Mrs. Hunter, born Sept. 1, 1893, ran a tamale stand at the Pampa railroad depot while her husband worked for the railroad, nursing home officials said. She has been at the nursing home since 1988. Her granddaughter, Emma Johnson, lives in Los Angeles, and her grandson, W. Foster Thompson, lives in Diamond Dale, Mich.

Miami ISD proposing 4 cent hike in tax rate

By JOHN McMILLAN
Staff Writer

MIAMI - Miami Independent School District taxpayers are facing the prospect of a property tax increase of 4 cents per $100 in property valuation.

Miami school board on Tuesday tentatively approved a property tax rate of $1.16 per $100 in property valuation for fiscal 1994, which began Sept. 1 - a proposed rate that compares with the current educational property tax rate in Miami school district of $1.124 per $100 in property valuation.

The current educational property tax rate is composed of 23 cents for the Miami ISD property tax rate and 89.4 cents for the County Education District. The CEDs of the state have been abolished as of Sept. 1.

Miami schools Superintendent Larry Dinsmore said Wednesday that the tax increase is needed because of the new state educational finance law. To comply with that law, Miami school district expects to send $1,039,005 to the state of Texas for reallocation to poorer school districts in the state.

The board has scheduled a public hearing on the proposed new property tax rate for 6:30 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 9. The board plans to formally adopt a new tax rate at its regularly scheduled board meeting that begins at 7:30 p.m. Monday, Sept. 13.

The operating budget for the fiscal year that began Sept. 1, which the Miami school board approved earlier this month, totals $1,535,649, Dinsmore said. The figure compares with the operating budget for the previous fiscal year of $1,515,598.

In other news on Tuesday, the Miami school board:

- Delayed taking action on a proposal to establish a University Interscholastic League baseball program for grades nine through 12 in Miami school district. Under the proposed program, the UIL baseball would be played on a baseball field about one-half mile north of Miami.

The tax increase is needed because of the new state educational finance law.

- Dinsmore

- Approved a change in the senior trip policy that would permit a Miami elementary school teacher to serve as senior class sponsor. The policy change will enable Kay Thompson, a fifth grade instructor, to serve as senior class sponsor for the graduating class of 1995 at Miami High. On Wednesday, that class - currently the junior class at Miami High - selected her as its sponsor.

- Requested that a contract be obtained from the Dallas law firm of Thompson and Knight that would specify the cost and other obligations involved for Miami school district if the district were to join several other school districts that have gone to court to challenge the constitutionality of the new educational finance system in Texas.

Among those school districts are Highland Park, Dallas, Grapevine, Coppell, Plano and Richardson, Dinsmore said.

The matter will be placed on the Miami school board's agenda for its Sept. 13 meeting, Dinsmore said.

County OKs new computer equipment for sheriff's office

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Lifestyles Editor

The Gray County Sheriff's Office will be up and running on a new computer system, thanks to the willingness of commissioners to allow a line-item transfer within the Sheriff's Office budget.

In Wednesday's afternoon session, commissioners unanimously authorized the agency to transfer $14,500 allocated to computer equipment rental to capital equipment purchase, permitting the Sheriff's Office to purchase $14,360 of hardware and software.

Commissioners authorized County Clerk Wanda Carter to purchase 80 refurbished voting booths at a cost of $85 each plus shipping, with Highland General Hospital funds.

The 1994 budget remains a continuing source of worry for county commissioners. Gray County Judge Carl Kennedy told commissioners that officeholders had reduced their 1994 budget requests to 1993 levels, with only a few exceptions.

At meeting time, the judge said he had not received a revised budget from the sheriff, constable Precinct 1 and district attorney, nor were some officeholder requests addressed in budgets presented.

The judge told commissioners that as budget figures now stood and in light of the anticipated revenue, a shortfall of $900,000 was expected.

Commissioner Jim Greene moved, and commissioners approved unanimously, longevity pay for eligible employees. Kennedy estimates that about 67 employees will earn about $60 each per year in longevity pay.

Commissioners again discussed housing out-of-county prisoners in Gray County Jail for a fee and various budget cuts or reductions. The group took no action to make changes for 1994, but looked at various line items in the general fund portion of the budget including allocations to Pampa Family Service Center, city of Pampa Fire Department, American Medical Transport, unemployment insurance, Lefors city marshal, workers' compensation insurance and predator animal control.

Priority in budgeting should be on health and safety issues, Ted Simmons told commissioners. In other action, commissioners:

- Approved a refund to Alanreed Independent School District from County Education District 14, subject to Donley County approval also.
 - Agreed to authorize the sheriff to release personal property to McLean Independent School District, subject to Donley County concurrence.
 - Approved the sale of delinquent tax property at 636 S. Somerville.
 - Reappointed Jackie Hamilton to Texas Panhandle Metal Health Authority.
 - Amended the budget of Precinct 4 to allow for the purchase of a mower.
 - Recognized County Treasurer Scott Hahn for completing 20 hours continuing education training with the V.G. Young Institute of County Government.
 - Authorized Kennedy to respond to a letter requesting permission for seismic testing.
 - Agreed to discuss county participation in Annual Determined Contribution Rate in later budget discussions.
- County commissioners plan to meet again at 9 a.m. Sept. 10 in the second floor courtroom of Gray County Courthouse for further budget discussions.

Grandview-Hopkins ISD lowers property tax rate

By JOHN McMILLAN
Staff Writer

Educational property taxes for property owners in the Grandview-Hopkins Independent School District are expected to plunge by about 17 cents for the fiscal year that began Wednesday.

Grandview-Hopkins school board on Tuesday tentatively approved a reduction in the educational property tax rate of that school district from $1.365 per $100 property valuation - 47.164 cents for the Grandview-Hopkins school district and 89.4 cents for the county education district - to $1.20 per $100 property valuation for this fiscal year.

"We feel very fortunate," said Norman W. Baxter, superintendent of Grandview-Hopkins school district. "... We're just glad our school is able to operate efficiently."

The Grandview-Hopkins board is expected to hold a public hearing at 7:30 a.m. Thursday, Sept. 9, in the school district's school cafeteria. The school trustees are expected to formally approve a new tax rate at their regularly scheduled meeting that begins 8 p.m. Sept. 14 in the school cafeteria.

Also on Tuesday, the board approved a total operating budget of $482,866 for the fiscal year that began Wednesday - an increase of $2,796 from the school district's operating budget of the last fiscal year.

An additional $344,610.95 is expected to be sent to the state through the purchase of weighted average daily attendance credits from the Texas Education Agency, Baxter said. The money will be sent to the state as a means of complying with the new state educational finance legislation designed to reduce the disparity between the rich districts and the poorer ones.

The new budget approved by Grandview-Hopkins school board reflects a cut of one teaching position and one part-time bus driving position, Baxter said.

As a result of the cut, there are three full-time instructors in the school district, teaching kindergarten through sixth grade. The total student enrollment in the Grandview-Hopkins school is 26.

Another reduction in the budget occurred when Kathy Davis, school district secretary, took over the bus-driving responsibilities vacated by the elimination of a bus driver's position, the superintendent said.

The school district also saved money because Senate Bill 7, the new state educational finance legislation, allows the Grandview-Hopkins district to count students who attend junior and senior high at neighboring school districts in the average daily attendance, for which Grandview-Hopkins ISD receives compensation from the state, Baxter said.

In other news on Tuesday, about 20 residents of the Grandview-Hopkins school district attended a community hearing after the board meeting concerning the budget and the Sept. 11 election. The election will be on whether to approve the option chosen by the school board for sending money to the state of Texas.

Businesses encouraged to report hazardous materials

By RANDAL K. MCGAVOCK
Staff Writer

Chemicals have become more prevalent today and are encountered by more emergency personnel than ever before.

To help them prepare for any situation, it's a good idea for businesses to report whatever chemicals they may have stored on their property in case of a fire or other emergency.

That's the message Ken Hall, the Pampa/Gray County emergency management coordinator, is trying to communicate.

As part of his efforts to monitor the use of hazardous chemicals in the city and county, Hall uses information provided to his office as required by the Superfund Amendment and Reauthorization Act (SARA) of 1986.

"It was established to help regulate and identify chemicals being stored throughout the United States," Hall said. "The most direct purpose it serves for local government is that it identifies those places that are storing chemicals (and) requires them to file a report to the feds through a state agency, the Texas Department of Health."

In a nutshell, SARA is in effect to protect not only personnel responding to an emergency but also to protect citizens whose lives might be threatened by fumes or an explosion.

One tool Hall's office uses to monitor hazardous chemicals in the area is a computer program called CAMEO. The program was provided by the National Safety Council and lists more than four thousand chemicals, according to Hall.

Information provided by CAMEO includes such things as the atomic weight of the compound, its flash-point temperature and symptoms a person might show if exposed to the material.

In addition, it also contains the alternative names of some chemicals, according to Hall.

"A specific type of chemical out there has a number of names," he said. "It may be called 'XYZ' (now) but originally it was put out as 'ABC' and they changed the name to meet manufacturing purposes or whatever. If we get a name for something, we can trace it back to its original compound and know exactly what it is. As (the program) was down-loading, I noticed that one chemical out of those four thousand has 149 different names."

To date this year in Pampa and Gray County, 82 companies have filed reports with the Community Awareness and Emergency Response Committee and the Local Emergency Planning Committee, the two organizations Hall oversees.

Both the LEPC and CAER conduct public meetings on the second Wednesday of each month to discuss emergency planning issues, which often deal with hazardous chemicals. According to Hall, these monthly meetings are an effort to help inform and educate not only the professionals but also the general public.

As for information on hazardous chemicals in Pampa and Gray County, Hall welcomes anyone who is interested in coming into his office and getting the information.

"People are reporting to us, but we want to get out and find out if there are more that need to be done," he said. "If people have any questions about what is being reported, anything about any type of incident, the information in my office is open to the citizens."

During three days next week, the CAER steering committee will be offering a hazardous materials training class. The classes will be held from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Wednesday and Thursday and from 8 a.m. to noon on Friday.

All three classes will cover the same material and are being offered at different times to help eliminate scheduling problems for those attending.

Pampa firefighters battle a blaze at a home on Hughes Street today. The morning fire drove a woman and her two small children from the smoke-filled residence at Hughes and Frederic about 8 a.m.

Early morning fire strikes house today

Four units and eight firefighters from the Pampa Fire Department responded to an early morning structure fire in southeast Pampa today.

At approximately 7:45 a.m., two deputies from the Gray County Sheriff's Office were stopped by a pedestrian near the intersection of Frederic Street and Hughes Street who advised them of a house on fire at 456 Hughes.

The deputies then contacted the sheriff's station, which in turn contacted central dispatch. Fire department vehicles and an ambulance went to the scene of the fire, according to the dispatcher at the sheriff's office.

The cause of the fire was attributed to children playing with a cigarette lighter, according to Battalion Chief Davie Turner.

No injuries were reported by the occupants of the house or members of the fire department.

Serious damage was apparently done to the bedroom and hallway of the house by the fire and smoke, according to Turner. In addition, damage was also done to the rest of the house by the thick smoke.

No damage estimates were available.

U.S., Russia sign space, energy accords

By NANCY BENAC
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and Russia signed agreements today promoting joint space exploration and energy development that Vice President Al Gore said will help onetime Cold War rivals "work together for their mutual benefit."

"It is time to leave behind the vestiges of the Cold War and reach for a new partnership between the United States and Russia," Gore said as he wrapped up two days of meetings with Russian Prime Minister Victor Chernomyrdin.

The leaders signed a series of agreements to promote cooperation on space and high-technology ventures. One gives Russia access to the international commercial space launch market and another sets out a plan for cooperation on human space flight.

Gore said the collaboration could lead to construction of an international space station that "will be significantly better than any of the options that we could orbit on our own."

"There is a natural fit between important components of the Russian program and the American program that allow our cooperative work to produce a superior station at lower costs," he said.

In addition, the two leaders signed joint statements on environmental monitoring and aeronautics that Gore said set "a broad strategy for cooperation and global environmental change as well as in the design of future aircraft." They also signed an agreement committing Russia to abide by missile export controls.

Other U.S. and Russian officials signed a series of energy-related agreements designed to promote development of Russian oil and gas resources. For example, one sets up a U.S.-Russian investment fund that Gore called "a model for the joint cooperation that we are trying to achieve."

"We will work very hard to expand our energy, trade and investment," Gore said. "We have agreed that each of our governments will name an ombudsman — one American and one Russian — who will work full time to identify and overcome obstacles to specific investment and trade projects."

The vice president said that after spending the Cold War years "pouring our resources into competition," the two nations now could work together "to husband our limited resources and work together for our mutual benefit."

Chernomyrdin also meeting today with President Clinton, with the talk expected to turn to broader political and foreign policy matters.

Gore and Chernomyrdin lead a joint U.S.-Russian commission created in April to explore trade and investment opportunities and cooperation in space and energy. The two agreed Wednesday to meet two or three times a year, and Gore accepted an invitation to visit Russia later this year.

Chernomyrdin and other top officials from both countries held intensive and detailed discussions Wednesday on ways to open Russia's oil and gas markets to more U.S. investment.

Executives of U.S. firms that do business with Russia participated in one session and laid out in straightforward terms the stumbling blocks to investment in Russia, said an administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity. U.S. officials gave the Russians a list of $4 billion in energy contracts with American firms that had not been finalized because of obstacles in the Russian system.

"There is business being done," the official said. "What we haven't seen are some of the large contracts. ... That's where we'd like to see some movement in the next couple of months."

"The Russians have to develop a system ... to make trade rational" in areas such as property rights, taxation and contract law, the official said. "The Russians acknowledged they do not yet have a system."

The official said the Russians agreed there were significant barriers to trade on their part, but they also pointed to obstacles on the American side.

"Obviously the United States believes that the most significant barriers are on the Russian side but the Russians expressed to us their belief that there are also some barriers on our side," the official said.

In particular, the Russians pointed to a 1974 law that barred the Soviet Union from receiving most-favored nation trade status unless it moved toward free emigration. Since 1989, the Soviet Union and its successor states have been given one-year waivers granting the lower tariff status based on the sharp rise in the numbers of Jews allowed to emigrate.

The official said the United States still was not ready to "graduate" Russia completely out of the so-called Jackson-Vanik restrictions.

"There are still some problems with refuseniks," the official said. At the Tokyo summit in July, Russian officials were presented with a list of 65 refuseniks who have been barred from emigrating, most of them Jews and evangelical Christians.

White House scales back savings under Gore plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is not sure yet how much will be saved if its plan to "reinvent government" is implemented, but aides are pretty sure an initial estimate of $70 billion to $90 billion is too high.

That figure was circulated as late as Tuesday among Cabinet secretaries, high-ranking administration officials and legislators. Number-crunchers doing standard reviews determined that the figure needed to be scaled back, according to a White House official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

An administration official outside the White House, who also spoke on condition that he not be identified, said the initial figure was greeted with skepticism when it was circulated privately by President Clinton's staff. "It was pretty pie-in-the-sky stuff," he said.

It was not known Wednesday what the savings would be, and the estimate could change several times between now and when the plan is released Tuesday, said the White House official said.

Clinton ordered Vice President Al Gore in March to conduct a six-month study of the federal government.

The plan, called the National Performance Review, will culminate Tuesday with the release of a nearly 200-page report that will include 800 recommendations to reshape the federal bureaucracy.

Details of the report have been leaked to the press, but Gore has kept the estimate of savings a secret.

Although it's being revised, the $70 billion to $90 billion figure gives an idea of how big a reform package Gore thinks he has developed.

Tuesday's announcement will mark the end of the study, but the beginning of the White House's effort to promote the package.

Surprising some White House staff members, Clinton agreed to travel at least two days next week as part of an aggressive week-long plan to sell the recommendations.

The White House also will blitz local media outlets, a strategy that worked in the budget fight.

The sales job comes as the White House also is gearing up efforts to promote a three-country trade pact and the president's yet-to-be announced health care plan. Some aides had hoped Clinton would stay home next week to work on the projects.

Gore's program took on increased importance with Clinton after the president won key votes in his budget by promising more budget cuts in the fall.

No winning ticket sold for Wednesday Lotto

By The Associated Press

No tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Wednesday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The jackpot will grow from $16 million to $25 million.

The numbers drawn Wednesday night from a field of 50 were: 3, 27, 32, 40, 41 and 46.

There were 150 tickets sold with five of the six numbers, with each ticket worth $2,111. There were 8,596 tickets with four of six numbers, with each winning $133. And there were 180,240 tickets sold with three of six numbers, with each worth an automatic $3.

Lottery officials estimate the jackpot for Saturday night's game will be $25 million.

Sales from Saturday to Wednesday's draw were $12.8 million.

Oswald's brother questions Nixon story

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — The brother of Lee Harvey Oswald says he has never placed much credence in a report, which got national circulation in the past week, that Marina Oswald locked her husband in the bathroom during a visit to Dallas by Richard Nixon.

"There's a lot of questions" about whether the incident ever occurred," Robert Oswald told the Wichita Falls Record-News. Robert Oswald lives in Wichita Falls.

This week's issue of Time magazine published a FBI document repeating a claim by Oswald's widow that reportedly occurred during a visit to Dallas by Nixon, who lost the 1960 presidential election to John F. Kennedy.

The document, which was among Kennedy assassination papers released recently by the National Archives, said Oswald's wife and brother were aware of the incident.

Robert Oswald confirmed to the Record-News that Marina Oswald told him of the incident. He said if it happened, it would have occurred in 1963.

The FBI document dated February

1964 said Robert Oswald's attorney, William A. McKenzie, described the incident in response to a query from the FBI.

The agents questioned McKenzie while continuing the investigation into President Kennedy's assassination at Dallas in November 1963.

"McKenzie ... said that Marina Oswald had briefly mentioned to him this incident," the FBI document said.

"He said Marina had told him that she had locked Oswald in the bathroom on one occasion when Richard Nixon came to Dallas. She kept him in the bathroom all day long."

"McKenzie was not sure of the details of the incident," the document said. "He did not know the date nor in what house the bathroom was located nor any other details than those given."

"McKenzie said Marina had also told Robert Oswald about this Nixon incident," the document said.

The document noted that the FBI's discussion with McKenzie occurred before a trip to Washington by McKenzie and Robert Oswald to appear before the Warren Commission, which conducted the official investigation into the Kennedy assassination.

The FBI suggested to McKenzie that "it was important to discuss" the Nixon incident with Oswald's wife, but McKenzie said Marina Oswald was "extremely fatigued and did not desire to be further interviewed on this date."

The FBI document did not suggest when the Nixon visit to Dallas might have occurred.

But Robert Oswald said Wednesday from his home in Wichita Falls that "supposedly that incident occurred in 1963. ... Basically, there's a lot of questions about whether that reported incident from his wife ever occurred."

Nixon lost the California governor's race in 1962 after losing the presidential election to Kennedy in 1960. In June 1963, he joined a prominent New York law firm and remained well-known as a Republican leader who spoke out on national issues.

Robert Oswald said the incident could not have occurred before 1962.

Gov. Ann Richards poses for a picture for her motorcycle license which she received Wednesday on her 60th birthday.

Richards celebrates 60 with motorcycle license

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards got her 60th birthday wish: a motorcycle license.

But she's going to wait to use it. "I'm not going to be riding around town in traffic. I want to go out in the country. I want to ride around on the back roads," she said Wednesday.

When she's ready to hit the road, she'll have some accessories provided by Vice President Al Gore. He sent her birthday gifts of black leather riding gloves and sunglasses.

Richards' birthday celebration also included a "Happy Birthday" serenade from about 1,800 state employees, and cake with her staff.

Last year, the governor casually mentioned that she would like to get her motorcycle license by her 60th birthday.

A short time later, Harley-Davidson presented her with a pearl white cycle decorated with the Texas flag. To keep from violating ethics laws, she gave the bike to the Department of Public Safety.

But she and her press secretary, Bill Cryer, took motorcycle driving lessons this summer from the DPS.

"There's something about turning that throttle up, turning your head and watching that machine go with you," she said. "You feel as if the machine itself is a sort of extension of you."

Earlier this week, she and Cryer passed the written examination. Richards said she plans to complete her DPS safety training when it gets cooler.

Richards waited in line for about 10 minutes to get her license at a DPS driver's license building in north Austin.

Earlier, Richards was serenaded by state employees attending an assembly of the new environmental agency formed by the merger of the Texas Water Commission and Texas Air Control Board.

After getting her motorcycle license, Richards said, "It's a silly thing to set a goal like getting your motorcycle license, but it really is something I've always wanted to do. It seemed totally appropriate in the sort of old-dog-new-tricks mode. It says to anyone that if you want to do it you can do it even when you're 60 years old."

State prison director resigns

HOUSTON (AP) — James Lynaugh, the embattled head of the Texas prison system will step down this month to pursue other interests, officials say.

After six years at the helm as executive director, Lynaugh, 53 has decided to call it quits.

"He has not submitted a formal resignation to the board, but he has indicated to me he plans to submit his resignation to the board in September," Allan B. Polunsky, the board's secretary-treasurer, said.

The board's next formal meeting is Sept. 17 on South Padre Island.

Lynaugh, who took over the prison system during the Republican administration of then-Gov. Bill Clements, had seen his support on the Texas Board of Criminal Justice erode as GOP appointees were succeeded by Democrats named by Gov. Ann Richards.

Lynaugh had no immediate comment, but Texas Department of Criminal Justice spokesman David Nunnelee in Huntsville said the prison chief, who is paid $94,400 annually, would be taking a job with the University of Texas Medical Branch as head of its fiscal department for criminal justice managed health care.

His resignation likely will be effective in mid October.

"He probably has burned himself out with all of the controversy that has been revolving around this position," Polunsky said. "Under the best of conditions, this is not an easy job."

In July, the board, after a two-hour closed-door meeting, set aside a motion to fire Lynaugh. Chairman Carol Vance said at the time that Lynaugh had been offered a demotion so he could retain his retirement benefits.

Vance also said he had enough votes on the board to oust Lynaugh. Lynaugh emerged from the July session saying the board had some concerns and that he had addressed them, although neither he nor Vance would elaborate.

Contacted Wednesday, Vance said Lynaugh's decision came as a shock.

"It was a surprise to me and certainly did not come as a result of anything connected with the board," Vance said. "After our last meeting in July, I think the board and Jim Lynaugh were enjoying a good relationship and he was doing a good job. I'm sad to see him leave."

Imperial Beach: A town awash in Mexican sewage

By BRIGITTE GREENBERG
 Associated Press Writer

IMPERIAL BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Imperial Beach has sun, surf and shops — all the makings of a hopping Southern California tourist town. But it also has something that's keeping visitors away: Raw sewage lapping at its shores.

With the exception of a few days when health officials have deemed bacteria levels low enough for safety, people haven't been able to swim in this border community for more than a year because of the sewage from Mexico.

"We're on the bottom end of everyone's toilet," said Mayor Michael Bixler.

Imperial Beach, with a year-round population of 26,500, is San Diego's southernmost suburb. The skyline of Tijuana, Mexico, can be seen in the distance to the south. But Tijuana's sewage can be seen and smelled close up.

Local officials say the problem is simple: Tijuana needs to build a modern sewage system. The United States and Mexico agreed in 1990 to build a plant in San Ysidro, Calif. The International Boundary and Water Commission said the plant — now in the design stage — could be running by 1998. That's not soon enough for Rep. Bob Filner, D-Calif., who wants it running by 1996.

City officials say pleas for help have gone unheeded on both sides of the border for years. Their latest hope may be the proposed North American Free Trade Agreement, or rather the opportunity to hold it up with their complaints.

"One way or the other," the mayor said, "the Mexicans have to be given the means to process the sewage of their own creation."

Tijuana Mayor Hector Osuna Jaime acknowledged that his city's population and water supply have outstripped its sewage infrastructure in the past decade.

But he said the Mexican government has not given him the money to do anything about it, leaving sewage to flow mostly into the Tijuana River. The river flows into the Pacific Ocean just north of the U.S. border.

A spokesman for the Mexican Embassy in Washington said Wednesday that officials dealing with the issue were unavailable for comment.

Filner estimated more than 15 million gallons of sewage flow toward Imperial Beach each day through the Tijuana River and other conduits.

That's in addition to 13 million gallons accepted by San Diego each day through a pipeline for treatment at its plant. The sewage is treated, at San Diego taxpayers' expense, at a cost expected to reach $2.5 million this year.

As for Imperial Beach, the mayor recites the jokes often told about his community, such as, "Imperial Beach: home of unidentifiable floating objects." Other witticisms are not fit for print.

Orange signs warn of danger on the white, sandy beaches, and lifeguards try to keep people from venturing into the water.

Lifeguards say they and diehard surfers have experienced nausea and respiratory, ear and eye infections after swimming. Lifeguards exposed to the water must receive gamma globulin shots afterward to ward off diseases such as typhoid, hepatitis, cholera and dysentery.

Gary Stephany, acting director of county health services, said his agency has no tally of how many people have become ill from exposure to sewage.

"It's terrible, and it's dangerous," said Genie Juarez, 42, as she sat on the hot beach, gazing longingly at the water. "We should be able to swim here."

Black attorney finds no problem representing Klan, NAACP

GALVESTON (AP) — When Ku Klux Klan leader Michael Lowe entered Anthony Griffin's law office, he had no idea his new attorney was not only a black man, but also an attorney for the NAACP.

"My girlfriend and I were in his waiting room and got kind of bored, so we started snooping around and we looked and saw a NAACP pin," said Lowe, grand dragon of the Knights of the KKK Realm of Texas in Waco. "And we looked some more and saw he had this bookcase of African-American history and we kind of looked at each other and said 'No, he can't be black.'"

But Griffin is, and it's his race that has him in hot water, not with the Klan, but with Texas NAACP leaders. So far, Griffin is weathering the storm.

"I don't like the Klan," said Griffin, a 38-year-old University of Houston-trained lawyer. "But if I don't stand up and defend the Klan's right to free speech, my right to free speech will be gone."

Griffin is defending Lowe's right to keep his membership list, financial records and other documents from Texas Attorney General Dan Morales. The state has accused Lowe of using threats and intimidation to thwart the court-ordered desegregation of public housing in East Texas, particularly in Vidor, where the city's only remaining black residents moved away this week, frightened by too many instances of harassment. And Morales' office wants that list.

"If you shut up Billy Graham, you shut up Farakhan," Griffin said. "That is a hard issue."

Griffin, who has done legal work for the NAACP, was contacted by the Texas Civil Liberties Union to represent Lowe, who did not know Griffin was black. There was no arm twisting. Griffin took the case almost immediately.

"I said, 'No problem.' Once the facts were explained to me I considered it a honor," said Griffin. "It is any time you have an opportunity to defend the Bill of Rights."

Gary Bledsoe doesn't see it that way. The assistant state attorney and Texas NAACP leader has referred the matter to the national NAACP. There, he's hoping for some guidance on whether Griffin should be removed as a pro-bono attorney on the NAACP rolls.

"We think it's inconsistent that someone has an association with them and with us," said Bledsoe. Earlier this month, some members of the Texas State Conference of NAACP Branches demanded that Griffin resign as general counsel.

But Griffin refused and the state NAACP has asked the national NAACP to advise them whether Griffin should be ousted.

Bledsoe said that to represent the two diametrically opposed groups sends a contradictory message. He also said Griffin is wrong to believe that once the Klan's list is surrendered, the state could ask the same of the NAACP.

"The Klan is a terrorist organization that has had rallies in Vidor," Bledsoe explained. "Any principal that comes out of this case, that would lead to the government obtaining the list on behalf of the Klan, could not be turned around on the NAACP and other private association."

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all his possessions can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Income tax's ban is not guaranteed

Texas voters will go to the polls on Nov. 2 and will almost certainly drive a nail in the coffin of any possible state income tax. Or at least so they think. True, the proposed constitutional amendment, one of 15 to be on the ballot, does provide that no state income tax can be enacted without a vote of the people. Nor, the amendment provides, could the rate of any such tax, if adopted, ever be raised without voter approval.

All well and good, but the next provision sort of lets the cat out of the bag. It states should an income tax be approved by voters, two-thirds of the money would be dedicated to reducing local school property taxes and the other one-third would go to education.

Ah ha. If this were a simple income tax prohibition, why the specifics on how revenues from a banned tax should be spent? The amendment was the brainchild of Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, a wily, astute politician. Our guess is that Bullock could see the handwriting on the wall as this past session neared an end. He must have been aware that the frantic, last-minute adoption of a school finance plan did little more than buy the state yet some more time to try and meet equalization mandates of Edgewood v. Kirby.

One of the major roadblocks to finding a satisfactory school financing plan is the reliance by the state on property owners to furnish about half the funds. This is where the inequities lie. Property is not evenly distributed across the state, thus enabling some districts to raise more money, even though in many cases their tax rates are lower than in other districts.

So, back to the income tax Bullock has waiting in the wings — or at least he will have voters adopt the amendment in November. And why shouldn't it pass? Most Texans hate the idea of an income tax and will likely back an amendment promising them the final say on whether such a tax is ever initiated. State legislators have long avoided the appearance they might favorably consider a state income tax like the plague, but they probably wouldn't object to the idea of passing the buck and letting voters themselves decide.

Sources of additional school revenue are limited. Lottery proceeds actually are only a drop in the bucket, and apparently the courts are not going to let the state continue to rely on unfair property taxes as the primary source of school funding. So that leaves either a large sales tax increase (not desirable since Texas already has one of the highest sales tax rates in the nation); a statewide property tax, which also would require a constitutional amendment; a regressive broad-based business tax; or a dreaded income tax.

It's pretty obvious that Bullock expects voters to adopt the sales tax amendment. After all, why shouldn't they favor a constitutional barrier to an income tax unless such a levy wins voter approval? When it comes to picking the taxpayers' pockets — at national, state, county or local levels — there's no painless or popular way to do it. But whatever revenue-raising system is selected, it should have some semblance of fairness. And obviously that's what's long been lacking with property taxes. And that's what Bullock hopes voters will see, perhaps in future years, and thus eventually pass what he has long wanted — a state income tax.

Berry's World

Spending more, getting less

Editor's Note: Stephen Chapman is on vacation. The following column was originally published in May 1991.

While you weren't looking, your government set up an elaborate and expensive welfare program dedicated in large part to locating, feeding, clothing and housing drug users and dealers, who are supported by the sweat of your brow, with your tax payments. This program is known as the criminal justice system.

Americans have a peculiar obsession with drugs, an obsession manifested by an uncontrollable urge to put people behind bars, preferably for a long time. This is a mistake, mainly because it treats as a crime something that for approved drugs (tobacco and alcohol) is wisely left to individual choice.

Most Americans, however, don't weep when they hear that crack heads are being deprived of their liberties. They might shed tears if they were aware of two inescapable side effects of the drug war: It diverts law enforcement from other, more dangerous crimes, and it consumes huge amounts of money. Increasingly, the attention of our police, courts and prisons is monopolized by drug offenders, a burden that is growing faster than our ability to cope with it or pay for it.

The trends in Illinois mirror those of the nation as a whole. In Chicago, where police have never been underemployed, the demands of the drug war are escalating rapidly. Arrests for drug offenses have doubled in the last five years, and they are expected to double again by the end of the decade. Although police have been devoting more attention to dealers than before, 87 percent of the arrests are for mere possession. Most ludicrous of all, some 40 percent of the arrests involve a drug less dangerous than the legal ones: marijuana.

Stephen Chapman

What police do inevitably affects what prosecutors and judges do. In the Cook County (Chicago) courts, the number of drug prosecutions doubled between 1986 and 1988 and has continued soaring upward toward the stratosphere. They now make up more than half of all felony cases. Despite the addition of a dozen extra judges since 1985, the average judge lies buried under a caseload that has grown by 50 percent.

Thanks to an enthusiastically punitive mood in the state legislature, the luckless defendants are more likely than ever to go to prison, and for longer stretches. Between 1985 and 1989, the number of people sent to Illinois prisons each year for drug crimes tripled, and it is expected to triple again by 1993. The average sentence has also grown substantially.

The most obvious drawback of catching and punishing all these druggies is that we have to find someplace to put them. The prisons and jails are almost literally overflowing with felonious bodies, which, despite the preferences of the Edwin Meese school of penology, may not be simply crammed into dungeons and fed minuscule rations of bread and water.

Due to an inconvenient provision of the U.S. Constitution prohibiting cruel and unusual punishment, they have to be provided with a certain minimum amount of space, food, medical care and exercise, all of which cost money, and all of which are increasing hard to come by.

A chronic and severe lack of vacancies in the Cook County jail has made it routine for many suspects to be released without having to post bail. State prisons are filled nearly 40 percent beyond their supposed capacity, while the number of new inmates keeps rising faster than John Sununu's travel bill.

To devote more police to drug violations, you have to either take police away from other crimes, which allows other types of criminals to operate without hindrance, or hire more police, which swallows gigantic sums of cash. Adding just one patrolman in each Chicago precinct would cost local taxpayers at least $100 million a year.

The task of housing prisoners is the functional equivalent of a 24-hour money disposal. It costs Illinois about $16,000 per year per inmate, or more than the tuition at an Ivy League college.

That doesn't count the cost of building all the new prisons you need to accommodate the flood of new convicts. These days, you can't erect a new 950-bed medium security facility for less than $50 million. Given current trends, Illinois will need at least three of those in the next four years just for all the extra drug offenders it will accumulate.

All this expense might conceivably be defended if it were achieving anything. But despite one offensive after another, the drug warriors haven't been able to diminish the ubiquitous availability of illicit substances. We're spending more and more for less and less, and we seem determined to continue until we are spending everything for nothing.

Today in history

By The Associated Press
Today is Thursday, Sept. 2, the 245th day of 1993. There are 120 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
On Sept. 2, 1945, Tokyo time, Japan formally surrendered to the Allies in ceremonies aboard the U.S.S. Missouri. World War II was over, six years and one day after it began.

On this date:
In 1666, the Great Fire of London broke out, destroying thousands of homes, but killing only a few people, in the several days that it burned.

In 1789, the U.S. Treasury Department was established.

In 1864, during the Civil War, Union Gen. William T. Sherman's forces occupied Atlanta, one day after the Confederates had retreated.

In 1901, Vice President Theodore Roosevelt offered the advice, "Speak softly and carry a big stick," in a speech at the Minnesota State Fair.

Lost art of showing respect

A close friend's mother died last week after a long illness. They had the funeral in Newman, 35 miles southwest of Atlanta, where my friend and I had gone to high school together 30 years ago. Two ministers spoke. Both said what a wonderful lady my friend's mother had been and what a good life she had lived and that she was in a better place now.

Somebody played "How Great Thou Art" in a piano and there were a lot of remarks about how pretty all the flowers were.

I thought about all the months my friend had sat by her mother's side in a hospital room, day and night, and how different her life will be now.

Like me, she's an only child and divorced. You just get on with it. There's no other choice.

For the graveside service, we took my friend's mother down a two-lane road to the little town of Whitesburg, Ga., where she had lived.

The procession pulled out of the funeral home in Newman with a police escort.

At every intersection an officer had stopped traffic. At every intersection, an officer stood at attention, hat over heart. We left Newman and drove out into the country. Each oncoming car pulled off to the shoulder of the road until the procession had passed it. There was not one exception.

They still do that down here, I was thinking to myself.

They always did that when I was a child, but I assumed that practice had long ago disappeared.

Lewis Grizzard

Back in Atlanta, I mentioned what I had seen to a group of friends.

One, a native New Yorker, said, "I'd never seen that until I moved south. I've even seen cars pull over on the other side of a four-lane for a funeral. What's that about?"

How do you answer such a question? I pondered it for a moment, answering it for myself first.

And then I said, "Respect."

That's what it is, isn't it? You meet a funeral procession and you pull over to the side of the road is a way of saying you respect the fact that someone has died, someone has lost a mother or father or husband or wife or brother or sister or friend.

To drive on past without such acknowledgment would say you just didn't care.

These days, I guess such respect is confined to rural areas. Meet a funeral procession in a city like Atlanta and pull over to the side of the road and somebody would run over you, and you probably would get a ticket for creating some sort of traffic hazard.

But there is still time and room for such respect in the Newmans and other such towns and villages. Bless them for that.

Respect for others was something I guess I took for granted and thought would endure no matter what else might be modernized or cosmopolitanized, if there is such a word. But it hasn't.

Respect for parents. I was reading where there has been something like four instances in metro Atlanta this year where children have either killed or tried to kill their parents for disciplining them.

Respect for teachers. Cops routinely patrol school halls these days.

Respect for any kind of authority seems to be rare.

Respect for human life is even dissolving. They'll shoot you for your tennis shoes. Michael Jordan's father was asleep on the side of the road. A couple of punks killed him, it seems for sport.

I don't know how you reinstate something like respect. When somebody tries to reinstate the basic values that are the thread of society, scorn is the loudest reaction.

My only hope is that there will remain pockets, at least, where dear hearts and good people continue to outnumber the drags.

There is one in Coweta County, Ga. I saw it last week with my own eyes. It made me proud I was once in its number.

What Vincent Foster's death means

A suicide profoundly changes the lives of those left behind and teaches them things they'd sooner not learn. The public suicide of the president's boyhood friend who became the deputy White House counsel can teach us all something, if we're willing to listen.

Vincent Foster was obviously a man in fragile emotional health, even though his brittle shell might not have cracked had he stayed out of Washington. The despair that wishes for the relief of death can build over time, and the factors that contribute are numerous and complex. That Foster came to the end he did cannot be blamed on all the sources he accused in the note found torn to pieces in his briefcase, as much as he may have wanted it.

Foster blamed the FBI, the Republicans, the Washington political establishment and the press. In his mind, they formed a whole to which "ruining people is considered sport." Yet legions who came before him have endured the same treatment and have not broken — or at least, have not broken in public. Crocodile skin is a requisite for life inside the Beltway, and the hearty grow it and live.

Among other things, Foster accused the FBI and the Republicans of lying and of contributing to the appearance that he and other Clinton cohorts had acted improperly. If his complaints are true, Foster is certainly numbered among some of the greatest company on Earth.

Yet Foster's case has much to say to those who so relish the rough sport in Washington, as well as to those of us in the press, the last category he castigated. Foster made it clear that he was brokenhearted at the way he had been portrayed by the media. He believed that he had helped earn a press whipping for his longtime friends, Bill and Hillary Clinton. For each of us who has had the privilege of investigating facts and reporting them, Foster's words ring powerfully: "The ... editors lie without consequence."

Do I believe that editors lie? No, not intentionally. Do I believe they sometimes ignore the nagging question that pops into their heads when they view incomplete copy, when too many questions might ruin a great story or even weaken an alliterative or witty TV news teaser? Do I believe that an editorial writer sometimes looks at a reporter's conclusions and writes a scathing editorial without knowing whether those facts are thoroughly researched and verifiable? Without a doubt, I do. Are there consequences to the journalists? Rarely.

One of the most poignant punctuations to the Foster suicide was the response by The Wall Street Journal's editor, Robert L. Bartley. He answered Foster's allegations that the newspaper had treated him unfairly without knowing all the facts. "There is no way to cover national government on the assumption that a high official and steeled litigator secretly suffers from depression and may commit suicide," Bartley said. "What we said about Mr. Foster was nothing compared to the abuse we heaped on the likes of Ed Meese, Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas."

Abuse? Is that what the Fourth Estate is supposed to be "heaping" on the "likes" of Ed Meese, Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas? Is that my job?

I don't think so. I can't say I've never pondered to what I perceived as the public's thirst for the "phrase well turned," nor let my sense of fairness be overruled by my wish to entertain or incite the reader. That's what journalists sometimes believe they must do to stay on the editorial page. But I'm not proud of it. Those were times I missed the mark, in my estimation.

We tell ourselves that politics is a rough game, and anyone who can't stand the glare of the cameras and heat of the pen should stay out of the kitchen. Vincent Foster's suicide stands as a reminder that the heat of that kitchen can kill those who might otherwise live long and productively in a more temperate climate.

Literacy Month celebrated in September

Making sense of a written world is the daily struggle of 27 million functionally illiterate Americans. As kids return to school this September, we also recognize Literacy Month, and on September 8, International Literacy Day.

But it's not only kids who learn. Mel and Angela are learners who, having slipped through the cracks in the school system as children, are becoming literate as adults.

Now in his fifties, Mel hid his illiteracy from his four children.

"Kids are curious and always asking, 'What's that?'" he says. "I would end up trying not to be around them, I'd make excuses. When they asked questions, I would get nervous and upset because I didn't know."

After six months of one-on-one tutoring, Mel can now use a checkbook for the first time and reads billboards as practice.

"I would love to read a newspaper, a magazine, street signs, a book," he says. "If you can't read, your whole life is spent trying to hide it. You can't fill out the application to get a job, but you have to support yourself, so you take things you normally wouldn't take in order to stay in the job you have. When I'm asked to write, I'm worse than a person with a gun held to his head, I'm so nervous. There were things I've wanted — say winning a trip to Hawaii — but I couldn't fill out the form. I'm ashamed of it."

School, which he left in seventh grade, was not appealing to him.

"I was shy at first, but the teachers didn't help," he said. "They said I was a dummy and was not going to accomplish anything. It made me learn to hate school."

Reflecting on his experience, Mel added, "What would have helped me in school? Extra tutoring, one-on-one help from someone who cares. You got to take time with some kids. Show the students you care and they will respond."

Angela, age 33, is a mother of two who grew up in foster care and graduated from high school despite being unable to read — a fact that many people would not believe because she was pretty, artistically talented, and outgoing. Two years ago, she visited the Literacy Volunteers of America for tutoring. After years of being afraid to speak, she now describes herself as "brave" and confident enough to want to start her own business.

Literacy Volunteers of America is based in Washington D.C. and can be reached by calling (202) 387-1772 or by writing the organization at 1625 L. Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

"My tutor lets me read things I always wanted to read. In school, it broke my heart when the 'A' students could read Shakespeare and do plays, but those of us in the lower-level classes couldn't — and we got no appreciation awards. We had great memories and could have done well with plays, but we were always pushed back."

"Learning to read has made me feel a lot better about myself. I know I've made the effort and when I look back I see the difference. I had a disadvantage. Now I know that if I try hard on whatever I want to do, it can happen. Reading is a blessing."

Wednesday is National Literacy Day

Wednesday, Sept. 8, has been proclaimed National Literacy Day. Its purpose is to draw attention to the fact that one-third of American adults are functionally illiterate.

According to the Texas Adult Literacy Laubach (TALL), a statewide literacy network of 58 affiliates, illiteracy is the root cause of many of society's problems. Solving the illiteracy problem would lower the incidence of crime, joblessness, and accidents.

Among the most striking statistics relating to illiteracy in Texas:

- Only three other states have a higher number of illiterate adults.

- More than 3.3 million Texan adults are unable to fill out a job application.

- More than 90 percent of the inmates in Texas prisons are functionally illiterate.

- Of all chronically unemployed adults, 75 percent have difficulty reading and writing.

- Sixty-seven percent of Texan employers report difficulty locating candidates for technical and skilled positions.

Every Texan who can read and write can serve as a volunteer tutor to help someone who wants to learn. For more information, contact your local Literacy Council or TALL by writing to P.O. Box 2152, Austin 78768-2152.

Dorm safety is common sense

CHICAGO (AP) — The excitement and challenge of living on your own in a dormitory or off-campus apartment should be paired with a sensible regard to your safety, says Loyola University Chicago's dean of residence life, Bernard Pleskoff.

Some safety tips:

- Always lock your door when you leave your room, even if it's only for a minute, and especially if your roommate is asleep.

- Don't ever prop open or disable the locking mechanism on entrance and exit doors.

- Report any suspicious people or activities in the halls to security or your residence hall advisor.

- After dark, always walk with others or use the campus escort service.

- And if you're living in an off-campus apartment:

- Have the locks re-keyed or changed before you move in.

Aspin warns new defense strategy will mean more base closings

By DONNA CASSATA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Les Aspin warned Wednesday that additional base closings will be required under a new, post-Cold War defense strategy that spurs the Navy and Marine Corps from deep military cuts.

With the Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman standing by his side at a crowded briefing, Aspin unveiled the Pentagon's five-year proposal that retains a relatively high level of forces and places added emphasis on developing modern weapons.

As a result, more domestic military bases will need to be closed beyond the next round of scheduled closings in 1995, Aspin said. He provided no specifics.

"It's very tough to do. It's a very difficult part of this thing. But this is absolutely critical," the secretary said of cutting the military's infrastructure.

The most recent round of base closures shuts down 130 facilities and scales back 45 others, with a more painful blow for communities expected in two years.

Aspin's plan is the result of a five-month "bottom-up review" of the nation's defense needs that won President Clinton's approval on Monday but still must be accepted by Congress.

The new strategy turns the military's focus from countering the one-time Soviet superpower to fighting regional conflicts, providing humanitarian relief as it has done in Somalia and acting as peacekeepers.

Gen. Colin Powell, in his final weeks as chairman of the Joint Chiefs, described how the Cold War threats of the Warsaw Pact and Soviet Union have been replaced by territorial strife and renegade leaders.

"Almost all of my adult life, we worried about World War III ... a Soviet empire that had tentacles that reached around the world," said Powell.

Now, "history and central casting provided me with new" demons, such as Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and Somali warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, Powell said.

Powell, who just three years ago embraced the Bush administration's "base force" plan that called for a greater number of troops, planes and ships, said the military was comfortable with the revised strategy.

The Aspin plan proposes these changes:

- Reduce the Army from 14 divisions to 10 by 1999. The Bush plan called for 12. National Guard divisions would shrink from eight to five.

- Cut the number of Navy aircraft carriers from 13 to 12, with one of the 12 used in a reserve role as a trainer for Navy aviators. Also, build a third Seawolf nuclear attack submarine as a way of keeping in business two American shipyards capable of building nuclear submarines. Clinton and Aspin abandoned the 10-carrier plan they had favored last year.

'It's a little bit like, "Honey, I shrunk the military." Somehow you feel it's not quite real.'

— Rep. John Conyers

- Reduce the Air Force from 28 wings to 20 and make the B-1 and B-2 bombers capable of dropping non-nuclear bombs. The Air Force would retain as many as 184 total bombers.

- Refocus ballistic missile defense on developing anti-missile weapons capable of defending against short-range missiles such as the Iraqi Scud. The plan relegates the Bush administration's plan for building a system to defend the United States against long-range missiles to a research project. Overall spending would be reduced from $39 billion to $18 billion between 1994 and 1999.

- Only two weapons programs would be canceled: the Navy's proposed AF-X medium-range bomber that it wanted as a replacement for the carrier-based A-6 Intruder; and the Air Force's Multi-Role Fighter that was not yet in development. The Air Force F-16 Fighting Falcon would go out of production after 1994.

- Go ahead with the Air Force's new-generation F-22 stealth fighter and the proposed E and F models of the Navy's F/A-18 carrier-based strike aircraft.

The Marine Corps is the only service whose numbers will be reduced less than the Bush administration had proposed. The force will be pared to 174,000 men and women from the current 180,000. The Bush administration had proposed — over the Marines' objections — to go to 159,000.

In another victory for the Marine Corps, the plan favors development of the V-22 Osprey, the hybrid transport vehicle capable of taking off like a helicopter and flying like a plane. The Bush administration had sought to cancel the program.

The full set of documents produced in the review were not released; only excerpts and 41 briefing charts were made public, including one that acknowledges the politically connected National Guard and reserves.

The second item on the chart called "What does it change?" said the plan will improve the readiness of the Army National Guard combat brigades, who were criticized by rank-and-file Army for not being ready for the Persian Gulf War.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, congratulated Aspin, Powell and other defense officials on their work, but withheld judgment until after his panel reviews the plan.

Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., chairman of the Government Operations subcommittee on national security, said the plan was an important first step, but worried that the military budget could still increase.

"It's a little bit like, 'Honey, I shrunk the military.' Somehow, you feel it's not quite real," Conyers said in a statement.

The Defense Budget Project, in an independent analysis, questioned how the Clinton administration could maintain a force of 1.4 million military personnel while spending $1.2 trillion on defense over the next five years.

"Like the Bush base force plan, the Clinton plan tries to pack too much force structure into too small a budget," said the think tank, which believes military readiness and modernization will suffer.

DOE staff to prepare collider estimates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary has directed her staff to develop a new cost estimate for the super collider by next spring, taking into account the Clinton administration's plan to delay completion of the giant atom smasher by three years.

The stretchout, designed to limit the amounts of money needed over the next few years, could add up to $2 billion to the collider's current $8.25 billion price tag.

And, in a report made public Wednesday by the Energy Department, an agency task force concluded that the Texas-based project could rack up another $1.5 billion in cost overruns unless corrections are made.

"The committee has determined that unless significant management actions are taken there is significant risk associated with the SSC project," the 75-member DOE panel said in its 223-page report.

The baseline validation committee, which O'Leary created in July to determine the status of the collider, also said the massive science project could come in a year behind schedule unless potential problems are addressed.

The report's release comes just three weeks before the Senate takes up consideration of funding for the controversial program. Senate support is essential to salvage a multi-billion-dollar project spurned earlier this year by the House.

Critics immediately pronounced the DOE report damaging, while supporters said it was the latest proof of O'Leary's commitment to tackle problems at the collider laboratory south of Dallas.

O'Leary stressed that the potential cost overruns would occur only if changes aren't made — and noted that last month she set in motion a shakeup in the management of the troubled program.

"Although project critics may view this document as evidence of massive cost overruns, the report in many respects represents quite the opposite," she said Wednesday. "It is a guide for how to prevent cost overruns. This is certainly how I intend to use it, and already am."

And, she added: "The good news is that the committee confirmed that the project is 20 percent complete, which is where we should be on the project ... (and) also found that the 73 major subcontracts awarded to date, in aggregate, have come in at approximately 7 percent under budget."

The DOE also acknowledged that some $1.2 billion in costs never attributed to the collider must be included in the price tag in the future.

The committee didn't develop a final cost for the collider, noting that the program changes ordered by O'Leary and the planned stretchout from 1999 to 2002 will alter the total price tag.

The secretary also directed her staff and the collider laboratory to conduct a top-to-bottom review of the workforce "with the goal of achieving savings in administrative personnel costs."

Collider proponents praised the DOE report and O'Leary's latest marching orders.

"This report clearly states that based on money spent to date, the American taxpayers have gotten their money's worth," said GOP Rep. Joe Barton, whose Ennis district includes part of the collider.

Man who left all-white town killed in robbery

BEAUMONT (AP) — A black man involved in the integration of an all-white town in eastern Texas was shot to death in a robbery attempt the day he moved back to nearby Beaumont, police said today.

William Simpson, 37, was walking along a street with a female friend Wednesday night when he was confronted by two men who demanded money, police said. When he refused, one of the men shot him with a 9 mm pistol.

Simpson was hit five or six times as he attempted to flee, said a police spokeswoman. He died a short time later at a hospital. The woman was shot in the leg.

Police said there appeared to be no connection between the shooting and the court-ordered integration of a housing project in nearby Vidor, where Simpson and several blacks went to live six months ago. The assailants were both black, police said.

No arrests have been made, said the police spokeswoman, who declined to be identified.

Simpson and another man, John DecQuir, were the last remaining blacks to leave Vidor. They departed this week, saying they were frightened by too many instances of harassment. They had been the first black residents of Vidor in at least 70 years.

A federal judge last year ordered Vidor, home to 11,000 whites, to desegregate its 70-unit public housing complex. It was one of 170 public housing projects in 36 east Texas counties — some all-white and some all-black — that U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice said must be desegregated.

While no one has physically attacked him in Vidor, the 7-foot, 300-pound Simpson said in an interview Sunday with The Associated Press that the derisive yells, the threats and the oppressive fear had become too much to bear.

"There are good people here, don't get me wrong," he said. "But it's overshadowed by the negativity, the hostility, the bigotry of this town."

DA: Hutchison resisting grand jury appearance

By CHIP BROWN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorneys for U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison say she no longer will agree to testify before a grand jury looking into possible wrongdoing at the state Treasury because the Travis County district attorney's office is mishandling the case.

On Wednesday, Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle's office said Mrs. Hutchison, who earlier volunteered her testimony to the grand jury, has repeatedly refused to appear. Prosecutors said no decision has been made yet on whether to force the senator to testify with a subpoena.

"It is my advice to Kay that we just hold here," said Hutchison's attorney John Dowd of Washington, D.C. "She very much would like to talk to the grand jury, but I am concerned about the whole handling of this thing."

A Travis County grand jury is examining allegations that state employees and state equipment were used for personal and political purposes during Hutchison's 2 1/2-year tenure as state treasurer.

Hutchison, a Republican, has said the 10-week-old investigation, which began June 10 with a raid of the Treasury by Earle's office, was politically motivated. Earle is a Democrat.

Dowd said prosecutors in Earle's office had previously agreed to tell Hutchison what they would be questioning her about, but then suddenly backtracked.

"I have not agreed to any date because I don't know why they didn't stick with the original agreements," Dowd said. "I would just like to know what it is they want us to talk about. They promised to tell us."

Steve McCleery, first assistant to Earle, said Hutchison had been asked several times to testify voluntarily during the week of Aug. 30 or Sept. 7, but refused. The grand jury meets again Thursday.

"We believe that she has important testimony or we wouldn't have asked her to testify," he added.

McCleery said he could not comment on the specific requests of Hutchison's attorneys.

"They have asked us to agree to a bunch of things as conditions for her to appear before the grand jury and we won't agree to them," McCleery said. "We don't agree to special conditions for witnesses to appear before the grand jury."

On Aug. 16, Hutchison's attorneys issued a statement saying, "Mrs. Hutchison wished to meet with investigators and attorneys of the DA's office, and, if helpful, the grand jury."

Hutchison said earlier this year she would testify, if called.

On Wednesday, Hutchison's spokesman David Beckwith said Earle's office has turned the proceedings into a "circus."

"What we are not willing to do is help the district attorney engage in some spectacle where Kay is paraded in front of cameras in a circus-like atmosphere for their own political purposes," Beckwith said.

Hutchison resigned as state treasurer after a landslide victory June 5 over Democrat Bob Krueger in a special election to fill the seat of Lloyd Bentsen, who became U.S. Treasury secretary.

The election of Hutchison, who is the first woman senator from Texas, made national headlines after she waged war on President Clinton's tax plan.

Two former aides to Hutchison at the Treasury who appeared before the grand jury July 29 say Hutchison ordered them to perform several eight-hour work days' worth of personal and political errands.

Judge delays Demjanjuk's deportation

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Israeli judge today ordered another delay in the deportation of former Ohio autoworker John Demjanjuk, pending further study of appeals by Holocaust survivors and Nazi hunters who demand a new war crimes trial.

The ruling by Theodore Orr, a Supreme Court justice, marked the sixth time that Demjanjuk's original Aug. 1 deportation order was delayed to permit review of arguments by those seeking a new trial.

Two petitioners submitted written arguments to Orr today to back their demands for a new trial. One of the petitioners, the World Jewish Congress, argued that there was sufficient evidence for a new trial and that Israel had an obligation to prosecute Demjanjuk.

In July, the Supreme Court overturned Demjanjuk's 1988 conviction and death sentence as the gas chamber operator "Ivan the Terrible" of the Treblinka death camp.

The judges found there was convincing evidence that Demjanjuk was a member of the so-called Trawniki unit of Nazi guards that assisted in the killing of Jews. The high court also found he was posted at the Sobibor death camp and the Flossenburg and Regensburg concentration camps.

But the judges at the time recommended against a new trial, saying too much time had lapsed in legal proceedings against Demjanjuk.

Nazi hunters and Holocaust survivors appealed, and Demjanjuk's scheduled deportation from Israel was delayed repeatedly as their arguments were heard.

A three-judge Supreme Court panel last month rejected the request for a new trial, citing weak evidence and the danger of double jeopardy. But the judges permitted the petitioners to appeal to Chief Justice Meir Shamgar, who gave them until today to argue in writing why a new trial should be held.

Shamgar, who headed the panel that acquitted Demjanjuk, transferred the case to Orr, who has not been involved in the Demjanjuk case.

Orr must decide whether to reject the appeals for a new trial or grant the petitioners a hearing before a panel of five judges. The Supreme Court has several levels.

There was no indication today when Orr would rule.

"There are some chances for a second hearing," said Avi Bekker, director of the World Jewish Congress in Israel.

Bekker's organization argued that the high court finding that Demjanjuk was at Sobibor and other camps was sufficient grounds to launch a new trial, even if that panel of judges had recommended against new proceedings.

Another petitioner, Canadian Kenneth Narvey, argued today that Demjanjuk should be tried for perjury for allegedly lying during his first trial.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk has maintained he spent most of World War II in German POW camps after being captured as a Soviet soldier in May 1942.

Israeli prosecutors argued that after his capture, Demjanjuk volunteered as a Nazi guard to improve his lot. They submitted documents they say link him to the so-called Trawniki guard unit.

Demjanjuk's alleged Trawniki card with the ID number 1393 says he was dispatched to Sobibor in March 1943. Other documents purportedly show he was transferred to Flossenburg in October 1943.

Demjanjuk was stripped of his U.S. citizenship in 1981 for lying about his alleged Nazi past, and extradited to Israel in 1986 to stand trial as "Ivan."

Arafat: PLO will return to occupied lands

JERUSALEM (AP) — Yasser Arafat predicted today that he and the PLO would return soon to the occupied territories.

The optimistic statement — issued in a letter sent to a West Bank university — came as Palestinian and Israeli leaders tried to narrow their differences on establishing ties and pave the way for senior leaders to sign an agreement on Palestinian autonomy.

But any accord faces strong opposition from hard-line factions. Arafat also seeks backing from Arab nations.

In Amman, Jordan's King Hussein said in an interview published today that Jordan rejected any agreement to which the kingdom was not a party and calling for a summit meeting of Arab leaders on the subject. But he fell short of specifically condemning the pact.

Officials on both sides indicated that the sticking points were over the language of the recognition and the form the PLO announcement would take, since Israel wants an authoritative declaration.

"I am sure I will see you soon," Arafat said in a letter faxed from his Tunis, Tunisia, headquarters to a conference at Bir Zeit University.

"You will see the PLO back in its homeland. We will go together to our Jerusalem," said Arafat, who was on a tour of Arab capitals to sell the Israel-PLO plan before a meeting of the central committee of his Fatah organization planned for later today.

Arafat badly needs the endorsement of his own group before proposing the accord for approval by the PLO Executive Committee and the Palestine National Council, or parliament in exile.

The Fatah session is expected to be stormy. Opponents object that the agreement worked out in secret negotiations between Palestinian and Israeli diplomats in Norway starts autonomy only in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank city of Jericho.

Haidar Abdul-Shafi, head of the Palestinian delegation, said on Israeli television that he would refuse to sign the agreement.

Rejectionists both within the PLO and in the fundamentalist Islamic movements said that Arafat should not have agreed to postpone discussions on the status of Jerusalem, which they want as a capital, and should have gotten a firm commitment to establishing a Palestinian state.

"You see it far distanced. I see it very close," Arafat said in his letter. Israeli media said that secret contacts on establishing PLO-Israel ties were continuing while Foreign Ministry Shimon Peres was in Brussels, Belgium, meeting with Israel's European ambassadors on economic matters.

The ministry's director-general, Uri Savir, who conducted the secret talks in Norway, flew to Brussels to meet him.

The back-channel talks are designed to lead to simultaneous statements in which the PLO revises its charter to renounce terrorism, while Israel accepts the group as the legitimate representative of the 1.8 million Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Israel has said even without mutual recognition, the delegation heads at the talks in Washington can sign the autonomy agreement. But foreign ministry officials said if it could be worked out it would speed overall negotiations.

Peres stressed at a news conference Wednesday that there was no direct link between the autonomy agreement, approved by the Israeli Cabinet Monday, and establishing ties with the PLO.

Senior PLO officials have made no secret that they hope recognition from Israel — and with it Washington — will emerge with the signatures on the autonomy plan.

NASA eyeing another mission to Mars

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA has a new team looking into the possibility of sending another space probe to Mars even while experts are studying the puzzling disappearance of the $1 billion Mars Observer.

The new mission, if there is one, will be at far lower cost and may involve the participation of other nations, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said Wednesday.

The Mars Observer stopped communicating with Earth just as it was about to go into orbit around Mars on Aug. 21 to begin making detailed observations about the planet's climate, surface composition, topography and atmosphere.

A group of experts already has been assembled to determine whether the spacecraft exploded, went into orbit around the planet, continued on its outward journey or simply had a radio failure.

NASA Administrator Daniel Goldin on Wednesday named a team that includes astronomer Carl Sagan to explore possibilities for another mission, using a variety of low-cost spacecraft, instrument and launch options. It also will research possible contributions from other nations.

The team's report is due in two months. A decision on a replacement mission must be made soon since the next best launch opportunity is next year and then in 1996.

The 17-member study team will be led by Dr. Charles Elachi, assistant laboratory director at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif.

The data that was to have been obtained from Mars Observer is vital before any plans can be made for landing robots or humans on the planet. It remains the top priority for NASA.

The agency had planned to land the first of a network of ground stations on Mars in 1996 in a project called Mars Environmental Survey. The House has approved $60 million for MESUR in 1994, toward an expected three-year cost of less than $150 million.

That project now may be put on hold or adapted to fly some of the Mars Observer instruments.

Originally, the space agency had planned to build a second Mars Observer in case the first one failed but did not do so for lack of money. But some duplicate instruments and components were built that could be used on a substitute mission.

1993 Property Tax Rates in Gray County

This notice concerns 1993 property tax rates for Gray County. It presents information about three tax rates. Last year's tax rate is the actual rate the taxing unit used to determine property taxes last year. This year's effective tax rate would impose the same total taxes as last year if you compare properties taxed in both years. This year's rollback tax rate is the highest tax rate the taxing unit can set before taxpayers can start tax rollback procedures. In each case these rates are found by dividing the total amount of taxes by the tax base (the total value of taxable property) with adjustments as required by state law. The rates are given per $100 of property value.

Last year's tax rate:

	General Fund	Farm To Market Flood Control Fund	Indigent Health Care
Last year's operating taxes	$ 2,542,524	$ 579,177	$ 272,583
Last year's debt taxes	$ -0-	$ -0-	$ -0-
Last year's total taxes	$ 2,542,524	$ 579,177	$ 272,583
Last year's tax base	$ 1,043,986,507	$ 1,033,506,780	$ 1,043,979,318
Last year's total tax rate	$.24354 /$100	$.05604 /$100	$.02611 /$100

This year's effective tax rate:

Last year's adjusted taxes (after subtracting taxes on lost property)	$* 2,537,803	$ 578,090	$ 272,078
+ This year's adjusted tax base (after subtracting value of new property)	$ 1,009,843,892	$ 999,094,252	$ 1,009,326,188
= This year's effective tax rate for each fund	$.25130 /$100	$.05786 /$100	$.02695 /$100
Total effective tax rate	$.33611 /$100

In the first year a county collects the additional sales tax to reduce property taxes, it must insert the following lines unless its first adjustment was made last year.

- Sales tax adjustment rate	$ -0- /$100
= Effective tax rate	$.33611 /$100

x 1.03 = maximum rate unless unit publishes notices and holds hearing

This year's rollback tax rate:

Last year's adjusted operating taxes (after subtracting taxes on lost property and including taxes for state criminal justice mandate.)	$ 2,542,524	$ 579,177	$ 272,583
+ This year's adjusted tax base	$ 1,009,843,892	$ 999,094,252	$ 1,009,326,188
= This year's effective operating rate	$.25177 /$100	$.05797 /$100	$.02700 /$100
x 1.08 = this year's maximum operating rate	$.27191 /$100	$.06260 /$100	$.02916 /$100
+ This year's debt rate	$ -0- /$100	$ -0- /$100	$ -0- /$100
= This year's rollback rate for each fund	$.27191 /$100	$.06260 /$100	$.02916 /$100
This year's total rollback rate	$.36367 /$100

A county that collects the additional sales tax to reduce property taxes, including one that collects the tax for the first time this year, must insert the following lines:

- Sales tax adjustment rate	$ -0- /$100
= Rollback tax rate	$.36367 /$100

Schedule A
Unencumbered Fund Balances

The following estimated balances will be left in the unit's property tax accounts at the end of the fiscal year. These balances are not encumbered by a corresponding debt obligation.

Type of Property Tax Fund	Balance
General Fund	$81,030
Farm to Market/Flood Control Fund	$12,387
State Indigent Health care	$26,848
Total	$120,265

Schedule B
1993 Debt Service

The unit plans to pay the following amounts for long-term debts that are secured by property taxes. These amounts will be paid from property tax revenues (or additional sales tax revenues, if applicable).

Description of Debt	Principal or Contract Payment to be Paid from Property Taxes	Interest to be Paid from Property Taxes	Other Amounts to be Paid	Total Payment
	$	$	$	$
Total required for 1993 debt service		$ -0-
- Amount (if any) paid from funds listed in Schedule A		$
- Excess collections last year		$
= Total to be paid from taxes in 1993		$
+ Amount added in anticipation that the unit will collect only _____% of its taxes in 1993		$
= Total Debt Levy		$

Schedule C
Expected Revenue from Additional Sales Tax

(For hospital districts, cities and counties with additional sales tax to reduce property taxes)

In calculating its effective and rollback tax rates, the unit estimated that it will receive $ -0- in additional sales and use tax revenues.

Schedule D
State Criminal Justice Mandate (For Counties)

The Gray County Auditor certifies that Gray County has spent $4,140.00 in the previous 12 months beginning January 1, 1992 for the maintenance and operations cost of keeping inmates sentenced to the Texas Department of Criminal Justice. Gray County Sheriff has provided information on these costs, minus the state revenues received for reimbursement of such costs.

This notice contains a summary of actual effective and rollback tax rates calculations. You can inspect a copy of the full calculations at Gray County Appraisal District.

Tattoos mark private's life

DEAR ABBY: More than 20 years ago, I had two large tattoos put on my upper arms — one on each arm. (Just one wasn't enough!) They changed my life. With few exceptions, I have not bared my upper torso to the world in more than two decades.

I have heard of several procedures to remove them. These include dermabrasion, laser techniques and skin grafts. Abby, I've suffered enough! Can you please consult with your experts and recommend the most effective and least expensive method of tattoo removal?

I have met a lady, and I am ashamed of these tattoos I inflicted on myself as a young private in the Army. Any help you can give me will be deeply appreciated.

Sorry this is not of "general interest" to all. Thank God the masses are less easily influenced than...

ONE DUMB PRIVATE

DEAR PRIVATE: Believe me, you are not alone with your problem. I am sure that many readers will be interested in the reminder that any dermatologic surgeon can offer an enlightened opinion on the most appropriate procedure for removal.

For a list of dermatologic surgeons in one's local area, contact: The American Society for Dermatologic Surgery, 1567 Maple Ave., Evanston, Ill. 60201. This procedure is neither inexpensive nor painless. (Until you make your decision, a "makeup" — Covermark or Dermablend — can be applied to cover your tattoos.)

Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: My husband of 39 years is the Fred Astaire of our club and all the women want to dance with him. The means I sit it out. I don't mind when it's one of our friends. (Their husbands have health problems, so they sit with me while their wives dance once or twice. That's fine.)

What I object to is other women asking him to dance as soon as my back is turned. A new young woman tries to muscle in and he says, "Better ask her since she's trying to be friendly." I understand his being flattered by all the attention. But now he's insisting he needs his independence to ask whomever he wants.

Dancing has been our hobby. We took lessons in ballroom dancing for 15 years. When he dances with someone else, he doesn't do the steps we know together.

He has left my bed over this and I am devastated. Dancing helps my arthritis considerably, so I don't want to give it up.

HURTING ON THE SIDELINES

DEAR HURTING: Invite him back to bed because this can be worked out. As long as he's dancing under your nose, no woman — regardless of age — is a threat. You can tell him, however, that just because he gets "friendly overtures," he is not obligated to steer around the floor. And the next time she asks him — cut in!

DEAR ABBY: I am getting married for the second time. As this will be my fiance's first marriage, he would like to celebrate our wedding with a dinner and a reception. My first marriage (which ended in divorce eight years later) took place 15 years ago.

Since I am close to my uncles and aunts on my father's side, I would like to invite them to our wedding. Would it be proper? They attended my first wedding, and I don't want them to think I am looking for another wedding gift. Your advice, please?

UNDECIDED IN CANADA

DEAR UNDECIDED: Since it is your fiance's first wedding, it's not fair to him and his family to request "No gifts." Issue the invitations and make no mention of gifts. However, you should tell those relatives to whom you feel close, "Please, do not send me another wedding gift. Just come and share our joy!"

Farmers' market excellent source of produce

By COUNTRY KITCHEN IDEAS
For AP Special Features

Farmers' markets are a summer fixture in most communities. They provide an excellent source of fresh produce and a fun excursion for family members. Before you grab your shopping bag and rush out the door, examine these tips from Country Kitchen Ideas magazine:

- Know the market's hours, and get there early for the best selection. Later in the day, there's less to pick from, but you may find reduced prices.
- Bring a sturdy shopping bag to carry moist produce.
- When you arrive, scout all the vendors' displays to see what's available and to find the best-looking, best-priced produce. Then go back to buy, but don't wait too long.

- Get acquainted with the vendors. You'll learn about their specialties — and they may remember you with special offerings the next time you go to market. If you aren't familiar with a food they sell, ask how to prepare it. They may even share a recipe with you.

- Know the produce prices in the supermarket. That way, you can compare the market's prices to figure out the best deals.

- Don't go overboard! Everything at a market looks so tempting, you can easily buy more than you can use. Remember how much refrigerator space you have at home and know your grocery needs for the week ahead. Remain flexible so you can buy items that look good.

- If you plan to can or freeze any fruits and vegetables, consider purchasing slightly imperfect ones. You may even be able to barter with a farmer over bruised produce, especially if it's late in the day.

- Wait to buy the more delicate items, such as herbs and flowers, until just before you leave.

- Go home right away to refrigerate fresh items.

Style show scheduled for Sept. 11

Top O' Texas CattleWomen finalized plans for their annual fall brunch and style show, set for 10 a.m. Sept. 11 at Pampa Country Club.

A brunch will be served followed by a presentation of fall fashions from 12 area merchants. Clothing stores from Pampa, McLean, Wheeler and Shamrock will be modeling all types of clothing.

Door prizes from each merchant will awarded during the show. These range from small gifts to $25 gift certificates. Fifteen lottery tickets will be awarded.

At the close of the show, the grand prize — three days and two nights in Las Vegas via American Airlines — will be awarded.

Tickets may be purchased by calling 826-5250 or from Bobee J's Boutique, Bette's, Images, Kids Stuff, Personal Touch, V.J.'s Imports and Wayne's Western Wear.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Don't leave the management of something which could cost you money in the hands of an incompetent associate. If you're indifferent about this matter, you might have to pay the piper. Get a jump on life by understanding the influences which are governing you in the year ahead. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today by mailing $1.25 and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, N. Y. 10163. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) There could be more strain than usual in a valued relationship today. For personal reasons each party might be more protective than cooperative.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Having a good attitude is very important where your work is concerned today. The end results of assignments or tasks you resent doing will reflect your malice.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Relax and enjoy yourself socially today, but don't try to be the center of attention or the principle object of the spotlight. Give your friends a chance to hog it a bit too.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) If things go right today you're likely to be the first one who takes the bows. Conversely, if things go wrong you might look for someone to blame it on.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Today when in a discussion with an achiever you might feel inclined to embellish the things you've done recently. Unfortunately, it could produce the opposite impression you hope to make.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Today try not to be neither stingy nor foolish with your possessions or resources. You might have to say "no," instead of lending something to a poor risk.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A partnership arrangement in which you're presently involved is beginning to lack parity where your position is concerned. If it becomes one-sided it will be valueless.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) An endeavor that has been rather lucky for you recently looks like it might lose some of its charms and begin to promise more than it can develop. Be watchful.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

The Pampa Harvesters meet the Garden City Buffaloes Friday night at 7:30 in Garden City, Kan. to kick off the 1993 football season. Season tickets for the Harvesters football season are on sale from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. today and Friday at the high school athletic office. Season tickets are $12 per seat.

SOCCER

James Smiles of Pampa is a member of the West Texas A&M University soccer team this season.

Smiles is listed as a freshman back on the Bootin' Buffs roster.

West Texas opens the season at home Sept. 4 against Colorado Christian. This is West Texas' third season to have a soccer program.

AUTO RACING

BRISBANE, Australia (AP) — Politicians and officials who want to go to future Australian IndyCar Grand Prix will have to pay for their own tickets.

Queensland state sports minister Bob Gibbs, who on Tuesday pledged $3.3 million of government money to secure the future of the race, on Wednesday blamed the race's financial problems on too many free tickets.

Gibbs said he has asked for a review of exactly how many free tickets had been handed out in the first three years of the only IndyCar race outside North America.

"I would herald a warning to all for the event next year, including Honorable Members of this parliament who wish to attend, that you can expect to be putting the hand into the pocket," Gibbs told parliament.

"As far as I'm concerned, it will be a case of everybody paying their way to the event next year."

Gibbs has said continued government support for the race through the streets of Surfers Paradise was justified because the race helped promote Queensland as a tourist destination.

He said the government had spent $33.5 million on the race during its first three years and had put a ceiling of $3.3 million on future annual contributions.

FOOTBALL

NEW YORK (AP) — Terry Bradshaw will mark his 45th birthday on Thursday by moonlighting on "CBS This Morning." He will do a similar stunt on Friday.

The former Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback, now an analyst for CBS Sports' "The NFL Today," last week taped a two-part interview with Joe Montana, who is about to debut as quarterback for the Kansas City Chiefs.

Montana spoke about the darkside of being a sports celebrity.

"There is always a setup somewhere," he said. "That's what you worry about, and you're always on guard. You hate being on guard, but the minute you let your guard down and try to be fun, be natural, someone's always trying to take advantage of you."

Bradshaw and Montana share a common experience — each has won four Super Bowl rings. Bradshaw with the Steelers and Montana with the San Francisco 49ers.

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP) — The New England Patriots latest 16 signees each weigh 187 tons. And can they fly.

The Air Force Reserve's 439th "Patriot Wing" headquartered at Westover Air Force Reserve Base has reached an agreement with the NFL team and NFL Properties Inc. to paint the Patriot's new team logo to the tail fins of its 16 giant C-5A jet transports.

Col. Hal Lawrence, commander of the 439th Logistics Group which oversees aircraft maintenance, said he got the idea after seeing news photos of the new logo, which features the windswept profile of a man wearing a tri-cornered hat that dissolves into red, white and blue streamers.

"From our perspective ... it's terrific," said Mitch Hardin, director of special projects for the team.

BASKETBALL

MUNICH, Germany (AP) — Magic Johnson made his first appearance as an "international spokesperson" for the NBA at a Munich sporting goods fair Wednesday.

The retired Los Angeles Lakers star repeated his earlier stance — that he would like to become a team owner, hopefully of an expansion team in Toronto.

Johnson, who retired after testing positive for the virus that causes AIDS, said he would return to Europe next month for a series of games.

Johnson and a some other former NBA stars will begin their tour in Geneva, Switzerland on Oct. 7, go to Germany for two games, in Essen on Oct. 10 and Berlin on Oct. 12, and travel on to Tel Aviv for the fourth game on Oct. 16.

HOBBS, N.M. (AP) — Former Alamogordo High School standout Lenny Holly says he hopes eventually to transfer to New Mexico State or the University of New Mexico now that he's left Texas Tech.

But the 6-foot-5 guard, who was last season's Southwest Conference freshman of the year, would not say which school he was interested in.

Holly enrolled Tuesday at New Mexico Junior College, and his new coach, Ron Black, said Holly wants to find an atmosphere like UNM's.

"He couldn't get over the contrast from when Tech played at UNM (before 16,000-plus fans) to when it got home and played in front of a few thousand fans," Black said Tuesday.

Cowboys' rookie wants opportunity to start

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

IRVING (AP) — There's one Dallas Cowboy who hopes Emmitt Smith doesn't end his holdout in time for next Monday night's game against the Washington Redskins.

Meet Derrick Lassic.

The rookie running back from collegiate national champion Alabama would like to start just one game for the defending world champions before the eventual return of the NFL's two-time leading rusher. Lassic knows then all he'll get is pine time.

"It's a big one, it will probably be the most watched game in NFL history," Lassic said. "I'd like the opportunity to start."

Why ask for all that pressure?

"I've always taken a lot of pride in that I show up for big games," he said. "The bigger the game the better I play. When I'm in big games I just ask one

"I've always taken a lot of pride in that I show up for big games. The bigger the game the better I play."

— Derrick Lassic

thing: call my number."

Lassic rushed for 135 yards and scored two touchdowns in Alabama's 34-13 victory over Miami in the Sugar Bowl that clinched a national title for the Crimson Tide.

The Miami-dominated Cowboys have a lot of respect for Lassic.

"I've taken a little needle from guys like Michael Irvin and Alfredo Roberts," Lassic said. "Irvin told me Miami was tired of winning the national championship. Darrin Smith told me he had two national championship rings. I asked them what had they done lately. And something I didn't hear was that we were lucky to win it."

Lassic rushed for 250 yards on 70 carries in exhibitions to win the Smith-vacated first string running back job for the Cowboys. He beat out Michael Beasley, who was cut.

Lassic does a great imitation of Alabama coach Gene Stallings, who got him fired up for big games against Tennessee and Miami.

"Now, Derrick, you know big players show up for big games," Lassic quoted his former coach. "Anybody can play against those little 'uns but it takes a big player to play against a big 'un."

"I must have heard that a jillion times," Lassic said. "In fact, 'jillion' is another one of coach Stallings words."

Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson likes Lassic, saying "we were very fortunate to get him in the fourth round."

"He has great speed, shows toughness and can catch the ball," Johnson said. "He'll also throw all 190 pounds into a block."

In a recent preseason game, Lassic made a tremendous move on a 13-yard pass gain that left Chicago Bears defensive back Mark Carrier on his face.

"He's a different style of runner than Emmitt," said Johnson. "He's not a slashing runner. He's quick and has good moves."

"We'll just have to adjust our offense to the fact that Lassic won't be escaping tackles like Emmitt did. Lassic has the speed to circle the field, though."

Lassic knows his limitations. "Emmitt's stronger than I am," Lassic said. "But I'm faster. I try to get away from contact. Sometimes Emmitt looks it up."

Lassic would just like to display the difference on Monday Night Football.

Revenge motivates Stanford, Washington

By RICK WARNER
AP Football Writer

Revenge will be a prime motivation for both teams in Saturday's Washington-Stanford game.

No. 15 Stanford wants to end its nine-game losing streak against Washington, including last year's embarrassing 41-7 defeat. And No. 12 Washington is furious at Stanford coach Bill Walsh, who called the Huskies "mercenaries" in an off-season speech that harshly criticized the school's football program.

Walsh later apologized and was reprimanded by the Pac-10 Conference, but Washington coach Jim Lambright hasn't forgotten the remarks.

"He's got such a classy image, but it's hard to find class in what he said," said Lambright, who took over Aug. 22 after Don James resigned to protest a two-year bowl ban and other sanctions against Washington by the Pac-10.

Walsh, who claims his speech was misinterpreted, said he doesn't think the controversy will affect the game at Husky Stadium.

"I really don't think players are as concerned with these peripheral things as the press and the coaches," he said.

The furor over Walsh's comments and Washington's off-field problems have almost overshadowed the early showdown between last year's Pac-10 co-champions.

Stanford lost seven starters from last year's defense, but prolific passer Steve Stenstrom returns on offense along with a strong supporting cast. The Cardinal also will get contributions from one of the best freshmen classes in the country.

"We're very young and inexperienced, but we're also very intense and enthusiastic," Walsh said. "I think we'll get better and better as the season progresses."

Washington is inexperienced at quarterback; where starter Damon Huard and backup Eric Bjornson enter the season with a total of nine career completions. But the Huskies should get plenty of punch from junior tailback Napoleon Kaufman, who gained 1,045 yards last season.

Rangers outlast Red Sox

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The Texas Rangers and Boston Red Sox thought they had today off.

That's what the schedule said. But as the innings dragged on and the yawns of tiring fans turned to groans about shoddy play, Wednesday night became this morning.

Finally, at 1:04 a.m., second baseman Doug Strange appropriately fielded the final out of a strange game and Texas had a 9-7 victory in the game that lasted 12 innings and 5 hours, 28 minutes.

"It wasn't the prettiest game in the world," Texas reliever Tom Henke said. "Fortunately, the good guys won."

There were seven errors, six intentional walks and six sacrifice bunts. For Boston, Scott Cooper finally got his first sacrifice fly in his 127th game and Mike Greenwell hit his 10th homer but only his first since July 23.

The Rangers struck out the side in the eighth, with three different pitchers recording one each. There were only two 1-2-3 innings in the game.

The teams used 48 players, 17 of them pitchers. Texas used the most — 27 players, including 10 pitchers. The major league record is 11 pitchers set by Seattle last Sept. 25.

"It was just crazy because everybody was used besides me and Rick Reed going into the 11th," said Jeff Bronkey (1-1). "The Red Sox relievers popped their heads over the bullpen wall to see if we were out of pitchers."

Both teams are trying to stay in contention and knew that the division leaders already had won. Texas stayed 5 1/2 games behind Chicago in the AL West, while Boston slipped 7 1/2 behind Toronto in the East.

Chicago's victory over New York prompted Texas manager Kevin Kennedy to bring in Henke in the eighth with the score 5-5. Normally, he only pitches in save situations.

"I'm a believer that you try to win it in nine," Kennedy said. "After that, it's pot luck."

It was rotten luck for Boston first baseman Mo Vaughn. He tied his career high with four hits, but made the Red Sox's fifth error, costing them the game.

"I don't know where to start except to say that that wasn't one of our best games," Boston manager Butch Hobson said. "You can't play defense like that and expect to win."

With the score 7-7 in the 12th and Strange at second after a single and sacrifice bunt, Manuel Lee hit a routine grounder to second baseman Tim Lincecum, who made a routine throw to Vaughn.

But the ball went off Vaughn's glove and bounced into the Boston dugout, allowing Strange to score. Lee came in on Bill Ripken's double off Paul Quantrill (5-9).

"This is a team game. I don't think that any one play loses a game," Vaughn said, "but I didn't come through when I should have."

"The ball just moved and sailed out a little bit. I just didn't stay with it. No excuses."

An eighth-inning double by Texas' Geno Petralli tied the game 5-5. The Rangers appeared to be in good shape when pinch-hitter David Hulse singled in two runs in the 11th.

But Boston tied it in the bottom of the inning, scoring one run when third baseman Ripken threw to second for a forceout and the second when Ripken misplayed Nachring's potential game-ending grounder for an error that scored Cooper, who had doubled.

"If you want one guy on the field to get the ball, it's Bill Ripken," Kennedy said. "He's one of the surest-handed fielders."

Texas made all the plays in the 12th. After Vaughn's two-out single, Boston's hopes rested with Rob Deer, who was in a 1-for-33 slump. He hit a routine grounder to Strange, who flipped to shortstop Lee to force Vaughn.

The Red Sox had wasted chances for big innings. They loaded the bases with no outs in the fifth and seventh but scored only one run each time. They left 16 runners on base. Shortstop John Valentin stranded eight runners and made two throwing errors.

"You only get so many chances," said Boston's Andre Dawson, who had three hits before leaving for a pinch runner in the seventh. "When they come, you have to make the most of them."

That wasn't about to happen in a weird game that took two days to finish.

"You see the full moon out there through the cloud cover? I saw it," Ripken said. "I don't care how it ended as long as we won. And we did."

Chelsea Luster rounds the second turn in the John and Gladys Bowers Memorial Barrel Race at the Bowers Ranch Wednesday night on her way to a tie in the Five and Under class. Bowers barrel race results

Here are the final results of the John and Gladys Memorial Barrel Race series run over the last four weeks at the Bowers Ranch:

Five and Under
Heath Lunsford and Chelsea Luster, first (tie); Taylor Reeves, second; and Karli Douglas, third.

Six through Nine
Kristi Farnum and Kaly Richardson, first (tie); Jaylee Gregory, second; and Brandon Young, third.

Ten through 13
Nicki Leggett, first; Andrea Whaley and Jamie Meers, second (tie); Melodie Seely, third; and Casey Salzbrenner, fourth.

14 through 18
Matt Reeves, first; Farah Quley, second; Laura Futrell, third; Kendra Ray, fourth; and Julie Richardson, fifth.

150 Novice
Janice Rucker, first; Amy Miller, second; Judy Morris, third; Margaret Glasscock and Connie Bennett, fourth (tie).

Open
Cheyenne Futrell, first; Edi Williams, second; Sherri Simmons, third; La Jona Reeves and Lindy Forsyth, fourth (tie).

Each divisional winner won a belt buckle. Cheyenne Futrell was overall point winner. She won a saddle.

Cheyenne Futrell of Canyon won the Billy Cook saddle in the final round of the John and Gladys Bowers Memorial Barrel Race series this week. As winner in the Open class, she won a custom made belt buckle and, as high point winner, she won the saddle in the series at the Bowers Ranch located south of Pampa. (Staff photo by David Bowser)

Patterson surprises himself; shocks Braves

By TOM SALADINO
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — John Patterson's first swing this season surprised himself and shocked the Atlanta Braves.

Patterson, who was activated from the disabled list earlier in the day, pinch hit in the ninth inning and hit his first major league home run to give the San Francisco Giants a 3-2 victory over Atlanta on Wednesday night.

"Of course it came as a surprise," Patterson said through a media mob surrounding his locker. "I was just looking for something to hit hard."

"Without a doubt it's the biggest hit I've ever gotten," said Patterson, who appeared in only 16 games this season at Class A San Jose during his rehab assignment and hit .235 with one home run.

The victory broke a four-game losing streak against the second-place Braves and increases the Giants' lead in the NL West to 4 1/2 games.

The Giants, who had been swept in three games last week in San Francisco and lost Tuesday night, won for only the third time in their last eight games. It was the Braves' second loss in 10 games and fourth in 21.

Patterson, who had been out the entire season after undergoing off-season shoulder surgery, led off the ninth by hitting a 2-0 pitch from Mark Wohlers (5-2) over the right-field fence.

With the Giants last season, Patterson, hit .184 (19-for-103).

"He hit a pretty good pitch. I thought it was a good fastball," Wohlers said. "I'm not going to pitch any differently. If I were in the same situation again 15 minutes from now, I'd throw the same pitch."

Wohlers hadn't allowed a home run in two years.

"I think it was two years ago to the day," said Wohlers. "Another guy named John — John Morris."

"We feel better about ourselves because this was one of the best executed games we've played in a while," San Francisco manager Dusty Baker said.

Mike Jackson (6-5) pitched a scoreless eighth and Rod Beck earned his 39th save by getting the final three outs.

The Giants tied it at 2-2 in the seventh on an RBI bloop single by Dave Martinez off Atlanta starter John Smoltz.

Jeff Reed opened the inning with a double to left and Steve Scarsone ran for him. Mike Benjamin sacrificed Scarsone to third before Martinez's hit.

Smoltz went seven innings, giving up six hits and two runs. He walked four and struck out six.

The Giants' first run came in the fifth on a two-out double by Willie McGee and an RBI single by Matt Williams, who was thrown out by left fielder Ron Gant attempting to stretch his hit off the wall to a double.

The Braves had gone ahead 2-1 against starter Bryan Hickerson in the sixth when Otis Nixon led off with a single, stole second and scored on Jeff Blauser's double off the right-center field fence.
