PAMPA — An 11-item agenda is set for Gray County commissioners at their regular meeting 9 a.m. Wednesday on the second floor of the courthouse. They are to consider a facilities agreement with Texas Department of Criminal Justice, a resolution concerning U.S.-made products and a letter from the U.S. Department of Agriculture for increased county support for the state trapper. Commissioners will consider plans and recommendations from the White Deer Land Museum board concerning the new annex and consider approval of transfer of hangar space at Perry Lefors Airfield and lease agreement. The panel will consider certification to Texas Department of Transportation the county maintained roads.

PAMPA — Fifteen Democrats from Pampa will join more than 9,000 from across Texas in Fort Worth on Thursday for the State Democratic Convention, according to John W. Warner, the delegation chair for Gray County.

Attending from Pampa as delegates are Kara Kay Skaggs, Jim Osborne, Jim Greene, Kathleen Green, Tim Haigood, Billie Bruner, Bobbie Johnson, Brenda Moody, Judy Warner and John W. Warner.

Alternates are Zetha Dougherty, Alicia Hall, Warren Chisum, Ellen Steele and Patti Warner. Kathleen Greene is seeking place on the state resolution committee.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pity the contestants in this spelling bee. Not only did they have to spell brain busters like "xyloglyphy," "cocygeal" and "ichneumon," but they had to do it under the gaze of the best spellers in the land — their children.

The parents of the kids in this year's National Spelling Bee battled into the wee hours of the morning in an orthographic showdown of their own.

It ended at 1 a.m. when a trio of parents snared the crown — and $750 each in cash and other prizes — by spelling "xyloglyphy."

"Is it from the Greek, 'glyphen,' to carve?" Dr. Steve Urban, an internist from Amarillo, Texas, asked the judges in the 13th and climactic round.

Assured that it was, the doctor rattled off the correct spelling of the abstruse word for an artistic wood carving. His partners were Runi Niyogi of Willingboro, N.J., and Dorothy Leong of Littleton, Colo.

Most of the 238 children who will compete this Wednesday and Thursday had long since retreated upstairs to their hotel room beds when the inaugural "Parents of Champions" contest drew to a close.

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — The man accused of trying to assassinate former Nation of Islam spokesman Khalid Abdul Muhammad was a defrocked minister in the sect who police said had armed himself heavily before the attack.

James Edward Bess allegedly used a 9mm pistol in the attack, hitting Muhammad in the legs and wounding four bodyguards and a bystander outside the university auditorium where the black Muslim leader was speaking on Sunday.

Police also found two loaded 9mm handguns in a backpack and a loaded rifle with a scope in a car nearby, Police Chief Ken Fortier said. Both the backpack and the car were believed to belong to Best.

Fortier also said police were trying to learn the source of a note that was handed to Muhammad on stage, moments before the shooting. Muhammad read the note, and then suggested that the crowd leave the auditorium.

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Bill Clinton's gubernatorial campaign filed its May 1986 report, it disclosed only some of the donations it collected at a controversial savings and loan fund-raiser hosted by Clinton's Whitewater business partner.

Missing from the report — the only one on the public record detailing Clinton's 1985 activities — is any mention of four donations totaling $12,000 from the fund-raiser that now are under investigation by the Whitewater special prosecutor.

Federal S&L investigators have alleged in a criminal referral — a recommendation by investigators for possible prosecution — that those donations were diverted illegally from an Arkansas S&L owned by Clinton's Whitewater partner, James McDougal. Most of the donations were in the form of cashier's checks.

The existence of the May 1986 report has not been reported since the Whitewater real estate dealings gained prominence in 1992. And the fact that Clinton's campaign appears to have reported some donations from the fund-raiser and not others is also new.

Charges expected as Rostenkowski rejects deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal grand jury was expected to indict Rep. Dan Rostenkowski on corruption charges today after the Illinois Democrat rejected a plea bargain, saying "I am confident that I will be vindicated."

The feisty chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, one of the top deal-makers in Congress, set the stage for an indictment when he vowed Monday to "fight to regain my reputation in court." Rostenkowski said he would temporarily leave his chairmanship, remain in Congress and run for a 19th term in November.

Prosecutors were ready to oblige Rostenkowski's challenge: U.S. Attorney Eric Holder scheduled a midafternoon announcement concerning Rostenkowski. Holder was expected to obtain a grand jury indictment on charges that the congressman defrauded taxpayers of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Holder had given Rostenkowski until today to accept or reject a plea bargain offer that would have allowed him to plead guilty to a felony, serve a short jail term and resign from Congress.

James Jaffe, a spokesman for the House Ways and Means Committee, said Rostenkowski was not in Washington today, but he didn't know where the congressman was. There was no answer at Rostenkowski's Chicago office.

The answering machine in the press office at Ways and Means carried a message that began: "This is an island of stability in a sea of change. This is still the Ways and Means press office...."

If Rostenkowski surrenders his gavel, Rep. Sam Gibbons, D-Fla., would be likely to take over the committee as it struggles with President Clinton's health care reform bill.

Rostenkowski, 66, would be forced to vacate his post anyway under House Democratic Caucus rules — which demand that a chairman step aside if indicted for a felony carrying a prison term of two or more years.

But the White House said Rostenkowski would remain a key player on the committee in President Clinton's push for health care reform.

"He's been an important player on health care ... and certainly the members have made it clear they will continue to work with him, and that's true of the White House as well," Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said today.

"I think it's important that people keep in mind that he's innocent until proven guilty," Myers said. "If he was to decide to take a stand to fight to prove that, that's certainly his prerogative."

Three members of his committee — Democrats Charles Rangel of New York and Mike Andrews of Texas and Republican Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania — agreed today that Rostenkowski would remain a force on the committee.

Memorial Day honors those killed in wars, other dead

From Staff and Wire Reports

Although Memorial Day began in 1868 to remember those killed in combat, some Texans used the day to honor others.

In the East Texas town of Gladewater, the Wild Bunch motorcycle gang continued its 11-year tradition of escorting JoAnn Biglow to the grave of her son, Jergy Smith.

The gang rode in formation Monday with their headlights on, following Mrs. Biglow's family's cars to the cemetery where Smith is buried. Small American flags were attached to motorcycles and cars.

An arrangement of cloth roses and a wreath were placed by the grave of Smith, who founded the gang a year before his death.

"I've tried to keep his memory alive, and the boys in the motorcycle club have helped me do that ... so now I say I lost one son but that I've gained many," Mrs. Biglow said.

Also in East Texas, Republican gubernatorial candidate George W. Bush spoke at a Tyler ceremony. Bush, a former Air National Guard pilot, recounted veterans who inspired him — including his father, former U.S. president and Navy pilot George Bush.

Elsewhere around Texas, veterans and their friends and family members gathered at ceremonies to honor those killed during wartime.

Pampa veterans, family members and friends observed Memorial Day with services in Memorial Park on Monday.

The services included a speech by Rev. M.B. Smith. Pampa Police Chief Chuck Flemins recited a poem about the American flag.

Art Owen played taps while Joe Martinez sang "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

A wreath was placed at the base of the Memorial Park monument by Tommy Adams.

The future site of the Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial was dedicated in Midland. It will honor 220 killed or missing residents from the area.

Organizers hope the star-shaped memorial, featuring U.S., Texas and Vietnam POW-MIA flags, will be completed by Veterans Day.

In Dallas, the county historical society unveiled a marker at Freedman's Cemetery, a lost black graveyard that recently was rediscovered during highway construction. About 1,000 bodies were found at the 19th century burial ground, and officials are relocating the bodies.

In McAllen, retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Walter Baxter spoke to about 40 American Legion members at Roselawn Cemetery.

"We must maintain a strong nation," Baxter said. "As General (Douglas) MacArthur said, only the dead have seen the end of war."

A 21-gun salute and the mournful sounds of "Taps" concluded the service.

In Abilene, William O. Beazley escorted a white, riderless horse around the flower-laden graves of Elmwood Memorial Park to commemorate those who died.

Canadian oilman, philanthropist dies

By RANDAL K. MCGAVOCK
Staff Writer

CANADIAN — Malouf "Oofie" Abraham Sr., a beloved Panhandle legend, oilman and philanthropist, died Monday in Canadian, the city he was born in and called home most of his life.

Known to many in the Panhandle simply as "Oofie," friends, employers and coworkers remembered him as a man who left his mark in many people's lives.

"Oofie put his money where his mouth was," said Dick Waterfield, who recalled Mr. Abraham's generosity when it came to money for charitable organizations or advice.

Some of the many organizations he contributed to included the Amarillo Area Foundation to establish a scholarship fund as well as endowment funds at West Texas A&M University and Texas Tech University, where he attended college for three years.

Many of the funds go to scholarships which help agriculture students from the Panhandle.

In addition, Mr. Abraham also contributed to the YMCA, the Edward Abraham Memorial Home and the Little House Day Care Center in Canadian.

The son of Lebanese immigrants, Mr. Abraham was a self-made millionaire who speculated in the oil and gas industry, leasing mineral rights throughout the eastern Texas Panhandle.

E.C. Sidwell, a Pampa business associate of Mr. Abraham in the oil business, remembered him as a decent man with an open mind and a head for the business.

"He was the finest fellow that you ever saw," said Ed Vincent, a Lefors resident and ranchhand who works for the Abrahams.

A man of many talents, Mr. Abraham had owned and operated a restaurant in Canadian, sold insurance with his brother, Naceeb, and even sold horned toads and ran a coat check service at the State Fair of Texas while in Dallas.

Malouf Abraham, Sr.

Besides the private sector, he was also active in politics.

Serving two terms of office, in 1953 and again in 1955, Mr. Abraham was elected mayor of Canadian. In 1965, he was elected to the Texas House of Representatives and served two terms.

In the years following his time in public office, Mr. Abraham stayed involved in Republican politics as an advisor and contributor.

During World War II, he served for a brief time in the U.S. Army.

In addition to his wife, Iris, Mr. Abraham is survived by two sons, Dr. Malouf Abraham Jr. of Canadian, and Bill Ed Abraham of Dallas; a daughter, Betty Abraham Cooper of Canadian; and two brothers, Tom Abraham of Canadian, and Naceeb Abraham of Amarillo.

Funeral services for Mr. Abraham will be at 3 p.m. Wednesday at the First Presbyterian Church with the Rev. Jerry H. Boles officiating. Burial will be at the Edith Ford Cemetery in Canadian.

State fights Pantex Superfund designation

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards and other state officials are trying to block the Pantex nuclear weapons plant from becoming marked as a Superfund cleanup site.

Texas leaders say they fear increased oversight, delays and costs at the facility where U.S. nuclear bombs are dismantled.

But other people say a Superfund designation could strengthen regulatory authority over Pantex, located 17 miles northeast of Amarillo.

Richards wrote a letter May 24 to Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Carol Browner, asking the EPA to reconsider.

"Designating Pantex as a federal Superfund site will not result in a cleaner or healthier facility," Richards wrote. "It will, however, threaten the state's ability to oversee and participate in the remediation."

"State oversight is essential to assuring the public that ground water in the area will not be endangered by Pantex's continued operations."

Superfund, a program that encompasses the nation's most contaminated toxic-waste sites, has drawn fire over mounting legal costs and slow cleanups.

Tom Walton, an Energy Department spokesman, said Pantex has not received official notice about becoming a Superfund site.

However, EPA officials told the Amarillo Globe-News that the designation will be formalized today.

When the plant was proposed for the Superfund about three years ago, Pantex officials contested its hazard ranking scores.

"It's based on evidence," said Beverly Gattis, president of Serious Texans Against Nuclear Dumping, "and if the evidence supports the (hazard ranking) scores, then sure I think it's fair and right that people should know that this is an important cleanup that needs to be done."

Pantex is in the process of determining the extent of contamination at the 16,000-acre plant.

Arson blamed in motel fire that killed four young Texans

METAIRIE, La. (AP) — They were four young Texans in search of a fun Memorial Day weekend in New Orleans.
 They died tragically in a fire, apparently set by an angry man who was denied a towel at the suburban motel where they were staying.
 "They were basically all in the wrong place at the wrong time. The arsonist probably never gave a thought there were other people in the building," said Richard Halliburton, the father of one of the victims.
 Investigators searched the records of a fire-damaged motel, hoping a name or room number might lead them to the man suspected of setting the fatal blaze.

Supreme Court says 'inappropriate' participants may be barred from government-sponsored events

By RICHARD CARELLI
 Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today refused to rein in the power of government-sponsored events such as fairs, festivals and parades to bar "inappropriate" groups from participating.
 The court, over one dissenting vote, turned aside the appeal of an abortion advocacy group that said its free-speech rights were violated when it was excluded from the 1990 "Great Pumpkin Festival" in Frankfort, Ky.
 The court also refused to hear a counter-appeal by the festival's sponsor.
 Justice Sandra Day O'Connor dissented, voting to review the dispute.
 The Halloween festival, aimed at promoting the downtown revitalization of Kentucky's capital city, features booths for vendors, civic groups and others along a street turned into a pedestrian mall.
 The festival is sponsored by Downtown Frankfort Inc., a private organization that took over running the event from the city government.
 Capitol Area Right to Life (CARTL) participated in the 1989 festival. Many people complained, particularly about the anti-abortion group's giving plastic fetuses to children.

When CARTL again applied for a booth in 1990, the group was told it was too controversial to participate in the festival. Similar applications from the Kentucky chapter of National Organization for Women and the Kentucky Religious Coalition for Abortion Rights were turned down.
 After the 1989 experience, festival officials adopted a policy stating that booths, meant to be for fun and entertainment, could be denied "to any displayer (or) merchandiser deemed inappropriate to that theme and purpose."
 There are no formal guidelines to identify what might be inappropriate.
 CARTL sued in state court, contending it was denied equal access to a public forum — a violation of its free-speech rights.
 A state judge and appeals court ruled that no such violation could have occurred because Downtown Frankfort Inc. is a private entity. Only the government or an agent of the government can violate someone's constitutional rights.
 The Kentucky Supreme Court ruled last July that Downtown Frankfort Inc. is a government agent because the city has delegated control of the festival to it. But the state court also ruled, by a 5-2 vote, that no constitutional violation occurred.
 "It is a critical fact ... that CARTL's counterparts, NOW and the Religious Coalition for Abortion Rights, were also denied booths," the state court said. Members of all three groups still are free to attend the festival and talk about their causes, it said.

 The Kentucky court's two dissenting members said their colleagues had misinterpreted the meaning of "content-neutral" regulation the Constitution generally requires.
 "To say an individual enjoys freedom of speech except as to the question of the content of the speech is contradictory to the real meaning of the First Amendment," they said. "It is similar to saying you have a right to free speech as long as the state can control what you say."
 In the appeal acted on today, lawyers for CARTL said the Kentucky court's ruling condones an "attempt to push abortion debate out of the marketplace of ideas."
 In a separate appeal, lawyers for Downtown Frankfort Inc. said the state court ruled incorrectly on the government-action issue.
 For several years, sponsors of the St. Patrick's Day Parade in New York City have refused to allow homosexual rights groups from marching. A federal judge in 1993 ruled that city officials could not force the sponsors to allow participation by such groups.

Court rejects challenge to Dallas curfew for teens

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today rejected a challenge to a Dallas curfew called unconstitutional by some teenagers and their parents.
 The court, without comment, let stand a ruling that said the curfew properly is aimed at "protecting juveniles from crimes on the streets."
 Many American cities have adopted similar curfews to curtail rising crime rates. Most, but not all, of those curfews challenged in court have been upheld.

 Those challenging the curfew adopted by the Dallas City Council in 1991 and amended the next year said it "convicts the innocent (and) broadly stifles fundamental liberties."
 But city officials said the curfew is "at most a minimal intrusion significantly outweighed by the compelling state interest advanced."

 The curfew ordinance prohibits anyone under 17 from being in public places — including streets, stores, restaurants, schools and movie houses — after 11 p.m. on weeknights and after midnight on weekends.
 The ordinance has numerous exceptions for youths either accompanied by parents or guardians or with other approved reasons for being out during the curfew, which extends to 6 a.m.

Those found to have violated the curfew can be fined up to $500 for each occurrence.
 Elizabeth Qutb and other parents of teenagers sued in federal court, contending that the curfew violated their children's freedom of speech and association and parents' right to raise their families as they see fit.
 A federal judge agreed and in 1992, barred the city from enforcing the curfew. But the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed that ruling.

NASA's next generation control room ready to work

By MIKE DRAGO
Associated Press Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — John Muratore says the dimly lit room, full of sleek royal-blue consoles and flashing computer screens, reminds him of the bridge on Captain Kirk's starship Enterprise.

Though Muratore is no Kirk, the room he captains might be even better.

Little will phase the new $350 million Mission Control Center — NASA will be able to command a space shuttle and a space station — orbiting simultaneously — with capacity to spare.

Muratore, who is directing development of the fledgling facility, beams like a proud new father while showing visitors around NASA's new digs.

"This is the future," he says. "This is different from all the other flight control rooms in the Johnson Space Center."

"This room can control shuttles or (the space) station. It can control a vehicle flying back to the moon."

For now, shuttles are monitored from the old Mission Control at Johnson. It's the same cramped room, filled with the same bulky consoles, that flight managers baptized in June 1965 when astronaut Ed White stepped outside a Gemini capsule for the first American spacewalk.

Eighty-six manned spaceflights later, the old center is gradually slipping into retirement.

The new Mission Control, two control rooms in a five-story addition to the building that houses two control rooms in the old center, indeed bears a resemblance to the fictional bridge roamed by Mr. Spock, Sulu and the rest of Kirk's crew.

In each room, curved consoles are arranged in broken rows with an aisle leading from a projection screen in front to the terminal where flight directors will reign over activities in space.

Stacks of ring-bound paperwork, clipboards and manuals familiar to television viewers will be eliminated, the information stored on computer and accessible to any controller at any time.

The center is already being tested, and training sessions for flight controllers start in December.

NASA will command payload operations during a shuttle flight from the center next May. Then the new room has its first solo flight in July 1995, monitoring all aspects of a shuttle flight except launch and landing.

An old Mission Control room will still be used for the two most critical phases of spaceflight for some time, Muratore said.

"You don't just turn a switch one day and everybody shows up over here," he said. "What you want to do is get into it gradually."

When the conversion is complete, flight managers will have made a 30-year leap in technology.

The big difference is the switch from a computer network that relies heavily on hardware — unique equipment that is expensive to maintain — to a system of generic workstations.

In the old control rooms, each of the 204 flight positions were custom-made. The 197 workstations in the new control center are identical and can be found in many retail computer stores.

The system works this way: A control center worker, say the flight director, comes to work during a shuttle mission. Although he generally would be assigned a seat in Mission Control, he could sit at any terminal. Six seconds after he logs in, the workstation knows his job and provides him the appropriate computer tools.

That flexibility allows a particular control room to accommodate a shuttle flight today and a trip to Mars tomorrow, Muratore said. In the old center, the transition would take several months.

Flight controllers will enjoy such benefits as full-color computer displays and 3-D graphics. The old displays are monochrome and controllers stare at rows of numbers.

Workers will also notice improved ergonomics. The old control rooms, with tiered rows of consoles crammed together and aimed toward a wall of maps and video screens, were designed for the intensity of launch and re-entry.

In the new rooms, the lights can be dimmed, there's plenty of space between consoles and the room is flat, not tiered. It's all designed for the space station era, when Mission Control would be used 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

U.N. sends team to investigate possible Rwandan massacre

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The United Nations today sent a team to investigate reports that 500 people were massacred in Red Cross refugee camps outside Rwanda's capital.

And the death of a U.N. peacekeeper killed today during shelling in the capital, Kigali, prompted officials to suspend all operations pending an investigation, said U.N. spokesman Abdul Kabia.

The Senegalese captain died instantly after a shell fired from a rebel position hit the U.N. car he was driving, which had a U.N. flag, Kabia said.

He said until it can be determined whether the killing was an accident, the United Nations has temporarily suspended activities in Kigali, including patrols, a feeding program and a 5-day-old operation to evacuate people it has been sheltering around the city. They also protested to rebel forces.

Earlier in the day, the United Nations also protested to the warring Rwandan factions the continuing atrocities in the ethnic carnage that has ravaged Rwanda since a suspicious April 6 plane crash killed Rwanda's president.

Kabia said most of the people in the Kabgayi refugee camps 22 miles southwest of Kigali are ethnic Tutsis, the minority that has been the main target of attacks by the mainly Hutu government soldiers and civilian militias.

An estimated 200,000 Rwandans have been killed — mostly Tutsis or Hutu opponents of the government, and 2 million have fled their homes.

U.S. income up, spending down

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' income rose a moderate 0.4 percent in April but spending slipped 0.1 percent, the government said today.

The Commerce Department reported that consumer spending, which represents two-thirds of the nation's economic activity, was down for only the second time in the last 13 months. It climbed a revised 0.7 percent in March.

But disposable income — income after taxes — slipped 0.2 percent in April after a 0.6 percent increase. Income before taxes also rose 0.6 percent in March.

The Commerce Department said the April drop in disposable income resulted from higher tax payments due that month under a new law that applies to high income families.

The combination of incomes and spending meant that Americans' savings rate — savings as a percentage of disposable income — was 3.5 percent in April, slipping from 3.6 percent the previous month.

The figures for spending and income were in line with economists' expectations and may reflect an economy that is growing at a slower pace. The economy expanded at a 7 percent annual rate in the final three months of 1993 but slowed to a 3 percent rate for the first quarter this year.

South Korean forces on alert; Pressure up on North

By PAUL SHIN
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — South Korea put its armed forces and police on alert today as international pressure intensified on North Korea to allow U.N. inspectors to study its nuclear reactor.

But the North's hard-line Communist government showed no sign of relenting, and renewed warnings that it would consider any economic sanctions an act of war.

South Korean officials said the military alert was part of preparations for President Kim Young-sam's weeklong visit to Russia beginning Wednesday. Under the alert, customary whenever the president is abroad, the South will step up troop readiness and surveillance of North Korean military movements.

Kim also telephoned President Clinton after the U.N. Security Council adopted a non-binding statement late Monday urging North Korea to stop refueling its reactor in a way that could destroy evidence of its nuclear intentions.

North Korea claims its nuclear program is peaceful, but its 15-month refusal to allow full inspections has heightened suspicions it is trying to build nuclear weapons.

During the 20-minute telephone conversation, Clinton told Kim the situation has reached "a very dangerous stage," according to Kim's spokesman Choo Don-shik.

The White House confirmed the leaders spoke but had no immediate comment on what was said.

The Security Council's statement made no mention of economic sanctions, but they are considered a likely next move if North Korea does not allow inspectors to carry out their work.

Kim Su Man, North Korea's deputy ambassador to the United Nations, said after the statement's adoption that the Pyongyang regime would consider sanctions "something like an act of war" against North Korea.

The North has previously threatened to turn Seoul into a "sea of flames" if sanctions or other punitive steps were taken.

U.S. Sen. Sam Nunn, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, warned North Korea it should realize that its warnings about war could bring a buildup of U.S. military forces in the region.

Air-traffic decontrol requires better plan

The Clinton administration proposal to turn the country's air-traffic control over to a quasi-governmental corporation would be an improvement over the present antiquated operation.

But the proposal contains several flaws significant enough to reduce the benefits a more thoroughgoing reform would bring. The Clinton proposal is a solid beginning, but Congress would do well to modify and improve it.

When air travel was substantially deregulated during the Carter administration, the number of planes flying, flights available and passengers all increased substantially as prices declined and safety improved. But air-traffic control remained in the hands of the Federal Aviation Administration, the agency charged with maintaining air safety.

It exhibited and exhibits all the predictable flaws of a government monopoly. It is achingly slow to adopt new technology (it's one of the nation's largest users of vacuum tubes and still uses some 1950s-vintage UNIVAC computers), and is hampered by rigid and impractical labor rules and procurement procedures. Although it's supposed to be funded by landing fees paid to a "trust fund," in practice it's funded by politicized appropriations.

The result? Air traffic control is like a giant lead weight on airline travel, producing delays and an alarming number of potential safety problems. A private system could improve safety in two big ways — by quickly replacing outmoded and unreliable equipment with state-of-the-art electronics and by using variable pricing to reduce congestion and delays at major airports — and through numerous smaller, less immediately visible improvements in operational efficiency.

The Clinton proposal would remove air-traffic control from the FAA (eliminating a built-in problem in which the FAA regulates itself) and create a government corporation. It would be funded by fees (taxes, really) assessed on commercial airlines. It would have more flexible labor and procurement policies, and would presumably be able to install advanced technology more quickly than the old system could.

Unfortunately, the resulting "corporation" also would have some characteristics of the corporations that run the Postal Service and Amtrak. It would be able to borrow from the U.S. Treasury on favorable terms, relieving it of the financial discipline imposed by private lenders. All its board members would be appointed by the president, making the board an intensely political body.

Another problem is that commercial airlines would be required to pay all the costs of the new system, even though they use only about two-thirds of the capacity. The government uses about 15 percent, and general aviation — from hobbyists to corporate jets — accounts for the rest. Both would be free riders.

But the Clinton proposal offers a starting point for creating a real corporation — perhaps owned by a consortium of users rather than by the government — that responds to the market discipline that makes for efficiency. If a new Amtrak-like company is formed, it will be noticeably more efficient than the current system, but considerably less efficient and less safe than it could be.

Haiti's troubles become ours

To a man with a hammer, everything looks like a nail, and it seems that Bill Clinton will not rest until he can show that he, like every president worth his salt, knows how to use American military power good and hard. Burned in Somalia, constrained in Bosnia, frustrated by North Korea, he finds a tempting opportunity in Haiti.

For the moment, the administration hopes a tightening of economic sanctions will persuade Haiti's military rulers to accept the return of the democratically elected president they evicted in 1991. But Clinton made a point of noting recently that his patience has "run out" and that he would not "discount the possibility of a military option."

Coming from this president, such threats can normally be understood as a way to keep his jaws limber. But Haiti may be the rare case where Clinton actually means what he says.

When Lawrence Pezullo was recently fired as special envoy to Haiti, he warned Secretary of State Warren Christopher that "we are heading irrevocably down a path toward unilateral military intervention." The Los Angeles Times reported that the president has decided to send at least 600 troops to "purge" the Haitian army — a report the administration denied, but not too vigorously.

Haiti has been a self-made embarrassment to Clinton for his entire presidency. Having criticized George Bush during the campaign for his "cruel" and "illegal" policy of forcibly returning refugees intercepted at sea, he then affirmed the practice as soon as he took office. He sent a shipload of lightly armed troops to perform humanitarian work in Haiti, only to bring the ship home when an armed mob in Port-au-Prince threatened to make trouble.

Clinton's aides have alternated between saying exiled president Jean-Bertrand Aristide needs to make compromises and saying he doesn't need to. A month ago, they conceded that he would probably never be restored to power. Now they apparently are preparing the American public for a military invasion to assure that he is. In Haiti, as in other parts of the world, inconsistency has been the only consistent feature of Clinton's approach.

He brings to mind Mort Sahl's definition of a liberal as someone who wouldn't take his own side in an argument. When political activist Randall Robinson began a hunger strike to protest Clinton's handling of Haiti, Clinton applauded, saying, "He ought to stay out there. We need to change our policy." Ah, if only Bill Clinton were president ...

The question is not whether the U.S. military could occupy Haiti and depose the thugs who now run it. It could, without much strain. The questions are why it ought to and what it would do next.

Repression, which is not exactly a new development in Haiti, has never been regarded as a danger to vital American interests before. The only inconvenience to us this time around is the exodus of Haitian boat people who threaten to congest the beaches of Florida. But their numbers would diminish considerably if we were to lift the embargo, which has managed to be destructive without being effective.

Returning Aristide wouldn't necessarily end authoritarianism in Haiti, given the CIA's prediction that "he will rule with violence" — as he did during his brief tenure as president. The Bush administration, which pressed for sanctions immediately after his overthrow, eventually came to regard Aristide as more problem than solution.

Former Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said last year that "there are very serious questions about (Aristide's) mental stability." Brent Scowcroft, Bush's national security adviser, ventured that he is "probably a certifiable psychopath." The American people may wonder why American lives and resources should be expended on behalf of a nut case.

Invading would be the easy part, as it was in Somalia. The hard part is policing a country where you have many enemies, another Somalia lesson that shouldn't need repeating.

Going in also raises the minor issue of when we will be able to get out. If we make a quick exit, Aristide may be toppled once again. So we may end up stuck there until that distant day when Haiti evolves into a stable democracy. Wisconsin Democratic Rep. David Obey, who last month urged an invasion, implied that the peacekeepers should buy rather than rent, since he thinks they'll be staying for at least a decade.

Clinton may hope to be able to let other countries handle that grunt work after we've gotten the glory. But unexpected events can derail the best of intentions. If the president wants to expose U.S. soldiers and taxpayers to the burden of making Haiti an American ward well into the next century, his constituents should ask if that's a load they want to carry.

Please, let's keep U.S. out of Haiti

Charley Reese

Some people, including senators and the president, are talking about using military force in Haiti. The United States should not do that.

First, the United States has no moral or legal right to invade another country not at war with us. Call it what you like, it's international gangsterism. A big country bullying a small one. There will never be peace as long as countries use force to settle disputes, and I hold with Ben Franklin that there's never been a good war or a bad peace.

Second, the United States has no interests at all, let alone strategic interests, in Haiti. If there were another 1,000 miles of open seas between Haiti and the United States, the politicians wouldn't even be talking about it. They only talk about it because of the nuisance of Haitian refugees.

Third, you can't restore democracy to Haiti, assuming you wish to call one election democracy, by installing an ousted president at the point of a Marine bayonet.

Fourth, it's time for the United States to stop doing for other people what they should do for themselves. I can't speak for you, but I'm tired of people leaving their country, coming here, forming a lobby and hiring a public relations firm, and asking us, "Will you send your sons down to my country to fight for my liberty?"

themselves and holding on to their cushy public jobs.

Is our refugee policy racist? You bet it is. Thanks to an amendment by Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., any Soviet Jew who says he or she fears political persecution must be accepted as a refugee. Cubans get the same red carpet, a holdover from the Cold War days when anyone fleeing a communist country had a good chance of being accepted as a refugee.

Haitians? Well, they have to prove they are fleeing persecution, as do Asians and others. Like our foreign policy, our refugee policy is based on lobbies and campaign contributions, not principles.

Actually, we should repeal the political asylum laws and not accept refugees from anywhere. In a world of 5.5 billion people, including 250 million Americans, it is an archaic concept. Believe me, there are a lot more refugees, political and economic, than the United States can absorb, and the numbers will swell in the future.

But if that gaggle of politicians we call a Congress cannot bring themselves to face reality and repeal asylum laws, then they should at least have one set of rules for everyone, no exceptions. The present policy is so unjust it stinks like a pile of dead rats.

Government doesn't give money's worth

As consumers, we all know that merchandise occasionally fails to work properly, or doesn't perform up to the standards we expect. When this happens, it's usually not too difficult to exchange the merchandise or get a refund.

This seems pretty fair. Even better, the whole relationship between consumers and the products we buy — and where we buy them — is voluntary.

Yet there's one thing we pay for over and over again that we don't purchase voluntarily and that is controlled by a monopoly.

That product is government. The cost, of course, is the taxes we pay.

Do you think you're getting your money's worth? Big government is, naturally, the one "product" liberal "public interest" lobbies and pressure groups never complain about. Alar-tainted apples would kill our kids. Prescription drugs are too costly, they complain. Air-conditioning coolants are destroying the ozone layer. It seems that everything business does is bad.

Yet they never complain about the poor quality and high cost of government. And, unlike business, if you don't like what you're getting from government, tough: We have to keep on paying. There's no choice. And the "product" is never on sale. Far from it.

In 1950, the average family with children paid only 2 percent of its annual income in taxes. Today, that same family pays 24.5 percent of its income to the government. When you add state and local taxes, the average family with children pays 38 percent of its yearly income to government.

And "prices" are going up, thanks to the 1990 and 1993 tax increases.

Are you getting your money's worth? Look at the big picture. The Department of Education will spend $30.3 billion this year and the Department of Justice $10.2 billion. Who among us (any volunteers?) can argue with a straight face that as a result of these huge expenditures school achievement scores will go up and crime rates will go down?

Of course we shouldn't overlook the pork — such vital programs as the International Coffee Organization ($947,000) and the Junior Duck Stamp Program ($100,000). But what's more outrageous are the big programs that fail to accomplish their goals yet keep on getting funded at higher levels. Imagine a private company demanding more of your money after giving you defective merchandise over and over again. Yet three decades and nearly $5 trillion later, the government demands more for a "war on poverty" even liberals recognize as a failure.

Products from the private sector are introduced after expensive research and development. Not so with the government assembly line. Congress had less than a day to read and analyze — before they passed — last year's 3,000-page tax legislation. That's some research! The Clinton health-care monstrosity is total fantasy — worthy of the great Rube Goldberg, but otherwise untried, untested and unprecedented in its naive complexity.

When products are sold by private business the beneficiary is the consumer. Beneficiaries of government's "products" are special interests, lobbies, bureaucrats and lawmakers themselves — who use your money to buy votes.

The way things stand, we're paying so much in taxes that we'll never receive anywhere near our money's worth from the $1.6 trillion federal budget. Even worse, steep interest payments on the national debt mean our great-grandchildren will continue to pay for today's shoddy "merchandise."

Where's the federal government's customer service department? Unfortunately, there is none. Consumers of big government have only one resort: This is a congressional election year.

Mormon leader Ezra Taft Benson dies at age 94

By BOB KUESTERMAN
Associated Press Writer

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A John Birch right-winger who railed against "creeping socialism and godless communists," Ezra Taft Benson alarmed liberal members of the Mormon faith when he became president of the church in 1985.

At his death Monday at age 94, Benson had left less of a mark than many had feared.

The former agriculture secretary under President Eisenhower died of congestive heart failure after years of poor health. Unable to speak or at times to recognize close relatives, he spent his final years under the 24-hour care of a nurse in his apartment across the street from church headquarters.

The church's two most senior apostles increasingly ran the church as Benson's health declined. Presidents of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints serve for life.

As the longest-serving member of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, Howard W. Hunter, an 86-year-old former corporate lawyer, is by unailing tradition the next in line to be president.

"He was a man of service and example to his church, his country, his family, his fellow men and women," said Utah's Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch. "He was a strong but kind man, a spiritual giant of the world."

President Clinton said Benson "served our country and his church with ceaseless dedication," and Gov. Mike Leavitt said Benson "had the unusual distinction of providing significant leadership not only in religion, but in government, shaping important public policy for the nation."

Benson became the 13th president of the church in 1985 at age 86 after the death of Spencer W. Kimball.

Up until then, Benson had been the church's most outspoken and controversial apostle.

Following service as agriculture secretary from 1953 to 1961, Benson became closely identified with the John Birch Society, and his fiery speeches brought criticism from within and without the church. He once told a reporter he could not see how a person could be both a liberal and a good Mormon, and he called the civil rights movement "a communist program for revolution in America."

For nearly 20 years, church presidents and fellow apostles tried to curb Benson's efforts to give the Birch Society the church's blessing. And church liberals often expressed concern over where Benson would lead Mormonism if he survived Kimball.

But during the 1980s, Benson became less vocal about his political views. During his time as church president, his speeches — as long as he was able to deliver them — emphasized Mormon scripture and church missionary efforts.

At first, Benson's presidency was a relatively vigorous one for a man who, at 86, already was experiencing dizzy spells, memory loss and difficulty in public speaking.

Two months after assuming the presidency, Benson suffered a fainting spell. Later in 1986, a pacemaker was implanted. In 1990, he was treated for bleeding on the brain.

Born in Whitney, Idaho, Benson formed his basic ideas on agriculture as a teenage farmhand.

A distant relative of the late Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio, Benson had the support of the Taft and Thomas Dewey factions of the Republican Party and won an appointment to the Cabinet from Eisenhower.

His program of flexible price supports for major crops drew the wrath of farm-state congressmen, and South Dakota farmers once splattered him with eggs.

Soon after President Kennedy took office, Benson was calling him "soft on Communism." He described the John Birch Society as "the most effective non-church organization in our fight against creeping socialism and godless communism."

Benson's son Reed became coordinator for the John Birch Society in Utah in 1962, and its membership tripled within six months.

Benson's attacks on liberal politicians and support of the John Birch Society fostered many inquiries from members asking if he was speaking for the church. Church leaders denied having a position on the matter.

In 1963 Benson praised the society's founder, Robert Welch, who had just published a book branding Eisenhower a "knowing agent of Communism."

Benson was soon assigned to head the church's European mission in what was described as an effort by the church to "cleanse Brother Benson's political blood." Benson came back from Europe as politically combative as before.

In 1966, he was touted as a possible conservative candidate for president by a group made up largely of John Birchers. And two years later he was proposed by the American Independent party conventions in Utah, Idaho and Nevada as the vice presidential running mate of Alabama Gov. George Wallace.

Riptide drowns five holiday swimmers at Florida beach without lifeguards

AMERICAN BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A riptide drowned five holiday swimmers and dragged six others underwater at a beach with no lifeguard on duty.

The drownings caused pandemonium on the beach Monday, as sunbathers screamed for help. The beach is posted with swim-at-your-own-risk signs.

"I've never seen that many bodies wash up at one time," said one beachgoer, Deridre Logan. "I'll never forget this day."

Three women, a man and an 11-year-old boy drowned.

"We think one boy got in trouble and they all tried to help," said Michael Green, chief of the Nassau County Fire and Rescue squad.

A 41-year-old woman was in serious condition and a man was in stable condition. Four other swimmers were treated and released.

Most of the beachgoers were attending a black cultural festival. Some questioned why no lifeguards were on duty.

"He was my son, my oldest son," said a weeping Johnny Hills, father of the 11-year-old victim, Johnny Brown Hills Jr. "I don't know why there wasn't anyone there to help him. I can't believe it."

Sheriff Ray Geiger said he would meet with county commissioners to discuss lifeguard coverage.

A Coast Guard boat, a sheriff's vessel and a helicopter were used in the rescue, Geiger said.

Angel Walters, 12, and her brother,

Antoine, 11, both of Jacksonville, were caught in the riptide but were saved.

"It just kept pulling us farther out," Angel said. "I went under a couple of times. I was scared. I thought I was going to drown."

Suspect charged in Australia with murders of backpackers

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — The biggest manhunt in Australia's history came to a climax today when police charged a man with murdering seven backpackers and burying their bodies in a patch of forest called "Executioner's Drop."

Ivan Robert Milat, a 49-year-old road worker from suburban Eagle Vale, was arrested at his home May 22 by police investigating the serial killing of seven young tourists — two Britons, three Germans, and two Australians.

Their remains were found in shallow graves near fire trails in Belanglo State Forest, in southern New South Wales, from September 1992 to November 1993. Topographical maps identify the region as "Executioner's Drop."

All had been stabbed. One woman had been decapitated and her male companion shot nine times in the head. Criminologists said the positioning of the bodies — all were face down, with their wrists crossed behind their back — showed a strong streak of ritualism.

Some of the victims were gagged and there was evidence some had been sexually assaulted, the prosecutor said.

Milat originally faced armed robbery and firearm charges last week for holding up a 24-year-old English hitchhiker at gun point in January 1990. The backpacker escaped after being robbed.

But in court today, police brought other charges following extensive weeklong searches of several properties in Sydney and the Southern Highlands. They virtually tore Milat's home apart in their search for clues, finding camping equipment, a sword, backpacks, and an arsenal of guns and ammunition.

Prosecutors said ballistics tests linked cartridges found near the body of one of the German backpackers with part of a rifle found in Milat's home.

The bodies of Joanne Walters and Caroline Clarke, both 22-year-old Britons, were found in September 1992. James Gibson and Deborah Everist, both 19 and from Victoria state, were found less than a mile away in October 1993.

In November 1993, a fifth body was found in the forest about four miles from the other four. She later was identified as 20-year-old Simone Schmidl of Germany. She suffered multiple stab wounds to her back, senior prosecutor Ian Lloyd said.

Four days later, about one mile east of where Schmidl's body was discovered, the bodies of German couple Gabor Neugebauer, 21, and Anja Habschied, 20, were found.

Milat showed no emotion when Lloyd read out seven murder charges, six additional firearms charges, and an attempted murder charge in the case of the English backpacker.

Bell Telephone to change area code use

SAN ANTONIO — Southwest Bell Telephone Co. customers in West Texas and the Texas Panhandle will soon start including their three-digit area code when making long-distance calls within their own area codes, SWBT officials have announced.

The dialing change — which will not affect customers' rates for basic telephone service, their long-distance rates or 911 services — is a result of mandated modifications to the North American Numbering Plan, which were announced last fall. The new dialing pattern will affect customers in the 806 and 915 area codes.

The plan is administered in the United States, Canada, Bermuda and parts of the Caribbean by Bell Communications Research (Bellcore). Last fall, Bellcore and Southwest Bell announced that the changes would begin in July 1994.

Local business and residential customers are being reminded of the change later this month and in June through letters and bill insert notices. Additional reminders will be provided through newspaper ads, bill inserts and bill messages until the new dialing pattern becomes mandatory.

While the new dialing pattern is being introduced to Southwestern Bell customers in West Texas and the Texas Panhandle, it already is in effect in major metropolitan areas in more than a dozen states, including Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Austin, Waco and other Texas markets.

During the "permissive" dialing period beginning July 1, SWBT customers may start dialing their area code in long-distance calls within their area code region. Beginning Jan. 3, 1995, customers must dial a "1" or "0" plus the area code and seven-digit number for all long-distance calls.

The numbering plan is being modified to include the numbers 2 through 9 as the middle digit in new area codes. The numeric combination will enable Bellcore to create 640 more area codes which can be assigned as needed through 2025 or beyond.

While no new area codes are projected in the foreseeable future in West Texas and the Panhandle, the new dialing pattern will enable local telephone switching devices to define the call's routing. SWBT officials said that for most residential customers, the new dialing pattern will be little more than a minor inconvenience until they become accustomed to it.

Business customers, however, must modify their private branch exchanges (PBX) or internal telephone switching systems and other equipment, such as fax machines and E-mail systems to ensure they can recognize and process calls under the new dialing pattern.

All customers — residential and business users — must also reprogram the phone numbers in their Call Forwarding and Speed Dialing services to include the area code for long-distance calls.

Breeders hope to rescue endangered prairie chicken

AUSTIN (AP) — The male Attwater's prairie chicken engages in an elaborate courtship ritual, but soon it may not be possible to witness this spectacle in the wild.

During the rite, the rooster shuffles its feet, drops its wings, erects head and tail feathers and inflates orange skin sacs on its neck. At the same time, it emits a low, monotonous sound punctuated with an occasional cackle.

But the population of the little-known birds has plummeted, from 456 last year to an all-time low of 158 earlier this spring. In the mid-1800s, more than 1 million of them lived on the coastal prairies of Louisiana and Texas.

"The way things are going right now, this bird will be extinct in three or four years in the wild," said Steve Labuda, manager of the Attwater's Prairie Chicken National Wildlife Refuge in Colorado County.

Scientists hope a captive-breeding program will save the endangered bird regarded as an indicator species for the health of the coastal prairie ecosystem.

Prairie chicken eggs collected from the wild have produced dozens of birds at Texas A&M University in College Station, Fossil Rim Wildlife Center at Glen Rose and the Houston Zoo. The long-term goal is to annually raise a total of 600 birds at the breeding centers for placement in the wild, said Nova Silvy, a professor of wildlife and fisheries sciences at Texas A&M University.

Not only do fewer than 200,000 acres, or about 3 percent, of the original prairie chicken habitat remain, but state and federal funding to help the species rebound has not been commensurate with its plight.

Meanwhile, other states have been more active in seeking money than the Texas Congressional delegation, Silvy said.

The federal government's official recovery plan would cost nearly $60 million between now and the year 2000.

Amusement parks stretch themes for visitors

DALLAS (AP) — Amusement park themes are as up and down as roller coasters. But this year, theme parks in Texas and nationwide have stretched their concepts to new lengths, in an effort to lure more visitors in an increasingly competitive market.

Dennis Speigel, president of Cincinnati-based consulting firm International Theme Park Services, said there is a major theme park within a two-hour drive of every metropolitan area in the United States and almost everyone has gone to one.

"We have to keep pushing the envelope to keep generating that repeat visitation," he said.

At Fiesta Texas in San Antonio, the park is making a $7 million investment in a new 4-acre Boardwalk complete with 300 tons of sand, 80 palm trees and 76 miles of wood used to conjure up images of a 1950s-'60s oceanside retreat. A Ferris wheel, miniature golf, paddle boats, a roller skating pavilion and rides all are part of the park's latest addition.

The expenditure rates among the nation's highest this year for theme park improvements, the costliest being $12 million for a new roller coaster at Cedar Point in Sandusky, Ohio, said Tim O'Brien, southeast editor of the trade publication, Amusement Business.

Paul Serff, general manager of Fiesta Texas, which was originally billed as a "musical show park," says visitors wanted more activities for families to do together. Fiesta Texas is a partnership between San Antonio-based USAA and Opryland USA.

Speigel said the park needed more rides to balance out the shows concept.

"I think they'll see tremendous traffic from this," he said in The Dallas Morning News.

Three of the four major theme parks in Texas saw attendance drop in 1993 compared with the previous year, according to Amusement Business. None of the parks publicly divulge attendance figures.

Serff disputed the 1993 estimate for Fiesta Texas, showing a 200,000 drop to 1.8 million visitors. But he would not disclose his own numbers.

Only Houston's Six Flags AstroWorld showed a rise last year, with a 10 percent increase to 2.2 million visitors. The increase is due in large part to the park's new affiliation with Time Warner Inc. and its part-thrill ride, part-show "Batman, The Escape."

This year's new additions are based on the Warner Bros. movie of the same name, Police Academy Stunt Show, and a children's entertainment area called Bugs Bunny Land.

Time Warner's other Texas park, Six Flags Over Texas in Arlington, has added the new feature "Hollywood Comes to Six Flags," which includes an animal action show.

San Antonio's aquatic theme park Sea World of Texas opened in 1988 without rides. But in recent years, as attendance has plummeted and operating hours cut back from year-round, the Anheuser-Busch Inc. park has added water rides, a tropical children's playground and a water adventure area with beaches and water fowl.

This year, dinosaurs are making their debut in an area called "Monster Marsh" that features 13 life-size replicas up to 24 feet tall. Also new are bird exhibits, laser light shows and changes to the park's marine animal shows.

"I guess a lot of people can see it (dinosaurs) as a stretch, but in my mind it's clear," said Sea World's executive vice president and general manager, Robin Carson.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Count me among those who "never thought they would be writing to Dear Abby"...but alas, here I am.

My concern is my 25-year-old son, "John," still lives at home. My husband and I are very compatible and happy, and we would really like to experience the "empty nest syndrome," but John continues to live with us. He's knee-deep in debt, with a credit rating that would scare you to death. He did not complete college but has a job where he is respected and well-liked. And it pays well.

My problem: How to get our son out of the nest. I must mention that his buddies are the bar crowd, and he spends his after-hours time in his favorite bar.

I've tried to get him out of our house. I gave him a deadline, but when the time came, the transmission was out in his car, his taxes were due, etc., and he couldn't afford to move.

I don't want to see him out on the street, but I wish he would start being a man, live on his own and build some kind of future for himself.

OMAHA MOM

DEAR MOM: You and I both know the answer: Kick this spineless bird out of the nest and he will be forced to fly.

John developed some bad habits because he knew that you would be his safety net.

Mom, please write again and explain how John can spend his after-hours time in his favorite bar, have a poor credit rating, can't pay his taxes, can't keep his car in a decent condition, or live on his own — and be respected, well-liked, and hold down a job that pays well.

DEAR ABBY: Do you or any of your readers know the most polite and least offensive way of asking someone to please extinguish a cigarette in your presence? I know there is a great deal of publicity these days about the rights of non-smokers, but somehow, I always feel either a bit timid or somewhat impolite when I make this request — knowing full well that I am in the right and it is not only inconsiderate on the part of the smoker, but dangerous to me as well.

DON'T WANT TO OFFEND IN L.A.

DEAR "DON'T": Say to the offender, "I would very much appreciate it if you would not smoke in my presence." (That's the truth.) And stick to your convictions, because a report this year by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency categorizes secondhand smoke as a Class A carcinogen — on a par with asbestos and radon gas.

DEAR ABBY: With reference to "old" buddies from World War II being able to get into their uniforms: Reg Germany, age 93, a World War I veteran, can still wear his U.S. Marine uniform. How about that? I am his wife!

AUDREY M. GERMANY, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

DEAR AUDREY: A well-deserved salute to Reg!

Small range pipe through roof could be trouble

By POPULAR MECHANICS AP Special Features

Q: The previous owner of my house installed a kitchen range hood vent that exits into the attic. I will soon have my roof replaced, and at that time, will run the vent through the roof.

However, the pipe from the hood into the attic has a 7-inch diameter, and I want to reduce this to 4 inches before extending it through the roof. Will such a reduction cause a dangerous buildup of grease in the pipe?

A: Yes, it could be a problem. The particles of grease that are in suspension will be deposited mainly on the reducing coupling and the walls of the 4-inch diameter extension. All kitchen range vent pipes should be inspected periodically and cleaned if necessary. But since the reducer and extension would be located in the attic, they would probably be forgotten. The resulting buildup of grease would be a potential fire hazard.

The existing vent pipe should be extended through the roof without reducing its diameter.

In addition to being safer, your exhaust fan will operate more efficiently without the added resistance that would result from the reduction.

The pipe should be flashed properly at the roof joint, and have a storm collar and a rain hood. Also, if there is no damper over the fan, one should be installed.

Q: Recently, an electrical wall outlet in our home shorted out and threw sparks around violently. To my amazement, the circuit breaker failed to trip. An electrician examined our service panel and told us it was made by Federal Pacific Co., about 35 or 40 years ago.

According to him, the split bus panel is illegal by today's standards and he recommends replacing the entire panel box with a new one that would cost between $600 and $700. Is there a better or more reasonable solution? We are concerned for our safety and are looking for help.

A: There may be a more reasonable solution than replacing the entire electrical panel box. Your split bus panel is not causing your circuit breaker problem even though it is not in compliance with the latest Electrical Code.

In 1981, the National Electrical Code was modified to disallow the future installation of a split bus in residential construction. Electrical Code modifications are not retroactive, and do not affect existing installations.

The purpose of the code change was to ensure that the panel electrical box would have a master disconnect.

After 35 years, if a circuit breaker never tripped, it is possible that corrosion deposits have formed around the tripping mechanism which would cause the breaker to malfunction.

As a precautionary measure, a homeowner should — once a year — trip the breaker (move it to the off position) and reset it for each circuit including the master disconnect, if there is one.

Since one of your Federal Pacific breakers malfunctioned, it would be prudent to replace all the circuit breakers.

This would be less costly than replacing the entire panel box. For your protection, the new circuit breakers should be approved by Underwriter's Laboratories (U.L. Listed) or other independent testing laboratory.

However, if present-day circuit breakers will not fit your panel box, you will have to replace the entire box.

A picnicing kind of reunion

Juanita Massengill, 86, (right) and Edna Taylor, 97, two former students of the Little Red Schoolhouse located on North Highway 70, enjoy a picnic supper inside the schoolhouse held recently. Massengill lived down the road from the school and her family ran the Hoover store. She was a student when the school opened up back in 1914 and a teacher the last three months before the school closed in 1932. Taylor, one of the older students, attended the first year it opened. The Wayside Club sponsors a picnic once a year and also keeps maintenance on the house. (Pampa News photo by Melinda Martinez)

Social Security provides benefits for young

Some young workers regard Social Security taxes as unwelcome deductions from the family income. They think about how they could use the money to pay bills or save for the children's education. Retirement often seems too far off on the horizon to care about.

But the Social Security taxes young parents pay can help with more immediate concerns should misfortune or tragedy strike. An unexpected serious illness or injury to a parent, or a young mother or father's untimely death, raises the question of what help is there for children.

Each month Social Security paid nearly $1.2 billion to children to families where one or both parents were disabled, retired, or deceased. These beneficiaries are biological, adopted children, or stepchildren of an eligible worker. To receive Social Security a child must:

- * have a parent(s) who is disabled or retired and is entitled to Social Security benefits; or
- * have a parent who dies after working long enough in a job where he or she paid Social Security taxes; and
- * be under age 18; or
- * be 18-19 years old and a full-time student (who has not completed grade 12; or
- * be age 18 or older and disabled (with a disability that began before age 22).

When applying for benefits for a child, you will need to furnish the child's birth certificate and the worker's Social Security number. Depending on the type of benefit involved, other documents may be required.

Generally, child's benefits will continue until the child is age 18. If the beneficiary is under age 19 and attending an elementary or secondary school, benefits continue until the student graduates or is age 19.

A parent who is receiving benefits solely because he or she is caring for a child beneficiary may receive these benefits until the child is 16 years old. Then, although the parent's benefits stop, the child's benefits will continue for two more years (longer if the child is in school or meets the disability definition discussed above).

There is a limit to the amount of benefits that can be paid to a family. For each family, the monthly maximum is determined when their benefits are computed. Generally, it is between 150 and 180 percent of the worker's basic benefit amount. If the total amount payable to all family members exceeds the limit, each person's benefit will be reduced proportionately—except the worker's benefit—until the total equals the maximum allowable amount.

If there are no children or the children are grown, Social Security pays benefits to the spouses aged 62 or older (including divorced spouses who were married for 10 years) or a retired worker. Surviving widows and widowers age 60 or older, or those age 50 if disabled (including those who were divorced from the worker after at least 10 years of marriage) also may be eligible for benefits.

For more information call toll-free 1-800-772-1213 or contact the local Social Security office at 125 S. Gillespie, 1-806-669-1010. Office hours are 9 a.m. until 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, except holidays.

Book Review Red Baron profile doesn't fly

By NORMAN N. BROWN
Associated Press Writer

"Richtofen" by Peter Kilduff, an authority on German aviation history, is a well-researched but in some ways disappointing biography of the World War I flying ace.

The book is praiseworthy because it brings into tight focus the life of its subject, Manfred von Richtofen, nicknamed the "Red Baron" and indisputably the first ace in the history of world military aviation.

It also provides indispensable background on the von Richtofen family, back to the mid-1500s.

Kilduff has done a superb job using official records and other documents to reconstruct Richtofen's life and activities at the battlefield, his utter dedication to the destruction of enemy planes, and his showmanship.

But all this research does little to fill in the void behind the face and name.

Richtofen deserved his fame and recognition because he was the first man to down 80 enemy planes in aerial combat, and because he fell on the battlefield with honor.

There is no legend and no "beyond." Beyond any curtain that could be lifted, there is nothing — at least nothing worth writing about.

More than a century since his birth, few people besides aviation enthusiasts know who he was and what he did (except, of course, Snoopy, the beagle of "Peanuts" fame, who at times imagines he and the Red Baron are engaged in an air battle).

Kilduff gives an interesting and knowledgeable view into the first years of German military aviation — and that is about all.

COLLEGE BASEBALL

AUSTIN (AP) — Damon Minor and Rich Hills each drove in two runs in the fourth Monday, carrying Oklahoma to a 6-3 victory over Texas and sending the Sooners to the College World Series as the NCAA Central Regional champion.

Mark Redman won his second game of the regional to earn top-seeded Oklahoma (46-17) its ninth CWS trip and first since 1992, when OU finished fifth.

The third-seeded Longhorns finished the season at 43-21, marking their most losses in 27 seasons under coach Cliff Gustafson. Earlier this season, Gustafson became college baseball's all-time winningest coach.

UT would have had to win this game to force a second game Monday. The tournament is double elimination and Oklahoma gave Texas its first loss 15-4 on Sunday. The Sooners went through the regional undefeated.

Redman (12-3) allowed three runs on five hits in 6 1-3 innings. He struck out eight and walked four before giving way to Bucky Buckles, who went the rest of the way for his 12th save.

Texas starter J.D. Smart (11-4) was battered for six runs, five of them earned, on nine hits in 6 1-3 innings. He struck out four and walked four.

Oklahoma went ahead 1-0 lead in the third when Javier Flores singled and scored a groundout by Darvin Traylor.

The Sooners took control of the game in the fifth behind Minor's two-run single and a double by Hills that drove in two more runs.

Texas got within 5-1 in the sixth on Jose Flores' RBI triple and cut OU's lead to 5-3 in the seventh as Jeff Conway and Flores drove in runs.

But the Sooners added a run in the bottom of the sixth when Minor scored from first on an error by Texas third baseman MacGregor Byers.

Buckles made the score hold up by retiring the final seven Longhorns.

SOCCER

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — Soccer officials said Monday they will appeal personally to President Clinton in an attempt not to have fences around two fields at World Cup games this summer.

"President Clinton's daughter, Chelsea, is a good soccer player," FIFA spokesman Guido Tognoni said. "Obviously, her father must have a good understanding of the game."

Tognoni said a delegation headed by FIFA president Joao Havelange, FIFA general secretary Sepp Blatter and Alan Rothenberg, chairman of the U.S. organizers, will bring up the dispute during a meeting at the White House.

Officials in Dallas and Washington say there will be fences around the fields at the Cotton Bowl and RFK Stadium to prevent fans from invading the fields. FIFA has given up trying to convince officials at Stanford University to remove the permanent fence at Stanford Stadium.

FIFA says fences contribute to crowd control problems. Washington officials said that without a fence the city would have to pay $1 million for additional police protection.

"If the president can't change it, will have to live with it," Tognoni said.

FOOTBALL

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Michael Irvin underwent surgery Monday to put his left shoulder back into the socket properly.

"Everything went well today and we expect Michael will be ready for the opener" against Pittsburgh on Sept. 4, said Cowboys trainer Kevin O'Neill.

"He will begin a rehabilitation program immediately and could be able to return to football practice in approximately eight to 10 weeks," O'Neill said. Irvin's shoulder was partially dislocated, then popped back into place last week. The surgery was done to ensure the shoulder heals properly.

The operation was performed at Baylor University Medical Center by team orthopedists Dr. Robert Vandermeer and Dr. John Baker and renown orthopedist Dr. James Andrews of Birmingham, Ala.

Irvin, 27, will be limited during the team's pre-season training in Austin, which begins July 15.

GOLF

DALLAS (AP) — Auburn golfer William Blackmon received the Ben Hogan Award Monday for his ability to perform at a high level on the golf course and in the classroom.

Blackmon, a senior, averaged 73.29 in 31 competitive rounds and finished among the top eight in six tournaments this year. His best finish was third in the Trojan (Ala.) Classic.

He also has a 3.69 grade point average and will graduate next week with an economics degree.

Blackmon was honored at the Golf Coaches Association of America's awards banquet.

The award is presented by The Friends of Golf as selected by the GCAA All-America Scholar Committee and sponsored by the Ben Hogan Golf Co.

Blackmon also was one of 35 Division I golfers named Monday to the GCAA's All-America Scholar team.

The banquet was held Monday in Dallas as golfers prepare for this week's NCAA Championships June 1-4 at Stonebridge Country Club in nearby McKinney.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

HOUSTON (AP) — Mitch Williams, who recently predicted he would soon be released, will be put on waivers Tuesday by the Houston Astros. The Associated Press learned Monday night.

Williams met with Astros' management on Monday and was told of the team's decision, sources told The AP.

"He's still here," Houston general manager Bob Watson said after Monday's 4-3 victory over Florida. "We met and I have a decision, but I'm not going to divulge it. We'll announce it tomorrow."

Price overtakes Simpson to win Colonial

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — In a decade on the American golf circuit, Nick Price of Zimbabwe has won 11 tournaments, including four in 1993, when he was the PGA Player of the Year.

But nothing quite compares with his triumph in the storm-ravaged Southwestern Bell Colonial.

For starters, he came from seven shots back with a 6-under-par 64 to overtake former U.S. Open champion Scott Simpson and seize the trophy with a birdie in a playoff.

Because of an overnight rain suspension, he was forced to make up the final two strokes with birdies on two of his five regulation holes Monday. Simpson had a final round of 71, including seven pars Monday.

But figure this: Because of rain delays, Price played 13 holes Thursday, 5 Friday, 36 Saturday, 13 Sunday and 6 Monday, counting the playoff at the 18th green.

It counted up to 65-70-67-64—266, 14 under par on the water-logged Colonial Country Club course, called "Hogan's Alley" in honor of five-time winner Ben Hogan.

"The never-ending tournament," Price called it after rapping in an 8-foot birdie putt for his second victory of the year, making him the first multiple winner of 1994.

"Those 72 holes seemed like 172."

His $252,000 paycheck hiked his earnings to $564,721 for the year, boosted his career total to $5,791,212 and marked the fifth consecutive year that his winnings have exceeded $500,000.

Simpson picked up $151,200 as the runner-up and seemed remarkably unperturbed.

"I'm disappointed," he said. "Any time you have a big lead going into the last round you want to win. It's disappointing, but not dispiriting. ... It was a lot of fun to be out there in contention."

"I hope I can be there a lot more this year."

Decidedly more dejected was three-time U.S. Open kingpin Hale Irwin, who parred his final five holes Monday to cap off a 65 that left him at 267, 13 under par and a stroke behind Price and Simpson.

"The critical thing from my perspective was that the great putting touch I had Sunday just didn't get up with me this morning," he said.

He was particularly upset over an errant 8-footer: "I missed the bonus free throw at 16."

But nothing could stop Price, and he knew it as soon as he hit his second shot Monday at the par-4 14th.

"I had a decision to make because I didn't hit a very good tee shot," he recalled. Go for the middle of the green or shoot at the pin?

"I thought ... if I'm going to win this tournament, I've really got to go for it. I hit a beautiful 5-iron in there."

He rolled in the 20-footer. "I just felt so charged up because I'd made the right decision," he smiled. "Then I went ahead and birdied the next hole and that really got me going."

As he surveyed his approach shot to the first playoff hole, he said, he realized this was simply "Do or die."

He lashed an 8-iron at the flag, and when Simpson missed a 20-footer, the rest was history.

"It's so much fun when you play like that," Price said. "It's just so enjoyable when you go out there and you meet the challenge. ... Sometimes when the adrenaline is going and you're in the heat like that, you surprise yourself."

"You say: 'Man, I don't know if I can do this again.'" But he did.

Pacers even the score against Knicks

Game 5 set for Wednesday night

By HANK LOWENKRON
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Indiana Pacers, underdogs ever since the NBA playoffs began, refuse to step aside to let the New York Knicks move into the championship finals.

Indiana, a team which never before had made it out of the opening round of the playoffs, is all even with the Knicks as the teams prepare for Game 5 in the best-of-7 Eastern Conference final.

The Pacers tied the series with an 83-77 victory over the Knicks on Monday, giving each team two victories on its home court. The fifth game will be Wednesday night in Madison Square Garden, where the Knicks have won 11 straight over Indiana.

Game 6 is scheduled Friday night in Market Square Arena, where the Pacers have won 10 straight, including all six of their playoff games.

"We're going to win, that's it!" said New York's Patrick Ewing, whose 25 points and 13 rebounds wasn't enough to overcome his team's 26 turnovers and 37.7 percent shooting (26-of-69).

"They did a great job, they took us out of what we wanted to do," New York coach Pat Riley said.

"Everything can be fixed, we just have to come in more focused," Ewing said. "We just have to go home and regroup."

Riley isn't surprised both teams have had trouble scoring.

"You've got the two best defenses in the league going after one another to the nail," he said. "We have to execute with more force. ... We get a lot of credit for being a physical team, but they're one of the most physical teams in the league."

With the game on the line, Indiana gave the ball to Reggie Miller and he relished the attention with 10 points and an assist during a decisive 12-2 spurt that turned a two-point deficit into an 80-72 lead with 2:20 left.

"I knew when they tied the score with two minutes left, someone was going to have to step up," Miller said. "I tried to be a little more creative, just try and look for my shot more."

A non-factor most of the series, Miller tormented New York's defense down the stretch. When he wasn't hitting jumpers, he was being fouled. Miller, second in the league with a 91 percent free throw mark this season, made the Knicks pay for the fouls by hitting 17-of-19 attempts while scoring 31 points.

"To be successful against the Knicks, we've got to win one there. We've got to play the same way, win or lose," Miller said. The Pacers can win the series, he added, "as long as we play aggressive, and play the same type of defense that we played here."

"They thoroughly whipped us in New York. There were some guys on our team who had doubts that we could beat them," said Rik Smits, whose jumper off Miller's pass put Indiana ahead to stay 72-70. "It's a new series. We have shown now that we can beat New York. ... When you beat a good team like New York, it really pumps you up."

Smits, not known for being physical underneath, has been challenging Ewing at both ends of the court with plenty of support from his teammates. Smits helped hold Ewing to a career-playoff low of one point in an 88-68 victory on Saturday, the lowest output for a playoff team since the league began using the 24-second clock in 1954.

"The awareness that they're ready to trap, to butt-front you, or to deny you, or bear hug you, whatever it is, you've got to deal with it," Riley said. "They make it very difficult for us to enter the ball, I don't care what you run. ... It's a war down on the block."

New York swept its four games against Indiana this season and eliminated Indiana 3-1 in the opening round of last year's playoffs.

"We know it's going to be tough in New York. We really feel we can't be beat here," Indiana's Vern Fleming said. "The whole series comes down to who is getting the second shots and who is getting the loose balls."

"That's the key to the whole series, the hustle, who wants the loose balls," Indiana guard Haywoode Workman said.

"They've taken away a couple of things we like to do, made it harder to get the ball to Patrick," said New York's Hubert Davis, whose 3-pointer gave the Knicks their final lead at 70-68 with 6:15 to play.

The Knicks then went 4 minutes, 12 seconds without a field goal while Miller was helping building an 80-72 advantage with eight consecutive points.

"He hit some tough shots. ... He hit his free throws," said New York's Derek Harper, who found that the only way to defend Miller was to foul him. "Reggie's a smart player. ... He plays well under pressure."

Rockets one victory away from NBA finals

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston reserve center Earl Cureton doesn't want to repeat the hollow feeling of blowing a 3-1 lead in the NBA playoffs.

Cureton played for the 1981 Philadelphia 76ers, who took a 3-1 lead over Boston and then lost three in a row in the Eastern Conference final.

It's Cureton's job to make certain the same fate doesn't befall Houston in tonight's Game 5 of the Western Conference final against the Utah Jazz.

With a 3-1 series lead, the Rockets are one victory away from their third NBA title series unless the Jazz can mount a miracle comeback.

Cureton knows it can happen. "It was the worst feeling in the world going into the locker room after that last loss," Cureton said. "We had them 3-1 and lost three in a row. That's something that we have to think about."

The Rockets are acutely aware of the quirky nature of the playoffs, especially after the wild ending to Sunday's 80-78 victory over the Jazz when the timekeeper forgot to start the clock for the final 13.5 seconds.

Utah got almost 10 extra seconds to tie or win the game but the Rockets held on. Now they're trying to hold on again and close out the series.

Cureton doesn't have a difficult assignment in warning the Rockets of an improbable collapse.

"Sometimes you're just one game away and you catch yourself looking past it," forward Otis Thorpe said. "We have to block that totally out of the way and go take care of this game."

Utah almost became the first team in NBA history to blow a 3-0 playoff lead before nipping Denver's three-game comeback with a 91-81 victory in the final game of the semifinals.

Guard Kenny Smith, whose outside shooting helped the Rockets through the rough moments in Game 4, expects the same defense and better offense in Game 5.

Rotary blanks Dean's

Reds tame Expos, 7-3

CINCINNATI (AP) — Kevin Mitchell homered twice Monday night to help struggling Jose Rijo finally get his 100th career win as the Cincinnati Reds rallied for a 7-3 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Rijo (3-3) escaped threat after threat to get No. 100 on his fourth attempt. He gave up six hits, walked four and hit a batter in six innings, but forced the Expos to strand nine runners — six in scoring position.

Rijo, 29, has a career 100-80 record. Mitchell hit a two-run homer off Ken Hill (8-3) to start the Reds' comeback in the fourth, and Reggie Sanders homered two pitches later to tie it at 3.

Mitchell started a go-ahead three-run rally in the sixth with a single. Singles by Sanders and Tony Fernandez broke the tie and ended Hill's worst stint of the season. Bret Boone had an RBI double off Jeff Shaw, and Brian Dorsett completed the rally with a sacrifice fly.

Mitchell hit a solo homer, his 14th, in the seventh off Shaw, giving him three homers in his last five at-bats.

Deion Sanders went 1-for-4 in his debut, a day after the Reds got him from Atlanta for Roberto Kelly in a swap of center fielders.

The Expos built an early 3-0 lead around an error by Reggie Sanders.

Marquis Grissom led off the game with a single and Reggie Sanders misjudged and then dropped Juan Bell's fly to right. After a double steal, Grissom scored on Larry Walker's groundout. Darrin Fletcher — a career .438 hitter against Rijo — singled for a 2-0 lead.

Wil Cordero, just 1-for-14 in his career against Rijo, led off the second inning with his third homer.

Rangers bounce back to beat Brewers

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Jeff Frye and Manuel Lee hit RBI singles in the ninth inning Monday and the Texas Rangers rallied past the Milwaukee Brewers 5-4.

Frye had three hits and drove in three runs as Texas stopped the Brewers' three-game winning streak.

Kevin Brown (4-7) won despite giving up 11 hits in eight innings. He struck out seven and walked one.

Jay Howell got the last out, retiring Greg Vaughn on a fly ball with runners at second and third, for his first save in three chances.

It was Howell's first save since 1992, when he pitched for Los Angeles. He pitched in 54 games for Atlanta last season in a middle-relief and setup role.

Texas trailed 4-3 when Oddibe McDowell opened the ninth with a single off Graeme Lloyd. Mike Fetters (0-3) relieved and made a wild pickoff throw, sending McDowell to second.

After Ivan Rodriguez was hit by a pitch, Lee singled home the tying run. David Hulse hit into a double play, but Frye singled.

The Brewers tried to rally in the ninth against relievers Kris Carpenter and Rick Honeycutt. Turner Ward's two-out double off Honeycutt put runners on second and third, and brought on Howell.

Milwaukee took a 4-3 lead in the eighth. Dave Nilsson singled with one out for his fourth hit and scored on John Jaha's double.

The Brewers tied it at 3 with an unearned run in the seventh. Jody

Reed doubled, advanced on a passed ball by Rodriguez and scored on Darryl Hamilton's grounder.

Lee doubled and scored on Frye's grounder in the third. Frye doubled home a run in the fifth, finishing Milwaukee starter Bill Wegman.

Wegman, activated from the 15-day disabled list before the game, gave up six hits.

Will Clark had an RBI grounder in the Texas first. Nilsson singled home a run in the first and singled home another run in the sixth.

Notes: Texas has scored 263 runs, its most ever after 48 games. ... The Brewers played at home on Memorial Day for just the third time since 1985.

Baird rallies past Fort Elliott in 1A regional semifinals

VERNON — Fort Elliott made some crucial errors in the late innings as Baird rallied for a 10-8 win over the Cougars in a Class 1A regional semifinal game Monday at Chaparral Stadium.

Fort Elliott was leading 8-6 going into the sixth when the Cougars' defense committed three of its seven errors, allowing Baird to score four runs.

"We made three errors on the first three batters in the sixth inning. Basically, we just blew it," said Fort Elliott coach Curtis Smith.

Fort Elliott never trailed until the error-riddled sixth. The Cougars gained a 6-3 lead after three innings. Pitcher Jake Swigart allowed only three earned runs and the Cougars had 10 hits, but left the bases loaded twice late in the contest.

"We outthit and outthrew Baird," Smith said. "We had our opportunities, but we just couldn't put the game away."

Justin Westbrook, David Helton and Johnny Brannen were the top hitters for the Cougars, who finish the season with a 12-6 record.

Baird, which moves to Class 2A next season, beat Fort Elliott, 11-1, in the playoffs last year.
