School funding measure offers multiple choice

AUSTIN (AP) — The House Public Education Committee today unanimously approved a multiple choice plan that would give property-rich school districts different options for sharing some of their wealth with poorer districts.

The measure now heads to a Thursday vote by the full House, said committee Chairwoman Libby Lineberger, D-Manchaca. She predicted the House would pass the bill.

It's a response to a Texas Supreme Court order for lawmakers to come up with a plan for evening out funding available to property-rich and property-poor school districts.

If they don't develop a plan by June 1, the court has ordered a cutoff of state education funding. School districts rely on state aid and local property taxes.

"What we think that we have found through this plan is a better way to achieve what the court has ordered us to do and still give each district local control over its own affairs," Ms. Lineberger said.

Under the plan laid out by Ms. Lineberger and other committee members, the 109 richest school districts in property wealth would be consolidated with one or more of their poorer neighbors by the state — unless a district chose one of the following options:

- Merge its tax base with one or more poorer school districts.
- Send money to the state to pay for educating other students in poorer districts.
- Contract to educate students in other districts.
- Consolidate voluntarily with one or more other school districts.
- Move some taxable property to another district's tax rolls.

The first three options would require local voter approval.

The proposal is meant to bring all school districts to property wealth of no more than $280,000 per student. Ms. Lineberger said it would divert between $400 million and $600 million a year from wealthier to poorer school districts.

The Senate already has approved a proposal for the state to shift some business property from the richest to the poorest school districts.

But some House members raised concerns about that approach. For example, they said that seven wealthy school districts rely mainly on residential property values, and so couldn't get down to the $280,000 per-student level under the plan pushed by Sen. Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant.

Ratliff said he has developed ways to address such concerns — for example, to allow the education commissioner to consolidate the seven school districts if the Senate plan were declared unconstitutional for leaving them out.

"I'm still convinced that our plan is constitutional like it is, but if it would make some of the members more comfortable if we wore a belt and suspenders, why, I'd be glad to put on a pair of suspenders," he said.

Ratliff had questions about the House committee's proposal, and predicted any plan including consolidation would be a "tough sell" in the Senate. But he said, "I'm certainly willing to look at anything."

Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland, head of the House GOP caucus, said of the House committee's proposal, "All those multiples on this ballot are some form of 'Robin Hood,' with a gun against your head — and you pick A, B, C or D, or get shot."

The "Robin Hood" nickname was used to describe a previous school funding plan that was turned down May 1 by voters. That measure would have allowed some local property tax money to be shifted from wealthier to poorer school districts.

Craddick said he would like to see voters also given other options, such as deciding a proposed constitutional amendment to restrict court involvement in school funding.

Although the school finance battle has largely fallen along party lines in the House, the Public Education Committee backing the local-option plan includes Republicans as well as Democrats.

Rep. Kent Gruesendorf, R-Arlington, a committee member, said, "This is just a multiple-choice Robin Hood plan, but the Supreme Court has us in this box, and you're going to have some form of Robin Hood."

Donley grand jury indicts 4 in Greenbelt Lake brawl

CLARENDON — Four Pampa men involved in a May 7 fracas at Greenbelt Lake were indicted Monday by a Donley County grand jury.

Three men were indicted on charges of aggravated assault, and a fourth Pampa man was indicted for misdemeanor assault. The indictments resulted from felony arrests and subsequent grand jury testimony in the aftermath of a May 7 melee at Greenbelt Lake involving Pampa and Amarillo youths.

Indicted were twin brothers, Jason Johnson, 18, and Justin Johnson, 18, and Brant Spencer, 17. An indictment of misdemeanor assault was returned against Dwayne Hill, Pampa, following the day's testimony, according to 100th Judicial District Attorney David McCoy. The grand jury also returned an additional indictment of misdemeanor assault against Spencer.

The grand jury heard testimony from about 20 people before returning the indictments, McCoy said. About 50 had been subpoenaed to testify about the fight.

Justin Johnson was indicted in relation to his fight with Juan Martinez III of Amarillo, according to McCoy. Jason Johnson was indicted in relation to his fight with Chad Johnson of Amarillo, and Spencer was indicted in relation to his fight with Scott Purvine of Amarillo. Purvine suffered an eye injury and cracked skull following the fracas. He spent several days in Northwest Texas Hospital.

A charge of aggravated assault carries a maximum penalty of two to 10 years in the Texas Department of Corrections and a $10,000 fine. A misdemeanor assault charge, McCoy said, carries a maximum penalty of one year in county jail and a $2,000 fine.

The Johnson brothers and Spencer currently are free on bond.

Waiting their turn to testify before the Donley County grand jury on Monday, are about 50 Pampa and Amarillo residents. Most Pampans waited inside the 100-year-old courthouse; most Amarilloans waited on the lawn.

The Johnson twins declined to testify before the grand jury, McCoy said. Both Spencer and Hill testified.

Additional felony indictments may be handed down in the next grand jury session scheduled for June 28, McCoy said. Causes of the fights are still being unraveled, McCoy said, but it appears that escalating tensions of the evening, football rivalry and alcohol use contributed to the fray. No drug use was admitted, he said.

"At first blush," McCoy said in a telephone interview, "there was an appearance it was 'bash Pampa week'. It was not. There was right and wrong on both sides."

McCoy said two Pampa women, Jennifer Ward and Mandy Morris, came to Purvine's aid during the fight, physically placing their bodies across his to protect him from Spencer's blows.

Approximately 50 Pampa and Amarillo residents were subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury.

Law enforcement officers from Gray and Donley counties were on hand indoors and outdoors to maintain decorum.

Gray County Sheriff Randy Stubblefield, in a telephone interview, said the day's proceedings were calm. Stubblefield was accompanied to the proceedings by deputies Buck Williams, John Worthington and Jim McDonald. Kelly Rushing, brand inspector, and Mark Davis, game warden, were on hand as a courtesy to Gray County, Stubblefield said.

"I'm real pleased that these kids and their parents came down and testified to help get this matter cleared up," he said.

Clinton faces piercing questions on road trip

SAN DIEGO (AP) — President Clinton is facing tough questions and getting some criticism from "common folks" during his campaign-style road trip, but the White House is pleased: Even bad reviews are good when the subject is the economy.

He chatted with dozens of people in Los Alamos, N.M., and conducted a "town hall" meeting near San Diego on Monday, and domestic policy dominated the conversations. Diplomatic wrangling over the war in Bosnia threatened to overshadow Clinton's economic package until the White House decided to put the topic "on hold" and get Clinton out among the people again.

The president insisted all along that the public had little interest in Bosnia or Washington's political battles. Judging by his day Monday, Clinton was right.

His advisers hoped that a renewed focus on the economy — even with a tinge of criticism — would help the president sell his budget plan. The White House wants to convince voters that the economy is Clinton's top priority, and that his deficit-reduction package relies as much on spending cuts as on tax increases.

Clinton, who began his day jogging on the beach with about a dozen members of the elite Navy Seals force, was traveling to Los Angeles today to tour South Central Los Angeles, site of the 1992 riots, and to promote his job training initiative at Los Angeles Valley College.

He got a chance to touch on both subjects at the town meeting in San Diego when gang member Ariel Zuniga told Clinton "a lot of people want to get out of gangs," but they have no alternatives.

Looking tired at the end of a long day on the road, a sad-eyed Clinton said the answer is more jobs. "A lot of these places would not have as many gangs if people could get up every day and try to make a living," the president said.

Self-employed businessman Lorne Fleming opened the town hall meeting by thanking Clinton for allowing "common folks like us" to speak to him. "It's an honor and a privilege."

Without skipping a beat, he then accused Clinton of renegeing on his campaign promise to cut taxes for the middle class. He compared the state of the economy to "the Carter era," and asked Clinton "can you name one country that has ever taxed and spent itself into prosperity?"

Clinton said: "I can't. But you can't fairly characterize my program as that."

The president said it was "just a big myth" that he had not proposed real spending cuts, saying his $500 billion in deficit reduction over five years was split equally between cuts and taxes, with the bulk of the taxes falling on the rich.

The middle-class tax cut was scuttled when the budget deficit turned out to be higher than he expected, Clinton said.

"I've got four years. Give me four years to try to deliver on the middle-class tax cut," Clinton said. "But the first thing we need to do is drive the deficit down with cuts and some prudent revenue increases."

The audience at the hour-long town hall peppered Clinton with questions about health care, welfare reform, trade and his plans to ease the pain of defense cuts in San Diego and other communities.

The White House said it had no control over selection of the audience, and questions were not restricted by television station KGTV, which made the selections. The administration asked only that the audience be diverse.

Nobody asked about Bosnia, but the White House said a Bosnian woman happened to be in the audience. The television moderators did not select her to question Clinton.

Clinton set the tone by outlining several initiatives and saying he is spending most of his time "working on two things — the economy and the health care issue." He said any new employer mandates in his coming health care plan would be phased in.

Bosnia was mentioned only once, when a woman shouted out from a crowd of 20,000 people in Los Alamos, "Go into Bosnia." Clinton did not respond.

He toured the Los Alamos National Laboratory to promote his plan to get government more involved in helping defense-based industries use their technology for civilian projects.

Croats and Muslims talk peace but their soldiers continue fight

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

MEDJUGORJE, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Croats and Muslims battled in Mostar for a ninth straight day and a huge explosion shook the city at daybreak today as leaders of the two sides began to talk peace.

The Mostar fighting, which the United Nations says was started by Bosnian Croats, cast a shadow over the talks and forced the negotiations from Mostar, the intended site, 20 miles southward to Medjugorje.

Yugoslavia's Tanjug news agency, quoting Bosnian radio, said a powerful blast rocked Mostar at dawn, shattering hundreds of windows. No definite cause was given.

The intensity of fighting lessened later in the day, according to Western journalists who left the city.

Bosnia's Croats and Muslims, one-time allies against the Serbs, have been fighting for months. Bosnian Serbs, who opposed independence from Yugoslavia, have fought a 13-month war against the Muslim-led Bosnian government.

Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev met in Split, Croatia, with Croatian President Franjo Tudjman and Bosnia's Muslim president, Alija Izetbegovic. Kozyrev talked with them separately, reflecting the Croat-Muslim strains, but the two leaders later met briefly.

The two presidents then moved to Medjugorje for a meeting with international negotiators Lord Owen of the European Community and Thorvald Stoltenberg for the United Nations; Mate Boban, Tudjman's handpicked leader of the Bosnian Croats; and U.N. officials.

The meeting came amid growing concern in the Bosnian government that Croatia has turned against Bosnia and may be party to a Serb-Croat deal to divide up Bosnia-Herzegovina between them.

The European Community last week blamed Croatia for the Mostar fighting and threatened it with sanctions — like those punishing Serb-dominated Yugoslavia for its role in fomenting the Bosnian war — if the violence continued.

Tudjman and other Croat leaders deny any responsibility for the Mostar fighting. In Split, Tudjman told Croatian television today that "extreme Muslim forces" were provoking clashes with Bosnian Croats.

In Medjugorje, Sefer Halilovic, commander of Bosnian government forces, said his side was prepared to let bygones be bygones. "But we will not allow them to fool around with us anymore," he told The Associated Press.

The Mostar conflict highlights the problems the international community faces in trying to impose an international peace plan in Bosnia.

Under that plan, already signed by Croats and the Bosnian government, Bosnia would be divided into 10 provinces along mainly ethnic lines. Mostar would be in a Croat province, and U.N. officials say the Croats apparently want to push Muslims out of the key southern city to guarantee uncontested control.

On the Serb-Muslim front, meanwhile, U.N. officials reported a rash of violations of a more than week-old truce. They also said occasional gunfights had broken out among desperate Muslims over food parachuted into Zepa, a Serb-besieged enclave in eastern Bosnia.

But French Gen. Philippe Morillon, commander of U.N. peacekeepers in Bosnia, said agreement was near on demilitarizing Sarajevo, the capital that has been besieged by Serbs for most of the war.

The plan for collection or withdrawal of heavy weapons and U.N.-supervised separation of forces "should be implemented very soon," he said after meeting with Gen. Ratko Mladic, the Bosnian Serb commander.

Mladic was less optimistic, saying only that the plan was "feasible."

He also remained firm in rejecting the U.N. peace plan, which would deny the Serbs their dream of an independent republic carved from Bosnian territory.

"Anyone who wants to deal with us has to understand that we will have one province and it will be independent," he told reporters in Pale, the Serb stronghold outside Sarajevo.

Radovan Karadzic, president of the breakaway Serbian Republic, said Monday that preliminary results of a weekend vote by Bosnian Serbs on the plan indicated a vast majority of "no" votes was expected. Bosnian Serb radio said 95 percent to 99 percent of votes tallied by Monday from seven municipalities rejected the plan. Final results were not expected before Wednesday.

In Washington, Secretary of State Warren Christopher said the United States will now talk with European allies about using force or new diplomatic approaches to try to end the war in Bosnia.

DPS logs pot bust in Shamrock

SHAMROCK — A 26-year-old Arizona man was arrested Monday when a Texas Department of Public Safety trooper discovered one pound of marijuana in the vehicle that the man was driving on Interstate 40 about 15 miles west of Shamrock.

The arrested man, William C. Lucas III, 26, of Flagstaff, Ariz., was charged with possession of more than four ounces and less than five pounds of marijuana. He was taken to Wheeler County Jail, and bond on him was set at $2,500 by Justice of the Peace Herbert Stacy.

The estimated street value of the marijuana was $850; the estimated value of the impounded 1989 Jeep Cherokee was $6,500.

Lucas had been stopped because he was speeding and because his vehicle had defective stop lamps. DPS trooper John Holland made the arrest, assisted by DPS trooper Kevin King out of Shamrock and the Wheeler County Sheriff's Office.

PHS graduation moves to a Saturday night

Pampa High School this month will hold its first graduation ceremonies on a Saturday in at least 15 years, said PHS guidance counselor JoAnn Jones.

Graduation exercises for 259 seniors at Pampa High School are scheduled to begin at 8 p.m. May 29, at McNeely Fieldhouse.

Daniel Coward, principal of Pampa High School, said Monday that the date for the event was rescheduled from May 28 to May 29 because school will be held one day longer than originally scheduled.

The last day of school was changed from Thursday to Friday to make up for a day earlier this school year when a snowstorm forced the cancellation of school, Coward said.

Coward noted that he expects approximately 2,500 people to attend the graduation ceremonies.

"I think from the family standpoint that's (Saturday) an easier day for friends and loved ones to travel to Pampa in order to attend the commencement exercises," Coward said.

It's no longer a one-man show

NEW YORK (AP) — The network that has had only three news anchors in 45 years will have two at the same time come June: Dan Rather and Connie Chung.

The surprise announcement from CBS marks the first time since Barbara Walters and Harry Reasoner were unhappily paired at ABC in the 1970s that one of the Big Three has made a man and a woman co-anchors of its evening news.

CBS News officials portrayed the tandem approach at the No. 2-rated "CBS Evening News" as a way to prepare the broadcast for the next century and to free up Rather to do more of what he says he loves best: reporting.

Rather, who has been sole anchorman since 1981, said Chung's arrival will strengthen the broadcast, and he insisted the move had nothing to do with ratings.

"Her co-anchor role will also help me spend the rest of my career at CBS News doing more of what I like so much to do — report from the field," the 61-year-old said Monday. He added: "We will make it work. You can take it to the bank."

The move marks the end of an era at CBS, where the anchor desk has belonged to the single white male. Rather's predecessor, Walter Cronkite, had the job to himself for 19 years. For 14 years before that, it was Douglas Edwards.

CBS has trailed ABC since 1989 and sometimes has fallen behind NBC as well. In the mid-'80s, Rather tried to boost his appeal and soften his on-air image with a V-neck sweater instead of a suit coat. And for a brief period in 1986, he signed off his broadcasts by saying, "Courage." It did not take.

Rather will keep his title as managing editor of the "Evening News" and remain anchor of CBS' "48 Hours" news magazine. And Chung will keep her own magazine show, "Eye to Eye With Connie Chung," slated for a summer launch.

"We've known each other for more than 22 years," Chung said, "and I couldn't be more excited about working with him in this new role."

Chung, 46, joined CBS in 1971, left for NBC in 1983 and returned six years later. She has been anchor of the Sunday edition of CBS' newscast as well as her own magazine show.

CBS' move comes just before a meeting next week of CBS' affiliate stations. It also comes at a time when ABC's "World News Tonight" is a solid No. 1, and freshman NBC News president Andrew Lack has named ABC's former "World News" producer, Jeff Gralnick, as executive producer of the "NBC Nightly News" with Tom Brokaw.

"I think it's very difficult to change a 22-minute broadcast in truly significant ways," said ABC anchorman Peter Jennings, "but there's no doubt that both Dan and Connie are very good, tough competitors."

Lack said hiring co-anchors worked only once before — at NBC, during the Chet Huntley-David Brinkley era.

"I can think of a lot of examples that haven't worked well, over the air," Lack said. As for Rather and Chung, he said, "How they'll work together on the air I don't know."

ABC, in 1976, was first to try a man-woman anchor team, pairing Reasoner with Walters, who had reportedly been offered $1 million to come over from NBC's "Today" show.

By all accounts, it was an unhappy collaboration for the three years it endured, and it failed to pull the broadcast out of third place. Viewers perceived signs of tension between Reasoner and Walters.

After a story about Henry Kissinger, Walters observed, "You know, Harry, Kissinger didn't do too badly as a sex symbol in Washington."

"Well, you'd know more about that than I would," Reasoner said. As for Rather, his 12 years as anchorman have not been easy.

The homespun "Rather-isms" with which he routinely sprinkles his commentary charm some viewers but grate on others. "This will melt the wax right out of your ears," he has said in a typical turn of phrase.

In 1986, he was attacked in New York under mysterious circumstances by two assailants, one of whom demanded to know, "What is the frequency, Kenneth?"

In 1987, he enraged affiliates when CBS coverage of the U.S. Open tennis championship ran late and then ended unexpectedly. Rather, who had left his desk to protest the pre-emption, left affiliates with six minutes of dead air.

Treasury: Did ATF have other options in cult raid?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasury Department's investigation of the failed Feb. 28 raid on a Texas religious cult will examine whether agents passed up earlier opportunities to seize weapons from the compound.

The investigation will also study whether it was ever advisable for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms to mount the type of raid on the Branch Davidian compound that resulted in the deaths of four agents.

"Obviously, we want to know what led to the decision being made to go in on Feb. 28 as opposed to Jan. 1 or Dec. 1 or some other dates" or "as opposed to never" staging the raid, Assistant Treasury Secretary Ronald K. Noble said Monday.

"One of the questions is when was the earliest opportunity to begin the enforcement component of the plan to investigate and enforce federal criminal law," Noble, who will head the inquiry, told reporters. Court papers released since the 51-day siege ended April 19, in what authorities now believe was the fiery deaths of at least 86 cult members, suggest that ATF had probable cause to obtain a warrant to search the compound near Waco, Texas, as early as last fall, possibly last summer.

ATF agents first learned from local authorities in June 1992 that cult leader David Koresh was getting shipments of weapons parts from gun dealers around the country, according to affidavits filed by investigating agents. Agents quickly confirmed those reports with two gun dealers and gathered more information in the ensuing months.

"Whatever questions there are about whether or not there ought to have been an enforcement of criminal law, it seems that the kinds of weapons and ammunition and arsenal that was revealed at the conclusion of the siege supports everything that ATF represented," Noble said.

ATF officials have said the decision on when there was probable cause to search the compound was made jointly with federal prosecutors, who were supervising the investigation.

The bureau also needed time to plan a raid and to place an undercover agent in the compound to learn the habits and routines of cult members, agency officials have said.

Shortly before the raid began, the undercover agent came out of the compound and warned his superiors that Koresh knew the raid was about to begin. Noble said the investigation would examine why the raid proceeded even after ATF officials learned they had lost the element of surprise.

He said the report of the investigation would be submitted by Sept. 1 to Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, who will decide if the facts uncovered warrant any disciplinary action against ATF officials.

Bentsen, who also attended the briefing, went out of his way to dismiss suggestions from some lawmakers that ATF be placed under the control of the Justice Department.

"As we learn more about David Koresh and the Branch Davidians, we can appreciate both the importance and difficulty of ATF's mission," Bentsen said.

The Justice Department, meanwhile, gave the FBI 60 days to interview 850 people as part of its review of the bureau's efforts to end the standoff.

Department spokesman Carl Stern said investigators had been assigned to find out how the FBI could better handle hostage negotiations and standoffs with cults. The investigation will also include a review of the outside experts that the FBI enlisted to help assess the state of mind of Koresh and his followers during the standoff, Stern said.

8 year old survives being run over by train

WILLINGTON, Conn. (AP) — An 8-year-old girl who walked out onto a trestle to look at the fish below fell between the tracks in front of a freight train and escaped with no more than bruises when all 12 cars passed over her.

"Don't tell Mom!" a crying Nicole Bernier pleaded with her brother.

Nicole, her 10-year-old brother, Robert, and a 12-year-old friend, David Deschene, got caught on the trestle Sunday when the train came roaring around a bend. The boys managed to jump to the side.

"It looked like a movie, the way the train was coming," her brother said Monday. "It just kept getting bigger and bigger."

Nicole said she passed out as the train roared overhead. Police said there was only about a foot between the track bed and the bottom of the train.

"A little bit at the end I woke up. I thought it was going to hit my head because my head was up," Nicole said.

Her only injuries were the bruises she suffered when she fell.

"I thought she was dead," David said. Then she got up crying and screaming. "Don't tell Mom!"

There was no keeping the secret. The engineer, who thought he had hit her, had already called for an ambulance.

Nicole and her brother had already been warned to stay away from the tracks, said her mother, Jacqueline Duquette.

Since the near tragedy, said the girl's mother, Nicole "wakes up crying. She doesn't even want to hear the sound of a train."

Inmate executed for frying-pan beating death

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A convicted killer was executed early today for the 1983 slaying of a Houston woman who was robbed and beaten to death with a cast-iron frying pan.

John Christopher Sawyers, 37, went to his death after the U.S. Supreme Court twice refused to halt his execution Monday.

At 12:23 a.m., seven minutes after the lethal chemicals began flowing into his arms, he was pronounced dead.

His body was strapped to a gurney and his eyes were closed when witnesses entered the death chamber. When the warden asked him if he had any last words, he opened his eyes briefly and said, "No."

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

A 'runaway oil well fire' may lie ahead

President Clinton's proposed Btu (British Thermal Unit) energy tax would hit taxpayers hard. Most affected would be the poor and the middle class, who spend a disproportionate amount of their incomes on energy, and energy-intensive business such as autos and steel. The $22 billion tax would take money from the productive private sector and waste it on the new pork programs Clinton is pushing.

Under Clinton's original plan, the tax would have been collected at the source of production: the oil, natural gas, or electric power producer. A Btu tax collected from producers is insidious precisely because it is hidden from the people. Prices just go up and one doesn't know why. People blame "inflation" or "foreign oil chiselers."

Now, powerful congressmen from energy-producing states are squealing: Not from our backyard oil rigs! They want the tax collected at the other end of the market chain, from consumers.

The Clinton administration has indicated it will go along with the maneuvering by Reps. Bill Brewster of Oklahoma and Mike Committee, and Sens. David Boren of Oklahoma and John Breaux of Louisiana.

According to the Dallas Morning News, "The new plan means that electricity and natural gas taxes would be collected by the government directly from consumers."

As punishing as a Btu tax would be, there would be a positive side to imposing the tax at the gas pump instead of the oil rig: Consumers would see more clearly how they are being taxed.

Indeed, Clinton, still the greenest of freshmen presidents, might have been sideswiped by the experienced hands up on Capitol Hill. Oil state congressmen seldom like oil taxes, unless on the imported variety. By ensuring that consumers will be shocked at the pump when the tax goes into effect, the congressmen could be banking on a taxpayer revolt that would lead to the tax's repeal.

Whatever the maneuvering in Washington, a tax revolt is just what's needed. Every oil retail company should publicize the next tax increase — an the old taxes as well. Large signs should be posted next to each pump, listing the federal tax, the state tax, the new Clinton Btu tax, and the total tax. Truth in labeling should be the order of the day. Let consumers know what they're paying for.

And gas stations should put up little boxes next to each pump, with postcards inside. A sign could read: "Tell you congressman what you think of the new tax hike." The cards could be pre-addressed with the name of the local representative and the state's two senators.

Soon a tax revolt could be burning across the land like a runaway oil well fire.

Will China's war on reproduction get U.S. help

On Dec. 30, 1992, a young, pregnant Chinese woman named Li Quilang was at home in a village in Hunan Province when a team of local officials arrived. They had come to escort her to a clinic to give birth.

Li was only seven months into her pregnancy, but the "shock brigade" insisted she must have labor induced immediately. New family planning rules were scheduled to go into effect the first day of 1993, and they found it inconvenient for her to give birth on schedule.

Despite the protests of her family and the clinic doctor, reports a recent dispatch in The New York Times, labor was induced. The baby died, and Li was crippled. The government's population policy, however, emerged with yet another victory.

The People's Republic of China, long a pioneer in combating the pestilence of human liberty, has employed all sorts of innovative violence in its war on reproduction. Determined to cut its population growth, it has established a "one child" policy that sharply curtails the right to bear offspring, a policy it enforces with whatever cruelty is needed. Americans will soon have to face the question of whether they want to be accomplices in these official crimes.

Chinese women of childbearing age are used to having their contraceptive methods and menstrual cycles monitored by the pregnancy police. Anyone who wants to have a child generally has to get permission from local officials, who strictly ration births to conform to the policy decreed by the central government. Once a woman has borne a child, she is subject to unrelenting demands that she be sterilized.

What about those who don't cooperate? Many are sterilized without their consent. Those who get pregnant without permission are pressured — or in some cases compelled — to have abortions. Those who evade efforts to prevent an unauthorized birth are punished with huge fines, equivalent to several years' income. "Homes are routinely knocked down if the fine isn't paid," says the Times.

The policy has slowed China's birth rate, which has dropped so dramatically that the average Chinese woman has fewer than two children, about the same as the typical American woman. But it has caused vast suffering.

It has also produced an eerily unsettling phenomenon: missing girls. In the rest of the world, about 106 male babies are born for every 100 females. In China, the ratio has suddenly risen to 111 to 100. Every year, in other words, three-quarters of a million Chinese girls somehow vanish.

Why? Because many Chinese families, if limited to one child, prefer a boy. Girls are often aborted or hidden with relatives to escape detection — or simply drowned in a bucket at birth. The one-child policy has another ghoul side effect: Up to a million handicapped babies are abandoned every year by parents who want to try again for a healthy child.

None of these appalling abuses are accidental. They are all the direct result of the Chinese government's insistence on population control at any price.

President Clinton, frequently a critic of China's human rights abuses, has been conspicuously silent on its draconian measures for reducing the birth rate. Worse, he is reportedly about to ask Congress to restore appropriations for the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), which provides financial aid to the Chinese government for population programs and which has often defended its methods.

The Reagan administration withheld contributions from the population fund after Congress barred money for any organization that "supports or participates in management of a program of coercive abortion or involuntary sterilization." When population-control groups, sued, arguing that UNFPA was blameless, a federal appeals court ruled that the administration's "explanation of how the UNFPA's activities in China aid the aspects of China's program that Congress condemned amply supports (its) inclusion that funding UNFPA is prohibited by the amendment."

President Clinton, however, shows no concern about the millions of Chinese women forced to undergo sterilization or abortion, and he is perfectly willing to subsidize a U.N. agency that has worked closely with the Beijing government on birth control and helped finance its programs.

During the campaign, Clinton said that he and his running mate favored abortion rights "no because we are pro-abortion, but because we think certain choices are too personal for politics." The Chinese policy is that no choice is too personal for politics, and Clinton apparently wants his own taxpayers to underwrite it. Americans may not be able to stop Beijing from forcing women into abortion and sterilization, but they probably don't want to lend a hand.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, May 18, the 138th day of 1993. There are 227 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
On May 18, 1980, the Mount St. Helens volcano in Washington state exploded. The blast took 1,300 feet off the top of the mountain and left 57 people dead or missing.

On this date:
In 1860, the Republican Party convention in Chicago nominated Abraham Lincoln for president.

In 1910, Halley's Comet, as seen from Earth, moved across the sun.

In 1911, composer Gustav Mahler died in Vienna, Austria. His last work: "Mozart."

In 1926, evangelist Aimee Semple McPherson mysteriously vanished while visiting a beach in Venice, Calif.; she reappeared a month later, claiming to have been kidnapped.

A miracle drug called 'prayer'

Editor's note: This is an original column. Until Lewis Grizzard is fully recovered, he will write at least one column each week.

All those learned men and women of medicine said basically the same thing to me once I had emerged from wherever God puts your mind while people are trying to save your life in a hospital.

They said it was a miracle I had lived from what were the most complicated of complications that arose during what was supposed to have been a fairly routine heart valve replacement surgery at Emory hospital in Atlanta seven weeks ago.

All I know is what I read in the papers later and what friends and these medical people told me. But it does seem that I spent days sticking one foot in and out of death's door.

To a man and woman, those doctors and nurses said to me after the critical time had passed, "We exhausted all medical possibilities. We did everything we knew to do for you, and it probably wouldn't have been enough. What saved you was prayer."

Can you believe that? Great men and women of science saying such a thing in 1993?

Prayer? Surely not. It had to be some new miracle drug developed by researchers at Harvard. It had to be one of those cardiac pumps they said they attached to my heart when it just up and decided not to beat anymore.

Lewis Grizzard

No, they said. It was prayer. One doctor explained, "Everywhere I went during your worse time, I ran into people who said they were praying for you. One woman said, 'I don't agree with anything he writes, but I'm still praying for him.'"

A friend said, "Everybody I saw said they were praying for you. A man said his church held a special prayer service for you. You had a lot of people asking God to spare you."

What I did to deserve any of that I don't know, but I do know I had spent a lot of time in my life doubting. At one time or the other, I doubted it all: spirituality, love, the basic good of humankind.

But this flirtation with the end of me has removed a lot of that doubt. If the medical experts say prayer brought me back from certain death, who am I to doubt them?

And prayer only works if there is someone or something to grant the favor asked. My faith and belief in that someone or something not only has been restored but it has been forever more cast in my soul as the great truth beyond all others.

But now comes the hard part. I owe a lot of thank yous. I must thank those who are responsible for the fact I'm still amongst the quick. The Emory doctors and nurses know how I feel about them: They are the best of the best.

But what do I do about the prayerful? Say simply, "Hey, everybody who prayed for me, Thanks?"

It's got to be more profound than that. I snatched away a new life. I have been to the other side of the veil and came back from behind it. I received the reprieve at the midnight hours. I made the dawn once more and it was bright and beckoned with the promise I could finish the unfinished and fulfill the unfulfilled.

Here is what I would like to do: I would like to gather all who lifted a voice when I stood in need of it so badly and, one by one, I would like to hug them around the neck and say, "I love you and I thank you for my life."

And I pray myself and ask, "Lord, you know who you heard from in my behalf. Please let them know there is no end to my gratitude."

For the record, even if you didn't pray for me, it's nice to be with you again, too.

To be honest, it's just nice to be.

Boys of Summer want extra inning

Spring again. Softball season, the first evening game. The chill spreads slowly across our bare knees. The shorts seemed like a good idea at five when we dressed, our dreams of hot weather not yet bothered by the memory of how quickly the metal seats cool and the wind kicks up once the sun is down.

We've waited all year for this, the chance to sit together in a gaggle and talk about women stuff while watching our men do what they have done since they were little boys ... something our own little boys do now, those of us lucky enough to have them. Bat and hit, turn and throw, watch the ball, field. Exult! Slap five! Toss the glove at the cage with flair, grab up the bat and take a few practice swings. Fwup! Pppffff! Take that!

Miss the short hop, the fly ball that gets lost in the lights, the ball that slides just under the $98 aluminum Big Boy's Toy. Agonize. Question the equipment, the umpire, God. Or is it the Grim Reaper, creeping up on once-boyish muscles with premature embalming fluid? Is the player an embarrassment to the team, should he just get out of the way for the younger guys?

I'm not sure what it is about softball that attracts the almost 9 million of us who are expected to play this summer, a number growing by 5 percent a year in the past five years. It probably has much to do with the fact that as long as you keep yourself in a modicum of shape, you can keep intact this one avenue back to youth.

Sarah Overstreet

You may not have the wind for basketball, or the knees for football. But a little extra girth on the upper torso seems to help one whack a softball rather than hinder. So you can't run as well as you used to. Neither can the guy in left field, and with a little luck you'll swat it to him rather than the teenager in center.

Some women I know call themselves "softball widows," spending the whole season at home while their men hit the fields. I swear, I can't understand it. To love a man and miss this? A woman can see more emotion from a man in an hour on the softball field than she sees from him the entire rest of the year. There have been several books written about men and intimacy lately, but I put no stock in them because none of them talk about softball. If you want to see a man's soul laid bare, watch him smack a ball to the wall in front of an audience of his middle-age peers.

I'm not sure what's happening up in the stands, either, but I love it. I've sat among women I know well and like, and those I've barely met. It doesn't always make much difference. There's a bond between us there on those butt-breaking bleachers, all watching our men prove that, at least this year, they are not yet too old to do anything.

Perhaps this is the most compelling hook for me, this defiance of what we grew up believing about age. Instead of giving up sports, as so many of our parents did in middle age, we baby boomers listened to exercise physiologists who told us throughout our adulthood that we can extend our athletic lives well into our 70s and 80s.

I watch No. 2 on the Slow White Guys team (yes, that's their real name) with special appreciation this year. In order to help repair a torn hamstring, he swallowed his macho pride and went to several months of off-season yoga classes with ladies in leotards. He lifts a few weights and runs a little several times a week all year-round. He's 43. When the first pitch comes, he's ready.

On the field next to us, a couple of 55-year-olds are still whacking the whey out of the ball. The guys on our team shake their heads and basically consider them physical anomalies, a rare combination of DNA. I think they're wrong. I think the Boys of Summer are figuring out just how long exercise and persistence can forestall the coming of fall.

Hillary Clinton shakes up salons with new summer 'do

By CONNIE CASS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Beauty salons are buzzing and stylists are flipping their wigs: Hillary Rodham Clinton has a new 'do.

The first lady returned from a weekend trip to New York with her formerly shoulder-length hair cut to just below her ears. The new style is layered on the sides, slightly tousled and swept away from her face.

Washington hair stylist Robin Weir said it was all his clients talked about Monday. "They're all crazy about it, they all want it," he said.

The bad news: His salon's $160 "Hillary" wigs were instantly outdated. So the staff whipped out their shears and whittled them down to the new size.

Mrs. Clinton joked about all the fuss when she debuted the new look Monday during a commencement address at the University of Pennsylvania. Her blond hair mostly was concealed by a black mortarboard.

"I know it's been on all of your minds," she said dryly. "It is after all the No. 1 issue. I had a friend call me from Japan. He saw it on CNN."

The White House played down the disappearance of Mrs. Clinton's page boy. A spokesman said the first lady simply "got her hair cut for the summer" in a style similar to one she wore a few years ago. He wouldn't name the hairdresser.

But The Washington Post said in today's editions the first lady's new hairdo was the work of Frederic Fekkai, a New York-based Frenchman who charges $275 a cut and counts among his clients actresses Marla Maples, Sigourney Weaver, Ellen Barkin, Meryl Streep and TV journalist Lesley Stahl.

Mrs. Clinton won fashion kudos during the presidential campaign when she dumped her dowdy headbands for the long bob with bangs.

But her latest look got mixed reviews.

New York stylist Oribe complained that it was "matronly."

"The easiness of the long hair was just very American, very sexy," said Oribe, a stylist for Vogue magazine. "Short hair is less sexy. Now I think you'll see it more conservative, very Capitol Hill-looking."

That may be why the new hairdo got higher marks inside the Beltway. Weir, who cut Nancy Reagan's hair when she was in the White House, called the layered cut "outstanding."

"I'm insanely jealous because I didn't do it," he said. "It's a hairdresser's dream to give the first lady a new look."

The first lady's hair is still long enough for a chignon, noted a relieved Gabriel DeBakey, the Washington stylist Mrs. Clinton calls when she wants her locks upswept for formal affairs. DeBakey wasn't surprised she opted for a shorter style.

"It's wash and wear," DeBakey said. "She's been working very hard. She needs the freedom."

In New York, the maker of "Hillary" wigs plans to rush out a copy of the shorter style within 10 days. But the old "Hillary" is still for sale in 50 different colors and may prove more popular, said George Mayer, president of Jacquelyn Wigs.

"I think it suits more women," Mayer said. "Her first style was very chic and more fashionable. This new one is more of a summer look."

But Mayer isn't complaining; he sees a change in first lady fashion as money in the bank.

"We may have to come out with a whole line of 'Hillarys' if she keeps changing her hair style," he said.

The U.S. mail must go through — fast!

By KELLY P. KISSEL
Associated Press Writer

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Amid a constant drone loud enough to force shouted conversations, 1,000 workers confront an unrelenting stream of 3.5 million pieces of mail in one day.

Tomorrow brings 3.5 million more.

In the aftermath of two shootings that focused attention on the pressures of postal work and its military-style management, the manager of this plant is proud of his suggestion boxes and rapport with employees. But on a tour he calls aside a supervisor to ask why the keypunch machine is operating at only 58 letters a minute instead of the usual 60.

In the time it takes to read this sentence, 280 pieces of mail will pass through the two-story, 6.8-acre labyrinth of automated cancelers, bar coders and sorters.

Night is the busiest time, when mail from 199 central Pennsylvania post offices shows up. Each night, 230 full trucks roll in, and 230 full trucks roll out.

"The mail just doesn't stop. It just keeps on coming," said Allen W. Lariviere, plant manager of the U.S. Postal Service's general mail facility at Harrisburg. "If your 5:30 truck comes at 8 o'clock, you're in trouble."

The two fatal shootings this month were the 10th and 11th such attacks in the last decade. Six of the gunmen had been disciplined at work or fired from their postal jobs.

The two who struck May 6 fit the pattern: Larry Jason, who killed himself and a co-worker in Dearborn, Mich., had been counseled after losing out on a promotion; Mark Richard Hilburn, who's accused of killing his mother before shooting a letter carrier in Dana Point, Calif., was fired last year after stalking a co-worker.

At the Harrisburg plant, Lariviere says he works to maintain an atmosphere where employees are happy to come to work. Still, he was compelled to ask about the offending keypunch machine, which it turned out was balking at handling some odd-sized packages.

"I have to know where things stand," Lariviere explained.

It's easy for supervisors to know. Electronic monitors watch every machine — the chutes, the sorters, the moving belts bearing new mail every minute. Where meters and monitors can't measure how fast the mail is moving, big scales weigh bins of letters so managers can estimate progress.

"People have no idea what goes on in here," said Jeff Leader, who works a sorting machine for outsize mail. At 33, he is already a 14-year veteran of the postal service. "There's a lot of pressure on these people. They (supervisors) want their numbers. They want their productivity."

Dr. Clifford Stewart, a psychology professor at Widener University in Chester, Pa., and author of "Understanding and Managing Stress," says the level of work-related stress is determined by how much responsibility a worker has compared with the amount of control he or she has.

It's "not how well-paid you are or how important the job may be," he said.

Postal workers have a lot of stress because there's little control over the stream of mail. If it comes in, it has to go out.

"The mail is very perishable. It's like fruit. It has a certain timeliness to it," said Greg Frey, a Postal Service spokesman in Philadelphia. "If it gets there late, in many cases, it's not worth anything."

Some postal workers cross the line into violent behavior because work-related stress combines with stress from other sources.

"When you add another item or two, you tip over that bottom line and that contributes to aberrant behavior," said Dr. James Motiff, a clinical psychologist who conducted stress management seminars in the 1980s and now is chairman of the psychology department at Hope College in Holland, Mich.

Lariviere and Suzanne F. Medvidovich, Harrisburg's customer services manager, work constantly to answer worker complaints and keep stress low. Suggestion boxes are scattered through the plant, and the employee assistance program will even help unhappy workers prepare for other careers.

"The best way to get rid of stress is to improve communication and vent frustration," Lariviere said. "The whole atmosphere is set up so that when they come to work, they want to come to work."

Still, the national postal system handles 5 billion pieces of mail a day, so productivity is by necessity a priority.

"If you were in school and had a 99 percent on your test, you would be very happy," Medvidovich said. "If we do 99.99 percent, we somehow delayed 500,000 pieces of mail."

Infant receives gene therapy intended to cure disorder

By MICHAEL FLEEMAN
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Doctors hope a new type of gene therapy will cure an infant born without a working immune system, allowing him to live a normal life, and possibly lead to similar treatments for more common diseases.

Andrew Goba, born last Tuesday, slept through the two-minute procedure Saturday at Childrens Hospital Los Angeles.

He was drinking formula and sleeping soundly in a bassinet Sunday in a sterile hospital room, which could be his home for up to six months while doctors wait to see whether the treatment worked.

Andrew is the first infant to undergo a procedure to cure a genetic disorder known as "bubble baby disease," which leaves the newborn unable to fight diseases. About 100 American babies are born with the disorder every year.

If untreated, babies often die before their first birthday after contracting common childhood ailments.

"We just don't want Andrew to get sick," said his mother, Crystal Emery, 19, of El Centro.

If the gene therapy works, Andrew will be spared a more painful bone marrow procedure and a lifetime of expensive drug injections, said Dr. Donald B. Kohn, who performed the treatment.

Andrew's disorder, severe combined immunodeficiency, was passed down from his parents, who carry the genetic blueprint for it but don't actually have it.

A similar kind of gene therapy has been used on five older children in Europe in recent months.

But Andrew's treatment uses blood from the umbilical cord, rather than bone marrow as required of older patients. A newborn at the University of California, San Francisco, was scheduled to undergo the treatment Tuesday.

Doctors are optimistic the therapy can also be used for sickle cell anemia, hemophilia and Gaucher's disease, even possibly as a treatment for AIDS.

"The hope is that what we learn from this could maybe be applied to children with more common disorders," Kohn told a news conference.

For Andrew's parents, the treatment was part of a long painful experience.

Their first child, Chastity Goba, was diagnosed with the disorder at only 2 months after she went to the doctor for treatment of an infected umbilical cord, they said.

The baby underwent marrow transplants, with her father,

Leonard Goba, as donor, and chemotherapy that made her hair fall out, before she died at age 5 months in 1990.

The couple decided to have another baby, knowing the child faced a one-in-four chance of inheriting the disorder. After Crystal became pregnant, a test confirmed the couple's worst fears. After talking to doctors, they decided to try the gene therapy while the child was a newborn.

"We didn't want him to be a guinea pig or anything," said Ms. Emery. "But we didn't want to go through what we went through before."

Wives' tale about cats inspires retelling

DEAR ABBY: I do a slow burn whenever I see one of your articles defending cats.

When my oldest son was a tiny baby, a cat wandered into our house, and I caught it sitting on my baby's chest with its mouth buried deep in the baby's mouth!

My ex-daughter-in-law told me that her mother claims that a cat smothered her younger sister to death when she was an infant and too weak to struggle.

I suspect that some of the sudden-infant-death cases are due to cats in the household. Your experts don't know what they are talking about. Cats are very smart—and sneaky. They don't do anything wrong when someone is watching.

I doubt if you will publish this because it disagrees with your so-called experts. I always tell my story to anyone I know who has a small baby and a cat. This is true. You may use my name.

IRMA ORR, OMAHA, NEB.

DEAR IRMA ORR: Thank you. Please read on:

DEAR ABBY: Please inform your animal expert and "Expecting in Yuma, Ariz." that the subject of cats sucking and smothering the breath out of infants is not a myth.

When I was a boy, my mother laid my 6-week-old sister in the middle of her bed. My sister was asleep and too young to roll off the bed. My mother and I went outside for a few minutes, and when we came back to check on the baby, there was the cat on top of the baby with its mouth on the baby's mouth! The cat was shifting its weight from one front paw to the other, sucking the breath from the baby.

Dear Abby

My mother knocked the cat off the baby, who was almost lifeless! My mother breathed into my sister's mouth and slapped her on the back until my sister caught her breath and cried loudly. Needless to say, we got rid of the cat.

THURMAN E. CARROLL,
DEL RIO, TEXAS

P.S. This happened to another woman in Del Rio. Her mother said the baby had already turned purple when she knocked the cat off her baby.

DEAR ABBY: This is my first letter to you, but I just can't be still. Yes, cats are jealous of babies. I have seen it with my own eyes. I was 8 years old at the time when my mother caught our cat lying across my little brother's face in his crib. The cat had its mouth right on top of the baby's mouth, and it is still clear in my mind how Mother jerked the cat off and got my little brother to breathing again.

You are wrong about it being a myth. It's a fact. Cats are naturally jealous, and they will suck the life out of a baby if they get the chance.

Mothers, watch your babies! I am 73 years old now, and I will never forget that terrible scene.
BILL ADAMS, LAS CRUCES, N.M.

DEAR ABBY: It is not a myth that cats will jump into a baby's crib and suck the breath out of the baby. When my cousin was 2 months old, I saw our family cat sitting on the baby's chest, sucking the air as it came out of the baby's nostrils!

I pulled the cat off the baby's chest. Shortly after that, we gave the cat away. I was 18 at the time, and now I am 64. I will never forget it. Never!
MRS. ROBERT THURSON, ALHAMBRA, CALIF.

DEAR MR. CARROLL, MR. ADAMS AND MRS. THURSON: No additional expert I could quote would convince you otherwise, so I'm not even going to try. Let's all agree on one thing, however: Parents should not leave infants alone with cats (or dogs).

Big Bird prepares kids for school

By SALLY WILLIAMS COOK
For AP Special Features

For almost 25 years, children have been amused by the lovable Sesame Street characters: the antics of Oscar the Grouch, Big Bird's wisdom and the Cookie Monster shoving endless cookies into his mouth.

But with 60 percent of mothers with preschoolers in today's workforce, according to Pam Green, vice-president of Children's Television Workshop's Community Education Services, many of these children are in child-care centers or with baby sitters when Sesame Street airs.

To reach these youngsters, the Children's Television Workshop has created a program designed for child-care providers that uses Sesame Street to help prepare children for school. The Sesame Street Preschool Educational Program began as a pilot project in Dallas and was launched as a collaboration between CTW, local Public Broadcasting Service stations and child-care providers.

In Washington, D.C., public television station WHMM implements programs at housing projects throughout the city and works with teen-age mothers to enable them to use the program.

At the Kidspace Day Care Center, WETA, another local public television station, trains groups of teachers on using discussion methods, follow-up reading materials and art activities to get across the Sesame Street theme of the day.

Malahat Baig Amin, one of the Kidspace teachers, watches Sesame Street two mornings a week with her preschoolers. One of the most successful activities, according to Amin, was the day the children talked about differences.

"The kids laid down on paper and we traced their bodies and then each child painted his or her skin tones," she said as she walked through the center. "They were delighted and amazed by the many different shades from maple to bronze to dark brown."

Jordan's jumper lifts Bulls past Cavs Chicago advances to Eastern Conference finals

By CHUCK MELVIN
AP Sports Writer

RICHFIELD, Ohio (AP) — The situation was so eerily similar, Michael Jordan couldn't help thinking back to 1989. "You dream about a challenge like this. I had very similar thoughts, positive thoughts," Jordan said Monday night after he sank yet another once-in-a-lifetime shot at the buzzer to beat the Cleveland Cavaliers 103-101, sending the Chicago Bulls to their fifth straight Eastern Conference finals.

Chicago, which has won nine consecutive playoff games dating to last year's NBA Finals, now awaits the winner of the New York Knicks-Charlotte Hornets series. In 1989, Jordan hit a 16-footer over Craig Ehlo to beat Cleveland at the buzzer 101-100, eliminating the Cavaliers in a deciding first-round game.

Monday night, the score was tied at 101 when Jordan went one-on-one with Gerald Wilkins, the man Cleveland had acquired expressly for this purpose.

As Jordan worked on the right wing with less than 10 seconds to play, Wilkins slapped the ball away, but Jordan quickly retrieved it. His back to Wilkins, he worked in toward the foul line, glanced up at the clock at the far end of the court — it showed 3.5 seconds — then wheeled and shot a fadeaway over Wilkins' outstretched hand. The ball nestled into the net as the buzzer sounded, stunning the sellout crowd of 20,273.

"It felt good when it left my hands," Jordan said. "Not many times do you get a chance to duplicate something. Just being able to be there when the team needs you, to come through, means a lot to me."

The pressure on him was greater in 1989, Jordan said, because it was a do-or-die situation. This time, a miss only would have meant overtime, and even a loss was bearable in light of the 3-0 lead the Bulls carried into the game.

The shot itself, though, was more difficult. "I didn't have my momentum going toward the basket, as I did the last time," Jordan said. "He (Wilkins) played good defense. I admire him for the challenge he gave me. It was a fadeaway, and I hadn't hit a fadeaway all night." Wilkins, who couldn't have defended Jordan any better, smiled when he realized what had happened.

"I had to. I wanted to go over and shake his hand," Wilkins said. "I had all ball, but it seemed like he went back a couple of inches more and let it go. I said, 'No way,' and it went down. I can't believe it's over."

Jordan's legend also grew in the eyes of his teammates. "It was unbelievable," B.J. Armstrong said. "I was just frozen in time. It took an instant before I realized what happened out there."

Jordan, still bothered somewhat by the sprained wrist sustained on Thursday, finished with 31 points on 11-for-24 shooting and also grabbed nine rebounds. Horace Grant had 17 points and 10 rebounds, and Scottie Pippen scored 17.

Brad Daugherty scored 25, none in the fourth quarter, and grabbed 13 rebounds for Cleveland, which has been eliminated by Chicago four times since 1988. Wilkins scored 22.

"Michael did it to us again," John Williams said. "We really wanted to win this game. We didn't want them to sweep us. But they wanted to win this game so that they could get some rest."

In addition to winning the game, Jordan also was responsible for keeping the Bulls in it. The Cavaliers built three double-digit leads in the second half, and each time, Jordan responded with a basket. His short bank shot cut Cleveland's lead to nine with 7:19 to go in the third quarter, and he sank 3-pointers later in the third and early in the fourth to reduce 10-point leads to seven.

The second 3-pointer started a 17-5 Chicago run that put the Bulls ahead 94-92 on Grant's dunk with four minutes left, and neither team led by more than three after that. Wilkins' 3-pointer gave the Cavs their last lead, 99-96, with two minutes to play, but Jordan personally outscored Cleveland 7-2 down the stretch.

The Cavs lost a chance to take the lead with 20 seconds left when Craig Ehlo missed a 14-footer. Jordan helped control the rebound, setting the stage for his winning shot.

"We were lucky that Michael can do what he does at the end of ball games," coach Phil Jackson said. "When he gets the ball in the right spot, there's a lot of things he could do with it. It was a miracle shot."

Pampa's Bybee named to all-conference baseball team

James Bybee of Pampa was named to the Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association all-conference baseball team this season. Bybee, a junior outfielder for Howard Payne University in Brownwood, was a first-team selection. He batted .366 during the regular season in helping lead Howard Payne to the conference title.

Bybee

Howard Payne advanced into the playoffs and was eliminated by Hardin-Simmons, 7-6, in 14 innings during the NAIA District 8 baseball tournament. Bybee hit his fourth home run of the season in the game.

Howard Payne pitcher Damon Treadway, a senior, was named the TAAIA player of the year. HPU's Todd Howey claimed coach of the year honors.

The all-conference team was selected by the coaches during a spring meeting in Dallas.

Spurs, Suns meet tonight in pivotal fifth game

PHOENIX (AP) — Kevin Johnson would like to forget the struggle the Suns had in the first round. David Robinson would like him to relive it.

Robinson and San Antonio want to use the Los Angeles Lakers as their role model when they play Phoenix in Game 5 of the best-of-7 Western Conference semifinal.

The Lakers won two straight in Phoenix to start the first round, forcing the Suns to win three straight to close out the shorter series and advance.

"We have to have a road-game mentality, an us-against-the-world," Robinson said about the Spurs' approach to tonight's pivotal contest with the series 2-2.

"You have to realize you don't have anybody out there to pump you up, and we're going to use the LA series as an example," said Robinson, who had a playoff career-high 36 points, plus 16 rebounds and three blocks on Sunday, when the Spurs won 117-103.

San Antonio is the only Western team to finish a series early, upsetting Portland 3-1. That gave the Spurs two more days of rest than the Suns, and it might have worked against them when Phoenix took a 2-0 lead before the series moved to San Antonio.

But Johnson said he thought the Suns, seeded No. 1 in the league after winning 62 regular-season games, still are feeling the effects of their struggle with the Lakers.

"It was such an uncomfortable feeling to be down 0-2 and feel like you're a better team," Johnson said. "I felt like I was suffocating. Not that I felt pressured or didn't feel like we were going to win the series, but even when we won the first game, still down 1-2, and won the second game, 2-2 — you still can't breathe until you win that series, and there was no letup."

The operative phrase around the Phoenix locker room is "don't dig ourselves a hole." To avoid that, Phoenix needs better rebounding, shooting and ball-handling. And Charles Barkley has to figure out why his game has declined from top-of-the-world during the Olympics to a cut above average during his worst postseason.

Barkley, playing on a painful left hamstring, came into the playoffs shooting 56.9 percent, second in the NBA. His average against the Lakers was about 48 percent, but despite a 12-for-18 performance in Game 2 against the Spurs, he is shooting 43.7 after nine games.

Barkley promised things would change for Game 5. The absence of Antoine Carr, who sprained his left ankle early in the game Sunday, should help.

Luyendyk follows rocky road to Indy 500

By STEVE HERMAN
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Arie Luyendyk's career has been anything but smooth, going from the biggest prize in auto racing to the unemployment line, and back.

He'll begin the May 30 Indianapolis 500 from the inside of the front row, his first pole-position start in 112 Indy races.

"Anytime you get it, it's always a good time, but it's especially a good time now, because this year I'm back on a full year with Chip Ganassi Racing," said Luyendyk, who was out of a job when his race team was sold and then folded a year after he won the 500 in 1990.

He drove only two races for Ganassi last year, then signed on fulltime for 1993. He is seventh in the Indy-car standings, with a best finish of fifth in the season opener at Australia.

"To come back here and to lift the team up, which this is obviously going to do, is very important, not just for this race, but for the remainder of the year," he said of starting from the pole.

Luyendyk, a native of The Netherlands and living in Scottsdale, Ariz., qualified on Saturday with a four-lap average of 223.967 mph. He also had the fastest lap in practice last week at 226.182.

Monday's fastest lap was a 223.292 by Emerson Fittipaldi during the quietest day of practice since the track opened on May 8. Only 18 cars were on the track, many of them backups of drivers already qualified for the race. Luyendyk was second-fastest at 222.524, followed by Scott Goodyear (221.751) and Mario Andretti (220.751), both in their backup cars.

John Andretti, Mario's nephew, tested a Walker Motorsport car for the second straight day. He had a lap in Hiro Matsushita's car at 220.157 mph, and an hour later, Matsushita improved his best speed from 215 to 217.633.

Other non-qualified drivers who showed improvements on Monday were rookie Marco Greco at 212.947 and Rocky Moran at 210.748.

The slowest in the lineup so far is rookie Mark Smith at 214.356.

Twenty-six of the 33 starting positions have been filled, with the rest of the lineup to be decided on Saturday and Sunday. The tentative lineup has Mario Andretti starting next to Luyendyk and Raul Boesel joining them on the outside of the front row.

Luyendyk, 39, is in his 10th year of Indy-car racing. He was the Indianapolis 500 and the series rookie of the year in 1985, but never won a race until his victory at Indy, his 76th career start. He was third at Indianapolis in 1991 and 15th last year after crashing on his 136th lap.

"There were some doubts," he said of his future in the sport. "Racing is a business. It's also a sport, but it is a business. It requires a lot of dollars. So it's hard right now for young drivers to come up through the ranks anyway, and it's been hard for me. But there are no guarantees."

"The reason I didn't have a ride ... it's quite a long story; it's not just a deal where I couldn't get a ride. There were a lot of circumstances around that deal. But I did my first race with Chip last year here and, although we ended up crashing, we were running strong, looking good. I built a good relationship with Chip and I'm real happy that I'm back for the full year with a good team like his."

Of course, winning a pole is not as big as winning a race. And winning a race is not as important as winning THE race — Indy.

"Obviously, A.J. Foyt hasn't been coming here for a few hundred years because he just likes the place so much," Luyendyk said.

Football bowl coalition created dream game

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — The first blueprint for the college football bowl coalition never intended to create a national championship game.

"Originally, the Atlantic Coast Conference and the Big East — we wanted to get our champion to play the champion of another conference," said ACC commissioner Gene Corrigan, one of the coalition's chief architects. "That was our first goal, pure greed. We wanted to play in one of those three (big) bowls."

Independent Notre Dame then entered the picture and a title game matchup became even less important.

"When we talked to Notre Dame about joining in with us, they were so serious about not doing anything that would create a playoff," Corrigan said Monday at the ACC spring meeting. "They said, 'Let's create our own playoff atmosphere by having this thing.'"

So, it's ironic that what the coalition worked so hard to avoid happened in its first season: the dream matchup of No. 1 Miami vs. No. 2 Alabama for the national crown in the Sugar Bowl.

It turns out the game wasn't all good for the pact, which has been extended for two more seasons, Corrigan said.

"One of the problems ... is we ended up with No. 1 vs. No. 2 and that kind of relegated all the other bowls to a position that just happens every once in a while. While it was great for the fans and the media to have No. 1 vs. No. 2 and everybody got fired up about it, it certainly didn't help the Orange Bowl or the Cotton Bowl or the Rose Bowl or any of them. We know that is not going to happen every year," he said.

And one major glitch in the equation involved an ACC team.

The Cotton Bowl passed over then No. 4-ranked Florida State in favor of lower ranked Notre Dame, a nation ranking card for TV, to play No. 3 and undefeated Texas A&M, sending the Seminoles to the Orange Bowl to face Nebraska with no chance of winning the national title.

"That was a glitch that should not have occurred and they ended up paying a big price for that," said Florida State athletic director Bob Goin.

Notre Dame defeated the Aggies in a lopsided game.

Corrigan also said Stanford had to play its tier two coalition bowl game in Florida, some 3,000 miles from home. Few fans attended.

"As with anything in the first year, there could have been things that went better," he said.

Bright future lies ahead for SWC, league officials say

By CHIP BROWN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas and Texas A&M, the most likely candidates to leave the Southwest Conference, have plenty of reasons to stay, says Texas athletic director DeLoss Dodds and new SWC commissioner Steve Hatchell.

"We get more appearances on television and make more money in the SWC than we would in any other conference," Dodds said Monday.

Dodds also said college football will likely ditch the bowl system in the near future and go to a playoff, because that's the direction that television revenue is headed.

"The playoff is a way to make more money," Dodds said. "There will either have to be cuts made in the future or more money raised. A playoff is one way to raise money."

Dodds and Hatchell gave a state of the SWC address to those attending the annual Associated Press Sports Editors meeting.

Both men said a better self-image among Southwest Conference schools would help stifle persistent rumors of a league breakup.

"I have seen the conference get weaker because we talk bad about ourselves," Dodds said. "We need to stop the talk and get about our business. We need to be more positive. Every conference has problems, they just don't get talked about as much."

Hatchell said he is working on a corporate newsletter and a magazine that will help promote the positives of the conference as it attempts to overcome recent allegations of wrongdoing in the Texas A&M and Houston football programs.

"The school presidents are committed to making this league work," Hatchell said. "It's time to act like a conference. We need to make ourselves the epitome of integrity."

Hatchell said he has not been involved in any discussions about expanding the league, but he added that he wouldn't rule it out.

"If there is an advantage to expanding that makes the league better, we ought to consider it," he said.

Hatchell, who has been on the job five weeks after replacing longtime commissioner Fred Jacoby, said he is working to make improvements in several areas, including basketball, where scheduling and officiating have been scrutinized. Several coaches have complained to the conference office that SWC officiating has gained a national reputation for being erratic.

"We are reviewing the tapes," Hatchell said. "The good officials need to be protected. But we clearly need to go out and find the good, young officials and start bringing them up. We need to have officials that could officiate in the Final Four."

Hatchell said basketball teams also need to be very aggressive in scheduling games against top teams in the country to gain more respect nationally.

Dodds and Hatchell agreed that basketball remains an area where the conference could dramatically improve revenues.

"There is a lot of television money for basketball that the Southwest Conference isn't getting," Hatchell said. "The trick is getting a team like North Carolina to come into our gym. They will play you at their place, but we need them to come here."

Dodds said the conference would profit from having one great basketball team.

"It doesn't matter if it's Texas Tech or SMU, but with one great team in the conference, everyone's power rating goes up," Dodds said.

Fort Elliott third baseman Josh Purcell leaps for a throw from first as Allison's Greg Boydston tries to sneak into third in the first inning Monday in Briscoe.

Fort Elliott batters Allison

By DAN FROMM
Sports Writer

BRISCOE — The Fort Elliott Cougars battered three different Allison pitchers Monday afternoon in their final regular season game and Donny Bell turned in a strong pitching performance for his third win of the season.

The Cougars belted three home runs on their way to the 34-4 victory. They had already wrapped up first place in the district and improve their record to 10-2 on the season heading into their bi-district matchup with Samnorwood Thursday.

After his team's win Monday, Cougars coach Curtis Smith talked about Thursday's game. He said, "Samnorwood's tough for us, because they hit the ball real well. But so do the Cougars.

Fort Elliott scored 11 runs in the bottom of the first inning to take an 11-3 lead. They then added four in the second, 11 in the third and eight in the fourth.

In the third inning, right-fielder Jimmy Nelson hit a line-drive shot to center that just cleared the fence for a two-run homer.

In the fourth, Randy Finsterwald hit his second home run of the year, a three-run blast, and later in the inning, Jake Swigart nailed his fourth of the year, a two-run drive to left-center.

Bell, who improves his record to 3-1, struggled through the first inning but was able to shut down

Allison the rest of the way, surrendering just one run in the last four innings.

"I think Thursday's game will come down to defense," Smith said. "The team that fields the best will probably win."

The Cougars, who have five players batting over 400 this season, are 2-1 against Samnorwood already with Swigart winning both his starts against the Eagles.

"Jake's been able to shut them down pretty good this season," Smith said. He gave up just five runs in two games against them so far.

The Cougars also lost a 12-7 decision to Samnorwood. They'll square off at 3 p.m. Thursday at Shamrock.

Mariners rout Rangers, 16-9

ARLINGTON (AP) — Mike Blowers knows he'll have to relinquish his job at third base when defending American League batting champ Edgar Martinez is healthy enough to re-claim the position.

But Blowers won't go quietly. Blowers hit a grand slam homer in his second consecutive game to tie a major league record and his five RBIs and four hits both represented career highs as the Seattle Mariners outscored the Texas Rangers 16-9 Monday night.

Martinez, activated off the 15-day disabled list on Monday, is still at least a week away from playing regularly.

"I'm enjoying my time right now, getting in the game," Blowers said after becoming the 13th player in major league history to have grand slams in consecutive games.

"But Edgar is our third baseman. Hopefully my showing will be strong enough that they'll have faith in me and I'll get some at bats later in the year."

Blowers, who has 21 starts at third base this season, continues to swing a hot bat with 11 RBIs in his last six games.

"Mike is hanging on to third base and playing well while Edgar gets ready," Mariners manager Lou Pinella said. "He sees Edgar on the playing list and he wants to hang on to third base a little longer."

When Blowers came to the plate with the bases loaded against Rangers starter Craig Lefferts and his team trailing in the fourth inning, 2-1, he allowed himself to think briefly about hitting another grand slam.

Blowers had his first career grand slam off Bobby Witt in Sunday's 7-0 victory over the Oakland A's.

"I'd never gotten one before in my whole professional career and now I've got two in a row," Blowers said. "I was walking up there and said, 'Gosh, wouldn't it be nice to do it two nights in a row?'"

"Actually I was trying to protect the plate. But I hit it well and I was hoping it would get over."

The Mariners' 23 hits established a team record and the 16 runs tied a club mark. Rich Amaral tied a Seattle record with five hits and Jay Buhner hit two homers in a game for the sixth time in his career.

"The guys get excited when we start hitting," Blowers said. "But you can never be sure and have enough scoring when you're playing a team like Texas, especially in this stadium."

Pinella said he didn't feel comfortable even when the Mariners built an 8-2 lead in the fifth. Texas came back with five in the bottom of the fifth before Seattle scored eight runs in the final four innings to turn the game into a rout.

"We swung the bats early and put some runs on the board," Pinella said. "The key was we kept adding runs. I'm happy with the team with all we've been through. We're playing good, competitive baseball through the first 38 games."

The Rangers' pitching staff is in disarray. The 23 hits allowed tied a Texas club record for the most in a nine-inning game. In the past two games, the Rangers have yielded 31 runs and 40 hits, the most runs and hits the Rangers have ever allowed in a two-game span.

The Rangers closed their clubhouse for a 20-minute team meeting after the game.

"The meeting wasn't to kick them when they're down," Rangers manager Kevin Kennedy said. "Our mental approach has got to be better. Tonight there were a half a dozen situations where we weren't playing thinking baseball."

Blue Jays rock Clemens

BOSTON (AP) — Roger Clemens allowed just five hits in his previous start. On Monday night, he gave up six in an inning.

Toronto, which beat the Boston Red Sox 9-3, batted around against Clemens in a five-run sixth inning, defeating him in Fenway Park for the first time since 1988. Clemens gave up six runs and eight hits in 5 2-3 innings, the first time since last Sept. 17 he failed to pitch into the seventh.

"We ran into a barrage of base hits," said Clemens (5-3). "They were finding holes, bouncing over people's gloves."

With the score tied 1-1, Alfredo Griffin and Devon White singled opening the sixth, and both scored on a single by Roberto Alomar, who then stole second and scored on Paul Molitor's single. All four hits were on grounders just beyond the reach of infielders.

Molitor stole second and scored one out later on Darnell Coles' sacrifice fly. Darrin Jackson then singled, and Pat Borders' RBI single chased Clemens.

"We didn't scald the ball, we just seemed to get them in the right place," said Molitor, who later homered and had another RBI single.

Clemens, who pitched with an extra day of rest after throwing 143 pitches in a shutout last Tuesday against Baltimore, had won his previous six home starts against Toronto.

Pat Hentgen (5-2) pitched five-hit ball for seven innings, struck out four and walked three. Danny Cox and Duane Ward finished for Toronto.

Toronto, which has homered in 11 consecutive games, got solo shots from John Olerud in the fifth and Molitor in the seventh. Olerud has six homers this season, and Molitor seven.

The Blue Jays have an extra-base hit in 27 straight games and Olerud, who is hitting .415, has five consecutive multi-hit games.

"It's been a good stretch and the home runs are something I can't explain," said Molitor, who never has hit 20 homers in a season.

Giants stay alone at top of NL East with victory over Astros

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — It was billed as the opener of a showdown series, and the marquee players of the San Francisco Giants and Houston Astros didn't disappoint.

Ken Caminiti and Jeff Bagwell homered, and Eric Anthony had a two-run single for the Astros, who entered Candlestick Park trailing the division-leading Giants by one game.

Matt Williams and Barry Bonds countered with home runs for the Giants, who avoided a first-place tie Monday when Robby Thompson's 10th-inning sacrifice fly gave them an 8-7 victory.

"Their big guns hit a couple of rockets, and then our big guns got going," said Giants manager Dusty Baker, whose new-look batting order produced the club's sixth victory in seven games.

New leadoff hitter Darren Lewis hit a two-run triple and singled in the winning rally and Thompson, his replacement in the No. 2 slot, doubled and hit the game-winning fly.

"I don't see any reason why we can't stay at the top," said Thompson, who compared these Giants favorably to the division champions of 1987 and the pennant-winners of 1989.

"I'd say we're stronger than the 1987 and 1989 clubs," Thompson added.

Williams' league-leading 13th home run helped the Giants to a 5-2 lead after four innings, but a pair of unearned runs in the fifth and Bagwell's three-run homer in the seventh gave Houston a 7-5 advantage.

Bagwell's homer, his eighth, came on an 0-2 slider from right-hander Mike Jackson and snapped the reliever's 14-game scoreless streak.

Bonds quickly stole the thunder in the bottom of the seventh with a two-out, two-run homer off right-hander Xavier Hernandez that produced a tie and gave Bonds the National League lead with 35 RBIs.

"Bonds is a tough out," Caminiti said. "Some people wake up in the morning and flat out hit. We're going to have to learn how to pitch to him, or else walk him four times."

The home run was Bonds' 10th of the season. He also had two singles and a walk, and is now batting .430 with an .812 slugging percentage. Five of his homers have earned leads, two others have gained ties.

"You don't send messages in May," Bonds replied when asked if the victory was important.

"When you've been there (NLCS) three times in October, you don't get carried away."

After right-hander Dave Burba (3-2) worked a perfect 10th, the Giants staged their winning rally off Houston relief ace Doug Jones (1-2) in the bottom half.

Kirt Manwaring lined a leadoff single to center, Willie McGee sacrificed and Manwaring reached third when Lewis singled sharply off third baseman Caminiti's left forearm and knee. Thompson followed with a game-ending fly to center.

"It's tough to lose a game like this, but we know we're good and that we'll bounce back," said Bagwell, who is batting .440 (11 for 25) during a six-game hitting streak.

The two teams continue the series tonight with a battle of unbeaten right-handed starters, John Burkett (6-0) of the Giants and Darryl Kile (2-0) of the Astros. Burkett will attempt to become the NL's first seven-game winner.

Pro beach volleyball serving up winner

By JOHN STURBIN
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

FORT WORTH (AP) — Any way you skew the numbers, dude, professional beach volleyball is serving up a winner.

And you'd better take it seriously, traditional stick-and-ball fans, because corporate America and network television already have.

"This pro beach volleyball thing — it's wholesome, it's families, and it skews young," said Kevin Monaghan, NBC-TV's director of new business development in New York City. "A lot of advertisers now, they don't buy ratings. They buy demos. And sports that skew very young are the NBA and pro beach volleyball."

The corporate and network shirts are absolutely ga-ga. The demographics say the tour that transformed Sundance Square into Fantasy Island last weekend for the United Cerebral Palsy Fort Worth Open, sanctioned by the Association of Volleyball Professionals, is the perfect marketing vehicle for delivering the coveted 18- to 35-year-old age group.

"You come out here, you see kids 5- and 6-years-old and 11-12," said 36-year-old Sinjin Smith, winningest player in the sport's history at 134 victories and counting. "You see people in their 40s and 50s. Sand volleyball encompasses a wider range of people because anyone can really play at any skill and age level."

According to the Association of Volleyball Professionals, 44 million people in this country play volleyball, including 11 million who do it in the sand. Sixty percent of all volleyball players are women, including eight pros contracted to the association this year for the first time.

At the elite pro beach level, the world's best two-man teams are seven stops into a 21-city tour (the event at Pensacola, Fla., was rained out) that will pay a record $3.7 million in prize money. Included is the $500,000 Miller Lite Grand Prix, a season-ending bonus pool awarded at the $750,000 Miller Lite U.S. Championships at Hermosa Beach, Calif., on Aug. 27-29.

The shirts at Miller Brewing Company are absolutely ga-ga over this "lifestyle" sport and the dudes named Karch, Sinjin and Bruk who play it. So are the number crunchers at Ford Motor Company, Killer Loop, Sideout Sport, Evian, Power Athletic Footwear, Speedo and Old Spice — a sampling of the corporate clientele attracted to these athletic, tanned and scantily clad 'bods.'

NBC, which began its volleyball coverage with three live telecasts in 1991, has increased programming to 11 one-hour shows beginning with the stop in Chicago on June 19-20. All advertising slots for the Chicago telecasts, at an average of $25,000 for a 30-second spot, have been sold.

"We're televising events from those beach volleyball hotbeds of Cincinnati, Milwaukee and Chicago," said Monaghan, who credited Jon Miller, the network's vice president/program planning and development, for recognizing and tapping into pro beach's potential.

"There are sports that would die for the network exposure these guys get."

The event here, which will be televised on Home Sports Entertainment at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday and 7:30 p.m. Saturday, had a $75,000 total purse.

Braves' Avery ends drought against Expos

ATLANTA (AP) — Steve Avery finally ended his drought against the Montreal Expos and the Atlanta Braves found a way to beat Dennis Martinez.

Avery, who entered his start 0-4 lifetime against Montreal, shut down the Expos on four hits in 5 2-3 innings Monday night and the Braves went on to a 5-2 victory.

Atlanta has won 8 of its last 10 games, while the Expos had a four-game winning streak snapped.

Avery (3-2) gave up two runs, walked one and struck out four. It was his eighth career start against Montreal, and he had a 5.22 ERA in his previous seven starts against the Expos.

Atlanta manager Bobby Cox said he gave the quick hook to Avery "because he ran out of gas."

"He struck out the last guy (Tim Spehr) in the fifth inning with a fastball that looked more like a change-up," Cox said.

"It was muggy out there and it took a lot out of me. I wasn't going to go nine innings anyway, so he might as well have gotten me out of there," Avery said.

Mike Stanton got the last three outs for his major league-leading 16th save.

Sid Bream drove in a pair of runs with a double for the Braves.

Atlanta reached Martinez (2-5) for nine hits and five runs in five innings. Martinez, 8-4 lifetime against the Braves, had not lost to Atlanta since June 29, 1990, winning five games in a row.

"I've had a lot of success against the Braves, but not tonight," said Martinez, who missed his last turn because of tenderness in his right elbow.

"I can't say that cost me some sharpness, but my concern for my elbow didn't allow me to follow all the way through," he said.

Bream's double was the key hit in a three-run third inning. Jeff Blauser led off with a double and David Justice drew a one-out walk. Ron Gant's bouncer got past third baseman Mike Lansing for an error, scoring Blauser. Bream then doubled to center for two more runs.

The Braves scored a run in the second inning on Greg Olson's RBI single.

In the fifth, Justice doubled and took third on a ground out. Bream then walked before intentionally getting caught in a run-down between first and second. Second baseman Delino DeShields tagged him out, but fell over Bream in doing so, and Justice scored easily.

The Expos, held to only two hits in the first five innings, scored twice in the sixth and chased Avery.

Pinch-hitter Lou Frazier led off the sixth with a single and DeShields followed with another single, sending Frazier to third. Lansing's sacrifice fly brought in one run and when Avery walked Larry Walker, reliever Marvin Freeman relieved.

Moises Alou, who had two hits, got the second run home with a single to left.

Notes: The Expos have six rookies on their roster: pitcher Kent Bottenfield, catcher Tim Spehr, infielders Frank Bofick, Wil Cordero, Lou Frazier and Mike Lansing. ...

Max's win girls' softball contest

Max's defeated Malcolm Hinkle, 12-3, in girls' softball action last weekend at Optimist Park.

Lisa Kirkpatrick and Lori Lindsey pitched for Max's. Kirkpatrick gave up two runs on six hits while striking out one and walking one. Lindsey gave up one run on three hits while striking out two and walking one.

Max's top hitters were Tera Dougherty with two doubles and a single; Lisa Kirkpatrick and Michelle Doucette with two singles each. Shauna Broaddus, Candace Cathey, Kristen Stephens and Tera Hembree each had a single.

Billie Roland Mills Heifer
 All the pain and grief is over, Every restless tossing passed. She is now at peace forever, Safely home in Heaven at last. Perhaps you sent a lovely card, or sat quietly in a chair. Perhaps you sent a funeral spray, if so, we saw it there. Perhaps you spoke the kindest words, as any friend could say. Perhaps you were not there at all, just thought of us that day. Whatever you did to console our hearts, we thank you so much whatever the part.
