WASHINGTON (AP) — There were plenty of believers when Bill Clinton, then the president-elect, told a mostly black college audience that he hoped to redeem Martin Luther King Jr.'s promise of equal opportunity.

Now, the believers within the civil rights leadership appear few and far between. Clinton moved into the White House nearly a year ago, and the activists contend he promptly moved their cause to the back burner.

Clinton was returning today to the site of that pre-inaugural speech, Howard University, on the federal holiday marking King's birthday, and activists said they were hoping for more than rhetoric.

They say Clinton abandoned civil rights in trying to steer clear of "liberal" issues. His aim was to avoid alienating mostly white, suburban voters, they said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Protecting the threatened spotted owl means a new home or family deck will cost more, the housing industry argues in a campaign to turn consumers against logging cutbacks in the Northwest.

Not so, respond environmentalists who call the industry declarations a smoke screen and say cyclical, seasonal and other market forces are responsible for the spiraling prices of lumber.

"I never thought that losing jobs in the Northwest was an effective argument because people are losing jobs all over the country," said Gary Donnelly, executive vice president of the National Lumber and Building Material Dealers Association.

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was hard enough for Curt Gillespie of Graceville, Minn., to watch last year's rain destroy his crops. Now he says he's facing a second crisis — a huge tax problem caused by the government's tardy distribution of disaster aid.

Gillespie is one of thousands of Midwestern farmers who could get big tax bills next year because they didn't get their 1993 crop insurance and disaster assistance payments by Dec. 31.

Those payments will have to be counted as 1994 income, according to the Internal Revenue Service.

"We're going to end up creating a back-to-back disaster even if we have a bumper crop," Gillespie said in a recent interview. "The money isn't going to be there to pay the income tax."

GRAND CANYON NATIONAL PARK, Ariz. (AP) — The principle is simple: A family vacation should not degenerate into an exhaust-shrouded battle to park at the edge of one of the world's greatest natural wonders. But that is precisely what is happening at the Grand Canyon, and officials are looking for solutions — even a ban on cars.

"The Grand Canyon experience is rapidly approaching that of a bad day at a shoddy shopping mall," says Roger Clark, a spokesman for the Grand Canyon Trust, an advocacy group. "You can easily spend an hour and a half of a two-hour visit just looking for a place to park."

On a typical summer day, about 20,000 visitors pass through the gates of Grand Canyon National Park, most of them in the more than 6,000 cars that jam the roads and compete for fewer than 2,000 parking spaces.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — HemisFair Arena lost one of its main tenants when the NBA's San Antonio Spurs moved this season into the new Alamodome. Now, city officials are hoping to tear down the 25-year-old facility. Officials want to demolish the 16,057-seat arena, which opened for the 1968 World's Fair, to make way for a $140 million expansion of San Antonio's convention facilities.

"The Arena has got to come down," said Mayor Nelson Wolff, who has taken an active role in preliminary plans to expand the Convention Center. "That is the only option."

Services set Tuesday for Pampa civic leader

By RANDAL K. McGAVOCK
Staff Writer

Services will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday for Pampa civic leader Ben Hugh Guill at St. Matthew's Episcopal Church.

Mr. Guill, 84, who died Saturday in Amarillo following an illness, is remembered by an admirer as a man who had a dramatic impact on Pampa, Texas and national politics.

When Mr. Guill was elected to the United States House of Representatives in 1950, he was a Republican, and in Texas that simply didn't happen, said David Fatheree, an admirer of Guill.

"There wasn't a Republican anytime, anywhere that had been elected to anything in Texas and Ben Guill had the nerve to do it," Fatheree said.

"We always stayed in touch and he was a fighter, boy, he could charge up an audience and for a young guy, who was 14 at the time, he was my hero."

After a short-lived political career in Congress, Mr. Guill returned to Texas to work as the director of the Republican presidential campaign of Dwight D. Eisenhower, who carried the state in the 1952 election.

Fatheree said he believes it was, in part, Mr. Guill that helped establish a more dominant role for the Republican party in the state and led to a better two-party system in general.

Mr. Guill was executive assistant to the Postmaster General and was later appointed to the U.S. Maritime Commission.

In 1973, he retired as the executive vice president of the National Automobile Dealers

Association and then returned to Pampa, where his service to the community began again.

"Well, he had been on the library board when I first came to work here and I always enjoyed working with him as a board member," said Dan Snider, director of the Lovett Memorial Library. "He was very helpful to the library."

"The Guill family have been a very big part of Pampa and St. Matthew's for many, many years," said Rev. Jake Clemmens, rector of St. Matthew's.

"This death will leave an empty place for many, many people both in the church and in the community."

Before his political service, Mr. Guill taught in Pampa public schools for several years, worked at Cabot Corporation and operated a soft drink bottling plant in Amarillo. That changed with World War II.

As a Naval officer, Mr. Guill was wounded directing naval gunfire during the invasion of the Pacific island of Palau and was awarded the Bronze Star and the Purple Heart.

In 1939, Mr. Guill married Marjorie Buckler, the daughter of one of Pampa's founders and civic leaders. She preceded him in death in November 1993.

Panhandle to turn colder

While the East Coast endures bitter winter weather, Jeff Putman, left, was out today in Coronado Center sweeping up the results of the panhandle's wind. Frigid temperatures that led to traffic accidents such as the one in suburban Milwaukee, below left, also snapped power lines and water mains as far south as the Carolinas. Colder temperatures are forecast to move through the panhandle tonight dropping the low into the teens. Today's high in Pampa was expected to reach the mid 40s. It should be in the mid 30s for Tuesday. (Pampa News photo, left, by Darlene Holmes. AP photo below)

Not everyone seemed to mind the bitter cold, however. Steve Hunter, 11, of New Jersey was snowboarding Sunday. Although the western Texas Panhandle recorded snow early today, the rest of the area is expected to see only cold temperatures. (AP photo)

Deadly cold intensifies in the eastern part of the U.S.

By MICHAEL WARREN
Associated Press Writer

An Arctic blast that swept across the eastern United States brought record lows and deadly, freezing winds, turning roads into treacherous sheets of ice — for motorists who were able to start their cars.

The deep freeze, with wind chills of more than 100 below zero, snapped power lines and water mains and caused at least six deaths.

"This is bitter cold. It's terrible. It's pathetic," said Herb Craig of Dade City, Fla., stalled near Chicago when the brakes froze on his 18-wheeler.

The National Weather Service said ice and snow that hit the Plains this weekend would spread throughout the East today, with heavy snows in mountainous areas and gales along the coast.

Record lows were felt from the Great Lakes to the Carolinas Sunday, and still colder temperatures were forecast today. Up to 18 inches of new snow was expected in State College, Pa.

And a so-called "Siberian Express," even more potent and widespread than the weekend's bitter cold, was scheduled to invade the Upper Midwest today.

Watertown, N.Y., chilled to 43 below Sunday, the coldest spot in the Lower 48 states, the Weather Service said.

"Everybody's pretty miserable up here. Their cars won't start and they're not very happy," said Jay Uhlein, owner of the Pewter Mug tavern.

Searchers had to abandon snowmobiles Sunday and trudge through a blizzard to find the body of hiker Derek Tinkham near the top of 5,715-foot Mount Jefferson in New Hampshire. Tinkham, 20, froze in his sleeping bag in 42-below temperatures.

Jeremy Haas, a fellow student at the University of New Hampshire, hiked four miles in deep snow and wind chills more than 100 degrees below zero to get help. He suffered frostbite of his hands and face, but was in good condition today, officials said.

The weather also was blamed for the deaths of an Alzheimer's patient who wandered into the Iowa snow, a homeless man in Nashville, Tenn., a Newark, N.J., man whose unheated apartment dropped to 36 degrees and two motorists in Oklahoma.

"We're having ice wrecks everywhere," said Wayne Fowler, a sheriff's dispatcher in Craig County, Okla. Icy roads caused at least 77 accidents across the state Sunday.

Record demand for heat and frozen power lines caused power outages for thousands in West Virginia. And it seemed like everybody was having furnace trouble in Edinboro, Pa., Denny Jones said.

"It feels like we're about three miles south of the Arctic Circle," said Jones, who owns Jones Plumbing and Heating and spent the weekend making repairs in 20-below wind chills.

About a fourth of the 1,300 residents of Hallock, Minn., were trudging to neighbors' homes and the city hall for water after a water tower pipe froze and water mains broke Sunday.

"Dirtying dishes is a big no-no. Washing dishes is no fun when you have to keep heating everything on the stove," said Kathy Tri, whose family of four had to bathe at a friend's house.

In Rushville, Neb., Bill Rasmussen was relying on electric heat lamps to keep his 300 hogs warm this morning. His daughter-in-law, Julie, was glad the family sold off its dairy herd.

"There's nothing worse in the morning than a big wet cow," she said.

The weather didn't stop James Eves from spending five hours ice fishing on Lake Ontario's Chaumont Bay.

Severe quake rattles California

By CATHERINE O'BRIEN
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A severe earthquake centered in the San Fernando Valley jolted Southern California early today and was felt from San Diego to Las Vegas. There were no immediate reports of injuries or serious damage.

The 4:31 a.m. quake's magnitude measured a preliminary 6.6 on the Richter scale, said Kate Hutton, a seismologist at the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

She said it was centered northwest of Los Angeles in the northern San Fernando Valley, the same area where a 6.4 quake in 1971 killed at least 58 people.

The Alaska Tsunami Warning Center in Palmer, Alaska, measured the quake's magnitude at 6.7. The U.S. Geological Survey in Menlo Park said 6.5.

The quake was felt for 30 seconds or more, and several aftershocks followed within minutes. Dishes fell off shelves, some buildings were damaged and there were widespread phone and power outages. The quake was strong enough to send a television slamming to the floor in a Glendale home.

Near Hollywood, at least some structural damage was visible in older buildings. But the full extent of damage was uncertain before dawn.

A section of the Santa Monica Freeway was closed because of buckling, ABC News reported.

The sound of burglar alarms, car alarms and emergency sirens blended into a constant wailing.

The quake was felt in Santa Barbara and Bakersfield to the north and San Diego to the south and as far as Las Vegas.

A photographer in a Long Beach apartment building, Dennis Kinseley, said: "This thing just swayed and creaked. I thought it was going to come down."

"It was a pretty good rocker here," said a Long Beach resident 20 miles to the south.

"I had some glass break, some things fall off shelves. It rocked the water out of the pool," said the resident, who was cut off in phone troubles after the quake.

Today's earthquake followed a swarm of about 12 quakes near Santa Monica, the strongest of which was 3.7.

The last big earthquake to hit the area was on June 28, 1992.

Clinton says Yeltsin will 'try to hang in there'

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Claiming unqualified success on his European trip, President Clinton predicts Boris Yeltsin will "try to hang in there" with Russia's economic reforms. And he says his lengthy meeting with Syria's president produced notable progress toward a Middle East peace.

Speaking with reporters Sunday as Air Force One streaked home from Geneva, Clinton disputed the notion that the resignation of Yegor Gaidar, the architect of President Yeltsin's economic reforms, will shake international confidence in Russia's transformation.

"Gaidar left the government once before and the reforms didn't stop," the president said. He said Yeltsin had told him privately last week in Moscow that Gaidar was leaving.

On another foreign policy front, Clinton said Syrian President Hafez Assad has truly concluded that peace in the Middle East is best for his people and his own legacy.

"He's very tough and very smart," Clinton said of Assad, leader of a nation branded by the U.S. government as a supporter of international terrorism. The two men met for more than five hours in Geneva on Sunday, and the Syrian president emerged to say he was willing to offer Israel "normal, peaceful relations" in exchange for land.

Relaxing on a couch aboard the presidential jetliner in jeans and a sweatshirt, Clinton was tired but upbeat after the arduous eight-day, six-nation journey.

Testicles cut off with scissors

By DEBORAH HASTINGS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John Bobbitt is not the only man in America whose wife took a sharp instrument to his genitals. But Jaime Macias, whose testicles were cut off with scissors, has received far less notoriety.

His maiming has remained relatively obscure because, unlike Bobbitt, Macias refuses to talk about it. Also unlike Bobbitt, he has forgiven his wife and wishes nothing more than to resume their life together.

"Mr. Macias wishes that the case would be over with so they can go on with their lives," said Nan Whitfield, public defender for Macias' 34-year-old wife, Aurelia. "He has forgiven his wife. He just wishes the D.A. would."

No way, says Deputy District Attorney Larry Longo. "I don't care what he wants," Longo said. "A crime has been committed. It's just like cutting off someone's arm or nose."

Aurelia Macias is charged with mayhem and faces a maximum sentence of 11 years in prison. Her trial is set for Feb. 17.

Harding denies involvement in Kerrigan plot

By STEVE WILSTEIN
 AP Sports Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Figure skater Tonya Harding said she played no part in the clubbing attack on rival Nancy Kerrigan and was "shocked and angry" that anyone close to her might be involved.

Her former husband, Jeff Gillooly, also denied participating in this "bizarre and crazy event," his lawyer, Ron Hoevet, told The Associated Press Sunday night.

No charges have been filed naming Gillooly or Harding in the Jan. 6 attack in Detroit that forced Kerrigan to withdraw from the U.S. Figure Skating Championships.

Kerrigan, meanwhile, skated publicly this morning for the first time since she was hurt, practicing for one hour at an ice rink in her hometown of Stoneham, Mass.

She had no limp or visible effect from the attack.
 Harding also practiced, in Portland, and said she was trying to cope with the situation as best she could.

"It's an obstacle to get over and I may not be the normal figure skater image that everybody wants me to be, but I'm my own person and I may be a little rough around the edges sometimes, but overall I think I'm a good person," she said on ABC's Good Morning, America.

Harding's bodyguard, Shawn Eckardt, was charged along with two other men, but her lawyer, Dennis Rawlinson, said Harding had no knowledge of the plot.

"Tonya Harding categorically denies all accusations and media speculation that she was involved in any way in the assault," according to her statement read by Rawlinson, her coach's husband.

 "Tonya is shocked and angry that anyone close to her might be involved," the statement said. "She is pleased to see that Nancy is recovering quickly."

Eckardt has accused Gillooly of participating in the plot. Hoevet said Eckardt was hired only once to help with Harding's security and that he should not be considered her bodyguard.

Harding believes Gillooly is innocent and would distance herself from him if it turns out he was involved in the attack, said her coach, Diane Rawlinson. Harding and Gillooly divorced last year, reconciled in September and have been living together since.

U.S. Olympic officials met Sunday but took no action on whether to allow Harding to remain with Kerrigan on the Olympic team.

Asked if it would be best if Harding withdrew, USOC president LeRoy T. Walker said: "I suppose that would be the easiest possible out."

Walker said the committee's deadline for deciding whether Harding will compete in Lillehammer, Norway, is Feb. 21, the day of the women's skating draw and two days before the competition begins.

"We have to push for a decision before then," Walker said. "I hope that decision is within a few days."

Diane Rawlinson said Harding deserves to go to the Olympics.
 "Tonya is best under pressure ... Tonya always skates best when she's angry," the coach said. "I think she could win the Olympic gold."

Rawlinson said she didn't believe the Olympic judges would punish Harding with low scores.

"I think there are two victims in this horrible situation," Rawlinson said. "I think Nancy first, of course. But I think Tonya's also a victim. Tonya will not be in line to make the type of money from endorsements that she would have been in line to make."

The Oregonian newspaper reported today that investigators suspect the man who attacked Kerrigan was paid $6,500 from a trust fund set up for Harding by the U.S. Figure Skating Association.

New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner is one of several people who have donated money to Harding's fund, and investigators believe his donation may have been used for "hit money," the Oregonian reported, without disclosing its sources.

Texans plan events to observe Martin Luther King Jr. Day

By The Associated Press

Today is Martin Luther King Jr. Day, and Texans are honoring the national holiday with days of rallies, addresses and parades.

King, a Baptist minister, would have been 65 Saturday.

He preached "nonviolent resistance," and in 1964 won the Nobel peace prize for leading the blacks' civil rights struggle in a nonviolent way.

Despite his anti-violence stance, King was gunned down April 4, 1968, in Memphis, Tenn. He died at age 39.

Several around the state have already spoken out or paid tribute to the slain civil-rights leader.

Texas Attorney General Dan Morales said Saturday that King's message is alive and well 26 years after his death.

"What binds us all in common purpose, no matter where we are on the spectrum of age or income, race or sex, is the understanding that our separate futures must be built together. That is Dr. King's message," Morales said at a San Antonio benefit.

In San Antonio Saturday, a rally organizer said an undying optimism has sustained minorities in the 30 years since King led his march.

"One of the things most minority populations have is a thing called hope," said Nancy Bohman, chairwoman of the 1994 Martin Luther King March. "They say to themselves, 'Most things are going to get better, I'm going to get better, and the world will get better.'"

On Friday, the Rev. Gardner Calvin Taylor, dubbed by Newsweek magazine as "the dean of African-American preachers," said King would "weep that we've done so little with the dream he left us."

"He'd counsel us to get a grip on ourselves," Taylor told a San Antonio service to celebrate MLK Day.

About 500 people, as well as the 100-plus members of the Citywide Mass Choir that performed during the three-hour service, listened as Taylor delivered an emotional 33-minute address.

Not all pre-holiday gatherings were designed to honor King. Ku Klux Klansmen rallied Saturday against the holiday at several state capitals, including Austin.

Authorities estimated the anti-Klan crowd in Austin at 2,000. They carried placards, burned a small Confederate flag, and drummed on pots and pans, blew whistles and shook tambourines to try to drown out 33 Klan members and supporters.

Today, parades, recitals and addresses by U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno and a former United Nations ambassador were among the activities planned around Texas to commemorate Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

Reno was scheduled to address the American Celebration of Civil Rights in Port Arthur this morning and the Martin Luther King Multipurpose Center in Fort Worth Tuesday.

The Dallas Park and Recreation Department is sponsoring several activities, many of them for children, to mark the day. The celebration includes free refreshments, films about King, art and essay contests and a parade. A dance recital and basketball tournament are scheduled for later in the night. Admission to all events is free.

In San Antonio, the Martin Luther King Jr. Freedom March is scheduled to proceed along Martin Luther King Drive.

And Tuesday, Andrew Young will be the featured speaker at a Martin Luther King Day program in Plano called "Capitalizing on Dr. King's Dream... Winning Together."

All State Band members

Two students from the Pride of Pampa Band won All State recognition at auditions earlier this month at Texas Tech University in Lubbock. Heather Fernuik, upper left photo, was chosen as the first chair baritone saxophone from the area. She will participate in the All State Band Clinic and Concert to be held at the Texas Music Educators Convention in San Antonio Feb. 9-13. Fernuik, a freshman, is the daughter of Ron and Taci Fernuik. Chosen as first alternate on the euphonium was Michael Hunt, upper right photo. Hunt, a senior, the son of Brad and Mary Hunt. An estimated 40,000 students participated in the All State auditions in Texas. Those chosen represent two percent of band students trying out for the honor. (Pampa News photos by Darlene Holmes)

Government pledges amnesty to rebels

By ANITA SNOW
Associated Press Writer

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico (AP) — Soldiers hunted for guerrillas in the mountains of southern Mexico and, despite a promised amnesty by the government, a rebel leader vowed to keep up the fight for Indian rights.

Eight suspected rebels were arrested Sunday, but there was no reaction today from guerrilla leaders to a plea by President Carlos Salinas de Gortari to lay down arms.

Salinas announced a general amnesty Sunday, saying it covered all "violent acts" committed by the rebels from Jan. 1, when the uprising started, through Sunday.

Hours before his announcement, rebels of the Zapatista National Liberation Army were quoted by the Mexican media as vowing they wouldn't lay down arms until their demands were met.

One guerrilla leader, who identified himself only as Maj. Mario, said the rebels had numerous demands for ending the misery of the 3.2 million, mostly indigenous people of Chiapas, an impoverished state bordering Guatemala. "We are not going to stop the war until we have a satisfactory response," said the guerrilla, interviewed among his heavily armed and masked fighters at a mountainous jungle base.

"We have declared this war for many reasons, most importantly for our poor people. We have suffered 500 years of exploitation by the national and international bourgeoisie," he told the Mexico City daily Reforma.

He said the guerrillas, believed to number as many as 2,000, were abiding by the government's unilateral cease-fire, but would defend themselves if attacked by the 14,000 troops deployed in Chiapas.

In the pro-government village of Oxchuc, villagers said the eight arrested suspects, who had been turned over to authorities.

Hundreds of troops Sunday poured into Oxchuc and the surrounding hills while two single-engine propeller planes with rocket launchers and two helicopters flew overhead. Rebel activity had been reported the night before, but the army made no aerial attacks. In San Cristobal de las Casas, the government-appointed mediator, Manuel Camacho Solis, said the president's amnesty covers soldiers as well as rebels involved in the Chiapas conflict.

Camacho also said he had exchanged messages with the rebel Zapatista National Liberation Army.

"We have begun real negotiations through messages being sent by both sides," Camacho said, declining to elaborate.

Zapatista fighters seized San Cristobal and several outlying towns in Chiapas on New Year's Day to highlight the plight of poor Mayan Indians.

The government says 107 people died in the fighting. A military ground and air assault forced the rebels back into remote mountains and jungles.

Church officials say the toll is far higher, possibly in the hundreds.

Human rights activists and some church officials accused the army of human rights abuses, including summary executions, in its efforts to quell the unrest. The military has denied the charges.

Two RRC commissioners using state-owned cars

DALLAS (AP) — Two Texas Railroad commissioners have assigned themselves state-owned cars that they occasionally use for short business trips around Austin, state records show.

Commissioners Barry Williamson and Jim Nugent have assigned themselves the cars, The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday.

All other elected state officials, except Gov. Ann Richards, said they don't use state cars and instead drive their personal cars to attend meetings and speaking engagements.

Richards' press secretary, Bill Cryer, said the governor travels in a radio-equipped Department of Public Safety sedan, which officials prefer for security reasons. She used her own car when she served as state treasurer, Cryer said.

Williamson, a Republican, and Nugent, a Democrat, defended the practice of maintaining state-owned cars and said that having the cars available allows them to use their time more efficiently.

Both said they don't usually drive the state cars themselves, but ask state workers to ferry them to business engagements so that they won't have to find parking spaces.

The third railroad commissioner, Democrat Mary Scott Nabers, said the commission staff offered her use of a state-owned car when she joined the agency last year, but she declined.

"I just didn't feel like I needed it," she said. "I didn't need a car sitting there waiting for me. I just knew it would be a waste of resources."

All the commissioners drive their private cars to and from home. When they arrive at the office, Williams and Nugent have state-owned sedans awaiting them one parking space over.

China, U.S. reach textile agreement

BEIJING (AP) — U.S. and Chinese negotiators signed a textile agreement today, averting a trade war over illegal Chinese sales of billions of dollars worth of clothing to the United States.

The agreement "will provide for consistent and orderly growth of China's textile and textile product exports into the United States," said chief U.S. negotiator Jennifer Hillman.

The agreement is a three-year renewal of a U.S.-China textile pact that expired on Dec. 31. The United States had planned to impose large quota cuts on Chinese textile exports effective today.

The top Chinese negotiator, Shi Guangsheng, said the United States canceled plans to impose the cuts, the official Xinhua News Agency said. Shi briefed Chinese reporters, but U.S. officials, rushing to make a flight at Beijing's airport, didn't release any details.

Textile trade is controlled by agreements that set export quotas for different kinds of cloth products. The United States says China has exceeded its quota by $2 billion a year, mostly by shipping goods with fake labels through third countries.

The agreement provides for "strong tools to ensure that the transshipment problem is addressed forcefully," Hillman said at the signing ceremony. She did not elaborate.

The United States had demanded permission to make surprise visits to factories suspected of quota violations, but Shi said the agreement provides for visits only with the permission of the Chinese government, Xinhua reported.

The United States had also been demanding punitive action against Chinese companies that violated the quota agreement, and Shi said the two countries agreed quotas could be cut by three times the size of any violation.

"The agreement is the product of the joint effort made by both sides. Both sides have started from the principles of consultation and equality," said Wu Yi, China's trade minister. "China attaches great importance to developing cooperation with the United States in all areas."

The agreement came just as a U.S. order slashing textile imports from China by more than $1 billion was going into effect. On Jan. 6, U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor announced quota reductions of 25 percent to 35 percent on 88 categories of Chinese cloth products including sweaters, knitted shirts and cotton trousers.

China's trade ministry had protested the reduced quotas and suggested it might take "corresponding, retaliatory measures."

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Mexican revolt lies in Zapata's footsteps

The rebels seizing towns in southern Mexico spout a curious mix-and-match list of grievances. On the one hand, they spout socialist slogans and apparently receive help from communist guerrillas in Guatemala.

On the other hand, they oppose the Mexican government's tight bureaucratic control of people and even burn government documents. The rebels also protest that, despite halting reforms, Mexico remains a country without much democracy.

The rebels violently oppose the recently signed North American Free Trade Agreement. Like Ross Perot and others in the United States, the rebels confuse free trade with economic hardship. In fact, NAFTA will help Mexico's poor farms sell more goods in the United States.

A clue to the rebels' intentions comes from their name: Zapatista Army of National Liberation. Emiliano Zapata — whose slogan was "Land and Liberty" — rode with the legendary Pancho Villa in the bloody skirmishes of the 1910s against Venustiano Carranza.

Unfortunately, President Woodrow Wilson aligned himself with Carranza's marauders, slapping a tourniquet on the flow of arms to Zapata and Villa. The Wilson-backed Carranza forces, in victory, established a dictatorship surviving to this day. Because of the unneeded and harmful U.S. intervention, many Mexicans — including the Zapatistas of 1994 — will detest anything to do with the gringos.

The Vatican has offered to mediate the dispute between the Mexican government and the Zapatistas. Vatican diplomats helped negotiate the surrender of strongman Manuel Noriega during the 1989 U.S. invasion. And during the 1980s, they negotiated the peaceful end of a century-long, sometimes bloody territorial dispute between Chile and Argentina. Perhaps they can negotiate a settlement in Mexico. Ironically, during the 1930s and 1940s, assaults by the Mexican dictatorship led to the deaths of hundreds of Catholic priests.

The Zapatistas represent yet another of many assaults across the world on centralized governments. As in this case, the rebels often are confused about their motives, or are exploited by forces less noble than themselves. The regimes the rebels establish, once in power, sometimes prove worse than the tyrannies they toppled.

The Zapatistas have provided a wake-up call to the Mexican government. NAFTA already is improving the economic lot of Mexicans (and U.S. residents). Now the regime in Mexico City must not only continue its economic liberalization program but follow through on decentralization and guarantees of local autonomy.

Campaigns have a high cost

I have a friend who is embarking on a political career (he is running for governor of New York) and faces the dreadful chore of money-raising.

Those of us not directly involved in politics (as candidates for office) tend to forget the awful drain of fund-raising. A drain on time, and a psychological drain especially for those uninitiated who simply don't like to ask other people to give them money.

It isn't hard to call your neighbor and ask him to please would he send something to the Red Cross. It is agonizing to call your neighbor and ask him to give you some money.

One of the major reforms, as they are inevitably called, stipulated how much money an individual can give to a federal campaign ($25,000), the idea being to rescue the United States from plutocratic control. The "reform" had two results, one of them foreseeable but not widely foreseen; the second, absolutely unforeseen.

What the maximum campaign contribution has done, of course, is to make things worse. Candidates need money — not only in those expensive races we read all about (California, Texas, Illinois, Florida, New York) but also in smaller states like West Virginia, where Jay Rockefeller spent more than $20 million to become first governor, then senator.

But of course there is no limit on how much a wealthy individual can spend on his own campaign, so that the door is open to men and women of great wealth to spend their own money and spare themselves the ordeal of raising it. One congressman who runs in a hotly contested district in California told me that nine out of 10 of his public appearances need to be scheduled with a view to fund-raising.

As the cost of campaigns rises, the reformers find that they have sponsored legislation the result of which is to orient our legislators more and more to the task of money-raising. In brief, chasing the buck is now by far a greater concern of our legislators than it used to be.

The surprise is divulged by the O'Leary/Kamber Report, a monthly newsletter. We learn that very few Americans, even among the extremely rich, give as much as they are allowed to give. "Relatively few individuals — 78 — gave the maximum to candidates for federal office, federal PACs and political party committees that support federal candidates. The 'Big Five' — California, New York, Texas, Florida, Illinois — accounted for roughly two-thirds of this total, with 51 residents 'maxing out.'"

Six Republican women gave the maximum allowed, two Democratic women. But, interestingly enough, the 20 biggest givers to the Democrats outweighed in contributions the sum given to Republicans.

A second feature of the O'Leary/Kamber Report reveals the extraordinary indifference to political giving in this set. Of the wealthiest Americans, in the order listed, presumably beginning with the richest, we have the Walton family, who give an average of about $10,000 each to Republicans, about the same to Democrats. We come then to John Mars — zero, zero (nothing to Republicans, nothing to Democrats). Next to him, Jacqueline Mars Vogel: $550, zero. Sam Newhouse is next: zero, zero. Ditto Donald Newhouse.

In short, the extremely rich are not contributing heavily to politics, which means that the burden falls more heavily on the less-than-very rich.

The business of revealing who gives how much induces a little queasiness in those who do not think of ourselves as voyeurs. But, after all, the law is intended to publicize such gifts, so publicity they get, and it is interesting to note the enterprise of Roll Call magazine, which published the contributions of a few dozen writers, and what do you know, in the published list there are exactly four who are contributors to Republican candidates: Tom Clancy, Mark Helprin, P.J. O'Rourke and — me.

Here and there you will find a writer who will list one Republican beneficiary in a list of a number of Democrats. E.g., Andrew Tobias, to Republican Michael Huffington. And with a very few exceptions — Gloria Steinem is one, Judith Krantz another — the contributions are modest. These folks confer their favors in more valuable tender than a few hundred bucks.

The search for true reform in the system is as endless as the quest for eternal youth. The principal key is of course term limitation, which would lighten the burden of the challenger. And surely the cost of radio and television time should in moderate amounts be donated by stations that have air time because a channel has been reserved for them, courtesy of the government.

Broadcasters invest heavily in their states and acquire equity in space. But an operating fee would appear to be reasonable.

Almost anything appears reasonable compared to the ordeal now visited on anyone who seeks public office.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, Jan. 17, the 17th day of 1994. There are 348 days left in the year. This is the Martin Luther King Junior holiday.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Jan. 17, 1945, Soviet and Polish forces liberated Warsaw from the Nazis during World War II.

On this date:

In 1562, French Protestants, also known as Huguenots, were recognized under the Edict of St. Germain.

In 1706, Benjamin Franklin was born in Boston.

In 1781, American forces defeated the British in the Battle of Cowpens, South Carolina.

In 1806, Thomas Jefferson's daughter, Martha, gave birth to James Madison Randolph, the first child born in the White House.

In 1893, Hawaii's monarchy was overthrown as a group of white businessmen and sugar planters forced Queen Liliuokalani to abdicate.

In 1893, the 19th president of the United States, Rutherford B. Hayes, died in Fremont, Ohio, at age 70.

In 1917, the United States paid Denmark $25 million dollars for the Virgin Islands.

Gunshots noisier than prayers

There's been an ugly shadow over some of the clergy in our country.

Priests, pastors and televangelists have been caught coveting, consorting and corrupting.

But count our blessings — Americans are not killing one another over their religious differences. Not yet.

I say "not yet" because Old World ways have a way of migrating, and in half a hundred other nations, people are killing people in the name of religion.

You have been encouraged recently to see American troops withdrawn from Somalia and American leadership abandon the notion of democratizing Haiti because our reach has been exceeding our grasp.

We cannot impose our social and political system on the world, and we can go broke trying.

I count 70 nations presently at war.

Most of them involve Christians vs. Muslims, Muslims vs. Hindus, Buddhists vs. Sikhs.

There are also instances of Muslims vs. Muslims, as in Afghanistan, and Christians vs. Christians, as in Northern Ireland.

Paul Harvey

Jerusalem, the "City on the Hill," which is sacred to three of the world's major religions — Christianity, Islam and Judaism — has been destroyed 17 times in the past 2,000 years.

There have been four major Arab-Israeli wars since 1948, and the killing is ongoing.

Americans, properly proud of the degree of religious freedom enjoyed in our own country, would never condemn our next-door neighbor's religion, yet we have shuttled diplomats and soldiers around the world, seeking to make citizens of other countries more like us.

Since medieval Christians set out to reclaim the Holy Land from "heathen Turks," clerics have pretended that God is on our side.

Nazi Germany even used the teachings of Martin Luther to justify extermination of Jews.

Today, South Africa imagines that with April's "free elections," peace and tranquility will return to that troubled nation. It will not. Tribal differences — in essence religious differences — remain. The Zulus are still demanding for themselves a separate all-black, all-Zulu nation of their own.

Our nation tolerates diversity better than any other I know.

Joan Connell of Newhouse blames the media for distorting public perspective on religion. She says, "Quiet matters of faith don't make news; controversy and conflict do."

She's right. One gunshot makes more noise than a thousand prayers — though it is not more significant.

Liberal media propound Big Lie

By nature I am an optimist. I think that America is slowly gathering its moral resources for a highly successful counter-attack on the forces that have been debilitating it, and that the 21st century, as a result, is going to be a whole lot better than the 20th.

But every now and then, I must admit, I get temporarily depressed by the ability of our liberal media to rewrite history. The Reagan administration was the most howlingly successful in the modern history of the United States. Those who can remember it know this, or at least once knew it, and are therefore relatively immune to the liberal efforts to smear it retroactively as an era of greed and glitz when "the rich got richer and the poor got poorer" and the needy were left to rot in the gutters of our major cities.

But what about the generations now coming on line who have no recollection of those days? They are subjected to endless replays of the Big Lie, and can hardly help believing at least some of them. I remain stubbornly convinced that the truth will prevail in the long run, but it certainly won't if the liberals can help it.

Take the Jan. 3 issue of The New Republic. In an otherwise unobjectionable article on the Salvation Army, Sallie Tisdale quotes a longtime Army veteran on "the need for social services in Seattle and Alaska":

"I've felt very frustrated since the Reagan years, when they made so many cutbacks, especially in maternal and child health. People are so much worse off now."

William A. Rusher

There it is again: The Big Lie. No doubt that woman quoted recalls anecdotally some particular handout in her area that was for some reason diminished during the 1980s. But her statement, as quoted, is simply and flatly untrue. I sensed that as soon as I read it, as many others no doubt did. But who has the time or the facilities to track down these falsehoods?

Well, I tracked down this one. According to the U.S. Budget Appendix for 1983, the 1981 expenditure for the Maternal and Child Health program was $396 million. In 1989, according to the 1991 Appendix (page A-693 if you're following this, Ms. Tisdale), it was $554 million. That's a 39 percent increase, and correcting for inflation (38 percent) that means that Maternal and Child Health expenditures actually increased slightly during that mean old Reagan administration.

What's more, they kept right on increasing under Bush — to $650 million, making hash of the woman's assertion that the situation is worse "now."

Could she have been thinking of the Women, Infants and Children program? Hardly; that increased from $927 million in 1981 to $1,929 billion in 1989 — a 108 percent increase, or 70 percent after correcting for inflation.

The Immunizations program, then? Nope; that went from $44 million in 1981 to $142 million in 1989. How about Preventive Health Grants? No so up from $16 million to $85 million during the Reagan years.

So much for that particular example of the Big Lie. But I am gloomily aware that, in the same week in which that article appeared in The New Republic, a score of other versions of the same Big Lie were floated in other liberal media, both print and electronic, and that there's no hope whatever that any of them will be exploded, as this one has been, let alone that any refutations would reach the eyes and ears of those who read or heard them in the first place.

As Winston Churchill said of Macaulay, who had defamed the first Duke of Marlborough, "We can only hope that Truth will follow swiftly enough to fasten the label 'Liar' to his genteel coat-tails."

Remaining Beatles plan to record music together

NEW YORK (AP) — The three surviving Beatles will go into the studio next month to record new music and also plan to issue previously unreleased recordings, The New Yorker magazine reported.

The studio sessions come as Paul McCartney, George Harrison and Ringo Starr are completing a video autobiography on the legendary music group. That previously announced project is planned as a television series to be shown worldwide in 1995.

The closest possible thing to a Beatles reunion will happen next month, The New Yorker reported, when McCartney, Harrison and Starr go to work in the studio. The other Beatle, John Lennon, was murdered in New York City in 1980.

The three survivors plan to record new music, not remake old Beatles songs, as part of the Anthology project, journalist Hertsgaard reported in the Jan. 24 issue of The New Yorker, which goes on sale Monday. He cited two sources at the Beatles' record label, EMI, whom he didn't name.

"Yes, they are going to be working together again, but they haven't begun yet. It is supposed to be ultra secret," one of the sources said.

EMI officials speaking on the record wouldn't confirm or deny the reunion. "It's not inconceivable," EMI spokesman David Hughes told Hertsgaard. "But it's too early to know for sure."

Also as part of the Anthology project, the former Beatles have decided to issue four to six compact discs of previously unreleased Beatles songs from their vaults at Abbey Road Studios in London, Hertsgaard reported.

There are more than 400 hours of Beatles recordings in the vaults, on tapes stored in red-and-white cardboard boxes the size of large telephone books, Hertsgaard said.

Only 10 1/2 hours of Beatles music was released, in 13 albums and 22 singles, during the group's eight-year studio career.

Longtime Beatles producer George Martin will supervise the compilation, and the former Beatles and Lennon's widow, Yoko Ono, will have final say on the package.

"It will be a combination of material that is currently available, possibly some alternative takes of already released songs from the archives, live stage performances, BBC radio performances, and selections from the Beatles' private collections," EMI's Hughes said.

Many Beatles' recordings never released by the group have been put out illegally by others as so-called "bootleg" records and snapped up by collectors. But Hertsgaard said most of the archive recordings the Beatles plan to release have never been acquired by bootleggers and never heard by the general public.

Two Texas malls ban bandannas

BEAUMONT (AP) — Officials at two Southeast Texas shopping malls say there's been little controversy over their recent decision banning patrons from wearing bandannas on the premises.

Mall officials say colored bandannas are signs of street gang affiliation, and for safety purposes they're asking that patrons not wear them.

Rusty Schaller, operations manager at Central Mall in Port Arthur, said mall officials so far have not received any formal complaints against the ban or statements in favor of it in the month the policy has been in force.

"We have asked people not to wear bandannas, and it's not a big issue," said Mike Hansen, manager of Parkdale Mall in Beaumont, where the ban has been in effect for several months.

A Corpus Christi mall prohibits patrons from wearing ball caps backward. But Schaller said bandannas are the only "gang attire so far that the mall is prohibiting."

"We've recently started enforcing the bandannas (ban), but that's as far as we've gone with it," Schaller said.

Off-duty officers or security guards enforce the ban by asking patrons to conceal their bandannas while on mall property, he said.

At Parkdale Mall, officials ask that patrons remove their bandannas or leave.

Carjackers release hostage, surrender after 9 hours

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Carjackers who exchanged gunfire with police during a high-speed, 65-mile chase surrendered early today after holding a woman hostage for nine hours.

The hostage, a security guard at the Los Angeles County Hall of Records, was shaken but uninjured as police escorted her out of the building.

The two gunmen took the woman hostage Sunday afternoon after their hijacked pickup truck crashed during the police chase. They fled into the building, where the woman worked.

The gunmen gave themselves up without incident about 15 minutes after releasing the woman, said Lt. John Dunkin, a police spokesman. One of the gunmen had shot himself in the foot.

Two people, including a California Highway Patrol officer, were slightly injured in a crash downtown during the chase. Two bystanders were wounded as police and the suspects traded gunshots while speeding through Chinatown, authorities said.

The pickup truck was stolen at gunpoint before dawn Sunday in Sacramento, roughly 380 miles north, and the driver taken to an automatic bank teller machine where he was forced to make a withdrawal, authorities said.

"They said they've killed before and would kill again if necessary," the truck's owner, Michael McKeen, said.

The truck was spotted 65 miles north of Los Angeles on Interstate 5.

The chase by sheriff's deputies and California Highway Patrol officers reached speeds of about 100 mph.

Police said the gunmen had demanded money and an armored truck to use as a getaway car. About 4 1/2 hours into the standoff, a Brinks truck was driven to the front entrance, then replaced by a second one.

Singles buying more homes

CHICAGO (AP) — Single people bought nearly one-third of the homes purchased by first-time buyers in 1993, the nation's largest title insurance company said.

Smaller down payments and the lowest interest rates in 30 years enabled many people previously locked out of the housing market to buy their first homes, Chicago Title and Trust Co. said in a report released today.

First-time purchases by never-married singles climbed to 32.3 percent last year from 29.8 percent in 1992. It was their largest share in the 18-year history of the company's annual home buyer survey.

The report also showed that the average home price edged up 1 percent and that a trend toward adjustable-rate mortgages continued.

Chicago Title said nationwide sales of condominiums and single-family dwellings reached 5.1 million units last year, just 5 percent below the record 5.3 million sold in 1978.

"What near-record home sales last year really prove is the power of declining interest rates," said John Pfister, a Chicago Title vice president and market research manager.

The weak economy also made lenders more willing to make home loans in 1993, said Robert Dederick, chief economist for Northern Trust Co. in Chicago.

"Because strong demand for other types of credit was lacking, there was an incentive for lenders to push out into this type of lending," he said.

Evalina Tainer, president of Prime Economic Consulting in Chicago, said she was surprised by the high number of single homebuyers. But she said people are waiting longer to marry and more unmarried people are living together, two factors that may partially account for the gain.

First-time buyers accounted for 46 percent of all home purchases, down from 47.7 percent in 1992, according to the survey.

Despite an increase in the overall average home price to $172,700 from $170,800, the average down payment for all buyers fell to 20.2 percent of the sale price from 21.4 percent, Chicago Title said.

Monthly payments also declined, thanks to low mortgage rates, the company said. The average for first-time buyers was $950, down from $968 in 1992. For repeat buyers, the average monthly payment was $1,076, down from $1,156 a year earlier.

Fewer buyers banked on the security of conventional fixed-rate mortgages in 1993. Chicago Title said 22.2 percent of buyers selected adjustable-rate mortgages to finance their homes, up from 21.6 percent in 1992 and 16.3 percent in 1991.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: We've heard enough about insensitive mothers-in-law. Now, let's talk about insensitive daughters-in-law. Take mine, for example.

I wrote to ask if I could visit my new grandbaby for five days. This meant an 800-mile drive (one way), plus overnight in a motel. Just before my departure, my son called to say that a three-day visit would be better for them. I said, "Fine. No problem."

Upon my arrival, I found a note on their door explaining that nobody was home, but my son would be home right after work, so I waited for them in my car. I saw my beautiful grandbaby that evening.

The next morning, Mom and baby suddenly had to go to the library. Joyfully, I offered to babysit, but my offer was declined, so to occupy myself, I borrowed a bicycle for the afternoon and returned to their house at 5 o'clock. My son and daughter-in-law were just getting up from the table—their dinner was finished!

As my allotted three days would be up the next day, I left the next morning for my long drive home. I don't look forward to next year's visit, but I want to see my beautiful grandbaby again. I wonder, Dear Abby, what you—and your readers—think about this kind of hospitality from a daughter-in-law?

JILL IN OREGON

DEAR JILL: It was clearly insulting, but I cannot understand how a son could treat his mother so shabbily. Was there a page missing from your letter? Or are your son and his wife simply mean-spirited and hostile?

In any case, some kind of explanation is owed you for such discourteous treatment.

DEAR ABBY: I am an optometrist. When I'm at a party, or some other social event, someone will invariably ask, "How much is an eye examination?" This does not set well with me. I never hear anybody asking a lawyer or physician, "How much is an office visit?"

Please tell me how to respond without being rude, yet letting them know that this is an inappropriate question under the circumstances.

SEEING RED

DEAR SEEING: I have heard from other doctors and from lawyers complaining about the same kind of problem.

The solution is a polite, "Kindly telephone my office—I'm listed in the telephone directory. The receptionist in charge of appointments can answer your question."

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from a waitress regarding how to control unruly children in a restaurant. She made up a story about how one child had been badly burned by steaming coffee while turning unsupervised.

I remember when I was also a waitress putting myself through college. It was my first wedding reception job, in the only restaurant that catered weddings in our small community.

The ring bearer and the flower girl were chasing each other around, and sure enough, they ran into one of the waitresses. Lobster tails went flying along with the rest of the meals.

As the restaurant people had ordered only enough tails for the group, we had to pick up everything and lie that the chef would cook more tails. Need I say more?

R.M.H. IN NEW YORK

DEAR R.M.H.: No—enough said.

Old Mint Museum to stay open

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—Federal officials have backed off from their decision to close the Old Mint, a landmark that attracted 83,000 visitors a year with exhibits including $4 million in gold bars. The mint, built in 1874 and now a museum, will remain open through March while the decision is re-evaluated.

Treasury officials said sales of coin sets were so slow at the Old Mint that the government was losing money on the operation.

Woolen undies they're not, but they're hot

By FRANCINE PARNES
For AP Special Features

There was a time when long johns brought to mind cranky kids in drop seats and Civil War soldiers in union suits.

No more. Long underwear, layered or worn alone, is hot. In fact, it hasn't had so much attention since Sears Roebuck and Montgomery Ward first ballyhooed union suits in their catalogs more than a century ago.

The truly trendy wear waffle-weave tops and bottoms as sporty shirts and leggings, a la the Gap and DKNY. If the goal is strictly to keep warm, you'll brave the elements best in high-tech synthetic fabrics with names like Polypropylene, Thermax and Capilene. Lounging fireside at home, sexy silk camisole and leggings such as those from Hanro U.S.A. will hug you in all the right places.

Warmer for its weight than regular underwear, today's thermal underwear is so light it won't bulk up your body. Rather, it works on the principle of layering. "The best way to keep warm is to put on multiple layers of lighter weight fabrics as opposed to lots of heavy ones," says Bret Slane, product manager for Lands' End in Dodgeville, Wis. "With layering you create air pockets that trap heat from your body and keep you warm."

"We're not industrial-strength thermal, which is why we call it fashion warmwear," says Niki Sachs, president of Hanro U.S.A., a Swiss-based maker of luxury innerwear. "If you're an active downhill skier, then Polypropylene is the answer. But that's not really our business."

Peruse the lingerie departments at fine department and specialty stores and you'll find Hanro's camisoles and long johns, embroidered with Swiss or French lace and satin trim. The washable knits come in silk, cotton, merino wool and a silk-wool blend.

"We are a fashion house for the lady who wants to wear an embroidered silk camisole under a suit with a low neckline or under a sheer black evening blouse," Sachs says. In other words, it's for the woman who "wants something beautiful to keep her warm."

Warmer for its weight than regular underwear, today's thermal underwear is so light it won't bulk up your body. Rather, it works on the principle of layering.

"The best way to keep warm is to put on multiple layers of lighter weight fabrics as opposed to lots of heavy ones," says Bret Slane, product manager for Lands' End in Dodgeville, Wis. "With layering you create air pockets that trap heat from your body and keep you warm."

"The key is to move moisture to the outer layers, and ultimately all the way out to the air," says Jeff Bowman, merchandising manager for Polartec, a high-performance polyester-based fabric made in Lawrence, Mass. "If your insulation stays wet, you get cold, so you don't want to let water get trapped next to the skin."

Synthetic fabrics are best for outdoors, while natural fabrics are suitable for lounging at home, says

Dave Webb, promotions coordinator for REI, an activewear store in Denver.

"Natural fibers don't transport moisture as effectively as synthetics, which are designed to wick moisture away from your body," he says. "But they're a good choice for low-exertion activities or just around town."

Cotton performs low on the scale, Slane says.

"You don't want to wear anything that absorbs moisture, and that's just what cotton does," he says. "When you sweat, you want that sweat taken away from your body so the moisture doesn't come back and rob your body of heat."

Available from the Lands' End catalog are men's and women's flat knit machine-washable thermal underwear in silk, wool-nylon blend and Thermaskins, a spun polyester synthetic.

"We find that our customers either like synthetics for better moisture management or traditional fibers because they're natural," Slane says.

Meanwhile, waffle-weave cotton is making the leap from underwear to sportswear. It's the favored fabric for bright hooded cardigans and turtle-necks at the Gap, flirty minidresses at Contempo Casuals, and rompers from J. Crew.

"Thermal wear is no longer limited to just underwear," says Deborah Sharpe, a designer for Cherokee sportswear in Sunland, Calif. "Due to the importance of texture, organic fibers, comfort and a general back-to-nature philosophy, it has evolved to basic everyday outerwear."

"You can wear a thermal shirt and long johns under a flannel shirt and denim shorts, with hiking boots and heavy socks, and that's all it takes to get that rugged, layered hiking look."

Names in the news

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam (AP)—Bryan Adams said it didn't take much to get Ho Chi Minh City rocking.

"It's entertainment. They want it. They're starved for it," Adams, a Canadian, said after his concert. "You can tell by the reaction of the audience."

The concert Sunday was the first by a major Western entertainer since the end of the Vietnam War in 1975. At first, the audience clapped politely. But by night's end, Adams had them on their feet.

Some even gyrated. "I like it, I like it very much," said student Truong Huong Trung, 20, singing and dancing in the aisle.

The ticket prices of $15 to $35 amounted to several weeks' pay for an average Vietnamese worker. Roughly half of the 2,500-seat arena was filled with foreigners.

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Leeza Gibbons is living life like most men used to, and she calls it "incredibly spoiled."

The "Entertainment Tonight" hostess says having a husband who works at home while she pursues her TV career gives her a lot of freedom.

"Because of him and his choice, I have really been given a lot more flexibility than a lot of women may have," she told the Daily News of Los Angeles. "I'm incredibly spoiled. I recognize it everyday."

She'll recognize it even more as she adds a new job as host of her own daytime talk show, "Leeza," beginning today.

Gibbons has been married three years to actor and architect Stephen Meadows. But she still fears her career could derail her personal life.

"To be real honest with you, I'm gauging that situation every day with my husband," she said. "It is a constant topic of ours at home. Constant."

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP)—John Mellencamp says MTV did him a favor by censoring portions of his new video, "When Jesus Left Birmingham."

The cable music station put computer-generated video blocks over images it considered inappropriate, such as characters in black face and white face and people using needles.

Mellencamp publicist Jody Miller said the video was meant to highlight a deteriorating society and show the temptations that children face. But the singer said the MTV changes might actually be for the better.

"Their standards and practices edict has brought more attention to the very issue I'm talking about in the song and the video, anyway," Mellencamp said.

Wheeler native knows life from diamonds to stars

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

Southpaw pitcher Bus Dorman grew up to be elected Wheeler County sheriff in 1951 and that's how he retired in 1978.

Dorman, 79, was born in south Wheeler County and except for travelling stints with semi-pro baseball teams has lived in the area ever since.

In his unabashed opinion, law enforcement has taken a nose dive since he first took office.

"Now days officers don't have a chance," Dorman, 79, said. "Murder anymore is nothing. You'll get more for stealing a chicken in the penitentiary."

The reason for the decline in law and order, he said is too many attorneys. Appeals are costly, expensive and convicted criminals stay on Death Row too many years.

"In my opinion, building penitentiaries is not going to solve problems... My opinion is lawyers run the courts now," Dorman said.

He and the late Gray County Sheriff Rufe Jordan went into office at the same time. He has many a war story about crooks from the fifties, sixties and seventies. He's forgotten few details of the rough and ready days in Wheeler County when deputies chased the bad guys on horseback.

His most difficult case occurred in December of 1956 when a Shamrock boy, Victor Stephens was killed by two gangster brothers from Florida.

The gangsters, one of whom had just been released from a Florida penitentiary, were traveling through Oklahoma and had tried to pick up a deputy at Texola. When the deputy refused to get in their car, the gangsters shot at him. They proceeded to the Texas Panhandle when they were spotted three miles east of Shamrock by Game Warden Slim Davis, who shot out their radiator.

The gangsters, he said, tried to make it on foot across Victor's dad's ranch. Young Victor, 17, offered to guide lawmen around the ranch. About sundown, the group stumbled upon one of the hidden hoodlums who arose from the bushes and shot the boy killing him on the spot.

"We had hundreds of officers down there," Dorman said.

Lawmen stayed up all night trying to capture the criminals. Bloodhounds were borrowed from the penitentiary at McAlester, Okla. Dorman and two Texas Rangers on horseback followed the hounds.

"I can still hear them when they hit the ground running," he said.

They discovered one gangster dead, apparently from the previous night's gunfire and flushed another from the bushes. He was tried and sentenced to more than 10 years in prison.

Dorman lost a deputy, Carroll Copeland, in 1972, when he was shot after a $10 gas drive off. Copeland stopped the gasoline thief who shot him.

"My deputy lived long enough to shoot him, too," he said.

The assailant, Richard Todd Lewis, of Hollywood, Calif., was arrested in western Oklahoma.

During Dorman's time as sheriff, he employed two deputies for a county of 8,000, and the city of Shamrock employed one policeman. Now the county has less than 6,000 and it takes five deputies and one sheriff to keep order, not to mention the fact that Shamrock has a police department, he said.

Law enforcement in Wheeler County was a family affair. Myrtle Dorman, his wife of 60 years, served as dispatcher, jailer and cook.

"We was on duty 24 hours a day," he said.

Juveniles were not a problem for the sheriff.

"I don't think we sent a kid raised here in Wheeler County to the pen in the 26 or 7 years I was in office," Dorman said. "And on top of that I never wore a gun."

Stories flow out of Dorman like water. He recalls five men who tried to burglarize the Mobeetie Bank. They broke in to the bank, he said, and were observed by the night watchman. Dorman and his deputies flushed out the burglars who appeared brandishing sawed off shot guns and Thompson sub machine guns.

"They were the James gang out of Austin, Texas," he said.

They were traveling in a stolen car, which Dorman found. From Wheeler County, the gang stole a dump truck, but a sharp eyed deputy in Carson County picked up the lot of them.

An Austin lawyer, Dorman said, arrived by airplane ready to post bond for the bandits.

"We run him off pretty quick," the sheriff said.

The gang members were tried in Del Rio on federal charges.

There need to be changes made in law enforcement, he said.

"They got to give authority to officers to get the job done," he said.

He thinks the 40-hour work week is too costly, particularly since there is nothing to do so much of the time.

"What they do is set around and wait for something to happen," Dorman said.

Today's criminals are high powered, he said.

A lot of it is because they got college educations, he said.

Very little gets done to white collar criminals, he said.

He recalls his first oilfield job

FOOTBALL

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Lawrence Taylor, who revolutionized NFL defenses with his game-breaking outside linebacker play, is retiring after 13 seasons with the New York Giants.

Following the Giants' 44-3 playoff loss to San Francisco, Taylor made official the decision many expected.

Taylor announced a year ago he would retire, then decided to return after he ruptured an Achilles tendon at midseason.

Taylor, 34, was one of just two defensive players ever chosen the NFL's MVP in 1986, when he had 20 1/2 sacks and led the Giants to the first of two Super Bowl championships.

He was twice NFL defensive player of the year and was selected Pro Bowl starter each of his first 10 seasons.

He retires with 132 1/2 sacks, tops among linebackers and second only to Green Bay defensive end Reggie White's 137. That doesn't count the 9 1/2 sacks he had in his rookie season, the year before sacks became an official statistic.

Taylor was second overall choice in the 1981 draft, helping turn around the Giants, who hadn't been to the playoffs for 18 years. New York made the playoffs seven of his 13 seasons.

KERRIGAN ATTACK

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Tonya Harding took the offensive to save her Olympic berth, insisting she had nothing to do with the attack on Nancy Kerrigan and expressing anger that anyone in her camp might have.

Harding's attorney, Dennis Rawlinson, said the skater was "shocked and angry" that anyone close to her might be involved in the alleged plot to hurt Kerrigan.

Harding's ex-husband, Jeff Gillooly, denied participating in this "bizarre and crazy event," his lawyer, Ron Hoevet, told The Associated Press.

In Stoneham, Mass., Kerrigan skated for the first time since being clubbed on the right knee at the national championships Jan. 6 in Detroit.

There have been several reports that Harding was aware of the alleged plot long before the attack. Two of the three men arrested in the case reportedly told authorities that Harding knew of the plans.

Although Harding's bodyguard, Shawn Eckardt, was charged in the case, Harding's lawyer said she had no knowledge of the alleged plot.

Her coach, Diane Rawlinson, said Harding does not believe reports her ex-husband helped plot the attack.

Gillooly was among four people for whom warrants had been requested by Detroit police, The Detroit News reported. The other three were already charged in Portland and Phoenix.

A new witness, Sarah Bergman, a classmate of Eckardt, told a private investigator that Gillooly "was the mastermind behind this," and she had no reason to believe Harding was involved.

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — The president of the U.S. Olympic Committee hoped figure skating officials would decide in a few days whether Tonya Harding should remain on the team for next month's Winter Games.

LeRoy T. Walker, committee chief, said the last deadline for deciding whether Harding would compete in Lillehammer would be Feb. 21, the day of women's skating draw and two days before competition begins.

Committee officials said USOC would not be stymied into barring Harding, whose bodyguard has been arrested on charges of conspiring to attack skating rival Nancy Kerrigan. Some news reports linked Harding and her ex-husband, Jeff Gillooly, to the attack, although they have not been charged.

Australian wins Hawaiian Open

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

HONOLULU (AP) — Australian Brett Ogle has found a home on the American PGA Tour.

And his success on the circuit, which includes $216,000 from a victory Sunday in the Hawaiian Open, has secured his home.

"We just built a new home in Orlando," Ogle said following his one-stroke, comeback victory over Davis Love III. "This," the skinny, outgoing Aussie said, waving a check, "will wipe out my bank overdraft."

It also made him the leading money-winner for 1994 after two tournaments with $244,250 in prizes.

Ogle also secured a place in the Masters field, courtesy of some unintentional help from Love, who struggled over the last two rounds after taking the tournament lead with a second round 60.

"Just like all the others I've thrown away — not a lot of fun," Love said after shooting 71 in each of the last two trips over the wind-blown Waiialae Country Club course.

Ogle got his second victory in just less than 12 months with a closing 68 and a 269 total, 19 under par. It completed a peculiar sort of individual sweep for the man who now uses an over-long, 56-inch putter.

"I've won putting conventionally. I've won putting cross-handed. I've won putting with the Langer-style. And now I've won with the long putter," he said, then asked:

"Is there any other way to putt?"

It was a rhetorical question. He has no immediate plans of abandoning the long putter than has resurrected his career.

After winning the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am last year, Ogle developed a case of the putting yips. "I couldn't hit the hole from a foot," Ogle said. He went back to Australia to think things over.

"I have a lot of fight in me," he said. "I said 'where there's a will, there's a way.' And I found the way."

And he also has found a home on the American tour.

"I'm here for good. This is where I want to play. This is the best tour in the world. It's going to be awful hard to run me off. I'm planning on expanding my American schedule from about 17 tournaments to maybe 24 or 25," he said.

One of those will be at Augusta, Ga. His Hawaiian Open triumph provided him with the credentials necessary for a Masters invitation.

That invitation was secured on the par-3 17th where a day-long struggle between Ogle and Love swung in the Australian's favor. Ogle birdied from about 10 feet. Love made bogey, three-putting from the fringe. That turned the tie into a two-shot lead for Ogle with one hole to go.

Brit wins Houston Marathon

By MIKE DRAGO
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — England's Colin Moore had hoped only to improve his time in the 1994 Houston-Tenneco Marathon. He did that and much more.

Moore swapped the lead with Peter Fonseca of Canada through the second half of Sunday's race, breaking away on the 25th mile for a 19-second victory that topped his previous record time by nearly five minutes.

"It's a big race to win," said Moore, who finished the 26-mile, 385-yard course in 2 hours, 13 minutes, 34 seconds. He ran a marathon in 2:18:23 seven years ago. "I came here hoping for a fast-enough time to get into the Commonwealth Games. I hope that does it."

The 33-year-old Moore, of Keichey, England, and Fonseca pulled away from the lead pack about 14 miles into the race. The two ran together, well ahead of the others, the rest of the way.

Fonseca finished in 2:13:53, nearly two minutes short of his personal best. He said he had taken the lead on the 18th mile when he suffered stomach cramps.

"At 18 miles I thought it was no problem. Then he put on a surge in pace," Fonseca said, adding that he decided not to risk getting sick and dropping out. "I was really scared about being on the side of the road."

Steve Brace of Great Britain was third in 2:14:43, followed by Samuel Lopez Escorcio of Mexico in 2:14:48 and Sean Wade of New Zealand in 2:14:50.

The top American was John Tuttle, who finished sixth. Frank Bjorkli of Norway, last year's winner, was seventh after leading the first half of the race on a cool, damp morning.

The race record, 2:10:04, was set in 1989 by Kenya's Richard Kaitany.

In the women's division, Alevtina Noamova of Russia overtook the Ukraine's Tatiana Poznjakova, who had led the entire time in her first marathon, on the final mile to win in 2:34:47.

"I saw how Tatiana was running ahead of me and by estimating how she was running, I saw that I could win," Noamova said. "After 40 kilometers (24.8 miles), I had one thought in my head: 'I should win. I should win.'"

Trina Painter of Austin, one of the nation's top 10,000-meter runners, finished third in 2:35:43. The impressive performance in her first marathon convinced her to try out for the 1996 U.S. Olympic Team at the longer distance in addition to the 10,000.

Both Moore and Noamova won $20,000. Fonseca and Poznjakova each won $15,000.

Austrian wins second victory in World Cup

KITZBUEHEL, Austria (AP) — Thomas Stangassinger earned his second victory of the World Cup season, leading a 1-2 Austrian finish in a slalom.

Stangassinger's total time was 1 minute, 37.85 seconds, beating Thomas Sykora by .57 seconds, and taking World Cup slalom standings lead, 61 points ahead of Olympic champion Finn-Christian Jagge of Norway. Alberto Tomba of Italy was third in 1:38.48.

Cowboys will face 49ers Sunday

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys figure their somewhat lackluster victory over Green Bay has the San Francisco 49ers totally confused.
"We'll be the underdog just like we were last year," safety James Washington said. "And you know how that came out."
Dallas beat the Packers 27-17 Sunday in a mediocre game that included two Cowboys interceptions, a lost fumble and untimely penalties. It set up an NFC title game rematch with the 49ers, who fell to the Cowboys 30-20 in Candlestick Park last year. San Francisco advanced Saturday with an impressive 44-3 rout of the New York Giants.
"We'll have to play our best game of the season," Dallas running back Emmitt Smith said. "There's no way I can see us beating the 49ers if we play offense the same way we did today."

Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson concurred: "We can be much sharper than this in all three areas, and next week we'll have to be. The 49ers are tremendous and I hear they're the best team in football again. We'll just have to wait and see."
The Cowboys beat the 49ers 26-17 in October at Texas Stadium, but "I think they are definitely better than when we beat them," quarterback Troy Aikman said. "They are a veteran team and they've played in a lot of big games."
Aikman threw three touchdown passes to offset his interceptions, while Smith was sidelined most of the second half with a throbbing right shoulder.
Aikman said the game against the 49ers should be an offensive show.
"They finished with a lot of confidence," he said. "They're definitely back, but this time they have to come to our stadium."
Smith, who wore special shoulder pads to protect the injury, rushed 13 times for 60 yards and caught two passes for 27 yards before coming out after trying to block Tony Bennett. After the game, Smith said his shoulder was "fine."

"There was just a short burst of pain," Smith said. "It was stupid. I got myself into a bad situation. I had to deliver a blow and hurt myself."
The Cowboys struck for 10 points in 18 seconds just before halftime to take a 17-3 lead and all but put the Packers on ice.
Eddie Murray hit a 41-yard field goal with 23 seconds left. On the ensuing kickoff, Kenny Gant's tackle knocked the ball away from Green Bay's Corey Harris. Joe Fishback recovered after a wild scramble on the Green Bay 14.
Two plays later, Aikman hit Jay Novacek in the end zone from six yards away with five seconds left.
"That was a critical play," Packers coach Mike Holmgren said. "When we lost that fumble and they scored just before the half, we kind of sagged a little. It really hurt."

Chiefs dash hopes of all Texas Super Bowl

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Joe Montana has disappointed a lot of people in his illustrious career. This time, it's much of the state of Texas.
Montana, obtained to take the Kansas City Chiefs to the Super Bowl, moved them within one step of that goal Sunday by leading the Chiefs to a 28-20 win over the Houston Oilers. That ended a dream deep in the heart of many Texans — a Houston-Dallas Super Bowl.
It was vintage Montana — two fourth-quarter touchdowns 54 seconds apart — that turned Kansas City's 13-7 deficit into a 21-13 lead.
In fact, 212 of Montana's 299 passing yards came after intermission and the Chiefs scored 21 of their 28 points in the final period to send them on to Buffalo for their first AFC title game appearance in 24 years.
"Every time we're down and Joe's at quarterback, we feel like we're going to come back and win the game," said Willie Davis, who atoned for dropping a sure TD pass in the first half with a circus catch of an 18-yarder in the fourth quarter.
"You never see Joe get rattled."
But it wasn't just Joe.
The Kansas City defense, which played most of the game with six defensive backs against the run-and-shoot, tied a playoff record by sacking Warren Moon nine times. Despite that "dime" alignment, they held Gary Brown, who had 1,002 yards in eight games, to just 17 yards in 11 carries.
Still, midway through the fourth quarter, it still looked like the Oilers were in position to win their 12th straight game and move to the AFC title game after six straight first- or second-round eliminations.
They led 10-0 at halftime on a 49-yard field goal by Al Del Greco and a 2-yard TD run by Brown. Montana's 7-yard touchdown pass to Keith Cash on Kansas City's first second-half possession cut it to 10-7.
But 3:24 into the fourth quarter, the game seemed to turn Houston's way when Terry Hoage picked off an underthrown Montana pass and returned it 12 yards to the Kansas City 25. Two plays later, it was third and one at the 16 when Bennie Thompson blitzed from his safety position and threw Moon for a 9-yard loss.
The Oilers had to settle for Del Greco's 43-yard field goal.
"I thought the interception had turned the game in our favor," said Buddy Ryan, the Oilers' defensive coordinator who seemed to be in a chess match all day with Montana.
"It turned out it didn't."

In fact, the game turned right there for the Chiefs.
It took Montana just three plays to get them in the end zone. The first was a 20-yard pass to Cash; the second a 38-yard gain when Cris Dishman was called for interference when he hauled down Davis, the third an 11-yard TD to J.J. Birden.
On the first play after the kickoff, Derrick Thomas burst through and jarred the ball loose from Moon and Dan Saleaumua fell on it at the Oilers' 12. Two plays later, after Montana had been sacked by William Fuller, he found Davis, who made a circus catch from 18 yards out and it was 21-13.
Moon, who finished 32 of 43 for 306 yards, led the Oilers on a 79-yard scoring drive capped by a 7-yard TD pass to Ernest Givins with 3:35 left.
But Montana, who now has seven touchdowns in four quarters in his last two appearances against Ryan defenses, brought the Chiefs right back.
The key play was a 41-yard completion to Cash that was tipped by Fuller.
The clincher was Marcus Allen's 21-yard TD run.
Afterwards, the Chiefs let loose some of the resentment that showed only after Cash's touchdown — when he threw the ball directly at a poster bearing Ryan's image.
"They showed us no respect and we shocked them," said defensive end Neil Smith. "They were talking about what they had to go to Buffalo to do. What motivated our defense is that everyone was talking about their defense."
For Houston, it was a an unhappy end to a tumultuous season that saw them start 1-4 and finish 12-4. It also included an open feud between Ryan and offensive coordinator Kevin Gilbride; the suicide of defensive lineman Jeff Alm and a controversy set off when offensive tackle David Williams missed a game when his wife gave birth.
"There's a lot of disappointment right now," said Moon, who may have played his last game as an Oiler. "We had a great game plan. They didn't do anything we didn't expect. But when they stopped our running game, it freed them up to rush the passer."
And how.
Thompson, Joe Phillips, Albert Lewis and Derrick Thomas each had two sacks and Neil Smith got the other. Phillips and Saleaumua in the middle of the line shut down Gary Brown.
And all that got the ball into the right hands — Joe Montana's.
"I'm just happy to have the opportunity to be in this position again," said Montana, who won four Super Bowls and was the game's MVP three times in his 14 years in San Francisco.
Kansas City is even happier to have him.

Market reform aide departs from Yeltsin's government

By SERGEI SHARGORODSKY
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Yegor Gaidar, first deputy prime minister and architect of Russia's market reforms, announced Sunday he was leaving President Yeltsin's government because its recent decisions threaten the course of reforms.

Gaidar's abrupt step and the looming departure of other reformers could shake international confidence in Russia's economic transformation, despite Yeltsin's pledge at last week's summit with President Clinton to continue reforms.

Officials quickly offered assurances that Gaidar's resignation will not change the government's policy.

"The government has been, is and shall remain a reformist one," said Valentin Sergeyev, a spokesman for Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin.

Still, anti-reform groups cheered the departure of the 37-year-old economist.

"Gaidar should have done it long ago," said Valentin Kuptsov, a high-ranking Communist Party official. "After the elections it became even clearer that he should resign, because his policy was totally turned down by the voters."

Despite his departure from the government, Gaidar will remain a major player on the political scene as head of the pro-reform Russia's Choice bloc in the State Duma, the lower house of parliament.

His resignation ended months of schism within Yeltsin's Cabinet, which has been split between those favoring faster reforms and those wanting a slower approach with an emphasis on social protections.

It was the second time Gaidar has left the Cabinet. The first time he was forced out as acting premier in December 1992 under pressure from hard-liners in Russia's old parliament. This time, however, he left after being undercut by his former champion, Yeltsin.

Yeltsin is expected to reshuffle his Cabinet this week, and reformers are worried that the balance of power is shifting to the go-slow forces.

Yeltsin and Chernomyrdin have been sending mixed signals on reforms since last month's parliamentary elections, which were dominated by Communists and extreme nationalists who capitalized on widespread discontent with government policies.

Yeltsin and Chernomyrdin have said the government's course had to be "corrected" to soften the painful social effects of reforms, associated with Gaidar's name.

Reacting to Gaidar's resignation, U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher suggested that December's elections had produced a "new sensitivity" toward the hardships faced by ordinary Russians.

"I'm not sure it's a bad thing that there are one or two changes," he told NBC's "Meet the Press."

Economically, an emphasis on social support would probably lead to higher inflation due to massive subsidies for ailing state factories and military enterprises, and increased spending on populist measures that Gaidar opposes.

Gaidar said he rejected an offer to keep the same position in the new Cabinet, fearing he would have no real say in economic matters. He said recent government decisions sacrificed reforms for the sake of short-term political gains.

He particularly objected to Yeltsin's budget-busting plan to build a $500 million new parliament headquarters, which "equals one-fifth of last year's social spending," Gaidar said.

"I cannot serve in the government and at the same time be in opposition to it," Gaidar said in a letter to Yeltsin. "I cannot be responsible for reforms ... without having the necessary levers for consistent implementation of an economic policy which I am convinced is correct."

Gaidar told reporters he discussed his departure with Yeltsin on Thursday. "There was a calm conversation with the president of Russia, and he understood my position," he said.

Yeltsin spokesman Vyacheslav Kostikov voiced hope for a compromise. The Interfax news agency said Yeltsin and Chernomyrdin are likely to ask Gaidar to reconsider his decision on Monday.

Legislator and reform-minded economist Grigory Yavlinsky said Gaidar's departure would have little effect because he has long been a figurehead with no real power.

"For a long time, it was impossible for Gaidar to implement his line in the government. His second Cabinet appearance in September 1993 was rather decorative. It seems that now there is no need for decorations, so Gaidar is leaving," Yavlinsky told Interfax.

No winner in Saturday Lotto drawing

By The Associated Press

No tickets purchased in the latest Texas Lotto correctly matched all six numbers drawn for the twice-weekly game, state lottery officials said Sunday.

They said that if sales continue as expected, the jackpot for Wednesday night's drawing will be worth an estimated $8 million.

The jackpot for Saturday night's drawing was worth $3 million. The numbers drawn from a field of 50 were: 11, 15, 16, 24, 46, 48.

The state lottery said that 72 tickets were sold with five of the six winning numbers, with each worth $2,300. There were also 4,333 tickets with four of six numbers, with each winning $138.

Also, 93,035 tickets were sold with three of six numbers. Each was worth an automatic $3.

Information highway still full of obstacles

NEW YORK (AP) — Months of hype about more powerful communications networks and computers seemed to climax last week with a declaration by Vice President Al Gore.

"What we've seen in the last decade is amazing, but it's nothing compared to what will happen in the decade ahead," Gore said at a technology conference in Los Angeles. "The word revolution by no means overstates the case."

As Gore and thousands of other enthusiasts say, digital technology will change much of how people communicate, work and live.

But a closer look at the hurdles before just one new product — video on demand — reveals that much of what's being promised today won't arrive for many tomorrows.

Video on demand generally is described as the ability to watch movies, TV shows and other programs at any time, with the power to start, stop and skip around without a VCR.

Such a service will get its first broad test this year in several cities, including Orlando, Fla.; suburban Washington, D.C.; Omaha, Neb.; Rochester, N.Y., and Castro Valley, Calif.

Many technology companies expect that on-demand video will be the first digital service to provide significant new revenues, which could then be used to improve networks further and create new devices and products.

But several technological problems must be resolved and some regulations changed for video on demand to become as common as changing a TV channel.

Many kinds of computers, TVs, software programs and transmission lines will have to unite on an unprecedented scale. Companies that insist on proprietary designs will have to change to work with others.

"This is not about a single product or a single technology," said Paul Loftus, IBM's top corporate strategist for multimedia systems. "It's about a very large-scale integration of many technologies and it's not going to happen overnight."

Computer engineers believe they have solved problems for storing and accessing lots of movies and programs cheaply. But they must still decide whether it's more affordable for those systems to be centralized or distributed through cities, perhaps even putting some in schools, hotels or apartment complexes.

"The other battle is can you put video over the wire," said Terence Garnett, senior vice president of new media at Oracle Corp., a database software company participating in video on-demand trials by Bell Atlantic Corp.

A chief reason telephone companies want to buy cable systems is because a TV cable can carry more signals than a telephone wire. But the wire must be two-way to carry commands from a consumer.

"The transmission and video decompression technology is very young," said John Hildebrand, senior vice president of USA Video Corp., which will test video on demand in Rochester.

That's evident in current designs of set-top boxes, the little computers that will modify TVs for video on demand. Their insides now resemble some of the first personal computers.

Designers are trying to put the various memory, processing and signal modification, or compression, modules onto a single circuit board. That would make the box smaller and more affordable.

From a policy standpoint, Congress last month will face several bills to change existing telecommunications law. For video on demand, the most important is a proposal by Reps. Edward Markey, D-Mass., and Jack Fields, R-Texas, to allow telephone companies to operate cable systems in areas where they provide phone service.

Since many cable systems own some of the programming they offer, the change could allow phone companies to own programs too and, thus, make money by supplying them on demand to consumers.

While that capability may help spur development in the near future, it may in time raise antitrust concerns. At the start of the century, the government broke apart Standard Oil because it owned both oil and the network of pipes, trucks and tank cars that distributed it. And shortly after World War II, the nation's movie studios were told they could no longer own theaters, the distribution method of their product.

Policymakers likely will face a daunting rewrite of copyright rules to make sure creators are protected for shows that are sent electronically. New privacy laws may be needed to assure consumers that what they select to watch won't be tracked by someone else.
