U.S. concerned by reports China is planning nuc

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States is concerned that China may be getting ready to detonate a nuclear weapon at its remote testing site in Xinjiang province.

If China does conduct an underground nuclear test, it could undermine the 15-month moratorium on U.S. testing declared July 3 by President Clinton. In extending the nine-month moratorium set by Congress in October before Sept. 30, 1994, he would seek congressional authorization to resume U.S. testing.

The last U.S. test took place in September 1992. That, too, was the date of the last known Chinese test.

An administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said satellite information suggests China may be preparing to set off an underground explosion at its Lop Nor test site.

He declined to elaborate, but nuclear testing special-of planned testing. The deep holes are designed to contain the effects of the blast.

In London, the private Verification Technology Information Center said Thursday that it has evidence that a Chinese test may be imminent. The group, which accurately predicted China's two 1992 tests, uses commercially available satellite photos on which to base its information.

Kazakhstan has in recent months complained to the 1992, Clinton warned that if another country tests United States about China's testing, saying it was ber. Western experts estimated that the May explosion threatening the environment and the health of the Kazakh people. The Lop Nor site is about 550 miles east of the Kazakh border.

> Kazakhstan is particularly sensitive to the results of nuclear testing, having been the site of the Soviet Union's main above-ground testing site in the 1950s and early '60s, which resulted in thousands of injuries and genetic mutations.

Russia, France and Britain all have promised that they holes being drilled in the ground - usually an indication ing what U.S. officials describe as contradictory signals.

On the one hand, China has agreed to take part in negotiations starting next January in Geneva to ban all nuclear tests by the end of 1996. On the other hand, China has refused to say categorically that it will not test in the meantime.

A high-level U.S. delegation that visited Beijing in July failed to elicit such a promise, as have subsequent contacts with the Chinese.

China conducted tests last year, in May and Septemhad a one-megaton yield – equal to about 70 bombs of the strength dropped on Hiroshima.

The United States and the former Soviet Union have an agreement not to test any bomb with a yield of more than 150 megatons. China hasn't joined that pact.

ed 37 tests - compared with 936 for the United States. A Chinese test "would have pervasive ramifications," said Rep. Mike Kopetski, D-Ore., who led the drive in the House to win a U.S. testing moratorium. "If this is true," he said, "it would not only dramatically affect our moratorium" but could prompt France to resume testing.

France's Socialist President Francois Mitterrand promised last year to stop testing - to the chagrin of some in the French military and defense establishment. But U.S. officials became concerned that he might not be able to keep that pledge because he was forced to take a center-right partner into his coalition.

If France and the United States start testing, Kopetski said, "it would open up this whole madness again."

Russian President Boris Yeltsin is not inclined to world's declared nuclear powers - slightly less than resume testing, and Britain is bound by any use decision because it can only test its weapons at the U.S. site in

Texas death row inmate wins last-minute stay of execution

By MICHAEL GRACZYK Associated Press Writer

HUNTSVILLE (AP) - In a case that surprised state attorneys and angered death penalty opponents, a man convicted of killing a banker's wife eight years ago won a stay just 20 minutes before he could have received lethal injection.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

The Dallas Morning News on child safety:

The abduction and strangulation of 7-year-old Ashley Estell is any parent's worst nightmare. The Plano girl had been watching a soccer game Saturday with her parents, but left for a nearby playground. Her body was found the next day about six miles from where she was last seen.

Police have discounted no explanation, but it is likely that some adult – a stranger or perhaps even someone known to Ashley – was able to lure her to a place where she could be harmed.

Sadly, such tragedies are not new. Children are the easiest victims. Guileless and trusting of adults, they can be easily coaxed into the car or home of a perverted adult with enticements of candy or false requests for help. As Ashley's murder makes terribly clear, they are vulnerable even in better-off suburbs such as Plano. They are most often victimized by relatives or people who know them, not by total strangers.

Ashley's murder underscores the need for families to learn and practice ways to lessen risks to children. ...

Fort Worth Star-Telegram on school violence:

If area school districts really want to adopt a suggested "get tough" zero-tolerance policy toward classroom troublemakers, here's the first thing to do: Hire two or three more lawyers.

As startling at that advice might sound in our already overly litigious society, it makes sense for a couple of reasons.

- If a district plans to remove troublemaking students to what's described as an "alternative setting," it can expect plenty of legal resistance from parents who aren't prepared to believe Junior is all that much of a problem. It'll need the lawyers.

- The schools should direct the lawyers to take the offensive. The argument is that children, as minors, are essentially the parents' legal obligation. Parents are responsible for children's behavior. If the child is misbehaving to the extent that education is disrupted, the schools, teachers, other parents and other students are being deprived of valuable entitlement - a reasonably good education in a reasonably nonhostile environment.

If parents can't produce the good – nonviolent, behaving children - do what everybody else does. Sue them. That'll get their attention. No one in any other sort of work environment would accept such threatening conditions.

San Antonio Express-News on political influence:

It's legal, but it stinks. Why should FOBs, friends of Bill (Clinton), or "friends of" any politician have more clout than the average citizen? Since Andy Jackson was president, a coterie of presidential and congressional pals have sopped up the cushy jobs in Washington - a veritable raid on the Treasury. ...

Of course, these barnacles are hired because of ordinary influence, not unusual expertise. It is tantamount to payola. It is bad government, and it shows.

Clinton says he intends to "reinvent government." Great, but we can only grade him on what he has done so far, and there's nothing new – just a rehashing of the same old spurious baloney.

... IT'S THIRD AND SEVEN. THE BALL

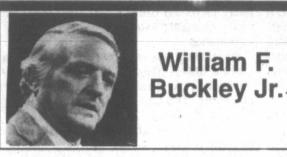

Revisiting the First Amendment

Religion is suddenly being noticed, though in odd little ways. Columnist Michael Kinsley tells us that people who complain about the silent treatment given to religion don't know how well off they are. He makes his point by quoting a denunciation or two by such as George Orwell and then saying brightly, "See, this kind of thing doesn't happen anymore! Therefore, why are the religious-types complaining?"

(The answer here is that religion is not attacked in serious quarters for roughly the same reason that astrology isn't attacked: Religion is dismissed as a quaint psychological sanctuary for people who need that kind of thing.)

And then there is some excitement because a professor at Yale Law School, moreover a black gentleman, has written a book-called The Culture of Disbelief. Stephen Carter matter-of-factly acknowledges in that book that he and his wife are practicing Episcopalians. He proceeds then with a series of what critic John Chamberlain once called "stoploss" statements, which is to say, devices by which liberal commentators, when they have something to say vaguely pleasing to conservatives, cover themselves from criticism by their peers by entertaining sell-orders before their stock runs a change of dipping to too low a level.

Thus Professor Carter, while upbraiding certain excesses of the Supreme Court in its interpretation of the Establishment Clause in the First Amendment, rushes to agree that a creche exhibited on public property at Christmas time is indeed unconstitutional, that a benediction pronounced by a rabbi at a school commencement is unconstitutional, and to religion ever visited upon the United States.

But having assured his colleagues that there is nothing really creepy about him, Mr. Carter does go on to say that the court has shortsightedly treated religion in the way in which it tends to be treated these days, namely as a hobby, rather than as a commitment larger than life itself.

This is not a fresh point. In a book I wrote 42 years ago, I quoted Canon Bernard Iddings Bell, who said that the treatment of religion by most faculties had the effect of relegating it to a pastime, "preferred by a few to golf or canasta."

Still, it is a vague sign of life that the subject of religion and its place in the civil order should get some attention, and Mr. Carter's book has been publicly cited by the president of the United States, no less, as something that ought to be read. And though not quite directly, the book does raise questions. For instance?

In California, Mr. Carter tells us, a situation arose as follows. A couple who are professing Christians have an apartment for rent. A couple who are not married apply to rent the apartment. The owners decline to rent it on the grounds that by the way, Ronald Reagan was the greatest affront they do not want to be complicit in living arrangements that violate basic Christian tenets, which distinguish between conjugal arrangements and forni-

Ah, but California has laws that deny to landlords the right to withhold living quarters from, roughly speaking, anybody under any circumstances. If you put the question, Who here has the presumptive authority to assert his rights, the landlord or the aspirant tenant, you are likely to run into a little equivocation.

I tried it out on the executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union, the resourceful Ira Glasser, and his response was that, without checking into the law, his impression is that if the landlord had only a single apartment, or maybe two, his rights exceeded those of the couple living in sin, or whatever the word "sin" now is under the law, if there is a word for it. But if it is a larger unit, then the rights of the tenant are superordinated.

One supposes that such an arrangement continues in force. Years ago, they called it the "Mrs. Murphy" exemption - i.e., the widow Murphy who had the upstairs apartment to rent could not be asked why she denied it to this or that person, never mind that her reasons for doing so might have been racist, or sexist, or religious. But if Mrs. Murphy inherited not an upstairs apartment, but a house with a half dozen or more apartments, she could not be permitted, so to speak, to extend her influence over the West Bank or Gaza Strip upstairs.

Professor Carter reminds us that the Establishment Clause had as its principal purpose not the oppression of religion by the state, but the preservation of religion against the oppressions of the state. The Cultures of Disbelief is an ever-so-gentle awakening to the great shifts of emphasis since the Bill of Rights was incorporated into the Constitution.

The lasting U.S. role in Middle East

Walter Mears

AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON - When the wagers were made in "this brave gamble" for Middle East peace, President Clinton wasn't a player. But now he is and the United States is committed to trying to make it a winning bet.

Amid all the wondrous changes symbolized by a hesitant handshake at the White House on Monday, there was one constant: the lasting U.S. role. That was dramatized by the setting.

Israel and the PLO worked out the terms of their preliminary peace accord in secret talks mediated by neutral Norwegian diplomats. While U.S. diplomats weren't involved, they were said to have been kept informed. Then, once the deal was set and peace letters had been exchanged, both sides looked to Washington as the site for a formal, ceremonial signing.

So Clinton was host and, in a way, matchmaker, as Israel's Yitzhak Rabin shook the outstretched hand of the PLO's Yasser Arafat, to applause that sounded across the sunny South Lawn, from an audience of some 3,000, including two former presidents, eight former secretaries of state, dozens of diplomats and most of Congress.

"A peace of the brave is within our reach," Clinton said at a ceremony that put him in the role all presidents covet, presiding over a diplomatic success story. He declared that "this brave gamble that the future can be better than the past must endure."

It is only the first chapter; there are major obstacles to be confronted, and costs to be covered. But it was a breakthrough between old enemies, and a break for Clinton, since it is happening on his watch. were sent to the Sinai peninsula to monitor the 1979 each other," Christopher added.

In the days since agreement was set, away from Washington, he has been stressing the long U.S. quest for a secure peace between Israel and the Arab states. Clinton said the Middle East peace process has been a foreign policy priority since his first day in office. Secretary of State Warren Christopher said the agreement is the important thing, and not who gets credit for it.

He and Clinton said the PLO accord, providing for Palestinian rule in Gaza and Jericho, is a start that gains momentum for the Washington-sponsored agreements between Israel and other governments.

Israel and Jordan signed a treaty framework Tuesday and Christopher hopes that within a year, they will have an agreement comparable to the Israel-PLO accord.

"I am convinced that the United States must assume a very heavy role and responsibility to make this work," the president said. That will cost money, although probably not vast sums. The administration said this accord would not involve the use of U.S. troops in a peacekeeping role, but that could come as part of subsequent peace agreements with Arab states.

Camp David peace agreement between Israel and

One possibility: a peacekeeping role on the Golan Heights should there be a later accord between Israel and Syria. That area now is occupied by Israel.

In addition to providing U.S. aid, the administration will try to line up allied financial support for the Palestinians. American foreign aid to Israel won't be

"I look to see the United States being more deeply involved in the Middle East even than we have been in the past," said Rep. Lee Hamilton, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

And those involvements have been deep. "Looking back on the four years of my presidency, I realize that I spent more of my time working for possible solutions to the riddle of Middle East peace than peace process, and should be a catalyst for later on any other international problem," Jimmy Carter wrote in his memoirs.

> That paid off in the Camp David accords negotiated in 1978 between Egypt and Israel, the first peace accord between an Arab government and the Jewish state. Carter said those accords set a framework for peace that still is being followed.

> President George Bush pressed for the direct negotiations that revived the peace process beginning in 1991.

Clinton applauded them both at the signing ceremony, and said every president, Democrat or Republican, since Harry Truman has worked for peace in There is precedent. Clinton noted that U.S. troops the Middle East, "We've all built on the efforts of Violence like the killing of Officer Walter Schroeder Sr. "was suicidal for the movement," said Oglesby, now a freelance writer in Cambridge. "I hope one of the lessons people draw from the experience was that the passion for violent responses to a violent policy, while easy to understand, are always self-defeating.

Each bill was inflated an average of 11 percent, Johnson said. So far, she added, about half the overcharges have been removed from bills.

In 1991, the last year in which the national health care bill was broken down, hospital charges accounted for 38 percent of the total, and Jon Ross, a spokesman for the American Hospital Association, says the figure is now closer to 40 percent of the nation's $909 billion annual paid."

Johnson believes faulty billing is the norm at hospitals around the country. If the 11 percent factor reported by Accu-Pay held true across the board, the overcharges on the nation's hospital bill, which totals roughly $360 billion a year, could reach almost $40 billion. That would go a long way toward easing the costs of providing health insurance to the 37 million Americans now without it.

Next Wednesday, President Clinton is expected to unveil his plan to reform national health care. Two main goals have been to insure all Americans and to contain steadily rising costs.

billions of dollars by reviewing medical bills for accuracy. In 1992, Shefman said, MedReview processed about $24 million in bills from hospitals and other medical providers. The company found errors totaling about $2.8 million, which saved clients an average of about 12 percent from their bills, Shefman said.

He said his company's findings represent a nationwide problem, but he doesn't believe hospitals are deliberately

Jon Ross, the AHA spokesman in Chicago, said hospitals don't try to pad profits by intentionally overcharging

"In fact, studies show that more often than not billing mistakes are to the detriment of the hospital, rather than to the patient," he said. "By and large, the process is very, very solid. The companies and institutions that are paying the bills are there to find things like that before they are Ethically, said Bert Lewis, an Accu-Pay vice president, the company would have to report a hospital undercharge that benefits a patient client. But in all cases of such errors found by the company, he added, the same bills contain significantly higher overcharges. The largest undercharge in a patient's favor found by Accu-Pay was $6,000, Lewis said. But the same bill included $14,000 in overcharges, so the patient came out ahead by $8,000.

Ross said the AHA is working with national groups and coalitions to try to reduce hospital paperwork and to make the billing system more efficient and uniform.

Religious right rises through ashes of Bush's defeat

By JOHN KING AP Political Writer

CHESAPEAKE, Va. (AP) - In the ashes of George Bush's defeat, a young political organizer named Ralph Reed saw the seeds of revival. "For Christians," he says, "without a crucifixion there is no resurrection."

Insurrection may be a more fitting word to describe Reed's ultimate political goal for the Christian right, but the Biblical metaphor is fitting: His is the business of mixing religion and politics.

The movement is one of the country's most intriguing and controversial political forces. Still young, its potential in elective politics has barely been tested.

wary of the approach, worried the shift in emphasis will offend the movement's most loyal followers.

Said Martin Mawyer of the Christian Action Network. "Our supporters want groups out there to protect them on the social issues."

This debate over the movement's long-term course comes in a year in which the Christian right's state efforts to limit homosexual rights, restrict abortion access and reshape America's public schools.

These skirmishes are being waged in precincts and tiny congregations across America with the help of thousands of field workers fundamentalist churches. "God's people will not be locked into silence by Satan."

It is such entwining of God and politics that angers, and frightens, the Christian right's critics.

"They intend to take their Biblebased religious beliefs and make them our civil laws," said Susan Glickman, who heads the liberal People for the American Way chapter in Florida. "They believe they are doing God's work.'

Her views are common among the cultivated from evangelical and Christian right's opponents: liberals who argue the movement wants to erase any separation of church and state; moderate Republicans who believe their party is falling under its control; and even many religious groups and clergy who accuse religious conservatives, in their zealous condemnation of abortion and homosexuality, of preaching intolerance in the name of God.

> To movement leaders, their role is no different than the AFL-CIO is to union members or the Chamber of Commerce to businesses.

Discovery begins chasing orbiting space telescope

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP)

- Discovery's astronauts, fresh off a rigorous tool-testing spacewalk, today began chasing an orbiting ultraviolet telescope they dropped off Monday.

The telescope, mounted on a German-made platform, had trailed Discovery by more than 50 miles at times while spying on distant stars. Through a series of engine firings today, the shuttle passed four miles over the telescope and dropped in behind it.

Crew members were able to glimpse the 7,000-pound satellite as they approached.

"It's like a very, very bright light out the overhead window," said Discovery commander Frank Culbertson Jr.

The shuttle will now trail the satellite by up to 46 miles until Sunday, when astronaut Daniel Bursch is to pluck it from space with the 50-foot robot arm for the trip home. It's the only major task remaining before Discovery heads back to Kennedy Space Center in Florida early Tuesday.

Mission Control, which traditionally wakes astronauts with theme music for the day's activities, got a surprise late Thursday night when astronauts beat them to it.

They beamed down composer Aaron Copland's Fanfare for the Common Man five minutes before their scheduled wake up call from Earth.

"We didn't mean to preempt your music, just precede it," Culbertson told Mission Control's Susan Helms.

The five-man crew later conduct-man worked on an investigation of spaceflight's effects on digestive functions. They ate a special breakfast, then gave saliva, blood and urine samples for the test they dubbed "Spit, Pee and Burp."

"It's always an exciting set of data takes," Newman said.

The crew also repressurized Discovery's cabin, which was partially depressed for several days to help spacewalkers avoid the scuba-diving malady known as "the bends" when they stepped into the space vacuum.

Newman and crewmate Carl Walz spent seven hours Thursday working outside, mostly along the edge of Discovery's payload bay but at times floating over a wing at more than 17,000 miles per hour.

They tested a power ratchet and five other tools NASA is planning to send on the Hubble Space Telescope repair mission. It was the astronauts' third and final spacewalk to prepare for that important 11-day flight in December.

Milt Heflin, flight director for the Hubble mission, said the spacewalk was "a confidence builder, a day that I consider adding to our margins for success."

Texans help mark Mexican celebration of independence day

By The Associated Press

Mexican music, parades and patriotic speeches have launched a Texas celebration of Diez y Seis de Septiembre, marking Mexico's fight for independence from Spain.

"The love of freedom and democratic government which inspired Mexico's bid for independence parallels our own devotion to such ideals," said state Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, who sponsored Thursday's Diez y Seis celebration at the Texas Capitol.

The Austin festivities featured traditional Mexican folk dances, Mexican cowboy rope tricks and an address by Jorge Lara-Braud, theologian, author and civil rights advocate.

El Paso's Diez y Seis celebration kicked off Wednesday when Jose Oramas, acting Mexican consul, gave the traditional "grito de independencia," or cry of independence, at San Jacinto Plaza in downtown.

The mayor of neighboring Juarez, Mexico, Francisco Villarreal, appeared on the balcony of the Juarez City Hall that night to lead the "grito" there, joining mayors across Mexico in opening the independence celebration.

Hundreds of people lined downtown streets in Juarez on Thursday to watch the colorful Diez y Seis parade, featuring school children, police and marching army units.

Celebrations were expected to last all weekend in El Paso, where several feetivals were planned festivals were planned.

San Antonio's Diez y Seis celebration got going last weekend with a parade on the city's west side that included boxing promoter Don King and Mexican fighter Julio Cesar Chavez

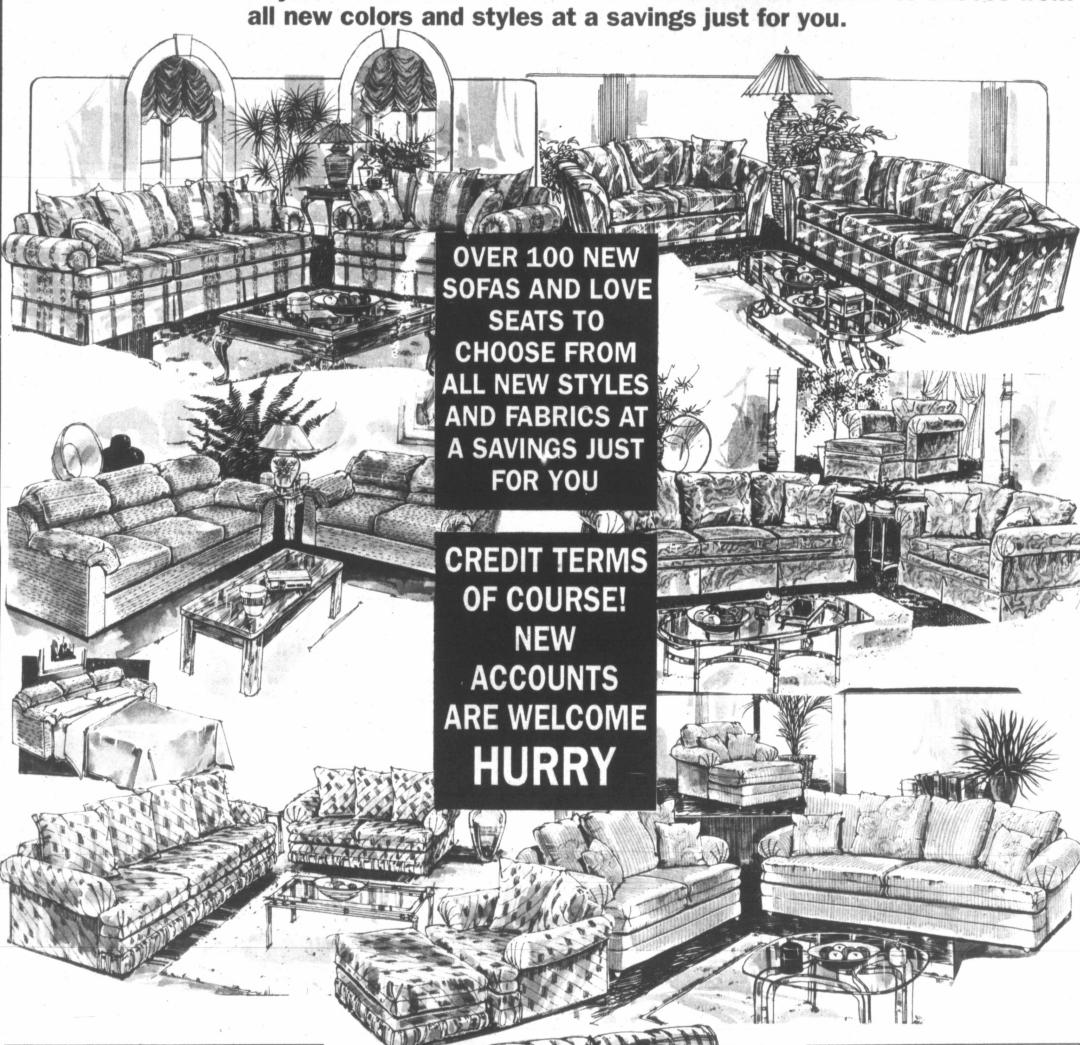

At a San Antonio celebration Wednesday evening, the Guadalupe Dance Company performed dances from the Mexican states of Tabasco, Veracruz and Jalisco.

"This is a very special night. It's almost like spending this evening back in Mexico," said Mexican Vice Consul Eduardo Cervera.

Georgia hosts high-scoring Red Raiders

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Georgia will be trying to avoid its first 0-3 start since 1979 when the Bulldogs entertain high-scoring Texas Tech Saturday.

The Red Raiders (1-1) are averaging 41 points and 455 yards so far, and gave coach Ray Goff and his staff cause for concern last week when they led Nebraska 21-20 after three quarters before eventually losing 50-27.

Tech's offense presents some of the same problems Georgia faced last week in a 38-6 loss at Tennessee.
