

Recreation Park's lake stocked with truckload of trout

By ANGELA LEGGETT
Staff Writer

Texas Parks and Wildlife Department (TPWD) official Gerold Sturm of Electra released nearly 1,000 rainbow trout in Recreation Park on Thursday evening.

It is the first of two shipments of 1,000 trout to be delivered.

"The trout arrived around 4:30 p.m. in a tank on the back of a truck with a temperature of 44 degrees," said Director of Community Services Bill Hildebrandt. "After breaking through the two to three inches of ice on the pond the water was discovered to be a chilling 34 degrees."

Nearly an hour later, the fish from Possum Kingdom State Park were dumped into the water and immediately they were ready to be fished out, Hildebrandt said.

He said Sturm put some of the lake water into the truck tank with the fish to lower their temperature. After they swam in the 34-degree temperature in their tanks they were dumped in the water of the lake. This was so there would not be a shock of 10-degree difference because that would kill them.

"The city has made arrangements with TPWD to participate in a rainbow trout stocking program for the lake at Recreation Park," he said. "The second shipment is scheduled to arrive the second week in February."

According to Charles Munger, biologist II with TPWD fisheries lab in Canyon, before coming to Pampa, the trucks made deliveries at Lake Pauline at Copper Breaks State Park and Lake Theo at Caprock Canyon State Park.

Most of the fish are approximately eight inches in length with some measuring up to a foot.

"The state told us the fish would cost us 70 cents each," Hildebrandt said. "We were contacted six weeks after we sent a check for $700 for 1,000 fish and were told the state would match our offer fish per fish."

He said they were not expecting 2,000 fish, but wouldn't turn down the offer.

"This is part of a long-range fish stocking program designed to bring more fishing enthusiasts to Recreation Park Lake," Hildebrandt said.

The lake is currently stocked with yellow perch, largemouth bass and channel catfish.

"The intent of a winter trout stocking program is to get the trout fished out in the cool weather months," he said. "They won't be able to survive our summer like the other fish species."

As a TPWD-stocked lake, all people between the ages of 17 and 64 fishing at Recreation Park Lake are required to have a valid state fishing license along with any necessary stamps and abide by the size and quantity limits established by the state. People under 17 years of age or who are 65 or older are not required to possess a state resident fishing license although they are still

Taxpayer beware if you smoke, drink or drive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Get ready for higher gas taxes and taxes on employer-paid health premiums. That's what private economists are advising.

There was tough talk from Clinton's economic team last week about getting the deficit under control — and even cynical economists think Washington may really mean what it says.

While Clinton's campaign plan, "Putting People First," didn't spend a huge amount of time on the deficit problem, his new economic team listed it as priority No. 1 at confirmation hearings last week.

Clinton also has suggested that he would look at taxing employees for a portion of the health insurance premiums they now receive tax-free from their employers. While this is considered a possibility, many analysts said Clinton would likely hold off on this proposal until he puts forward his comprehensive package to reform health care.

Treasury Secretary-designate Lloyd Bentsen and Leon Panetta, picked as budget director, insisted that "everything is on the table" as the new administration struggles to cope with new, starkly worse deficit projections.

"Put on each of our desks what I would like to see considered as the vote of our lifetimes," Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., urged Bentsen. Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas said, "I can assure you he will have the support of Republicans" in the Senate.

"The chances of a substantial tax increase to reduce the deficit are now higher than they have been at any time in living memory," Michael K. Evans, head of a Washington forecasting firm, wrote to subscribers of his newsletter.

Evans said he believes politicians will make good on their pledges because Democratic and Republican lawmakers are coming to the realization that "time is rapidly running out to solve the deficit crisis."

Allen Sinai, chief economist of the Boston Co., said he believed the new administration meant business because of the blunt comments made not only by Bentsen and Panetta but the two officials chosen to be their deputies, Roger Altman at Treasury and Alice Rivlin at the budget office.

"There is no way that so many members of the economic team would be talking about so many painful measures without planning to back it up with action when they introduce their plan in February or March," Sinai said. "Americans had better believe it and get ready for it."

Economists also were in general agreement over what tax increases were likely to be included. They singled out increases in the gasoline tax and "sin taxes" on alcohol and tobacco as the likely first targets.

"Higher gasoline taxes have been the traditional way to finance the types of infrastructure programs that Clinton is talking about," said David Wyss, an economist at DRI-McGraw Hill Inc., the country's largest private forecasting firm. "And sin taxes are a likely suspect because politicians reason that people who put themselves at risk by drinking and smoking should pay for it."

Clinton bids farewell to Arkansas friends

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Bill Clinton of Arkansas bade wistful farewell to friends and neighbors Saturday, then embarked on the journey that will culminate in his inauguration as the nation's 42nd president. "I ask you to pray for us," he said. "I ask you to pull for us."

"It's time for us to go," the 46-year-old president-elect told several thousand people squeezed into an airport hangar for a send-off that had all the earmarks of a campaign rally.

"The road ahead is difficult," said the man who soon will inherit responsibility for managing the economy and grappling with world trouble spots such as Iraq, Somalia and the former Yugoslavia. Still, he said, "I am confident that together we will do this work."

Clinton, his wife Hillary and their daughter Chelsea were headed for Charlottesville, Va., site of Thomas Jefferson's Monticello home, as the first stop on their trip to Washington. His inauguration is slated for the stroke of noon on Wednesday.

Preparations were well along for the inauguration on the terrace of the Capitol and the accompanying hoopla — the traditional parade down Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House, the evening balls, the private receptions by the dozen and Thursday's open house at the White House.

President Bush, the odd-man out, was spending his final weekend as commander-in-chief at the presidential retreat at Camp David, the better to give packers and movers space to prepare the White House for the next occupant.

Clinton, the first member of the baby boomer generation to win the White House, departed with a gift from Little Rock Mayor Jim Dailey, a sign carved from Arkansas wood and bearing the inscription "Don't Stop Thinking About Tomorrow." It is the name of a Fleetwood Mac song that was frequently played at Clinton campaign rallies and was being played in the background in the hangar.

"I don't know when I will be home next or how often I can be there," said Clinton, who was born in the tiny town of Hope, Ark., and has been governor of his state for 12 of the last 14 years. "But you'll always be there with me. Arkansas runs deep in me and it always will."

Clinton noted he began his campaign 15 months ago, and said he did it reluctantly on a personal level, "but with determination because I believe our country needed to change course, had to face the challenges of this time and had to secure a future for our children."

"In November the people of America decided to give me the chance to lead that change, to face those challenges and secure that future. And I will do my best."

His remark that "It's time for us to go" was a variation on the campaign motto first uttered by Vice President-elect Al Gore at the Democratic National Convention in July, when he said of the Republicans, "It's time for them to go."

Earlier, Clinton and his daughter took one last walk around the grounds of the governor's mansion. They walked to a tree distant from the house, and when they turned back, she wiped a tear from her eye.

The president-elect spent most of the day packing and attending to last-minute details. "They're doing great," he said of his movers during a picture-taking session in the mansion.

A nearly full moving van was parked outside the governor's mansion. Clinton resigned as governor Dec. 12 but was permitted to remain in the mansion.

One box being loaded on the van was marked "Clinton hats." Another said "BC Suits, Room 219 White House." Another wardrobe box said "Chelsea Bedroom. Do Not crush."

Asked if he regretted leaving, Clinton said, "No. I've worked through that. I'm ready to go now, actually eager."

As the movers finished up, Clinton took time out for a jog. Scrambling down the bank of the nearby Arkansas River, he set Chelsea's pet frog free. "She decided to leave it here where it can live a normal life," he said.

Press secretary Dee Dee Myers said Clinton has been making considerable progress on his inaugural address. She said he has been sketching it out over the past few days in longhand on legal pads.

"But I don't think he'll get much work done today," Myers said.

Commissioners Court endorses county meal compensation plan

By JOHN McMILLAN
Staff Writer

There will now be more flexibility on compensating Gray County employees for their meals while traveling out of the county on official business.

Gray County Commissioners Court on Friday approved a policy under which it will provide reimbursement on meal receipts with the following limits: breakfast, $5; lunch, $6.50; and dinner, $8.50.

Without a receipt, the per diem reimbursement limits are: $10 for a day in which the employee leaves and returns to the county the same day; $15 for a day when the employee is out of the county the night after travel or the night before travel; and $20 for a day when the employee is out of the county the entire workday and the night before and after the workday.

The maximum meal reimbursement for a day is $20.

Meal reimbursement for travel on a holiday, a Saturday, or a Sunday is limited to $15 a day.

Before Friday's action, Gray County compensated county employees for their business trip meals based on the amount of the receipt from each meal. Employees were expected to turn in each meal receipt for which compensation was sought.

The Commissioners Court appointed three members of the general public to the county's 10-member Salary Grievance Committee.

Those appointed are Pamela Marie Phelps, Herman Joseph Straub, and Kathryn Loyce Smiles.

If they accept the appointment, their terms begin this month.

The Salary Grievance Committee is also composed of seven Gray County elected officials, said Wanda Carter, Gray County clerk.

The county's elected officials may file a grievance with the committee concerning their salary, Carter said. In addition, non-elected county employees who failed to resolve a salary-related complaint through an appeal to the Commissioners Court can submit the issue to the committee.

In other action, the group:

- Approved a motion by Greene to keep the payday for county employees on the same day that commissioners meet. Commissioners generally meet on the 1st and 15th days of each month. Gray County Treasurer Scott Hahn had recommended that paychecks issued on the last workday of month be given to employees that day, eliminating the delay on payment of employees' salaries.

- Approved a minute order supporting the proposed location of a state prison in Wheeler County near Shamrock.

- Approved the establishment of a new bank account for Sheriff Stubblefield and the transfer of $114,500 from former Sheriff Free's account to the new account for Stubblefield.

- Approved bonds paid by 11 newly elected and one appointed county official (A.C. Malone), ranging from $2,000 to $100,000. Carter registers the bonds for the county, which offer protection to the county against embezzlement by county officials, according to Hahn.

- Approved a request by GPM Gas Corp. of Amarillo to cross three county roads in Precinct 3 north of Grandview with an eight-inch natural gas pipeline.

- Approved a holiday schedule for 1993 in which county offices will be closed on Dec. 24-27 for Christmas and Dec. 31-Jan. 3 for New Year's holiday.

- Designated Kerri Trolin as a volunteer worker in the Lake McClellan concession building. The designation will allow her to qualify for workers' compensation insurance if she suffers an on-the-job injury. Trolin and her husband, Jerry, a

Panhandle Community Services breaks ground for new building

Panhandle Community Services (PCS) invited guests to its groundbreaking activities for a new building and multi-purpose service center Friday morning.

The Chamber of Commerce Gold Coats, PCS staff, contractors, local dignitaries and guests attended the celebration at 411 N. Cuyler.

Oil overcharge funds were allocated from the Governor's Office and distributed by the Texas Department of Transportation for this project, with the balance generated from PCS, according to a news release.

The brick veneer building will cover 2,500 square feet at a cost of $193,000. It will have ample waiting room area for passengers as well as clients seeking other PCS services. Projected construction time is about five months. At that time the staff will relocate from their present facility at 322 S. Cuyler.

In the near future, plans are on the drawing board to pave and enclose the neighboring lot for a parking area. It will be a security fenced in area with ample lighting for transportation vehicles and staff parking.

It will also function as a parking area for a "park and ride" type service for clients who wish to come to the Transit terminal and utilize transportation services for out-of-town-travel.

The PCS Transit System is a public transportation service for the general public.

Other PCS services include emergency assistance programs, HUD rental assistance, vocational assessment/counseling/training services, information and referral, and weatherization.

Margo Stanley serves as regional manager of Panhandle Community Services.

Pasta perfect doesn't have to be Italian these days. For an Oriental, take on everyone's favorite: pair fresh tuna steak with soba noodles or thin fettuccini in a soy-ginger sauce. (Sizzle garlic and ginger, add chicken stock, soy sauce, a little rice vinegar and hot pepper.)

Make-believe veal schnitzel: cutlets of turkey breast, coated with egg whites and mustard, then breaded and pan-fried quickly.

Baked pears are even more elegant than baked apples. Remove core from the bottom, leaving decorative stem intact. Brush cut pear with anisette, and stand up in baking dish. Brush tops with melted butter, sprinkle with sugar and bake about 45 minutes at 425 degrees.

Almonds, walnuts and pecans taste better when they're toasted in a 350-degree oven for 10 minutes. Stir now and then. Keep refrigerated.

Something special for your apple pie: built-in cheddar cheese flavor. Add a cup of grated cheese to the flour mixture for the crust before adding ice water.

Baghdad OKs flights, but not their safety

By The Associated Press

Baghdad has grudgingly said U.N. weapons inspection flights can resume, but under terms that the United Nations says are unacceptable. The United States says the allies may mount another air raid unless Iraq gives in.

The U.N. hopes to resume its flights this weekend.

Iraq's refusal to let a team of chemical warfare inspectors into Iraq on U.N. planes was one of the issues that provoked a U.S.-led bombing raid on Wednesday.

In the latest episode of Iraq-U.S. brinkmanship, President Bush on Friday ordered Saddam Hussein to grant the U.N. inspectors flight clearance within four hours. Just before the deadline, Iraq gave its approval. But it failed to guarantee the flights' safety, and said that the flights could only be made Friday through Monday.

The U.N. Special Commission that is enforcing the terms of the Gulf War cease-fire said Iraq's concession was inadequate. It asked Iraq to guarantee the safety of its flights, giving Baghdad time to reconsider its position.

Since the end of the Gulf War in 1991, the Special Commission has been in charge of monitoring and destroying Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. The commission is more interested in continuing its work than it is in punishing Iraq, commission spokesman Tim Trevan indicated Friday.

"We want to get in and do our job," he told reporters at the United Nations. "Each day that goes by means that our opportunity to destroy chemical weapons is not operating."

The United Nations did not set a new deadline Friday, but Trevan said he hoped to receive guarantees in time to have a flight in the air by this morning.

Officials at the White House, Pentagon and State Department said the administration considered Iraq's response unsatisfactory. A senior Pentagon official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the United States reserved the right to strike without notice.

The aircraft carrier USS Kitty Hawk remains poised in the Persian Gulf. Aircraft from the Kitty Hawk took to the skies Wednesday to bomb the air defense network in southern Iraq.

Wednesday's raids followed threatening deployments of anti-aircraft weapons in a "no-fly zone" in southern Iraq, repeated border incursions into Kuwait, and continued Iraqi defiance of the U.N. resolutions that ended fighting in the Gulf War after Iraq was forced to reverse its invasion of Kuwait.

As a condition of the cease-fire, Iraq agreed to surrender its weapons of mass destruction under U.N. supervision.

Baghdad began to ease off on its latest showdown with the West on Thursday, when it promised to would stop forays into Kuwait to retrieve weapons abandoned when Iraqi troops retreated.

But Iraq has held fast to its refusal to move anti-aircraft missiles from the allies set up to shield dissident Kurds and Shiite Muslims from Iraqi air attacks.

And it continues harassment of allied flights patrolling over the no-fly zones in its northern and southern regions.

A senior Pentagon official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Iraq fired on three coalition aircraft patrolling the zones Friday.

The Iraqi fire fell well short of the aircraft, the official said.

Iraq's intransigence may be intended to buttress the morale of Iraqis who may fear a repeat of the Gulf War. Unconfirmed reports say the government flooded the market with food to avert shortages — and panic. Food stocks appeared normal, and shoppers calmly went about their business in Baghdad.

The Washington Post quoted unidentified Air Force sources Friday as saying that a stray 2,000-pound bomb heavily damaged an apartment building near Basra. It said Pentagon officials gave no explanation and no casualty estimate.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said Friday he could not confirm an apartment building was hit, but did not rule it out. Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said one bomb hit "some kind of structure" that was not a target.

With Western and Iraqi TV cameras following, Iraqi officials took journalists on a guided tour to see the rubble of two brick houses and wounded and weeping civilians in southern Iraq on Friday.

Iraq says 19 people were killed — 17 military personnel and two civilians — and 15 were wounded, civilians and military.

Unheralded player could steal spotlight in AFC championship

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Just about everywhere you look on the field today at the AFC championship game, you'll be seeing stars.

From Dan Marino to Jim Kelly to Mark Clayton to Thurman Thomas. From Keith Jackson to Bruce Smith to Louis Oliver to Cornelius Bennett. Even on the Miami sideline, in his aqua Dolphins sweater or windbreaker, is the Don of coaching Dons, Mr. Shula.

So why do you get the feeling one of the lesser lights just might steal the spotlight and carry his team into the Super Bowl?

Maybe the third meeting this season of AFC East rivals Miami and Buffalo won't be a showcase for Marino and Kelly, two of the top quarterbacks of their time. Maybe it won't be focused on one of the 13 Pro Bowl players on hand.

Perhaps Dwight Hoolier or Don Beebe will be the key performer. Maybe it will be Jeff Uhlenake or Phil Hansen, J.B. Brown or Mitch Frerotte.

"One of the great things about our team is that we've developed some depth," Bills coach Marv Levy said. The Dolphins have noticed.

"They lose people, like Thurman Thomas against Pittsburgh, and somebody else comes in and does a great job," Miami defensive end Jeff Cross said, referring to Ken Davis, who rushed for 104 yards in Buffalo's 24-3 victory that got it to a third straight AFC title game. "Kelly goes out and Frank Reich comes in and they win two straight.

"I don't think San Diego is near the team that Buffalo is," said Cross, whose team routed the Chargers 31-0 last week. "That's why Buffalo is still playing and San Diego is not. Buffalo has so many stars and so many good players to step in.

"San Diego is not in the class of this team."

If the Dolphins are stargazing, they could be in for a jolt. If they pay too much attention to Smith and Bennett and Darryl Talley, the less-heralded Jeff Wright at nose tackle and Hansen at end will be more troublesome. That pair played superbly at Pittsburgh, with Wright getting two sacks and dominating the middle.

"Jeff has been great this year, especially late in the season when a lot of us were injured," Smith said. "He deserves to be in the Pro Bowl."

The equally unrecognized Uhlenake, Miami's starter at center for four years, has the task of stopping Wright. While All-Pro tackle Richmond Webb gets the accolades, Uhlenake has become just as solid a blocker.

Yet who outside of Dolphins fans and his peers know of him?

Or of Beebe, the third receiver for the Bills? With Andre Reed and James Lofton at the position, Beebe has no star rating. But he leads the Bills with 10 postseason catches and is the speediest of the terrific trio.

"I think it opens things up more over the middle because I think the defensive backs always have a threat," Beebe said. "As they go through practice that week, they say, 'We've got to make sure we watch this deep route here.'"

Watch it and cover it, which could be the responsibility of cornerback Brown. What, you never heard of him, either?

"We won't stop them all the time," he said. "They've got so many guns, like James and Andre and Beebe. We'll try stopping them getting into the end zone and stop them the majority of the time. That's what we have to do to win."

Quarterback Jim Kelly is expected to return to the starting lineup when the Bills meet the Dolphins today.

Iba compiled 767 collegiate basketball wins

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Henry Iba won 767 college basketball games and two Olympic gold medals in 41 years of coaching with a touch that inspired universal respect and admiration.

He frustrated opponents with man-to-man defense and deliberate, ball-control offense, and had an impact on the game that his colleagues say will be felt for many years.

"Whether he realized it or not, he has touched every coach's philosophy in the game," North Carolina coach Dean Smith said.

Iba, 88, died early Friday morning of heart failure. He had been hospitalized since Wednesday. The funeral will be held Monday at 2 p.m. in Gallagher-Iba Arena in Stillwater.

Iba's 767 victories are the second-most in history. He spent 36 years and won 655 games at Oklahoma State, including national championships in 1945 and '46 when the school was called Oklahoma A&M.

"Everybody recognized Mr. Iba as a great coach, but what set him aside was the fact he was a great person, a caring person," said Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton, who played under Iba.

"Even the people he coached against had great warmth for him. Too often in the coaching profession we don't find that, but I've not met a coach that knew Mr. Iba that didn't have the utmost respect for him."

Iba was born Aug. 6, 1904, in Easton, Mo. He began his coaching career in 1927 at Classen High School in Oklahoma City. After two seasons there, he went to Maryville Teachers College in Missouri.

He spent four seasons at Maryville and one year at the University of Colorado before taking over at Oklahoma A&M.

"When you compare him to a modern coach today who finds talent that already exists, the difference is Mr. Iba was a true coach, a teacher, a mentor, who taught the fundamentals of the game," said Bob Kurland, who helped lead Oklahoma A&M to its NCAA titles in 1945 and '46.

"Mr. Iba was not a great recruiter. He felt he was a teacher," Kurland said. "If people wanted to play the game of basketball, they would come to him. And they did."

Iba coached the U.S. Olympic team three times. His teams won gold medals in 1964 and '68, then lost to the Soviet Union in 1972 in one of the most disputed endings ever.

Indiana coach Bob Knight was especially close to Iba. In 1984, when he coached the Olympic team, Knight asked Iba to serve as a special assistant coach and speak to the team each day at practice. After winning the gold medal, the players honored Iba by carrying him on their shoulders around the court.

"There weren't many of who knew what was going on that didn't have tears in our eyes," recalled Bill Wall, former executive director of USA Basketball, the sport's national governing body. "Maybe some of those kids didn't know who he was, but each of them had just spent a month with him."

Iba's tenets were solid defense and a patient offense, and he insisted that his teams do both well. Three practices a day were not uncommon.

"I realize it takes talent to coach skilled kids," said former Kansas State coach Jack Hartman, who played and coached under Iba. "But Mr. Iba could take a lot of Oklahoma country boys and take them as far as they could possibly go, and make them compete with the very best."

He was from a family of coaches. One brother, Clarence, coached at Tulsa in the 1950s. His other brothers, Earl and Howard, coached high school programs in Oregon and Missouri, respectively.

Henry Iba's son, Moe, coaches at Texas Christian and his nephew, Gene, coached at Baylor until last season.

Case closed, Crazy Ray is Cowboys' biggest fan

By ARNIE STAPLETON
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Ray Jones is the absolute biggest Dallas Cowboys fan. No doubt about it. Hands down. Case closed.

You know Ray Jones. Everybody does. Loved America's Team under Landry? Then you couldn't get enough of Ray Jones.

Despised the Dooomsday Defense? Then you disliked Ray Jones, no doubt. Champion Jimmy Johnson's turnaround? Then Ray Jones is your champion.

You know Ray Jones. You just don't know him by his real name, that's all. You know him as Crazy Ray, the self-appointed mascot of America's team, whose star-studded chaps, stickhorse Bobo and white Stetsons are as firmly entrenched in Cowboys lore as Tom Landry's fedoras.

He's been leading cheers since the Cowboys were born in 1960, long before Emmitt Smith, Michael Irvin and Troy Aikman were born.

He flies to most road games to antagonize the crowd, and he's been to all home games in team history, save three.

He missed his first Cowboys game 10 years ago for his father's funeral. And in 1990, he missed twice while recuperating from a heart attack.

"I got letters from England, Germany, Canada. I didn't realize I was known all over the world like that," the 62-year-old Jones said. "They put me on the national news, said I was sick in the hospital. That was a hoot."

Doctors told him to slow down, but he didn't. His Cowboys were making a run at the playoffs and he figured they needed him.

His only concession was to quit climbing the stadium's steps.

"I used to run upstairs, but since my heart got so bad, I just stay on the field," he said. "Sometimes I have to sit down and rest a while."

He still gets a kick out of balancing himself on the rail that encircles the field at Texas Stadium and walking along it. He's never fallen, and it's a good thing because it's at least 15 feet to the carpet.

It started in the 1950s when

Crazy Ray was known as Whistling Ray and worked the crowds at the Cotton Bowl, selling novelties. In a white tuxedo and top hat with a working water faucet on top, Jones worked one side of the stadium while wife Mattie sold cushions on the other.

They swapped sides at halftime. "I used to go to the games just to watch him," said Mattie, who met Crazy Ray at a high school track meet in 1947. They got married seven years later and she helped him design the faucet hat that was his first signature.

"It was kind of a secret how it worked," she said. "He would sell pennants and pass by and somebody would reach to touch it and he'd squirt water on them."

Mattie did reveal one secret about the hat. "Sometimes, it wasn't water in there. Sometimes it was beer."

Crazy Ray worked the sidelines for the old Dallas Texans before they moved to Kansas City and became the Chiefs, and he was the mascot for the Dallas Tornados soccer team in the 1960s.

But the Cowboys are his true love.

And when owner Clint Murchison Jr. moved the team from the Cotton Bowl to Texas Stadium in 1971, he invited Crazy Ray along. Mattie again took to watching her husband from the stands.

As any cowboy knows, a cowboy ain't nothing without his horse. Crazy Ray's is named Bobo, a stickhorse that became his trademark two decades ago after he failed to pass along the present to his grandchildren.

"They told me I was too big," Crazy Ray said. "But it went over big, and I've been riding him ever since."

The only time Crazy Ray worried about his future was when Jerry Jones bought the team and cleaned house in 1989. That very week, the new owner introduced himself at a banquet where Crazy Ray was performing.

"I said, 'Well, since everybody else is gone, I guess it's my time,'" Crazy Ray recalled. "He said, 'No, you're not going anywhere. You are a part of the Cowboys and you can stay as long as you want.'"

PHS's developmental class roots for 'America's Team'

Signed Cowboys' football to raise funds

By DAN FROMM
Staff Writer

Jerilyn Weichert may not have been a big Dallas Cowboys fan back when the season started in September, but these days, the teacher of the developmental class at Pampa High School desperately wants to see "America's Team" back in the Super Bowl.

Weichert's class currently is raffling off a football, autographed by the Cowboys players and coaches ... all of them. That's more than 50 names inked on the brown and white ball. While the ball alone is estimated at $88, nobody is quite sure of the value with the signatures.

Sharon Holmes, at Major League Sports, said it would cost close to $1,000 to get each individual player's autograph. Through the raffle, the ball can be bought for just $1 and a little luck.

The developmental class consists of 12 students and 16 teaching assistants and so far they've sold more than 250 tickets. Major League Sports is also selling the raffle tickets and they'll continue to be available until Feb. 5, regardless of when the Cowboys' season ends.

"We're hoping they go all the way to the Super Bowl, because the value of the ball will keep going up as long as they keep winning," Weichert said. The students haven't stopped talking about the ball since they got it last month. Every day, they would come in and talk about the Cowboys and look at the ball, searching for their favorite names.

"We decided to get it shrunk-wrapped in plastic to preserve the names," Weichert explained. "The kids were playing with it so much that we were afraid they'd rub off some of the autographs."

The football came from an employee of Texas Stadium.

Weichert didn't want to use the man's name, because she doesn't want anyone else to call him.

"We were trying to think of some ideas for fundraisers and one of the students just called someone they knew and somehow we got the ball," Weichert said.

Now, the ball and the Cowboys are the center of attention. "All they talked about on Monday was the Philadelphia game," she said. "It's every hour of every day. There's no doubt in any of the kids' minds, the Cowboys are going to the Super Bowl."

And if they do, Weichert thinks her students will benefit. She said their goal is to sell around 600 tickets. "The more the Cowboys win, the better chance we have of reaching that goal."

The money raised from this raffle will be pooled with money raised from a raffle held earlier and one still to come to pay for a banquet at the end of the school year. The banquet is held each year in appreciation of local businesses who employ students from the class.

"It's a real treat for all the kids and they look forward to it all year," Weichert said. For now, they're looking forward to the Cowboys winning today in San Francisco.

Klan, opponents face off in Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — About 50 Ku Klux Klan members rallied Saturday to protest the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday and were met by about 5,000 opponents who threw eggs, beat drums and shouted them down.

Six anti-Klan protesters were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct, police said.

"This was a cakewalk compared with 10 years ago," said Mike Cox of the Texas Department of Public Safety. In 1983, a Klan march here sparked bitter protests and violent outbursts that resulted in a dozen injuries.

In Montgomery, Ala., about 50 people also attended a Capitol rally on Saturday where Klan leaders demanded that the Confederate battle flag be returned to the Capitol dome's flagpole. And in Miami, the KKK won a court order allowing it to hold a rally Monday in Davie, Fla., calling for the abolition of the King holiday and warning about an influx of Haitian refugees.

In Austin, about 150 police in riot gear and dozens of Texas Rangers and Travis County Sheriff's deputies were posted around the Capitol, where Klan members rallied on the building's steps.

Earlier, about 1,000 people marched to protest the Klan. But that crowd grew to about 5,000 hours later as about 50 Klan members arrived under heavy police protection.

Michael Lowe of Waco, leader of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in Texas, and Thomas Robb, the Knights' KKK national leader, spoke for about an hour, protesting the holiday that honors the slain civil rights leader.

"You will never have America because we will not let you," Robb said to the crowd that shouted at him and tossed eggs.

During the protest, about 75 people organized by Austin singer Steve Fromholz "mooned" Klan members. Some dropped their pants to show bare behinds, while others unveiled boxer shorts with anti-Klan messages.

"We just wanted to show the Klan what a ridiculous organization they are," said Jay Gagen, 33, one of those who dropped his pants.

After leaving the Capitol steps, the Klan members — behind a wall of helmeted troopers — boarded state and county prison buses and left with a police escort.

During the morning anti-Klan rally, demonstrators listened to a recording of King's "I Have a Dream" speech, and civil rights activists urged the crowd to avoid a confrontation.

In Alabama, William Burchfield, grand titan of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, said a judge who blocked display of the Confederate battle flag over the historic building and four black legislators whose lawsuit led to his ruling "put themselves in front of the people."

A former Klan grand wizard, Stanley McCollum of Tusculumbia, said the "battle over the flag is a battle for power and control," adding, "The blacks are constantly trying to get more."

In Miami, federal Judge Shelby Highsmith ruled Saturday that the city of Davie's order that the Klan buy a $1 million insurance policy before it hold its rally violated the group's free speech rights.

Once again, an event featuring pairs makes history.

There are just some things you can live without — a new car, a trip to Europe, a diamond ring — but no matter what, you still have to eat.

For the times when the budget is s-t-r-e-t-c-h-e-d beyond recognition, the Gray County senior 4-H food group has prepared a week long menu for the economy minded family.

The group defined an imaginary family scenario and created menus, sought out and prepared recipes for them — all for the sum of $67 — for one week's worth of nutritious meals.

In their scenario, Mom works outside the home; the children are eight and five years old. The group presumed that staples — flour, sugar and spices — would be on hand in the pantry. The 4-H'ers used real grocery ads and coupons to figure food prices. They planned for three meals and one snack each day. Menus were created using taste, nutrition and appearance considerations.

And the kicker — all this could cost no more than $70 for seven days worth of food.

Gray County Extension Agent Donna Brauchi pointed out that nationally, low-cost food plans run in the neighborhood of $80-90 per week for a family of four.

4-H'ers explained that they learned that savings are available through "double coupon days" at local grocery stores, the economy of buying in bulk, and using a food item in several different ways.

One obstacle the eight member group encountered and worked through successfully, was diversity of likes and dislikes — much like a family group, Brauchi pointed out.

They ended up with recipes which are fairly mainstream. The ingredients are not exotic, but easily obtainable items. Many of them were selected from grocery sale circulars.

The recipes do not require complicated procedures.

"We tried to make it convenient for the housewife to do, so, they are pretty easy," said Richard Williams.

The teens agreed that this project was more difficult than they anticipated at the outset. Trying to meet nutritional, quantity and financial requirements was more of a juggling act than the group bargained for.

"Before I did this, I didn't know how much food cost," said Amanda Kludt.

To gauge nutritional requirements, the 4-H'ers used the "food pyramid," a method of counting servings for each food group.

Teens involved in the project are Kirk McDonald, Grace Sutton, David Kludt, Amanda Kludt, Brian Brauchi, Nonnie James, Kim McDonald and Richard Williams. They are led by Eileen Kludt and Judy Sutton.

Recipes

Ham, Cabbage and Rice Skillet

1 small green cabbage (1 lb.), coarsely chopped

1 box (7 ounces) yellow rice mix with seasoning packet
1 medium-size, bell pepper, chopped
3 green onion sliced
8 ounces lean ham cut in 1/2 inch chunks

1. In a large, deep, preferably non-stick skillet, mix 2 cups water, cabbage, rice, contents of seasoning packet, bell pepper and green onions. Bring to a boil, reduce heat, cover and simmer 15 minutes.

2. Stir in ham, cover and simmer 3 to 5 minutes longer until liquid is absorbed and rice and vegetables are tender. Sprinkle with reserved green onions.

Brian Brauchi and the banana muffins he created.

Banana Muffins

Cream sugar, oil and eggs. Add remaining ingredients and mix. Grease and flour muffin pans. Fill muffin cups 2/3 full. Bake at 350° F for 30 minutes (approximately 20 minutes for mini-muffins).

Makes one dozen regular size muffins or 36 mini-muffins.

Turkey Fruit Salad

3 cups turkey, cooked, cut in chunky pieces
3/4 cup celery, chopped
3/4 red grapes, halved and seeded

20 ounces can pineapple chunks, drained

1. Toss turkey, celery, grapes and pineapple together lightly.

2. Gently mix salad dressing and salt with chicken mixture. Chill.

Lemon - Dill Green Beans

2 cans cut green beans
1 tablespoon bacon grease
1 1/2 teaspoon dill seed

6 tablespoons margarine
6 tablespoons flour
1 cup liquid from beans
1 cup milk

Money saving tips

- Plan meals for the week using nutritional guidelines.
- Check the newspaper ads for weekly specials.
- Check your pantry. Note any basic ingredients that you might be out of or that need to be replenished. Write it on your list.

- Prepare a shopping list each time you got to the store. Group on your list according to store layout. Buy only from the list unless you see an item that you can substitute that will save you money.
- Do not go to the store when you are hungry.
- Do not go to the store when it is crowded.
- Try to buy food weekly, not each day.

- Compare prices of different brands at the same store.
- Purchase only food quantities that your family will use. Larger quantities may seem cheaper, but can be more expensive if your family does not eat the whole amount. Think of your family — will buying in quantity mean too much of the same food for meals?

- Read the information printed on containers. Look for total weight, cost, nutrition information and expiration dates.
- Always weight fresh fruits and vegetables before you get to the stand.
- You can also save money by buying more than one item or container. A store may be selling two cans of soup for $3.99, but if you buy only one can, you will pay $2.00. You will save $.01 by buying two cans.
- Buy fresh fruits and vegetables in season.
- Canning and freezing food are both very good ways to save money if you have access to fresh fruits and vegetables at an economical buy.
- Purchase breads at a day old bakery.

- Compare prices of foods and the ways food items are on the shelf. Example: orange juice can be fresh, frozen, canned or powdered. Which is the best buy?
- Each kind of canned and frozen food is sold under many different brands. To choose your brand, compare prices and weights and measures. Buy the brand that gives the most for the money. After tasting it once, the brand may be the least tasty. Until you discover your favorite brand, this is the best way to find out.
- Money can be saved on some foods by making them at home. Rolls, cakes and salad dressings are good examples. Frozen prepared foods cost much more money than those made at home.
- Canned milk and powdered milk can be substituted for fresh milk. They are just as nourishing, but cost less.
- Substitute dried peas, dried beans, peanut butter and eggs for meats in some meals. These foods are called meat substitutes and are high in protein.
- Lunch meats are costly. Use large roasts for several meals including sandwiches.
- Do not buy a cut-up chicken. Learn to cut them yourself and save money.
- Stretch meat in your favorite recipes by using rice, bread, noodles, spaghetti or macaroni.
- Select fruit "juices" not fruit "drinks." Fruit flavored drinks usually supply only sugar.
- Do not buy foods just because the price is low. Buy only for your family's needs. Do not buy foods that are bruised and show other signs of decay.
- Always listen and watch the checker at the check out counter. People make mistakes.
- A penny or two on each food item may not sound like a big saving. But you will be surprised by how much you can save over a few months.

Collecting can be habit-forming

By MIA B. MOODY
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO, Texas (AP) — Collecting is like a drug for many people. First you buy one, then you buy another and before you know it you are addicted.

Woodway resident Mary Graham got hooked on collecting several years ago.

"It all began when I was a little girl and my mother bought me a butterfly sculpture," she said. "Throughout my childhood, people added to it, and I soon had a collection. I treasured it."

Graham's collection fever did not stop there. Today, she has about 10 different types of collections, including elephants, crystal eggs, sea shells and ceramic sculptures.

"I just love unusual things," she said. "Most of them are gifts from different people, and I have bought a few."

Collecting is popular throughout the world. In fact, the Encyclopedia of Associations lists more than 600 types of collectors' clubs. They range from collectors of stamps and baseball cards to frogs and dolls.

Most collectors say they do it for sentimental reasons and because it makes them feel like they have accomplished something.

Kenneth Kutz, president of The Collectors Club in New York, said collecting is instinctive for certain people. He speculates that the attraction is in having something tangible.

"It appeals to certain people and not to others," he said in a telephone interview. "Some children have a natural collecting interest, whether it is in baseball cards, memorabilia or bugs."

Kutz said collecting is one of the greatest hobbies a person can have.

"Anyone who collects will get a lot of satisfaction out of it," he said. "You can show your collection to others and there is a certain pride that goes with it."

Don Stewart, author of 34 books on collecting, said once you start collecting, you are a collector for life. He has about 22 different types of collections, including miniature license plates, old nameplates for cars, coffee mugs and phonograph records.

Stewart said many collectors don't want anyone else to know they do it. It's kind of a, "I've got it and you don't mentality," he said in a telephone interview from Phoenix, Ariz.

"For many years I ran a coin and stamp store and many people would not come in if there was someone else in the store," he said.

Although one might think that there is a deep psychological explanation to why people collect, Beverly Barker, a licensed professional counselor, said they do it simply because they want to.

"Collecting is a hobby that is therapeutic for people," she said. "They find a great deal of satisfaction from doing it."

JoAnn Bristol, a therapist at Riverview Center, said the type of collection that a person chooses often depends on family culture and rituals.

"Different things mean and appeal to different people," she said. "It depends on what is important to you and what has been passed down from generations."

"I know a woman who collects angels because her grandmother was religious and told her that she would become an angel after she dies. There is usually a story behind collections."

Mitzy Waddle, a Hewitt resident, has a story behind her nativity scene collection.

"I got started because my mother gave me the one I grew up with after I got married," she said. "Then someone else gave me one and pretty soon I was collecting them."

Today, her collection includes about 120 nativity scenes in various sizes. Her smallest is on the end of a souvenir spoon and her largest is about 12 inches tall.

Waddle said she collects them because of the thrill she gets every Christmas from unpacking them. "It is a holdover from when I was a child," she said.

Northcrest resident Dalton Tynes started his antique furniture collection for a different reason than most collectors. He says he wanted to learn more about history.

"I wanted to study the different styles of chairs, types of wood and periods," he said. "One thing led to another."

Tynes' home became so crowded with his antique collection, that he opened an antique store (Ambient Antique) about six years ago.

No matter how much money or time a person puts into a collection, the most important thing is that they enjoy it, said Brent Bankston, card collector and manager of Bankston's Sports Cards.

"In the long run you are going to have the collection," he said. "If it is something you like and it goes down in value you will still like it. But if you don't like it and it goes down in value, it is worthless to you."

Relief available for chronic pain

By DR. HAL J. MITNICK
New York University School of Medicine

"I ache all over."
If this is a complaint after your first game of tennis in a few months or an afternoon of shoveling snow, chances are that you just have a few strained muscles.

However, for people who have not stressed their bodies, widespread "soft tissue" pain may be a sign of fibromyalgia (fibro-MY-al-gee-ah), a pain syndrome.

Fibromyalgia, whose cause is unknown, is a chronic condition. People with the problem suffer from aches all the time, not just occasionally like a weekend athlete or yard worker. And it is more common in women than men, and in the middle-aged than in the young or old.

But things are not as grim as they appear because there are a number of ways to relieve the condition.

For one thing, fibromyalgia is not a progressive disease like rheumatoid arthritis; it does not continually worsen. In recognizing that the illness is limited, people with the syndrome can keep up their spirits in a number of ways.

The treatment of fibromyalgia consists of exercise, drug therapy and physical therapy.

Exercise is an important component of therapy. Bicycling, swimming, jogging, walking and aerobics are recommended to keep soft tissue in good shape, and which may assist in pain relief.

Anti-inflammatory drugs are used to reduce the discomfort of aching soft tissues. Tricyclic anti-depressant medications provide pain relief and help patients get to sleep.

The pain of fibromyalgia is reflected in all of the soft tissues — muscles, tendons, ligaments and skin. Unlike arthritis, the pain of fibromyalgia is usually located around the joints and not in them. Pain is frequently on both sides of the body and above and below the waist.

Fibromyalgia is considered a syndrome and sufferers often also have associated chronic fatigue and an irritable bowel, which is characterized by abdominal pain and loose stools.

Old hardware store provides hours of entertainment

RIESEL (AP) — For more than a century, the Riesel Hardware and Lumber Co. building on Highway 6 has provided hours of priceless entertainment for hundreds of boys and girls.

Of course, several decades ago parents weren't as afraid of their children falling from the manually operated elevator or injuring themselves on one of several cranks, pulleys or ropes once used there — or at least, that's what some say.

The creaking wooden building seems to echo the voices of children running about, and beside one doorway are engraved the words, "No girls allowed. Only boys."

"I keep my coffee pot on for everyone who comes by my store, and I've talked to many people, especially older men, who reminisce about the days they played out in the old lumberyard," said Joan Hall. "It seems that back then, people weren't as scared of their children getting hurt and someone getting sued or anything."

Hall and her husband, John, bought the old lumber building in November. The company closed its doors forever in August, after operating there since the late 1880s.

On Dec. 1, the couple opened a store there, and now the old lumberyard provides entertainment of a different nature. At least 20 antique dealers, including several from the Dallas area, rented space at Hall's Antiques within its first month of operation.

"I sell their antiques for them, and they just pay me rent for the space," Hall said. A 100-square-foot space rents for about $1 a square foot.

Unlike most antique stores, though, the old lumber building is itself an antique, she said.

"This is really such a wonderful building. I can't imagine how many people have been in here over the years."

"We transact our business from a safe that is at least as old as the building itself. Inside the safe are some actual receipts that date back to 1895," she said.

The safe was probably built in the late 1880s by the Mosler Safe Company. In addition to several business receipts left inside it, there are some catalog ads about old appliances.

"They must have sold appliances here, too," Hall said. "One ad I'm particularly proud of is about an old washing machine. I have the actual model on display in the store now."

The ad reads, "Voss Washer Model G-59. Powered with the famous Briggs and Stratton four-cycle gasoline engine. Price $109.95."

Upstairs, visitors will find a 8-by-12-foot, manually operated elevator "in good working condition," Hall said.

Other rooms within the building, which occupies an entire city block in Riesel, were used for manufacturing coffins, pine boxes, glass windows and window frames. There's even an old carriage bolt cabinet that's on consignment near the northwest side of the building. The lumber company kept equipment for fixing carriages inside the cabinet.

The Halls said they have plans to "modify" some areas of the building, but most of it will remain as it is.

"We mostly want to leave it in its original state," Joan Hall said. "What we have done so far with the building, we've enjoyed."

This is not work. It's play."

For 35 years, Hall and her husband have been in the service center business in Waco. But as long as she can remember, they have been "enamored" with antiques.

"We've always thought of this as a way we could retire someday. We are constantly traveling to other towns where antiques are big like Canton," she said.

"Some people go to Europe for their vacations. We go to Canton, and we probably spend as much, too," she added, jokingly.

Antique collecting is a longstanding tradition in her family, she said. "Both of my grandmothers were antique collectors. When I was little, I loved to dig and pilfer. I guess I was just a nosy kid," she said.

The Halls have been married 37 years and have three sons, a daughter and two granddaughters.

"I believe the cycle has already started over again. My oldest child the University of Texas and my collects glassware, my middle child youngest takes to John Wayne collects anything having to do with lectibles," she said.

El Paso veterinarian cares for wild birds, animals

By DONNA WEEKS
El Paso Times

EL PASO (AP) — When he isn't working, veterinarian Jim Koschmann is fixing the injured wings of golden eagles or trekking through the wilderness in search of caribou.

The partner in Crossroads Animal Clinic also is a researcher, a writer for scholarly journals and a lecturer on the preservation of wildlife.

"I'd call him a veterinarian whose interests go well beyond the care of domestic animals. He has a real genuine concern for the preservation of wildlife," said Jack Bristol, special assistant to the president and director of the office of external relations at the University of Texas at El Paso. "And he gives unselfishly of his time to that goal."

Bristol and Koschmann have been friends 20 years — since Koschmann was a UTEP graduate student.

"He's done an awful lot of different things," says Koschmann's friend and wildlife rehabilitator, Helen Bigelow. "He's not only a veterinarian — he's very involved in wildlife rehabilitation."

Her home in Anthony, N.M., has been a sanctuary for birds for nearly 20 years. Together Bigelow and Koschmann are members of Chihuahuan Desert Wildlife Rescue. He's president of the non-profit organization funded primarily by the El Paso TransPecos Audubon Society and dedicated to the rehabilitation of wildlife.

The organization recently released a gray fox that Koschmann operated on after it had been hit by a car. He performed orthopedic surgery to repair damage done to the animal's right hind leg.

And Jan. 4, Koschmann treated a golden eagle rescued by the group after it suffered electrical burns caused by power lines.

Koschmann is licensed by the Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to treat injured or sick wild birds. His work has gained him national publicity as an expert on wild birds — he often lectures to wildlife preservation groups.

And he cares for birds seized from smugglers at the Texas/Mexico border by U.S. Customs. Many are parrots smuggled from the Sierra Madre mountains of Mexico to sell in the United States. Instead of returning the parrots to Mexico, or placing them in zoos, inspectors for the Arizona Fish and Wildlife Service release them in Arizona.

Since 1986 Koschmann has been part of a project by the Arizona Fish and Wildlife Service to reintroduce thick-billed parrots to the Chiricahua Mountains in southeastern Arizona. The parrots thrived in Arizona until the logging industry of the 1930s invaded their habitats.

The wildlife department and Koschmann released about 40 of the parrots between 1986 and 1988. The birds flocked to breed in a pine forest along the Mogollon rim of the White Mountains until tragedy struck in the summer of 1988.

Two nests were broken up by ring-tailed cats who killed the parent birds and some of the babies. As a result, most of the flock dispersed and went back to the Chiricahua Mountains.

A year later, a large fire in Payson, Ariz. — in the vicinity of the birds' breeding grounds — killed the remaining flock. The two isolated incidents did not discourage Koschmann or inspectors for the wildlife department.

In December, Koschmann and inspectors hung radio transmitters around the necks of 16 new parrots and began tracking them in the Arizona forests. At least 13 of the birds are adapting well to their new habitat, and Koschmann is hopeful they will breed.

Koschmann says the birds are on the verge of extinction worldwide — 10 years ago specialists estimated there were fewer than 2,000 of the rare parrots left in the wild. He travels to Arizona about six times a year to check on the parrots and in his free time he enjoys backpacking.

His wanderlust takes him from the Tetons of Wyoming to Alaska. "When I am away from the office I seek the peace and tranquility of the outdoors," Koschmann said. "Backpacking consumes the major part of my free time."

For the past seven summers in a row, Koschmann has traveled to the Arctic Circle in Alaska to raft along its whitewater rapids to photograph herds of caribou. He makes the trip with his cousin, Tom Camps. "We own a river raft and we ship it by cargo wherever we go and we have a bush pilot pick us up at the end of our trip," he said. "He lands in sandbars or plains — wherever he can land safely."

While on the trips, he often takes photos of wildlife. His photos have appeared in the "The Watchbird" a national magazine. Others hang in the lobby and examining rooms of Crossroads Animal Clinic.

His work at the clinic has led him to publish six articles in scholarly journals. In 1978 he was the first to diagnose histoplasmosis, a rare soil fungus, that caused death in both animals and humans in El Paso. The disease is common in the state of Mississippi, but not in the Upper and Lower valleys of El Paso.

He cured the disease in a 7-month-old Newfoundland dog using an experimental drug developed by researchers at Texas A&M, said the puppy's owner Connie Musshorn of Anthony, N.M. His findings appeared in a 1986 article he co-authored for the Journal of Medical and Veterinary Mycology.

Koschmann also is a published freelance sports photographer. The sports information director at the University of Texas at El Paso, Ed Mullens, has given Koschmann special permission to photograph all of the college's athletic events. Koschmann's photos occasionally appear in the university's publications.

"Photographing the games helps me do a better job photographing wildlife too," Koschmann said. "It helps me develop the speed I need to capture action in the wild."

Judge may decide whether injured teen's life-support should end

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — A 14-year-old girl left brain-damaged from a car accident lies in a hospital bed while her divorced parents fight in court over whether she should be unhooked from the tubes that keep her alive.

At times, Carla Myers opens her eyes. She's in what doctors call a "vegetative pseudo-wakeful state" — appearing to be awake but not aware.

She has been that way ever since an Oct. 25 car accident on her way home from a high school homecoming dance.

Her father, Timothy Myers, 38, says she should be disconnected from the tubes that give her water and nutrition. "I know she wouldn't want to go on like this," he said. "Every week that goes by, she's looking less and less like my daughter."

Her mother, Robin Myers, 37, believes there is hope for Carla and wants her to remain connected to the feeding tubes. "There are things that Robin has observed, things she believes are responses from Carla — things like blinking and eye movement, following people around the room," said the woman's lawyer, Ann Snyder.

Myers considers his ex-wife's wishes irrelevant, since he is the girl's legal guardian and has authority to make decisions for her. The couple divorced in 1981, agreeing in 1988 to give Myers sole custody for reasons Snyder said she did not know for certain.

But Ms. Myers — who has not commented publicly and has an unlisted number — has asked a court to make her a co-guardian to clarify what she claims is her right to a say in her daughter's medical care.

Carla's fate may rest with a judge, who must decide the guardianship issue and perhaps whether she should remain on life-support.

Probate Judge William F. Spicer set a hearing for Jan. 20. Evidence will include findings of Barbara Patterson, a lawyer and former nurse he appointed as a limited guardian.

Patterson said she has found no clear legal precedent. The judge and lawyers have considered the Nancy Cruzan case in Missouri, involving a woman left in a vegetative state after a traffic accident. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1990 that she should be permitted to die if there was clear and convincing evidence that that was her wish.

Court investigator Frank LoPresti visited Edwin Shaw Hospital in December to observe Carla. He wrote that he saw her open her eyes part way after her mother brushed the side of her face and talked to her. But what that meant isn't known.

"Miss Myers appeared totally unable to relate to any understanding either verbally or gesturally," LoPresti wrote. He also said a nurse told him the girl made a crying sound when an intravenous tube was inserted into her body.

Dr. Bruce Cohen, a neurologist at Cleveland Clinic Hospital, said people in a condition like Carla's can go through cycles of wakefulness and sleep.

"They may wake up and even look around a room, but there is no thinking. They don't seem to understand what they see and hear," he said.

But Cohen said not all cases are hopeless. "I've seen patients who have been in this vegetative state after an accident for many months and then regain consciousness."

The night of the accident, Miss Myers and three other teens were in a limousine, headed home from high school.

A car coming off an exit ramp went through a stop sign and smashed into the limo. The driver of the other car was killed. A 16-year-old boy whose mother had chartered the limo to take the teens to and from the dance also was killed.

Carla was about three months' pregnant. She suffered a miscarriage after the accident. She is hooked to feeding tubes but breathes on her own and is not on a ventilator.

On Dec. 12, after Carla had been in the hospital for seven weeks, Myers consulted with his daughter's doctors and had the tubes removed. Six days later, Myers' former wife saw that they had been removed. She demanded they be reconnected, and the hospital's medical staff complied.
