sampras and Stefan Edberg — failed to reach the semifinals.

"I have had to struggle the last 12 months," Becker said. "But now I am playing the kind of tennis I did in the past."

Becker and Forget came out firing in the final, each getting 21 aces.

But Becker had other weapons.

"At certain times he was remarkable," Forget said. "He made a lot of points on his first serve and took enormous risks on his second serve. He was hitting a lot of winners from the baseline."

"If you are unfortunate to play him like he was today, it would be difficult to beat him."

Becker and Forget fought on almost even terms in the first set.

In the tiebreak, Forget had two aces. When Forget had to go to a second serve, he was in trouble. Becker had a winning service return and then came in behind a service return to go up 4-1. He held that advantage until 6-3, then closed out the set with an ace.

In the second set, Becker turned up the pressure, sweeping through the first three games at love. He was firing aces, even on second serves. He was returning serve well and then rifling deep approach shots that handcuffed Forget or set up volley winners.

After Becker won the second set, Forget took the third, taking advantage of a Becker lapse as the German made unforced errors.

Becker found the range again in the fourth set. After Forget double-faulted to set up a break point in the second game, Becker got his service break with a backhand passing shot down the line.

The pair held serve the rest of the way. Becker fought off a break point in the final game with a service winner, then came back with a serve-and-volley point and a final service winner that Forget barely got his racket on.

John and Patrick McEnroe teamed up to win their second title together since they first started playing doubles in 1984.

They defeated South African Danie Visser and American Patrick Galbraith 6-4, 6-2.

The two had won the WCT Richmond doubles in 1984 when Patrick was still in college.

Texas Christian coach gets haircut

FORT WORTH (AP) - What's a victory over the University of Texas Longhorns come in 1967?

On Saturday, Tony Rand returned an intercepted pass 58 yards for a fourth-quarter touchdown to seal the TCU victory.

New TCU coach Pat Sullivan, who was 7 years old when the Frogs last beat Texas at home, said, "We were outnumbered and undersized, but our heart carried us through. We've got what you call a team now."

"It's a great win for our program, maybe the greatest," said athletic director Frank Windeger.

Texas dropped to 5-3 overall and 3-1 in conference play, while TCU improved to 2-6-1 and 1-4.

The TCU defense sacked Texas quarterback Peter Gardere seven times and intercepted him three times.

Rand stepped in front of a Texas receiver, fielded the ball on the fly and broke Gardere's tackle for the touchdown.

Robodoc: Robot utilized in surgery

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — With nerves of steel, superhuman precision and no bedside manner whatsoever, a 7-foot surgical assistant called Robodoc made medical history over the weekend.

Robodoc, a mechanical arm with a drill at the end, was used Saturday during hip replacement surgery on a patient at Sutter General Hospital. Spokesman Lloyd Benson said it was the world's first operation using a surgical robot.

The unidentified patient was reported in stable condition.

The machine, dubbed Robodoc by its inventors, was programmed to drill a precise hole in the patient's leg bone that enabled surgeons to insert the replacement hip without using cement.

Doctors can make the 6-to-10-inch hole manually, but the developers of Robodoc believe the computerized drill improves precision.

More than 200,000 Americans undergo hip replacement every year.

The operation was the first of 10 tests approved by the Food and Drug Administration to determine if Robodoc is safe and effective for use during hip replacement surgery.

Hospital administrator Larry Maas, noting robotics have been used in industry, said: "We see no reason to exclude health care from that technology. We believe the technology will have major applications, not just for orthopedics."

Robodoc is a product of Integrated Surgical Systems Inc. of Sacramento. Orthopedic surgeon Dr. William Bargar and veterinarian Dr. Howard Paul developed the procedure and formed the company with partners that included IBM.

The operation on a human came after six years of work and 26 surgical tests on dogs.

After game shooting claims one

RICHARDSON (AP) — Two people have been arrested in the shooting death of a student and the beating of another in a violent incident after a high school football game.

Police held two suspects, identified only as a male and a female, who were arrested Sunday evening in Southeast Dallas and continued to search for two others.

Authorities said Sean Patrick Cooper, 17, was shot once in the chest Friday night after assailants forced him from his car near the Berkner High School parking lot.

The suspects beat passenger Alex M. Kuo, 16, and drove off in Cooper's car. The incident followed Berkner's 28-13 football defeat at Richardson High School.

About 200 students were on Berkner's campus to greet buses carrying the players, drill team and band.

The suspects drove up in two cars about 11 p.m., got out and began firing.

"One of them said, 'You all want some of this?'" said Lance Augspurger, 17. "I threw my girlfriend down on the ground."

"They drove up right in the middle of the parking lot in front of everyone," said Andy Trevino, 18. "I got down on the ground and ran into the bushes as soon as I could."

Some witnesses estimated 20 to 30 shots were fired in the parking lot. Trevino said someone later collected "a handful of shells" that appeared to have been fired from a .22-caliber gun, from a .30-06 caliber gun and from a shotgun.

Witnesses said one car was driven by a female Berkner dropout accompanied by two older, armed men. The second car contained at least two other males, they said.

Friends of the victims said Cooper, who was fleeing, unwittingly followed the suspects into an alley. Cooper stopped nearby.

One gunman shoved a shotgun into Cooper's car as the student tried rolling up his window, friends said. After he was ordered out of the car, Cooper wrestled with his assailants and was shot.

Kuo also began fighting with them and was beaten with a gun on the head and his upper body, friends said.

The suspects drove away in Cooper's Mazda RX-7, police said. Dallas police found the car Saturday evening in an alley, stripped of its stereo and back seat.

Cooper died at Richardson Medical Center. Kuo was treated at Richardson Medical Center and released.

Students who knew the victims and recognized some of the suspects could think of no motive.

"Sean would never do anything to hurt anyone," Augspurger said.

New York's chief judge accused of blackmailing ex-mistress

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Governor, maybe even U.S. Supreme Court justice — not much had seemed beyond the realm of possibilities for Sol Wachtler.

Instead, New York's chief judge was in a psychiatric ward today, accused of blackmailing a woman who had broken off an affair with him.

Wachtler, 62, was arrested by FBI agents Saturday on charges that he harassed the woman — a wealthy socialite and Republican fund-raiser — tried to extort money from her and threatened to kidnap her 14-year-old daughter.

"I would be shocked if this turns out to be true. It's the most bizarre thing I ever heard of in public life," said Albany Law School Professor Vincent Bonventre, a clerk for six years at New York's Court of Appeals.

As chief judge of the seven-member Court of Appeals, Wachtler presides over the state courts and more than 5,000 judges. In New York, the Court of Appeals is the highest judicial body and the Supreme Court is the main trial court.

Wachtler was accused of making threatening calls since April to a New York City woman and sending sexually explicit letters to her and her daughter. Authorities said he was angry that she ended the relationship about a year ago and began dating other men.

While the criminal complaint identified the other woman only as "J.S.," news organizations said she was Joy Silverman. She and her estranged husband, Jeffrey Silverman, were part of Team 100, a group of donors who gave $100,000 each to the Republican Party to get George Bush elected in 1988.

Silverman once was nominated by President Bush to be ambassador to Barbados, but the Senate Foreign Relations Committee killed the nomination after Democrats claimed her only qualification was as a GOP fund-raiser.

The Daily News of New York reported that Wachtler's father-in-law and Silverman's stepfather are brothers, making them related by marriage.

An unidentified friend told the News they were able to be seen in public because of the family relationship.

There was no answer Sunday at her Manhattan home.

Authorities said Wachtler demanded $20,000 in exchange for "embarrassing" tapes and photographs, purportedly of Silverman and her new boyfriend. According to the complaint, the caller warned, "I'm a sick and desperate man."

Sources speaking on condition of anonymity said Wachtler had been tailed by agents after a caller told the woman to leave the money in the basement of a New York City building. Wachtler never picked up the money.

The judge is confined to a 9-by-10-foot room at Long Island Jewish Hospital, where he is under guard even when he goes to the bathroom, the New York Post reported today. Officials fear he may attempt suicide, the newspaper said.

Wachtler, who lives in Manhasset on Long Island, has been married for 41 years and is the father of four. His wife, Joan, told the New York Daily News she knew nothing about the charges.

"I don't understand any of it," she said. She also said there were no difficulties in their marriage: "No problems at all."

The Court of Appeals issued a statement Saturday announcing Wachtler was removing himself temporarily from the bench, but the statement was retracted 15 minutes later.

Members of Wachtler's family had requested the statement but they later said they needed more time to consider the decision, said Mary de Bourbon, spokeswoman for the state courts.

Judges can be removed by the Court of Appeals itself or through impeachment by the Legislature. Bonventre said the indictment was grounds enough for the Court of Appeals to move to suspend Wachtler from his $120,000-a-year post.

Wachtler, a liberal Republican, had frequently been touted as a potential candidate for governor or possible nominee to the U.S. Supreme Court.

He was elected to the Court of Appeals in 1972 and appointed its chief judge by Gov. Mario Cuomo, a Democrat, in 1985 for a 14-year term. Judges on the Court of Appeals have been appointed since 1978.

Over the years Wachtler earned a reputation as an abortion rights supporter, defender of free-speech rights and critic of the grand jury system. He once said a good prosecutor could get a grand jury "to indict a ham sandwich."

"For all the years I have known Sol Wachtler his integrity and character have been beyond question," Cuomo said. "His life has earned him the presumption of innocence that the law guarantees him."

State GOP Chairman William Powers said Wachtler is "certainly somebody who could have been considered" for the 1994 gubernatorial nomination. He added, "This has got to take its course. It's not right for anybody to be pre-judged."

"It is totally aberrational behavior, shocking and saddening if true," Fritz W. Alexander 2nd, New York's deputy mayor for criminal justice, said in today's The New York Times. "It must be attributable to some illness."

Court colleagues said they didn't know of any illness Wachtler was being treated for, but the Times quoted an unidentified law enforcement official as saying Wachtler had been diagnosed with cancer. The criminal complaint said he had been undergoing treatment for a serious medical condition for at least two years.

Ex-presidents are an elite group of pensioners

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is about to join the nation's most elite group of pensioners — and the costliest to taxpayers.

With the inauguration of Bill Clinton as his successor Jan. 20, Bush will bring to five the number of former presidents — joining Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan in comfortable, taxpayer-provided retirement.

The cost, including Secret Service protection, totals $17.2 million this year for the first four. Congress will have to provide more money next year to cover Bush's retirement.

"The budget did not contemplate him becoming a former president," said Bill Early, budget director for the General Services Administration.

Even without the security, the taxpayers' bill for a generous, six-figure pension, office space, staff and travel expenses approaches half a million dollars for each of the former presidents — and more in the case of Reagan: $770,900 this fiscal year.

But security is the most expensive item. Only Nixon among the former presidents does not have full-time Secret Service protection. He waived all Secret Service protection in 1985.

Congress has provided $15 million for Secret Service protection of the other three former presidents this year.

"It's 24 hours a day," said Early. "That's expensive — and it's forever."

The cost of protecting former presidents drew notice when Reagan made a highly publicized trip to Japan in 1989. He collected $2 million in honoraria from a Japanese corporation while U.S. taxpayers paid for his traveling security agents.

A provision added to an appropriations bill this year at the behest of Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., requires the director of the Secret Service to meet with each of the former presidents by next spring to discuss their protection and its cost.

The idea is to find ways to cut or eliminate the security.

"I am convinced that there are many viable alternatives to the current protection program which will ensure a commensurate level of security for former presidents and their families at a much lower cost to the taxpayer," he said.

DeConcini, chairman of a Senate Appropriations subcommittee that oversees the upkeep of former presidents, sought a provision that would have eliminated Secret Service protection 10 years after a president left office, unless otherwise necessary.

But that drew opposition from the former presidents and was eliminated in a House-Senate conference this fall, according to congressional aides. DeConcini said Bush showed no interest in trying to cut the costs.

By law, former presidents are provided with a yearly pension equal to that of the current salary of a Cabinet secretary. This year, the amount is $143,800.

In addition, the government provides for the rental of office space and staff salaries for the rest of a former president's life.

The salaries can total $150,000 for the first 2 1/2 years, and $96,000 a year after that.

But Bush won't even be limited by that until July 1993. He will have $1.5 million to spend on the six-month transition from office.

The cost of Bush's office space won't be known, Early said, until Bush decides where he wants to locate. If no government office building is available at the place he selects, the government will rent private space.

The high cost of offices in downtown Los Angeles, where Reagan maintains his office, is the main reason his expenses are greater than the others. Carter has his at the Carter Library in Atlanta. Ford's office is in Palm Springs, Calif., and Nixon's is outside New York.

The government also pays for travel, postage, printing, telephones and other expenses of the former presidents and their staffs.

Demonstrators in Detroit protest man's beating death

DETROIT (AP) — About 150 people rallied downtown Sunday, protesting the fatal beating of a man by police officers, and a prosecutor said he was pushing for charges to be brought against the officers.

Malice Wayne Green, 35, of Detroit was dragged from his car and beaten Thursday night by two police officers with a flashlight as five other officers watched or took part, Police Chief Stanley Knox said.

Wayne County Prosecutor John O'Hair said he expected warrants to be issued against the officers Monday, but he declined to say what they might be charged with.

Knox said he couldn't say if race was a factor in the beating. Green was black, and although police haven't identified the officers, the Detroit Free Press reported that six were white and one was black.

Florence Frazier, left, her granddaughter, Jasmine Frazier, center, and Mary Gilmore react to a speech Sunday at a downtown Detroit rally against violence.

Green was beaten after two plain-clothes officers pulled his car over, then called for assistance, Knox said.

Civil rights activist Joann Watson said the fact the attack occurred in a city with a black mayor, black police chief and a population that is 75 percent black made it more shocking.

"It goes to show you that even in Detroit, with so many African-Americans in power, you can't remove the shameful disease of racism that continues to inflict this country," said Watson, executive director of the Detroit chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Sunday's rally, originally planned last week after 10 students were shot at or near Detroit schools, turned into a protest of Green's death.

Demonstrators, both black and white, carried placards saying, "Jail the Killer Cops" and "Avenge Malice Green."

East Texas oil well continues to burn after Sunday explosion

HAWKINS (AP) — East Texas firefighters continue to monitor an Exxon oil well that had exploded in a giant yellow ball when drillers hit a pocket of natural gas.

No injuries were reported during the explosion early Sunday.

Several blocks of homes remained evacuated just north of downtown Hawkins on Sunday. Authorities expect the fire to burn for several days.

Exxon spokeswoman Jean Cole said Gibson Drilling Co. of Kilgore, under contract, was drilling at 2,100 feet when the well ignited at about 1 a.m. Sunday.

Gibson officials did not return a telephone call Sunday.

Firefighter Larry Pack said emergency workers have pulled away some cooled diesel engines and stripped steel from the site. Authorities will have to drill another well 200-250 feet from the burning well to slant into it and drain away pressure, he said.

Pack watched the rig melt, crumple and fall amid flames as high as 80 feet.

"Once it starts to blow in, everything will start shaking and you've got about a minute to clear out of there," Pack said. "The rig just starts trembling. It's like the old fashioned gusher — you know something's coming up, and it's not supposed to be."

The well is one of about 300 Exxon has in Wood County. They produce about 13,500 barrels of oil daily.
