Lefors water well close to drilling stage

By BETH MILLER
News Editor

LEFORS — Drilling on a new water well for the city of Lefors could begin as early as today, Mayor Wendell Akins said Monday.

Akins reported at the City Council meeting that he took Les Taylor Drilling of Sunray to the site on Monday and company officials said they would likely move in today, weather permitting, to begin the drilling procedure.

Les Taylor Drilling was awarded the low bid of $32,686.64 last month by the City Council to drill the well. Rhode Construction of Lubbock was awarded the low bid of $86,219.40 for the water line and right-of-way project.

"They said if it got up to 40 degrees they wouldn't have a problem," Akins said. "They can get moved in and have it done in a couple of days."

The mayor said that as soon as the water well is drilled, the contractors will move in to start laying the 1 1/4-mile line to the city's 168,000-gallon storage tank. Akins said if the weather is good, the project could be completed by the end of January, however, he said it would likely be completed sometime in February.

The site for the new well is about 1 1/2 miles north of Lefors on property owned by Pat Youngblood. The project is being financed by a $150,000 grant, with some local matching funds, from the Texas Department of Housing and Community Affairs.

Lefors' water now has a high chloride content and the water north of town, where the new water well is planned, tested good, according to city officials.

Lefors resident Earl Maples questioned a letter sent out this month with utility bills stating that the city's water system collected a sample in November that contained "fecal coliform bacteria." The letter also stated that four "good" samples had been pulled in December.

"The Texas Department of Health sets drinking water standards in Texas and has determined that the presence of fecal coliforms or E. coli is a serious health concern," the letter states. "... their presence in drinking water is serious because they usually are associated with sewage or animal wastes."

City officials believe the contamination occurred when the water main at the intersection of Main and Second streets burst.

"The problem has been promptly taken care of by employees of the city of Lefors. Your drinking water is within safe standards as of this time," the letter signed by the mayor states.

City Secretary Phyllis Crutcher said there are several people, including one city employee, who have been ill and have had blood tests and the tests show the water did not cause the illness.

Maples told the council that any vacant houses will still have the impure water in the taps and it will not be flushed until the water is turned on.

Akins said, "That's not our problem right now."

Maples responded, "Wendell, anything that concerns the health of the city is your concern."

Akins said the council members are concerned with the water because they also live in the city.

Keep an eye on the neighborhood

By ANGELA LEGGETT
Staff Writer

Pampa Police Department is in the process of its annual update of the Neighborhood Watch Program titled Communities Combat Crime, said Patrolman Bryan Hedrick.

"The Neighborhood Watch Program is one of the best crime deterrents ever found," Hedrick said. "You watch your neighbor, your neighbor watches you. It is a public service program for persons interested in learning how to establish or reestablish a neighborhood watch in their neighborhoods."

The program is helpful with preventing thefts and burglaries and also helps pinpoint suspicious people and noises, he said. Residents work with the police to help reduce crimes.

"A lot of new people have moved to Pampa with the opening of prison and it is time to get everybody together and help fight crime," Hedrick said.

The program explains how residents can work with the police department to improve the safety and security of their communities by reducing opportunities for criminal activity, Hedrick said.

Floyd McMinn has been named Neighborhood Watch coordinator. He and Hedrick plan to work together with residents who already have the program and they plan to form new Neighborhood Watch Programs in areas that have never participated.

"We are trying to get it started as soon as possible," McMinn said. "Our goal is for every street in town to have a Neighborhood Watch Program. We want to get the program city-wide."

The police need help, he said. They cannot patrol every street, all over town.

McMinn has resided in Gray County for 32 years. He will be working strictly with the Neighborhood Watch Program.

"I will hold meetings and get block captains together for their meetings," he said. "It is a training program. I've been in training for the last couple of months and we are training all of the time."

Residents needing information about the program can contact McMinn or Hedrick on how to organize or reorganize the program in their neighborhood or to volunteer as a block captain. McMinn can be reached at 669-5700 extension 279.

Approximately 115 neighborhoods in Pampa are in the program right now, Hedrick said. "We are hoping to double that."

The Neighborhood Watch Program has been in Pampa for more than seven years.

Iraq again moves into Kuwait

KUWAIT (AP) — Iraq today made its third consecutive incursion into disputed territory to remove equipment from a naval base it built, scolding the United Nations' condemnation of the forays.

"They are demolishing buildings and taking whatever they can — windows, cables, everything," said Abdel Latif Kabbaj, spokesman for the U.N. observation force along the Iraq-Kuwait border.

He said about 150 unarmed Iraqis in civilian clothes took part in the operation. Iraq has permission to remove equipment from the base, but has repeatedly failed to get the required advance approval from the U.N. Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission to do so.

The raids express Iraq's contempt for the border that was redrawn by the U.N. after the Persian Gulf War. The new border placed the Iraqi naval base in Kuwaiti territory, leaving Iraq naval facilities only in Basra, where wreckage from the 1980-88 Iran-Iraq war blocks access to the Persian Gulf.

Iraqis crossed the frontier Jan. 2 in an unsuccessful attempt to retrieve equipment. Daily raids began Sunday, the day after Iraq apparently capitulated to a demand by the U.S.-led allies that surface-to-air missiles be removed from southern Iraq's "no-fly" zone.

The U.N. Security Council condemned the raids on Monday and demanded that Iraq return four anti-aircraft missiles seized in Sunday's raid.

But the non-binding statement by the 15-nation council contained only a vague warning of "serious consequences" of Iraq's defiance.

After Sunday's incursion, the Security Council warned Iraq against further forays, said U.S. Ambassador Edward Perkins.

"They received a warning that first of all their behavior was unacceptable and that if they did go ahead it would be looked at not too kindly," Perkins said.

Washington continues to be frustrated by Iraq's intransigence and provocative actions, but on Monday issued only a veiled threat.

"I would just say we're considering what course of action the U.S. government should follow," said State Department spokesman Richard Boucher. "I don't want to predict anything particularly."

Russia today condemned the raids and called on Baghdad to halt them. "The situation is too explosive to play irresponsible games," Russian Foreign Affairs Ministry spokesman Sergei Yastrzhembsky told reporters in Moscow.

In Iraq, meanwhile, the newspaper Al-Qadassiya maintained Iraq was open to talks "to achieve peace and security which guarantees the legal rights of Iraq in sovereignty and independence." The report, which blamed Iraq's recent troubles on President Bush, was carried by the official Iraqi News Agency.

Last week, Iraq dismantled anti-aircraft batteries that Washington said were threatening Western aircraft patrolling the "no-fly" zone imposed in August to protect Shiite Muslim rebels from air attacks by Saddam's forces.

But U.S. officials said Monday that Iraq had moved missiles batteries into the other Iraqi exclusion zone, which U.S.-led allies set up in the north to protect Kurdish separatists.

Canadian Ambassador Christopher Poole confirmed today that a Canadian officer with the U.N. observer force was threatened by the Iraqis on Sunday.

"The Iraqi had a firearm, a pistol, and he held the pistol to his head and said, 'Move your vehicle or I will shoot you,'" Poole said.

The border incidents have been occurring about 50 miles north of Kuwait City near the port of Umm Qasr.

The border demarcation completed in November awarded the town to Iraq. But the Iraqi naval base known as Camp Khor to the south was given to Kuwait, along with about 10 disputed oil wells and some farmland.

Iraq has refused to recognize the new border, and still claims sovereignty over all of Kuwait.

Kabbaj said U.N. officers stood by today as the Iraqis worked.

"There is nothing we can do but report the incident to New York and the Iraqi liaison officers," he said.

The multinational observer team does not carry weapons and is not authorized to take military action. It merely reports cease-fire violations to U.N. headquarters.

Iraq has repeatedly insisted it is doing nothing wrong in removing its equipment from the naval base.

In a commentary today, the political editor of the Iraqi News Agency insisted that "Iraq did not violate the demilitarized zone and did not interfere with the work of the (U.N.) observers ... and did not make any kind of provocative act against them."

Pressure on lawmakers to solve school funding

AUSTIN (AP) — A judge is keeping the pressure on state lawmakers to pass a constitutional school finance plan by June 1.

State District Judge F. Scott McCown of Austin told Texas Education Commissioner Lionel "Skip" Meno and Comptroller John Sharp at a Monday hearing to get ready to stop state spending on public schools if lawmakers fail to meet the court deadline.

McCown said the timing of his hearing — the day before the opening of the 1993 legislative session — was "no accident."

"I want to make it very clear that we have to have a constitutional system," he said. Lawmakers failed to agree on a school funding plan in a pre-Christmas special session.

"I understand that the course that we have set on is very painful ... I also understand the decades of pain for the children that we have left in the property-poor school districts, and we simply can't tolerate that any longer," McCown said.

The judge said he won't keep school districts from spending their local property tax money after the deadline.

That means some schools could continue operating if the Legislature can't agree on a plan, while others would close, McCown acknowledged.

"I think that's unfortunate, but the way the parties argued the case and requested their relief, that's the order that they got. I can't change it now," he said.

The Texas Supreme Court set the June 1 deadline for lawmakers to adopt a plan to equalize funding among rich and poor school districts. The court directed that state officials be stopped from distributing school aid if its deadline isn't met.

Meno said no school district ultimately would escape untouched if the Legislature doesn't write a funding plan.

"I don't think there's anybody who can stay open indefinitely," Meno said. "I think that you're looking at a tremendous amount of pain all the way around."

Summer school and year-round school programs would be jeopardized by a June 1 funding cutoff, Meno said.

McCown, who oversees the school funding case, made no exception for paying teacher contracts. Dallas lawyer Earl Luna, representing several property-rich school districts, said, "This could drive out many outstanding teachers and hurt education forevermore."

If lawmakers don't pass a plan, McCown's order would stop about $1.3 billion due to school districts this summer, Sharp said. That's out of $6.9 billion allocated in state funds this school year.

The last scheduled payment before the deadline is May 25, Sharp said.

Firefighters climb career ladder

By ANGELA LEGGETT
Staff Writer

Two Pampa firefighters recently received promotions to captain and equipment operator.

Kim Powell was promoted to captain and James Schaub was promoted to equipment operator.

"I am excited," Powell said. "I've been here for a while. I plan to stay in Pampa and keep moving up."

Powell was hired in March 1986. In July 1988 she was promoted to equipment operator. Powell currently takes care of the fire department's emergency care attendant paperwork and emergency medical technician requirements.

She was relocated from Central Fire Station to Station 3 on Barnes

Powell Schaub

Street where two firefighters — a captain and an equipment operator — are stationed on a daily basis.

"There is not as much action here," she said. "There seems to be a little bit more work since there are only the two of us here."

When positions become vacant, firefighters take a test to qualify for the open spots, said Battalion Chief Gary Ensey. The person with the top score at each level is then selected for a promotion.

Recently two positions opened and firefighters tested to fill them.

"I worked and studied hard," Schaub said. "Now I am responsible for my truck, for the men riding on the truck and to make sure we get to the scene safely. We can't do much good putting out the fire if we can't get there."

Schaub said he enjoys the responsibility of an equipment operator.

"Once we get to the scene I'm responsible to make sure we have the right amount of water," he said. "That is going to be the one thing I will miss is getting to go in and fight the fires, but I'll still get to do some."

His main responsibility is to watch the equipment and know the mechanics of it, he said.

"If something goes wrong, I have to be familiar with the equipment to know how to solve the problem," Schaub said.

When not on duty, Schaub is a member of the Pampa Softball Umpires Association and is a coach for the Pampa Optimist Club.

He is married to Lyssa, who is employed by Pampa Independent School District. They have two children.

Powell is married to Tyson, who is a paramedic for American Medical Transport. They have four children.

On another topic, Maples said he wanted the City Council to take some action on the dog problem. He said there are more dogs running loose in town now than ever before.

"It's been talked about for four months now. You can't walk without taking a stick and beating them off," Maples said.

Maples said the city has an ordinance for giving citations to owners of dogs running loose and it should be enforced.

"You ought to do something. Are you going to protect the kids or are you going to protect the dogs of Lefors?" Maples asked. "I think the kids have more right than the dogs to run up and down the street."

In unrelated business, the City Council unanimously voted, following an executive session, to name City Marshal Max Kellison as the city fire marshal, as well.

The City Council also voted unanimously, following the closed session, to give all the rest of the full-time city employees — Mike Steele, Kellison and Carl Connell — free city services of water, gas, sewer and trash pick-up. The city secretary had been granted the free utilities recently as a raise.

In unrelated business, Akins said he is getting estimates on a back-in-

Miami school board extends Dinsmore's contract by a year

By JOHN McMILLAN
Staff Writer

MIAMI — Miami school board on Monday extended by one-year the two-year contract of Superintendent Allan Dinsmore.

"They thought everything was running in real good shape," said Dinsmore, who began as superintendent in fall 1984.

Also at the Monday meeting, the Miami school board approved a site-based decision-making plan that is required by the state. Site-based decision-making is designed to promote more involvement by parents and teachers in administration of school districts.

The chairman of the Miami site-based decision-making committee is Joel Blasingame, a science teacher at Miami High. By state law, two-thirds of the committee members must be teachers. Dinsmore and Larry Neighbors, principal of the secondary school, represent the administration on the committee.

The site-based decision-making committee has held a half-dozen meetings since Oct. 7, Dinsmore said. It meets after school, usually at about 3:45 p.m., every third Wednesday of the month.

Also on Monday, the Miami school board:

• Approved giving students the option of taking a standardized test developed by the University of Texas or Texas Tech to receive credit for a course they have failed. A score of at least 70 on the test would be necessary for a student to receive that credit, Dinsmore said. The student must bear the cost of the test, he said.

The test is designed to be an alternative to taking a course over again, Dinsmore said. Other options available to Miami students who have failed a course are taking a class in the subject at Clarendon College or taking a correspondence course in the subject, he said.

• Asked two Miami High School students who last semester missed 11 school days and 15 school days, respectively, to do make-up work. The students were excused from any further penalties, Dinsmore said.

State law says that students must attend classes for at least 80 days a semester, and the two Miami High School students were the only ones who failed to meet that legal requirement last semester, Dinsmore said.

• Received the news that 54.7 percent of all ad valorem taxes have been collected, as of Dec. 31.

• Heard an informational report from community member Beth Johnston concerning a speech in Pampa last week by State Rep. Warren Chisum. Johnston said she is opposed to mandatory statewide sex education curriculum.

Board gives Orr positive evaluation

The Pampa school board offered Superintendent Dawson Orr a "very positive" evaluation during a specially called meeting on Saturday, the superintendent said.

"I appreciate the support of the board," Orr said.

The evaluation of Orr on Saturday was conducted during an executive session. No action was taken following the session on Saturday, Orr said.

The school board is expected to decide at its Jan. 21 meeting on whether to offer Orr a one-year renewal of his three-year contract.

Orr, 39, has been superintendent of Pampa schools since August 1990.

Perot: Group to take on special interests

DALLAS (AP) — Ross Perot says his revamped supporters' organization will help balance the influence President-elect Clinton gets from entrenched Washington special interests.

But United We Stand, America, will also keep the former independent presidential candidate in the spotlight.

"I guess you'll be seeing more of me," Perot joked at the end of a news conference Monday where he outlined his plans for the non-profit group.

He later began a series of TV appearances on behalf of the group, which he said will demonstrate support for government reform and deficit reduction.

Perot said Clinton shares that agenda but faces opposition from pressure groups that benefit from government largesse.

"I think his impulse and desire is to do the right thing," Perot said. "But if you're living inside the barrel and the only noise you ever hear inside the barrel is the special interests, the people lose their voice."

Memberships will cost $15 each and entitle people to vote on the group's leaders.

On CNN's "Larry King Live"

Monday night, Perot said more than 66,000 people called the group's toll-free line on its first day with 80 percent of the callers signing up.

He also said he wrote a new book featuring charts made for his campaign advertising.

In Little Rock, Clinton transition aide George Stephanopoulos said, "I don't know that we have to play to Perot but we certainly do have to address the concerns of those who voted for Perot and who are expressing concerns about the openness in government, their concern about limiting the influence of special interests."

Warrants issued for Pampa robbery suspects

Two Borger men were arrested in connection with robberies which occurred the first of this month in Pampa, Borger and Spearman, according to Pampa police officials.

"On Monday the Pampa Police Department received information from the Borger Police Department concerning two individuals that were taken into custody after a foiled robbery in Borger early Monday morning," said Detective Morse Burroughs, in a news release.

Freddie Duwayne Hutchinson, 24, and Paul Fredrick Giles, 20, both of Borger, were interviewed by Pampa and Spearman police.

"As a result of these interviews complaints were filed with Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge and warrants were issued charging each with robbery," Burroughs stated. "In addition a third individual was identified as being involved in the robbery in Pampa and a warrant was issued for him."

The information was received as a result of a joint effort by Pampa, Borger and Spearman police departments and the Texas Rangers.

The case will be forwarded to the Gray County District Attorney's office for review.

Lefors school board to meet tonight

LEFORS — Lefors school board plans to meet in regular session tonight to discuss recommendations of the Site-Based Management Decision Committee and open bids for school property.

The board is also scheduled to discuss the honor roll, the student TAAS test and the failure report for the semester. A substitute teacher list will be presented for consideration and there will be a discussion of school employees pay period.

Routine items of consideration of minutes of previous meetings and payment of monthly expenditures are also listed on the agenda.

The meeting is set to begin at 7 p.m. in the elementary school library.

Courthouse shooting trial begins

AMARILLO (AP) — In a courtroom 350 miles from the Fort Worth courtroom where two men were killed and three others wounded last year, proceedings have begun against the accused gunman.

Prospective jurors received instructions Monday in the capital murder trial of George Lott. Jury selection was expected to begin this morning.

Lott, a non-licensed attorney representing himself in the case, ignored photographers Monday as he walked to a defense table in the Potter County Courthouse.

State District Judge Sharen Wilson scheduled the media session Monday so that photos could be shot of main participants in the case. Beginning with jury selection, still and video cameras will be barred from the courtroom.

Ms. Wilson last month moved the trial to Amarillo, her hometown, because of extensive media coverage in Fort Worth.

Lott is accused of killing assistant Tarrant County District Attorney Chris Marshall, 41, and Dallas defense attorney John Edwards, 33.

Two judges and another prosecutor were wounded.

The gunman, a spectator in the courtroom of the 2nd Court of Appeals the morning of July 1, without warning began firing a 9mm handgun. He killed Marshall in the courtroom and fatally shot Edwards on a stairwell as the victim tried to reach help.

The gunman walked out of the courthouse unimpeded.

Lott surrendered at WFAA-TV studios in Dallas about six hours later, telling reporters he was the gunman and was upset over a custody case involving his son.

Lott also blamed his actions on his disillusionment with the court system over the handling of his divorce and allegations that he sexually assaulted the boy.

Testimony is expected to begin Feb. 8.

Alan Levy, an assistant Tarrant County district attorney, said the state has lined up more than 200 potential witnesses.

Prosecutors have said they will seek the death penalty if Lott is convicted.

Serbs reject compromise; peace talks break down

GENEVA (AP) — Peace talks on Bosnia-Herzegovina broke down today after Bosnia's Serb leader refused to accept a compromise plan to end the 9-month-old war, European Community envoy Lord Owen said.

Regional Serb leader Radovan Karadzic "said no" to a compromise plan on a new constitution for the besieged republic, "and as a result of that the proceedings have been adjourned for the moment," co-mediator Cyrus Vance told a news conference.

Hard-line Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, considered a key in the peace talks, and Dobrica Cosic, the federal president of Yugoslavia that includes Serbia and Montenegro, accepted the compromises as "reasonable," said Vance.

Vance, a U.N. envoy and former U.S. secretary of state, said he would report the deadlock to U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, "making it very clear ... that the only one who has said flatly no" was Karadzic.

Karadzic's forces have taken over about 70 percent of Bosnia since a war that has claimed more than 17,000 lives and led to allegations of the forcible eviction of tens of thousands of Muslims from the region.

Vance and Lord Owen have proposed a peace package including Bosnia's division into 10 provinces with very wide powers, a permanent cease-fire and troop pullback.

Any amendments to the constitutional plan would need approval from Bosnia's Muslim-led government and its Croats, both of whom have approved the proposed principles.

Agreement on constitutional issues would allow talks to move to provincial boundaries, which the mediators designed to avoid a crude ethnic division of Bosnia. These talks will be "very difficult," said the mediators' spokesman, Fred Eckhard.

Lord Owen said he and Vance expect to continue efforts to bring peace to former Yugoslavia.

Vance said bilateral talks with other delegations would continue today, but no further meetings were immediately scheduled with Karadzic.

A meeting of all three ethnic factions, on the third day of the current round of peace talks, was adjourned before the mediators made their announcement.

Even before, in an interview today with The Associated Press, Karadzic said the Bosnian Serbs "cannot accept a take-it or leave-it principle. We have the wishes of our own state, our parliament and our people to consider."

Only a day earlier, Karadzic dropped demands for independence within Bosnia and the right to join Serb-dominated Yugoslavia in a "greater Serbia."

Eckhard had said Monday that Karadzic was asked to "go home and sleep on it one more time" and come in today "in the hope of being prepared to say 'yes' or 'no' to their paper."

Karadzic said in the interview: "We have the wishes of our own state, our parliament and our people to consider."

"I believe we demonstrated sufficient flexibility and willingness to compromise," he added. "But if the international community keeps insisting on the liquidation of the Serbs — then let the international community carry it out."

He accused the international community of "making unreasonable requests" and of having "ulterior motives when dealing with our side."

Croatian President Franjo Tudjman, also at the talks, said Monday they had entered "their final and critical phase."

Bosnia's Muslim president, Alija Izetbegovic, the other key negotiator, was due back today in Geneva after a one-day trip to an Islamic emergency summit in Senegal.

Milosevic, who the West mainly blames for warfare in former Yugoslavia since mid-1990, met Karadzic at a Geneva hotel late Monday.

Milosevic is believed to hold the key to solving the crisis, partly because Bosnian Serbs depend on supplies from Serbia.

Karadzic, many of whose supporters are hard-liners, needs a deal that would avoid the appearance of a sellout.

Meanwhile, fierce shelling was reported today in and around Sarajevo through no casualty figures were available.

Combat continued Monday along a strategic Serb-held land corridor in northern Bosnia, which government forces have cut on several times in the past two months.

The narrow strip connects Serb territorial holdings in western Bosnia with Serbia.

Bosnian troops were also advancing on the town of Bratunac on the Drina river boundary with Serbia, Yugoslav media reported. Its loss would cut in half Serb-held areas along that border.

Bosnia's war has left more than 1 million homeless. Serbs have been most blamed for "ethnic cleansing" — ridding areas of other ethnic groups as a way control the territory.

Union endorses Krueger for Senate

By LAURA TOLLEY
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Railroad Commissioner Bob Krueger, the interim replacement for U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, has won the endorsement of the Texas AFL-CIO's executive board.

The board voted Monday to endorse Krueger in his quest to be elected to the post in the upcoming special election, but it fell short of giving him its unanimous support.

Krueger and potential rival Jim Mattox spoke to the group before Monday's vote seeking support from the labor group.

Mattox has not formally announced his candidacy, but he said he intends to do so. Several Republicans also are vying for the Senate seat left vacant when President-elect Clinton picked Lloyd Bentsen to be his treasury secretary.

The board's 42-16 vote means the group can use funds to campaign for Krueger among its membership, estimated at 250,000, said Texas AFL-CIO President Joe Gunn. Mattox needed to win at least 20 votes to block the endorsement, Gunn said.

"This gives me the authority to spend as much as I can find (to campaign)," Gunn said, adding he did not know how much money would be used.

When asked if Krueger was his first choice, Gunn said: "The people voted their choice."

"I think he will be good for Texas," Gunn added.

Last Tuesday, Gov. Ann Richards chose the former congressman to serve as interim replacement for Bentsen.

Krueger, who has pledged to fight hard to hang onto the seat in the upcoming special election, said the AFL-CIO endorsement was "a very important one."

"This ... is a tremendously strong endorsement from the working people of this state," he said. "I'm deeply honored to have the endorsement of this group and it's going to be a great, great help to this campaign."

Krueger also said he believed the endorsement "will add financial support."

Before the vote was taken during a meeting at the Hobby Hilton Hotel, Mattox said he expected the executive board members to support Richards' appointment.

But Mattox also said he doesn't believe the board "speaks for the rank and file."

"The working people, whether they be union or non-union, will be with me in Texas," Mattox said.

Mattox said since he expected the vote to go for Krueger, he asked the board not to make any endorsement. Afterwards, he said the decision would not stop him from running.

Richards saw the AFL-CIO action as a positive statement about Krueger's appointment, said Chuck McDonald, a spokesman for the governor.

"This is another indication that Democrats of many varying constituencies are uniting behind a single candidate ... It really is gratifying to see this vote," McDonald said.

Republican congressmen Jack Fields and Joe Barton also are running for the senate seat, and Texas Treasurer Kay Bailey Hutchison said Monday she would make her official entry into the Senate race on Wednesday.

Also on Monday, Barton asked the Texas State Republican Executive Committee to meet to try and unify behind one candidate to increase the party's odds of winning.

Barton also said if the group decided to do so, he feels confident he would be that candidate in part because of his experience in Congress and running campaigns.

Peace talks among Somali leaders in peril; security sweeps continue

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Peace talks among leaders of Somalia's warring factions appeared to have broken down today, negating a cease-fire and a plan to disarm the warring parties by March 1.

Also today, U.S. Marines were still combing the capital for weapons in their push to restore law and order by month's end, a task that could be made far more difficult if the talks in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, have collapsed.

Farouk Mawlawi, the United Nations' spokesman in Mogadishu, said the talks reached a "crisis stage" Monday night. He was uncertain whether the 14 factions at the meeting had been able to sign any agreement since then.

According to Mawlawi, the factions had reached a preliminary cease-fire and disarmament agreement on Monday but were unable to concur on other details, thus cancelling the plan.

There were doubts as to how faithfully a cease-fire would have been obeyed and the agreement would not have affected gangs of freelance bandits. Nevertheless, the agreement had been seen as a potentially significant move toward bringing order back to a land of chaos and starvation.

Clan fighting has aggravated a drought-sparked famine; an estimated 350,000 people have died in the past year from hunger and fighting.

A U.S.-led international force that arrived Dec. 9 under U.N. auspices has been trying to restore order and protect food aid shipments.

Marine patrols were launched again today, following Monday's sweep by 900 Marines of Mogadishu's Bakara weapons bazaar — the country's biggest arms market.

Mawlawi said Marines moved today into an area of northern Mogadishu where weapons were believed to have been stashed.

The northern half of the city is controlled by forces loyal to Ali Mahdi Mohamed, while the southern half is held by Mohamed Farrah Aidid, the country's most powerful warlord.

In a meeting with U.N. officials and staff members of private aid groups, Marine commander Maj. Gen. Charles Wilhelm said he hoped a safer environment could be possible in the capital by Feb. 1, Mawlawi said.

Wilhelm reportedly defined a "safer environment" as the ability of citizens to move about freely, the absence of weapons in the streets and a return of commerce.

Wilhelm's 10,000 Marines are now confiscating any visible weapons, although those needed by aid groups for self-protection are being returned.

Mawlawi said that seized weapons are being destroyed daily although some are being kept to arm a future Somali police force.

Somalia is essentially one vast arsenal, most of it stocked during the Cold War era by both the Soviet Union and the United States.

Ousted dictator Mohamed Siad Barre used superpower rivalries to obtain weapons and other aid from both countries at various times.

The weapons range from World War II rifles to modern tanks.

Mawlawi said 70 torpedoes had even been found about 100 yards from the beach in the southern port city of Kismayu.

Congressman from Ohio resigns

CINCINNATI (AP) — Rep. Willis Gradison resigned less than a week into his 10th term to become head of an insurance industry lobbying group. He said the offer was too good to pass up.

"I've reached the point of life where I really would like to have one more major professional challenge," Gradison said Monday. "At the age of 64, it's somewhat flattering that somebody considers that I'm good for something other than cutting the grass."

Gradison, a Republican from Cincinnati, said his resignation is effective at the end of the month.

In December, he lost an attempt to win a place in Republican leadership in the House.

Gradison said at a news conference he had intended to serve his full term when he ran for re-election Nov. 3 and received 75 percent of the vote.

But he said that after the election he received an offer to become president of the Health Insurance Association of America and couldn't turn it down. He wouldn't say what he will be paid.

Some constituents had a hard time accepting Gradison's rationale.

"He seemed to be the better choice at the time," said Bradley Hall, 23, of suburban Norwood. "Maybe he wasn't."

"I feel like maybe if he'd have known about it, he should have told somebody and given them a chance," said Betty Fultz, 50, of suburban Blue Ash.

If he had left office by the end of the year, Gradison could have taken with him about $400,000 in unused campaign money. He said he has asked his campaign committee to offer to return the money to contributors and to give whatever is left to other Republican candidates.

Gradison will be barred by law from having any direct contact with his former colleagues in the House, but will be allowed to give the association advice and plan strategy for handling negotiations with Congress.

Gov. George Voinovich must set a date for party primaries and for a special election for a successor.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

United Nations a big key to peace

With great expectations, representatives of 50 nations met 47 years ago in San Francisco to forge an international agency dedicated to the preservation of peace in the world.

The United States had just emerged from World War II with more than a million casualties, 392,000 of them fatalities.

Eager for an end to the cost in blood and treasure that war demands, the United States was a leader in the effort to form the not-so-very-united United Nations, the world's last best hope for peace.

The United Nations was for years a battleground in the Cold War between the United States and the Soviet Union, with vetoes and veto threats in the Security Council as bullets.

The United Nations survived those tumultuous years, and with the death of communism throughout most of the world and the Cold War's end, its future appeared to be bright.

At present, however, the United Nations faces a crisis. It must prove that it is capable of putting an end to Serbian attempts to slaughter the people of Bosnia. Its failure to do so would be a message to all that it is incapable of achieving its lofty goal of maintaining world peace.

Foreign ministers of Austria, Poland, Hungary and Slovenia have been involved in recent days in talks at the White House and at Clinton transition headquarters.

Those foreign ministers represent the Central European Initiative, which includes Italy, Czechoslovakia, Croatia and Bosnia. They want the United States to take the leadership in forming a containment policy to curb Serbian aggression.

We don't know precisely what they expect the United States to do, but one thing is clear: The United Nations Security Council resolution that forbids Serbian military flights over Bosnia must be enforced.

Anything less than that would be surrendering to the forces of aggression.

One more step could be taken: The ban on shipping weapons to Bosnia should be lifted.

If the U.N. can't or won't send military personnel to Bosnia, it should at least supply Bosnians with arms so they can try to defend themselves.

We are not suggesting that U.S. planes should be the only ones to police the no-fly zone over Bosnia. But the United States should use its influence to encourage other Western nations to join us in this peace-keeping effort.

If Bosnia falls, so might the United Nations. Without the United Nations, what hope is there for peace in this world?

Berry's World

"My paycheck? Well, to borrow a word from Bill Clinton, I 'invested' most of it in lottery tickets."

Freedom's fortunes don't inspire over-optimism

In recent years, freedom was the global equivalent of the Japanese economy — growing briskly and apparently incapable of doing otherwise. In 1992, the world, like Tokyo executives, discovered that roller coasters go up as well as down. The extraordinary boom set off by Mikhail Gorbachev has not quite turned to bust, but the expansion of human liberty, as financial types might say, has experienced a temporary mid-course correction.

For nearly half a century, Westerners as well as Eastern Europeans yearned for the emancipation of the "captive nations" oppressed by the rule of the Soviet Union. No sooner had liberation come than many Eastern Europeans set about proving they were perfectly capable of oppressing themselves, most conspicuously in what used to be Yugoslavia. Events in the Balkans dramatize that communism's collapse may only replace tranquil tyranny with a violent, chaotic form.

They also confirmed something the world had suspected but hoped wasn't true: that the death of totalitarianism is not necessarily the birth of liberty. Nor is the establishment of popular rule a panacea. Freedom House, the New York-based human rights group, reported in its recent annual survey that the number of democracies rose from 91 to 99 last year — while the percentage of people living in free societies declined slightly. By early 1993, it said, "there will likely be 31 democracies where substantial human rights violations occur every day."

Liberty being the primary concern of this columnist, I start each January by considering its condition around the globe and its prospects in the coming year. In the last few years, it has been an effort to keep my optimism in check. This year, that is not a problem. In several countries, the promise of the recent past is still largely promise.

Stephen Chapman

The most important is Russia, which threw off the man who founded communism, Lenin, and the man who reformed it, Gorbachev, but may yet do the same to the man who destroyed it, Boris Yeltsin. The Russian president, who knows something about how to behave in a crisis, has done his best to make his own fate irrelevant by pushing economic and political reforms so far they can never be recalled.

Russia at least didn't slip back — unlike Estonia and Latvia, which used their newfound independence from Russian domination to exclude Russians from citizen ship, earning them a demotion by Freedom House from the category of free to the status of "partly free." Of the 15 former republics of the Soviet Union, only two — Ukraine and Lithuania — have managed to create free orders.

Still, the former Soviets are doing better than the Chinese, who continued to liberate economic energies while suffocating political ones — ignoring the alarming experience of its East Asian neighbors, Taiwan and South Korea, whose December elections demonstrated that political reform is the inevitable byproduct of economic advance.

While trying to build capitalism in the rest of his domain, Deng Xiaoping threatens to undo it where it already exists: The Hong Kong stock market has suffered from the fight between Britain and China over democracy in local political bodies and the prospect of Beijing's take over in 1997.

But let's not get carried away with gloom. There were plenty of places where progress occurred and will probably continue. Brazil, which has experience in removing presidents before their terms have expired, tried the novel approach of doing it legally through impeachment, inducing Fernando Collor de Mello to resign. A savage civil war was brought to a surprisingly conciliatory end in El Salvador. The Philippines, which overthrew a dictator in 1987, sampled another innovation — peacefully replacing one democratically chosen president with another.

Somalia helped maintain one of Africa's steadiest exports — news photos of starving children. But a continent that was once a Sahara of brutally repressive regimes witnessed the welcome emergence of several mildly repressive ones. Ghana and Kenya held elections for president and parliament that fell a bit short of the standards of the League of Women Voters, leaving their civic evolution a good decade behind Chicago's. Civil war yielded to fragile peace in Angola and Mozambique. A rare democracy, South Africa, continued negotiations to allow participation by the many South Africans without pale complexions.

Whatever else it holds, 1993 should do much to answer the question of whether the greatest democratic revolution in history will realize its potential. The seeds of liberty have been planted in a host of places since the late 1980s. The challenge is to prove that it can flourish in any climate.

Not long ago, the idea was as preposterous as orange groves in the Arctic. But people who have lived through the last decade can take consolation in the hope that our age will not be remembered for slavish obedience to the limits of possibility.

DEPORTATION

Maybe kids aren't that different today

Jordan, experiencing her fourth Christmas, dove into the mound of packages under the tree with a terrible resolve.

All laws of space and time were suspended. The child was ripping through two and sometimes three packages at once.

Wrapping paper flew. Ribbons flew. She was Jordan Scissorshands. She was Jordan Chainsawhands. "Slow down!" admonished her mother.

Do you tell the wind to slow down? Do you attempt to impede the progress of a raging river?

I saw a Ken doll emerge from an ever growing tower of boxes, ripped open, ribbons askew. And there was a Cinderella doll. And two stuff bears from Granny.

There was a set of fingerpaints. Jordan would do a lovely mural on the living room wall later in the day.

I noticed a child's computer freed from a box. Not to mention a Little Mermaid exercise suit and a Little Mermaid battery-powered tooth-brush.

There was a "Beauty and the Beast" home video and a game called "Frog Soccer."

I did not give Jordan the soccer game, because I don't even like soccer when it is played by participants who don't eat flies.

I did play a quick game of "Frog Soccer" with Jordan because she asked me to. She beat me 7-3, which is the most scoring in the history of soccer.

I gave Jordan a dollhouse. I paid a guy $50 to put it together. There were parts that attached to other parts that could not be seen by the naked eye. Frank Lloyd Wright would have had a difficult time assembling the thing.

As I was unloading the dollhouse out of my car, however, the top floor came apart. I spent a great deal of Christmas Eve trying to do what I'd pay the guy $50 to do. But to no avail.

When Jordan saw the house, she was excited, but she wanted to know, "What happened to the top floor?" "Termites," I said.

Somehow confused, Jordan leapt at one last unwrapped gift. It was from Santa.

When she opened the box, I couldn't believe what I saw.

It was a Slinky. Surely you remember Slinkies. They've been around since I was a child.

A Slinky is nothing more than a series of circular divisions of a long wire that has an accordion effect to it.

Pull one of the circular divisions and the rest follow.

You can make a Slinky jump from one of your hands to the other. A Slinky can even walk down steps.

Slinkies were big for Christmas when I was a kid, and now little Jordan's got one for Christmas 1992.

"Show me how this works?" Jordan said to me.

I made the Slinky go from my right hand to my left. I played the Slinky like a yo-yo. I made it take two consecutive leaps across the carpet.

Jordan was beside herself with wonder and glee, and I'm thinking, here are all these expensive, complicated gifts — including a dollhouse with 14,806 different parts, 4,739 of which are no longer attached — and it's this cheap, simple, good ol' standby, Slinky, that has her attention.

So maybe kids aren't that different today. Remember opening your toys in the morning and then spending the afternoon playing with the boxes?

Something else did finally take Jordan's attention away from the Slinky. It was the packing around the toys that had been mailed to her. It was the cellophane substance with bubble-like protrusions in it. When you stomped on those bubbles they made neat popping sounds.

Jordan stomped out every bubble and never again mentioned the insect-ridden dollhouse I had given her.

A visit from St. Nickles-from-us

A look back at 1992, with fond hopes Clinton will really cut taxes for the middle class like he said he would:

'Twas the night before Clinton became our new president./ In inaugural festivities that will set a new precedent/ For parties among leaders championing the middle class/ Say, Bill, we'd be happier if your bash cost less cash.

A gaggle of economists had come to his state/ To see what was happening in this Rhodes Scholar's pate./ They all say he wowed 'em with his knowledge of theory/ Even if he snoozed some when he became weary.

But what an election the guy'd just come through./ Perot called him "chicken plucker," his economics voo-doo./ George Bush called him "bozo" and portrayed his culture/ As a horror film sound stage overseen by a culture.

In 89' Bush said we needed to forget Vietnam./ Yet Bill Clinton made a very good target./ For all of Bush' barbs about Bill's not going/ At one point it threatened to prove his undoing.

But even conservatives conceded this race/ Did nothing but stumble, stagnate and lose face./ Republicans were smuggled, all safe in their beds./ While visions of '96 danced in their heads.

The right wing was waiting to see if wife Hillary/ Will help wear Bill's pants and do something sillary./ Like say, "Kids, sue your parents!" Rush Limbaugh's so flustered/ To see the support this strong woman has mustered.

Phil Gramm was safe in his $63,000 house/ In hopes the Ethics Committee won't think he's a louse/ Because appraisers say the home is worth $117 grand/ And he did help his contractor from S&L quicksand.

Sarah Overstreet

And I in my moderate Democrat cap/ Had just settled down for a four-year-long nap/ I hoped would bring an era of plain common sense./ With extremist views on both sides dismissed as nonsense.

When upon my fax machine there arose such a clatter/ I sprang from my bed to see what was the matter./ Then what to my wondering eyes did appear./ Than some GOP centrists saying, "Be of good cheer."

"We have a big tent and all may have shade/ If they believe moral decisions are really best made/ By each citizen privately. Fiscal care is our mission./ You can call us the Republican Majority Coalition."

Then next to my wondering eyes did appear/ A 20-year senator with reputation so dear/ Accused of pawing and kissing women in his office/ His excuse? "I was drunk." he doesn't think he should quit.

In a huff Packwood snapped, "Why not pick on Inouye?/ He's a Senator too, and his hairdresser says/ He Fondles her regularly, but it's just that she/ Didn't want to risk losing a rich client's money."

It was a heck of year for big men going bad./ New York's mightiest judge at his lover got mad./ Prosecutors say she broke up with Judge Watchler/ So he threatened and sent condoms to her young daughter.

The state department's trying to put back the stuff/

By high-level folks out on a witch hunt/ For something, anything, done while he was young.

Streisand led the elite in boycotting Aspen/ For a Colorado law against men loving men./ Will worse come to worse and the wealthy among us/ Have to vacation in Hawaii, New York or Columbus?

Corporate execs tried to avoid Clinton taxes/ Proposed for the richest; and so they sent faxes/ Buying stock, selling others; Disney brass were most tricky./ "Sell Donald, sell Goofy, buy Minnie and Mickey!"

Baseball was punchy from its Big Red Headache./ Marge Schott had us all examining the fake/ "Equality" ruse they've tried to portray./ "She says it, others think it," black ballplayers say.

The same week we heard PTL partners got zip/ For pouring life savings into Bakker's ego trip./ We learned Brother Jim had his sentence reduced./ Pretty good payoff for old people seduced.

Alas, the folks packing to leave the Beltway/ Had their share of problems as they ended their stay./ Treasurer Villalpando, who never earned a degree./ Was named U.S. treasurer, and is now "away on leave."

While the FBI sees if she peddled influence/ Throwing business to old bosses who sought congruence/ With Kuwaiti businessmen after the Gulf War/ And made millions off contracts that she arranged for.

President Bush had his own problems, too/ While investigators searched to see what his crew/ Had to do with Iran-Contra and Iraqgate, to boot/ And tried hard to name them all in a lawsuit.

But he's a great optimist, as is his wife./ George and Barbara said, "It's a wonderful life."/ And I heard them exclaim as they flew out of sight./ "Happy New Year to all, and to all a good night!"

Portuguese explorers find sea road to East

By NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC
For AP Special Features

It was an astonishing empire, built 500 years ago by Portuguese pioneers, men like Dias, da Gama, Cabral, Albuquerque, Magellan and others less renowned but no less bold.

They braved seas no European had sailed before to reach and exploit the Indies, the Spice Islands, Japan and China — precisely the shimmering goals Christopher Columbus sought, and died believing he had found.

In the 1992 quinquennial year, with all eyes focused on Columbus and America, Merle Severy traveled in the opposite direction, following the paths of the Portuguese explorers.

"For a century and more, these men of Portugal held in their grasp the rich seaborne trade of the East," Severy writes in the current National Geographic.

"And long after their chain of Asian colonies — the first global empire — had crumbled into history, I would find their living imprint across half the world, from Morocco to Macau."

To tell the story of Portugal's nearly 600-year global encounter, which changed the world we live in today, Severy first made a pilgrimage to the spacious harbor of Lisbon, the capital. Here galleons set forth amid the roar of cannon and the braying of trumpets.

Seventy miles north at Tomar, Severy strolled the monastic corridors where Prince Henry, later celebrated as the Navigator, headed the Order of Christ; its revenues supported forays down the African coast.

While Henry and other Portuguese explorers are household names in the West, few Westerners know of Afonso de Albuquerque, empire builder of the East, whose feats led his countrymen to call him Afonso the Great.

First sailing east in 1503, this soldier and strategist capped the Portuguese discoveries with an empire that wrested Indian Ocean trade from the Moslems and controlled gateways to the lands of Columbus' desire.

It was Albuquerque who in 1510 conquered Goa in western India, which he made the kingpin of Portuguese Asia. In 1511 came Malacca, Malaysia, key to eastern Asia, where the Indian Ocean funnels to the China Seas and eastward to the Spice Islands.

From Malacca, Albuquerque sent Francisco Serrao, possibly with his friend Magellan, to discover the source of spices in the Moluccas, the Spice Islands of eastern Indonesia. Then he sent embassies to Siam and to China.

It was King John II who truly launched Portugal's great age of exploration. In 1482 and again in 1485, he sent his courtier Diogo Cao southward along the coast of Africa, where Cao discovered the mighty Congo River.

In 1487 John dispatched Bartolomeu Dias to round Africa in search of a route to the East. Dias returned in triumph.

Ultimately the Portuguese became part of the fabric of Eastern culture. "The secret of their survival was accommodation and collaboration," Professor Dejanirah Couto of the Sorbonne in Paris told Severy.

A living landmark of the Portuguese in Japan is mighty Nagasaki itself; they chose its site in 1570 on the invitation of the daimyo (regional lord) of Omura, a Christian convert.

A Christian settlement grew around the port, which became a hub of the rich Goa-Macau-Nagasaki trade. Portuguese-flavored in speech and food as well as faith, Nagasaki was a conduit for Western influence on Japan, from medicine to maps.

Portugal's world empire began, and its resplendent days ended, with crusades in Morocco, only a few miles apart.

At Ksar el Kebir, 163 years after Prince Henry the Navigator won his spurs at Ceuta, King Sebastian, obsessed with quixotic dreams of knight-errantry, died with his army — leading to the takeover of his kingdom by his uncle Philip II and 60 years of "Spanish captivity."

Portugal emerged with its manpower sapped by Spain and much of its empire taken by the Dutch and English enemies of imperial Spain.

Yet Goa, last vestige of da Gama and Albuquerque's Portuguese India, held out until 1961. When Macau reverts to China in 1999, the first colonial power in Asia will be the last to go.

Severy asked Mario Soares, president of the Republic of Portugal, how he'd sum up Portugal's global encounter.

"Portugal's navigators," Soares replied, "showing Europe the way across the oceans, brought back more than spices, gold, precious stones and silk. They interacted with ancient cultures and gave us the vision of the one world we have today."

"At the close of the cycle of empire, as we enter universal civilization, Portugal will remain, as our poet Fernando Pessoa saw, 'the face of Europe that looks out to the rest of the world.'"

Over-groomed nation concerned with too much hair

DEAR ABBY: The letter about nose and ear hair really got me. You Americans are crazy. You don't seem to realize that nature gave us hair to protect us.

Since when did hair become offensive? Women started to shave their legs when short skirts and silk stockings came into vogue. Then they started to shave their armpits when sleeveless dresses got popular.

Years ago, French models would model sleeveless evening gowns and let the hair under their arms alone. Nobody was offended. Here in the States it was a different story. All the models had to shave. I think the Gillette people must have started it. Today, Americans are razor happy. One music star even shaves her entire head!

Men see hair as a sign of masculinity and virility. Women are shaving and men are wearing hairpieces! It makes no sense at all, Abby.

I read in your column that some guys are embarrassed to go to the beach in swim trunks because they have hair on their backs! Hair on their chests is OK, but hair on their backs makes them feel like gorillas.

Now I learned (in your column) that a woman is totally turned off by a man who has hair in his nose and ears.

I'll bet you are going to get a lot of mail on that one, Abby.

ALL MAN IN AURORA, COLO.

DEAR ALL MAN: I certainly did. And it's still coming. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the letter signed "A Good Friend," who had a male friend she thought the world of, but the excess hair in his ears and nose turned her off.

When I was in high school, the fellow I was going with had a lot of nose hair. He was sweet and fun to be with, but this small problem repelled me. My mother told me if I really liked him, I would tell him; otherwise, as trivial as it seemed, it would come between us. Unfortunately, I was too shy to mention it.

Well, one day my mother told him for me, Abby. I thought I would die of embarrassment when she told me what she had done, but the next time I saw him, he had taken care of the problem, and it made a world of difference to me. (I ended up thanking my mother.)

Dear Abby

Men, listen up! It might seem like a trivial matter, but you would be amazed how disgusting nose hair is to some women. Get rid of it!

HELGA IN LUBBOCK, TEXAS

DEAR HELGA: A word of caution to those who would heed your suggestion: Do not pluck nose hairs. To do so could cause an infection. There are nose-hair clippers and special scissors that can be purchased at the drugstore. And most barbers perform this necessary grooming function routinely.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the girl who was totally turned off by a male friend because he had excessive nose and ear hair took me back about half a century. I was attending a women's college back East and started dating an Ivy League man. He was a brilliant young man, and he was crazy about me, but I couldn't get serious about him because he had coarse black hair in his ears and nose, which totally turned me off. I fixed him up with a girl from my dorm, and they eventually married.

Guess where the fellow with the ear and nose hair ended up? On the bench of the U.S. Supreme Court!

Please, no names, initials or city on this one, Abby.

A FAITHFUL READER

DEAR ABBY: Please settle an argument for us. Do you think it's proper for a woman to give a male co-worker a shirt for a gift? I may be old-fashioned, but if my husband needs a shirt, I will buy him one.

PEEVED IN CARROLLTON, TEXAS

DEAR PEEVED: I see nothing improper about it. Don't be peeved — the giver wanted to give her co-worker something useful. Now, had she given him a pair of boxer shorts with lipstick prints (I have seen them in ads), you could have something to be peeved about. But a shirt is dignified, useful and not inexpensive.

Cats outrun dogs in home decor

By BARBARA MAYER
For AP Special Features

Millie's out and Socks is in at the White House, but felines were front and center as pets and a focus for home furnishings long before Americans came to know First Cat.

"People tend to be either dog people or cat people, and they like to buy images that correspond to their preference," says Leslie Ferrin, who owns a crafts gallery in Northampton, Mass. "It's safe to say you can find a cat on anything people use in the home."

Perhaps it's because cats outnumber dogs in American households — 58 million to 51 million, according to a recent Gallup Poll. Perhaps because they're independent and demand less from owners already stretched for time.

At the Ferrin Gallery's holiday exhibit, "Animal Crackers," there were far more crafts with feline than canine themes. Cats and kittens were rampant on home furnishings — clinging to small chairs, wall hangings, area rugs, clocks, toothbrush holders, soap dishes and more.

"Most people prefer images of animals that they also have some personal relationship with," says

Alison Palmer, a ceramist from Pawling, N.Y. "Cats are city pets and more numerous."

Palmer works animal shapes and images into handcrafted bowls, dishes, cookie jars, clocks and spoon rests. She does cats, dogs, fish and pigs but says cats are the best sellers.

Mabel's is a gift shop in New York City and Santa Fe, N.M., named for the owner's cat. Mabel is now deceased, but her charming black and white face lives on in many products exclusive to Mabel's.

Crafts and arty gifts aside, cats also cavort on wallpaper. In fact, there are many more cats than dogs in the "Wallcoverings Pattern Guide and Source Directory," a trade publication, according to Jeanne Byington of the Wallcoverings Information Bureau in New York.

Many animal species can be found on wallpaper, especially patterns destined for children's rooms, kitchens and baths, Byington says. So, if you want cats on your walls, check the sample books devoted to these rooms, she advises.

For more adult patterns, check wallpaper collections based on Asian decorative influences, Byington says. The images on more formal papers tend to be of larger cats such as tigers and lions. Stylized motifs, some with just the markings of fur, are currently popular.

If four walls of cats seem too much, try a feline touch in the bathroom — on a shower curtain, bathmat or towel, or other accessories, such as those from Jackson, a CHF company in New York.

Don't look for lots of cats on upholstery fabrics, though.

"Textile designers tend to avoid motifs that look subliminally uncomfortable — sharp, say, or scratchy. Perhaps cats connote claws and allergies," writes Susan Meller in "Textile Designs" (Abrams, 1991), a book which catalogs fabrics by pattern and style for the past 200 years.

No one knows when America's love for cats began. Maybe when every barn had a good mouser or two. But by the late 19th century, cats were a novelty theme for home decorating fabrics, Meller says. Our cultural history, likewise, is riddled with cats.

To a journalist, one of the most interesting cats is Mehitabel, the "toujours gai" invention of New York Sun newspaper columnist Don Marquis in the 1920s. Marquis created a literate cockroach named Archie who reported extensively on Mehitabel's amorous doings.

A famous cartoon cat was Felix, who starred in films in the 1930s and 1940s. Today, we have Garfield. There's even "Cats" on Broadway, the long-running musical based on T. S. Eliot's writings in the "Original Old Possum Book of Cats," first published in 1939.

Girl Scouts launch cookie sales

Quivira Girl Scout Council began cookies sales on Jan. 9.

Cookie sales are a voluntary activity of Girl Scouts and involves about 1,000,000 girls and 400,000 adults nation wide.

Proceeds from the sale will be used to provide program activities for the members of Quivira Council, training for the volunteers supporting the council and camp site maintenance.

The contemporary series of programs, begun in the mid-1980's by Girl Scouts of the USA, emphasizes issues that include teen pregnancy prevention, drug abuse prevention, peer pressure, appreciation of cultural diversity and family crises. Nationally and locally, programming also centers on environmental issues.

Girl Scouts are also involved in community service work including neighborhood clean-up campaigns, recycling efforts and help as needed to children's and women's shelters.

Girls will be taking order through Jan. 23. Customers who have not been contacted by a Girl Scout can call the council office at 669-6862.

Types of cookies available include Trefoils, Golden Nut Clusters, Do-Si-Dos, Chalet Creams, Samoas, Thin Mints and Tagalongs.

Kentucky claims No. 1 spot in college basketball

By The Associated Press

Guess who's No. 1? Remember Kentucky?

Nearly four years after an NCAA investigation tore open the school's program and five years after it was last ranked No. 1, the Wildcats claimed the top spot in college basketball on Monday.

"It's an honor being No. 1," said Kentucky coach Rick Pitino. "But it's more important being No. 1 at the end of the year."

But he doesn't mind seeing his team at the top of the weekly poll.

"The more good pressure helps you stronger mentally," he said. "It's better to be ranked No. 1 early than later."

The last No. 1 ranking for Kentucky came just after New Year's Day 1988. That lasted only a week as the Wildcats lost at home to Auburn 53-52 in their next game.

Kentucky will get its first test as the No. 1 team when it plays at Vanderbilt Wednesday night.

"It's good to put pressure on a team and see how they will react," he said. "We'll see Wednesday night."

Pitino, while claiming this is the best team he's ever coached, doesn't expect No. 1 to be a season-long spot for the Wildcats.

"No. 1 will probably change quite a few times this season," he said. "Still, it's a great honor, especially considering where the program was when I took over."

Kentucky (11-0) received 50 first-place votes and 1,608 points from the nationwide panel of writers and broadcasters to easily outdistance Michigan (12-1), which was No. 1 on 14 ballots and had 1,545 points.

Duke (10-1), which held the No. 1 spot throughout last season and in five of eight polls this season, received one first-place vote and 1,496 points in dropping two places.

Kansas was fourth, North Carolina and Indiana swapped places from last week and Seton Hall remained seventh.

Georgia Tech, the team that ended Duke's 23-game winning streak on Sunday, moved from 14th to No. 8 and was followed by Arkansas and Oklahoma, which improved from 13th and 11th, respectively.

Cincinnati led the Second Ten and was followed by Arizona, Iowa, Virginia, Connecticut, UCLA, Purdue, UNLV, Minnesota and Georgetown.

Ohio State led the last five, followed by Boston College, Michigan State, Syracuse and Utah.

Minnesota, which beat Michigan State and Purdue last week, and Ohio State, which beat Penn State and Iowa, were among the four new teams to this week's poll. They give the Big Ten seven teams in the Top 25. Michigan, Indiana, Iowa, Purdue and Michigan State were already ranked. The Big East has five ranked teams and the Atlantic Coast Conference four.

The other new teams were Boston College, which beat Villanova and Georgetown, and Utah, which downed Texas-El Paso and Brigham Young. Boston College (9-2) had the longest absence from the rankings. The Eagles were last in the poll late in the 1984-85 season when they were 20th.

Minnesota (10-1) was 20th in the final poll of the 1989-90 season and Ohio State (9-2) and Utah (10-2) were both ranked last season, the Buckeyes third in the final poll and the Runnin' Utes 19th before dropping out early in the season.

The teams dropped from the poll were No. 18 Vanderbilt, No. 22 Massachusetts, No. 23 Florida State and No. 24 Pittsburgh.

Vanderbilt (11-3) lost both its games last week to Memphis State and Florida.

Massachusetts (6-4) dropped two of three last week, and in the consecutive losses to Cincinnati and Temple, the Minutemen showed how much they miss conference player of the year Harper Williams, who is still out with a broken right hand.

Florida State (9-5) split its games, losing to Virginia before beating Wake Forest in overtime. Pittsburgh (9-2) was ranked for just one week before being beaten by St. John's.

Virginia (9-0) is the only other unbeaten team in Division I, and the Cavaliers, who jumped from 25th to 14th, play at Duke on Sunday.

Teams justify high ranking

Monday night was Justification Night for Kansas and Seton Hall.

The No. 4 Jayhawks and No. 7 Pirates each faced a conference opponent ranked in the Top 25, and both justified their higher ranking.

For Kansas, the opponent was No. 10 Oklahoma at the Lloyd Noble Center in Norman, Okla. The Jayhawks fell behind 48-39 at halftime, but used a 26-7 run early in the second half to quiet the 11,372 fans en route to a 96-85 win.

For Seton Hall, the opponent was No. 24 Syracuse, a team that had won 26 of the previous 28 matchups between the schools. The Pirates never trailed, but had to work in the second half for a 80-73 win at East Rutherford, N.J.

In the only other Top 25 game, No. 18 UNLV topped Missouri 101-84.

Adonis Jordan led the comeback for Kansas, scoring all of his 17 points in the second half. The key was a halftime pep talk from coach Roy Williams.

"I got on him a little harder than the other guys because in the first half I didn't think he did anything at all," Williams said.

Jordan responded by making all six of his shots in the second half.

"In the first half I had the attitude that I would take what the defense gave me," Jordan said. "In the second half, I took what I wanted."

Terry Dehere scored 24 points and Arturas Karnishovas added 18 on 7-of-7 shooting as Seton Hall (14-1) improved to 4-0 in the Big East — its best start since the league was formed in 1979. Syracuse (9-4) dropped to 1-4 in the league, its worst start since 1980-81.

Field conditions could be a factor in Cowboys-49ers NFC title game

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys grounds crew will break out the water hoses today to try to make Valley Ranch look as muddy as Candlestick Park.

Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson has ordered workers to wet down one of the two Cowboys practice fields so the players can become accustomed to playing in the goo.

"Mud can be a factor, and I think it's necessary for individuals to work on that type field," Johnson said. "It bothers receivers and defensive backs. They have to learn to take shorter, choppy strides."

Johnson said he didn't want the condition of Candlestick to become a big deal for Sunday's NFC title game against the San Francisco 49ers.

"I don't want it to become an overriding topic," he said. "We'll play if it's on asphalt, grass or artificial turf. We don't care. We'll be ready for what we have."

Johnson was so concerned about Candlestick that he called San Francisco before the Cowboys defeated the Philadelphia Eagles.

"I broke my own rule, but I felt we would win before the game started," he said. "I wanted to hear about the field conditions. They don't sound too good. We may try to wet our field down and try to make it as close to their conditions as possible."

The NFL has sent its grass guru, George Toma, to work on the field.

The Cowboys defeated the Eagles 34-10 Sunday to advance to the NFC championship final against the 49ers. Eleven years ago, San Francisco edged the Cowboys 28-27 on "The Catch," a last-minute scoring pass from Joe Montana to Dwight Clark in the NFC title game.

The prospect of slopping around in the mud doesn't bother the NFL's leading running back, Emmitt

Smith, who scored a touchdown and rushed for 114 yards against the Eagles.

"I'm pretty good in the mud," Smith said. "I've played on some bad fields in high school and college down in Florida."

Center Mark Stepnoski said it will help to have the NFL taking care of the field.

"I noticed against Washington the ground crew was replacing the divots where San Francisco was going, not where they had been," Stepnoski said. "We can handle the mud."

The Cowboys briefly celebrated their victory over the Eagles, then got back to work, preparing for the 49ers. Dallas flies to San Francisco on Friday.

"It was a big win, but the biggest wins are yet to come," Johnson said. "We're not savoring anything until we've won it all. We'll get giddy about things when that happens."

The Cowboys had a goal in training camp of making it to the title game.

"We're just 60 minutes away from the Super Bowl," defensive tackle Tony Casillas said. "We've got to change our goal now."

The 49ers opened as four-point favorites in what will be a matchup of San Francisco's top-rated offense against the Cowboys' top-rated defense.

Bills have good thing going in backfield

By JOHN F. BONFATTI
AP Sports Writer

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Thurman Thomas says the Buffalo Bills "have a good thing going" in their backfield where he shares playing time with his longtime backup, Kenneth Davis.

And Thomas, who craves work and attention, doesn't mind sharing the spotlight.

"Knowing you've got a backup in Kenny Davis, you can come out and get your rest at any time that you want to," said Thomas, who remains the top back in the Bills' one-back offense. "I'm just glad he's on my team."

Before last year's Super Bowl, the Bills' All-Pro told the world he was unappreciated even though he was the AFC's leading rusher. Earlier this season, he complained about not getting the ball enough.

Now, as the Bills look toward Sunday's AFC Championship against the Miami Dolphins, Thomas is even joking about his limited playing time.

"Everybody's been talking about a quarterback controversy," Thomas said Monday, referring to whether Jim Kelly will return from an injury and take over for Frank Reich. "I'm surprised nobody's brought up me and Kenny."

There's a reason there's no running back controversy. Thomas has been hurt the last four games and is still bothered by hip and groin injuries.

Thomas led the NFL in combined rushing and receiving yards for a record fourth straight season and remains one of the Bills' chief weapons. The injuries, though, have limited his effectiveness.

In Buffalo's record 41-38 comeback-against victory over Houston in its playoff opener, Davis led the Bills with 68 yards and a touchdown on 13 carries. He also caught two passes for 25 yards.

In the Bills' 24-3 win over Pittsburgh on Saturday, Davis had 104 yards on 10 carries.

Thomas, meanwhile, has taken the changes in stride, saying he's glad Davis is doing well and calling him "the best backup in the league over the last two years."

Thomas sustained a hip injury in the next-to-last regular season game against New Orleans, reinjured it in the season finale against Houston and aggravated it again against Houston in the playoffs. Early in the Pittsburgh game, Thomas pulled a groin muscle. He also took a stinging shot to the shoulder.

"This is the first time I've been banged up like this in a long, long time," Thomas said. "You're always going to have your bumps and bruises. It seems like this year I've had a lot more than I have in the past."

Thomas, in fact, said he has been trying to avoid being hit in certain areas "because it's so sore" and admits he's changed his running style.

"I'm not at full speed right now," he said. "When I break into the secondary now, it's not so much trying to break away from a guy. It's more of trying to let him absorb more of the blow than I have."

Davis has been Thomas' backup since he arrived from Green Bay in 1989 as a free agent. This is the first time he's getting a real chance to contribute.

"I think I'm not only enjoying the last few weeks, but I'm enjoying today because we're still at practice," Davis said. "We're not cleaning out our lockers on our way home."

Don't get him wrong, though. He wasn't unhappy with his status before Thomas' injury.

"One of the main reasons I decided to come here was because I felt I had an opportunity to be on a winning team," he said.

Kelly begins rehabilitation

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Injured Buffalo quarterback Jim Kelly began rehabilitating his sprained knee Monday, but the Bills won't know until Wednesday whether he could be ready for Sunday's AFC Championship.

"The trainers are going to take him through a pretty good running and change-of-direction program and see how he is," coach Marv Levy said. "They'll do a little bit more tomorrow."

The Bills didn't practice Monday and are off Tuesday. They won't begin practicing for their showdown at Miami until Wednesday.

Levy has said that if Kelly is ready to practice Wednesday, he will return to the starting lineup against the Dolphins.

San Antonio headed in new direction under Lucas

Hot shooting lifts Spurs past Pistons

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — John Lucas claims he had a full head of hair a year ago. He also claims he has enjoyed watching it fall out.

Lucas became the head coach of the San Antonio Spurs on Dec. 18, and Monday's 109-91 victory over the Detroit Pistons gave him an 8-2 record.

"Actually, I'm 9-2, because I'm counting the game my assistant coached before I took over," Lucas said. "This has been a lot harder than I thought, but it has also been very enlightening. I don't like this team, I love it."

Lucas has an unusual coaching style — from his sideline leaping to his players-only huddles during timeouts. But according to his star, David Robinson, Lucas's biggest asset is his 14-year NBA playing career.

Lucas took over after the team fired Jerry Tarkanian, former Nevada-Las Vegas coach, on Dec. 18.

"Tark was an excellent coach, but he had to adjust to this league from college, and the management didn't give him much time," Robinson said. "Luke came in right away, gave us a new offense, and he gave us a new direction. That's what is important, not that he stays out of our huddles during a timeout."

Monday, the Spurs led 33-23 after one quarter, then waited for a Detroit comeback that never came. San Antonio led by 12 at halftime, 12 after three quarters and 18 at game's end.

"Every time they got within seven or eight, we got a three or a big basket," Lucas said. "The biggest came at the end of the third. They got within seven (77-70), and Lloyd (Daniels) hit a 3-pointer for us. That was a back-breaker for Detroit."

Detroit was playing its third home game in four days, and it lost all three. The busy schedule was what Pistons coach Ron Rothstein blamed for the loss. "You look at our schedule, and we look tired right now," he said. "I don't know if it is physical or mental. We just aren't coming out ready to play. I take full responsibility for that, because I'm the coach and I'm supposed to have them ready."

What killed the Pistons was being outshot 52 percent to 38 percent. Leading scorers Joe Dumars, Isiah Thomas and Terry Mills combined for 55 points but needed 60 shots to do it.

"I don't think guys like Isiah and Joe are going to have games like this all the time," Mills said. "We need a day of practice with a lot of shooting so we can shoot well against Dallas on Wednesday."

Orlando Woolridge was the only Pistons starter to shoot 50 percent, making five of his 10 shots, but he still wasn't happy.

"There's no need to hit the panic button, but it is frustrating when you lose these games," he said. "We've just got to work harder and dig a little deeper."

Robinson also struggled from the line, hitting eight of 22, but had 14 rebounds and four blocked shots.

"David wasn't shooting well early, but he played great defense all night," said Dale Ellis. "Then he hit some big shots in the fourth quarter."

Ellis picked up for Robinson in the first three quarters, scoring all but two of his game-high 23 points.

"This has never been an intimidating place for me to play," he said. "I've won here in the past, and I did again tonight. This isn't the same team Detroit had a few years ago, but they still have talent."

While Detroit hosts lowly Dallas, the Spurs continue their road trip Wednesday when they travel to Minnesota. The Timberwolves just fired coach Jimmy Rodgers, which makes Lucas nervous.

"Playing against a team with a new coach is tough," said Lucas, who should know. "That won't be an easy game. Teams always work hard for a new coach."

Jackson calls for affirmative action plan in major leagues

By RONALD BLUM
AP Sports Writer

GRAPEVINE (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson finally gets to speak to baseball owners today, and says he will threaten selective boycotts unless teams establish affirmative action hiring programs by opening day.

Jackson will be the first item at a special major league meeting, and said he will ask owners directly to take action against Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott, who is accused of making racial slurs.

"The owners are absolutely paralyzed now in how to deal with Marge Schott because they have done or said similar things," Jackson said Monday at a news conference in Dallas after a meeting of the Rainbow Commission for Fairness in Athletics.

At a breakfast of business and community leaders, Jackson criticized the level of minority employment in professional and college athletics and sports media.

"If we've simply gone from carrying cotton balls to carrying footballs, basketballs and baseballs, we haven't had fundamental progress," he said, claiming there is "an apartheid policy of exclusion" in hiring.

"We want to have an affirmative action plan by April 5 of this year or (they will) face selective boycotts," he said. Jackson said that if he calls for boycotts, incoming President Clinton shouldn't throw out the season's ceremonial first pitch.

"We would urge the new president, in keeping with his conviction to heal, to tear down walls and build bridges, not to cross our picket lines," Jackson said.

He said the commission will ask National League president Bill White and Rachel Robinson, the widow of Jackie Robinson, to be co-chairs.

The commission, which will have a $1 million budget, will seek to have branches in each city with professional teams and will publish statistics on their hiring practices. He said the group will release statistics on hiring at colleges, and make recommendations on which schools athletes should stay away from.

He said he spoke Sunday night with NCAA president Dick Schultz about improving minority hiring in the athletic departments of NCAA member schools.

Jackson said Schultz told him he could address the NCAA Presidents Commission in April, and Jackson said he will seek to have athletic departments distribute profits to players after they graduate.

While the baseball's commissioner's office gives at least $100,000 each year for inner-city programs, according to AL president Bobby Brown, Jackson called for teams and sporting goods companies to fund inner-city leagues. Jackson said youths were "better beating a ball than beating someone's head, or stealing a base instead of stealing a car."

In other business, approval of the sale of the San Francisco Giants also was anticipated at today's meeting. NL spokeswoman Katy Feeney

The restructuring committee met for eight hours Monday, and Chicago White Sox owner Jerry Reinsford said it wouldn't make its final report on amendments to the Major League

Agreement, a report that was due Nov. 1.

Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud Selig, the executive council chairman, said a search committee for a new commissioner will be appointed today. Selig said last week that the search committee wouldn't be appointed until after restructuring.

Commissioner Larry Smith, a former Montreal Alouette who became a successful Quebec-based businessman after his playing career ended, is the one credited with getting the expansion through an often-fractionous board. Since taking the helm early last year, the 41-year-old Smith has shown the owners the financial gains available through expansion.

"I think one of the key elements of a good commissioner is to be a good businessman," Waks said. "Larry certainly has the business ability to make wise decisions."

But the CFL is not one big happy family when it comes to southward expansion. Anti-expansionists, led by Winnipeg's Cal Murphy, question the financial gains and are worried about the fate of Canadian-born players, now guaranteed 20 jobs on each of the eight teams.

League general managers met earlier this month in Atlanta and devised a secret plan to deal with the thorny issue of player ratios. They'll let the governors in on the idea today.

It has been reported — although general managers have remained unusually mum on the issue — that some sort of transitional phase will be implemented to guarantee Canadian jobs.

However, even Smith admits it will be virtually impossible — and probably illegal — to force American-based teams to use Canadian-born players.

But the commissioner is adamant that expansion won't affect the uniqueness of the Canadian game. Each of the two American stadiums can accommodate the longer, wider CFL field, and Smith insists that three-down, 12-man football with unlimited backfield motion is sacrosanct.

He said loyalty no longer exists in baseball.

"I think that word went out when Steve Garvey wasn't offered a contract by the Dodgers," Boggs said. "I had always thought I would only play with one team my whole career, but that just doesn't happen now."

He faces another adjustment, switching to New York after spending 11 years in Boston.

"The people in New York treated me a lot better than the people in Boston last year where I got booed for the first part," he said.

Boggs said he had to make a mental adjustment as his relationship with Boston's fans and media declined last year.

"They say New York is a tough media town, but if you can get tougher than Boston, well, that's hard to beat."

He said loyalty no longer exists in baseball.

"I think that word went out when Steve Garvey wasn't offered a contract by the Dodgers," Boggs said. "I had always thought I would only play with one team my whole career, but that just doesn't happen now."

Canadian Football League expected to expand into United States

TORONTO (AP) — With visions of dollar signs dancing in their heads, Canadian Football League governors vote today on a proposal that would drastically alter the composition of the league.

The eight governors, scheduled to meet at a Calgary hotel, are expected to approve expansion into the United States, rubber-stamping applications from San Antonio, Texas, and Sacramento, Calif.

It will take six votes to approve the applications. League officials and pro-expansionists are so certain of victory they've scheduled a news conference for Wednesday morning in Toronto to announce the decision. Then they'll take their show on the road with similar conferences planned for the two U.S. cities later in the week.

The new, multimillionaire owners — Larry Benson in San Antonio and Fred Anderson in Sacramento — will pay up to $3 million for the right to belong to the new, 10-team league. Whether that money is paid up front or spread over several years is unclear.

Most of the money will come from settlements of the two owners received from the NFL concerning the now-defunct World League of American Football. The WLAFL, an NFL-backed spring league with teams in North America and Europe, suspended operations in 1992, paving the way for Anderson and Benson to bring their football operations to the CFL.

What is clear, however, is that a very vocal majority of CFL owners desperately wants the U.S. cities included.

"This is what's necessary for the league," said Toronto governor Sue Waks, the financial wizard behind Argonaut owner Bruce McNall. "It's not only going to save the league, it's going to make it profitable."

In addition to the expansion fees, governors see the American teams as a way of finding new sponsorship money. While not all agree an American television contract — and the revenue it would generate — is just around the corner, all the proponents feel even regional broadcast income could be shared by all 10 teams.

Commissioner Larry Smith, a former Montreal Alouette who became a successful Quebec-based businessman after his playing career ended, is the one credited with getting the expansion through an often-fractionous board. Since taking the helm early last year, the 41-year-old Smith has shown the owners the financial gains available through expansion.

Georgia Tech's upset of Duke overshadowed NFL football playoffs

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

You could see the concern on Malcolm Mackey's face, his brow knit into a relief map of the Ozarks as he stood at the free-throw line with 12 seconds left, ready to sink the free throw that would sink Duke.

As CBS' camera zoomed in on him, the concern became so intense you could almost see the words scrolling across the bottom of the screen, close captioned for the chronically football afflicted:

"Gee, I wonder who's winning the Dolphins game on NBC?"

That's what he had to be thinking, right?

He must have sensed, somehow, at that very moment, as he was sending Duke down to its first loss of the season, that the Chargers were beginning another fearsome offensive series at their own 3-yard line. That there were about 10 minutes to play, and that, in a flash of defensive dash, they had managed to hold the Dolphins scoreless for almost nine minutes while trailing 24-0.

OK, maybe not. On a day when the NFL playoffs should have been a sports fan's high point, it was Georgia Tech's upset of top-ranked and previously unbeaten Duke, 80-79, that put some pizzazz in the old Zenith.

Miami's 31-0 victory over San Diego in the AFC and Dallas' 34-10 win over Philadelphia in the NFC were dogs. On Saturday, Buffalo beat Pittsburgh 24-3, giving NBC a double AFC blowout for the weekend.

Nelson ratings

Maybe that's why the basketball game did a 5.4 in the overnight ratings. CBS' average for its first two weeks of NCAA basketball coverage was 3.3.

San Francisco's 20-13 victory over Washington on CBS was the weekend's best game, but only because the field was a sea of mud and grass, and all the players got filthy. (Did you notice that even though it rained harder in Miami the next day, none of those players got muddy. It must be one of those curious AFC phenomena.)

The best part of the weekend's worst game was when Tony Paige caught a 1-yard touchdown pass from Dan Marino in the second quarter for Miami's first score. It's great when fat guys score touchdowns.

That's what makes football so much better than baseball. When's the last time you saw a really fat guy hit a home run? And Kirby Puckett doesn't count. He's not fat enough. And neither does Sid Fernandez. He's a pitcher.

Another highlight of an otherwise dull game was Keith Jackson's second TD reception late in the first half. It had been building for quite some time as announcer Dick Enberg became more excited. Finally, he couldn't restrain himself any longer, and he hollered, "Oh, my!" It was his first one of the game, to be followed by at least two other confirmed "Oh, my!" sightings.

OUT TAKES: Move over Dink. Make room for Giff.

ABC's Frank Gifford will recreate New York Mayor David Dinkins' role in the "Will Rogers Follies" on Wednesday. He will play the famed pilot Wiley Post, who died along with Rogers in a plane crash.

"Let's Go Flying, Will," is his only line. The mayor appeared in the Broadway play as Post on Saturday.

"The producer, Pierre Cossette, is an old friend of mine. We went to USC together," Gifford said. "The first time he came up with the idea for 'Will Rogers' was just before the Sarajevo Olympics, in 1983. We've been talking about the play ever since."

CBS announced a 16-game regular-season schedule for major league baseball on Monday, which includes games on seven consecutive Saturdays from April 17-May 29. The schedule starts with either the New York Mets at Cincinnati or the Chicago White Sox at Boston.

CBS also has added a wildcard game at the end of the season, giving it three games it can schedule at the last minute to take advantage of the pennant races.

Surgeons implant artificial heart; first in two years

By ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A gravely ill woman received an artificial heart in the nation's first such operation in nearly two years.

Sharoyne Loughran, 46, was in critical but stable condition today after receiving the plastic-and-metal CardioWest pump Monday night during a four-hour operation at University Medical Center at the University of Arizona.

Doctors said the implant was meant to keep her alive until she can receive a human heart in a month or two.

The operation was supervised by Dr. Jack G. Copeland, the hospital's chief cardiothoracic surgeon. In 1985, he became the first surgeon to use an artificial heart as a bridge to a heart transplant. The patient received a human heart after nine days on a Jarvik-7 device and lived for 4 1/2 years.

The air-driven CardioWest heart is based on the Jarvik, which the Food and Drug Administration banned except in emergencies in 1990 because of mechanical problems and banned altogether in 1991 after its maker went out of business.

Like the Jarvik, the CardioWest heart doesn't offer much mobility. It is powered by a unit the size of a large TV set. Pneumatic tubes run from the unit into the patient's chest.

Also Monday, doctors at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center implanted a baboon liver in a 62-year-old man in the world's second such operation. The first patient lived for 70 days last year before dying of an infection.

Mrs. Loughran was admitted to the hospital Wednesday. The Scottsdale woman had suffered from a viral heart infection since 1989 and had progressive heart failure. Copeland said only medication was keeping her heart beating.

Copeland said the operation went well.

"There was no bleeding, there were no complications, we were very happy with the way the device fit inside her body and the way it functioned," he said.

The implantation was the first in the United States by CardioWest Technologies Inc., a joint effort by the hospital and Medfort Research Foundation of Salt Lake City, which is affiliated with the University of Utah.

Last fall, the FDA gave CardioWest approval to perform an experimental series of implants.

The Penn State Medical Center in Hershey, Pa., also has FDA approval to implant its own so-called Hershey heart in humans, but doctors there haven't implanted the air-driven device for nearly two years while they concentrate on perfecting an electronic version that was placed in a calf last year.

Hershey last implanted its artificial heart in a human in April 1991. The recipient, 42-year-old Ronnie Crawford of Mechanicsburg, Pa., survived on the device for 18 days. He died while awaiting a human heart transplant.

The world's first artificial heart, a Jarvik, was implanted in Barney Clark in 1982. He lived for 112 days with the device, which was intended to be a permanent replacement.

Dr. Jack Copeland, fourth from left, prepares to implant an artificial heart, held by unidentified assistant at right, into Sharoyne Loughran.

Court ruling puts magazine in jeopardy

DENVER (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court has dropped the big one on Soldier of Fortune magazine.

The high court on Monday let stand a $4.3 million verdict in favor of two sons of a Georgia man who was murdered by a contract killer hired through a personal ad in the magazine.

Publisher Robert K. Brown said he doesn't have that kind of money and will have to give the magazine to the plaintiffs if he can't work out another arrangement.

Founded in 1974 as a journal for adventurers and military enthusiasts, Soldier of Fortune has had to fight lawsuits alleging that its personals section served as a billboard for contract killers. The magazine stopped publishing personals in 1986.

In 1988, it was ordered to pay $9.4 million to the family of a Texas woman whose husband hired her killer through a personal ad. A federal appeals court overturned the award, saying the case had placed an overly heavy burden on the magazine to interpret offers made in ads.

In the latest case, a federal jury ruled that Soldier of Fortune, published in Boulder, Colo., negligently contributed to Richard Braun's 1985 murder at his suburban Atlanta home.

The magazine's June 1985 issue included an ad in which Michael Savage offered his services. The ad, in part, read: "GUN FOR HIRE: 37 year old mercenary desires jobs. Discrete and very private. Body guard, courier and other special skills. All jobs considered."

Bruce Gastwirth, Braun's partner, responded to Savage's ad. On Aug. 26, 1985, Savage and two other men went to Braun's home. As Braun and his 16-year-old son, Michael, were leaving, Sean Doutré fatally shot Braun and wounded his son.

Savage, Gastwirth and the others involved in the plot were convicted and imprisoned.

Michael Braun and his brother, Ian, filed a wrongful-death lawsuit in 1988.

In upholding the $4.3 million award last August by a 2-1 vote, the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said the Constitution's free-speech protections do not extend to advertisements presenting "a substantial danger of harm to the public."

Brown, an Army Special Forces veteran, founded Soldier of Fortune after he spent nearly a year covering little-known wars around the world and found few publishers willing to print his stories. Brown solicited $10,000 in advance subscriptions and produced the first issue in his garage.

Since then, it has attained cult status among veterans and military enthusiasts who enjoy the magazine's hairy-chested style of journalism, Brown said.

"Our mail indicates our readers feel they get background and detail that they can't get in the news weeklies," Brown said in a recent interview.

If Brown does hand over his magazine to the Brauns, he said he may start a similar magazine from scratch.

"I used to be an amateur boxer and I got knocked down quite a few times, but I always got up. I've been shelled and shot at in Afghanistan, Burma and Vietnam, but I survived. Starting over is nothing new to me," Brown said.

U.S. math scores up, but still lacking

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many U.S. students are still not up to par in mathematics but are showing improvement, according to test scores released today by the Education Department.

Students performed better on the 1992 National Assessment of Educational Progress than in 1990. The department said improvement was shown by males and females alike in the fourth, eighth and 12th grades, the classes that took the test.

The results are preliminary in that they represent only a portion of the data that will be made public later this year, the department noted.

Education Secretary Lamar Alexander said students showed an average improvement of a half-grade level, which he said demonstrated that new standards adopted by the nation's math teachers were having a positive effect.

But nearly 40 percent of the students tested still failed to reach basic proficiency levels, the department said.

While average scores for whites rose in all three grades, black and Hispanic students showed improvement only in grade 12. While averages for both sexes rose, boys still led girls in grades four and 12, while achievement levels were about the same in eighth grade, the department said.

Poor, urban eighth graders showed declining skills and performed at lower levels than rural students, who didn't do as well as suburban students. Students in the Southeast lagged behind those in the Northeast, the West and the central states.

The test was designed by the National Assessment Governing Board, an independent commission set up to determine the skill levels American students should attain. Richard Riley, President-elect Clinton's choice as education secretary, was on the panel when the standards were set.

The test was administered to 26,000 public and private school students in 44 states, territories and the District of Columbia. State-by-state results will be released this spring.

Students were required to answer questions both where multiple choices were offered and where they crafted responses.

The results do not compare the skills of American students to those of students in other industrialized nations. Students in Japan, Korea and some European nations generally fare better than U.S. students in math. The results also do not explain why black and Hispanic students showed improvement in only one grade level.

Among other findings: Private school students performed better than public school students at all three grade levels.

Only 2 percent of fourth and 12th graders and 4 percent of eighth graders reached "advanced" levels, at which students demonstrate superior skills.

Animal activists protest baboon transplant

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Animal-rights activists carrying signs with such slogans as "Frankenstein lives in Pittsburgh" criticized the transplant of a baboon liver into a dying man.

"I don't think an animal should be used as spare parts," said Pat Knezevich, who was among 15 animal-rights demonstrators outside the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center on Monday.

The unidentified, 62-year-old patient remained in critical condition today. Doctors said Monday he was groggy and responded to commands to open his eyes. The liver was working well, said Lisa Rossi, a hospital spokeswoman.

The operation is the world's second transplant of a baboon liver and 31st involving animal organs since 1963. Pitt surgeons last year implanted a baboon liver in a 35-year-old man, who lived 70 days before dying of an infection.

The latest patient probably would have died of hepatitis B within 30 days without the operation, which was completed Monday, said Dr. John Fung, the chief surgeon.

Hepatitis B patients are normally rejected for liver transplants because the disease quickly attacks the new organ. Baboons, however, are highly resistant to the virus.

Doctors have also said that such transplants could ease a critical shortage of human donor organs.

Officials call for cooperation in cleanup of bases

AUSTIN (AP) — The state has called for better cooperation from federal officials in helping clean up pollution at military bases that are being closed.

Too often the federal government has taken "the decide, announce, defend approach," state Assistant Attorney General Sam Goodhope said Monday.

"The federal entity would decide what they would do, they would announce it to the public, then they would defend their decisions," he said. But Goodhope said the federal government is getting better at communicating with the public and seeking assistance from local citizens.

Goodhope delivered the comments on behalf of Attorney General Dan Morales at the opening of a three-day conference on repairing environmental damage at the bases.

The conference is sponsored by the state, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and Defense Department.

Allan Davis of the EPA's regional headquarters in Dallas also emphasized cooperation in cleaning up seven military bases in Texas, Louisiana and New Mexico that have either recently closed or are about to be closed.

The seven bases all have pollution problems, most of them suffering groundwater pollution due to fuel and chemical leaks, he said.

The bases are Chase Field Naval Air Station in Beville; Carswell Air Force Base in Fort Worth; Bergstrom Air Force Base in Austin; Eaker Air Force Base in Blytheville, Ark.; Fort Wingate in Gallup, N.M.; England Air Force Base in Alexandria, La.; and the New Orleans Military Ocean Terminal.

Davis said there are built-in "conflicting pressures" between the various governmental levels that will deal with the cleanup.

"The Department of Defense would like to clean up the bases as soon as possible," he said. The EPA will be responsible for helping determine when the bases can be turned over to local authorities. "All remediation must be completed or remediation must be ongoing and demonstrated effective," he said.
