Event straight out of time

Knights, lords and squires duelled in Central Park Saturday as part of the Society of Creative Anachronism's Tourney of the Wyndes, a three-day festival recreating life in medieval Europe.

Approximately 50 Pampa and area residents took part in the historic reenactment sponsored by the local SCA chapter, the Incipient Shire. Saturday's event included mock combat in a double elimination tournament along with period clothing and music.

One of the fighters known as Lord Stormcrow won the mock combat tournament using a hand-and-a-half sword and shield.

A feast in celebration of the tournament was held Saturday night in the Chamber of Commerce building M.K. Brown room where medieval food, including a Highland stew and bread pudding, were served. The bards and damsels then gathered at the Coronado Inn for a traditional end-of-tournament revel.

The Tourney of the Winds concludes today with an archery contest. Participants established their campsite Friday evening behind the Coronado Inn to kick off the festival.

Medieval period recreation came to Pampa three years ago when Seneschal, or Director, M. Kameron Minatrea founded the local SCA chapter with Hospitaler, or welcome officer, Thomas J. Brewer.

The drive to bring a taste of the middle ages to the city began in 1986 with a short lived bid by a group of students and teachers to establish a Renaissance Fair. The initial group was disbanded in 1990 but reformed just over a year later for a chess tournament.

Minatrea said the Incipient Shire hopes to put on more activities in the coming year, including demonstrations for local elementary students.

He added that the SCA and the Incipient Shire do not include role playing games or religious rituals in their activities.

"We're strictly concerned with historic recreation authentic to the period," he said.

"The inspiration for the reenactments comes from medieval European history, which ran from 500-1500 AD," Minatrea said.

Minatrea said many of ideas from the medieval period lend themselves well to today's society.

"I think the idea of honor is still useful today. A person can conduct himself in a decent, chivalrous way even in conflict.

"You can act with with compassion, even toward your enemies," he added.

Additional SCA chapters are located in Borger, Amarillo and Lubbock. The SCA has more than 40,000 members worldwide and has been in existence for 25 years.

Voters OK Hutchison

Treasurer wins huge

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — State Treasurer Kay Bailey Hutchison, rolling up a victory margin of about 2-to-1, Saturday became the first Texas woman elected to the U.S. Senate.

Mrs. Hutchison's stunning defeat of appointed Democratic Sen. Bob Krueger gave the GOP both Senate seats for the first time since 1875.

The state's second senator, Phil Gramm, called Krueger's loss a blow to President Clinton and to Democratic Gov. Ann Richards, who had appointed Krueger.

"If Bill Clinton and Ann Richards can put a pretty face on this devastating defeat, they ought to be morticians instead of politicians," Gramm said.

With 29 percent of the precincts reporting — totaling more than 47 percent of the estimated turnout — Mrs. Hutchison lead Krueger 469,244 votes, or 66.5 percent, to 236,566, or 33.5 percent.

Krueger, 57, who lost Senate races in 1978 and 1984, had been appointed by Richards in January as Lloyd Bentsen's temporary replacement when Clinton named Bentsen U.S. Treasury secretary.

Mrs. Hutchison, 49, made opposition to Clinton's tax plan, particularly its energy tax, a centerpiece of her campaign. Republicans said the election should be a wakeup call to Southern Democratic senators to part company with Clinton on those issues.

Mrs. Hutchison's victory also cut the Democratic margin in the Senate to 56-44. It gives the Senate a record seven women members, five Democrats and two Republicans.

Mrs. Hutchison said her status as a Washington outsider made her the most qualified to represent Texans' anti-tax, anti-spending attitudes.

"We're talking about taxes and spending and jobs," she said earlier in the day. "I'm very pleased because I think the people of Texas really know who I am."

The election was the biggest Capitol Hill race since Clinton took office. Republicans portrayed a vote for Mrs. Hutchison as a vote against Clinton. Krueger had tried to distance himself from the president, voting against Clinton's budget proposal.

Gramm said the vote showed taxpayers' attitudes about the new administration.

"This election was nothing if not a clear repudiation of everything that Bill Clinton is trying to do in Washington," Gramm said.

Word of possible illness cause eases tensions

GALLUP, N.M. (AP) — Carrol Ben went shopping Saturday. She traveled the 90 miles from her home on the Navajo reservation hoping to find a bargain at the Gallup flea market.

Ben strolled with her family among the strip of tents, trailers and makeshift booths that stretched for 200 yards to form a dusty outdoor mall.

Displays along the corridor offered colorful Indian-made jewelry, car stereo systems, secondhand clothing, and even watermelons and other produce.

But this was not just another Saturday at the flea market. It came on the heels of week in which residents of northwestern New Mexico were faced daily with reports on the outbreak of a puzzling illness that has claimed 11 lives.

"I was kind of scared at first about coming down here to where there were a lot of other people," said Ben, a 30-year-old Navajo. "But I decided just to come out to shop. I wanted to see something different that I can only get here."

As she cradled her 3-month-old daughter Erica, Ben said her concern about the unknown sickness has diminished since health officials in Santa Fe announced Friday that a virus carried by rodents may be the culprit.

Others apparently shared her feelings. Ben was only one of hundreds of people who had come to buy, barter or sell goods at the flea market.

Vendor Dean Harris said he sells goods at numerous sites on the reservation, using his Shiprock home as a base. During the past week, he said markets that usually draw 40 or 50 booths have had only 12.

But Harris, glancing out at the bustling activity near his tent, said he was encouraged.

Area voters agree, pick GOP nominee

By JOHN McMILLAN

In the U.S. Senate runoff election on Saturday, Republican Kay Hutchison carried all area counties reporting by lopsided margins.

Of the area counties reporting, Democratic incumbent Bob Krueger fared best in Wheeler County, where he received about 22 percent of the votes. Hutchison fared best in Roberts County, where she won by a more than 6-to-1 margin.

In Gray County, Hutchison won by more than a 5-to-1 margin. She received 2,752 votes, compared with 517 votes for Krueger. Hutchison received 84 percent of the vote in Gray County.

Susan Triplehorn, chairman of the Republican Party in Gray County, termed the election outcome "a wonderful victory for the people of Texas, and a dream come true for the Republican Party of Texas."

Triplehorn attributed the margin of victory in Gray County to Hutchison's being "a very strong candidate" and to her being a Republican in a county where Republican candidates typically fare well, Triplehorn said.

Triplehorn said the election result also reflected the unpopularity of President Bill Clinton among Gray County voters. "They did not want to give Bill Clinton more help in Congress," she said.

Triplehorn said she was unable to cite any particular issue in the election as decisive. "I think it was just basically (that) the conservative philosophy of Gray County followed the Republicans," she said.

John Warner, chairman of the Gray County Democratic Party, reacted to the election results in Gray County by saying, "I congratulate the Republicans for getting their people out to vote. They did a good job, and we didn't. We didn't get our people out to vote."

Warner said he was not aware of any particular issue in the election that accounted for Hutchison's lopsided margin in Gray County.

Turnout of 3,273 voters in Gray County was light compared with most other runoff elections in this county, said Gray County Clerk Wanda Carter. Some of the ballots were blank, which explains the discrepancy of four votes between the total number of votes cast and the total number of ballots received, she noted.

Twenty-five percent of the 13,280 registered voters in Gray County participated in the runoff election on Saturday, Carter said.

In Roberts County, Hutchison received 250 votes to 41 votes for Krueger. Turnout of 291 voters out of 774 registered voters was low, but about average for runoff elections there, said Roberts County Clerk Jackie Jackson.

In Wheeler County, Hutchison received 729 votes, which compared with 208 votes for Krueger. Turnout was about average for runoff elections in that county, said Wheeler County Clerk Margaret Dorman.

In Carson County, Hutchison garnered 810 votes, which compared with 221 votes for Krueger. Approximately 25 percent of registered voters participated in the election, about the same as for most runoff elections in that county, said Carson County Clerk Sue Persons.

Call it what you want — it's fun

MIAMI — Hundreds of people from around Texas and other states collected in the small town of Miami Saturday morning and into the afternoon to eat barbecue, meet old friends and family and compete in the city's biggest event of the year.

Miami, among other things, is the home of the National Cow Calling Competition and this year celebrated the competition's 45th anniversary.

Most of the people competing at this year's cow calling championship seemed to be there just to have fun.

The mood during the competition, as it was the entire day, was relaxed and easy-going. While some reluctant contestants had to be prodded on stage, most were relaxed as their turn to scream at the tops of their lungs came and went.

"I liked it," said Joe Wheeley, a resident of White Deer and former cow caller competitor. "It's entertaining to see all the different types of yells. You never know how far they're going to carry."

Wheeley's wife, Sarah, was a competitor this year in the grandmother's division. His daughter, Sarah Graff, competed in the women's division.

In fact, cow calling is something of a family tradition for the Wheeley family.

Last year, three generation of Wheeley women competed and two years ago, Sarah Wheeley was crowned the Cow Calling Champion in the grandmother's division.

Unfortunately, good fortune was not with the Wheeley family this year, both women suffered losses in their respective divisions.

They did, however, seemed to have fun.

Sarah Wheeley, a White Deer resident, competes in the National Cow Calling Competition Saturday in Miami.

Graff, who now calls Houston home, and who has competed for the past few years believes that many of the people who come to compete or watch, do so to see old friends.

"We talk about friends and family, that's is why most everybody comes, it's like coming to see a family," Graff said.

She also believes that the cow calling competition is a tie to the areas western past and that it is a disappearing art.

Graff's husband, Vic, a native of New York, is one member of the family who has never competed in the competition and probably never will, he said.

The closest he has come to calling a cow was trying to hail a taxi back home in the Big Apple, he said with a mild New York accent.

Winners of this year's competition for the finest cow caller included Barbara Ross in the grandmother's division, Debra Parham in the women's division and Allan Carrol in the men's division.

In all, 38 people competed. For those people who were not interested in climbing atop a stage and screaming at a crowd of people, other activities were available.

A cow-chip throwing competition was sponsored by Miami's Volunteer Emergency Medical Service and childrens games were held after the cow calling competition.

In addition, a dance was scheduled for Saturday night.

Finally for those people interested in the distant past of the Miami area, the Roberts County Museum was open to the public.

Exhibits featuring artifacts, some thousands of years old, were available for viewing. Many of the fossils on exhibit were found in and around Miami.

At least 26 peacekeepers reported killed in Somalia

By TINA SUSMAN
Associated Press Writer

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Chaos returned to Mogadishu on Saturday as combat erupted between a warlord's fighters and U.N. peacekeepers. A U.N. general said there were reports of up to 26 Pakistani soldiers killed and 10 missing.

"The Pakistani toll is heavy. There are reports of 26 dead, but that's tentative and not confirmed, and 10 missing and 50 injured," Italian Gen. Bruno Loy, speaking on Italian state TV, said from Mogadishu.

Loy said Italian troops picked up 30 of the wounded Pakistani soldiers.

The city's two main hospitals reported 23 Somalis had been killed and more than 100 wounded.

The U.N. spokeswoman on duty Saturday night, Gail Bindley-Taylor Sainte, could not confirm the casualty figures, but said U.N. officials in Mogadishu had confirmed there were casualties.

Machine-gun fire and grenade blasts echoed through the capital all day as U.N. troops, Americans among them, battled with fighters loyal to warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

The fighting, the worst in Mogadishu since anti-American riots erupted in February, showed the tenuous security situation in Mogadishu even after six months of foreign military presence.

The Somalis were apparently enraged by rumors that the U.N. troops — who took over command of an international military coalition from the United States a month ago — planned to occupy Aidid's radio station.

As military helicopters swooped over the city, Somalis rushed their wounded to hospitals on carts pulled by donkeys. Barricades of burning tires, boulders and wire blocked several main streets.

Loy said Italian troops, backed by a dozen tanks and armored personnel carriers and two helicopters, rescued 80 Pakistanis who were surrounded by snipers in two areas in the city. The Italian defense ministry said 10 American soldiers were also rescued.

The Italians ferried about 30 wounded Pakistani peacekeepers by helicopter to an Italian military hospital, Loy said. No Italians were injured during the rescue, which was achieved by the show of force without firing a shot, he said.

There were unconfirmed reports an American soldier was also wounded.

The Italian foreign ministry late Saturday said it was joining Pakistan's call for a meeting of the U.N. Security Council as soon as possible to discuss the situation. Italy's special representative here has been instructed to give Somalis a strong warning about the day's bloodshed.

Some of the fiercest fighting occurred near a traffic circle in the city center, a hotspot since foreign troops arrived in Somalia in December to safeguard relief supplies for victims of war and famine.

U.N. officials warned foreign aid workers to stay indoors, and they did, huddling inside their compounds.

Bullets smacked into a hotel overlooking the circle where most foreign journalists and some U.N. workers are staying, as Pakistani troops on the roof traded gunfire with snipers.

One bullet punched through a wall of a room next to the office of The Associated Press. Journalists lay on their bellies to avoid being hit.

Fresh bullet holes pocked a low wall around the perimeter of the hotel's roof, where journalists transmit stories and pictures by satellite telephones.

Hundreds of Somalis gathered outside a United Nations building up the road, and witnesses said some tried to storm the building.

The fighting broke out about 10 a.m. as U.N. troops conducted inspections of weapons storage sites. The weapons had been taken from Somalis in accordance with U.N. demands.

U.N. spokesman Farouk Mawlawi said Aidid was informed of the planned inspections on Friday and indicated no objection. One of the sites of weapons to be inspected was near Aidid's radio station, which sparked rumors of a planned takeover of the station.

U.S. Army Major David Stockwell, the spokesman for the U.N. peacekeepers, and Mawlawi denied any plans to seize the station, which broadcast anti-U.N. chants and songs Saturday afternoon.

Among the U.N. troops facing combat Saturday was a U.S. quick reaction force, a 1,100-member team mostly composed of soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division based in Fort Drum, N.Y.

The U.S.-led multinational force arrived in Mogadishu in December to protect relief supplies intended for victims of Somalia's civil war and famine, which killed an estimated 350,000 people last year.

The United States handed over control of the operation to the United Nations last month and has withdrawn the bulk of its troops.

There are still some 4,000 American soldiers here among the 18,000 foreign troops.

U.S. behind in early immunizations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Young children in many poor countries, from India to Mexico, are more likely to be immunized against major diseases than those in the United States, the head of the United Nations Children's fund reported Saturday.

"Sadly, the U.S. has stagnated or regressed over the past decade with respect to children even while much of the developing world has been making impressive progress," James P. Grant wrote in an article published Saturday in the quarterly journal "Foreign Policy."

Recent UNICEF figures indicate that the United States trails many developing African and Latin American countries in vaccination rates for children under age 2.

In its budget now before Congress, the Clinton administration has proposed $2.1 billion to expand free vaccinations to all children whose families can't afford them.

UNICEF figures show that in 1991, 1-year-old children in many poorer countries were far more likely to be fully immunized for measles, polio and diphtheria than 2-year olds in the United States.

According to the agency's "The State of the World's Children 1993" report:

—95 percent of 1-year-olds in Mexico were immunized against polio, 78 percent were immunized against measles and 64 percent were inoculated against diphtheria.

—In India, 86 percent had been vaccinated for measles while 89 percent were inoculated for both diphtheria and polio.

—In Thailand, 90 percent of 1-year-olds were immunized against diphtheria, 91 percent against polio and 79 percent against measles.

—In Uganda, 76 percent were vaccinated both for diphtheria and polio, and 73 percent for measles.

—In Kenya, 74 percent of 1-year-olds were protected against diphtheria, 71 percent for polio and 59 percent for measles.

The UNICEF report provided no U.S. figures because the government does not compile comparable figures for 1-year-olds.

But the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimated that only 36 percent to 57 percent of American 2-year-olds were fully immunized, spokeswoman Kay Golan said.

The CDC considers full immunization to include vaccinations against nine infectious diseases including measles, mumps, rubella, diphtheria and polio.

The lower end of the CDC figures would put the United States on a par with such developing countries as Haiti, Mozambique, Nigeria and Cambodia, according to the UNICEF report.

And in some U.S. inner cities, the immunization rates for 2-year-olds were as low as 10 percent, Golan said.

"Calcutta, Lagos, (Nigeria) and Mexico City have far higher levels of immunization of children at ages 1 and 2 than do New York City, Washington, D.C., or even the United States as a whole," Grant wrote in his article.

Dr. Phyllis R. Magrab, director of the Child Development Center at Georgetown University, said she had not seen Grant's article but was not surprised by his conclusions.

She credited international vaccination programs sponsored by the World Health Organization, which are far more aggressive than current U.S. policy, for the strong showing of many Third World countries.

"They try to immunize everybody. It's cheap and it's effective. We don't do it that way in this country and lots of people don't get covered — the poor people who get most of their health care in emergency rooms, for example," she said.

Jackson leads protest against Denny's

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson joined about 50 protesters at a Denny's restaurant Saturday to demand an end to what the group said is a pattern of discrimination against blacks by the national chain.

"These charges against Denny's are escalating," Jackson said. "They say they aren't happening, but they are lying. ... Where there's smoke, there's fire."

The demonstrators marched in the parking lot carrying signs reading "Equality For All" and "End Discrimination Now!"

Inside, the restaurant was packed with customers eating breakfast as the protest began at mid-morning.

Six black Secret Service agents said they were refused service at the restaurant April 1 because of their race. The agents, who were in Annapolis to guard President Clinton, have filed a federal lawsuit against Denny's.

Other recent complaints have also been lodged against the restaurant chain. An all-black choir from Raleigh, N.C., filed a complaint with the North Carolina Human Relations Commission this week saying members had been refused service at two Denny's restaurants in Virginia last weekend.

In March, the Justice Department accused Denny's restaurants in California of denying some black customers service and making others pay for their meals in advance.

Coleman Sullivan, vice president of communications for TW Services, the parent of the Spartanburg, S.C.-based chain of 1,460 restaurants, said Denny's does not discriminate.

"We're in a very competitive business," Sullivan said. "Any thinking person would realize that we would not want to do anything from discouraging anyone from coming to our restaurants."

Santa Fe project nears completion

Santa Fe Railway currently is installing approximately 60 miles of new rail between Pampa and Higgins.

The $18 million, month-long project began in late April and is expected to be finished this week, according to a representative from Santa Fe.

The project is part of the railroad's $500 million improvement program in 1993 and is the largest single rail replacement project of the year.

"Our track infrastructure capital expenditure programs were ambitious in 1992, and remain ambitious in 1993," said Mike Franke, vice president of maintenance in a press release. "We will replace approximately 260 miles of rail and install 1.4 million railroad ties this year ..."

Two crews are performing the replacement project, with each crew consisting of approximately 100 individuals, according to Mike Martin, a representative of Santa Fe.

Each crew can replace approximately three miles-per day of the quarter-mile sections of rail. A single rail weighs 136-pounds-per-yard.

Some of the ways Santa Fe checks the railing for defects include using ultra-sound equipment, visual inspections and a specially designed rail-car which is designed to detect any changes in the metal spacing of the rails.

The rail-line cutting through Pampa is part of Santa Fe's transcontinental main line and was established more than 100 years ago.

The freight trains travelling on the rail-line go as fast as 70 mph, according to Martin.

"I guess I was never really too worried about business coming back around," Harris said. "You have to look at the bigger picture. Everything passes eventually."

Elsewhere in Gallup, a town of about 20,000 residents near the eastern border of the Navajo reservation, pickup trucks loaded with families were arriving steadily by midday — a typical occurrence in this community where the increase in the weekend population is measured in the thousands.

Joe Herrera, manager of the Gambles department store near downtown, said 90 percent of his business comes from Navajos who live on the reservation. They stock up on goods before returning to their remote homes, he said.

"We need their business," Herrera said. "If they start shying off, then I'm in big trouble."

While people appeared comforted by word of progress in the medical investigation, Gallup resident Ed Carlisle cautioned that test results haven't been conclusive.

Health officials said a virus found in rodent droppings could be responsible for the deadly respiratory affliction. The virus might be transmitted after the droppings dry up and are carried into the air, then inhaled by humans, officials said.

Carlisle, a Bureau of Indian Affairs official who commutes to work in Chinle, Ariz., said Friday's announcement at least offered a step in the right direction.

"That's good news for Gallup," he said. "I think things should start getting better around here now."

Can Pharmacist's discovery help food lovers lose weight?

WASHINGTON — "Depriving yourself of the foods you love to eat is no way to lose weight," says pharmacist Dr. William Morris, Director of National Dietary Research. EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Freedom holds cherished rights

That Japanese exchange student Yoshi Hattori didn't deserve to die in a Baton Rouge, La., neighborhood last year is beyond dispute. That his grieving parents in gun-shy Japan would misplace blame for his shooting death on the American right to bear arms is perhaps understandable. That the slaying stemmed from a misunderstanding just made it all the more tragic.

That the anti-gun movement should now attempt to exploit this tragedy as yet another case for further eroding our fundamental right to bear arms is wholly unwarranted, if only too predictable. Once again, we are being told that our constitutional right to arms is under scrutiny worldwide because of a single incident, that we must re-examine our society's supposed love of firearms.

This time, it's the Japanese who purportedly are appalled at our lack of restrictions on gun ownership. Weighed in one Japanese newspaper editorial: "Americans ought to recognize that their society has become practically the only one among civilized nations that permits people to purchase guns almost without restriction and own them freely."

Freely owning guns; imagine that. Well, at least that editorialist still considers us "civilized."

Ironically, this latest uproar surrounds what by all indications was a freak occurrence, and our criminal justice system did its imperfect best to assess responsibility when it acquitted Rodney Peairs of manslaughter last month. It is clear that the 16-year-old victim, who had been searching for a house party with a friend last Oct. 17, unintentionally spooked Peairs, a resident, who says he feared for his family upon Hattori's approach and shot the youth. We'll never know if that fear was reasonable; a jury concluded it was.

Sadly, mistakes sometimes cost lives, with firearms as with automobiles, airplanes and a host of other innovations. That doesn't merit their abolition. For, as with the private ownership of automobiles, firearm ownership also is put to many good uses. Not just in sport, but in self-defense.

Above all, the right of arms — whether or not we choose to own them — gives us an almost unique edge against oppressive or arbitrary government. That's what the Constitution's framers had in mind, and it's a precious right.

The fact that the Japanese, or any other people, might not readily understand that, should not give us cause for soul searching. Hattori's distraught mother can be forgiven for concluding unfairly that ours is "a society that cherishes guns more than life." We hope Mrs. Hattori one day realizes that Americans' reverence for individual freedom, including the right to bear arms, in fact underscores how very much we cherish life itself.

Berry's World

"Look! We've been talking about shrinking attention spans for three minutes. Let's move on to something else — OK?"

Truth about history is vital

When expressing admiration for the wisdom of our Constitution's framers, I sometimes encounter derisive responses like: "Some were slave owners," "They made blacks three-fifths of a person" and "They condoned slavery." Thus, the implied conclusion: We shouldn't respect these dead white men. Let's evaluate this misinformation that's become a part of the regular curriculum in too many of today's high schools and colleges.

Thomas Jefferson's first draft of the Declaration of Independence charged, "(The king of Britain) has waged a cruel war against human nature itself, violating its most sacred rights of life and liberty in the persons of distant people who never offended him, captivating and carrying them into slavery in another hemisphere." Massachusetts' James Otis, in 1764, said, "The colonists are by law of nature freeborn, as indeed all men are, white or black."

Other founders expressed similar anti-slavery sentiments. Thomas Paine: "And when the Almighty shall have blessed us and made us a people, then may our first gratitude be shown, by an act of continental legislation which shall put a stop to the importation of Negroes for sale, and in time procure their freedom." John Adams: "I have, through my whole life, held the practice of slavery in abhorrence." Benjamin Franklin: "Slavery is an atrocious debasement of human nature." George Washington: "There's not a man living who wishes more sincerely than I do, to see a plan adopted for the abolition of (slavery)."

James Madison: "(Southern laws have) degraded slaves from the human rank. It was a barbarous policy." Alexander Hamilton: "Their (blacks) natural faculties are probably as good as ours. The contempt we have been taught to entertain for the blacks makes us fancy many things that are neither founded in reason or experience. Jefferson, however, believed blacks were inferior but said, "Whatever may be the degree of talent it is no measure of their rights. Because Isaac Newton was superior to others in understanding, he is not therefore lord of the person or property of others."

In 1787, the framers of the Constitution were faced with a serious dilemma — a choice between union and disunion. Slavery opponents chose union. They felt slavery would continue with or without the Constitution. The question was whether there would be a future for liberty. It was slavery's opponents who succeeded in restricting the political power of the South by allowing them to count only three-fifths of their slave population in determining the number of congressional representatives. The three-fifths of a vote provision applied only to slaves, not to free blacks in either the North or South.

You say, "Williams, I went to high school and college and didn't learn this; how do you know it?" It's not me but my friends who mail me all sorts of goodies. In this case, it was University of Dallas' Professor Thomas G. West's article, "Was the American Founding Unjust?" in Principles, a publication of the Claremont Institute's Salvatori Center in Claremont, Calif.

Marshaling the truth is a vital defensive weapon in today's war against Americanism and traditional values. Politicians, news media, college professors and leftists of other stripes are selling us lies and propaganda. To lay the groundwork for their increasingly successful attack on our Constitution, they must demean and criticize its authors. As Sen. Joe Biden demonstrated during the Clarence Thomas hearings, the framers' ideas about natural law must be trivialized or they must be seen as racists.

The truth about our history is vital to the preservation of our liberty. If your high school or college kid is taking early American history, give him/her some facts he/she otherwise won't learn.

When Clinton got styled

I phoned my personal stylist, Leroy, of Leroy's barbershop.

"Hi there, Leroyphie," I said when he answered the phone.

"What did you call me?" he asked.

"Sorry," I said. "I meant Leroy. How are things in the haircutting game?"

"The price of Vitalis has gone out of sight. My second chair man is out drunk. And the customers are stealing my magazines," he replied. "Business as usual."

"Listen," I said, "I need a haircut."

"Well, you know where I am," Leroy said. "Still next to the pool hall after 30 years."

"Leroy," I went on, "how long have you been cutting my hair?"

"Two wives."

"And I've been a loyal customer, right?"

"Been in once every three weeks, just like clock-work," said Leroy. "By the way, how's the dandruff?"

"Clearing up nicely since the Pine Sol treatment," I answered. "By the way, I need a favor."

"Oh, yeah," Leroy said. "People in hell need ice water, too."

"I'm serious here," I continued. "Have you ever left the barbershop to give a haircut?"

"This ain't Domino's Pizza and I don't deliver. You wanna haircut, you get your shaggy head down here and I'll give you a haircut," Leroy responded, turning away from the phone to berate a customer leaving his shop. "Come back here with that magazine! It's brand-new. May of '91."

Lewis Grizzard

"You don't understand," I argued with Leroy. "I'm very busy today, and I don't think I can get to the shop. Couldn't you run out and meet me somewhere in a parking lot? You can cut my hair in my car."

"You all right, son?"

"Apparently you don't watch the news or read the papers," I said.

"I told you my second chair man was out drunk," said Leroy. "I barely got time to take a nip if Vitalis between heads myself."

"Well," I began, "President Clinton was in Los Angeles on Air Force One and needed a haircut and he was able to get somebody to come to the plane."

"What kind of barber would do something like that?" Leroy wanted to know.

"The president's stylist, Christophe," I said.

"I know Earl Slatz," said Leroy. "He's a barber in L.A. Met him at a barber's convention in Kansas City. And Niles Gilgoffer. Met him, too. He's got a shop in Burbank. He had a few parts in some movies, until the Vitalis made him start slurring his speech. What's this Christophe's last name? Maybe I met him, too."

"There's no last name," I said. "It's just Christophe."

"Beauty parlor man," said Leroy. "Never trusted them beauty parlor men. They ain't holding their scissors real right."

I asked Leroy exactly how much it would take to get him to meet me outside the shop and give me a haircut in my car."

"I'm not going to do it," he said. "But it wouldn't come cheap, and I'm not even sure the Pinto would crank anyway."

"Ball park estimate?" I pressed on.

"Well," thought Leroy, "I've got three customers waiting for haircuts now. At six dollars apiece, that's eighteen dollars I'd be losing there, and if any of them wanted a shampoo, that's another dollar-fifty I'm out. Then, there's the gas for the Pinto and my trouble. I wouldn't take a dime less than thirty dollars."

I laughed. "You're not going to believe what Christophe got for going out to Air Force One and cutting the president's hair," I said.

"Forty dollars?" asked Leroy.

"Two hundred big ones," I said.

"You're lyin'," said Leroy. "Ain't no ol' boy from Arkansas gonna pay two hundred dollars for a haircut."

I didn't have the heart to tell him what jogging shoes cost these days.

South Africa destined for tragedy

During the 40-plus years of the Cold War the world watched South Africa with bated breath, not primarily because the struggle taking place there was fascinating (though it was) but because its outcome would so directly affect the global battle between freedom and communism.

On one side, holding this key strategic location and its immense mineral wealth firmly in the Western camp, was a white regime that was permanently unwilling to turn power over to the nation's black majority. On the other were black political groups — notably the African National Congress, dominated by card-carrying members of the outlawed South African Communist party, who would unquestionably ally the country with Moscow if they could. To complicate matters, South Africa's population included large numbers of Indian-descended "Asians" and mixed-ancestry "Cape Coloureds" with very different agendas of their own.

Beginning about four years ago, however, the situation in South Africa began to change dramatically. As the Cold War came to an end, greatly reducing the country's geopolitical importance and increasing foreign pressures for liberalization, South Africa's elite English-descended business interests and its dominant Afrikaner (Dutch-descended) political leaders decided to make a deal with the ANC. Agreement was reached on a process whereby the government would turned over to the latter, in return for continued white ownership of major sectors of the economy for the foreseeable future.

Excluded from the benefits of this arrangement were lower and middle-class whites (especially Afrikaners from farm areas), the powerful Zulu nation (which is hostile to the tribes from which most ANC members and leaders are drawn), and the substantial Asian and Cape Coloured communities, which fear the ANC.

Let us pause here to note that this unjust and indeed downright cynical deal between the white regime and the ANC was neither desirable nor in the least inevitable. The borders which history has drawn around South Africa contain the traditional homelands of nine separate and bitterly rivalrous black tribes, plus distinct regions largely occupied by Asians and Cape Coloureds, and others that are predominantly white. Common fairness called for the division of this crazy-quilt into a number of sovereign states, but this suited neither the economic greed of the white elites nor the political ambitions of the ANC bosses.

So now this beautiful country is edging inexorably toward civil war. It may still be argued whether the armed forces will remain loyal to the central authority when power shifts from the white regime to the ANC in a year or two. Apparently an effort will be made to depict the new government as a coalition of white and ANC components, at least until it can establish physical control of most of the national territory.

But the Zulus, who control much of Natal province, will almost certainly refuse to bend their knees to the ANC, and it seems likely that large areas of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State dominated by resolute Afrikaner farmers will also reject its dictation. The Asians and Cape Coloureds will demand substantial autonomy. Finally, there will clearly be a covert movement of white terrorists in all the major cities, determined to assassinate the leading ANC figures. (Chris Hani, chairman of the SACP, was shot to death early this year.) South Africa will be a vast, open-air shooting gallery for decades to come.

All this will be treated in the world's liberal media as an outrageous conspiracy of a few evil men to thwart the march of democracy in southern Africa. On the contrary, it will be the logical outcome of a cynical effort by greedy businessmen to keep their cash cow producing. It will be a tragedy, but — thanks to the end of the Cold War — it won't be the world's tragedy. Just South Africa's.

Celanese airs views

To the editor:

On May 23 you published an Associated Press story about the Kingsmill Lawsuit, in which about 100 plaintiffs are suing Hoechst Celanese over alleged damages stemming from a contaminated water well near our Pampa plant.

While the story is factual in the most part, we are concerned about the inflammatory quotes from two lead plaintiffs contained in the first part of the story and highlighted in a large photograph and caption.

What the reporter did not say is this:

1. For more than a year we have repeatedly offered to repair the water well, but the plaintiffs have refused to allow us to do so. The plaintiffs even obtained a court injunction to prevent us from repairing the well. The Texas Water Commission has suggested to the plaintiffs that they work with us to get the well repaired, but they have refused to do so.

2. We offered to buy land within a half-mile of the plant for approximately 145 percent of fair market value, as determined by commercial appraisers. The appraisers were instructed to set property values as though the property were not located in an industrial area. While 26 owners accepted our offer, only one of the plaintiffs accepted. Mrs. (Carolyn) Hood and Mrs. (Peggy) Ward, quoted in the story as saying they were not offered a fair price, did not even ask for an appraisal.

3. Trace levels of benzene in the Kingsmill Well were initially discovered and reported by the Hoechst Celanese Pampa Plant in early January 1992. For the first few months after benzene was detected, the benzene level always dropped to an undetectable level after the well's pump ran for about 15 minutes. Detectable levels of benzene have not been found in the well since May 1992. The Kingsmill Well water has met Federal Safe Drinking Water Standards for organics (including benzene) for the past year. The Kingsmill well is in an area where naturally-occurring sulfate and chloride levels exceed safe drinking water standards. Carolyn Hood made several comments in your (The Associated Press) story about "stinky, yellowish-brown water". Benzene, even if present, does not cause stinky, yellowish-brown water.

4. A review of Texas Department of Health records indicates that the Kingsmill Well has been in frequent violation of minimum standards for iron, manganese, and sulfate, as well as other TDH requirements, since the well began operating in 1971.

5. All of the 19 water wells within 1-1/2 miles of the plant currently meet the Federal Safe Drinking Water Standards for organics. The two Ogallala Wells that are located between the plant and the Kingsmill Well contain no detectable levels of organic compounds. The source of the contamination of the Kingsmill Well has not been determined.

6. About half of the people in the lawsuit are not even local residents, and none of the major landowners near the plant are plaintiffs.

The trial is scheduled to start in Sweetwater, Nolan County, on June 21. It is interesting to note that the plaintiffs have chosen to hold the trial more than 200 miles from the plant and their community. The company strongly denies the plaintiffs' charges and plans to fight the issue in court.

'Who cares?'

To the editor:

Aside from all the fun and games I have decided not to play anymore, what the problem is with this so-called newspaper is beyond me! In all fairness to mankind I would think you people could at least afford the subscribers of this paper at least a halfway decent effort to report the facts pertaining to the commission meetings and budget as well as in my opinion you people are lacking in the fortitude needed to do so, for whatever reason, I am so sick of seeing repeated omissions of lines from letters to the editor, and reading your meager apologies for any inconveniences, come now, you can do better than that! But then again, why should you!

It amuses me to see how stupid you as well as the resident cronies of this town, actually think the people are! I do find relief from this insult in the repeated comments from person after person on the street when they express their opinions of this paper, if your job is so important that you would compromise your own self esteem in order to fend off whatever you fear from city hall or elsewhere for merely printing the truth, then I hold no sympathy for you! As the "writing on the wall" shall ultimately be revealed, sooner or later, whether you or anyone else likes it or not!

And just think, when it is you all can blame yourselves for your own actions, I don't really think the people who bother to write you letters ever ask to (sic) much, just that you print it as is, then the ones that want to bash them could at least do it as a properly informed individual! But nah! I suppose that would be too much to ask in Gray county, huh?

Nonetheless, I hear Rumors of Boycotts looming in the shadows, but who cares, and why should you worry? Anyway, here's a copy of a sub. renewal you might pay, it goes to Geraldo, check your files and see who else has been getting your illustrious publication first hand, I wonder if they are as impressed with it as I, But then Who Cares? And what other knowledge do they possess and pertaining to what! All for now! But not at all!

I'm still waiting for the "writing on the wall".

Clinton misinterpreted writings, says Guinier

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a farewell at once blunt and gracious, Lani Guinier said that President Clinton misinterpreted her writings when he dropped her as his civil rights nominee but that she still had the potential for greatness.

Bating away conservatives' allegations that she was a "quota queen," Guinier said she could never have pushed for quotas because of racial discrimination suffered by her father under a college "quota of one" a half century ago.

The news conference where she offered her defense Friday was not the public forum she had sought — a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee to consider her nomination to become assistant attorney general for civil rights.

Had Clinton not pulled the nomination, she said, she believes the Senate would have "agreed that I am the right person for this job, a job some people have said I trained for all my life."

Guinier entered hand-in-hand with her young son, Nicholas, and her husband, Temple University communications professor Nolan Bowie. She said emotionally that their love "has nourished me and helped me endure this painful process with some measure of dignity."

At times shaky, at other times slowly punching out her words in a manner no doubt familiar to her students at the University of Pennsylvania Law School, Guinier said Clinton, as well as her conservative critics, had misunderstood the academic writings that doomed her nomination.

"I think that the president and many others have misinterpreted my writings, which were written in an academic context, which are very nuanced, which are very ponderous," she said.

Guinier, nevertheless said she was flattered to have had the president read one of her law review articles on voting rights: "Most law professors don't have that privilege."

Clinton, facing stiff opposition to Guinier in the Senate, said Thursday night he had not closely read her law review articles before. He said he abandoned the nomination over principle, not politics.

Some of Guinier's legal writings contained views that "clearly lend themselves to interpretations that do not represent the views that I expressed on civil rights during my campaign," he said.

Career civil rights prosecutors, disappointed by Clinton's decision, jammed a Justice Department hallway to applaud Guinier as she left the conference.

"We think Lani Guinier would have been a great leader to move this country and the Department of Justice in a new direction in civil rights law," said trial attorney Brenda Berlin. "We can only hope that President Clinton will find someone who can fill her shoes, if not fully."

Department spokesman Carl Stern said he allowed Guinier to use the conference room because "she's family; we would like to have seen her as assistant attorney general."

Guinier lavishly praised Attorney General Janet Reno, who had staunchly supported her, but offered no such words to Clinton, a friend of 20 years from their days at Yale Law School. Still, she thanked him for expressing confidence in her character and fitness for the job he is no longer letting her seek.

Guinier said she still respects Clinton, hopes they remain friends and believes he remains committed to "racial healing." But she indicated it was up to him to prove that commitment.

Country singer Conway Twitty dies at 59

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — Conway Twitty, who started as a teen rock 'n' roll idol in the 1950s before earning the title of "high priest of country music," died Saturday. He was 59.

Twitty's family was with him when he died at Cox Medical Center-South after he collapsed Friday on his tour bus, said Linda Barnett, a hospital spokeswoman.

The cause of death was not immediately released. Springfield radio station KTTS and television station WSMV in Nashville, Tenn., reported that Twitty underwent surgery for an abdominal aneurysm after he was stricken on his way home to Hendersonville, Tenn., from a show in the Ozarks community of Branson.

With more than 50 No. 1 hits in his five-decade career, Twitty posted more top hits than the Beatles or Elvis Presley. His hits include "Hello Darlin'," "Tight-Fittin' Jeans" and "Linda On My Mind."

He performed a string of duets with Loretta Lynn from 1971 to 1975. The duo won the Country Music Association's Vocal Duo of the Year award in 1972, 1973, 1974 and 1975.

In a 1990 interview, Twitty credited his long career to percentages and luck.

"My dad told me when I was a kid: 'When the cotton is out there, you get it. When it's not out there, you can rest. I've been very fortunate. It has been out there for me a long time,'" Twitty said.

Twitty's big break came in Memphis, where he worked as a rockabilly artist writing songs in the 1950s for Sun Records' stable of singers, including Presley, Jerry Lee Lewis and Johnny Cash.

He changed his name in 1957 from Harold Jenkins, borrowing from Conway, Ark., and Twitty, Texas. He quickly hit the big time as a teen idol after "It's Only Make Believe" shot to No. 1 on the pop charts in 1958.

Twitty capitalized on his teen idol status by starring in the films "Sextop Goes to College" and "College Confidential."

His switch to country came after eight years in rock 'n' roll after he wrote hit songs for other country stars. Managers, booking agents and record company people told him he would be going from thousands of dollars to $200 a day.

Country turned into a gold mine as he turned out a streak of more than 30 straight No. 1 country hits before his "Georgia Keeps Pulling On My Ring" missed the top spot in 1977.

He credited his success to the fact that he picked songs that women like.

"I'm a fan too; I like what the fans like. I believe that's why I can pick the songs. I have a fan's ear," Twitty said in 1985.

Twitty turned down a contract to play baseball for the Philadelphia Phillies out of high school. A .469-hitting centerfielder, he decided music was his true love, although he satisfied his baseball craving by co-owning a couple of minor league teams at one time.

He learned his first guitar chords from his father, a Mississippi riverboat captain, and grew up listening to the Grand Ole Opry on the radio. He also was influenced by the local black church and put together his first band at age 10.

Twitty's music career was delayed by a stint in the Army, during which he played with a service band, Cimmarons, in Japan, early 1950s.

Former priest sentenced

ALAMOGORDO, N.M. (AP) — A retired Roman Catholic priest was sentenced to a maximum 275 years in prison Friday for molesting eight boys 20 years ago.

David A. Holley showed no emotion as Judge Robert M. Doughty II handed down the sentences that would require Holley to serve a minimum of 55 years in prison. Based on the minimum sentence, he could be eligible for parole after 18 1/2 years.

He was immediately taken into custody by the Otero County Sheriff's Department and will be held until he can be transferred to a state prison.

Holley, 65, pleaded guilty March 23 to eight molestation counts, including charges of sexual assault, sodomy and aggravated sodomy, primarily involving oral and anal sex.

"These offenses are serious. ... The position from which you committed these offenses shocked this court," Doughty said in sentencing Holley.

Five of Holley's victims testified during the hearing. They did not react when the sentence was announced.

Most left the courthouse without commenting but Mark Sanchez, who was molested by Holley along with his brother, Gary Michael Sanchez, called the sentence fair.

Business

Minding your own Business

By Don Taylor

Foreservice can help

The ink was barely dry on the "afterservice" column, when the idea for this column materialized. The topic came up in a casual conversation during a break in a "Coexisting With Wal-Mart" workshop that I presented.

Pat Reed planted the seed that sprouted into this idea. Reed is the director of operations for a buying group that provides services to retail appliance dealers in Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee and Mississippi. He and I were discussing the importance of providing service after the sale.

After agreeing there was a shortage of afterservice, Reed offered some additional insight. "Not only is there a limited supply of service after the sale, but there is also a shortage of service before the sale," he said. Reed added that smaller businesses can make up ground on the discounters and specialty chains by providing service before the sale. And that is how I got a brand new word for service before the sale — "foreservice."

Afterservice and foreservice

For the benefit of you readers who may have missed the afterservice column, let me take just a moment to bring you up to date. A few weeks ago I wrote a column on service after the sale, and in that article coined the term afterservice to describe the concept. The central point was to follow-up after the sale to increase your customer's level of satisfaction.

What Reed was suggesting was that service before the sale was equally important and also in short supply. I pondered that thought as I drove home from the workshop.

Here are some tips Reed and I came up with that may help you increase your customer's level of confidence and satisfaction before the sale. Use them to turn potential buyers into satisfied customers.

Foreservice tips

1) Get to know every customer. Take time to learn their names and to find their interests. Customers like to do business with people they know — particularly the owner of the business. Ask questions to determine needs and quality prospects. Don't underestimate the power of the personal touch.

2) Don't promise more than you can deliver. You may make the sale this time, but you will probably lose the customer. The best approach is to "under-promise and over-deliver." Remember your reputation and integrity are on the line every time.

3) Be knowledgeable of your products and services. You and every employee should gain product knowledge every day. One of the ways to gain new customers is to "out-know" your competition. People are willing to pay more for knowledge and information. Many of the mass merchandisers and specialty chains are weak in this area. Take advantage of their weaknesses by making product knowledge your strength.

4) Stress the benefits of your products and services. All customers want the following benefits: more time, more money, less aggravation and enhanced feelings of self worth. Pointing out the advantages you offer clearly and concisely is good foreservice.

5) Don't forget to be courteous. Even if you can't fill every need, a friendly, courteous manner will bring the customers back again and again. Good foreservice includes a friendly greeting, a warm smile and calling the customer by name, if you can.

6) Foreservice also includes: Adjusting your store hours to meet your customers' preferences, creating cheerful and appealing displays of merchandise, and making it easy for customers to contact you with 24-hour hot lines or toll-free phone numbers.

Why not give foreservice a try today? I foresee that you will find yourself on the forefront of business experience that will foreshadow anything else you've ever done.

Pampan honored for health care service

By JOHN McMILLAN
Staff Writer

Pat Eads, a full-time home health aide for the Pampa office of Panhandle Health Services, goes far beyond the call of medical duty.

She not only offers her patients basic medical and personal services, such as a blood-pressure test or changing the bed, when she visits them several times a week at their homes. She also brings them vegetables from her family's garden. And Eads has been known to throw a birthday party for a patient, as she did last month at the Pampa home of an 85-year-old blind woman.

"I feel like if you have helped to make the patient more comfortable or to brighten up their day or bring a little cheer or happiness to them, it's very gratifying," Eads, a dark-haired, 5'5" woman, said modestly in an interview recently.

Eads, 58, has been named "Employee of the Month" for June for the Amarillo-based Panhandle Health Services — only the second employee in the company's history to receive such an honor. The company began offering the Employee of the Month award this year, for the month of May. Eads was chosen through an election by the approximately 100 employees at the various offices of Panhandle Health Services.

As Employee of the Month, the Pampa resident received a plaque of her own and a T-shirt proclaiming her winner of the award. "I feel very honored," said Eads, who has been a home health aide for the company since January 1982. She was previously employed for a total of about eight years as a nurse aide and nurse technician at Coronado Hospital and the former Highland General Hospital.

Juaneil Brooks, from left, Pat Eads and Randall Keeney, all with Panhandle Health Services, hold a T-shirt and plaque honoring Eads, who has been named Employee of the Month for June.

June is proving to be a milestone month for Eads, who plans to celebrate her 41st wedding anniversary with her husband, Bill, on June 15. The Eadses have three children, ranging in age from 21 to 35.

Terrie Horst, director of the Pampa office of Panhandle Health Services, praised the philanthropic attitude of Eads toward her patients. "She loves them, every one of them," Horst observed.

Juaneil Brooks, vice president of administration for Panhandle Health Services in Amarillo, also praised Eads' dedication to serving people. "She's very caring, very loyal to the company and to the patients," Brooks noted.

Eads conducts an average of about 40 home visits per week to patients' homes, and she generally spends an hour on each visit. The home health aide currently serves a dozen patients in Pampa on a regular basis, all of them elderly, she said. About half of her patients suffer from a terminal illness.

"I think there are so many people who are so much happier if they can be at home," rather than in a nursing home, Eads said.

Eads becomes so attached to the people she visits that she has attended funerals for 10 to 20 of the patients who died, she said. "And I still stay in touch with some of their families, even though the patient is gone."

Hearing to consider export plan for small businesses

WASHINGTON — The Subcommittee on the Development of Rural Enterprises, Exports and the Environment, chaired by Rep. Bill Sarpalius, D-Texas, will hold a public hearing on Tuesday to examine state efforts to increase the exports of small- and medium-sized businesses.

The hearing will be at 10 a.m. in Room 2359 of the Rayburn House Office Building. "State and local efforts to increase the exports of small- and medium-sized businesses have sprung up all over this nation in the last ten years," Sarpalius said.

"This subcommittee's last hearing revealed the federal government's disjointed, overlapping and ineffective export effort. Into this void have stepped the states with their own export programs.

"The states use export promotion and finance as an economic development tool — to increase the economic health of the individual state," he said.

"You can negotiate all of the trade agreements in the world, but if you don't have a trade development infrastructure, you won't be competitive in today's global market," Sarpalius added.

Sarpalius said Tuesday's hearing will look at a few creative approaches to trade development. Among representatives expected to testify are those from NPORT — the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey — who will discuss response to trade development.

Representatives from the Texas Department of Commerce will be relating what they are doing to prepare for a North American Free Trade Agreement, and New York State officials will give the subcommittee some recommendations for an improved federal export effort.

The subcommittee also will hear from William Nothdurft, a respected authority on European export assistance programs and a public policy consultant. Nothdurft will offer insight on Europe's successes and failures in encouraging small- and medium-sized firms to export.

"The bottom line is jobs, jobs and more jobs," Sarpalius said. "Public investment in programs to increase export volume translates directly into high-wage jobs. The time has come to focus our public investment on projects that have an assured return.

"Why invest in part-time, summer jobs when government can invest in programs to increase the volume of America's exports and create long-term, high-wage jobs? This is the kind of investment America really needs," he claimed.

Nation's unemployment rate drops slightly, lowest in 18 months

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's unemployment rate declined slightly to 6.9 percent in May as a surge in construction jobs helped to drive the jobless rate to its lowest level in 18 months, the government said.

The Labor Department said the improvement followed three straight months in which the jobless rate had been stuck at 7 percent. However, in May the economy seemed to shake off its winter doldrums. Total employment, as measured by a survey of households, surged by 857,000 during the month, the biggest one-month gain in nine years.

Private economists cautioned against making too much of the one-month improvement, noting that employment figures become unusually hard during the late spring as schools close and thousands of students enter the workforce.

Still, analysts said the May jobless decline at least gave hope that the economy, after a disastrous winter, was beginning to post at least a modest rebound in growth.

The 6.9 percent unemployment rate was the lowest since a similar figure in November 1991. That rate reflected the fact that 119.3 million Americans had jobs last month while 8.86 million were listed as unemployed.

Suns set up showdown with Bulls

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — One hundred games and still counting, the Phoenix Suns ended a tortuous trip to the NBA Finals Saturday with a record free throw bonanza and set up a shootout for the title in the "Charles and Michael Show."

The league's only true megastars and most exciting players — Charles Barkley, MVP this year, and Michael Jordan, MVP the last two — will face each other starting Wednesday night when the Suns host the Chicago Bulls.

Barkley laid down the challenge with 44 points and 24 rebounds in a 123-110 seventh-game victory over the Seattle SuperSonics to win the Western Conference title, one day after the Bulls beat the New York Knicks for the Eastern title.

After 82 regular-season games with the league's best record; after 18 playoff games — five more than Chicago; after going to the limit in the opening round against the Lakers and in the third round against the Sonics; after all that, the Suns finally are playing for the championship for the first time since 1976, before Barkley could even dunk.

All season it seemed inevitable, Barkley vs. Jordan going shot for shot for the NBA title, and now it is imminent.

Barkley said he's been looking forward to a championship series meeting with the Bulls and Jordan all season.

Krone rides into books at Belmont

NEW YORK (AP) — Colonial Affair carried Julie Krone into the record books by winning the Belmont Stakes on Saturday in a race marred by the breakdown of Preakness winner Prairie Bayou.

Colonial Affair took the lead in the upper stretch and made Krone the first woman jockey ever to win a Triple Crown race.

It was announced soon after the race that Prairie Bayou would be humanely destroyed. Just three weeks ago Union City was destroyed after breaking down in the Preakness.

Sea Hero, the Kentucky Derby winner, was in the hunt for a time, but finished out of the money.

The 29-year-old Krone guided Colonial Affair, who had not run in the Derby or Preakness over the 1 1/2 miles on a good track on a rainy day at Belmont Park in 2:29 4/5. The winner finished 2 1/4 lengths ahead of Kissin Kris, who was 3 1/2 lengths in front of Wild Gale.

Silver of Silver was fourth in the 13-horse field, another two lengths back.

The crowd gasped when Smith appeared to be unseated, although a tape showed the jockey jumped off. Bayou, who was removed in a horse ambulance, had a broken right foreleg. Smith walked off the track with the horse's trainer, Tom Bohannon.

In the Preakness at Pimlico on May 15, Union City broke down on the backstretch after breaking his right front ankle and was destroyed.

Krone moved Colonial Affair into fourth place behind Cherokee Run, Silver of Silver and Wild Gale with a quarter mile to go. Then the colt charged down the middle of the stretch to make Krone part of racing lore.

An inquiry had been lodged against second-place Kissin-Kris, but after looking at film stewards allowed the order of finish to stand.

Completing the order of finish after Silver of Silver were Virginia Rapids, Cherokee Run, Sea Hero, Bull In the Heather, Antrim Rd., Raglan Road, Only Alpha and Arinthod. Prairie Bayou did not finish.

Aikman aches

IRVING (AP) — Super Bowl MVP Troy Aikman has been advised to rest his aching back for six weeks, meaning he might not be at full strength until the Dallas Cowboys open training camp in mid-July.

"It's not going to be six weeks of not doing anything or six weeks of being bedridden," Aikman told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "It's just a precautionary thing to make sure it feels like it should when we go to Austin" for training camp.

Aikman injured his back lifting weights last month and muscle spasms forced him to miss the final two workouts at the club's quarter-back school last week.

Aikman was in much better shape Friday than Thursday, when it took him 15 minutes to move on or off the trainer's table he spent most of the day reclining on. He even did some soft-tossing on the sideline during Friday's practice, action inconceivable the day before.

"I came to Phoenix for one reason, and it wasn't just to get to the finals," Barkley said. "I believed all year that we were going to win the championship. I'm glad we're playing Chicago because they're the best team."

Barkley said he talked to Jordan, his Olympic teammate, on the phone before Saturday's game.

"He told me to go to the basket, and that's what I tried to do," he said.

Sonics coach George Karl wanted his team to play "wild and crazy and out of control," and they did, often to their detriment as they sent the Suns to the foul line 64 times and an NBA playoff record-tying 57 free throws.

Boston also had 57 free throws in a playoff game against Syracuse in 1953, but that game went four overtimes. The previous for a regulation playoff game was 54 by St. Louis against Minneapolis in 1956.

In the deciding game of this series, the Suns switched strategy by starting 6-foot-10 Tom Chambers instead of 6-7 Richard Dumas for the first time all season to overcome the difficulty they've been having with taller teams like the Sonics and Lakers.

Chambers also gave Phoenix another outside threat — his 3-pointer sparked a 12-2 start in opening four minutes — but his presence on the court was far more significant than his 17 points and six rebounds.

The Sonics, who played the maximum number of games in all three of their series, didn't fade easily at first. They chipped away to close the gap to 31-28 at the end of the first period when Nate McMillan hit a 3-pointer at the buzzer, and that basket charged them up to take the lead for the first time, 36-33, after a 13-2 run.

Barkley, virtually a spectator in the opening quarter with four points, went on a 6-for-8 shooting spree in the second period and had 16 points and nine rebounds by halftime as the Suns took a 57-51 lead. Kevin Johnson scored nine of his 13 points in the half from the free throw line and finished with 22.

Seattle's Sam Perkins made some incredible shots, including one falling down backward and another on a turnaround moonball, to post 13 points in the half while Shawn Kemp added 12. Eddie Johnson led the Sonics with 34 points.

Barkley ruled again the third period, hitting a jumper to start it off, making two free throws and then drawing Kemp's fourth foul on a powerhouse move to the basket. Barkley raised four fingers and shouted "four" to the crowd, knowing full well the importance of taking Kemp out of the game.

A few minutes later Barkley drew Kemp's fifth, dropped two more free throws and finished the quarter with 13 points as the Suns led 91-80.

No one could stop Barkley now as he hit drives, a 3-pointer and more free throws while also sweeping the boards to let the Suns cruise to the finish.

These Suns are more than Barkley, as the Bulls are more than Jordan, but his dominance couldn't have been clearer than it was in the last three quarters when he made nine of 13 shots from the field and 11 of 16 free throws.

The Sonics, who got this far by blending talents without the benefit of a dominant player like Barkley or Jordan, couldn't overcome that singular ability by one man to take over a game.

Graf battles for title

PARIS (AP) — Rallying like a champion, Steffi Graf battled from behind twice and ended Mary Joe Fernandez's upset streak to win her third French Open title today.

Fernandez seemed on her way to erasing her reputation as a talented also-ran by winning her first Grand Slam championship. But Graf hung on until Fernandez tired, then cut down on her errors and prevailed 4-6, 6-2, 6-4 in the 2 1/2 hour final.

It was Graf's 12th Grand Slam championship and first her since she won back-to-back titles in 1987-88.

Fernandez, the No. 5 seed, had upset third-seeded Gabriela Sabatini and No. 2 seed Arantxa Sanchez Vicario to reach the final. She started out strongly against the top-seeded Graf, making fewer mistakes and mixing her ground strokes with drop shots.

A key phase came in the sixth game of the second set, with Fernandez serving to even the score at 3-3. She saved six break points and three times had game points of her own, but Graf finally won a seventh break to take a decisive 4-2 edge in the set. "It took a lot out of me physically," Fernandez said. "It was a long game and we both fought very hard. ... Maybe if I'd won it, I would have gotten my second wind back right away."

Graf agreed that the game was the key to the match, saying it helped her recover from a first set in which she felt "hectic and nervous."

"I wanted to win too much," she said. "I knew I'd never lost to her, I knew it was a Grand Slam final. I just wanted it too much."

Though clearly tired by the third set, Fernandez jumped to a 2-0 lead. But Graf saved two break points — one with an ace — to hold serve, then broke back to level the set at 2-2.

"It was close — a couple of points here and there," Fernandez said when asked the deciding factor in the match. "Maybe experience — she hung in there on the big points. She knows how to play them very well."

In the men's final today, Jim Courier goes for his third straight crown against Sergi Bruguera of Spain.

Since winning here in 1988, Graf has reached the finals three other times, losing once in two sets and twice in three sets.

Chicago Bulls move closer to dynasty dubbing

Merchants hoping for wins, peace

By JOE MOOSHIL
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Scottie Pippen made his mark, taking up from where Michael Jordan left off, and the Chicago Bulls are one step away from becoming the third team in history to win a third straight NBA title.

"Damn the critics," said Pippen, who could have added full speed ahead, after leading the Bulls to a 96-88 victory over the New York Knicks Friday night.

The Bulls now go on to the finals against the winner of Saturday's Seattle-Phoenix game. The finals start Wednesday — in Phoenix if the Suns win; in Chicago if the Super-Sonics win.

Pippen is sure to be a major factor.

His 3-pointer with 1:01 left clinched the verdict in the "delayed sweep" as the Bulls won four straight after losing the first two games of the series and put an end to New York's season of heightened expectations.

His 24 points in the finale included seven in the final period, when Jordan was missing his last six shots. That made the difference as the Bulls became the ninth team to come back from a 2-0 deficit to win an NBA playoff series.

"It has been rumored," said coach Phil Jackson when asked about Pippen's alleged inability to step up when needed. "Scottie had a terrific series after being labeled a pussy-footer."

In damning the critics, Pippen said "I've got two rings so I think I arrived two years ago."

It all began with the "Migraine" headache in final game of the 1990 series when Detroit eliminated the Bulls in seven games. And the label was fueled last year when Xavier McDaniel slugged Pippen in the first minute of the first game of the semifinals against the Knicks.

But Pippen put it all behind him in this series.

It wasn't only the clincher in which Pippen lifted his game to new heights. After being ejected in Game 2, Pippen promised the Bulls would be back.

He scored 29 points and hit 10-of-12 from the field in the start of the comeback in a 103-83 victory in Game 3 when Jordan was 3-of-18 from the field. Jordan took over in Game 4 with his 54 points but Pippen scored 28 points and had 11 rebounds in the pivotal 97-94 victory in Game 5 in New York.

Once again he stepped up big in Game 6, scoring 16 of his points in the second half. He also had seven assists and six rebounds.

"Scottie was simply an all-star," said Knicks coach Pat Riley. "He played as well as I've seen him. We just didn't have an answer to him."

Patrick Ewing, who scored 26 points, including 13 in the last quarter to keep the Knicks in contention until Pippen's 3-pointer, said "Pippen's play was really the key to the series. When we shut him down in New York, we won the first two games. We just couldn't do it the rest of the way."

Pippen refused to discount the performance of Jordan who had 25 points, 17 in the first half. Jordan had only four free throws in the final period, usually known as "Jordan Time."

"I never realized Michael was not in his game. He does a lot of things out there so you don't have to look at the scoreboard to see how many points he has. The best game you can get out of Michael is when he takes them out of their defense, things open up for the rest of us."

Jackson realized Jordan was tired coupled by the pressure of the gambling controversy.

"I thought Michael Jordan was exhausted but I couldn't find time to rest him. I think there was tremendous strain on Michael Jordan with all the controversy."

That involved the book that came out Thursday by Richard Esquinas who wrote that Jordan had lost over $1 million to him in golf bets.

Jordan remained silent except to issue a statement admitting he played golf with Esquinas and lost money but "I can assure you that the level of our wagers was substantially less than the preposterous amounts that have been reported."

Prior to his vow of silence, Jordan made it known that his ultimate goal now is to win three straight titles, something such contemporary stars such as Magic Johnson, Larry Bird and Isiah Thomas failed to accomplish.

The only teams to win three in a row were the Minneapolis Lakers (1952-54) and the Boston Celtics (1959-1966).

CHICAGO (AP) — Fans hope the Chicago Bulls charge to a third NBA championship, but merchants devastated by violence during the two previous celebrations are not as enthusiastic.

They fear another title will give some people an excuse to loot and burn again.

"I hope people realize that to destroy the neighborhood you live in is just stealing from yourselves," said Dennis Talison, manager of a Foot Locker athletic shoe store hit hard by looters last year.

More than 1,000 people were arrested after the Bulls won their second straight title by beating the Portland Trailblazers at Chicago Stadium. More than 340 businesses were looted, several fires were started and several cabs were overturned in violence that caused nearly $10 million in damage.

The year before, more than 100 people were arrested after the Bulls beat the L.A. Lakers to win their first NBA championship.

In gearing up to avoid a recurrence of the violence, the city of Chicago plans to spend $1 million on a security plan that includes broadcasting public service announcements and beefed up Chicago Police patrols near Chicago Stadium and other areas previously hit by damage.

"It doesn't hurt to make sure you are prepared, but nobody is panicking," said Jim Williams, a spokesman for Chicago Mayor Richard M. Daley.

Some merchants are taking precautions.

"We've already put up stronger doors," said James Kidd, an assistant manager at an auto parts store where looters stole batteries, car stereo speakers and other expensive items last year.

Ken Kim, whose Diana Dept. clothing store on the West Side was destroyed by arson in 1992, said he's not overly concerned about a repeat of violence. At the same time, though, he's been watching Bulls playoff games at his store instead of in the comfort of his home.

"I'm just watching to make sure nothing happens," said Kim, whose store took five months to rebuild. "It is better to watch the game on television here than to watch it at home and worry about something happening here."

Even with his loss, though, Kim has no hard feelings against the Bulls.

"I hope the Bulls take it all the way because I've been a Bulls fan for more than 15 years," he said Friday, when Chicago earned its third straight trip to the finals with a 96-88 victory over the New York Knicks.

Robert Kennedy is remembered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation has traveled far in the quarter-century since Robert F. Kennedy was murdered. Yet his contributions have endured through the turbulent 1970s, the complacent 1980s and into the current era of Democrats who label themselves new and different.

"The fact that 25 years after Robert Kennedy's death at the age of 42, he is still such a vital figure in the imagination of many people, including young people who were born after his death, shows he struck a deep chord," said Arthur Schlesinger, a historian and author of "Robert Kennedy and His Times."

At the heart of Kennedy's legacy — a mix of compassion and pragmatism — lie several principles: Society has an obligation to help and protect the vulnerable; individuals have an obligation to try to make a difference; and those tiny individual ripples can form a current "that can sweep down the mightiest walls of oppression and resistance," as he put it in 1966 in Cape Town, South Africa.

Kennedy's causes echo in President Carter's foreign policy, which elevated human rights to a top priority; in President Clinton's talk of personal responsibility, racial reconciliation and the dignity of work; and in a memorial organization dedicated to exposing injustice and aiding the needy.

"He appealed to the best in all of us. He gave people a vision of what America could be," said Kerry Kennedy Cuomo, a Kennedy daughter who runs the memorial's Center for Human Rights.

As a senator from New York and later as a presidential candidate, Kennedy visited Indian reservations and Appalachian hollows, migrant workers in their fields, poverty-ridden families in Brooklyn, N.Y. and the Mississippi Delta.

He judged what he had seen to be unacceptable and he worked for the rest of his life to change it.

"He came to view public service as his special calling to help the disadvantaged, the poor and the victims of discrimination," Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said last month at a symposium on his late brother. "His public legacy is written large in the achievements of those he inspired and who have carried on his work."

The spirit in which Bobby Kennedy is remembered dates largely from the last few years of his life.

His earlier stints as a Senate committee counsel and as his brother John's presidential campaign manager and attorney general were highly controversial. Many viewed him as ruthless, a perception Sen. Kennedy attributes to the "strong will and intensity" he had inherited from their father.

Others say Kennedy was exceptionally disciplined, determined and politically skillful. "He combined a passion for social justice with a very hard-headed pragmatism," said Phil Johnston, who worked on Kennedy's 1968 presidential campaign and said it inspired him to a life of public service.

Johnston was a state legislator and state official in Massachusetts before becoming executive director of the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial.

The Washington-based memorial bestows awards on books and articles that are true to Kennedy's spirit; encourages progress toward human rights around the globe; and is undertaking a major effort to help states reform their juvenile justice systems and reduce street violence.

The 20-person outfit, which has a $2.2 million budget this year, also runs a program in which college and graduate students scout tough neighborhoods for adolescents with medical problems and steer them to appropriate services. The program is slated for a major expansion in connection with Clinton's proposal to let students work off loans with national service.

Loving hands for loving hearts

Mother: Margaret Dorman Daughter: Dee Dee Dorman

It was a purely economic decision, mother and daughter said.

Margaret Dorman of Wheeler is in the big middle of sewing a wedding dress for her daughter, Dee Dee Dorman, whose wedding to Bubba Smith of Canyon is set for July 10.

"We never even thought we'd buy one," Dorman said.

Eleven and a half yards of ivory moiré are going into a tailored gown with a sweetheart neckline and floor-dragging train. A hat that Dorman plans to adorn with lace and sequins will complete the ensemble.

After Dee Dee's engagement to Smith was announced, the mother and daughter duo hit the stores looking for an appropriate style. Dee Dee knew from looking at bridal magazines she wanted a long, straight dress with a tailored look. The pattern books came next and they selected a Victorian style that can be adapted for a bridesmaid's dress, also. An added bonus is the dress' shape which is flattering to different figure types.

Dorman said that in her head is a vision of what the final product will look like — Victorian elegance in navy, dusty rose and ivory — right down to the boutonnieres for men and corsages for grandmothers.

The ivory moiré was spread out in all its bridal elegance on the jury table in the Wheeler County Courthouse to be cut. Dorman said it took her an hour and a half to cut out the pattern pieces. Dee Dee's dress was fitted during her visits home from West Texas State University, where she completed her sophomore year.

Story and photos
by Cheryl Berzanskis

Fabric, buttons, a zipper and pattern cost about $69. Another $25 is in the hat and nylon netting for a bow. Dorman said she keeps receipts for everything she buys so she can track wedding expenses.

Though this is Dorman's first child to marry, she is handling the event like a pro. She ticked off the arrangements: Smith's mother is making a silk arrangement for Dee Dee's bouquet (the design is from a picture in a bridal craft magazine); a friend is making the cake, another friend is making pew bows, and another friend is lending punch cups. A friend from the Wheeler Church of Christ and a high school friend of Dee Dee's are going sing. Dorman and the mother of a graduating senior are bartering time behind a video camera to catch special moments for each of their children.

"It's friends helping friends, but it makes me feel better to give back," Dorman said, "I'm not a taker."

She shopped for the best buys in napkins and invitations; a cake topper in ivory, not true white, is a must. Dorman has finished her daughter Dedra Dorman's bridesmaid dress (polished cotton in navy, dusty rose and ivory, in the same pattern as Dee Dee's dress) and it hangs in the bedroom-cum-sewing room waiting to be hemmed. Dorman said that she's not doing anything at the last minute — not with runoff elections looming close.

Dorman, who by day is the Wheeler county clerk, is no novice when it comes to doing-it-herself. She made her children's clothing when they were small, but after she went to work full time and got involved with their after school activities, had less and less time to sew. She did manage to squeeze in Dee Dee's prom dress and keeps daughter, Dedra, in clothes for college.

Dorman said she learned to sew when she was about 10 years old. Her mother never allowed jeans and t-shirts but insisted that her children — sons and daughters alike — learn to sew, iron and cook. In turn, Dorman taught her girls to sew. Summer 4-H required them not only to sew but to model their creations.

If sewing is a pleasure, then counted cross stitch is love.

"I like to take something and create it. Like counted cross stitch — you take a canvas and make a picture," Dorman explained.

Will it fit? Margaret Dorman, at left, measures the ivory moiré train on daughter Dee Dee Dorman.

Mother: Barbara Parry Daughter: Alicia Unruh

"I could have the dress I wanted how I wanted it," said Alicia Unruh about her mother-made wedding dress.

Barbara Parry has been sewing since the eighth grade when she learned in home economics class. It was only natural that the woman who sews professionally would make her daughter's nuptial dress. It was not her first to make — she sewed her own bridal frock nearly 20 years ago, she said.

About 80 hours of sewing and 20-25 yards of tulle went into the pattern that became Unruh's dress for her Oct. 3, 1992 wedding to Thomas Unruh.

Parry's main concern in making the dress was the tulle — she was afraid of tearing the diaphanous fabric as it piled around her sewing chair waiting to be sewn into layers of ruffles. Sewing itself it not the problem: "It's not hard to sew — there are difficult things in sewing," she said.

Both economic considerations and sentiment figured into the decision to make the dress instead of buying it ready made. Parry said that $500 to $1,000 was out of the question for a dress. She figures she invested $200 in the pattern and material and another $100 to $150 in time.

"You know its not gonna fall apart on you, because she put time in on it," Unruh said.

Unruh reports that except for the unsewn fabric still on the bolt, her intended did not see the dress before their wedding day. Parry noted that she had to make an "appointment" to fit her daughter at times when the groom-to-be wasn't around. Unruh's girl friends, however, got a sneak preview of the excited bride-to-be.

"It means a lot more really ... It's in the family ... Because she made it, it means a whole lot more than if I went to the store and bought it," Unruh said.

Indeed, she expects that someday her own daughter will wear the unique white creation.

Parry crafted more than the bride's dress and nylon net slip — she baked the cake, fashioned the garter, the ring pillow and sewed dresses for a bridesmaid and a flower girl.

"It was just lots of fun," Parry said.

She sounded like she meant it.

Barbara Parry and Alicia Unruh admire Parry's creation.

Memorial Day weekend heralds summer season

Memorial Day weekend somehow seems to mark the end of spring the beginning of summer, although the calendar has other dates in mind. At any rate the last of May is always a busy time for everyone.

Instead of graduating, Jerry Teal retired on May 28 from Mundy Co. after 12 years in the tool room, welder foreman and as manager of the salvage yard. There he was in his heyday because of his fascination with "bits and pieces." Mike Frye was in charge of the covered dish hamburgers on the spot luncheon for the crew, a few Hochst-Celanese and Mundy employees. In the last two years, Jerry has served four times in the mission field in Brazil as a representative of First Baptist Church. His plans are to keep his days full by doing odd jobs, seeing about his family and being deeply involved in the work of his church. Happy retirement, Jerry!

Delores Cox, Jean Gilmore and Billie Bruner took a long weekend bus trip to Silver Dollar City and Branson, Mo. where they took in the sights, shopped in a nifty shopping center and saw several shows. Doil and Vonta Douthit were there, too, and all five attended the Vince Gill Show. Vonta was one of six out of a crowd of 4,000 allowed to go backstage. She asked Vince to listen to a demo tape she had with her of a family member, and he promised he would! Vonta's relatives think the tape has lots of promise and hope Vince will agree. They received lots of attention as the only Texas group present.

Billie's sister Susie Spoonemore and Marjie Rogers went east and north a few days earlier and saw Niagara Falls and parts of Canada. The girls were impressed with the friendliness and courtesy of Canadians to them. Sunday, Susie and Marjie attending a retirement reception in Midland for Susie and Billie's sister Joy and her husband the Rev. Hugh Daniel. Joy had taught school and Hugh had served in the Methodist-Church ministry for more than 40 years. Joy grew up in Panhandle and Hugh spent his high school years in Lefors. After spending the summer in Colorado, the Daniels, well known throughout the area, will make their home in Breckenridge.

Relatives on both sides of Lee and Katie McDonald's family came to Pampa for Kirk's graduation from Pampa High School. While the family members were here, their children decided what better time to have a 25th anniversary party for them, a few days ahead of the real day June 7, at Mary Ellen and Harvester Church of Christ. Hosts were Sherry George and husband Sean of Pittsburgh, Stacy McDonald of San Angelo, Kirk and Kim of Pampa. Sherry baked the cake for the come and go affair.

Family members attending were Katie's parents Harvey and Bonnie Blackstone of Enochs, her aunt Nell Coats of Snyder, her sister Nancy and husband Jim Peace of Friona. Lee's folks were his parents Horace and Elizabeth McDonald of Quitaque, his brother and wife Lonnie and Roberta McDonald of Cotton Center and his sister Patsy Hilbers of Idalou. Happy anniversary wishes on June 7.

Doug and Kelly Lee, Shawna and Cory came from Burleson to spend the weekend with his parents Lacy and Bell Lee.

Nancy Reagan and children Jordan and Peyton spent the weekend with her parents Jimmy and Peggy King.

Visitors in the home of Faye and Harold Houdyshell for the holidays were their son Sammy of Canyon and grandchildren Leah and Lindsay Turpen of Hobbs, N.M.

Miriam Thornton of Amarillo and her sister-in-law JoAnn Mulanax of Willow Park in the Metroplex area met and spent the weekend with a friend Evie Eaves. Miriam was a native Pampian.

Pat Young enjoyed being entertained last weekend with her grandson Daniel Myers of Booker. Jerry and Dietta Pope had a mini family reunion minus one when Scott and Trish Pope came from Lubbock. Zach, a student at West Texas is a lifeguard at the Youth Center and at the M.K. Brown Municipal Pool this summer. Talitha completed the family group. Another son Brad, who lives in Austin, was unable to attend. He was recently a part of a TV film which should air shortly.

Majunta, Jr. and Allen McKean and boys visited Allen's family in Dallas and took in the sights. There was fun, yes, but home did look good.

Janie Phillips spent a week and her husband Claudie the weekend in Lubbock with family, children, parents and grandchildren. Again, home looked good after a week of family fun.

Kay and Ed Harris spent a couple of weeks with their daughter Debbie Francis and family at Plainview. They went to be caretakers of Debbie's children Richards and Leanna, and Tabor but ended up being taken care of.

Congratulations to Charlene Morris for being a five number lottery winner last Saturday night. So high was her excitement that Roy was thinking about taking her to the hospital.

The Jerry Swires home at the Haley Ranch was astir last weekend as all their children family and friends came for a visit.

The gathering centered around the youngest son Andrew's graduation from Lefors High School Friday evening.

Sherry picked grandson Kacy up in Pampa at noon Friday. Son Justin and family, Jo Beth and Jacie, Eagle Butte, S.D., arrived early that afternoon, followed by daughters, Susan, Pat, Savannah and Jared Hartman, Nazareth; Anna, Wesley and Cass Holland, Guymon, Okla., Jody Holland, San Angelo, John Holland, Gruver, and Cinco, Hilary and Erica Snyder, Canadian.

Kacy and Justin had a grand time riding Kacy's little motorcycle before Papa Jerry took all the young ones to the creek for a dip in the pond. The Holland boys and Justin tried out new repelling gear from the bluffs on the creek. Nanny Sherry and the girls made supper and enjoyed a nice visit before the others returned and the scramble to get dressed for graduation started.

Joining the group at Lefors were Jeanne Miller, James and Edwina Reeb and David Swires, Pampa; Gene and Joyce Mathews, Canadian.

During the ceremonies, Andrew gave a tribute to his Dad and Mom by reciting words to the songs, "You Just Won't See Him from the Road," by Chris LeDoux and Glen Campbell's "There Ought to Be a Hall of Fame for Mamas." Cinco took family pictures before everyone returned to the ranch.

Susan's family left that night. Son-in-law Pat has a new job in Dalhart and the family had to get ready to make the move.

Son-in-law Wesley has been called to pastor a Methodist Church in Rotan and they will be moving in mid-June.

The group enjoyed a hamburger cookout on Saturday before the Hollands and Snyders went home.

Justin's family stayed until Sunday and were happy to have Kacy return home with them for a visit. That evening Andrew, Jeanne and Sherry went to a banquet to honor seniors at Hi-Land Christian Church in Pampa. Later that evening, Andrew and Jason Winegeart loaded the truck and headed to the Canadian Ranch to haul the hay there.

Andrews graduation brings 28 years of raising their family and school activities to a close for Jerry and Sherry. With Andrew in college and four grandchildren in school, they'll be able to enjoy activities at a slower pace.

Mary and J.C. Jackson entertained with another yard party fish fry on Friday evening. Guests were Marvin and Beth Bowman, Bud and Alma Cumberledge, Howard and Ruth Sims, Mildred Pierce and Troy and Juanita Shipman. Everyone is enjoying the lucky catch at Foss Lake.

Congratulations to former Lefors residents, Jeanette Fish R.N., and daughter Lynn Swanson R.N., who have formed McLean Home Health Agency Inc. They live in Alanreed which has been home for several years. They both have been employed by Agape Home Health of Pampa. Their many friends in the area will welcome their cheerful expertise.

Carolyn Barnett returned from Oklahoma where she visited in Perry, Red Rock and Ponca. She brought her grandson, Bobby, for a summer visit with his father, Kenny. See you next week, Katie.

Stifling last laughs isn't so odd at funerals

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the letter from "Embarrassed in Boston," whose 31-year-old son and his cousin got the giggles during the funeral service of a relative.

I attended the funeral of a co-worker with several other co-workers (all over 25), and during the service, a drunk walked by outside the church, singing at the top of his voice. That started it! We started giggling and could not stop.

To make matters worse, a car came screeching around the corner and went speeding off. Someone leaned over and whispered, "That was the hearse." We were giggling so hard by that time, we were all crying. We weren't loud, but our shoulders were shaking and tears were rolling down our faces.

We were embarrassed, but powerless to stop ourselves. Before then, we had been very tense. We meant no disrespect to our friend, and we felt that she probably would have laughed right along with us.

GOT THE GIGGLES IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR GOT THE GIGGLES: It should comfort you to know that my mail is filled with letters from others who also got the giggles at a funeral. Read on:

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My sister and I lost our father last January, and oddly enough we both handle our stress by laughing.

First, on the way to the funeral, my son accidentally sprayed himself in the face with mace; then while seated directly behind my daughter in the church, I discovered that she had head lice! Then, my sister who was sitting next to me was sobbing and dabbing her eyes with a tissue when I noticed that her mascara had run, giving her the appearance of having two black eyes!

The final laugh came at the cemetery when they placed the casket on the rollers and one end collapsed!

Meanwhile, my sister and I were laughing hysterically. Thank God, everyone thought we were crying.

THE LAUGHING BLATON SISTERS IN MESA, ARIZ.

(cousins) who got the giggles during the funeral service of their uncle, I had to write and tell you what happened at my Grammy's funeral.

The minister told everyone to stand for the eulogy and prayer, and that's when the giggling and snickering began. Soon, the minister was giggling and snickering along with the rest of the mourners. Guess what started it all? It seems that when Grampy stood up, his pants fell to his ankles, and he was so deep in prayer he didn't bother to pull up his pants until after the eulogy was over.

After the funeral, everyone gathered at my mother's house where one of my uncles said, "Well, Dad sure got the last laugh on Mom!"

That funny episode broke the tension and made Grammy's death a little less painful. So, as the saying goes, "Laughter is the best medicine."

DEAR ABBY: Some years ago, I attended a formal church wedding in Milwaukee, Wis. It was the social event of the century ... as well as the merging of two enormous fortunes. When the bride was asked to repeat her marriage vows, she was so overwhelmed by her emotions, she started to titter, then giggle, then she burst into tears!

The minister had to stop the ceremony until she composed herself.

Studio markets 'Sleepless' to be sleeper

Critics create early buzz on Hanks' latest

By JOHN HORN
AP Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — No one's seen "Jurassic Park" yet. "Cliffhanger" wasn't shown to critics until hours ahead of its premiere. The media won't get a peek at "The Last Action Hero" until a week before it debuts.

"Sleepless in Seattle," on the other hand, was screened for tastemakers in January — six months before it arrives in theaters June 25. Those people who saw it half a year ago have been talking about it ever since, much to the delight of TriStar Pictures.

Certain summer movies — especially expensive star vehicles — don't need a lot of "buzz" for support at the box office. The concept alone sells; screenings are unnecessary. But other, less overtly commercial titles — particularly those without big-name stars — depend on word of mouth for their livelihood.

TriStar's orchestration of the "Sleepless in Seattle" buzz represents a case study in creative movie marketing for these smaller films.

The movie, starring Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan, will open with the kind of anticipation rarely seen in Hollywood. Once a project deemed unfilmable, the $25 million romantic comedy now is considered the season's unexpected or "sleeper" hit.

That positive spin is created as much by the film itself as an elaborate marketing campaign launched by the film's producer earlier this year. The effort includes national "word-of-mouth" screenings, a sneak preview drive and a highly regarded soundtrack album.

"I've never been in a position where the buzz was as positive as it is at this point," says Gary Foster, the film's producer. "My only fear is that it's getting so big we'll have a backlash before the movie opens."

In the film, Hanks plays a recently widowed Seattle father of a small boy. When his son calls up a nationally broadcast radio therapist to discuss dad's sorrow, a Baltimore journalist (Miss Ryan) instantly falls for the two. The movie comes down to a simple point: Will they, or won't they, ever get together?

Unlike most Hollywood fare, it's a love story in which the two principals spend the whole movie apart. For that reason, screenwriter Jeff Arch was told his script couldn't be made.

"The best criticism I heard was, a female executive told me, 'Jeff, I like foreplay a lot. But I don't think I could handle 90 minutes of it,'" Arch says. "Others said, 'You can't tell a love story where the people don't meet.' Another said, 'I love this. But I'm not going to make it.'"

But thanks to the perseverance of Arch, Foster and several TriStar executives, "Sleepless in Seattle" didn't succumb.

At one point, Kim Basinger was to star. At another point, it was Julia Roberts, then Sharon Stone. Three other screenwriters worked on the project. There were at least two directors attached.

"The studio was very close to saying, 'Forget this,'" Foster says. But the movie got made after novelist Nora Ephron did a screenplay draft and was hired to direct.

When TriStar executives viewed the film early this year, they liked what they saw and made an important decision to start spreading the news. What followed was a campaign similar to Paramount Pictures' handling of "Ghost," the 1990 hit supported by a tremendous early screening campaign.

Says studio chairman Mike Medavoy: "I think people saw the film and didn't expect it. We were ready early, and everybody knew we were onto something."

Adds Arch: "I think what happened is that people realized every summer you put out these big testosterone movies and then every summer some romantic comedy walks away with a $100 million."

"So after their screenings last winter, they said, 'Let's be the one that this happens to. Let's create a sleeper.' And I guess that's what happened."

Foster says the early screenings — of a rough, unfinished film with no soundtrack — were a gamble.

"We felt very good about the movie and we decided to have two or three screenings for the media in Los Angeles and New York," he says. "It was a risk in that if they didn't like, boy, did we create a problem. But it didn't. And everybody got on the bandwagon."

Early stories — and momentum — started building.

More recently, TriStar has conducted nationwide "word of mouth" screenings in which selected groups are invited to see the movie free. The hope is that they will tell their friends, and thus expand the film's interest.

The movie will be shown in a June 19 sneak preview. The soundtrack, filled with 1940s and '50s classics, arrives in record stores next week. A music video should start appearing on cable television's VH-1 before the film opens. And record retailers are being shown the movie in a dozen markets to help build grassroots awareness.

Despite all that, Medavoy says, "It's not like we're setting it up as a sleeper or we've told anybody that. We've just shown the movie. And that's all we intend to do."

TRAILERS: Word of mouth on the very expensive "Last Action Hero," meanwhile, is not nearly as good. The Arnold Schwarzenegger film tested poorly in research screenings, and Columbia Pictures was inundated with rumors suggesting the film's June 18 release would be delayed, switched with the studio's Clint Eastwood drama "In the Line of Fire." Eventually, Columbia was forced to issue a most unusual press release, saying, "In a move to cut off the endless string of media calls from around the world on the same very tired subject ... We absolutely will make our date on 'Last Action Hero.'"

Spielberg's 'Jurassic Park' generates biotech fears

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As dinosaurs thunder across the screen in the film "Jurassic Park," someone is bound to ask if scientists really could resurrect the rampaging reptiles.

Researchers say no, no, not. And some worry the movie will aggravate public fear of biotechnological wonders such as new disease tests and tomatoes genetically engineered to stay fresh.

In Michael Crichton's best-selling book, "Jurassic Park," and the movie he co-wrote, scientists get dinosaur DNA — a chemical genetic blueprint — from dinosaur blood sucked up by an ancient mosquito, which was preserved in amber, or fossilized tree resin. They use the DNA to clone new dinosaurs.

Director Steven Spielberg insists the movie "is not science fiction; it's science eventuality."

"It's certainly not possible now," said George O. Poinar Jr., a University of California, Berkeley, entomologist and expert on insects preserved in amber. He added that scientists are a generation from cloning living animals.

"I just don't see it happening in the foreseeable future," said biologist Raul Cano, of California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo. "There are too many technical problems."

Scientists have found DNA in fossil hair, bone and muscle from mammoths, insects and horse-like quaggas. They use it to study links between modern creatures and prehistoric ancestors. They haven't yet found dinosaur DNA in amber-preserved insects, Poinar said.

If they do, the DNA would be too degraded to carry a complete dinosaur genetic blueprint, said Kevin Padian, a UC-Berkeley paleontologist.

Embryonic animal cells develop into numerous types of cells to form various body parts. Even with perfect dinosaur DNA, scientists would have to learn how to make cells containing dinosaur DNA regress to embryonic form so it could grow into an entire dinosaur, Poinar said.

Some people already fear biotech tomatoes, and "Jurassic Park" could cause irrational concerns and excessive regulation of biotechnology to diagnose and fight disease, said Russell Higuchi, a molecular biologist for a Hoffman-LaRoche drug company subsidiary in Alameda, Calif.

Homicide detective demonstrates the art of murder

By BRIGITTE GREENBERG
Associated Press Writer

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Detective Rick Carlson crosses a yellow police line nearly every day to investigate blood, bullets and stab wounds — the makings of murder. Through his art, he also takes the public to the scene of the crime.

The 24-year Police Department veteran records the macabre sights of his job in brilliant oil pastels and India ink on watercolor paper. The bright red of blood, penetrating purples and blues are the hues of death.

His one-man art show, "Murders He Drew," opened last month at Sinbad's Coffee Co. and Gallery and runs through the end of June. Each of his 20 scenes is identified by case number.

"I try hard in my paintings to depict the way the eyes are. When we think of somebody dying, we think of a person lying on the ground with their eyes closed," the 46-year-old homicide detective said last week. "People don't die like that. They die with their eyelids half open, or their eyes partially rolled back in their head, or with one eye open and one eye closed."

Carlson began painting what he knows best during the past year. The artworks have no law enforcement purpose; Carlson paints in his free time, working mostly from memory.

On the job, "you never get to express yourself. You put down all these facts, but you never get to really tell anybody about the terror in the victim's face," he said. "It's definitely therapy for me. It lets me express myself and lets other people know what I see."

The ghastly scenes include that of a man who got caught in the middle of a gunfight and was shot in the head twice; a woman who was raped, strangled and then discarded in the trunk of her own car; and a murder-suicide of a husband and wife inside the family car.

"She was leaving him. He tricked her into coming home, then shot her multiple times. The kids found them in the car in the front driveway of the house," Carlson said. "It's real sad. They were a nice family."

Carlson said none of the victims' families have commented on his artwork. He has rearranged the wounds on some victims to avoid offending family members.

"I would much rather have these be a tribute to the victims, to tell their story," he said. "I hope that people will look at these and say, 'This just can't go on,' or 'we'll look back in history and say, 'This was a time that was very violent in our history.'"

Carlson's wife, Paula, said some of his artworks are "exceptional, even nice to look at."

"But to have it hanging in my house," she added, "I wouldn't want that."

"The interesting thing is that it shows the way people work through the various things they see every day," Police Chief Jerry Sanders said. "I think it shows a more human side of our homicide detectives, who have a tough job."

Carlson's work can evoke extreme reactions from patrons of the combination cafe and gallery where the art is displayed.

One man stormed out after angrily telling the cafe owner that he would lose business if he didn't "get this negative art out of here." Another man sat sipping coffee and eating a muffin just below a drive-by shooting.

Cafe owner Larry Diggs said Carlson's art has helped business, luring the darkly curious.

"It's twisted," Diggs said. "Everyone has some kind of inner turmoil. This is a reflection of somebody that we have out there protecting us, who's dealing with violent crimes, the most vicious killers. I don't think art is confined to any one particular thing."

Apparently, some people agree. Carlson has received offers for several paintings, including $750 from a woman matrimonial-law attorney from Los Angeles seeking the picture of the man shot twice in the head.

One thing about his art: There's no end to the material.

And the paintings serve as a constant reminder that he has still has murders to solve, killers to catch.

(AP Photo) San Diego homicide detective Rick Carlson poses with several of his paintings in a downtown San Diego gallery recently.

"I always want to see these people brought to justice," he said. "With my paintings, the victim is still around, saying, 'We're going to get you. We'll solve this.'"

'WHICH IS THE GREAT COMMANDMENT?'

"Teacher, which is the great commandment in the law? And He said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the great and first commandment. And a second like unto it is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments the whole law hangeth, and the prophets." (Matt. 22:37-40.) The first quotation of Jesus is from Deut. 6:5 and the second quotation is from Lev. 19:18. Upon consideration, it is easy to see that in the keeping of these two commandments one would fulfill one's responsibilities to God and to one's fellow-man.

Sincere love is one of the greatest, if not the greatest of all motivators. It was because of His great love for mankind that prompted God to send His only begotten Son to die as a sacrifice for our sins (Jn. 3:16; Rom. 5:6-8.) It was because of Christ's love for us that He gave Himself up for us (Gal. 2:20; Jn. 15:13.) Insincere or pretentious love availeth nothing. Paul wrote to the Galatians: "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith working through love." (Gal. 5:6.) John admonishes: "My little children, let us not love in word, neither with the tongue; but in deed and in truth." (1 Jn. 3:18.) It is quite easy to speak of one's love for God, but quite another thing to show one's love in works of faith.

Note these words: "Jesus answered and said unto him, if a man love, me, he will keep my word: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with Him. He that loveth me not keepeth not my words: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's who sent me." (Jn. 14:23-24.) Here Jesus was giving assurance to His apostles in light of the fact that He would soon be leaving them and they would need to carry on the work He had assigned to them. So it is with us today. We can be sure of God's love for us as He has already demonstrated that love in the gift of His Son. What we need to make sure of is our love for God which must also be demonstrated in our works.

Should judges going through divorce rule in 'civil wars'?

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — The man with whom she planned to spend the rest of her life had become her worst enemy. Her financial well-being hung in the balance. And she was a nervous wreck. Then, Dwyn Daniels Robbie found out something really alarming.

The judge in her divorce case was going through a divorce himself.

"I was very much afraid," recalled Mrs. Robbie, who was divorcing the son of Miami Dolphins founder Joe Robbie. "Because divorce is such an emotion-charged situation, even if you don't want it to be, I felt the judge was going to be unable to separate his personal feelings."

The question of whether judges caught up in their own civil wars should be presiding over divorces has become a subject of debate in Florida legal circles.

A law journal recently examined the issue, using Mrs. Robbie's case and another involving the same judge as examples. And the Florida Bar's family law executive council last month asked a state judges' conference to come up with a way for dealing with such cases.

"Divorce litigation is the most emotional thing that human beings can go through. And judges are human beings, too," said A.

Matthew Miller, president-elect of the Florida chapter of the American Academy of Matrimonial Attorneys and chairman of the family law executive council.

As far as Mrs. Robbie is concerned, her worst fears were realized.

Although Broward County Circuit Judge C. Lavon Ward awarded Mrs. Robbie $250,000 to be paid over 10 years, he refused to treat her husband's wealth from the Miami Dolphins football team as a marital asset.

The judge rejected Mrs. Robbie's request for permanent alimony after 10 years of marriage and denied her motion to find her husband, Michael, in contempt for failing to keep up temporary support payments.

A Florida appeals court refused to disqualify Ward from the case. Mrs. Robbie has appealed the April 13 final judgment. She has noted that the question of permanent alimony is also at stake in Ward's own divorce.

In an interview, Ward called any suggestion of bias "rather irritating" and said the facts of the case and the law itself supported his rulings.

The judge, whose chambers display a photo of his family in happier times, has been separated from his wife since 1989. He said they remain friendly but haven't agreed on financial terms. He hasn't given up hope for a reconciliation, Ward added.

Maurice Kutner said his client in a 1991 divorce case, Rosemary Allison, was also upset when she learned Ward was going through a divorce. Ward also refused to award Mrs. Allison permanent alimony and instead ordered her former husband, John Allison III, to pay her $3,500 a month for 5 1/2 years.

Although Kutner asserted that Ward made several rulings that suggested he was "husband-oriented," the appeals court upheld him in the Allison case.

Neither John Allison's attorney, William Spencer, nor Michael Robbie found anything wrong with Ward's hearing the divorces.

"I don't see where it would matter if it was a man or a woman judge," Michael Robbie said. "That's their personal business (that) shouldn't have anything to do with their judgment."

Dade County Circuit Judge Richard Feder, chairman of the Florida Bar's family court rules committee, said he would oppose a formal rule governing judges who are getting divorced.

"Your lifetime experience is what makes you a good judge," he said. "If I get a speeding ticket and I'm upset at a police officer, does that mean I can't believe any police officers that come before me?"

Marshall Wolf, a Cleveland lawyer who heads the American Bar Association's family law section, agreed.

"My own gut reaction is that you have to look at them on a case-by-case basis," Wolf said. "Let's say the judge is named Woody Allen. Should Judge Woody Allen be trying a divorce case right now? Probably not."

Woman billed for someone else's baby

EASTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) — Claudia Cunningham didn't recall visiting the hospital, much less having a baby. Nonetheless, she was billed $340 for the delivery at Cape Cod Hospital.

The insurer, Dun & Bradstreet Plan Services of Tampa, Fla., told her that another woman with the same name had a baby on April 30 at the hospital, according to Cunningham, 47. She and her husband already have three children — including their 17-year-old "baby."

Contacted Friday, a Dun & Bradstreet administrator, Teresa Gonzales, could not immediately confirm the reason for the billing. She said the company, which handles insurance for other companies around the country, insures dozens of people with Cunningham's last name and first initial.

Female King Ranch hand rides tall in the saddle

By VIVIENNE HEINES
Corpus Christi Caller-Times

KINGSVILLE (AP) — Beverly "B.J." Myrick was 12 when she bought her first horse with $100 she had saved from a summer hay-hauling job.

Today, she makes her living on a horse as the only full-time female ranch hand working with about 50 cowboys on the sprawling 825,000-acre King Ranch. She and two other part-time female ranch hands form a tight-knit group who make their home on the range in this male-dominated world.

At work, the women doctor and feed the cattle and wash water troughs. Mrs. Myrick, a 32-year-old mother of two, said she knows each calf and its mother as well as she does her own children.

"You've got to be there every day so you know who belongs to who," she said. "I wouldn't change this for nothing because I guess I kind of like it. I like to take care of the animals."

"This ain't a job for anybody. I don't think a lot of women would like it. You've got to be there all the time, and it's kind of far away from town," she explained.

Mrs. Myrick works seven days a week, from dawn to dusk. But her husband understands the demands of her job: He's the unit manager for two of the ranch's four sections.

Although women always have played a role in South Texas ranching history, few have ridden and roped alongside the cowboys, said cultural anthropologist Dr. Joe S. Graham of Texas A&I University at Kingsville.

Traditionally, ranch women took care of the home, children and health care and were in charge of the children's spiritual development and education. The Mexican-American ranching community is even more conservative, Graham said, with most women remaining in those roles today.

"Very, very seldom do you see any instances of deviation from those social roles," Graham said. "None of them was out riding and chasing critters."

Women more likely to be seen on horseback have been those from the upper-class ranching families — including prominent King Ranch women like Henrietta King — who have historically had more independence than the women of the working class, Graham said. Mrs. King, who died in 1925, co-founded the King Ranch with her husband and supervised its operation after his death.

"In most of the situations, the gender roles were very clearly defined," he added. "You may have a few tomboys who aspire to that (being a ranch hand), but this is training that goes back to early childhood."

Mrs. Myrick and her two part-time counterparts, 22-year-old Stefanie Haegelin and 25-year-old Donna Pakebusch, agreed with Graham.

The King Ranch's only female ranch hands, who live on the ranch with their families, said their friendship provides vital support in the mostly male environment.

"I feel like they (Mrs. Myrick and Mrs. Pakebusch) are some of the only ones who truly understand me ... understand the love I have for (ranching)," said Ms. Haegelin, a former high school cheerleader now studying agriculture at Texas A&I.

The three women said it is their love of animals and of the land that drives them to ride, rope and wrestle cattle with their male counterparts. They agree that there are constant tests to their physical and emotional endurance.

"As a woman, you have to truly love it more," Ms. Haegelin said. "It's so much more socially acceptable for a guy to walk around with his boots and his spurs all covered with cow mess."

"There's not too many women I know who think it's very glamorous or who would want to trade places with me for any length of time," she added.

And all three said that balancing their femininity in the masculine environment is a challenge.

Mrs. Myrick and Mrs. Pakebusch don't wear dresses at all. In fact, they didn't wear dresses to their own weddings. Mrs. Myrick's wedding attire was white pants and shirt. And she scorns makeup. For formal occasions, she pulls her long, sunstreaked hair into two pig-tails instead of a single ponytail down her back.

Ms. Haegelin, however, said she likes to wear skirts and makeup when she goes out.

"There was a time when I was turning into a tomboy. My Dad told me, 'You have to know when it's time to get dirty, and you have to know when to be a lady,'" Ms. Haegelin said. "We're not a bunch of rough and tough tomboys. We all like to dress up and go out at night."

Added Mrs. Myrick, "You want to be respected for what you do."

"But also be recognized as a female," agreed Mrs. Pakebusch.

Stephen "Tio" Kleberg, ranch vice president, said Mrs. Myrick is one of a small number of women who have worked as ranch hands, although others have worked in the quarter horse training and breaking operation.

Mrs. Myrick, he said, regularly beats out fellow male competitors at the ranch's annual rodeo for employees: "I'd put her up against any of the men. And she can probably beat most of them. She's quick, she's smart, she knows her job. She's an excellent employee."

Kleberg said he hasn't had very many women ask to do the outdoor labor Mrs. Myrick does.

"In 20-plus years that I've been here, I don't have many requests. They do a lot of other things but not to do the outdoor cattle work that B.J.'s doing," he said. "It's long hours — it's seven days a week; it's not a pleasant environment. It's a tough job."

Nevertheless, Kleberg said he would never discourage women from working as ranch hands.

"They do a much better job than men with the horses. They're gentle. Typically, a man will try and use strength to overcome where a woman will use finesse," Kleberg added.

Mrs. Myrick, who has worked at King Ranch four years, grew up on a dairy farm in Jourdan. Before she came to Kingsville, she worked on a ranch in Gonzalez.

"Here, you just do what everybody does. There's no discrimination here," Mrs. Myrick said. "People aren't looking at you if you're a boy or a girl. You've got to be able to do the job."

It was Mrs. Myrick who inspired Ms. Haegelin to work as a ranch hand. The two met in Gonzalez, where Ms. Haegelin's father worked. He now is a unit manager at the King Ranch.

"I'm around 10 guys all day long, and I have to put up with a lot of stuff — the talking dirty and the cussing," Ms. Haegelin said. "They don't open doors for you out here. You can't really expect to be treated as a woman as long as you're doing this. You're doing a man's job and you have to expect to be treated as one."

Mrs. Pakebusch said seeing her husband ride the horses all day, then watching Ms. Haegelin enter the cowboy's world spurred her to begin riding on the weekends with the ranch hands.

Now she works full time in the feed yard office during the week and rides on the weekends. Her husband is feed yard foreman at the King Ranch.

"I was raised in the country. I've always had a love of horses and that's how I got started," Mrs. Pakebusch said. "I saw Stefanie out there riding and I thought if she could do it, I could do it."

Artist records traditional, seldom-heard songs

By JEAN PAGEL
Associated Press Writer

AMARILLO (AP) — Listen hard to Buck Ramsey's songs and you'll imagine jangling spurs, a campfire's crackle and the weary bawl of a lone calf.

Listen again as saddles creak and the wind rustles through the gypsum weeds.

It's poetry set to music. A cowboy can trust his horse but not his sweetheart in these songs. Dangers lurk in the stormy skies and the threat of stampede. Prairie life rolls on from the early-morning flapjacks to the long afternoon shadows.

Ramsey said he senses the ghosts of his cow-punching forefathers in the old songs he finds and records. "I can look back and understand why cowboys had such an infectious hold on the American psyche," Ramsey said. "We just love the way they walked and talked — like gods. I'm trying to gather and preserve the basic literature of that myth."

Ramsey, 55, has collaborated with Lubbock music producer Lanny Fiel to record traditional cowboy songs in Fiel's home studio. One recording of 14 songs, "Rolling Uphill from Texas," this spring won the National Cowboy Hall of Fame's Wrangler award for Outstanding Traditional Western Music.

Prizes don't seem to mean much to the man with the voice that can bellow, moan or whoop in waltz-time.

In "Cowboy Soliloquy" he whines: "And if my cooking is not so complete, You can't blame me for wanting to eat."

In "Cowboy's Letter from Home"

he sings gently: "The baby whispers a prayer each night, To guide you wherever you roam. We would welcome you, Jack. Please won't you come back?" Read the letter from home sweet home.

Harmonica, fiddle and mandolin join Ramsey's guitar on the breezy tunes that bounce like a trotting horse.

Friends say Ramsey is protecting the integrity of the music while polishing its rough edges.

"I really feel that Buck is a landmark in cowboy literature," Fiel said. "He connects everybody back to those times that we've lost."

Fiel recalled Washington, D.C., schoolchildren singing along when he and Ramsey played recently in a Smithsonian auditorium.

But Ramsey said he shies from the spotlight: His goal is to collect the almost-forgotten cowboy songs into an audible form archived for history.

Ramsey grew up idolizing his uncle, a cowboy, on the prairies northwest of Amarillo. He roped cattle himself until 1963, when a horse named Cinnamon threw him and injured his spinal cord.

His brow furrowed and head cocked as he strummed "Doney Gal" from his wheelchair recently. He stopped to elaborate on the song's cowboy, who camped by the San Antonio River.

"He remembers some special time and he's grinning," Ramsey explained, smiling himself.

Cowboy music evolved among those on the trail who sang to lull the cattle or combat boredom, Ramsey said. The lyrics tell little stories and sometimes philosophize: "My friends gently hint that I'm coming to grief, But if life is part gold, then a cowboy's a thief."

Ramsey, who also writes cowboy poetry, said the music's lingo and character bring back a nostalgia many Americans share. Not so with modern music, he said.

"I believe that these old songs that I'm singing and resurrecting will be listened to after all the Top 40 songs are forgotten."

Former University of Texas folklore professor Archie Green said audiences respond to Ramsey's authenticity because they're tired of pop-star hype.

"Buck Ramsey reminds us of open trails, of the frontier, when men were men and women were pure," Green said.

Quality still issue in managed health plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dr. Richard Robinson sees a basic conflict between the way he practices medicine and the way managed care health insurance programs work. He spares no expense; they pinch every penny.

"Their objective is to provide care at the cheapest or least expensive manner, where I try to provide the best quality care I can provide regardless of cost," says Robinson, a pulmonary specialist in Woodbridge, Va. He said he regularly turns down the opportunity to join managed care provider lists.

Robinson's beliefs are echoed by other doctors who long have practiced traditional fee-for-service medicine, and who stand to lose patients and income as managed care programs become more popular.

But other physicians feel differently.

"I don't have to agonize every time I order a test or a referral because I know the patients will probably follow through because they don't have to take it out of their pocketbooks," says Dr. Judith Ratner, a pediatrician specializing in adolescent medicine at the George Washington University Health Plan in Washington.

Pressure on doctors to join managed care programs seems likely to intensify as more and more patients abandon costlier fee-for-service medicine.

President Clinton's emerging plan for overhauling health care is expected to rely heavily on this concept, with millions of people led to join large health care groups, and doctors required to accept generally lower fees to treat them.

Managed care plans seek to hold down costs by requiring participants to choose from among a network of doctors who have agreed to set fees, and by closely monitoring the delivery of medical services.

Foster Higgins, an employee benefits consulting firm, surveyed 2,448 businesses last summer and found that for the first time more than half — 51 percent — of the 12 million employees and dependents covered under the companies' health plans were in managed care. Seventy-seven percent of the companies offered managed care options.

"If I don't participate, I am excluding a tremendous portion of the population," said Dr. David Plotsky, a pediatric ophthalmologist in Washington.

Plotsky said the plans can create hurdles for patients, including requirements that they see primary care physicians before they can be treated by specialists such as himself. He said they also are very inflexible about covering certain treatments, and paperwork for doctors can be a hassle.

Even though Ratner likes her health maintenance organization, or HMO, she is nervous about the future. "Our health plan is under pressures to make it a little less costly to take care of patients. ... How do you cut down on the time you spend with a patient without cutting down on the quality?"

Dr. Peter Rappo, a pediatrician, participates in several managed care programs near Boston. "Although they might put restrictions on doctors and patients, they give patients the better bang for their buck," he said.

Doctors opposed to managed care contend that they will have to increase volume — and decrease the amount of time they spend with each patient — to compensate for the loss of income.

Robinson said cost should not be the only issue in health care.

He said some of his patients who tried managed care programs come back and "tell me they don't have the opportunity to see specialists, that they're limited in terms of access to care."

Doctors have their own set of concerns; patients have others.

After an unpleasant experience with an HMO 13 years ago, Linda Jacobson won't enroll in managed care even though it would save her money. She doesn't want her choice of doctors restricted.

"I know I could cut my costs and the government's costs, but I would rather pay out the money as it is," said Ms. Jacobson, who as a federal worker can choose from a wide choice of health plans.

Marie-Helene Gugenheim, who arrived in Washington from France in 1988, said, "HMOs are the most affordable way to get health care."

Also, she said, "When you get into a new city, it's difficult to get a network of doctors you can have confidence in."

Ladd Biro, the National Association of Manufacturers' vice president for marketing in Washington, says the managed care referral requirement doesn't bother him.

"I trust my primary care physician to give good advice and good direction," Biro said.

But Bill Martin, NAM's treasurer, said he stuck with NAM's catastrophic insurance plan.

"It's a quality of care issue," he said. "I want to be assured of that quality of care."

Fabulous and frightening: Halberstam reports on '50s

By HILLEL ITALIE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In January 1960, The New York Times looked back on the previous decade and marveled how it so neatly aligned "with the arbitrary divisions of the calendar."

According to the editorial, the 1950s began on Sept. 23, 1949, when President Truman announced the Soviet Union successfully had tested an atomic device. It ended exactly 10 years later, with Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev exchanging quips with Adlai Stevenson in Coon Rapids, Iowa.

"The two episodes," the Times concluded, "bracketed the fabulous but often frightening Fifties."

Fabulous: prosperity, big cars, rock 'n' roll. "What a Country!" exclaimed Fortune in 1956. "Never has a country spent so much money on so many expensive things in such an easy way as Americans are doing today."

Frightening: the Cold War, the Korean War, the murder of Emmett Till, Louis Armstrong complained his integrated band could play all over the world, but not in New Orleans. Allen Ginsberg worried America's emotional life was being ruled by Time magazine.

Over the past 30 years, the image of the '50s has continued to swing between fabulous and frightening. "Happy Days" made it seem like a teen-age paradise of sock hops and Uncle Miltie, a cheerful vacuum out of which the tumultuous '60s abruptly exploded. Such books as "The Feminine Mystique" and footage of Sen. Joe McCarthy revealed the desperation of America's years at the top.

As David Halberstam writes in his new book, "The Fifties," the decade was a cloverleaf of trends and emotions. At the same time President Eisenhower and General Motors symbolized a society as uniform as the grass on a putting green, rebels from Elvis to Jack Kerouac to Martin Luther King Jr., were anticipating a faster, more volatile future.

"It's a more interesting time than people realized," said Halberstam, whose previous works include the best sellers "The Best and the Brightest" and "The Powers That Be," during a recent interview at his Manhattan apartment.

"It was a country governed by people who had been born in another century, but because of the explosion of technology and affluence, there was dramatic change in the courses of power. You had the veneer of the Eisenhower society and underneath you have Brown v. Board of Education and the coming of television."

"The Fifties" reviews events known to many — the firing of Gen. MacArthur, Sputnik, the Montgomery bus boycott — and the quieter revolutions that also changed America. There was the mass production of suburban homes and burgers and fries. There was the silent despair of housewives and the steady migration of blacks from the South to the North.

When did the decade really begin? Halberstam goes back to 1948, to the famous presidential race between President Truman and Thomas E. Dewey. While underdog candidates still love to cite Truman's stunning victory as a symbol of their own comeback hopes, Halberstam says the real legacy was Dewey's refusal to exploit the issue of anti-communism.

Four years later, Eisenhower won in a landslide. In between, Alger Hiss was convicted of perjury, Richard Nixon won an especially vicious Senate campaign and McCarthy insisted he had in his hand a list of 205 people in the State Department "known to the secretary of state as being members of the Communist Party ..."

"When the Republicans run against Truman and lose, that's when the animals come out of the cage," Halberstam said. "They feel themselves becoming in danger of being a permanent minority party. There's the esteemed conservative, (Sen.) Robert Taft, saying to Joe McCarthy, 'Keep on trying, Joe. If one issue doesn't work, another will."

"There is this enormous anger because they have been out of power so long (since 1932). They would look at every city and see 500 people working in the factories and a handful of management and owners. They're afraid the vote is going to be 500 to 10."

With millions moving to the suburbs, society rapidly was becoming homogenized. "I put the hamburger on the assembly line," boasted Ray Kroc of McDonald's fame, and others like Bill Levitt and Eugene Ferkauf would have a similar effect on where we lived and what we bought.

They were unseen architects of the decade. Levitt drew on Henry Ford's techniques for automobile production and dotted the country with affordable homes. Brothers

Dick and Mac McDonald started with a small drive-in restaurant in 1940 and with the help of Kroc developed a fast-food empire. In 1953, Ferkauf opened a 90,000 square foot discount store in Westbury, N.Y., called it E.J. Korvettes and by decade's end had a multi-million-dollar chain.

A typical story involves a Tennessee home builder named Kemmons Wilson. In the summer of 1951, he began a car trip with his family to see the monuments in Washington, D.C. Since inner-city hotels tended either to be too expensive or in run-down neighborhoods, Wilson decided a relatively new kind of accommodation — motels — would be the better choice.

To his great displeasure, finding a decent place to stay proved as difficult as ordering food without a menu. No guidebooks existed to tell you which motels were clean and safe. Everyone charged extra for children (Wilson had five). Rarely would a motel have a decent family restaurant nearby.

The following summer, Wilson opened a motel of his own. Children stayed for free and rates were cheaper than where he had stayed.

His place had a restaurant, a swimming pool, a gift shop and an air conditioner and television in every room.

The motel was named after an old Bing Crosby movie: "Holiday Inn."

Halberstam says he spent about six years researching the book and his study offers the evidence: piles of newspaper and magazine articles, books on Elvis, Eisenhower, Levitt and the making of the atomic bomb. For information on sit-coms such as "I Love Lucy" and "Ozzie and Harriet," Halberstam admitted to rely on the knowledge of his

12-year-old daughter. (He didn't even own a television set until the mid-1960s.)

The hardest part was what to do with all that information. How do you sum up a decade in 735 pages when any section in the book could have run that long? Among the names and events that won't be found: the polio vaccine (Dr. Salk is now a neighbor of Halberstam's), Roy Cohn, the 1956 Hungarian uprising, Ralph Ellison, the Suez Canal crisis, the rise of the Nation of Islam, the move of the Brooklyn Dodgers and New York Giants to the West Coast.
