Hernandez vs. Pampa opens in federal court

By BETH MILLER

AMARILLO — A jury was selected and opening arguments were heard today in the multi-million dollar lawsuit filed by a Pampa woman alleging violation of civil rights by the city of Pampa.

Four men and four women were chosen this morning to hear the federal lawsuit in U.S. District Court in Amarillo. Opening arguments were completed before the lunch break.

Witnesses for the plaintiff, Oralía Hernandez, were scheduled to testify this afternoon.

Hernandez filed the lawsuit following strip and body cavity searches at a Pampa residence in May 1991. The searches were conducted by employees of the Pampa Police Department who were searching a residence under warrant after they reportedly received a tip of narcotics laws violations, according to court records.

Three people were arrested on misdemeanor charges following the search. Hernandez was not one of those arrested.

In court documents, she alleges her body cavities were probed by a "used" rubber glove, which she alleges was used on several other women.

The search was conducted at a residence at 905 Twiford. A female dispatcher conducted the body cavity searches on the women, according to statements in the court file.

The city police department conducted an internal affairs investigation following the incident and found "insufficient evidence" in determining whether Hernandez' civil rights had been violated. The city, in a press conference, stated the search was lawful.

The lawsuit alleges Hernandez has suffered "physical pain and suffering; mental injury, pain and anguish; physical impairment; ... medical and psychological expenses; ... deprivation of constitutional rights; emotional distress, and necessary and reasonable attorneys fees."

She characterizes her injuries as "feeling fear, humiliation and depression," according to court documents.

The lawsuit also alleges that city officials attempted to "cover up" some of the events during the raid and that official police reports were changed.

A spokeswoman in U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson's office said the trial is expected to last five days.

Iraq bombed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A United States-led coalition bombed targets in Iraq today in retaliation for weeks of provocations by Saddam Hussein that officials said violated the agreement halting the 1991 Persian Gulf War.

The attack, in the waning days of the Bush administration, was confirmed by a variety of officials in the United States and overseas.

One Pentagon official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said dozens of combat and strike aircraft had been launched in the effort, and that they were to be accompanied by fighter escorts and other aircraft to help ensure the safety of the coalition jet force.

There was no immediate word on the sites selected for the action, which was launched under cover of darkness, nor on the precise number of aircraft involved, or whether any planes were lost in the raids.

Officials in Europe said British and French planes joined larger numbers of American aircraft in the attack.

One American official refused to discuss the targets of the action, but said, "I wouldn't minimize its scope."

An allied military officer stationed in Saudi Arabia said in a brief telephone conversation today: "There is an allied operation now under way. I cannot discuss it at this time."

The strike was launched two years after the beginning of the Persian Gulf War in which the United States-led coalition routed Iraq, and a scant seven days before President Bush was to turn over power to President-elect Clinton.

The incoming president was in Little Rock, Ark., and he has said repeatedly in recent days that the administration was keeping him fully informed of its decisions relating to Iraq.

Warren Christopher, Clinton's selection for secretary of state, told a confirmation hearing before word of the bombing surfaced that the new administration "stands shoulder to shoulder" with the Bush administration.

Despite the allied victory two years ago, the Iraqi leader stayed in power. He has consistently been an irritant to the Bush administration, first by interfering with international inspectors trying to ferret out any weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, and more recently by dispatching his planes over a no-fly zone that was part of the cease-fire for the Persian Gulf War.

Two weeks ago, the United States shot down an Iraqi plane over the no-fly zone. Shortly afterwards, the United States warned Saddam to dismantle missile batteries that posed a threat to allied aircraft.

In the past two days, Iraqis had staged raids into allied-held territory to seize weapons and materiel left over from the war.

Throughout it all, Bush and his aides issued ever-escalating warnings, until spokesman Marlin Fitzwater announced earlier this week there would be no more admonitions — only action.

Court rules for protesters

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today that federal courts — and federal law enforcement agents — lack the authority to stop anti-abortion protesters who try to block women's access to abortion clinics.

By a splintered vote, the court limited the federal help available to abortion clinic owners who seek to stop blockades by Operation Rescue members and other anti-abortion protesters.

Abortion rights advocates said such a lack of federal help would make it more difficult to guarantee women's access to clinics targeted by protesters.

Today's decision was based on the court's interpretation of a post-Civil War federal law, the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871, that bans conspiracies aimed at violating someone's constitutional rights.

The law protects "any person or class of persons" — and past Supreme Court rulings had said that wording meant those who sue must be victims of "class-based animus."

A federal judge in Alexandria, Va., and the Richmond-based 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that women seeking abortions are a protected "class of persons" who can invoke the 1871 law.

The lower courts said abortion clinic blockades interfered with the interstate travel rights of women who do not live in Virginia but sought abortions there. The lower courts barred Operation Rescue members from blockading nine abortion clinics in the Northern Virginia suburbs of the District of Columbia.

Today, the high court said the lower courts were wrong.

"Whatever one thinks of abortion, it cannot be denied that there are common and respectable reasons for opposing it, other than hatred of or condescension toward ... women," Justice Antonin Scalia wrote for a five-member court majority.

Not implicated in today's decision is the core constitutional right of abortion, reaffirmed by the court in a landmark decision last June.

The decision means abortion clinic operators will have to turn to state judges for help. And many local police departments, called on to enforce state court injunctions, contend they lack the resources to deal with massive demonstrations.

The impact of today's decision may be blunted, however, by President-elect Clinton.

Hembree seeks Hackler ouster; board says nay

During the citizen's request portion of the Pampa City Commission meeting, Terry Hembree of Pampa presented a request to the Commission to terminate City Manager Glen Hackler for "conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline."

Commissioner Gary Sutherland said, "It won't happen. When we evaluated Glen in November we gave him our full support and a positive review."

Following the meeting Mayor Richard Peet issued the following statement to The Pampa News:

"I don't want to deny any citizen the right to speak out during the meeting," he said. "I have the greatest confidence in our city manager. He knows how to hold the line on finances and he has hired the best personnel for the city, among other things."

Commissioners individually spoke of their support for Hackler. They mentioned his evaluation in November and how at that time they gave him a positive recommendation.

"From our last evaluation, I know we could not find a better man to do the job in serving our city," said Commissioner Jerry Wilson.

Following the agenda items, Commissioner Robert Dixon expressed his support for Hackler.

Peet said commissioners could extend their comments to him and during the next meeting he would address Hembree's request if necessary.

Committee makes school schedule recommendation at Lefors

LEFORS — The Site-Based Management Decision Committee at Lefors schools has recommended that extracurricular activities be eliminated from the school calendar during testing times.

Superintendent Joe Roper reported to the Lefors school board on Tuesday that the idea was a good idea and he will seek to follow that request. However, he said there are times, such as during district play, that the extracurricular activities may conflict with testing times and he would have no control over scheduling.

"This has been a real good committee and they've been working well together," Roper said.

The committee is composed of four parents and eight teachers, Roper said. The group has also been discussing such topics as discipline problems and teacher techniques, he said.

In unrelated business, the school board opened bids on a 10-acre tract of land, owned by the district. Five bids were received for the land, which has a water well, a small building and is fenced. The bids ranged from a low of $1,000 to a high of $5,241.25 submitted by J.W. Franks.

The board voted 4-0 to reject all bids with one board member, Nora Franks, abstaining because her husband had bid on the property.

School Board President Keith Roberson said, "I feel personally we ought to go ahead and hold it for the future events that could take place in the school."

In unrelated business, bookkeeper Pat Seely said a representative of the Region XVI Service Center said there could be a problem with the Lefors ISD employees pay period.

Seely said the school district is paying "nearly a month" in advance, a policy which began under former superintendent Ed Gilliland.

Roper said he called an attorney who said it could be called "illegal use of public funds" to pay that far in advance. However, he said that if the employees are under contract, it could be permissible.

Roper said that if changes are made in the employees' pay periods, it should be done over a gradual period of time.

In other business, the board:

• Unanimously approved the following additions to the substitute teacher list: Dorothy Farrington, Kathy Tinney, Karen Noble, Becky Hall and Dennis Boyd.

• Unanimously approved minutes of prior meetings and the payment of salaries and bills.

• Went into an executive session to discuss "honor roll, student Texas Assessment of Academic Skills (TAAS) test and failure report."

Following the executive session, Roper said there are not as many on the failure report as have been in the past.

Ten juniors and one senior took the TAAS, with 10 passing the test. These items included day boots, bunker boots, helmets, pants, coats and suspenders. The intent of the city is to sell the articles to the Hoover Volunteer Fire Department for $1. They currently have no such protective gear.

• List of disbursements for November 1992 totalling $353,069.24. Expenditures for November 1991 was $182,094.66. Hackler stated that the approximate $100,000 difference was only a matter of the timing of payments and the December 1992 report shows approximately $100,000 less in expenditures during the reporting period.

• Previous minutes.

Commissioners rejected the bid for delinquent tax property at 817-821 S. Cuyler.

The city managers report included information on extended bids for the street improvement project and information on gaining assistance for long-range planning of the city.

In a work session prior to the regular meeting, where no action could be taken, members discussed guidelines for Recreation Park including everything from the speed limit to not throwing trash near the wildlife.

The information is scheduled to be presented in an upcoming commission meeting.

Fire Chief Claude Phillips asked commissioners and the Mayor to consider revisions to the fireworks ordinance. He wanted the ordinance to prohibit the transportation, storage, sale, possession or discharge of fireworks in the city limits. Commissioner agreed that without the ability to enforce such a request they could only include prohibiting the discharge of fireworks in the city in the ordinance. This ordinance will be included as an agenda item in a future meeting.

Members also discussed increasing the distance for fireworks stands to located 5,000 feet from the city limits.

Commissioners and the mayor discussed a revision to the city's subdivision ordinance to permit strip paving within the corporate limits for the Comprehensive Street Improvement Program.

Hackler made the commission aware of problems city employees are currently undergoing with the city telephone system.

First Marine killed in Somalia; warring factions deadlocked

By TERRY LEONARD
Associated Press Writer

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Emotional U.S. Marines tightened security and showed more aggression at Mogadishu checkpoints today after Somali gunmen shot and killed one of their comrades in the ambush of a night patrol.

The first U.S. Marine killed in Operation Restore Hope was shot Tuesday near the airport following the most ambitious effort to date by U.S. forces to disarm Somalis in the capital.

Since Sunday, Marines had rounded up weapons and ammunition, gathering 16 truckloads in sweeps of gun markets and storehouses. The take included 265 rifles and 55 machine guns.

U.S. troops at the entrance to the port and at the gate to Mogadishu University also came under fire Tuesday night from gunmen in speeding cars. At least a dozen shots were fired at the troops in both locations, but there were no casualties, Air Force Capt. Joe Davis said today.

The slain Marine's 11-man patrol was ambushed after moving out of the airport into an area of abandoned warehouses, Davis told reporters.

"There were definitely more than one gunman," he said.

Davis said convoys had come under attack before, but that it was the first time a foot patrol had been ambushed.

After a five-minute firefight, the Marines withdrew and regrouped, discovering a comrade missing. Reinforced by a rapid reaction force in three armored vehicles, the Marines returned to recover the fallen Marine.

"Another firefight ensued. The gunmen were still there," said Davis. He said there was no evidence any Somali gunmen had been hit.

The slain Marine, who apparently died of a head wound, was a member of the 3rd Battalion, 11th Marine Regiment, based at Twentynine Palms, Calif. He was not immediately identified, although officials said he was from Elizabeth, N.J. The Marine was the first U.S. serviceman killed since the Americans landed Dec. 9 as part of a U.N.-endorsed effort to end the rampant looting and lawlessness that have prolonged a devastating famine.

A civilian Army employee was killed Dec. 23 near the city of Bardera when the vehicle he was riding in hit an anti-tank mine.

Davis said it was not yet known if Tuesday's ambush would bring any changes in military operations in Mogadishu, but he said the Americans would continue aggressive patrols.

At checkpoints today, Marines were edgier, more businesslike. And at the airport, friends of the fallen Marine directed their anger at Somalis.

"A lot of people aren't going to like Somalis even though some are innocent," said Lance Cpl. Jesse De Guzman, 21, of San Jose, Calif. "You start looking at them differently. It just gets you mad inside but you have to hold it in."

In a statement released in Nairobi today, the Somali National Congress expressed sorrow at the death, implicating "irregular elements ... backed by irresponsible figures."

The Somali National Congress is a coalition of clans that support Gen. Mohamed Farah Aidid, one of the country's most powerful warlords. Last week, Marines killed several clan gunmen loyal to Aidid in a raid on a north Mogadishu garrison to confiscate heavy weapons.

A spokesman for Marine commander Maj. Gen. Charles Wilhelm quoted the general as saying he hoped he would have a safer Mogadishu by Feb. 1, with more arms off the streets so relief workers could move around without armed guards.

"But it was not a hard fast rule that we were going to have a secure Mogadishu, in other words that there would be no arms here," said the spokesman, Lt. Col. Ron Stokes.

After dictator Mohammed Siad Barre was overthrown two years ago, governmental authority and public services vanished across Somalia.

Clans, bandit gangs and regional war lords fought with tanks and heavy guns. About 350,000 people died from famine, disease and violence.

A military spokesman, Army Lt. Col. Steve Ritter, said the present U.S.-led international force in Somalia has passed the 33,000 mark from more than 20 nations, including 22,000 American troops.

Lt. Gen. Robert Johnston, commander of Operation Restore Hope, has said some American troops could begin going home by the end of this month.

Meanwhile, Somalia's warring factions remained deadlocked on the 10th day of cease-fire talks in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

U.N. spokesman Farouk Mawlawi said today the factions could not agree on who would participate in a national reconciliation conference scheduled for March.

Bentsen, Cisneros glide through confirmation

By MICHELLE MITTELSTADT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texans Lloyd Bentsen and Henry Cisneros are headed into President-elect Clinton's Cabinet buoyed by accolades and warm wishes from Democrats and Republicans alike.

All of Clinton's nominees have received cordial receptions during their Senate confirmation hearings. But Bentsen's appearance Tuesday before the Senate Finance Committee, which he has chaired for the last six years, outdid any welcome to date.

Within 20 minutes of the hearing's start — and before Bentsen had answered a single question — the committee voted unanimously to recommend his confirmation as treasury secretary.

They topped that with a standing ovation for the 71-year-old veteran lawmaker, who has served 22 years in the Senate.

A researcher in the Senate historian's office couldn't recall any previous Cabinet nominee being endorsed quite so quickly in modern times.

Nor could Bentsen. "I enjoyed it," he said of his rapid-fire endorsement. So did wife B.A., who stood and applauded vigorously as her husband was honored.

"At least the people of Texas and the Senate can take some solace from the fact that their loss is the nation's gain," said Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont. "Sen. Bentsen will doubtlessly become one of the finest treasury secretaries the nation has ever had."

Said fellow Texas Sen. Phil Gramm, a Republican: "Lloyd Bentsen has had a storied record of public service."

Partisan politics also were set aside for Cisneros' hearing before the Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee.

"The 45-year-old former San Antonio mayor was introduced by his soon-to-be predecessor and staunch Republican — Housing Secretary Jack Kemp.

"There is one man who was born to be HUD secretary, and that's Henry Cisneros," Kemp said.

The mood turned more serious as lawmakers questioned Bentsen about the incoming administration's economic priorities and how to rein in the federal deficit.

Bentsen told the senators that tax increases and cuts in entitlement programs — which include the politically sensitive Social Security and Medicare programs — must be considered in tackling the deficit.

"I think you have to address entitlements, along with taxes, along with fiscal restraint," he said.

Like budget director-designate Leon Panetta a day earlier, Bentsen said the rising deficit has dimmed chances for a middle-class tax cut.

Bentsen and fellow Democrats pushed for a similar tax reduction last year. But since the Nov. 3 election, the incoming Clinton administration has been suggesting a tax cut might have to wait until the budget deficit is slashed and the economy improves.

Bentsen, Cisneros and the other nominees will be voted on by the Democratic-controlled Senate shortly after Clinton's inauguration next week.

Cisneros told the banking committee that he would focus on such social problems as racial division and crime in addition to the economic problems of the nation's cities.

"More and more, the people of our country are divided by race, intimidated by crime and isolated from the economic mainstream," Cisneros said. "I am here today because I am convinced the country is in trouble and that we're running against time."

The committee decided to ask Clinton to place Cisneros in charge of all efforts between HUD and other federal departments, such as Treasury, Education and Labor, that affect urban areas.

"Expectations have been raised," said Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., the committee's chairman. "The burden of responding will fall on your shoulders."

"I have no illusions of how tough this job is. I don't know how successful I'll be able to be," Cisneros replied. "I am truly, deeply, personally concerned about the future of our country. Following convention and being quiet on some things ... is just not in the cards."

The senators didn't ask any questions about a subject Cisneros himself had said might come up: his acknowledgement in 1988 that he had an extramarital affair with a political fund-raiser. Cisneros and his wife, Mary Alice, have since reconciled. She was present at the hearing.

FCC makes long-distance request

WASHINGTON (AP) — The next time you make a long-distance call from a pay phone, try charging it through the long-distance company you use for home or business calls.

If you can't get through, the Federal Communications Commission wants to know about it.

New rules requiring pay phones to provide access to any long-distance company went into effect this week.

"Consumers are going to be helping us know whether we are going to be taking action in particular cases," FCC enforcement attorney Kurt Schroeder said Tuesday.

The rules also affect institutions that charge for calls, such as hotels, motels and hospitals. But some have up to five years to comply.

The issue arose because consumers complained that long-distance calls from pay phones were showing up on their bills at excessively high rates from companies they'd never heard of.

That's because individual pay phone owners had exclusive contracts with long-distance providers, which in some cases were small, regional firms.

These companies, known as "alternate operator services," often charged two times to five times as much as AT&T, MCI and Sprint, said Ken McEldowney of Consumer Action, a San Francisco group that petitioned for the new FCC rules.

Every time a caller made an operator-assisted call from a pay phone, charges automatically went to the operator services company.

Consumers who thought they were getting access to their own long-distance company by using a local phone company card that called their home phones were surprised by the charges from an alternate company.

Callers who tried to use credit cards from particular long-distance companies sometimes were unable to get through at all.

Consumers at pay phones were trapped, said McEldowney. "What are you going to do — get back in the car and find another phone?"

"Our customers were not happy with the fact that they could not get through to our access number," said Jim McGann of AT&T.

There are about 400 small long-distance companies and 244,000 independent pay phones in the United States.

Pay phone industry spokesman Scott Silverman said Tuesday that exclusive contracts between pay phone owners and single long-distance firms guarded against toll fraud.

He said the access codes that consumers use to get to the long-distance company of their choice can be misused to reroute long-distance charges back to the pay phone, making the phone owner liable.

Albert Kramer, attorney for the American Public Communications Council, which represents pay phone owners, said further action may still be needed to address problems not solved by the new rules.

Meanwhile, McEldowney and Schroeder say consumers should be on the lookout for compliance.

Their advice: When placing a long-distance call from a pay phone, look to see which long-distance company serves it.

If it's not your long-distance company, use your company's access code to get into its system, usually a five-digit number that starts with 10. It also could be an 800 or 950 number.

If the long-distance company's name is not posted, dial 00 to get its identity from the operator.

If it is your company, no access code is needed.

After dialing, listen for a recorded announcement to ensure that your company is carrying the call. If it's a company you don't want, hang up before the call is completed and you won't be charged.

Consumers should report access problems to the FCC by writing to: Informal Complaints Branch, Common Carrier Bureau, Room 6202, Federal Communications Commission, Washington, D.C. 20554.

Dedication of King Street to mark end of long battle

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

AMERICUS, Ga. (AP) — When black leaders here proposed naming a street after Martin Luther King Jr., the assistant fire chief suggested a section of the road be named for King's assassin.

After a yearlong battle that also included death threats, demonstrations and a boycott of businesses who didn't openly support the effort, a street has finally been renamed Martin Luther King Boulevard.

For some blacks, the struggle dramatized how far they still have to travel on the road to equality — and what they can accomplish when they work together. "It has empowered people who have felt powerless," said the Rev. Fer-Rell Malone, pastor of the 133-year-old Bethesda Baptist Church. "It's given hope."

The naming ceremony is scheduled for Monday, the federal holiday honoring the slain civil rights leader.

Blacks are a slight majority in this southwestern Georgia town of 16,000, but some believed they had only token representation.

Americus, about 10 miles east of Plains, former President Carter's hometown, has a history of tense race relations. A black man was lynched in 1913 after being accused of killing a white sheriff, and the Ku Klux Klan controlled the county from the 1920s to the 1950s, said Alan Anderson, a local historian.

The street dispute began a year ago when the Martin Luther King Jr. Ministerial Association asked the City Council to name a road after King, who spent a night in jail here in 1961 after being arrested at a civil rights demonstration in Albany. King was moved because authorities felt he'd be safer in Americus.

Malone said black leaders pushing for the renaming encountered reluctance from elected officials and outright hostility from others. He said he and others received death threats.

Assistant Fire Chief Donnell Norton, 61, was demoted after telling a TV reporter that half the street should be named for King's assassin, James Earl Ray. A white businessman has started a legal defense fund for Norton.

"I thought racism was behind us," said Hatti Pitts, a coordinator for the local chapter of Habitat for Humanity, a charity that builds houses for the poor. "The churches are full of people on Sunday morning. You can think, 'Where is their Christianity?'"

It wasn't until Dec. 10 that council members voted 4-3 to rename the section of U.S. 19 that runs through the city.

Mayor Tom Gailey said the council, which includes two blacks, never objected to naming a street after King but couldn't agree on which street.

The council rejected Forsyth and Lamar streets, those first suggested by the ministers, because they were named for prominent families in the town's history. The council offered to rename Lee and Mayo streets in a predominantly black part of town, but the ministers said the street had to run through white and black sections.

Malone and other black leaders believe the council acted only because of pressure from businesses hurt by the boycott. Black leaders surveyed about 600 businesses and published a list of supporters in December.

With the battle over, the mayor has announced plans to appoint a 10-member community relations committee to help improve race relations.

Black leaders said they would focus on more minority representation, better housing and improved job opportunities.

"Blacks in the community have felt powerless in many ways," Malone said. "It was the first time in a long time that we have stood together and reached a goal of equality. ... I think it will lead to many other positive things for the community."

Pete Wilson's stand for cohort puzzling

California's Gov. Pete Wilson's affinity for John Seymour is a marvel: First, after Seymour got creamed in a bid for the GOP nomination for lieutenant governor, Wilson named him to a U.S. Senate seat. Now that Seymour has vindicated skeptics by being bounced from the Senate by the voters, the governor names him to head a state housing agency.

We suspect that conservatives in the California Republican Party, who have griped that nobody from their wing has received a major policy-making position in the Wilson administration, must be shaking their heads in wonder over Wilson's tenacity in clinging to John Seymour. Is it Seymour's record of aggressive "pragmatism" — of switching his positions on key issues with a finger-in-the-wind as a guide — that so appeals to the governor? Or perhaps Seymour's tendency, when he was in the state Senate, to side with those "moderate" Republicans who could be counted on to raise the white flag when the tax-and-spend folks mounted a charge?

Whatever it is that makes him appealing to Pete Wilson, John Seymour could earn more respect from the public by returning to the private sector, where he displayed unusual business savvy and made himself a bundle in the real-estate business.

In contrast, by heading up the California Housing Financing Agency (at a salary of $98,076) he'll be making himself part of the bureaucratic problem. The agency makes below-market-rate loans for purchase and construction of low-cost housing. That might sound beneficial, but the real effect, by sustaining the inflationary market, is to aggravate the affordable-housing crisis.

After all, even in targeted income groups, it's only the lucky few who will get help. The result is that millions of taxpayers who earn below the median income will be footing housing bills for people lucky enough to get in on a government program — many of whom might actually be better off than some of the folks picking up the tab.

Beyond that, the program doesn't get at the causes of too-high costs. Quite the contrary: It enlists taxpayers to ante up for those costs, by paying the inflated market rates for real estate. And it does so by utilizing state bonded indebtedness — a back-door method of deficit financing.

A better strategy for making housing more affordable would start with the question: Why is it so unaffordable now?

As we've noted before, government fans the inflationary fires through growth-control ordinances, arbitrary restrictions on development, zoning restrictions, government-induced delays, building codes that make upper-middle-class amenities mandatory, developer and infrastructure fees. These are the wrong-headed dictates that should go. But the agency John Seymour will head actually subsidizes this web of policies by paying for housing at the prices those restrictions dictate.

Seymour's agency, rather than working to slay the inflationary beast, carries tax offerings to its altar.

Wilsonianism without the Marines

NEW YORK — The president, speaking at West Point, gave an eloquent address in which he struggled with the antipodes.

The first might just as well be called isolationism, though there are shades of this political philosophy. George Bush came right out and said that although George Washington, when he gave his farewell address, was correct in warning against any "entangling alliances," this was not the proper counsel for the end of the 20th century.

This would seem to be obvious, but for some reason is not: NATO was an entangling alliance: An attack on any of our NATO partners would be viewed as an attack on the United States. It is hard to dispute the importance of NATO during the Cold War.

But, said Bush, the United States is not going to be the policeman for the world, sending its troops here and there to oversee good government. On the other hand, neither would the United States desist from proclaiming standards by which men ought to govern themselves.

This needs to be done, obviously, with tact and understanding. We are not about to tell the Saudis how backward are Muslim habits in the treatment of women, nor is it America's business policy to deplore tribal loyalties in Africa.

But Bush was saying something very important, in reaction to the kind of moral isolationism that prospered during the '60s. In those days, critics of American policy in Vietnam got so carried away that they publicly doubted whether life in America was superior to life in Vietnam — or, for that matter (some went so far), life under Mao Tse-tung. "Ho Ho Ho Chi Minh/The NLF is gonna win" was more merely than a military judgment. It was Jane Fondaism: a sense of shame about being an American.

William F. Buckley Jr.

Bush qualifies as an American exceptionalist when he says that the United States defends certain ideals that are universally venerable.

His departure is from the kind of exuberant cultural evangelism associated with Woodrow Wilson. "Wilsonianism Without the Marines," his address might have been titled. It is one thing to deplore events in Bosnia, another to reach into Bosnia and do something about it.

It is good that he listed countries by name, rather than as abstractions. In Panama, he told the cadets, he felt it his obligation as commander in chief to move the troops. This was so also in the Desert Storm operation, and is now so in Somalia. What you need to have is a "clear and achievable mission." The "complexity" of the situation in Yugoslavia makes military involvement there imprudent.

But, he stressed, that judgment is reviewed every day, and what appears imprudent today may not be so tomorrow. Again, this would seem to be obvious. After all, we did not move against Noriega on Day One, or into Somalia on Day One. To begin with, it is hard to know when exactly Day One is. And the crystallization of Day One often comes well after the fact. What was Day One for Hitler?

His election? His march into the Rhineland? Kristallnacht? Studentenland?

The major problem of all statesmen is that when they perceive Day One, if indeed they do, it is almost always before the public perceives the importance of that day. If we had that kind of foresight, we could have kept Lenin, Stalin, Hitler and Castro in jail, which had we had the foresight to do so would have meant that their names would not now be recognizable.

So, said Bush, a decision today not to move is not to be understood as a decision binding us tomorrow not to move. He then entered a very welcome qualification. Almost all of his references to foreign ventures, ever since Desert Storm, have suggested that the acquiescence of the United Nations is politically essential. Given the record of the United Nations over most of its lifetime, a record of slavish concern for the Third World and slavish unconcern over the communist world, it will take a great deal of practice to think of it as a reliable moral arbiter.

The day may come when President Clinton has to act in a decisive international event even when the United Nations opposes action. After all, China has a veto power in the Security Council. Bush has never acknowledged any such hypothetical possibility, but he did say, "The United States can and should lead, but we will want to act in concert, where possible, involving the United Nations or multinational groupings."

China might very well have vetoed intercession in Somalia — genocide doesn't bother the rulers of the country that continues to shelter and provision Pol Pot. At least we have now the qualifier, "where possible."

George Bush is going out in high style.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, Jan. 13, the 13th day of 1993. There are 352 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

One hundred years ago, on Jan. 13, 1893, Britain's Independent Labor Party (a precursor to the current Labor Party) held its first meeting.

On this date:

In 1733, James Oglethorpe and some 130 English colonists arrived at Charleston, S.C., to settle in present-day Georgia.

In 1864, composer Stephen Foster died in a New York hospital.

In 1898, Emile Zola's famous defense of Capt. Alfred Dreyfus, "J'accuse," was published in Paris.

In 1906, the first advertisement for a radio — a Telimco selling $7.50 — appeared in "Scientific American."

In 1941, novelist James Joyce died in Zurich, Switzerland.

In 1962, comedian Ernie Kovacs died in a car crash in west Los Angeles.

"Thank you George, It was beginning to smell."

Whose treasure?

This subject is not going to interest very many people.

It should.

The bottom line is that our overlapping government bureaucracies are driving yet another business out of business — or forcing it to operate outside the law or outside our country.

Our government does not drill for oil nor explore for gold. It would be astronomically extravagant and characteristically inefficient.

Instead, our nation wisely allows the risk-takers to spend their own time, effort, energy and money digging holes in the ground. Most go broke, yet enough get rich to keep others trying.

There is untold treasure awaiting discovery under our oceans.

Yet, half-a-hundred overlapping agencies of our federal and state governments are refusing to allow its harvest.

Beginning in the 1600s, Spanish ships loaded with New World gold from what is now Mexico and Peru would sail from Havana past the Florida Keys on their way home.

Paul Harvey

Hurricanes and pirates claimed many of these vessels.

In recent years, divers have begun to explore the ocean bottom off the Keys looking for wrecked ships and the treasure that went down with them.

One of the gallant risk-takers, Mel Fisher, impoverished himself, then risked the money of friends for 16 years before he located the remains of the Spanish galleon Atocha.

From the gold and silver and artifacts he and his crew brought to the surface, Fisher and his investors donated a significant portion of the recovery to museums around the world, thus enriching us all.

Now, however, in the name of "protecting the environment," a federal judge has curtailed more treasure hunting.

Ole Varmer, U.S. government lawyer, says anything out there on the ocean bottom must be treated as a historic resource, owned by the public.

You know what that means. The Post Office is "owned by the public."

So treasure hunting is on hold.

Modern salvage companies have developed a modern means of "uncovering" things on the ocean bottom by redirecting the thrust from boat engines downward through metal tubes. In effect, this "blows away" the sand from a target area and thus exposes "anything heavy."

Government ecologists, however, claim this practice may damage fragile ecosystems, displace ocean-bottom grasses and disturb shipwreck sites before "government scientists" can study them.

Salvors are convinced that several government agencies are in fact in competition among themselves for the "rights" to explore and harvest what history has always considered a "finders-keepers" tradition. (To be continued ...)

For worriers, it was a fine year

It has been a banner year so far for worriers, and the coming months promise more of the same.

Amateurs have had the horrid economy to fret about, and the post-war baby boom and the breakup of the Soviet Union. Advanced students of the calling — those who prefer to chew over the more esoteric concerns that separate the artist from the tyro — have been presented with some exquisite anxieties in which the solutions are every bit as vexatious as the problems.

to wit:

Is celibacy safe? It's been urged on us by principals, preachers and presidents as the only reliable way to avoid disease and pregnancy. But a professor of psychiatry at Loyola University of Chicago says abstinence can be harmful. In a letter to Medical Aspects of Sexuality magazine, Dr. Domeena Renshaw wrote: "Some celibates who say they have no difficulty with sexual suppression nonetheless develop symptoms such as irritability, insomnia, somatization or clinical depression."

Is chemically purified water carcinogenic? Chlorination has been preventing water-borne infections since 1908, but now the Environmental Protection Agency says we have been fighting risks with a risk because chlorine combines with other things in water to produce substances that can cause cancer.

Is baking soda an effective antacid or a bomb in a box? A Maryland man who drank two martinis and a glass of wine and ate a bowl of homemade chili took a spoonful of Arm & Hammer baking soda to quell his indigestion, and his stomach ruptured. A New Jersey jury denied him monetary damages but did assert that baking soda should carry a warning label.

For Normal People who are unfamiliar with the neurotic world of the Serious Worrier, this is what it looks like: For nine months out of the year, SWs stew over stuff NPs don't even notice. If we destroy our nuclear weapons, how will we blow up asteroids that are on a collision path with the earth? Will rising sea levels wipe out Miami? Who owns Antarctica? How many people will be hurt in vending-machine tipovers this year?

We ponder these problems from Labor Day to Christmas, take a week off, then worry our way to Memorial Day. We have just kicked off the second part of the season, and here are a few of the humdingers we will be cogitating in coming months:

Men with low levels of vitamin C may have damaged sperm (University of California, Berkeley). Men whose fathers smoked may also have damaged sperm (American Journal of Epidemiology). Mental distress can lead to heart disease (New England Journal of Medicine). A low level of vitamin E may contribute to heart disease (World Health Organization). Short men are more apt to have heart attacks than tall men — especially if they smoke, eat fatty foods and don't exercise (Harvard Medical School).

Fax machines are displacing bicycle couriers in New York City (New York Times). The growing popularity of sushi is threatening to wipe out the world's giant bluefin tuna population (New York Times). Canada's provinces may be absorbed into the United States on be one (World Future Society). The world's population of cars is expected to be 700 million by the year 2011 (WFS). Student loan defaults may total $3.6 billion in 1991 (Department of Education). The industrialized world may run out of landfill space within the next 10 years (WFS).

And World Class Worriers, still preoccupied with the question of whether history has ended, will have to deal with a new conundrum: With the collapse of communism and the decline of leftist philosophies, what will French intellectuals talk about?

I'm going to stop at this point and worry whether the environment on Mars can be made hospitable for humans. But before I go, I'd like to suggest that all high-strung short men who are reading these words run out and pick up a bottle of multivitamins. If your daddy smoked, grab a dozen oranges, too.

Clinton nears declaration on White House staffing

By JOHN KING
AP Political Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — President-elect Clinton is putting the finishing touches on a White House team anchored by an array of trusted campaign aides while hedging on a pledge to chop the president's staff by 25 percent.

With his inauguration as the nation's 42nd president one week from today, Clinton has yet to announce much of his senior White House staff or the top deputies at major government departments.

But he has settled on many of his picks, and aides said Tuesday that a flurry of White House staff announcements was imminent, perhaps as early as today. Many of those said to be in line for administration posts were on hand in Little Rock.

Most are familiar faces from Clinton's winning campaign, including communications director George Stephanopoulos, press secretary Dee Dee Myers and Mark Gearan, a senior Clinton adviser who ran Vice President-elect Al Gore's campaign, and Clinton confidant Bruce Lindsey.

But there are also some new — and relatively new — additions. Included in this group is Howard Paster, a Washington lobbyist who had been heading the transition's congressional relations and is set to continue that work at the White House.

David Dreyer, a top adviser to House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt of Missouri, was recruited by Stephanopoulos to assume a major role in the communications office, which will oversee the White House press, speechwriting and other media-related operations.

Set to be announced with the senior White House staff is Clinton's choice of David Wilhelm as the next chairman of the Democratic National Committee, a post from which Wilhelm will direct Clinton's political operations.

Wilhelm, a Chicago political consultant who was Clinton's campaign manager, is working with other campaign consultants on an ambitious research and outreach program designed to help Clinton make policy decisions while laying the groundwork for a re-election run in four years.

As Clinton fills his senior staff, it appears he will not, at least immediately, keep his promise to cut the White House staff by one-fourth, a central plank in his government-reform promises.

"We're in the middle of that right now," Stephanopoulos said when asked if Clinton would keep his promise. "It's a goal that we have."

When pressed by reporters for a timetable on meeting the pledge, Stephanopoulos said, "I don't know exactly how long that's going to take, but it's something we're pointing towards."

Those words were far less definitive than those of Clinton in the days after his election, when he declared: "The White House staff exploded in the last four years, so I'm going to get out there and set an example."

Clinton was also unequivocal in his campaign book, "Putting People First," which promised: "We will reduce the White House staff by 25 percent and challenge Congress to do the same."

Getting an accurate picture of White House staffing levels has always been difficult.

The roster for this fiscal year showed 408 people employed at the White House, up 11.5 percent from the 366 people working there when President Bush took office in 1989. Using 408 as a benchmark, Clinton would need to cut 100 positions to meet his campaign promise.

But there are hundreds more government workers with White House-related duties.

The 408 people working directly for the president are only a fraction of the 1,893 employed under the larger umbrella of the Executive Office of the President. And the president, vice president and other White House offices have a long tradition of borrowing workers from other departments. These "detailees" are still listed at their departments although most work full time at the White House.

Equally misleading are the White House citations in federal budget documents.

The Bush administration's current budget for White House operations is $189 million. But that figure does not include air travel — Air Force One costs more than $40,000 an hour to operate — or wages of those on agency payrolls who are assigned to the White House.

Corporations shell out for Brown gala

WASHINGTON (AP) — Corporations that are likely to be affected by actions taken by Commerce secretary-designate Ronald H. Brown are helping foot the bill for a lavish inaugural gala to honor the Democratic national chairman.

J.C. Penney, Anheuser-Busch Cos., Pepsico, Textron and Sony Music Entertainment Inc. are helping stage Sunday night's "Friends of Ron Brown" event at the Kennedy Center, Democratic spokeswoman Ginny Terzano confirmed Tuesday night.

The companies "were asked to help and they were willing to help to pay the overhead costs" for the event.

The gala to honor Brown for his service as Democratic national chairman was first conceived after the November election but before Clinton nominated him to be commerce secretary, she said.

The Los Angeles Times, which first reported the story in its Tuesday editions, said the corporate sponsors could be paying $10,000 each to stage the gala.

Terzano could not confirm that figure nor say if additional companies were involved.

But published reports in today's editions of The Washington Post and The New York Times also said each company was paying $10,000.

As head of the Commerce Department, Brown could play a major role in developing Clinton administration policies regarding business regulation and trade that could affect the fortunes of the large companies.

But Democrats say the event is being held merely as a salute to Brown for the four years he served as chairman of the Democratic National Committee and his role helping to orchestrate Clinton's victory.

Terzano scoffed at the notion that the corporate donations posed a conflict of interest for Brown.

"It does not create the appearance of a conflict, and if it did create the appearance of a conflict it would not be an event that is taking place," she said.

Brown himself said at his confirmation hearing last week that his representation as a lawyer-lobbyist of Japanese electronics companies and Haiti's former Duvalier dictatorship did not pose any conflict that would disqualify him for a Cabinet post.

But Senate Republicans questioned Brown's business ties.

One Democrat familiar with the planning of the gala said the idea for the event came primarily from two Democratic National Committee members, Don Fowler of South Carolina and Ann Campbell of New Jersey.

Sao Paulo's police force criticized as one of the world's most violent

By STAN LEHMAN
Associated Press Writer

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — The massacre of more than 100 inmates in a Sao Paulo prison has turned the spotlight on what human rights groups say is one of the world's most violent police forces.

Horror tales leaked out soon after riot troopers raided Carandiru prison, Latin America's largest, to put down a rebellion in October. Autopsies later showed that many prisoners were executed after they surrendered. Others were indiscriminately shot or torn apart by dogs.

Officially, 111 inmates were killed. But human rights groups and inmates said the true number topped 200. The prison held about 7,500 inmates, double its intended capacity.

Lawyers, churchmen, politicians and human rights groups say such brutality is a trademark of police in this city of 10 million people, South America's largest.

They accuse the Sao Paulo State Police force of following a "shoot first, ask questions later" policy that aims to eliminate criminal suspects, prisoners and anyone else seen as a menace to society.

Col. Eduardo Assumpcao, commander of the Sao Paulo State Police, denies the charges.

"It is society that is violent. All we do is respond to this violence," he said in an interview.

Americas Watch, a New York-based human rights group, said it was odd that "every year, police kill hundreds of criminal suspects on the streets of Sao Paulo in purported shootouts."

"The casualties on the side of the police have been consistently low, casting doubt on the claim that these are predominantly shootouts," the group said in a report issued after the prison massacre.

Official figures said that in the first 10 months of 1992, Sao Paulo State Police killed 1,264 people in shootouts — about one every six hours — while 52 policemen lost their lives.

In New York, a city of 7 million people, police killed 27 criminal suspects in shootouts in 1991. The same year, Sao Paulo police killed 1,074 people, according to the University of Sao Paulo's Center for the Study of Violence.

"The Sao Paulo police force is one of the world's most violent, if not the most violent," said Paulo Sergio Pinheiro, a political scientist and sociologist who is director of the center.

The victims usually are poor, non-white and between the ages of 18 and 25, Pinheiro said. Many live in the sprawling slums on the city's outskirts and are killed "merely for being suspected petty criminals."

The Rev. William Sheehan, a Roman Catholic chaplain at Carandiru prison, said the killings could be partly attributed to "the fact that for Brazilian society as a whole and for the police in particular prisoners and the poor are non-persons."

Sheehan, a native of Brockton, Mass., who has worked in Brazil 47 years, said the officers sent to quell the riot "are specially trained to exterminate people and when they do they are promoted."

Teresa Caldeira, an anthropologist at the University of Campinas, also said law enforcement officials "measure police efficiency by the number of suspects killed."

After analyzing the official records of more than 3,500 such killings from April 1970 to June 1992, journalist Caed Barcellos found that almost 60 percent of the victims had no criminal record.

"Suspicion is the only criterion police follow when choosing most of their victims," he said.

Barcellos recently published his findings in a book, "Rota 66 — A History of the Killer Police Force." Rota is an acronym for one of Sao Paulo's most violent police units.

A recent report by the Sao Paulo Bar Association said shop owners pay "police and extermination groups" to summarily execute children and adolescents suspected of theft.

"At least two minors are executed each day in Sao Paulo," the report said.

These young victims are usually street children who steal, beg or sell odds and ends to survive.

Police accused of violence are rarely punished. They are tried by special police courts that most of the time are lenient.

In his book, Barcellos said one officer involved in the Carandiru massacre, Lt. Wanderley Mascarenhas de Souza, has been involved in 34 killings, most of them in quelling prison riots. Another officer, Capt. Conte Lopes, has been involved in at least 42 killings while on duty, Barcellos said. Neither has ever been charged, he said.

Capt. Edmar Aquotti, director of the Romao Gomes prison, which houses only police officers convicted of crimes, said there are 120 officers currently jailed there, 30 of them for unjustified killings while on duty. Of those, 15 got the maximum penalty of 30 years and the others received sentences ranging from 2 to 20 years, he said.

No officers have been charged in the Carandiru riot, although police say an investigation is continuing.

"Impunity is a major cause for so much police violence," said Rep. Helio Bicudo, a former state prosecutor who gained renown in the 1970s for combating the notorious death squads that killed political opponents of Brazil's former military regime.

Assumpcao, the Sao Paulo police commander, said that "the problem is that everyone wants a First World police force, forgetting that we live in a Third World country."

"Our police are recruited from, and must deal with, a violent Third World society," he said. Assumpcao challenged the claim that most victims of police shootings were not criminals. "Many of them may have been committing their first crime when they were killed," he said.

A poll by the newspaper Folha de Sao Paulo shortly after the Carandiru incident said 53 percent of those surveyed condemned the police action, while 29 percent said the killings were justified. The poll's margin of error was three percentage points.

But many Brazilians, fed up with rising crime and a glacially slow legal system, endorse harsh treatment for criminals. Police violence "enjoys the support and complicity of large segments of the population," Leoncio Martins Rodrigues, a political scientist at the University of Sao Paulo, wrote in a recent newspaper column.

"In a country where authorities steal, where corruption is common practice and where there is violence everywhere, it would be very difficult for police to behave in a civilized manner," he said.

Probe clears Reagan campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans and Democrats are issuing a joint report clearing the Reagan campaign of persistent allegations that it cut a deal with Iran to delay the release of American hostages in 1980 in order to defeat Jimmy Carter.

"There is wholly insufficient credible evidence of any communications by, or on behalf of, the 1980 Reagan presidential campaign with any persons representing or connected with the Iranian government, or with those holding Americans as hostages during the 1979-1981 period," according to the report's summary obtained Monday by The Associated Press.

The document was to be released at a new conference today.

The bipartisan House task force which conducted an 11-month investigation also concluded that there was "no credible evidence supporting any attempt or proposal to attempt, by the Reagan presidential campaign ... to delay the release of the American hostages in Iran."

The task force, with a $1.35 million budget and a staff of 10 lawyers and six Justice and Treasury Department investigators, interviewed nearly all those around the world who claimed to have knowledge about the Reagan campaign's alleged attempt to reach agreement with Iran.

It also reviewed tens of thousands of documents, including classified intelligence reports, hundreds of FBI surveillance tapes and numerous phone logs and credit card records in order to determine the whereabouts of key Reagan aides during that period.

"The task force believes that it has conducted the most thorough and complete investigation of the October Surprise allegations to date," said the summary.

Allegation that the Reagan campaign secretly arranged to have the hostages held until after the elections in order to prevent an October Surprise boost for Carter first arose in the mid 1980s and have since resurfaced periodically.

The hostages were in fact freed hours after Reagan's Jan. 20, 1981, inauguration, but the task force did not find any evidence that Iran acted in return for a promise of U.S. weapons. The Reagan administration did not begin selling weapons to Iran until its second term, the report noted.

Food

Tasty, seasonal citrus fruits are versatile

By Marialisa Calta

It's taken five years, but the Florida citrus groves destroyed in the winter of 1987 have bounced back in a big way. According to the Florida Department of Citrus, there is a bumper crop of citrus fruits across the board this winter, with orange production up 33 percent, grapefruit up 27 percent, and "specialty fruits" (tangerines, tangelos, and the like) up 15 percent.

Since Florida produces about 2/3 of all oranges grown in the United States (the state is second only to Brazil in world production) this bumper crop is good news for consumers. Personally, I couldn't be happier. My children, who have an unerring instinct to avoid any food I promote as "healthy," took naturally to fruit of all kinds, especially tangerines, grapefruits and oranges. In addition to my morning fix of o.j., I find that after a heavy meal a chilled orange satisfies my sweet tooth without doing any additional gastronomic damage. My husband, who is a whiz at Chinese cooking, often serves a citrus ice after his multi-course meals.

Citrus fruits are high in Vitamin C, potassium and dietary fiber. And they are low in calories—a jumbo-sized tangerine, for example, has about 46. The people who promote oranges and tangerines like to point out how "portable" they are, in a lunchbox or pocket, they don't squish like bananas, kiwis or ripe pears. They are pretty, too. I have a cousin who decorates her Christmas tree each year with oranges (the trick is finding them with the stems still on). In a salad of dark greens, oranges provide a lovely contrast as well as taste.

My cookbooks offer a bumper crop of recipes showcasing oranges and tangerines. Here are some, along with a fabulous tart cooked up by the chefs at New England Culinary Institute in Essex, Vt.

TANGERINE TART

Crust:
2 cups flour
pinch of salt
1/4 cup butter, cold
5 teaspoons cold water

Custard base:
1 cup egg yolks (about 12 yolks)
1 scant cup (7 ounces) sugar
1 quart heavy cream
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
Topping:
8 tangerines, peeled, sections separated

Prepare pie dough in a medium bowl. Combine flour and salt. Using a pastry blender or two knives, cut in butter until mixture is very crumbly. Add water, 1 teaspoon at a time, until dough can be gathered up in a ball. Chill 30 to 40 minutes. Roll out to fill bottom of a 9-inch pie pan, or 8 individual tartlet pans. Bake at 300 degrees until golden, about 10 to 15 minutes. Remove from oven, and raise temperature to 325 degrees. Allow crust to cool.

Prepare custard: In a medium bowl, combine all ingredients with whisk. Pour into a buttered, oven-proof 2-quart casserole and place casserole in a slightly larger oven proof pan. Fill outer pan with water about half as deep as the custard. Bake until pudding firm, about 45 minutes. Spoon into cooled pie shell.

Top with tangerine sections.

Yield: 8 servings.

ORANGES WITH HONEY, NUTS AND MINT

4-6 large navel oranges
1-2 tablespoons finely chopped fresh mint leaves
1/4-1/2cup honey (preferably imported)

Greek honey, but American buckwheat, orange blossom or clover honey can be substituted)
1/4 cup finely chopped pistachio nuts orange blossom water or orange juice mint leaves, for garnish

Peel oranges with sharp knife, removing peel and bitter white pith. Cut into 1/4-inch slices. Arrange slices in layers in a shallow serving bowl, sprinkling each layer with chopped mint, honey, nuts and a few drops of orange blossom water (or orange juice, if using). End with a layer of mint, honey and nuts. Cover and refrigerate until serving time. Spoon into bowls and garnish with mint leaves.

Yield: 4 to 6 servings.
Recipe from "The Periyali Cookbook," by Holly Garrison, with Nicola Kotsoni and Steve Tzolis (Villard Books, 1992). Orange blossom (or orange flower) water is distilled from fresh orange blossoms and can be found in Middle Eastern grocery stores or pharmacies. Use sparingly and store in a cool, dark spot.

SARAH ELMALEH'S ORANGE AND OLIVE SALAD

5 navel oranges, peeled and diced
3/4 cup black, salt-cured (shriveled) olives, halved and pitted cloves garlic, minced
2/4 teaspoon coarse (kosher) salt, or to taste
1/2 teaspoon sweet paprika
1/2 cup minced fresh parsley

1/2 teaspoon ground cumin dash of cayenne pepper
2 tablespoons olive oil

Combine all ingredients in a bowl and toss well. Refrigerate to chill, then serve.

Yield: 4 to 6 servings.

Recipe from "New York Cook Book," by Molly O'Neill (Workman Publishing, 1992).

ORANGE WATER ICE

1 lemon
15 ounces water
1 cup sugar
21/2 cups fresh orange juice (the juice of about 7 oranges)
2 tablespoons orange liqueur

Finely pare the peel (skin) off the lemon. Squeeze the inside and reserve the juice. Place the peel in a saucepan with water and sugar and bring to boil, cooking for 10 minutes. Remove the peel and discard. Allow syrup to cool.

Add reserved lemon juice, orange juice and liqueur to the syrup. Pour into a shallow pan and freeze several hours, until slushy. Remove from tray and process in blender or food processor to break ice into finer particles. Return to freezer to set. Remove from freezer 10 minutes before serving.

Yield: 6 servings.

Recipe from "Mediterranean Cookery," by Claudia Roden (Alfred A. Knopf, 1992). Make a day in advance to ensure adequate freezing time.

Consumers becoming more concerned about pesticides on food

By COUNTRY LIVING
For AP Special Features

The most perfect-looking fruits and vegetables in the produce department may be the ones that have undergone the heaviest pesticide treatment.

Many substances growers employ, according to an article by Teresa Opheim in Country Living, are used only because consumers expect to buy picture-perfect food.

"In fact, the prettiest-looking produce may be the least safe, nutritious and flavorful, since it has probably undergone the greatest number of pre- and post-harvest chemical treatments," said Gail Feenstra in a report of the California Public Interest Research Group.

Experts estimate that 60 percent to 80 percent of the pesticides applied to orange crops, for instance, are used to reduce cosmetic damage, with much spraying of oranges directed at an insect called the citrus thrips that causes a brownish scar tissue on the rind of the fruit. It has no effect on the edible portion of the orange.

While the most visible result of pesticide use is the perfect-looking produce on display at the market, invisible pesticide residues are in our soil, our flora and fauna, our water and our bodies. Pesticide residues were found in 48 percent of the food samples tested in a three-year period, according to state and federal pesticide-monitoring data.

The National Resources Defense Council reports that pesticide residues have been detected in the groundwater in 26 states and have even been found in rain and fog.

Over the last 50 years pesticides have also helped growers guarantee that Americans have an abundant food supply year-round. During this time, however, bugs and plants have become immune to many pesticides, forcing growers to launch ever-greater chemical attacks. At least 447 species of insects and mites are now resistant to pesticides, according to the National Research Council.

Surveys show consumers may be saying no to pesticides. In a 1988 CALPIRG study, nearly two-thirds of those surveyed said they would choose a scarred orange over a perfect-looking one, knowing 50 percent fewer pesticides were used on the scarred orange.

According to The Produce Packer's 1992 Fresh Trends Consumer Profile Study, 46 percent of Americans surveyed are more concerned about pesticide residues on food than they were a year ago. Seventy percent of the women surveyed said it was extremely or very important that produce items be tested for residues and certified as safe.

Merchants question whether consumers are willing to back up their concerns at the cash register, citing complaints about the quality of produce grown with few pesticides.

Organic and low-pesticide growers counter that they have refined their growing techniques in recent years. Katherine DiMatteo of the Organic Foods Production Association of North America said if grocers refrigerate and display the produce properly, consumers should no longer have to compromise on price, product quality or appearance when purchasing low-pesticide food. There is one exception. "Ripeners and colorings are not used in organic produce, so organic grapefruit won't be bright yellow, for example, the way grapefruit grown with pesticides is," DiMatteo said.

"But I can get you pound after pound of carrots that look the same."

From the tomato farms of California to the apple orchards of New England, there are signs that growers think markets exist for low-pesticide products. DiMatteo said the amount of organic produce in the marketplace increases by about 40 percent a year.

In the end it's up to consumers. Linda Brown of Nutri-Clean, a non-governmental service in Oakland, Calif., that certifies products with no detectable pesticide residues, said consumers should demand that their grocers carry food grown without pesticides.

"Consumers are not aware of how seriously retailers take their comments," she said. "In fact, even three letters have been enough for some retailers to sit down and take a look at their policies."

Zesty Italian wontons make easy appetizer

Better Homes and Gardens Magazine

Bite-sized morsels such as wontons are today's party hits—they're so easy to pop in your mouth! No longer relegated to Oriental cooking, these wonton wrappers envelope a cheesy sausage filling. You can cook the filling and wrap the tiny bundles ahead of time. Then, fry them right before your guests arrive and keep them warm in a 250-degree F oven. If you like, warm up your favorite spaghetti sauce to serve alongside.

For an Inauguration Day party: the Clinton cookie

By The Associated Press

The Best Foods test kitchen has created an Inauguration Day Cookie that can be decorated with stars, stripes, or a Bill Clinton caricature.

The idea for combining peanut butter and bananas into a Clinton cookie was made at the suggestion of an employee at the Skippy Peanut Butter manufacturing plant in Little Rock, Ark., Best Foods said. The company said peanut butter and bananas are one of Clinton's favorite sandwich combos.

Inauguration Day Cookies
2 1/2 cups quick-cooking oats, sausage

1/4 cup finely chopped onion
4 ounces mozzarella cheese, shredded (1 cup)
2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese
2 tablespoons snipped cilantro or parsley
40 wonton wrappers
Cooking oil for deep frying
Spaghetti sauce (optional)
For filling, in a large skillet cook sausage and onion over medium heat until sausage is brown and onion is tender, stirring to break meat into small pieces. Drain well; cool completely. Stir in mozzarella cheese, Parmesan cheese and cilantro or parsley.
To assemble, place one rounded teaspoon of the filling in the center of a wonton wrapper. Moisten the edges of the wrapper with water. Starting with one corner, fold the wrapper over the filling, forming a triangle; press to seal. Bring the two other pointed ends of the wonton wrapper up over the stuffed center. Moisten and press together. Repeat with remaining filling and wonton wrappers. Cover and chill if not frying right away.

In a wok or deep fryer, fry wontons, a few at a time, in deep hot oil (365 degrees F) for 1 1/2 to 2 1/2 minutes or until golden brown. Drain on paper towels. Serve warm with spaghetti sauce for dipping, if desired. Makes 40 wontons.

uncooked
1 1/4 cups flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon baking soda
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 cup creamy or superchunk peanut butter
1 cup (2 sticks) margarine
1 cup sugar
1 cup packed brown sugar
1/2 cup mashed ripe banana (1 large)
1 egg
1 teaspoon vanilla
Preheat oven to 350 degrees F. In a medium bowl, combine oats, flour, baking powder, baking soda and salt. In a large bowl with mixer at medium speed, beat peanut butter and margarine until smooth. Beat in sugars until blended. Beat in banana, egg and vanilla. Stir in flour mixture. Drop dough by 1/4 cupfuls, about 5 inches apart, onto ungreased cookie sheets. With spatula, spread dough into 3 1/2-inch circles.

Bake in a 350-degree F oven for 10 to 12 minutes or until golden. Let cool on cookie sheets for 4 minutes. Remove from cookie sheets; cool completely on a wire rack. If desired, pipe a stars or stripes frosting design, using plain piping, onto each cookie. Store in a tightly-covered container. Makes about 24 cookies.

Bellbottoms revived in '90s

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Soldiers and spouses look for strength while apart

DEAR ABBY: A while ago, there was a letter in your column from a married soldier on deployment asking you how he should deal with his natural desires and longings as a man. Your reply was so wonderful I cut it out and sent it to my husband. (We were separated because I had to finish a semester of school while he was at his base.)

My husband is now in Somalia, and I'd like to send him a copy. Please print it again. A lot of families are separated, and might find it helpful.

STACY LAUTH,
SANTA ANA, CALIF.

DEAR STACY: Thanks for asking; here it is:

DEAR ABBY: I just received a letter from my husband in Korea, and something you wrote in your column over a year ago has helped to keep our marriage a true one. I can best explain by quoting a portion of my husband's letter:

"Honey, do you remember the clipping you sent me from Dear Abby's column when I first got over here — the one about the soldier in Korea who wanted to know what to do about his 'physical needs' while he was overseas?"

"Well, I still carry it and I've read it so many times, it's worn to shreds. It has helped to keep me strong. It's too bad the Army doesn't issue a copy to every man overseas. They could save a lot of money on curing venereal disease and keep a lot of homes from breaking up."

Abby, would you please print it again? I want to be sure the one my husband has doesn't get too worn to read.

GRATEFUL READER

DEAR READER: With pleasure. Here it is:

DEAR ABBY: My problem is one that bothers thousands of GIs, so I hope you will print the answer because it is needed badly. I am a happily married man with a wonderful wife and two small children back in the States. I've been in Korea for four months. After living a normal married life for three years, what is a healthy young man supposed to do for his physical needs?

There are 12 women for every GI over here, and women practically throw themselves at our feet. Don't get me wrong, Abby; I love my wife, but I have a long hitch over here and I'm only human. If you print this, please sign me ...

JERSEY

DEAR JERSEY: Assume for a moment that I received the following letter:

DEAR ABBY: I am a happily married woman with a wonderful husband and two small children. My husband has been in Korea for four months, and after living a normal married life for three years, what is a healthy young woman supposed to do for her physical needs?

There are plenty of men around, and when they learn that my husband is in Korea, they practically throw themselves at my feet. I love my husband, but he's going to be gone a long time, and I'm only human.

JERSEY'S WIFE

Well, Jersey, I would tell that woman to keep as busy as possible with her duties and as many wholesome activities as her time and energy permit. I'd suggest reading, physical exercise, and yes, even prayers. I'd tell her to stay sober and to avoid temptation and to write to you every day! And that, Jersey, is my answer to you, and to all your buddies in the same lonesome boat. Sincerely, ABBY

DEAR ABBY: In response to your reader who can't decide whether to vacuum or dust first when cleaning house: Dust first and the vacuum will blow the dust back onto the furniture. Vacuum first and dusting will leave dust on your clean floor.

Well, he must let the dust pile up pretty high to leave noticeable traces on the floor.

My solution: Clean more often and it won't matter which you do first.

bottom-line-minded, and cold."

Anna Sui, whose heavily '70s-influenced line has made her clothes a favorite with supermodels, recalled:

"The '70s were the last time that people really dressed as individuals. I think that everything that's happening now is a reaction against the status dressing of the '80s. It's cool not to care about labels or price."

Michael Kors, who was only 11 when the '70s began, said:

"Music was a big influence on fashion. Mick Jagger and David Bowie were both icons of style. The media, in general, could change overnight how you wanted to look."

Martine Sitbon, who spent as much time as possible in London during the '70s, began showing that decade's styling in her collection five years ago. She recently visited London again and said:

"It was very strange to see the kids dressed in '70s clothes again. I think there are very deep reasons for it. It's come from the music in Manchester and California and Seattle, but, more profoundly, it's an idealistic thing — a rejection of the materialism of the '80s. The difference is that, before, kids were reacting to too much force from the government and now they're reacting to a very bad economy."

Todd Oldham spent the '70s abroad, where his parents worked and traveled.

"I don't think the current '70s revival has to be so literal. Bell-bottoms are cool, but they're so unflattering. I'm not making any, and I'm not buying any. I think the reason people may want them now is because they're one of the few really new items you buy — kind of like long skirts," he said.

Vivienne Westwood, one of the inventors of punk rock styles, believes punk was good when it began, but turned cynical.

"Punks were at least clever enough to admit they were brain-damaged," she said. "They talked like morons; they said, 'Look, this is what you've done to us, so we'll wear Nazi swastikas and safety pins in our noses.'"

Supermodel Lauren Hutton, who turned 26 in 1970, pointed out it was the era in which the United States bombed Cambodia and the economy was turning sour.

"Then the disco horror came in," Hutton said. "Before that, there was actual conversation. Then cocaine and speed came in like a white tornado, whereas, before, there had been gentle drugs."

'When Do I Call the Doctor?' says when

NEW YORK (AP) — When you bring your newborn baby home from the hospital, your inclination may be to call the pediatrician at the first sign of each illness.

But most parents quickly realize they don't have to call the doctor for every bump, rash and sneeze. Most times, it's a common ailment, such as a cold, or teething.

However, it is important to know what that rash could be. Measles, rubella, scarlet fever, or erythema infectiosum, more commonly known as the "fifth disease," are among the possibilities. A rash could also be flea bites, hives, impetigo, or hand, foot and mouth syndrome.

Dr. Loraine M. Stern, a Los Angeles pediatrician, has written "When Do I Call the Doctor?" (Doubleday), with answers to 200 common — and not-so-common — questions parents may have about their children's health.

The book is divided into the following sections: The Newborn; Head, Eyes, Ears, Nose & Throat; Air Passages, Lungs & Chest; Stomach, Bowels & Abdomen; Urine & Genitals; Skin Problems; Bones & Joints; Minor Injuries; Fever; Habits & Behaviors.

Stern tells what's common, normal and not normal, and when to call or see the pediatrician. The 274-page book also tells what supplies to keep on hand, how to take a child's temperature, and when it is necessary for a child to have a tetanus shot.

There is also a foldout first aid chart. The front gives instructions for the most immediate life-threatening emergencies. The back of the chart tells how to handle other problems, such as splinters, knocked-out teeth and minor burns. Also Available:

"Baby & Child Emergency First Aid Handbook," edited by Mitchell J. Einzig (Meadowbrook Press). The 96-page book contains simple text and illustrations for such emergencies as bites and stings, bleeding, burns, choking and convulsions.

Kelton's Brandon Lewis goes up for an easy two points Tuesday night.

Groom boys rally past Kelton

By DAN FROMM
Sports Writer

Groom boys basketball coach Jay Lamb called time out with just over six minutes remaining in the first quarter of last night's district 11-1A opener at Groom. The Tigers were trailing Kelton 6-0 and had just committed their third turnover.

Area basketball

Lamb took the time out to calm his team down. It worked. The Tigers won 64-56 in a hard-fought game by both teams. Kelton stuck with their full-court press throughout the game. They applied constant pressure on the ball, but couldn't stop Groom's Wes Hall from scoring in the paint.

"They did a great job of putting pressure on us and took us out of our game in the first quarter," Lamb said. The Tigers trailed 14-12 at the end of the first quarter, but took the lead for good in the second. Hall scored 17 of his 30 points in the first half.

"I thought we recovered well in the second quarter and had a real good third quarter. Defensively, we held them down in the third quarter and that helped us a bunch." The Tigers are now 7-8 on the season and have won three of their last four games. Kelton had won five of their last six, but hadn't played since Dec. 18.

Lions coach Brad Slatton said his team "played about how I expected we would after being off for almost a month. We could've kept it a little closer, but Groom played tough."

Groom led 30-23 at halftime and started the second half by going to Hall. He scored two baskets right away from inside and on the Tigers next possession, went outside for a jumper. Hall had to come out late in the third quarter when he picked up his fourth foul. That started a chain reaction. Kelton was in a bonus situation after just five minutes of the second half. In all, four players fouled out of the game (two from each team).

And from the free throw line, Kelton made just four of eight attempts in the third quarter. Groom wasn't much better, but made several crucial free throws late in the game. Kelton, trailing 58-52 with 56 seconds remaining, was forced to foul. Corkey Hickey hit two free throws and on the next possession, Hall hit two. That put the game away for the Tigers.

"I hope we can turn it around," Slatton said. "I think we can. I'm not down on 'em cause they played hard and fought to the end."

The Lions had beaten Groom last month in the Samnorwood tournament and will face them again Jan. 29. "Keeping our focus for ten straight district games is going to be tough," Lamb said.

Slatton feels that road victories against district opponents are always hard to come by. "It's real tough to come here and win," he said. "We got that one out of the way and we don't have to come to Groom anymore. They have to come to our place next time."

Groom's Bo Burgin scored 16 points, including 11 in the second half. Lamb was happy with the way his younger players performed and with the way the team played while Hall was on the bench for over six minutes in the second half. "The district is going to be tough. There are four or five teams that can win on any given night, so it's going to be real tough," he said.

"With as many young kids as we have, district play is like starting all over," Lamb explained. "It's like the first game of the season again and we were real nervous." In the "new" season, the Tigers are undefeated.

Other area results are as follows:

Wellington 62, Canadian 56

J.K. Hester scored 29 points for the Wildcats, but they couldn't make up any ground in the final quarter after trailing 39-33 at the end of three quarters. Canadian is 7-5 overall.

Lori DeShields scored 28 points as Sanford-Fritch pulled ahead of White Deer early. Rachel Christiana led the way with eight points for the Does as they fall to 7-9 on the season.

Henderson's heroics lead to Indiana win over Michigan

By HARRY ATKINS
AP Sports Writer

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — It was exactly the kind of game you'd expect from two Final Four teams.

Indiana's Alan Henderson made what proved to be the winning basket and then blocked Michigan's final shot as the sixth-ranked Hoosiers snapped the second-ranked Wolverines' 11-game winning streak with a 76-75 victory Tuesday night.

Henderson, who made the game's final basket on a jumper from the right side with 1:36 remaining, had 22 points for Indiana (14-2 overall, 3-0 Big Ten). Calbert Cheaney added 20 for the Hoosiers.

"The main thing for us tonight is that we stuck together," Henderson said. "We played as hard as we could. And this time, we came out on top."

Jalen Rose, who had 19 points for Michigan (12-2, 2-1), put the Wolverines ahead 75-74 with 2:30 to play. But the Wolverines never scored again, although they had plenty of chances.

James Voskuil, who had eight points for Michigan, drove across the lane for a layup that was blocked by Henderson with 1:13 left.

Rose had a steal and raced the length of the court for another layup, but missed it with 43 seconds left.

Michigan was forced to foul Todd Leary with 14 seconds left. But before Leary, a 90 percent free throw shooter, could take the foul shot, Cheaney left his spot in the lane and the Wolverines were given the ball out of bounds.

Rose brought the ball upcourt and flipped it to Voskuil who missed a 3-point try from the left corner. The rebound was tipped by Rose to Chris Webber, who got the ball for one last shot, which was blocked by Henderson just before the horn sounded.

"I saw Voskuil shoot and I saw it would be short," Henderson said. "So I tried to hold my position. When Webber got the ball, I just tried to take a swipe at it, and I got a piece of it."

Rose said he wanted to take the shot, but the Indiana defense forced him to pass the ball instead.

"It was a clearout, really for me," Rose said. "But they forced me to kick it out to the wing. We did, really, what we wanted to do. James will make that shot next time."

Voskuil said he had a good look at the basket and felt confident he would make the shot.

"It should have been made," he said. "We work on things like that in practice, and you've got to make the shot."

Webber finished with 18 points.

"I can't really describe the feeling you get when you play your hardest and you don't get what you are after," he said. "The only people who can sympathize are people who tried their hardest at something and failed."

The Hoosiers shot 55 percent, holding Michigan to 47 percent, and outrebounded the Wolverines 33-31.

With Juwan Howard scoring six of his 17 points, Michigan had an early 13-4 run for an 18-12 lead with 13:11 left in the first half. But for the next 8:40, the Wolverines made only two field goals.

Shot selection seemed to be a problem for the Wolverines who shot only 38 percent in the first half. Twelve of Michigan's 34 first-half shots were 3-point attempts, but only three went in.

Michigan's Chris Webber slams for two points over Indiana's Alan Henderson.

Big-game experience could be deciding factor in National Football League playoffs

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

SAN FRANCISCO AP) — The 49ers and Bills have it. The Cowboys and Dolphins used to have it. It's called big-game experience and it could be the deciding factor in next weekend's conference title games.

No it can't, says San Francisco coach George Seifert, in fine pre-game CoachSpeak form on Monday. "I don't know that either team has a big edge," he said. "We have a lot of new players who haven't been in big games."

Don't worry about it, says Dallas owner Jerry Jones, whose team, the youngest in the NFL, will face four-time Super Bowl champion San Francisco at muddy Candlestick Park on Sunday.

"Our young players are all first and second-year guys," he says. "But now they've had 20 games to gain experience. They've had the equivalent of two college seasons."

Yes. But two college seasons are hardly the equivalent of one, two, three or even four runs to the Super Bowl — Joe Montana has that for the Niners.

Last weekend, Steve Young of the 49ers and Stan Humphries of the Chargers, with a dozen NFL seasons between them, were admittedly a little nervous in their first playoff starts. Humphries' three second-quarter interceptions were all turned into touchdowns by Dan Marino, who's been a big-game quarterback since he took Miami to the Super Bowl in 1984, his second season.

Still, the Dolphins, once a big game regular, enter Sunday's game at home against Buffalo as a far less experienced team than the Bills, losers in the last two Super Bowls and seeking to become the first team since the Dolphins in 1971-73 to make it back three times in a row.

Miami, of course, won two of those games; the Bills will be seeking to avoid becoming the first team to lose three straight.

But big-game experience? Marino, wide receivers Mark Duper and Mark Clayton and punter Reggie Roby are the only Dolphins left from the 1984 Super Bowl team and the one that reached the AFC title game the next season.

Other than nose tackle Chuck Klingbeil, who won a Grey Cup with the Saskatchewan Roughriders of the Canadian Football League, no other Dolphin has even played in a championship game. In fact, rookie cornerback Troy Vincent has won 12 games this year, three more victories than he had playing four years at Wisconsin.

Moreover, much of Miami's defensive improvement is due to second-year linebacker Bryan Cox and three rookies — Vincent, defensive end Marco Coleman, and linebacker Dwight Hollier, who has helped fill the hole left by the injury to John Offerdahl.

Dallas' most experienced playoff player, ironically, is defensive end Charles Haley, who was dealt by the 49ers to the Cowboys just before the start of the season. Haley played on the Niners' Super Bowl champions in 1988 and 1989 and was in the NFC title game with San Francisco in 1990.

The others? Safety Ray Horton, on injured reserve, was with Cincinnati in the 1988 Super Bowl and backup cornerback Issiac Holt played for Minnesota in the 1987 NFC title game.

But quarterback Troy Aikman made his first playoff start in the 34-10 win over Philadelphia Sunday — he was injured last season. Two Dallas defensive starters — middle linebacker Robert Jones and cornerback Kevin Smith — are rookies.

The Niners had no big game experience.

But they won on "The Catch" by Dwight Clark at the end of Montana's "Drive I," the first of many.

So ...

So much for the experience factor.

And even Jim Jeffcoat, the Cowboys' elder statesman, arrived in 1983, the year after Dallas' last championship game. San Francisco? The Niners have Montana, who has played in four Super Bowls, back from an injured elbow to back up Steve Young.

Nose tackle Michael Carter and linebacker Mike Walter have been in three Super Bowls; 16 more players in two, and five more in one — including strong safety David Whitmore with the Giants in 1990 and guard Roy Foster with that 1984 Miami team. All have been winners but Foster, who lost to the 49ers.

Buffalo?

If Frank Reich starts at quarterback rather than the injured Jim Kelly, it will be his first title game, although he backed up Kelly the last two years. But he had the experience of bringing the Bills back from a 35-3 deficit against Houston, so he's at least somewhat tested under fire.

But overall, 37 of the 47 Bills have been in at least one Super Bowl.

On the other hand ...

The Dallas-San Francisco game is a replay of the 1981 game, when Dallas came to Candlestick with playoff veterans like Danny and Randy White, Tony Dorsett, Ed "Too Tall" Jones, Tony Hill, Drew Pearson, etc.

The Niners had no big game experience.

But they won on "The Catch" by Dwight Clark at the end of Montana's "Drive I," the first of many.

Wilkins, Drexler return to help lead Hawks, Trail Blazers to wins

By The Associated Press

Dominique Wilkins is back, along with Clyde Drexler. And so are the Boston Celtics.

The Celtics stayed unbeaten in 1993 Tuesday night, handing the Cleveland Cavaliers just their fifth loss in 20 home games, 121-115, despite Brad Daugherty's season-high 37 points.

Meanwhile, Wilkins played for Atlanta for the first time since Dec. 15, returning from a broken finger to score 28 points in a 126-118 victory over Golden State that snapped the Hawks' seven-game home losing streak.

"I really did not expect 'Nique to be able to come back and do what he did," Atlanta coach Bob Weiss said. "We don't win this one without Dominique. He drew double teams all night, but he scored."

Drexler, out since Dec. 22 with a sore right knee, had 17 points, nine assists and four steals in a 109-100 victory over Denver that extended the Nuggets' road losing streak to 10 games.

Elsewhere in the NBA, it was Washington 121, Milwaukee 98; Chicago 122, Orlando 106; Indiana 112, Philadelphia 93; Utah 125, Miami 122 in double overtime; Seattle 122, Phoenix 113; Houston 113, the Los Angeles Clippers 103; and New York 104, Sacramento 93.

The Hawks were 0-5 at home and 4-7 overall in Wilkins' absence, and he hopes to give the team a spark now that he's back.

"I hope this win will bring back some enthusiasm and camaraderie with the team, because this team has to play with emotion to win," he said. "You lead by example."

Wilkins' 3-point shot with 2:24 remaining gave the Hawks a 111-105 lead over the Warriors, who have lost 10 straight games in Atlanta.

Golden State led by 18 points in the second quarter before the Hawks closed to 70-62 at halftime. Atlanta continued the rally with a 17-4 run late in the third period, giving the Hawks a 91-89 lead going into the final quarter.

Chris Mullin scored 26 points and Tim Hardaway had a season-high 18 assists for Golden State. Stacey Augmon and Mookie Blaylock both scored 24 points for the Hawks.

NBA roundup

Celtics 121, Cavaliers 115

Backup forwards Kevin McHale and Xavier McDaniel scored 20 points each as Boston's reserves outscored Cleveland's 67-18.

The Cavs, who lost for the third time in 15 games, cut the Celtics' 10-point lead to 110-106 on a layup with 2:09 to play by Mark Price, who had 28 points and 11 assists.

On Boston's next possession, McDaniel beat the shot clock with a fadeaway jumper from the foul line, restoring a six-point margin.

Daugherty made one of two foul shots before McDaniel drew a foul and sank both free throws to make it 114-107.

The Cavaliers then were forced to foul, and Boston sealed it by making 7 of 10 foul shots in the closing seconds.

Trail Blazers 109, Nuggets 100

Cliff Robinson led Portland with 19 points, while Reggie Williams scored 22 points and Dikembe Mutombo had a season-high 19 rebounds for Denver.

Drexler was activated Tuesday before the game and had six points in the first three minutes of the fourth period, helping Portland turn an 82-81 deficit into a five-point lead.

SuperSonics 122, Suns 113

Seattle, with the best home record in the NBA, used balanced scoring to beat Phoenix, which still has the best overall record in the league.

Derrick McKey scored 24 points to lead four Sonics with 20 or more as they improved their record to 16-1 at home and 23-8 overall.

Eddie Johnson scored nine points in the first 6:12 of the fourth quarter for the Sonics. Shawn Kemp scored 22 points, Ricky Pierce 21 and Gary Payton 20 for Seattle.

Charles Barkley scored 27 points for the Suns, but he had only two in the fourth quarter. Barkley missed badly on two 3-point attempts in the period and was 0-for-6 from 3-point range in the game.

Jazz 125, Heat 122

Utah won its 10th straight at home after a 1-4 start as Karl Malone had 30 points, 16 rebounds and a key blocked shot of Rony Seikaly with 41 seconds left in the second overtime.

Glen Rice, who scored 31 points, hit two of his five 3-pointers in the final 13 seconds, but the Jazz stayed in front with five free throws.

Tyrone Corbin scored 24 points and Jeff Malone 21 for the Jazz, while John Stockton had 16 points and 15 assists.

Harold Miner scored 27 points for the Heat and forced the second overtime with a 3-pointer with 0.8 seconds left.

Knicks 104, Kings 93

John Starks scored a career-high 33 points and hit two crucial 3-pointers late in the game as New York snapped Sacramento's five-game home winning streak.

Patrick Ewing had 20 points and 11 rebounds for New York, which has held 12 of its last 14 opponents under 100 points.

Mich Richmond paced Sacramento with 21 points, but made only 7 of 22 field-goal attempts.

Rockets 113, Clippers 103

Houston ended a seven-game road losing streak as Kenny Smith scored a season-high 29 points and Hakeem Olajuwon had 27 points and 14 rebounds at Los Angeles.

The Rockets took advantage of the Clippers' problems inside with John Williams out with a sprained right arch, rookie Elmore Spencer suffering from bronchitis and Stanley Roberts in foul trouble.

Ken Norman scored 26 points and Danny Manning 21 for the Clippers, who also lost reserve guard Jaren Jackson four minutes into the second quarter with a fractured right ankle.

Bulls 122, Magic 106

Horace Grant and Scottie Pippen took control of the first meeting between Michael Jordan and rookie Shaquille O'Neal, leading Chicago to victory at Orlando.

Grant scored 26 points on 12-for-15 shooting and Pippen had 13 points, 10 rebounds and 10 assists for the Bulls.

Nick Anderson led Orlando with 24 points, while O'Neal had 19 points and 11 rebounds for the Magic, which played without Dennis Scott, who strained a calf muscle in his right leg in practice.

O'Neal was 8 for 10 from the field, but his first shot was blocked by Jordan, who finished with 23 points.

Pacers 112, 76ers 93

Detlef Schrempf had 20 points, 10 rebounds and 10 assists as Indiana ended Philadelphia's season-best three-game winning streak.

Reggie Miller also had 20 points for the Pacers, who shot 58 percent for the game.

The visiting 76ers managed only 39 percent shooting, with Armon Gilliam leading the way with 19 points and 10 rebounds.

Bullets 121, Bucks 98

Harvey Grant scored 17 points to help Washington build a 21-point halftime lead against Milwaukee, which lost its fourth straight game.

Michael Adams finished with 22 points and Grant 19 as the Bullets bounced back from Saturday's 45-point loss in New Jersey to post their easiest victory of the season. After shooting 33 percent against the Nets, Washington made 59 percent of its shots in the first half against the Bucks.

Rookie Todd Day scored a career-high 26 points for Milwaukee.

Houston's Hakeem Olajuwon scored 27 points and had 14 rebounds against the Clippers to help break the Rockets' seven-game road losing streak.

Jackson presents 14-point integration agenda to major league owners

GRAPEVINE (AP) — Baseball owners have heard what the Rev. Jesse Jackson has to say. Now they must decide what to do.

Jackson presented his 14-point agenda at a major league meeting Tuesday, called on current players to join his campaign for the integration of front offices and threatened boycotts if teams don't develop affirmative action plans.

"The problems Rev. Jackson discussed will not be solved in one night or season," Texas Rangers owner George W. Bush said. "But I think his purpose was to make sure the consciousness of the decision-makers was aroused."

Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud

Selig, chairman of the ruling executive council, called Jackson's speech reasoned and said he and National League president Bill White — who is black — will formulate baseball's reply expeditiously.

"He made a constructive and sensitive presentation this morning, and one that we will respond (to) with the dignity it deserves," Selig said, declining to give specifics.

Jackson, accompanied by a delegation that included the Rev. Al Sharpton, spoke to owners for about 45 minutes. Jackson had a short conversation with Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott, who made a surprise appearance at the meeting but didn't speak during it, according to Selig. Alleged racial remarks attributed to Schott renewed debate last fall about baseball's hiring practices.

"She has done grave injury to our society and to the game of baseball," Jackson said at a news conference. "She must be removed or suspended from baseball, at the least, for a period of time. She must be fined and she must be rehabilitated."

In other business: — The teams unanimously approved the sale of the San Francisco Giants from Bob Lurie to a group headed by Safeway Inc. chairman Peter Magowan.

— The executive council appointed an eight-person search committee for a commissioner to replace Fay Vincent, who quit under pressure Sept. 7. On the committee are Jackie Autry of California, Bill Bartholomay of Atlanta, Paul Beeston of Toronto, Douglas Danforth of Pittsburgh, Fred Kuhlmann of St. Louis, Carl Pohlad of Minnesota, Haywood Sullivan of Boston and Fred Wilpon of the New York Mets.

— Beeston and Wilpon gave an interim report from the committee restructuring the commissioner's job. Selig said he hoped for a final report in 2-to-6 weeks.

— John Harrington of the Red Sox reported on surveys of fan reception to the possibility of expanded play-offs. Selig said the matter wouldn't be addressed in depth until at least March.

Jackson said his exchange with Schott wasn't too significant and that his concern was a broader effort to increase minority hiring of all professional sports teams, colleges and sports media. Schott is to answer the allegations in a Jan. 22 meeting with the ruling executive council.

"To keep focus on her and to martyr her would be to take away focus from the real problem in athletics," Jackson said. "We're moving on beyond that."

whose term as NL president expires in March, be considered for commissioner and suggested Hank Aaron as another possibility.

White repeated that he wasn't interested. "I've conveyed that to everyone in the world," White said.

Jackson, who will hold another meeting of his Rainbow Commission for Fairness in Athletics in Washington on Feb. 26-27, called on current players to speak up for his cause.

"The silence of major league baseball players themselves ... has been deafening," Jackson said. "For the high visibility player ... to be silent in a time like this, we deserve more than this."

San Antonio, Sacramento added to Canadian League

TORONTO (AP) — Known for its 55-yard line, backfield in motion and wide-open offense, the Canadian Football League has gone international.

After 132 years of football in Canada, the CFL on Tuesday added two American cities: Sacramento, Calif., and San Antonio.

Long rumored, the expansion move came when seven of the eight league governors gave the go-ahead after 8 1/2 hours of meetings in Calgary.

Only the Winnipeg Blue Bombers voted against the move, which will see the two new franchises pay a fee of $3 million over six years for the right to join the now 10-team league this season.

Still, there's questions about a rule that mandates that each CFL team have 20 Canadian-born players on their roster.

"I really believe our protectionist system has literally destroyed football in this country," said Larry Ryckman of the Calgary Stampeders. "I hope this will open some pocket-books and make some people help develop better players out of this country."

Niether Ryckman nor commissioner Larry Smith nor any other owner were saying officially what the fate of that rule is.

Ryckman, though, said that because the jobs are guaranteed, Canadians haven't had to develop their youth and university football programs. He said because they now must fight for spots instead of being given them, young Canadians who want to play football will have to improve.

"Our training in Canada is lacking," he said. "Canadians can compete on every level, but it generally takes a few years longer for them to develop because their youth training has been ignored."

Minnesota pornographer argues RICO laws don't apply to him

(A P Photo) Ferris Alexander enters his Minneapolis, Minn., warehouse in May 1990 moments before FBI and federal marshals seized it. Alexander's attorneys argued before the U.S. Supreme Court Tuesday that anti-racketeering laws cannot be used to seize assets of pornographers.

By PHILIP BRASHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pornographers are not the equivalent of drug dealers and should not be put out of business over a few movies or books that are deemed obscene, the Supreme Court was told Tuesday.

The lawyer for Ferris Alexander, a Minnesota man who ran a chain of adult bookstores, argued that the government went too far when it used a federal anti-racketeering law to seize Alexander's business.

The Racketeer Influenced, Corrupt Organizations Act is a favorite law enforcement weapon against drug traffickers because of its stringent forfeiture provisions.

The seizure of Alexander's stores also violated his constitutional right to sell erotica that isn't obscene, attorney John Weston said.

"What the government did here was to totally eliminate the business and impose total prior restraint" on free speech, Weston said. "Many thousands of different titles were seized, none of which has been found to be or alleged to be obscene."

Alexander was convicted in a federal prosecution of selling seven obscene magazines and videotapes. As a result, he was ordered to forfeit his entire business under the penalty provisions of the law.

He also was sentenced to six years in prison and fined $200,000.

All the seized materials were of a similar nature, but it doesn't make any difference whether they were "cash registers or Gideon Bibles," said Solicitor General Kenneth Starr, arguing for the government

The RICO Act allows the government to seize all the assets of a criminal enterprise. In 1984, Congress added obscenity to the list of crimes to which the law could be applied.

"Pornography was in fact linked to organized crime and (is) a source of financial resources to organized crime. That's why Congress included it," Starr said.

Justice John Paul Stevens raised the possibility Tuesday that an airline could be seized by the government if it showed some erotic movies.

Sexually explicit material is presumed to be protected from government censorship under the First Amendment. But it can be stripped of such protection if found to be obscene.

Since 1973, the high court has defined as legally obscene any material found by average people to be patently offensive and to lack serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected Alexander's argument that use of RICO against him violated his free-speech rights. Alexander then sought Supreme Court review.

A decision is expected by July. The high court ruled in 1989 that states may use state anti-racketeering laws patterned after RICO to suppress X-rated material. But the court said prosecutors may not use those laws to shut adult bookstores before trials are held to determine if the material sold is obscene.

Since then, the court has rejected challenges to state and federal racketeering prosecutions in which sexually explicit material has been seized after adult-business owners were convicted.

The case is Alexander vs. U.S., 91-1526.

Florida watches Haitians

MIAMI (AP) — Gov. Lawton Chiles says Pentagon officials have assured him that South Florida will be spared the brunt of any large exodus from Haiti.

Chiles, who met on Monday in Washington with Pentagon officials to discuss plans to handle any immigration emergency affecting Florida, said the military is prepared to disperse up to 100,000 refugees across the United States.

"They did not talk specific details, but they did tell us they had worked on their plan, they felt they could handle an emergency," Chiles said in an interview Tuesday. "And we were talking about people being processed outside of Florida, in other states, at federal facilities."

President-elect Clinton's criticism of President Bush's policy of forcibly returning Haitian refugees without asylum hearings has raised hopes in Haiti of more lenient treatment. Hundreds of wooden boats are being built along Haiti's coast.

Officials here worry that South Florida, still rebuilding after Hurricane Andrew, will be hit with an influx on the scale of the 1980 Mariel boatlift, when 125,000 Cubans arrived.

The influx was a financial drain on the state, which has since established its own plan to deal with refugees, including processing and detention sites.

"It's a plan we hope we'll never have to activate," said Joe Pena, director of the governor's South Florida office. "This plan will kick in if we get the indication that the Immigration and Naturalization Service is just completely overwhelmed."
