Hail damages Skellytown structures

By RANDAL K. McGAVOCK
Staff Writer

The people of Skellytown are trying to repair or replace what they can today after a surprising powerful storm pummeled the small, Panhandle town Thursday afternoon with baseball- and golf ball-sized hail.

"We had a lot of mobile homes damaged," said Marcy Ruth, who runs the Carson County Library in Skellytown. "It's devastating out here. We had so many people's homes who lost all their windows on the north side."

In addition to the many homes damaged by the storm, which struck the city just before 3 p.m., the public school, some of the churches in the community and the library were damaged.

While it was too soon to set damage estimates for some of the city's structures, the storm has already affected Skellytown.

Because of the damage, the library is closed until repairs can be made. Among the smashed windows and glass-covered floor, the carpets of the building and many of the books were damaged by the hail storm.

At the First Baptist Church, a half dozen workmen gathered shortly after the storm to help replace broken windows with sheets of wood and sweep away piles of ice, according to witnesses.

Just down the street, volunteers from the city's fire department handed out roles of thick plastic sheeting to home owners, many of whom are elderly, in hope of keeping the brisk winds out of their homes.

"It hit so fast, no one knew anything, the weather service didn't even come alive," said Vance Griffith, a volunteer with the Skellytown Fire Department, referring to storm.

from nowhere, according to Ruth, who was the only person in the library at the time it hit.

The hail storm, according to her recollections, only lasted for no more than 10 minutes but fell in such thick sheets that she could not see the building across the street.

This massive machine, Pampa's new belt-press, will soon process the tons of sludge the city produces at the water treatment center.

Machine helps process waste water sludge

By RANDAL K. McGAVOCK
Staff Writer

The city of Pampa and its water treatment center recently acquired a new, high-tech belt-press to help process the sludge that is produced from the city's waste water.

While most of the belt-press equipment is in place, the city is waiting for various electronic components to start operations.

When it is in operation, however, Pampa will join other cities across the state in stepping up from the old method of spreading sludge out on a drying bed and letting the elements do the work.

Getting the belt-press should cut the time necessary to dry sludge as well as provide a necessary component in the city's composting program.

"It's a new process, but like anything that's begun, it's still in the evolutionary stage where they are getting better every time," said Nathan Hopson, director of public works and interim city manager.

Before acquiring the belt-press, Hopson and other city officials toured water treatment plants around the state which operate belt-presses and saw how they worked.

"We toured a couple of plants ... (one) has a relatively new belt-press facility with two machines the same size as ours and that's all they use anymore," Hopson said. "They don't use the drying beds or anything else, they use the machines entirely and they have three times the flow we do."

In general, the operation of the belt-press seems very simple.

Sludge is pumped into the machine via supply pipes and placed on conveyor belts within the machine. Conveyor belts transport the sludge through the machine while a number of presses squeeze water from the sludge.

The water which is removed then travels back into the main system to be retreated. The dried sludge, however, is destined for either the landfill or the composting pile, Hopson said.

Bonds approved by the residents of Pampa helped fund the installation of the machinery and the construction of the building in which it sits, according to Hopson.

"The funds for it were out of the revenue bonds that were sold for water and wastewater several years ago," he said. "This is a large project."

As for the drying beds which are currently used at the water treatment center, they will be maintained in case of an emergency, Hopson said.

House OKs tax bill; Senate debating plan as budget vote nears

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a vote only hours away, President Clinton lobbied Sen. Bob Kerrey in the privacy of the Oval Office today in his drive to assure passage for the administration's deficit-reduction measure.

A divided Senate marched through a full day of debate on the measure, a controversial package of tax hikes and spending cuts that cleared the House by the narrowest of margins on Thursday night.

Alone among 100 senators, Kerrey, a Nebraska Democrat, remained publicly undecided. Without his support, the measure seemed doomed. Even with it, the margin of victory would likely be a tie-breaking vote that Vice President Al Gore could cast.

Clinton and Kerrey — rivals in last year's presidential campaign — met alone for more than an hour, and neither man disclosed the contents of their conversation to reporters.

Kerrey later joked with reporters that he felt like he had been pummeled.

"I'm Ventura, he's Nolan Ryan," Kerrey said in a reference to Chicago White Sox player Robin Ventura, who came out the loser in an onfield fight with Texas Rangers' pitcher Nolan Ryan Wednesday night.

Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said she did not know what transpired at the one-on-one session but that Clinton remained optimistic of a narrow Senate win. "He's got a good gut, a good antenna on this," she said.

As Senate debate began today, Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., complained that, if the bill passed, "We are going to take this money and spend it."

The administration expects Kerrey, a onetime presidential primary opponent of Clinton, will vote for the plan after receiving White House assurances there will be additional spending cuts in the fall.

"We hope that approach will satisfy Senator Kerrey's concerns..." White House Budget Director Leon Panetta said as he made the rounds of morning television talk shows. "We've got to have Senator Kerrey's vote."

"We think he'll be there when it counts," Panetta added.

In the House, the nail-biter wasn't assured Thursday night until a freshman Democrat from Pennsylvania — who had voted "no" earlier this summer — voted "yes" this time after getting a last-minute call from Clinton. The final tally was 218-216.

The president vowed to keep the pressure on.

"I will continue to fight for this economic package with everything I have," Clinton said at the White House following the House vote. "And I urge the members of the Senate to act on it in a positive way."

Kerrey, D-Neb., described Thursday as "still circling," voted for an earlier version of the measure, but should he vote "no" this time, it would be a shocking and likely fatal blow to the bill.

Even with Kerrey's support, Vice President Al Gore's tie-breaking vote probably would be needed to squeak the measure through the Senate — just as it was with the first version of the legislation in June.

"Put it this way, I think Al Gore will spend the day in the bullpen," Myers said this morning.

However, Sen. Richard Shelby, an Alabama Democrat planning to vote against the bill, hinted today "there might be a backup plan" should Kerrey defect. "It's going to be a long, very tenseful day," Shelby said, declining to be more specific.

The bill, far and away Clinton's top legislative priority for the year, would raise taxes on the wealthy, business, motorists and some Social Security beneficiaries. It would slow the growth of Medicare and trim the Pentagon's budget.

Over five years, Democrats say it would shrink federal deficits by $496 billion. That would not eliminate the red ink, but it is designed to push the shortfall down to $213 billion by 1998 — instead of the $361 billion it otherwise would be.

Clinton knew he had little room to spare in the Senate, where all 44 Republicans are ready to vote against him.

Republicans, who know that a defeat could stagger the young administration and the Democrats who control Congress, say the bill's taxes would cripple the economy and force businesses across the country to lay off workers.

"You've lost your marbles," House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., told Democrats minutes before the final House tally.

But Democrats countered that the bitter medicine of tax increases and spending reductions was the only way to chip away at record budget shortfalls.

"There is no way in the world we can attack this deficit without making the tough, hard choices no one wants to make," said House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo.

In the end, 217 Democrats and one independent supported the measure, and 41 Democrats and all 175 Republicans voted against it.

Clinton and his lieutenants divided their attention Thursday between wavering House members and Kerrey during a long day of cajoling. But though Kerrey left them dangling, the calls paid off in the House.

There, 11 Democrats who voted "yes" in May opposed the compromise on Thursday. But they were counterbalanced by eight Democrats who switched from "no" to "yes," and by support from two other Democrats who have joined the chamber since the last vote.

The most dramatic switch probably was that of freshman Rep. Marjorie Margolies-Mezvinsky, D-Pa. Surrounded by insistent House leaders, she cast one of the final decisive votes for the measure, two hours after telling a reporter she would again vote against the package.

She spoke to Clinton over the telephone just 15 minutes before the roll call, and said she received a promise that the president would hold a budget-cutting conference in her home district.

In an interview, she said she cast her vote "for kids you don't want to sock with the deficit."

But it took more than that. Hours before the roll call, Democratic leaders kept several wavering conservatives in line by promising votes this fall on additional budget cuts.

The bill would:

- Raise income taxes on people earning more than about $140,000 for individuals, $180,000 for couples.
- Hit most members of the middle class with just one tax, the 4.3 cent boost in the 14.1 cent gasoline tax, costing the average driver less than $30 a year.
- Raise taxes on Social Security recipients making more than $34,000 a year for individuals, $44,000 for couples, affecting 13 percent of the program's beneficiaries.
- Boost taxes on the most profitable corporations, while extending tax breaks for research and some equipment purchases.
- Slow the growth of Medicare by $56 billion over five years by trimming reimbursements to hospitals and doctors.

Sarpalius votes in favor of budget plan

WASHINGTON — Congressman Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, voted in favor of the budget reconciliation act Thursday night after reviewing details of the package and receiving assurances from the House leadership on further budget reducing measures.

"This was an extremely difficult vote in a highly charged atmosphere," Sarpalius said.

Speaker of the House Tom Foley promised Sarpalius a vote on a balanced budget amendment and additional spending cuts this fall to gain his support, a press release from the Texas Panhandle congressman said.

The congressman also said the bill would bring some benefits to his district. Approximately 42 percent of families in the 13th District are subject to an expansion in the earned income tax credit contained in the bill. Also, the elimination of the proposed Btu tax helped sway him.

Sarpalius said the conference committee report was a significant improvement over the original version of the bill which he voted against May 27. He was one of eight Democrats who switched their votes after going against the original measure.

Sarpalius visited by telephone with President Clinton twice Thursday and with other cabinet officials during the day.

"Most of the discussions dealt with my concern about the ratio of spending cuts to taxes. While we are still not where I think we should be, for the first time since I came to Congress, we are at least heading in the right direction," he said.

Sarpalius said the main thrust of his activities would now focus on holding other Democrats to their promise of making further cuts in the deficit.

"While I feel this measure contained too few spending cuts and too many taxes, my final determination to vote yes came when I asked the question, 'If we don't do this today, will we just continue to deny the problem exists and continue down this disastrous path for another 12 years?'" Sarpalius said.

Supporters of the budget bill say it will reduce the deficit by $496 billion over the next five years. The measure passed the House 218-216.

AmWest to process its mortgage accounts again

Mortgage customers of AmWest Savings Association will soon have their accounts processed directly by the company once again.

Letters are arriving in the mail this week notifying customers that AmWest will no longer use Litton Mortgage Servicing Center for the processing of mortgage payments. AmWest will now process the accounts itself through an office in College Station.

The change goes into effect Sept. 1. Customers will receive new coupon books in the mail during the week of Aug. 20 for their September payments, according to AmWest spokesperson Pam Green.

Green said the service center will have separate mailing addresses for payments and for inquiries.

AmWest also plans to add a toll-free mortgage information hotline that will provide payment and rate information to customers. The service, at 1-800-726-9378, goes into effect Sept. 8.

Green said the transfer of mortgage processing from Litton back to AmWest had been planned for some time and the original change to Litton was a temporary move.

Litton began processing mortgage accounts for AmWest in August 1992.

AmWest, which was formed in 1988 as part of the restructuring of the nation's savings and loans, has 54 branches in Texas.

Pampa branch manager Bill Duncan said initial notification of the change from the company home office in Bryan came last week.

AmWest is one of the largest holders of mortgages in Pampa.

U.S. links air strikes to Muslims' negotiations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States wants Bosnia's president to know air strikes against his Serbian foes are unlikely unless he returns to the negotiating table, a White House official says.

President Alija Izetbegovic pulled out of peace talks in Geneva this week to protest Serb offensives around Sarajevo.

"Our position is that use of forceful action is designed to encourage negotiations in Geneva, to relieve the humanitarian deterioration in Sarajevo and to end the strangulation," a White House foreign policy official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Thursday night.

NATO earlier this week threatened to bomb Serb positions around the capital city and Secretary of State Warren Christopher was visiting a base in Italy today where many of the planes that would be used in such actions are based.

The administration official who spoke anonymously in Washington said that if Izetbegovic is seen as holding up the peace process, the air strikes would be less likely to occur, adding that the administration view was communicated to the Bosnians on Thursday.

Another administration official in Washington, also speaking anonymously, said the United States was confident Izetbegovic would return to the peace table.

The Washington Post first reported on the U.S. stance in today's editions.

The Serbs promised Thursday to end their siege on Sarajevo. Although the United States is skeptical of the Serbian promise, officials warned Izetbegovic that his absence from negotiations could make it look like his government — not the Serbs — are an obstacle to peace.

The White House has expressed cautious optimism that, this time, the Serbs would be true to their word to lift the siege. "We need more than words," said Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers.

Seven killed in blaze in southern China

HONG KONG (AP) — Firefighters used cement today to extinguish a huge blaze caused by two explosions in the southern Chinese city of Shenzhen. At least seven people were killed in the inferno, and scores were injured.

More than 24 hours after the disaster, in the city where China's economic revolution began, rescue workers were still sifting through rubble and no final official death toll was available. Earlier reports had said as many as 70 people may have been killed.

"The situation is confused," said Shenzhen government spokesman Lan Yuechun. "We are still counting because the fire was only recently put out."

Lan said seven people, including two deputy police chiefs, were confirmed dead and 160 injured as of midday. Thirty-one people were still hospitalized, including 11 critically injured, he said, adding that the death toll could rise.

Vice Premier Zou Jiahua arrived by plane from Beijing early today to survey the wreckage, he said.

Thursday's explosions reportedly were sparked by a discharge of nitric acid in a warehouse park in the city of some 2.5 million on the Hong Kong border. They gouged a crater 300 feet wide in northeast Shenzhen, one witness said.

The China-run Hong Kong China News Agency earlier said 70 people were feared dead, mostly firefighters and police killed by the second, much larger explosion when a natural gas reservoir blew up.

It said one Shenzhen hospital admitted around 200 injured. The China-run Wen Wei Po newspaper said two other hospitals together admitted more than 100 injured.

The fire erupted in a warehouse owned by the Anmao Dangerous Goods Shipping and Storage Co. at about 1:30 p.m. Lan said it was put out at about 5 a.m. today.

Lan He said firefighters, guided by helicopters, used powdered cement to smother the flames. At least 200 firefighters, police and soldiers took part, he said in a telephone interview.

AP photographer Vincent Yu said the fire was still smoldering in the crater early today. He said two dozen fire engines were on hand. A Wen Wei Po reporter said the fires at one point covered an area equivalent to 20 soccer fields.

Lan said farmers around the explosion site, in a thinly populated area some 4 miles north of the city center, had been warned not to draw well water for fear it was contaminated. Environmental officials were planning to test the area later in the day, he said.

Wen Wei Po carried a front-page photo of two rescue workers wearing breathing apparatus on their way to tackle the blaze.

Authorities in British-controlled Hong Kong offered help. Though the assistance was not needed, the offer was significant because Hong Kong reverts to Chinese sovereignty in 1997; and many fear a bumpy transition.

Allegations topple Harris County judge

By LAURA TOLLEY
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — At a Harris County Commissioners Court meeting this week, a minister offered a simple invocation — don't judge others unless you are free of sin yourself.

The poignant prayer came in the midst of a burgeoning controversy surrounding Harris County Judge Jon Lindsay, who has been accused of accepting more than $100,000 in bribes to reroute a county road.

It's a messy political nightmare that any elected official would dread.

One man who allegedly bribed Lindsay is dead, and the other has pleaded guilty to bank fraud. The man steering one probe is an old political adversary who has used his own money in the case, while the attorney defending the powerful Republican judge is a confirmed Democrat.

"Welcome to Texas," said David Berg, the judge's attorney. "This is quintessentially Texan."

Lindsay has denied the accusations, but Harris County Attorney Mike Driscoll has vowed that his office's investigation will continue.

"County government is at a crossroads right now. I think it's incumbent on us to do everything we can to clear the air," he said.

Driscoll, who once ran for Lindsay's seat in 1978 but lost in the Democratic primary, also said his probe has expanded to include Lindsay's involvement in other actions by the county commissioners' court.

He has refused to elaborate, but Driscoll said he has used $3,000 of his own money to enlist the help of a prominent private investigator.

Although the statute of limitations has expired on criminal charges, Driscoll's office could file a lawsuit seeking to have Lindsay removed from the office he has held for nearly 20 years.

The FBI, meanwhile, has launched its own investigation. However, the federal agency has not said what, if any, charges it is pursuing.

Lindsay, 57, has steadfastly denied the claims and contends he is the victim of a political vendetta.

The judge is the county government's chief executive, and he presides over the five-member commissioners court. The government is responsible for such items as road maintenance and the administration of justice in county areas surrounding Houston, the nation's fourth-largest city.

It is one road that lies at the center of the scandal, which broke in mid-July and quickly took its political toll on the judge.

Lindsay, the first Republican elected to that office, called a news conference last Saturday at which he solemnly announced he would not seek re-election to another four-year term.

Instead, he would wrap-up work on several major county projects during the final 1 1/2 years of his term and continue to fight the allegations.

"And if it hurts some other people, then so be it," he said.

The controversy erupted when Billy Wayne Chester, a former banker and real estate developer, said he and his business partner, Robert Corson, bribed Lindsay to reroute a north county road through a 220-acre development in 1985 to increase the land's value.

Chester said some $30,000 was given to Lindsay during a trip to Las Vegas. Lindsay has acknowledged taking the trip, but he said he never accepted a bribe.

Chester pleaded guilty to bank fraud and was sentenced to five years' probation earlier this year. Corson died in 1991 while awaiting trial.

Although he won't run again for county judge, Lindsay has not ruled out seeking some other office. First, he said he will vigorously fight the allegations.

As the investigations continue, the political fight is heating up for the job Lindsay has long had locked. At least two candidates have announced their intentions to run, but the list of candidates is almost certain to grow.

When asked what advice he had for anyone after his job, Lindsay quipped: "Go to a psychiatrist."

Debate delays state attorney's case in Koslow trial

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — Delayed by an angry, extended debate on the cause of death for a Fort Worth socialite, state attorneys have prepared to rest their capital murder case against a "suicidal" honor student.

At issue was who bludgeoned and slashed 40-year-old Caren Koslow in a murderous rampage at her stylish home in March 1992.

Her husband, ex-banker Jack Koslow, 49, survived.

Prosecutors maintain Mrs. Koslow was slain by a blow to the throat during a vicious assault by Jeffrey Dillingham, 20, one of three defendants in the bizarre murder-for-hire case.

The state contends Koslow's adopted daughter Kristi, 18, masterminded the scheme and that Dillingham and a longtime friend, Brian Salter, executed it.

Dillingham's attorneys concede he savagely beat the Koslows with a pry bar but they insist that Salter, 21, killed Mrs. Koslow by cutting her throat with her husband's buck knife.

A medical examiner disagreed, which triggered the marathon dispute Thursday.

Jack Strickland, one of Dillingham's court-appointed lawyers, says he believes the jury might spare his client's life if it concludes that Salter wielded the knife and that it was the death weapon.

After the jury heard Dillingham's statement, in which he blandly detailed the attack on the Koslows, a guilty verdict seemed all but assured.

But it is unclear who slashed the Koslows. And the dispute over the cause of death spilled over to today. Legally, it is of little significance, but it could mean life or death for Dillingham.

Prosecutors wrapped up four days of devastating testimony by calling Nizam Peerwani of Fort Worth, Tarrant County's chief medical examiner. His testimony was punctuated by defense objections and included a series of gruesome color photographs of the victim's slashed and battered body.

Dillingham, who Strickland says is "scared, despondent and suicidal," sat through the ordeal with his head bowed and his hands clenched and trembling.

He shuddered from time to time but never once looked up.

According to a statement Dillingham gave police, Kristi, Jack Koslow's adopted daughter during an earlier marriage, promised him $1 million from her purported inheritance.

Peerwani's testimony, not unexpected but vigorously challenged, was crucial to the state's contention that Dillingham killed Mrs. Koslow with a blow from an 18-inch pry bar.

Peerwani said either multiple scalp wounds or the slashed throat could be fatal but that his examination led him to attribute death to one of two severe blows to the throat.

He said the crushed larynx caused quick swelling and hemorrhaging and that Mrs. Koslow suffocated.

After the traumatic throat injury, he said, death could have occurred within seconds and that she could not have lived more than 10 minutes.

Investigators found her body lying in a pool of blood in the bedroom of the couple's two-story home in Rivercrest, an area of old money and stately mansions on Fort Worth's west side.

Koslow, his skull fractured and his throat slashed, escaped death when Salter's pistol accidentally discharged, scaring away the intruders.

Strickland's cross-examination of Peerwani was intense and contentious and the medical examiner conceded that a deep 11-inch cut on Mrs. Koslow's throat could have been fatal.

But he stuck to his basic conclusion that the cause of death stemmed from a crushed larynx. It is even less clear who wielded the knife.

In his statement, Dillingham said:

"Brian had a knife that he'd given me to cut their throats with. It was some kind of fishing knife. ... I had that in my pocket the entire time ... Brian found Mr. Koslow's buck knife in the closet and ... I saw him slit Mrs. Koslow's throat. But I turned around and I didn't see exactly what he did to Mr. Koslow."

In his statement, Salter indicated he knew nothing about the cutting until after he and Dillingham had fled the crime scene.

"He told me that he had cut them," Salter told a homicide detective. "He did not specify where, but he said he had used the knife on them."

More violence mars South Africa after de Klerk, Mandela talks

TOKOZA, South Africa (AP) —

Attacks on trains and taxis killed at least seven people today, a day after President F.W. de Klerk and ANC leader Nelson Mandela held talks to try to halt chronic political violence.

Police said five people died and nine were injured when gunmen opened fire on a commuter train traveling from black townships south of Johannesburg to the city.

In another attack, gunmen in a taxi van shot at another van, killing two people and injuring three near the Tokoza township southeast of Johannesburg.

More than 130 people have died in six days of street clashes and attacks in townships near Johannesburg.

Today's killings followed a four-hour meeting Thursday night between de Klerk and Mandela that failed to produce any substantive agreements.

Statements issued by each party indicated they differed on the causes of fighting that has erupted repeatedly for years, killing thousands of blacks.

"It was made clear that the ANC is dissatisfied with the conduct and approach of the South African police," said Mandela's African National Congress, which has repeatedly accused police of provoking violence.

De Klerk's statement emphasized that the government was responsible for maintaining law and order, and noted that more than 1,000 soldiers and police had been sent into strife-ridden townships.

Both sides indicated plans for officials to make joint visits to trouble spots to assess the situation, but the ANC complained the government was unwilling to take such a step immediately.

De Klerk and Mandela have met often, but the talks have not slowed the violence, which flared anew last month after black and white negotiators set April 27 as the date for South Africa's first multiracial election.

Both the government and ANC supported the election date, but pro-apartheid whites and the Zulu-dominated Inkatha Freedom Party opposed it.

A power struggle between the ANC and Inkatha has fueled most of the township fighting. The groups accuse each other of waging war for political dominance.

Floodwaters subsiding, but not danger and fear

STE. GENEVIEVE, Mo. (AP) —

The water is subsiding in many flood-weary towns along the Mississippi. But danger and fear are not, as levees left standing will be strained for weeks until the river goes back where it belongs.

"Cross your fingers and pray to the good Lord it's going to hold," said Mick Schwent, emergency services chief in Ste. Genevieve, where the levee held when the 49.5-foot crest arrived Thursday.

For Ste. Genevieve and so many communities fighting flooding, "the crest means we can start looking at the end of it," Schwent said.

But if the end means water dropping below flood markers, it'll be a long time coming. Flood stage in Ste. Genevieve, about 60 miles south of St. Louis, is 24 feet, and experts say it will be October before the water drops that much.

"Meanwhile, the pressure is the same on the levee going down as it was coming up, and this could still be packed with problems," Schwent said.

Three months of flooding the Midwest have contributed to 48 deaths and caused at least $12 billion in damage.

The flooding has put summer on hold in this community of about 4,100, founded in 1735 and renowned for the nation's largest collection of preserved French Colonial architecture.

The county fair was canceled, and so was a weekend band concert on "The Desert," the Valle High School parking lot. Instead, the lot remains a sandbagging headquarters. Jour de Fete, one of the Midwest's largest crafts shows with some 50,000 guests expected, was scheduled for Aug. 14-15 but now may not be held at all.

"The tourist season is just a wash," said Jean Rissover, a city spokeswoman.

On Thursday, sandbaggers helped plug leaks in the earth and gravel levee, which reaches to 52 feet in places.

Ed Herbst of Ste. Genevieve dug into a pile of damp sand while his wife, Lou, held open burlap sacks.

"What's at stake? Not only the town and the historic houses, but all that hard work that so many people have put in," he said. "We feel like we're getting close to the end and we hate to see anything happen to the levee when we're almost home-free."

Across the river in Prairie du Rocher, Ill., population 600, residents were still dry after an aggressive and dangerous effort to fend off floodwaters by cutting and dynamiting a levee. That opened a giant drainage hole for water to go back into the Mississippi.

Except for a few leaks, other levees protecting the town were holding, and floodwaters were receding.

Texas oil output near 50-year low, RRC member says

AUSTIN (AP) — A Railroad Commission member says prompt action is needed to stem the drop in Texas oil production, which is in danger of hitting its lowest mark in half a century.

Adjusted figures put Texas production at 1.596 million barrels per day in April, the commission reported Thursday. That was a 5.6 percent drop from the same point in 1992 and an 0.8 percent decline from the previous month's total of 1.609 million barrels per day.

"At this rate of decline, 1993 will mark the lowest year for Texas oil production in 50 years," said Commissioner Mary Scott Nabers.

"We have not seen production this low since the World War II era. This is a trend that must be reversed," she said.

Mrs. Nabers said that the 100,000 barrel-per-day drop from 1992 to 1993 costs the state an estimated $5.82 million a day in lost economic benefits.

"What too many Texans don't understand is that this continued drop in production affects us all," she said. "This impacts our unemployment rate, our tax base and our standard of living as well as our competitiveness as a nation."

Decreasing U.S. oil production means the nation is increasing its reliance on imported oil, the commissioner said.

Stolen van accident closes Interstate 80

CARLIN, Nev. (AP) — A stolen van carrying explosive chemicals overturned, shutting down the main highway linking Northern California with the rest of the country and forcing motorists to either wait all day or take a 250-mile detour.

The 51-mile stretch of Interstate 80 west of Carlin was closed for 16 hours Thursday.

The driver of the van, who wasn't injured, was booked for investigation of possession of a hazardous material and possession of a stolen vehicle. The van was taken from the Sacramento, Calif., area on Wednesday, authorities said.

Sheriff Neil Harris said the van contained ether and other explosive material, leading investigators to suspect the man might have been transporting chemicals to set up a narcotics lab.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Fort Worth Star-Telegram on rap lyrics:
To dehumanize anyone dehumanizes us all.

So why, as members of a society which to varying degrees but with remarkable consistency degrades women, are we so surprised—and even offended—that the practice has become a stylized and profitable part of the music industry?

We're talking about rap music, of course. But rap is only the most recent form of music delivering foul and destructive messages to reach mainstream America. Not all rap music feeds on the human spirit, but that which does has rendered a venomous strain of degradation.

We have all accepted this poison in small, seemingly harmless doses from other sources. But they were harmful: too many of us have become immune to its effects.

Among the exceptions are the women and men of the National Association of Black Journalists. Late last month, 200 of them walked out of a symposium on hip hop, the African-American urban culture from which rap grew. ...

Amid the salient displeasure of many in the audience, the rapper asked a pertinent question: Why do groups whose lyrics trumpet hate for women get paid top dollar while others don't?

There are few answers, but plenty of blame to go around. ... Such an outlet has value to those who live with legacies of oppression. But to vindictively dehumanize others can only destroy one's self and the rest of us.

Author Bebe Moore Campbell noted in a recent essay on National Public Radio that a charming young white boy in the film Sleepless in Seattle refers to a woman as a "ho." It is likely that most children his age—white and black—don't hear that kind of talk in their homes. And if they do, she says, if they do, such contempt should be met with stern reprimand.

Yet many people who paid to see Sleepless think it is humorous—and the filmmaker was banking on it.

The ease with which we condone this misogyny isn't funny. ... It's personal. It's intentional.

We would do well to express outrage more often. And we don't necessarily have to be black or female to do it.

El Paso Times on asylum reform:

President Clinton's plan to speed up the refugee asylum process and to spend an extra $172.5 million to protect our borders is worthwhile, but it must be implemented fairly, by well-trained immigration officers.

Not all immigrants to this country are terrorists and criminals. Most come in search of work and a better life.

This does not mean that nothing should be done to protect our borders from the infamous human trade from China and the flow of undocumented immigrants from Mexico and other countries. We should. ... But protecting out 2,000-mile border with Mexico from illegal immigration is almost impossible. No amount of money or manpower will stop people who need to feed their families from crossing the border.

The long-term solution is to improve living conditions in Mexico through the North American Free Trade Agreement. But that will take time. ...

Tens of millions get killed

The background, compressed into a couple of paragraphs:

In 1991, President Bush announces, with the smashing victory against the Iraqi invaders of Kuwait, that the Western powers, led by the United States, were now embarked on a new world order that would forbid aggressive wars. Not long after that bracing reassurance, the Serbs and the Croats, in the disintegrating state of Yugoslavia, decided to expand their claims on contiguous territories and did so by aggression.

The Croats got what they wanted relatively soon. The Serbs pressed on, their final designs not a bit clear, but it became clear that they wished to dominate the state of Bosnia-Herzegovina, composed of Serbs, Croats and Muslims. The aggressive war against Bosnia proceeded with singular ferocity, causing CNN to operate on overtime to retail the atrocities in slow motion.

There is the predicted uproar and newly elected President Clinton announces that the United States will not tolerate more of the same, to which end he dispatches our secretary of state to consolidate the military cooperation of our allies. But a week or so later, Warren Christopher returns to Washington and says that, what do you know, our allies are unwilling to participate in a military effort in the former Yugoslavia.

American opinion is split in two. That split is not along ideological lines. Neo-isolationists like Anthony Lewis and Sen. Joseph Biden want to land in Yugoslavia with baby nuclear weapons in the bandoliers of the Marines. Hawks like Irving Kristol and Pentagon officials tell us that the situation is not right for U.S. intervention, that American security interests are not clearly enough at stake.

President Clinton temporizes. He goes so far as to say that without the cooperation of our European allies, we can't, really, expect to succeed in our effort of deterrence. The miasma closes down on Sarajevo and there is a little sense in the air of the 1940 fall of Paris: The modern Hitlerites are having their way, and no one is telling them they can't get away with it.

Whereupon President Clinton, catching the mood of bitterness and resentment, comes out with the bold declarations of July 28. What he says is that the U.S. Air Force will strike at Serbian aggressive artillery concentrations aimed at Sarajevo, provided a) the United Nations approves of such strikes; and b) these strikes coordinate with activity undertaken by NATO.

These qualifiers appear to some as the equivalent of Douglas MacArthur announcing that we will invade Iwo Jima provided we get the approval of the American Legion, The National Council of Churches and the Chamber of Commerce.

Sure enough, Boutros Boutros-Ghali of the United Nations says that he would oppose any military action by the United States unless it were strictly focused on the aggressive artillery. This brings a military laugh from the professionals who point out that all that the Serbian artillery needs to do is simply to fire their weapons and then move them a few hundred yards in order to immunize them from U.S. retaliatory strikes.

Meanwhile, NATO announces that the purpose of any military activity against the Serbs is not to deter their aggression against Bosnia, but to safeguard the NATO peacekeeping forces—a few hundred men—who will want some protection in the course of effecting their mission.

The reaction of the Serbian military to the threats brings to mind what Franklin Roosevelt commented in the days after the strike on Pearl Harbor when an aide rushed into the Oval Office to announce that Bulgaria had declared war on the United States: "Did you ever hear an ant fart in a windstorm?"

The net situation is not reassuring. Reporters in the field tell us that the United States is an object of contempt by the people of Bosnia. At first they floated on the high historical promises of the new world order, then on the specific problems of military aid. Few of them have any confidence that the leader of the free world knows what a leader is supposed to do in order to exercise leadership.

The case against direct U.S. involvement in military action in Yugoslavia is very strong. This does not mean that the case is very strong against the exercise of American leadership designed to focus on the regional responsibilities of such as France, Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Greece and Turkey.

Our concern for their coordinated opposition to rank aggression goes beyond our devotion to abstract justice. We should know that if Belgrade succeeds in its war, that great tacit barrier against aggression will dissolve; and if it does, the Balkanization that led to world wars is transfused by all the perilous, evil instincts of nationalism, and when this happens, tens of millions of people get killed.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Friday, Aug. 6, the 218th day of 1993. There are 147 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Aug. 6, 1945, the United States dropped an atomic bomb on Hiroshima, Japan, killing an estimated 140,000 people in the first use of a nuclear weapon in warfare.

On this date:

In 1787, the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia began to debate the articles contained in a draft of the United States Constitution.

In 1825, Bolivia declared its independence from Peru.

In 1890, the electric chair was used for the first time as murderer William Kemmler was executed at Auburn State Prison in New York.

In 1926, Warner Brothers premiered its Vitaphone sound-on-disc movie system in New York.

Memories of the flood of '93

The flood of '93 has turned much of Middle America into a fast inland sea. Drowned people, property and crops can't be measured in numbers. Numbers past a hundred anything become incomprehensible, impersonal.

The instruments used to measure the river's rise in feet and inches have no way to register the related torrent of tears.

The heroics, the hurt, the anxiety and the gallantry are in sharpest focus for me in the tiny microcosm town of Kimmswick, Mo., down river from St. Louis.

The dirt dikes are holding. Beyond one more crest, most of the town will have survived. Not alone.

When Jim Pate's dozer crews needed tons more dirt, Mr. Bertlesmeyer from down on 67 highway said, "Take mine."

When more sandbaggers were needed, they converged from three states. Dog-tired National Guard troops are fed and bedded in neighboring homes and restaurants and churches.

What was Frank Kasal's Old House Restaurant is a command post for coordinating the counterattack.

From the Elks and Eagles, food and ice.

Never have I been more proud to be identified with Wal-Mart. From area stores, including the one at Festus which is reachable only by boat—gratuitous supplies arrive on the riverfront every day—shaving equipment for the Guardsmen and food and soft drinks and candy and blankets and pillows and clothing and any need they name.

Paul Harvey

Up and down area highways are the hundreds of businesses cut off from lifeline traffic maybe until September. Yet, uncomplaining, their anguished owners are down on the riverfront earning blisters.

Normal times, Ellie's gift shop in Kimmswick is run by Loretta and Hank Goehring. With their shop cut off and empty, they are picking up soiled clothing from National Guardsmen—taking it to their uphill home—and returning it freshly laundered and neatly pressed. And all at their own expense.

Friends back home would never recognize pretty Rose Rueve under all that sweat and mud on her National Guard fatigues—but she's never away from her hot-line field phone—shuttling supplies, ordering gear, directing inbound truckloads of whatever.

Then there are Doris and Doris, the mother and daughter who are all that's left in Kimmswick of a proud family that dates back five generations... back to when their homestead was deeded to them by President Lincoln.

Doris and Doris are night and day preparing and delivering food and fresh water and lighthearted greetings to the cress that just got orders to "add two more feet" to the levee.

Now it's Monday. I'm back in my clean, comfortable, cushioned home base in Chicago ...

I'm high and dry and carpeted and free of mosquitoes and the putrid stench of rotting fish ...

I'm catching up on what the world calls "news" and note that tiny, impoverished Bangladesh has sent what it can to the American flood front ... sandbags and tea. That's all they have, but here it is ... sandbags and tea.

Nothing from Japan. Nothing from Germany. Nothing from England. Nothing from any of the nations that we have wet-nursed through droughts and floods and fires and earthquakes and wars.

Indeed, flood relief for Americans is still being debated in our own Congress.

Yet, here comes this widow's mite from Bangladesh.

Generations yet unborn will reflect on the nightmare summer of '93.

I will remember all of the horrendous suffering and sacrifice from Bismark to New Orleans in terms of Kimmswick, Mo.—one tiny town in which homefolds and neighbors discovered courage and kindness and goodness and mercy and selflessness and other buried treasure which they didn't even know they had.

Winning really is everything for Clinton

WASHINGTON—This time, winning really is everything for President Clinton and the Democratic establishment, and never mind the fine print in the budget or the way the game was played to get it written.

So it doesn't quite hit his original deficit control targets. Pry it out of Congress and it will be close enough. $496 billion of the $500 billion Clinton wanted pruned from deficits over the next five years.

The president said that will be about 98 percent of what he recommended in the first place. An A-plus, according to the White House.

The budget has become his test, the make-or-break issue of his first year, still at risk in a divided and undisciplined Democratic Congress. Republican lines are holding in unanimous opposition, so the administration and budget negotiators traded terms for the votes they've got to have.

Spare a tax increase on mid-income Social Security recipients and it may win back a Democrat who said no to the Clinton budget before. Ease the terms on expense account restaurant entertainment and there may be another Senate vote to be reclaimed.

That kind of bartering won't do much for the image of Congress. And each concession costs revenue, cutting into the deficit reduction goal. But the budget is close enough, said Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, and the shortfall won't matter.

Not unless it turns off other Democrats who have been insisting on the symbolism of a full $500 billion in deficit curbs.

Clinton said he thinks his plan will pass. House and Senate Democratic leaders said Monday they've got the votes to be confident of it.

But the president isn't easing his sales and lobbying efforts, an almost fulltime priority for days now. Clinton has said there's a point at which waiting for a slightly better decision is worse than acting on a pretty good one, and it has been reached on the budget.

Besides, Congress is scheduled to recess for a month beginning Friday. Delay or defeat would leave the government flailing over the budget, Clinton says, while interest rates go up and uncertainty shakes the financial markets.

Robert E. Rubin, director of Clinton's National Economic Council, said the Wall Street reaction would be horrendous, chilling the economy and convincing business that the government simply cannot work.

Ross Perot, heckling on television, calls such warnings hot air and scare talk. He said the budget ought to be shelved until fall and replaced with one that to sharply cut the deficit, although he wouldn't say how.

But Clinton said delay would lead to less deficit reduction, not more.

The bottom line on deficit reduction has shifted. His broad based energy tax has been replaced by a 4.3-cent-a-gallon increase in gasoline taxes that would raise far less, and some offsetting spending limits had to be eased to appease House liberals. Clinton would get the income tax increases he sought on upper brackets; to reclaim revenue that had been bargained away, that is to be retroactive to January.

That means some people would owe more than eight months worth of higher taxes that aren't being withheld from paychecks, and that may stir a backlash when the bills come due next spring.

But that's for next year. The budget pressure is on now. "And we've debated this from February to August," Clinton said Monday. "We are literally paralyzed here. We can't get anything else done."

The tax and budget bill deals with one of his central campaign pledges, and the president said it has to be done before he can get started on the rest, on things like health care and welfare reform.

There's no doubt of that. Budgets are, after all, an annual congressional exercise. This one is different because it sets the economic course of a new administration. But the changes he wants in health and welfare are even more sweeping, and would have to be gained without the procedural advantages that apply on budgets, which can't be blocked by Republican filibuster.

Drug dealer shoots up courthouse, blows himself up

By JOHN HANNA
Associated Press Writer

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — A small-time drug dealer got off a courthouse elevator firing guns and tossing pipe bombs, then blew himself up with explosives strapped to his body. A guard was killed and five other people were wounded.

Jack Gary McKnight, 37, had been scheduled for sentencing later in the day and may have been bent on "suicide-by-cop" when he stormed the Frank Carlson federal building Thursday, FBI agent Brian Carroll said. McKnight was facing up to 40 years in prison and a $2 million fine.

Carrying two handguns, McKnight traveled up to the fourth floor by elevator. When the doors opened, he began firing and lobbing bombs that caused at least three explosions, the FBI said. Some employees escaped down stairs.

Jackie Williams, U.S. attorney for Kansas, said McKnight told an employee in the U.S. District Court clerk's office: "You're not the one I'm looking for." McKnight killed 61-year-old guard Gene L. Goldsberry, shooting him at point-blank range, the FBI said. Before joining the U.S. marshal's office, Goldsberry had been on the state highway patrol.

The gunman also shot and wounded two others. Terry Morrow, 37, of Junction City was listed in fair condition today, while Dana Fanole's condition was not disclosed.

Workers evacuated from the building said they heard at least two dozen shots and possibly as many as 30.

About an hour after the rampage began, explosives strapped to McKnight's body went off, perhaps accidentally, in the clerk's office, Carroll said.

Three women employees of the office were wounded by the blast and were listed in satisfactory condition today.

Authorities didn't know until about six hours after the blast that the man was dead, and about nine people spent the time hiding in locked offices. After the body was found, a bomb squad searched the building. At least two bombs were found and detonated.

Carroll said the motive for the attack was unclear, citing the possibility that McKnight wanted to prompt an officer to kill him. "We've experienced a phenomenon in law enforcement of suicide-by-cop," he said.

Earlier in the day, McKnight blew up his pickup truck outside the Jefferson County courthouse in Oskaloosa, then drove to Topeka in a car he blew up in the federal building parking lot, apparently to create a diversion, authorities said.

Greg Hough, an assistant U.S. attorney who handled McKnight's drug case, said he got a call from the Jefferson County sheriff's department about the explosion there and was warned that McKnight was heading for the federal building.

"As I'm picking up the phone to dial it, I hear a blast upstairs and gunfire," Hough said. People headed for the courtrooms don't have to pass through a metal detector until they reach the fourth floor.

McKnight had worked for the Santa Fe Railroad for 15 years, the last 12 in the accounting department. He resigned last month.

Jefferson County Prosecuting

Attorney Dan Owen said that McKnight and his wife, Cynthia, had been arrested at their home in 1992. Deputies confiscated more than 100 marijuana plants, cultivating equipment and several weapons, Owen said.

McKnight pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana with intent to sell and illegal use of a firearm in drug trafficking. His 36-year-old wife pleaded guilty to the weapons charge. She was scheduled to be sentenced today.

"He would be considered a small drug dealer," Hough said. "He was a very quiet, reserved person."

For Goldsberry, the end was already in sight. The slain guard had terminal prostate cancer that had spread to his spine and doctors said there was nothing they could do, said Gloria Goldsberry, his wife of 27 years.

"We were making the most of the time we had left," Mrs. Goldsberry told The Wichita Eagle. "It was progressing, but there was no pain. It was not keeping him from working."

Political deadlock broken in Japan; prime minister to be selected soon

TOKYO (AP) — Lawmakers today broke a daylong impasse that had embarrassed the country's new coalition government, opening the way for the selection of a prime minister who, for the first time in four decades, will not be a Liberal Democrat.

The bitter parliamentary tug-of-war had left Japan's political world in limbo, deflating faith in the coalition's promises for a more modern, open democracy. It also cast doubt on the coalition's ability to act.

The deadlock also showed that the Liberal Democrats, whose 38-year rule ended Thursday, could be a formidable opposition. They had delayed the selection of Morihiro Hosokawa as prime minister to bargain over who would take the largely ceremonial post of speaker of the lower house.

Representatives of both sides met today, and party officials said the parliamentary session would convene this evening. It was not immediately clear what compromise, if any, was reached on the speaker dispute.

The deadlock was a lesson for Hosokawa, who has vowed to clean up a government grown corrupt after 38 years of LDP rule. He quickly discovered the difficulties of leading a multiparty coalition that controls only a slim majority and faces a strong LDP opposition.

Borrowing stalling tactics long used against them by the opposition, the Liberal Democrats rejected the coalition's choice for lower house speaker, Socialist Takako Doi. The post is mainly honorary but highly visible.

Arguing that a direct vote would trample minority views, LDP officials demanded that the post go to the single party with the most seats.

The LDP has 228 seats, the biggest party in the seven-party coalition, the Socialists, has 77 seats. The LDP lost its majority in the July 18 election.

The Liberal Democrats also insisted that the lower house meet for 20 days. The coalition said 10 would suffice, and it rejected LDP demands that Hosokawa immediately give a major policy speech.

The squabbles over mostly procedural matters disappointed many Japanese hoping for an improvement over the parliamentary inaction of recent years, when lawmakers seemed to spend more time bickering over corruption scandals than debating legislation.

The transfer had raised expectations for a new political era without tactics like the notorious "ox walk" — used occasionally by the Socialists to drag out voting by slowly shuffling to the ballot box.

"This is just like a fistfight among kids, it's pathetic," said political commentator Kenzo Uchida. "Now that we've got a new parliament, this is a great chance for change that shouldn't be wasted."

Many commentators faulted the Liberal Democrats, saying they had put "face" ahead of the nation's political welfare.

"The Liberal Democrats are well aware of the public's honest expectations for the Hosokawa administration ... and they have no business making mischief by causing delays," the business newspaper Nihon Keizai said in an editorial today.

But the crisis also shook confidence in the coalition — a broad alliance of parties ranging from left to right on the political spectrum.

"Hosokawa has to manage a glass menagerie, which even a small jolt could smash," said the national newspaper Mainichi.

The impasse left Hosokawa awkwardly waiting for the day that is expected to cap his meteoric 15-month rise to head of government from virtual obscurity.

Kiichi Miyazawa remained as a caretaker prime minister after he and his Cabinet resigned Thursday to make way for the new government.

The 55-year-old Hosokawa and his coalition have promised to revamp the electoral system and enact stricter political funding laws to discourage corruption. They have said they will continue the old government's basic foreign and economic policies, although they favor deregulation and a transfer of powers to local regions.

Hollywood abuzz with call girl scandal

By JOHN HORN
AP Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Never mind dinosaurs or TV violence. Hollywood's real obsession this summer is prostitution and the showbiz movers and shakers who might be in Heidi Fleiss's little black book.

For four weeks, ever since the arrest of the alleged movie land madam, Hollywood has been whispering names and trading gossipy tales of high-priced call girls coupling with some of the industry's top stars and moguls.

No big Hollywood players have been linked by law enforcement authorities to the 27-year-old Ms. Fleiss, who was charged Thursday with pandering and cocaine possession. And until today, no actual list of her alleged clients had surfaced.

The Daily News of New York said today it was given a peek at three days' worth of Fleiss' Gucci calendar book, containing the first names of alleged clients, their hotel rooms, their phone numbers, and a checklist of "girls" she would try to match up with them.

The newspaper said it got the partial list from Fleiss' ex-boyfriend, producer-director Ivan Nagy, who has been linked to a different call-girl ring.

A call to a phone number next to "Barry" was answered by a machine that said: "You have reached Barry Josephson, Columbia Pictures," the Daily News reported. A Columbia spokeswoman refused to comment, the newspaper said.

Nagy claims he photocopied the entire calendar for 1992, the newspaper said. Police seized the book Thursday, Nagy said.

Police maintain Fleiss ran an exclusive call-girl ring from her $1.6 million home, formerly owned by Michael Douglas, and charged clients $1,500. Authorities also say they found 13 grams of cocaine in the home and traveler's checks signed, according to Fleiss, by a well-known actor.

Fleiss has said she will tell all — and name all names — for $1 million. And according to the Los Angeles Times, an unidentified film executive has offered her $300,000 for rights to her story. She is free on $100,000 bail.

In an interview with the newspaper, Fleiss refused to discuss the allegations. Her lawyer, Anthony Brooklier, had no comment Thursday.

In the meantime, at least one studio executive and British rock star Billy Idol have come forward to deny industry rumors they used Fleiss' alleged services.

Columbia Pictures is investigating whether company executives used studio money to pay for drugs or prostitutes, according to the Times.

And employees at major studios have been spending hours on the phone, regaling one another with the latest twist in the sordid story.

One tale had a top studio executive spotting his own daughter among prostitutes "catering" a Hollywood party. Another tale was told of a hidden-camera videotape of a party showing a well-known actor with prostitutes.

On Wednesday, police arrested Nagy for investigation of trying to induce someone to commit prostitution. Nagy allegedly ran a prostitution ring of 15 to 20 women, including some would-be actresses. Nagy, whose credits include the TV movies Midnight Lace and A Touch of Scandal, was freed on $25,000 bail.

A book listing his clients, prostitutes and their schedules was seized at Nagy's home, said Capt. Glenn Ackerman, who leads the police vice detail.

"They're individuals of substance from all walks of life, including the film business," Ackerman said. He said police would not release the names.

Nagy's arrest came one day after Michael Nathanson, president of Columbia Pictures' worldwide production, said he was not a client of Fleiss and had not used studio money to pay her. Nathanson's name had come up repeatedly in the industry gossip, and his lawyer decided it was time to stop the rumors.

Monitoring of Morse code distress signal ends

BOSTON (AP) — In the end, the Coast Guard's Morse code emergency distress system went out not with a bang, but with a dash.

"Now closing down continuous watch," began the last Morse code message broadcast by the Coast Guard on Saturday. "Fair winds and following seas with 73s (best wishes) from all of us."

With these words, transmitted in the code's familiar dots and dashes, Coast Guard veteran Rusty Hemenway closed out an era.

The Coast Guard began monitoring the 500-kilohertz radio frequency for distress signals at the turn of the century and in 1924 set up its first radio station to monitor the frequency continuously.

Since then, Coast Guard radiomen have answered thousands of distress calls (that's SOS, or three dots, three dashes, three dots) and saved countless lives.

But with the advent of satellite and digital technology such as marine phones, ship-to-shore teleprinters and electronic beacons that can pinpoint a ship, the Morse code frequency has been made obsolete.

"It's a step forward, like going from the horse and buggy to the car," said Lt. Cmdr. William C. Glidden, who oversees communications in the Boston-based Coast Guard First District.

Coast Guard radiomen expressed nostalgia for the code, which many had used for most of their careers.

"It's another link in the winding down of a culture, like when people stopped speaking Latin," said Rick Booth, a Coast Guard spokesman. Coast Guard officers "are realists, they see that it's time to go, but they're still a little misty-eyed."

"I hate to see it go away, but it was inevitable that the digital technology would take over," said Hemenway, the 30-year Coast Guard veteran who was asked to send part of the final message.

Responses to the last message — broadcast at 8 p.m. Eastern Daylight Time, 0000 Greenwich Mean Time — came from ships ranging from a Bar Harbor ferry to a luxury liner in the Caribbean. Many wished "good luck" and "goodbye" to the senders.

Morse code was invented in the 1800s by Samuel F.B. Morse. It was a crucial part of Guglielmo Marconi's wireless trans-Atlantic system at the turn of the century.

It's as popular as ever among ham radio operators because it is reliable and easy to use.

But Steven Mansfield, a spokesman for the American Radio Relay League in Connecticut, with 165,000 amateur radio enthusiasts nationwide, acknowledged that the use of Morse code is no longer practical on a large scale.

Criminal Justice board OKs more state jail beds

AUSTIN (AP) — The chairman of the Board of Criminal Justice says voters could help to keep violent offenders imprisoned by favoring a $1 billion bond issue for a new state jail system.

"If the taxpayers do not approve the bond issue, it's going to cause violent criminals and many other criminals to get out much earlier," Carol Vance said.

A total of 22,000 new state jail beds could be built under the new system, which was passed by the Legislature in the regular session that ended May 31.

The new system would house backlogged and non-violent offenders, while reserving state penitentiaries for violent criminals.

The criminal justice system recently has come under fire for releasing prison inmates early.

On Thursday, the board authorized construction of 6,000 beds in Harris County, Beaumont and Bonham.

Each of the three areas will receive a 2,000-bed facility. They should be ready for use by Sept. 1, 1994, Vance said.

The board plans to select locations for five more 2,000-bed state jails, Vance said. The remaining 6,000 beds would be built in smaller facilities.

Funding for construction of the first 10,000 beds was generated from leftover bond funds, Vance said. The others would be built contingent on passage of the Nov. 2 bond issue.

In other business Thursday, a new member joined the board. Thomas Dunning of Dallas was appointed by Gov. Ann Richards to a term ending Feb. 1, 1995.

Dunning, 50, replaces the late Clarence Stevenson of Victoria.

Chautauqua run set for Labor Day

Runners and walkers should mark Labor Day, Sept. 6, as the date for the annual Chautauqua 5K and one-mile Fun Run, according to Bill O'Brien, assistant administrator at Coronado Hospital.

"We're taking entries now for both the 5K and the Fun Run," O'Brien said. "All entry fees from the event will be donated to the Pampa United Way Campaign."

Coronado Hospital sponsors the event.

Entry fee until Sept. 1 is $3 for the Fun Run and $8 for the 5K. It will be $4 and $9 the day of the race.

Registration on race day will begin at 6:30 a.m. at the corner of Georgia Ave. and Mary Ellen Street.

Coronado Hospital will supply chilled water and sliced oranges while each participant will receive a free t-shirt.

There will be four divisions, including two divisions in the 5K, one for male and one for female, consisting of ages 19 and under, 20-29, 30-39, 40-49 and 50 and over. There are also two divisions in the Fun Run, consisting of ages 7 and under, 8-11, 12-15, 16-19, 20-29, 30-39, 40-49 and 50 and over. Medals will be given to first, second and third place in each age group.

Entry blanks will be available in several publications of The Pampa News and also at the Pampa Youth Center.

For additional information, call Terry Barnes at 669-0924.

Rangers close in on ChiSox

ARLINGTON (AP) — A day after Nolan Ryan punched out Robin Ventura, the Texas Rangers pounded the Chicago White Sox.

Ivan Rodriguez drove in a career-high four runs and Texas spoiled Tim Lincecum's debut in the American League, beating the White Sox 7-1 Thursday night.

Texas won three of four in the series, and moved within 4 1/2 games of the West-leading White Sox.

"Nolan was uplifting," Rangers manager Kevin Kennedy said. "After the incident, no one was going to stop him. He picked up the whole team."

"We had to beat the team ahead of us," Kennedy said. "We could have had an ugly 10 1/2 games back. Instead we're only 4 1/2 out. This is a big series but there's a long way to go."

Texas came from behind in all three victories over Chicago and registered its 28th come-from-behind win of the season.

"We played ball the way it was supposed to be played," Texas' Julio Franco said. "There are no more excuses for us."

Belcher (0-1) gave up four runs on seven hits in seven innings. He had been 9-6 for the Cincinnati Reds before they traded him to Chicago on July 31 for two minor league pitchers.

The White Sox acquired Belcher to plug the troublesome fifth spot in the rotation. With Belcher's defeat, the White Sox are 4-18 with their No. 5 starter on the mound.

"I don't feel like I'm a savior or a hired gun," Belcher said. "They were doing fine without me and probably would have continued had I not come along."

Kevin Brown (9-7) allowed one run on six hits and struck out eight in 7 2/3 innings. Cris Carpenter finished for his first AL save.

Rodriguez, 15-for-26 in his last nine games, put Texas ahead 3-1 with a two-run double in the sixth inning. He had a sacrifice fly in fourth and an RBI single in a three-run eighth.

Donat Harris hit his second major league homer, giving the Rangers a 4-1 lead in the seventh. Harris and Butch Davis also had RBI singles in the eighth.

With the score tied at 1, Doug Strange led off the sixth with a double and Rafael Palmeiro walked. Belcher retired Juan Gonzalez on a popout and Julio Franco on a fly ball before Rodriguez doubled off the left-field wall.

The Rangers tied the game at 1 in the fourth when Palmeiro drew a leadoff walk, went to third on Gonzalez's single and scored on Rodriguez's sacrifice fly.

Chicago took a 1-0 lead in the third on Joey Cora's one-out triple and Frank Thomas' sacrifice fly.

Linebacker Wilber Marshall of the Oilers is scheduled to have knee surgery today to repair a torn cartilage.

NFL teams hit hard by injuries

By The Associated Press

NFL teams just want to stay healthy through the preseason. Some haven't even managed to do so heading into their first exhibition games.

Houston, Kansas City, Denver, Tampa Bay and Cincinnati already are hobbled. Other teams that already have played a preseason game, most notably Philadelphia and the Los Angeles Raiders, also have injury woes.

Exhibition action begins tonight with Miami at Atlanta. On Saturday, Buffalo faces Minnesota at Berlin; the New York Jets are at Pittsburgh; Denver is at Tampa Bay; the New York Giants go to Cincinnati; Houston plays New Orleans at San Antonio; Kansas City meets Green Bay at Milwaukee; Indianapolis visits Seattle; New England is at San Diego; and the Los Angeles Rams are at Phoenix.

On Sunday, Dallas plays Detroit at London; the Raiders take on San Francisco at Stanford, Calif.; and Chicago is at Philadelphia. The weekend's action ends Monday night, with Cleveland at Washington.

Oilers
Linebacker Wilber Marshall, acquired in a highly publicized and delayed offseason trade, was scheduled for arthroscopic surgery today to repair torn cartilage in his left knee. He will be out for three to four weeks.

Marshall, who signed a $2.75 million contract in the offseason, suffered the injury during practice last Friday. Tests in Houston revealed a partial tear in the medial meniscus.

Chiefs
Fullback Christian Okoye, who required arthroscopic surgery during the winter on his right knee, was sent back to Kansas City on Thursday for closer examination of his sore left knee.

Okoye was held out of practice for about a week after complaining of soreness in the knee. He felt strong enough to return to practice Tuesday, but was sore again after that workout. He was sidelined for Wednesday's two workouts, then the Chiefs decided to have him return to Kansas City to meet with team physician Dr. Jon Browne.

Buccaneers
Running back Reggie Cobb, nursing a hamstring injury, will be held out of the game with Denver as a precaution. An assortment of minor injuries also may keep offensive linemen Tim Ryan and Rick Trumbull, receivers Lamar Thomas and Walter Wilson and tight end Todd Harrison on the bench.

Broncos
Denver expects to be without receiver Vance Johnson, cornerback LeLo Lang and linebacker Karl Mecklenburg. Johnson has an ankle injury, Lang has bruised ribs and Mecklenburg has an inner-ear problem that will sideline him for the rest of the preseason.

Raiders
Coach Art Shell is uncertain whether defensive end Greg Townsend, linebacker Winston Moss or guard Steve Wisniewski will be available for the game against the 49ers.

Townsend is bothered by a sore knee sustained when the Raiders practiced against the Dallas Cowboys last week. He played in the Hall of Fame Game, however.

Moss had offseason knee surgery, and the Raiders are giving him time off in practice. Wisniewski was held out Thursday with a sore back.

Eagles
Safety Andre Waters will miss at least three weeks of practice after undergoing surgery to remove a toenail from his left foot.

Waters, 31, aggravated the toenail during rehabilitation from a fractured fibula and ligament damage in his left leg that caused him to miss 11 games in 1992.

The Pampa Soccer Association announces registration for the fall season Aug. 13-14 and Aug. 20-21 at the Pampa Mall.

There will be no late signups this season. Registrations will be taken only at the Pampa Mall during the announced times.

Registration times will be from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. on Fridays and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays.

Team formation will be Aug. 22.

Birth certificates are mandatory if registering for the first time. A child must be four years old by Miles Cook at 665-3036 or Rick Bradley at 665-3897.

TENNIS

Full practice for the Pampa High School tennis team starts Monday at 8:30 a.m. at the high school courts.

Practice is for 9th through 12th graders wishing to try out for the junior varsity and varsity. There will be two-a-day practices, once in the morning and once in the early afternoon.

The team's first tournament is Aug. 14-15 at the Amarillo Singles Tournament.

GOLF

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) — Lee Trevino, one of golf's leading career money winners, is facing up to a problem familiar to middle-aged

Mize grabs lead with 64 in opening round of Buick Open

GRAND BLANC, Mich. (AP) — The early bird is supposed to get the worm. In the wealthy world of the PGA tour, that's not always good.

Consider Larry Mize. He won the Northern Telcom Open in January, the third tournament of the year. Since then, he has just sort of plodded along — when he has played at all.

Mize missed the cut in his last three starts before this week's Buick Open. He failed to qualify at the Memorial, the U.S. Open and the St. Jude Classic.

With $430,000 in winnings so far this year, he didn't play from the U.S. Open in June until the St. Jude last week.

"I wanted to get away for family reasons," said Mize, whose first-round 64 Thursday gave him the lead after the first round in the Buick Open. "I needed a little bit of a break. I wanted to go home, change some diapers. You have to relax and enjoy what you've done. Winning early allows you to take it easy."

Mize was 8-under-par and two shots ahead of Payne Stewart, John Huston and rookie Paul Goyos at Warwick Hills, where an unusually strong field is tuning up for the PGA Championship next week at Inverness in nearby Toledo, Ohio.

Huston, playing in an early morning threesome with Mize and Rocco Mediate — before the greens became chewed up with spike marks — birdied the first five holes.

Mize was only slightly less spectacular. He just had eight birdies in a bogey-free round.

"He had a tough start, didn't he?" Mize said of his playing partner.

"It's hard not to notice when a guy birdies the first five holes, especially with Rocco giving him a hard time."

"They can feed off one another, even though they didn't know what they were doing."

But the best the likable Mediate could do was a 71, leaving him in a logjam with many players, including Ben Crenshaw and Peter Jacobsen.

Davis Love III, Steve Elkington, Dennis Trixler and Steve Lamontagne each shot 67.

Huston said the key to his hot start was his driver.

"I just kept hitting the greens and making them," said Huston, who hasn't won since the 1992 Walt Disney World. "I hit the driver really well. I can only remember missing one green."

Mize said he hoped a strong showing this week would help him earn another berth on the U.S. Ryder Cup team.

"I would love to be on the team again," he said, knowing that Ryder Cup captain Tom Watson also is playing in this tournament. "I need to do what I did today and take care of business. It would be an honor and a big thrill."

Elkington, who lost to Mediate in a playoff at the Greater Greensboro Open in April, got to 6-under midway through the back nine. But he bogeyed the par-4 15th and couldn't make it up over the final three holes. In fact, he had to get up and down to save par at the 435-yard final hole.

"That was a nice save," said Elkington, who tied for second in the Buick Open after a playoff last year. "I felt good about doing that."

Brad Faxon, the third member of that 1992 playoff, shot 69 on Thursday. He was tied with several players, including Fuzzy Zoeller and Hale Irwin.

British Open champion Greg Norman opened with a 68. As fate would have it, so did Bob Tway.

It was Tway's miracle bunker shot on the 72nd hole that defeated Norman in the 1986 PGA Championship, the last time it was played at Inverness.

Doctor breaks silence about Lewis' death

By JONATHAN YENKIN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — For more than a week, Dr. Gilbert Mudge kept quiet about Reggie Lewis' death, declining to discuss his faulty diagnosis that the Boston Celtics captain had a normal heart.

He broke that silence to express his sadness, and to note he had been awaiting more tests before allowing Lewis to play professional basketball again.

But he is still silent on the medical controversy stirred by his diagnosis.

The 340-word statement issued Thursday marked Mudge's first public comments about the case since Lewis, 27, suddenly died last week of cardiac arrest while shooting baskets at a gymnasium.

Mudge, who was subjected to death threats, said he was "deeply saddened by the loss of my patient and friend, Reggie Lewis."

"This has been an exceedingly complex case from the outset," Mudge said, adding that he said he sought advice from many colleagues to help decipher the test results.

Lewis first drew medical attention when he collapsed during a playoff game April 29. The Celtics assembled a team of doctors, who diagnosed Lewis with cardiomyopathy — a potentially life-threatening disease of the heart muscle.

Lewis abruptly switched to Brigham and Women's Hospital, where he came under Mudge's care. In a televised news conference May 10, Mudge declared Lewis had a "normal athlete's heart with normal function."

"I am optimistic that under medical supervision, Mr. Reggie Lewis will be able to return to professional basketball without limitation," Mudge said that day.

Mudge diagnosed Lewis with neurocardiogenic syncope, which he called a "poorly understood" neural condition in which the heart rate falls instead of increasing during peak exercise.

Mudge, the director of clinical cardiology at the hospital, said the condition was benign and could be treated with medicine.

Since Lewis' death, however, an autopsy has found his heart was abnormal and was extensively scarred. The cause of the scarring hasn't been determined.

In his statement, Mudge didn't discuss the autopsy results, and he said he wouldn't respond to questions. But he stressed he took a cautious approach with Lewis.

"My opinion regarding the possibility of Reggie's return to professional basketball was always conditional and dependent upon further testing, careful monitoring and the progress of a planned exercise program," he said.

"In the weeks following discharge (from the hospital), Reggie was followed closely," Mudge continued. "He never violated recommendations."

Earlier this week, a colleague at Brigham and Women's, who served on the original medical team that found Lewis had a serious heart problem, said Mudge may have given different messages in public and private.

Dr. Thomas Graboys said that while Mudge took a public stance that Lewis' condition was benign, the doctor privately was carefully monitoring his patient.

"If he was absolutely convinced that there was no heart problem, he wouldn't have monitored it," Graboys said.

In his statement, Mudge also repeated accounts from other doctors and Lewis' wife that Lewis received other opinions from specialists in California, who gave no definitive diagnosis.

Mudge said that at the time of Lewis' death, plans were being made for monitoring his progress.

In a separate statement, Dr. H. Richard Nesson, president of Brigham and Women's, said Mudge "has always done his utmost to serve his patients and this institution."

Adobe Walls Dancers take to the stage

The Adobe Walls Dancers will take to the stage at the Fritch Fortress Amphitheater armed with new dances, plus old favorites such as the Hopi Snake Dance for rain, where intrepid performers hoof with bull snakes in their mouths. This is the seventh year for the summer ceremonies.

Performances, sponsored by the Magic Plains Arts Council, are scheduled for 7:30 p.m. today and Saturday. Advance tickets may be purchased from an Adobe Walls dancer, at the Hutchinson County Museum or the Fritch Wildlife Museum.

New features this year are the flaming hoop dance performed by Chris Holcomb. The Lord's prayer will be performed in Indian sign language by Shelly Walker and Rebecca Holcomb. They will be accompanied vocally by Stacey Smith and Danna Hubbard. The young ladies will also perform the Northern Shawl Dance later in the show.

Hutchinson County Museum Director Ed Benz explained that snakes are used in the Hope dance because it is believed they are in touch with the earth and rain. Part of the ritual is carrying the reptiles in the dancer's mouths. He noted that surprisingly a gully washer often follows the performance. Benz said non-poisonous snakes are still needed. People finding snakes or with pet snakes to loan should contact him at 273-6121 after 5:00 p.m. or at home at 274-3239. The dance is a recreation of the actual Hopi dance performed each year at Mishongovi, the Hopi village in Arizona.

The principal figure in the Adobe Walls attack dance is Isatai, who was a Comanche medicine man that cast a spell over Adobe Walls and was said to have magical powers. Located in Hutchinson County, Adobe Walls was the only buffalo hunters permanent trading post ever built. It was attacked by over 300 Southern Plains warriors in 1874 and history was made. A mock building will be on stage to represent Adobe Walls, and fire will be set to it during the dance through the mysterious powers of Isatai. The male dancers will carry guns, lances and bows while the females carry scalp poles. It is a reenactment of the dance described by the Comanches the night before they attacked Adobe Walls.

The dancers will also be doing the Pueblo Comanche Dance. This dance is based on a historical event where the Zuni and Comanche Indians battled. As history would have it, the Comanches that they created a dance to imitate their opponents. Indians on horseback with a tipi camp scene in the background are also planned.

The Summer Ceremonials are performed by the Adobe Walls Dancers who are Explorer Post 565.

The group is chartered by the Hutchinson County Museum. The shows are an educational outreach program of the Museum and are an all volunteer effort. Ed Benz, who is museum director and post advisor, narrates the story of the fabulous Indian history along the Canadian River Valley in Hutchinson County with the dancers. It is a two hour pageant of Plains and Pueblo Indian history. Benz feels the show creates awareness of area history and encourages the public to visit the museum in Borger. Benz encourages all to come and enjoy the spectacular sundown view of the lake from the amphitheater. Seat cushions, blankets or lawn chairs are helpful. A light wrap might be needed as evening can be cool. The amphitheater is located northwest of Fritch at Fritch Fortress. The program is performed in the cooperation with the National Park Service.

Study: Family connection may overestimate breast cancer

By BRENDA C. COLEMAN
AP Medical Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Women who fear they are doomed to get breast cancer because their mother or sister had it may be somewhat more worried than necessary, researchers say.

Some studies have suggested that a woman's risk of breast cancer doubles or triples if her mother has had it, and that the risk at least triples if a sister has had it.

But a group of researchers says that some of those studies — by relying on the participants' memories of who had breast cancer — may have overestimated the prevalence of the disease in families.

In a study of nearly 118,000 women, the researchers found only one in 40 cases was due mainly to heredity. Compared with a woman whose mother and sister had not had breast cancer, the risk was 1.8 times greater if a woman's mother had breast cancer and 2.3 times greater if her sister did, they found.

"Sometimes women who have a mother or sister with breast cancer feel they're doomed to get breast cancer themselves," Dr. David J. Hunter, an assistant professor at Harvard School of Public Health and Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, said Monday. "This demonstrates they are at high risk, but this puts that risk in perspective."

They tracked women, enrolled at ages 30 to 55, in the continuing Nurses' Health Study. Over 12 years ending in 1988, invasive breast cancers developed in 2,389.

"Within this population of middle-aged women, only 2.5 percent of breast cancer cases are attributable to a positive family history," the report said.

Women who had neither a mother or sister with breast cancer had about a 7 percent chance of getting it between ages 30 and 70. The likelihood rose to about 10 percent for women whose mothers had breast cancer, and a little higher — about 12.5 percent — if the mothers were stricken before age 50.

The chance was about 13 percent for women whose sisters had breast cancer and about 17 percent if the mother and a sister both had it.

The National Cancer Institute estimates that an average woman's chance of getting breast cancer in her lifetime is 1 in 9, or 11 percent.

Dr. Nicholas L. Petrakis, a breast-cancer researcher and professor emeritus at the University of California, said the study "should reassure a lot of women."

Hunter acknowledged that in rare cases — one in 200 to 400 people — a gene defect is present that is known to cause breast-cancer susceptibility. Women with the defect face up to an 80 percent breast-cancer risk by age 65.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Is he confessing or bragging?

DEAR ABBY: I am going to be married in a few months to a man I love very much. He told me recently that he wanted to be totally honest with me, then he launched into a series of "confessions" about the women he had been intimate with. There were literally dozens of them! He said many were one- or two-night flings that didn't mean anything.

I am confused and disturbed, not only because he has been intimate with so many women, but that he is still in contact with them and plans to invite some of them to our wedding because "now they are just friends."

He insists that what he did before he met me has nothing to do with me, but I am very uneasy about this. What are your feelings about this? Now I am having second thoughts.

DEEPLY TROUBLED

DEAR TROUBLED: I wonder if your future husband was confessing or bragging. In either case, only a cad would name names. (He could also be lying.)

I think you are wise to have second thoughts. You'd be even wiser to have third and fourth thoughts about this man. He has shown a glaring lack of sensitivity for your feelings. (P.S. In view of these revelations, I hope you will give serious thought to being tested for sexually transmitted diseases.)

DEAR ABBY: I am in my mid-40s, still attractive, and know that the odds of finding a partner drop tremendously at my age. I am engaged to a man that I'm not "in love" with. I admire, respect and love him — as a friend. We have a lot of fun together and the companionship is great. He supports me in my career and accepts me exactly as I am. He's handsome and treats me like a queen, but there is no chemistry.

I have been married before and I have also been in relationships where incredible electricity flowed, but one of them turned out to be the most personally destructive situation I've ever been in. (He was handsome, charismatic and abusive.) I have come to the conclusion that intensity often characterizes sick relationships, and I won't get into another one if I can avoid it. But I also know I'm missing that wonderful feeling of being in love.

Any advice, Abby?
ANONYMOUS, PLEASE

DEAR ANONYMOUS: Although it is not necessarily true that intensity often characterizes sick relationships, the intensity seldom lasts in any relationship. Your fiancé sounds like a first-class "catch." And you appear to be an intelligent woman who knows herself well.

You have a decision to make: Do you want to remain single on the chance that "the man who has everything" will come along, or will you settle for a man who has everything — except sex? ppeal? Only you can answer that question.

DEAR ABBY: Re the grandfather in Scottsdale who did not get a thank-you note for the check he sent his grandchildren: Tell him to send the check unsigned next time, and he will get a response in a heck of a hurry. Believe me, it works.

Embezzlement has become one of the fastest-growing female crimes, particularly among bright, competent, career-oriented women who apparently commit it for the same reasons as men.

FBI statistics, Mark Donald writes in the current issue of Cosmopolitan, indicate that arrests for embezzlement by women increased by 78 percent between 1982 and 1991.

Conventional thinking holds that women embezzle as a last resort to meet the needs of others — family, friends and lovers. But many experts now believe that women have started to embezzle for the same selfish motives as men — greed, drugs and ego.

"If women are given the same opportunities as men, challenged by the same stresses, they may behave in a similar fashion," said Freda Adler, a criminologist at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, N.J.

Greed seemed to be Becky Schafer's motive when she helped herself to $3 million from New York's Citibank, the nation's largest bank. As the trust department manager, she was responsible for billing accounts and paying expenses. She used her check-signing authority to pay for a new BMW and a country mansion decorated in pricey Ralph Lauren.

She would charge items on her credit cards — some months in excess of $100,000 — and then write out bogus trust department checks to cover the cost. She spread her scam over two-and-a-half years, writing a total of 165 checks. She was caught when a routine credit check revealed inconsistencies in her application to an exclusive country club. She eventually pleaded guilty and was sentenced to three years and two months in federal prison.

Many embezzlers believe they can get off easy even if they are caught.

"If you embezzle, there's a general perception you won't be prosecuted," said Joseph T. Wells, chairman of the Association of Certified Fraud Examiners.

"And in fact, the great majority of private sector companies think prosecution is a waste of time. Also, who wants to admit they had a thief working for them?"

Shoddy safeguards, inadequate supervision and corporate mismanagement enhance the embezzler's feeling of invincibility. Trusted employees, given ready access to huge sums of money, have control of bank accounts and checkbooks — as well as internal controls that monitor such records.

"You don't need to be a rocket scientist to figure out that you shouldn't have the same person write the checks and balance the books, but the practice is fairly common," Wells said.

Ted Steinke, chief of the Specialized Crime Division of the Dallas district attorney's office, believes the corporate attitude toward embezzlement is changing.

"In the last few years, we've seen a greater interest in reporting and prosecuting embezzlers; companies are tired of being ripped off," he said.

Most companies, however, are quicker to file charges against "pink collar" workers such as secretaries, bookkeepers and bank tellers, than against high-level executives.

Criminologists say embezzlement takes on a compulsive — almost addictive — nature. Consider Elaine Yarbrough, a Houston bank teller, who would sell a customer traveler's checks for cash, then pocket the money and destroy the receipts that should have gone to the bank and American Express. She did it for a boyfriend who said he didn't see how they could keep living together if she didn't contribute more to their expenses.

She was caught and a kindly judge gave her a 10-year probated sentence and a chance to start her life fresh except for $41,000 in restitution payments.

She recently became addicted to skydiving.

"Oh well," she said, "it's a lot safer than embezzlement."

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN ZEHTI

SHE WAS FAIR TO BEHOLD!
(ESTHER 1:10ff)

HER NAME WAS VASHTI. VASHTI NEVER HEARD OF MALE CHAUVINISM, BUT SHE SUFFERED IT. VASHTI NEVER HEARD OF WOMENS LIB, BUT SHE WAS ITS SISTER!

HER HUSBAND, KING AHASUERUS, RULER OF THE PERSIAN EMPIRE (485-464 B.C.) WAS ENTERTAINING HIS NOBLES, AND PRINCES, WITH AN ENORMOUS FEAST WHICH LASTED DAYS ON END. "ON THE SEVENTH DAY WHEN THE HEART OF THE KING WAS MERRY WITH WINE" HE SENT ORDERS FOR THE QUEEN TO COME AND PARADE HER BEAUTY BEFORE HIS GUESTS.

VASHTI REFUSED! SHE DID NOT SAY "I REFUSE TO BE A SEX OBJECT!" BUT THAT'S SURELY WHAT SHE MEANT. "THE KING WAS VERY WROTH," AND VASHTI'S DISOBEDIENCE COST THE LOSS OF HER THRONE FOR THIS EARLY REBELLIOUS ACT IN FAVOR OF WOMENS INDEPENDENCE!

NEXT WEEK: WHEN A BIBLE KILLED A KING!

'Minister to ministers' named leader for local United Methodist Churches

By JOHN McMILLAN
Staff Writer

These days, most of the people baring their soul to the Rev. Lane Boyd are other clergymen.

Boyd, 45, a minister of the United Methodist Church since 1971, is the new superintendent of the eastern Panhandle district of the United Methodist Church denomination.

There are approximately 30 churches in the district, two of which are in Pampa — First United Methodist Church and St. Paul United Methodist Church. The district UMC office is located in Pampa at 109 N. Gillespie St., north of the First United Methodist Church.

The superintendent's position, which Boyd began in June, involves being a "pastor to the pastors," he noted succinctly.

"It's a refreshing new wrinkle," said Boyd, who served as pastor of the First United Methodist Church in Sweetwater for the last six years.

Boyd replaces the Rev. Jo Carr, who retired in June as district superintendent. Carr has moved to Lubbock, where she is pursuing writing and delivering speeches.

Pastor Kenneth Metzger of First United Methodist Church of Pampa noted that Boyd has had "a lot of pastoral experience, which should give him a good perspective on the local church."

Boyd, a native of the Panhandle who grew up in Dumas, has lived in this region of the state for approximately 25 years of his life. His previous religious service in the Panhandle includes a brief tenure during the summer of 1968 as youth director of First United Methodist Church of Pampa and four years as pastor of First United Methodist Church of Spearman.

Boyd's first ministerial appointment was as associate pastor of the Polk Street United Methodist Church in Amarillo. He received a Master of Divinity in 1973 from Duke University Divinity School in Durham, N.C.

As district superintendent, Boyd said he expects to hear clergymen confide about "frustrations or joys," or inquire about how to administer or minister to a church.

Among the major topics that a clergyman might discuss with Boyd are conflicts with a congregation based on differences in "expectations," Boyd noted.

A church's congregation's disappointments with a pastor's preaching might range from "it being dull and boring and use of poor grammar to too loud, too soft, (or) not Biblical enough...." Boyd said.

A pastor, on the other hand, might be disappointed by his congregation "if they are too apathetic, too non-supportive financially, too uncommitted to church," Boyd said.

Asked whether, based on ministers' confidential conversations with him, clergymen appear to sin less often than the laity and therefore have less to confess than the laity, Boyd declined comment. But he said he believes that most clergymen are more conscientious than their congregations.

"I think most pastors are very conscientious and concerned about their congregations," Boyd observed. "Pastors are different (from the laity) in that they are ... ordained ministers and they are set apart from other people in the church." Boyd added, however, that all the baptized Christians of the congregation are considered to be lay ministers.

Reminded that members of congregations in the eastern Panhandle could minister to their pastor by treating him to lunch after a Sunday service, Boyd replied, "If they want to, they can, and it would be nice, and it would surely be appreciated. But it's not a hard-fast expectation."

Boyd volunteered that during his six years as a pastor in Sweetwater, there were only four occasions when members of the congregation invited him to lunch after a Sunday service.

As district superintendent of the United Methodist Church, Boyd is expected to assist Bishop Alfred Norris of Albuquerque, N.M., in the appointment of clergymen and their reassignment from one church to another.

"You try to form a good marriage between the church and the pastor," Boyd said. "So you're kind of a matchmaker."

Reassignments, if any, are generally made every June, Boyd said, noting that the pastor-parish relations committee of each church can initiate the request for such a change of pastoral leadership.

Other responsibilities held by Boyd include offering support for the various missions of churches. In the fall, for instance, Boyd is expected to attend conferences held by each church in the district — conferences that generally are limited to officials of that church and the district superintendent, he said. The district superintendent presides over the annual election of church officers at such conferences, Boyd said. In addition to his responsibilities for the eastern Panhandle district as a whole, Boyd said he will occasionally officiate at funerals as a substitute for the pastors of the United Methodist churches in Pampa when those clergymen are out of town.

Boyd is assisted in his new position by his wife, Tamra Boyd, who is a part-time secretary for him. The couple have a son, Chris Boyd, a 1993 graduate of Sweetwater High School who plans to attend Southern Methodist University in the fall.

Tent revival scheduled to open at First Methodist

First United Methodist Church of Pampa will sponsor a tent revival at 7 p.m. Sunday through Thursday in the tent at Foster and Ballard streets. A breakfast Bible study is planned at 7 a.m. Monday through Thursday in the education building.

Youth activities will include noon and afternoon sessions and evening activities beginning with a snack supper at 5:30 p.m. on Monday, Wednesday and Thursday. Tues-

Breakfast offered at St. Mark CME

St. Mark Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, 406 Elm, has set 8-11 a.m. Saturday for its annual breakfast. The menu will include pancakes, eggs, bacon or sausage, toast, juice and coffee.

Men of the church will have noon taco sale on the same day. The public is invited.

Macedonia to serve barbecue dinners

Macedonia First Baptist Church, 441 Elm, plans to serve barbecue dinners beginning at 11 a.m. Saturday. The menu will be ribs and/or brisket, potato salad, beans and iced tea.

Pastor I.L. Patrick invites the public to come by to eat or phone in an order to 665-4926.

Gospel singing slated at First Pentecostal

The monthly gospel singing at First Pentecostal Holiness Church is set for 2-4 p.m. Sunday at 1700 Alcock.

The singing includes favorite gospel hymns sung by the congregation with a mixture of revival and convention songs, centering on "southern gospel."

The public is invited. The Rev. Albert Maggard is the pastor.

day's activities will begin at 4:30 p.m. and include the district UMY youth at the evening program and snack supper.

Children grades kindergarten through fifth will begin activities at 6:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday with a snack supper. The program is entitled KIDS Church.

Guest speaker for the revival is Charles A. Sineath Jr., pastor of First United Methodist Church in Marietta, Ga. Heath Whitehead, youth minister at Littlefield UMC, will lead the youth activities. Cynthia Carter Bedford, formerly of Pampa and now of Abilene, will lead the children's sessions. Music is to be directed by Jimmy Hubbard, choir director at FUMC.

The Rev. Sineath has led many revivals, evangelistic crusades and seminars throughout the southern United States. He attended Duke University and earned a bachelor of arts degree from Emory University and a master of divinity degree from Chandler School of Theology. He is recipient of the Denman Evangelism Award, Doctor of Divinity from Asbury College, and is a trustee at Asbury Theological Seminary. He and his wife are the parents of three and grandparents of three.

Whitehead is a graduate of Texas Tech in family studies. He has assisted with several youth programs and last year's revival at FUMC and directed camps for sixth and seventh graders at Ceta Canyon.

Bedford is the daughter of Weldon and Elizabeth Carter of Pampa. She graduated from Pampa High School and has a degree in music education from Hardin-Simmons University. She has directed several choirs at FUMC in Abilene and at McMurry University, and directs the middle school ministry team at FUMC Abilene. She and her husband have three children.

Hubbard, director of music at FUMC, graduated from Lambuth University, a UMC-related school in Tennessee. He moved to Pampa from Milan, Tenn., where he was director of music at Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Bible school on tap at Calvary Baptist

Vacation Bible school is set for 9:30 a.m. Saturday at Calvary Baptist Church, 900 E. 23rd Street.

Classes are set for ages four through fifth grade.

Fun activities include crafts, Bible stories, music and more. Free lunch and snow cones will be served. A drawing will be held for a t-shirt and cassette tape. "Tickets" for the drawing may be obtained by bringing a visitor, offering or one's Bible.

Those needing a ride may call Larry Morse at 669-7988.

Sex education goes to church

By DAVID BRIGGS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Is it ever too early to teach a child about sex?

The realities of the sexual abuse of children and a culture preoccupied with sex have led some religious groups to offer their own perspectives on sexuality to parishioners at increasingly earlier ages.

Now the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has decided even 3-, 4- and 5-year-olds should be taught "about the gift of their own sexuality."

Representatives of the 2.8 million-member church voted at the denomination's 205th General Assembly to develop a human sexuality curriculum for preschool children and parents.

"Most people agree that sexuality understanding starts early, and even though you may not act on it until you're much older ... some of that misinformation comes early and some of those feelings come early," said Kent Chrisman, associate for curriculum development for the church.

"We would start with a clear understanding that God made sex, that God created us as sexual," he said.

While controversies over the appropriate age to teach sex education have gradually wound their way down from high school to elementary schools, the idea of teaching sex education to preschoolers may seem jarring to some, particularly within a church setting.

But church leaders say it is needed in the United States today. In approving the development of a sexuality curriculum for preschoolers, assembly delegates said secular culture "has distorted the meaning and context of sexuality, and there is an overwhelming amount of sexual abuse in many forms, including sexual abuse of very young children."

Hudson named pastor of Bible Baptist Church

Pastor Bob Hudson of Shawnee, Okla., has been named new leader of the Bible Baptist Church and Pampa Christian School.

Hudson is a graduate of Pacific Coast Baptist College, Pasadena, Calif. He has worked as an associate pastor under two pastors, traveled as an evangelist for two years and pastored three churches, the most recent in Shawnee.

Hudson characterizes himself as "an old fashioned fundamentalist" and his theme verse is Luke 1:17.

Hudson and wife Marilyn are the parents of Philip, 21, Matthew, 20, Joseph, 14, Paul, 13, and Esther, 9.

Philip Hudson and Matthew Hudson are seniors at Oklahoma Baptist College, Oklahoma City. Both are preparing for the mission field. Philip has made three trips to Mexico and Matthew has returned from a month long survey trip to Russia.

The church is located at 500 E. Kingsmill. Service times are 9:45 a.m. Sunday School, 11 a.m. morning preaching, 6 p.m. evening preaching, and 7:30 p.m. Wednesday service. A nursery is provided.

A ride to the church may be obtained by calling 669-7830.

Miami First Baptist sets revival

The First Baptist Church of Miami, 114 E. Wichita, has set 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. Sunday through Wednesday for revival services.

Evangelist for the occasion is Jim Walsh, pastor of First Baptist Church in Waskom. He holds a master of theology degree and has spent 20 years in full time revival ministry. He has led 700 meetings.

The church in Waskom has added 300 new members in 2 1/2 years.

Leading music for the occasion are Paul and Christy Newberry of Dallas. He holds a bachelor's degree from Wayland Baptist University and a masters degree from Hardin-Simmons University. He has been involved in full time music evangelism since 1981. She is a native of Floydada and toured with the Continentals. She earned a degree from Hardin-Simmons University and did post-graduate work there also.

They have made three cassette recordings and participated in a variety of musical events for mission tours, camps, concerts and conventions.

Hymn and History

SHARE YOUR THOUGHTS

Sometimes we are reluctant to share our most personal thoughts and experiences with others. But, some things are just meant to be shared. Take, for instance, a thought Miles had.

Miles wrote: "One day in March, I was seated in a dark room, where I kept my photographic equipment and organ. I drew my Bible toward me; it opened at my favorite chapter, John 20, whether by chance or inspiration. That meeting of Jesus and Mary had lost none of its power and charm.

As I read it that day, I seemed to be part of the scene. I became a silent witness to that dramatic moment in Mary's life, when she knelt before her Lord and cried, "Rabboni!"

My hands were resting on my bible while I stared at the light blue wall. As the light faded, I seemed to be standing at the entrance of a garden, looking down a gently winding path, shaded by olive trees. A woman in white, with head bowed, hands clasping her throat, as if to choke back her sobs, walked slowly into the shadows. It was Mary. As she came to the tomb, on which she placed her hand, she bent over to look in, and hurried away.

John, in flowing robe, appeared, looking at the tomb; then came Peter, who entered the tomb, followed slowly by John.

As they departed, Mary reappeared and leaning her head on her arm at the tomb, she wept. Turning herself, she saw Jesus standing, and so did I. I knew it was He ... she knelt before Him, with arms outstretched and looking into His face cried: "Rabboni!!!"

I awakened in full light, gripping the Bible, with muscles tense and nerves vibrating. Under the inspiration of this vision, that same evening, I wrote a poem and set it to music.

The man, C. Austin Miles, shared his thoughts and gave the world one of its most famous hymns...

Senate OKs first female as Secretary of Air Force

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sheila Widnall awaits swearing in as secretary of the Air Force after becoming the first woman to win Senate confirmation to head a branch of the U.S. armed forces.

Widnall, confirmed by voice vote in the Senate on Thursday, is President Clinton's second service secretary — joining Navy Secretary John Dalton.

The administration, which has been faulted for its slow pace in filling top civilian jobs at the Pentagon, still has not nominated an Army secretary.

Widnall, 55, is an aeronautical engineer and associate provost at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. A graduate of MIT and a former professor there, Widnall has served on advisory committees to the Military Airlift Command and Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

Widnall easily dealt with a minor controversy at her confirmation hearing July 29.

In testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee, Widnall denied allegations that her husband's yacht club discriminates against Jews and other minorities.

Widnall said the Eastern Yacht Club in Marblehead, Mass., where her husband, William, has been a full member since 1984, does not have a discriminatory policy.

Members of the Anti-Defamation League in the Boston have complained that the club does not allow Jews as members. Commodore E. Paul Casey has denied the charge, saying the club has Jewish members.

Widnall is familiar with firsts, being the first MIT alumna appointed to the faculty in the School of Engineering, and the first woman to serve as chair of the entire MIT faculty. She held that post in 1979-1980.

Zena Stephens, Beaumont Police Department spokeswoman, holds a sample of the trading card of local police officers that will be handed out.

Beaumont police giving cop trading cards to kids

By SONJA GARZA
Beaumont Enterprise

BEAUMONT (AP) — The newest trading cards to hit the Beaumont market this month won't picture Major League stars on the front, or contain their batting averages and home run totals on the back.

Instead, the cards will feature photographs of local police officers on the front with their career histories and the Beaumont Police Department's emergency and non-emergency telephone numbers on the back. Officers will begin distributing the cards to local children — or even to adults who collect trading cards — sometime in August, Beaumont police Lt. Sid Smith said.

"It's a way to build a relationship with the kids," Smith said. "The main thing is to personalize the officers. That goes along with the Community Oriented Policing concept — to get to know the people you work for." It makes police a part of the community.

A total of 36 officers volunteered to have their pictures and personal information on the cards. BPD is printing 1,000 cards of each officer for the first edition, BPD spokeswoman Zena Stephens said.

"There was a lot of enthusiasm in the station. We had more volunteers than we needed," Smith said. "If they go over real well, we'll print more."

Police said the cards also serve to distribute information to the public and allow children to hold officers in admiration, like athletes, rather than see them as officials they should shun. The officers personalized their cards by including their hobbies and safety tips or inspirational messages.

Officers offer tidbits of advice on the cards, like "Stay in school and make a difference," "Education is the key to success" and "Get high on life, not drugs."

Sex crime detectives Joe Ball and Sgt. Bill Davis caution children to tell an adult if someone "touches" them in an inappropriate manner in their messages on the cards.

Some of the traffic officers offer the messages, "Drive slower and live longer," and "Buckle up for safety."

Traffic officer Robert LeBlanc's advice, "Watch your speed. I am!" might best apply to older "kids."

Patrol officers will distribute the free cards to children in neighborhoods. Residents also can get the collectors' cards at the Beaumont police station.

BPD spokeswoman Crystal Holmes said the department got the idea for the trading cards from the De Soto police, who distributed similar cards in Dallas County. Beaumont police hope their trading cards will be as successful as those in De Soto and other police departments in Texas, California and the Midwest.

"I think it's a great program. That's why I volunteered," patrol officer Anthony Barker said. "It's a good way to communicate with the community."

Crime Stoppers officer Billy Blankenship, who will be featured on a trading card, said he collected thousands of baseball cards as a youngster. "I had the only Mickey Mantle in Nederland at the time," Blankenship said.

Blankenship said he gave the card to a kid down the street after he got too old to play with the cards. He said the boy's mother threw the cards away when he got too old.

Traffic officer Carlton Manzer, who admits he still collects trading cards with his two sons, said the cop cards will help the public get to know their police officers.

Officer James Martin said the cards let residents know "that policemen are real people."

Flood survivors now have battle against red tape

By ROBERT DVORCHAK
AP National Writer

BLACK RIVER FALLS, Wis. (AP) — As rushing floodwaters recede, another sound echoes through the Midwest — grumblings about the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

The laments resemble those heard after Hurricanes Hugo and Andrew, the Loma Prieta earthquake and the Los Angeles riots: too much red tape, too much lag time, too much inflexibility in the system.

"I have a friend who told me too bad we're not Somalians. The government would help us then," said Sharon Melichar, whose home along the Black River suffered an estimated $26,000 in damage on June 20.

"We've never asked for anything. But they're just offering us loans. We need money. Eliminate this red tape."

On Wednesday night, the Senate approved $5.8 billion disaster relief legislation giving FEMA $2 billion to continue its direct aid to individuals and families.

FEMA Director James Lee Witt visited Black River Falls and other Midwest areas and promised to reduce bureaucratic obstacles.

Disaster application centers (DACs) were quickly opened so flood victims could begin filling out paperwork for temporary rent money and recovery loans, part of the government's generosity in a catastrophe.

"It sounds good," said Minard Smikrud, 73, whose house is uninhabitable. "We can get a loan at 4 percent, but we'd be paying till we die. Doggone it, I'm disgusted."

It's true that FEMA hustled to cut checks for temporary housing. But the demand for trailers, which FEMA provides, exceeds the supply as inspectors work to approve suitable sites.

Sen. Christopher S. Bond, R-Mo., said this week FEMA has "only 10 trailers positioned in Missouri to provide emergency housing." Residents in Alexandria, Mo., are staying at a campsite while waiting for mobile homes — nearly a month after being flooded out July 8.

"There is a perception that mobile homes happen overnight," said Neva Elliott, a FEMA worker in Earth City. "It's not realistic. People must go through the system."

Going through the system was a major frustration for Bill Moyer, public works director for Alton, Ill. He made an emergency plea for water pumps to get rid of water seeping in behind his community's levee. Sixteen days after his request, Alton was flooded and its water treatment plant knocked out.

"The bureaucracy cost us downtown Alton," Moyer said. "If we would have had the pumps we would have won this thing. The levee stood. The red tape beat us."

FEMA says it must follow the rules to document and verify damage before it shells out taxpayers' money. But flood victims say the government requires documents that often are destroyed, such as tax returns and bank statements.

Veterans of other disasters say the stories are all too familiar.

Katrina Ennis, whose Homestead Gas Co. in Florida was ravaged by Hurricane Andrew a year ago, received her first check from a Small Business Administration loan just last month.

'I have a friend who told me too bad we're not Somalians. The government would help us then.'
—Sharon Melichar

Her application grew to six inches thick. And despite yelling and screaming, she said help came only after The Miami Herald featured her in a May 17 story.

"They put you through more stress and anxiety," said Ennis, who has a sign on her desk that reads "I Survived Hurricane Andrew — But The Recovery Might Kill Me."

"You go through the most harrowing, life-threatening experience and then have to deal with government bureaucracy. They want you to jump through hoops. I couldn't walk, let alone jump," she said.

In Franklin, La., Mayor Sam Jones said a check for $47,500 arrived last month to pay for the balance of cleaning debris and fixing broken fences — all of which was caused a year ago by Hurricane Andrew.

He said the town's damage survey reports submitted to the state and FEMA "were just bounced back and forth like a tennis ball over the months."

The Louisiana community took a truckload of supplies to help its sister city of Franklin, Mo., located near the Missouri River. Jones cautioned officials on what to expect.

"We told them to document everything," Jones said. "Some of the stuff can drag on for some time. It's not an overnight process."

FEMA was created in 1979 to coordinate the response of 26 federal agencies to everything from floods to earthquakes to nuclear attacks.

Just last month, the General Accounting Office told Congress that FEMA is deficient in assessing damage, preparedness and having clear lines of communication.

"We have concluded that the nation's response strategy — particularly for devastating, catastrophic disasters — needs substantial, across-the-board improvement," said J. Dexter Peach, GAO's assistant comptroller general.

New 'jury' plans to retry Rosenberg atomic spy case

By LAURIE ASSEO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's 40 years since Julius and Ethel Rosenberg died in the electric chair, but a mock jury of ordinary citizens will consider again whether they plotted to give atomic bomb secrets to the Soviet Union.

Prosecutors and defense lawyers will restage the "espionage trial of the century" — updated to 1990s legal standards — at the American Bar Association's annual meeting that began Thursday in New York.

Actors will portray the New York couple who were electrocuted at Sing Sing prison on June 19, 1953, amid that decade's anti-communist tumult.

But ordinary citizens will sit in the jury box during the two-day mock trial starting Monday and try to reach a new verdict on whether the Rosenbergs were guilty of conspiring to spy.

"I'd love to see an acquittal, not that it would make any difference to them," said the Rosenbergs' elder son, Michael Meeropol, who was 10 when his parents were executed.

"It will be interesting to see how the various facts that have been brought out since then sit with a new, open-minded jury," he added.

Now a college economics professor in Massachusetts, Meeropol plans to attend the trial and join a panel discussion with members of the actual 1951 prosecution and defense teams.

The Rosenbergs, the last Americans executed for spying, were convicted of plotting to give the Soviets details of the secret U.S. program that will even take the stand in their own defense until he sees how the trial is going.

Prosecutors and defense lawyers will be allowed to use documents that have become available since 1951, including witnesses' statements to the FBI that could be used to attack their credibility.

Defendants now have legal protections they did not have in 1951. For example, prosecutors now could not point out that Mrs. Rosenberg pleaded the Fifth Amendment rather than tell a federal grand jury whether she had ever met admitted spy courier Harry Gold.

And U.S. District Judge Marvin E. Aspen, who will preside, won't try to recreate what many called Kaufman's extreme bias against the Rosenbergs. "I'm going to do what I think is appropriate in 1993," Aspen said.

Lawyers plan to recreate the two parts of a Jell-O box top that Gold and Greenglass supposedly matched together as an identification device.

But there will be high-tech touches too. Some exhibits will be shown on video, and the audience will see a computer tabulation of how panels of lawyers and ordinary people react to the testimony as it is being given.

The case will stop short of perhaps the most controversial issue — the death sentence and the Supreme Court's handling of the appeal. If the new jury votes to convict, Aspen will not be asked to impose sentence.

Naftalis says the defense's task is difficult even by 1993 standards, but he hopes to win.

"They were not atomic spies; that is a false charge," Naftalis said. "A fair-minded jury will agree with us."

State agencies sponsoring '93 Environmental Expo

HOUSTON — Thirteen state agencies with environmental programs have united to co-sponsor the 1993 Texas Environmental Expo and Festival, a full-scale exhibition, seminar and family attraction series. The umbrella sponsor is Keep Texas Beautiful Inc. (KTB), which has 320 affiliates statewide.

This two-day event will be held Oct. 15-16 at the George R. Brown Convention Center in Houston. The Expo will host more than 250 companies and organizations exhibiting to a diversified audience of business and community decision-makers.

The first day will include an expo and conference targeted toward the business sector. The same exhibits and a variety of family activities are scheduled the following day for the general public.

The 13 state agencies participating in the event include: Texas Water Commission, Texas General Land Office, Texas Railroad Commission, Texas Department of Agriculture, Texas Water Development Board, Texas General Services Commission, Texas Structural Pest Control Board, Texas Department of Transportation, Texas Department of Commerce, Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife, Texas Attorney General's Office, Texas Education Agency and the Texas Air Control Board.

Additionally, the United States Environmental Protection Agency will be a co-sponsor, along with professional associations, schools, corporations, and community groups.

More protests, arrests reported in Tibet

BEIJING (AP) — About 190 Tibetans have been arrested for protests against Chinese rule, the Dalai Lama's government-in-exile said Thursday.

The report from the organization in Dharamsala, India, was based on a source in Tibet who could not be independently confirmed.

The report did not break down all the arrests, but noted four anti-Chinese protests were held in June.

"This is the first time in the nation where the major environmental regulators are all working together," states Nancy Chancellor, Expo chair and KTB board member. "This event is designed to redefine who is interested in environmental issues, which includes all aspects of the private sector."

"Keep Texas Beautiful hopes that the 1993 Texas Environmental Expo and Festival will bring environment issues to the forefront and in doing so educate the corporate, public and private sectors," notes SueAnn Wade-Crouse, president of Keep Texas Beautiful Inc. "The event is designed to show environmentally applicable activities to business, industry and citizens."

Anticipated attendance will be 40,000. National-tier speakers will address both days' sessions, with a range of topics including beautification, recycling, private-public environmental partnerships and solid waste and proper hazardous waste disposal.

Corporate sponsors for this event include AT&T, Temple-Inland Forest Products Corporation, Panhandle Eastern Corporation, Kraft General Foods, Allwaste Inc., Safe Tire Disposal Corp., St. Joseph Hospital, KTRK-TV, KRBE Radio and The Houston Post.

Three of the protests occurred in rural areas, resulting in at least 14 arrests. In one case, about 1,000 peasants threw stones at police during a rally in support of the Dalai Lama, who Tibetans regard as their god-king.

The report also said two people, including a 12-year-old boy, were killed and 88 people injured during two days of rioting in the Tibetan capital of Lhasa in late May.
