Briscoe, Mobeetie study consolidation for their independent school districts

By J. ALAN BRZYS Staff Writer

Briscoe and Mobeetie independent school district officials have decided on a short-term solution and are working on a long-term plan to keep schools in the communities.

The planned and proposed actions result from the State Supreme Court-imposed school finance reform plan which puts in jeopardy the future of the two 'wealthy" school districts.

Under the Legislature's plan, money from wealthy school districts will be distributed to poorer school systems.

The school districts already have agreed to transfer students between districts effective this year and, on Aug. 10, residents in the Briscoe and Mobeetie ISDs can vote to consolidate the two school districts to form what would be called the Fort Elliott Consolidated Independent School District.

The special election is scheduled in conjunction with the Aug. 10 constitutional amendment and county education district proposition elections.

Randy McCurley, president of the Mobeetie ISD Board of Trustees, in a recent interview said, "We're trying to keep Mobeetie from drying up and blowing away."

McCurley described Mobeetie's school as "the hub" of the community and said transfer and/or consolidation of students in the two districts are two of the available options to saving the school and the community.

A survey conducted in the community to determine the amount of McCurley said. "We believe a coninterest in consolidation showed 90 percent in favor of the action, survive." according to the Mobeetie board

LAREDO (AP) - Although long maligned as the "bridge to nowhere," the newest span to link Texas and Mexico is expected to put the now-desolate region north of this border city on the financial map.

Laredo is a city that relies heavily on international commerce. So with a possible free trade agreement in the offing and Mexico's liberalization of trade restrictions, the border city is looking for a big payoff when Solidarity Bridge is fully operational.

Tolls from the bridge, increased commercial traffic from Mexico, and economic development expected to sprout around the international port will provide a boost for the road that links Solidarity with Lareeconomy, officials say.

But right now, the bridge stands alone in the desert. The nearest commercial development is a convenience store off the highway.

Freeways can have solid performance

Imagine freeways that last 60 years. They soon will be a reality. Chemists have cooked up new high-tech concrete mixtures that are 10 times as strong as old mixtures. The new concrete could last up to six decades on freeways, far longer than the 10 to 20 years of current formulas, radically cutting the cost of construction and repair.

According to Dr. Sidney Diamond of Purdue University, a materials engineer, "These developments are going to be used extensively. The benefits are so apparent, even in simple measurements, that I think a high percentage of the new infrastructure will be affected.'

The New York Times lists the "new tools of the trade": laser holograms, electron microscopes and nuclear magnetic resonance. These devices allow engineers to check more deeply the cracks and pores of concrete formulas, leading to the discovery of better and better mixtures.

Compare such innovations by the private sector to the way government builds things. Congress is now debating ways to repair and extend the nation's highway infractructure, expected to cost several trillion dollars over the next decade. Recently the Senate passed a $123 billion transportation bill loaded with pork-barrel projects. If the bill becomes law, it would shift emphasis on American transportation to mass transit, even though such systems have proved big, perpetual losers of taxpayer money in Detroit, Miami and Washington,

And the bill comes in the face of calls for privatizing the nation's frreeway system. Indeed, privatized freeways would be built more quickly and at less cost, and would more quickly find and take advantage of new technology like the extrastrength concrete than the current, centralized government construction system. For any private firm, the major aim is quality at the lowest cost; for any government system, the major aim is pork shoveled out of the barrel to special interests.

Meanwhile, capitalists are busy turning the high-tech concrete into usable products: better home-building materials and even consumer appliances like concrete razor-blade handles, bottles and loudspeaker cabinets. Why not let that private-sector creativity build and run our transportation systems? How solid is the fact that capitalist transportation systems would perform better than government systems? It's set in concrete.

Tilting the table toward labor

WASHINGTON - It is too hot to get all wrought up about the "Workplace Fairness Act" that passed the House this month. The bill probably could not survive a filibuster in the Senate. It certainly could not overcome a presidential veto. But if by some parliamentary wizadry the bill ever did become law, the consequences would not be as dire as industry fears.

Politically speaking, the House vote was mostly dumb show. Organized labor is not as cohesive as it used to be, but it remains a large and energetic faction within the Democratic Party. The roll call gave 230 Democrats an opportunity publicly to affirm their abiding gratitude to the unions. By the same token, the occasion accorded 149 Republicans a chance to strut and roll their eyes toward business.

The vote was important to union leaders, who made the bill their top priority in this Congress. The past 10 or 15 years have not been kind to orbanized labor. Only 18 percent of non-farm workers are union members. Efforts to win certification elections fail as often as they succeed. If it were not for the help of such tinpot Napoleons as Frank Lorenzo of airline fame, the fires of unionism might die down to mere embers.

The pending bill would prohibit employers from hiring new employees as permanent replacements for workers engaged in what may be termed an "economic strike"; that is, a strike over wages, benefits and working conditions. The bill would not apply to strikes provoked by unfair labor practices.

By way of background: On a Friday night in October 1935, 60 employees of the Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co. in San Francisco went on strike. Over the weekend the company rushed in replace-right to strike, said Roberts, "but it does not follow ments from Los Angeles, New York and Chicago to keep the telegraph service going. It became evident that the strike was doomed to fail.

By Tuesday the striking workers were eager to return to work, but Mackay had told 11 replacements they could stay on the job in San Francisco if they wished. Five decided to stay. The company then picked out the five most active unions members and told them they had been permanently replaced. They could apply for jobs as jobs became available.

The union complained to the National Labor Relations board, which held that the company had committed an unfair labor practice in singling out the five activists for dismissal. The board ordered the five reinstated.

On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the NLRB decision, but Justice Owen Roberts was careful to make it clear that the unfairness went only to the firing of the five. It is not an unfair labor practice, the court noted, for an employer "to replace the striking employees with others in an effort to carry on the business."

The National Labor Relations Act protects a

that an employer, guilty of no act denounced by the statute, has lost the right to protect and continue his business by supplying places left vacant by strikers." Moreover, an employer "is not bound to discharge those hired to fill the places of strikers, upon the election of the latter to resume their employment." It is not an unfair labor practice to assure replacements that if they so desire, their jobs may be permanent.

Mackay was decided 7-0 in 1938. For more than 50 years it has governed union and management relationships in economic strikes. The system has worked well - or at least it has worked well until quite recently. Such bitter disputes as those at Greyhound, International Paper and Eastern Air Lines have strained the Mackay rule. In some instances business has behaved very badly, but in the totality of American industry these exceptions have been rare indeed.

The pending bill would wipe out the Mackay relationship. It would greatly reduce the risks to labor in calling a strike. The bargaining table, which has been generally level, would be sharply tilted in labor's direction.

Business spokesmen have been crying that the bill would be a "disaster." It would encourage labor unrest, increase the costs of labor and undermine American competitiveness in world trade.

This is mostly hot air. Even with union strike funds and unemployment compensation, striking workers find themselves hard up. For their part, unless they are truly in desperate straits, employers want to avoid the bitterness of a post-strike work force in which scabs and union activists are side by side. The balance under Mackay is fair. It ought to stay that way.

Foreign corporations based in Tokyo, Frankfurt and Amsterdam have been buying control of our nation's entertainment industry, starting with Sony's purchase of CBS Records and Matsushita's purchase of Universal Studios.

Publisher Eric Rhoads of the respected media journal The Pulse of Radio says Hollywood companies now owned or controlled by Japanese are being told to subtly rewrite scripts "to include certain political views and cultural favoritism."

The Japanese are seeking thus to influence you. Yet Ted Turner's CNN - though it has a partner in Japan – is presently not allowed to air CNN programs in that country (beyond hotel rooms) because the Japanese do not want our media influ-object quickly if they intend to object at all.

Rhoads asks, "Whose air is this anyway?" Section 310 of the Communications Act of 1934 reserves ownership of American TV and radio stations "for Americans only." Before FCC Commisioner Al Sikes convinces Congress that Section 310 would be repealed, let's be sure that's what you want. Admittedly in most matters relating to banking and finance it is now one world. Many Americans in America now work for foreign corporations.

That the Germans and Japanese have put the spurs to us is not all bad. Level-deck competition is a highly effective motivator.

That outsiders have also bought up enormous amounts of American real estate may somewhere up the road prove less than beneficial.

But for outsiders to own our nation's airwaves is a sneak attack on your most treasured inheritance "free speech."

With 40 stations in a market like Phoenix and The Stealth-like invasion should be too obvious comparable over-population of transmitter towers to require elaboration, but Americans had better elsewhere, there are more than enough shortsighted owners willing to sell out to anybody. One purpose of the 1934 law was to limit such a sellout by restricting international bidding.

> Doubtless the FCC imagines that it could discipline foreign owners as it disciplines our own in levels of community responsibility, but cultural and political differences – subtle or overt – can hardly be monitored and cannot be legislated.

The clashing of constitutional rights echoes nightly throughout the our cities. It is the sound of gunfire.

There is also news of lawyers leaping to respond: In Chicago, public housing lawyers are trying to stop this senseless killing - and in Washington, the National Rifle Association's lawyers are trying to stop the Chicago officials from succeding. Comes now the NRA. In a letter dated May 8, the NRA's deputy general counsel, Robert Dowlut, fired his first legal salvo at Chicago housing officials. The NRA argued that the CHA was denying project residents their constitutional right to bear arms. That's the group's traditional Second Amendment line, one that has been opposedby experts including former Chief Justice Warren Burger and retired Judge on the Chicago Public Housing Robert Bork, who say the Founding York City housing spokesman Val Fathers merely intended to guarantee states the right to arm their militia.

In a bit of a trick shot, the NRA also said the 13th Amendment that abolished slavery and the badges of ning all fire-arms from the public slavery also works here; the NRA said a ban on guns of public housing lic housing projects, which are per- tenants "will have a disproportionate haps the most crime-ridden in the impact on persons of African herwas decorated with his Little League nation, 71 people were murdered last itage." The NRA officials say they may go to court to try to stop Chicago's Operation Clean Sweep. Chicago officials take a make-my-day view, pointing to an Illinois Supreme Court ruling upholding the town of Morton Grove's handgun ban.

Public housing officials from Philadelphia to Los Angeles have been quoted as saying they may follow Chicago's lead - if the NRA is disarmed by the courts. But not so for Herbs and spices add virtually no calories, fat or salt but can make simple grilled foods full-flavored and satisfying.

The joys of special greens

By NANCY BYAL Better Homes and Gardens Magazine Food Editor

When did you last toss a little sorrel, escarole, or watercress into your salad? Perhaps you've missed sampling these special greens, simply because they're not as readily available or as well-known as others. With summer produce at its peak, now is the best time to give these greens a try. You'll find more and more supermarkets and farmers' markets stocking them in the sum-

Look for leaves that are crisp, tender and free from blemishes or discoloration. When you get your new-found greens home, sample them by mixing some of the stronger-flavored greens with the more mild-flavored lettuces you may usually eat.

ESCAROLE

SPINACH

Escarole is often known as broadleafed endive. It grows in bunches and has broader, less curly leaves than curly endive. Escarole's color can range from dark green to pale yellow. This coarse-textured green adds a pleasing, slightly bitter flavor to salads.

CHICORY Looking at chicory, also known as curly endive, you'd never suspect that it also belongs to the endive family, except that it grows in bunches. This frilly-looking green is prickly textured. It adds zest to salads with its somewhat sharp flavor. In addition to adding pep, curly endive is loaded with vitamin A. The best-quality chicory has narrow, curly leaves.

Spinach is full of the vitamins and iron necessary for strong bodies, but it won't turn you into a weight lifter all by itself. This versatile green tastes delicious both raw and cooked. When used raw as a salad green, the leaves add rich color and flavor. When cooked spinach becomes a filling ingredient for pastas and other dishes. Available year-round, spinach should have dark green, undamaged leaves. WATERCRESS

As the name suggests, watercress grows in freshwater ponds and streams. This pungently flavored green makes a lively addition to any salad. It can also serve as an attractive, edible garnish. Although watercress leaves are generally smaller than those of other greens, look for the darkest and largest leaves you can find.

SORREL

Sorrel, also known as sourgrass, looks similar to spinach, but has smaller leaves. Since sorrel is not as common as spinach, you may need to call around to find it. You can easily grow sorrel from seeds or from starter plants in your garden. Sorrel's lemony flavor gives a sharp, slightly acidic taste to salads. ROCKET Rocket, also known as arugula, is Italian in origin. It has dark green leaves with ruffled edges. While this green can be hard to find, the extra searching pays off in flavor. Arugula lends a peppery taste to any salad.

Frozen vanilla meringue pie is an elegant summer dessert. This frozen pie is layered with vanilla ice cream, orange sherbet and crushed cookie crumbs. Heavy whipped cream forms the final layer. The pie is garnished with fresh orange slices.

Wilted salads made with microwaved vegetables

By NANCY BYAL Better Homes and Gardens Magazine Food Editor

I love wilted salads, although the name doesn't do them justice. The greens in these salads are not really wilted, not limp or droopy, but a perfect balance between crisp-fresh and soft-cooked. To wilt salad, you simply stir the greens into some microwavecooked ingredients and toss.

WILTED SORREL SALAD 2 slices bacon, cut up 1/2 of a small red onion, sliced and separated into rings 1 tablespoon honey

1 tablespoon dry sherry 4 cups torn sorrel and-or spinach Edible flowers, such as nasturtium, violet or pansy (optional) Place bacon in a 1 1/2-quart microwave-safe casserole. Cook, covered, on 100 percent power (high) about 3 minutes (lowwattage ovens: 4 to 5 minutes) or until crisp, stirring once. Drain; return 1 tablespoon of bacon drip-

Stir in onion, honey and sherry. Cook, covered, on high for 30 to 60 seconds or until onion is tender. Add greens; toss to wilt. If desired, garnish each serving with edible flowers.

15-Year Fixed-Rate Loans: You pay off this variation on the 30-year fixed-rate mortgage in half the time. Payments are only 15 to 25 percent higher than on a 30-year loan, partly because the principal decreases more quickly and partly because rates are slightly lower.

Paying off a mortgage in half the usual time may not be a good idea, even for those who can afford the higher monthly bills. Mortgage interest is tax-deductible, making it one of your cheapest sources of borrowed money. Ask yourself whether the extra you pay on the shorter-term mortgage could earn more than the after-tax cost of the loan if you invested elsewhere.

Adjustable-Rate Mortgages: With variable-rate loans, the inter-

Convertible ARMs:

Some ARMs let you convert to a fixed-rate loan without paying refinancing fees. (There may be a nominal charge for processing.) You pay indirectly with a slightly higher initial interest rate or margin or with more points than on a nonconvertible ARM.

Contracts may limit when you can convert, often on the anniversary of your loan, so you may not be able to grab a favorable rate. What's more, the conversion rate is often a half point to 1 point higher than for a 30year fixed-rate loan.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) - A new courtroom cable network is challenging a claim by William Kennedy Smith's lawyers
