Confederate flag issue

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) - It's time to remove the Confederate battle flag from atop the statehouse, the South Carolina Democratic Party agreed Saturday.

The call for the flag's removal was approved without discussion at the state Democratic Convention.

Retiring state Democratic chairman Albert McAlister lauded the decision as 'the right thing to do.'

South Carolina is the last state to fly the banner above its state capitol. Many blacks have called for the flag's removal and a group of black ministers have threatened an economic boycott. Four white South Carolinians have sued the state to remove the flag. The Republican Party has not taken a Former Pampan appointed as A&M regent Gerald J. Ford: Dream big dreams, work hard

Ford, the son of Coyle and Dell Ford of Pampa, was named last week to serve on the Texas A&M University System Board of Regents by Gov. Ann Richards.

A millionaire Dallas banker and financier, Ford has previously served on the board of regents of Texas Tech University and that school's Health Science Center. He presently sits on the board of his alma mater, Southern Methodist University, where he received his economics and law degrees.

Ford, 49, said he brings to his role as regent a strong commitment to education. "That's where we ought to focus to solve any of the social and economic ills facing the country," he said in a telephone interview Saturday. "It's an interest to me to have some contact with the academic environment ... and higher education," Ford said, adding that he hopes to see problems solved in all levels of school.

Vanderpool wins; Frugé, Nichols face run off for school board

By RANDAL K. McGAVOCK Staff Writer

Phil Vanderpool won his third term to Place 4 on the Pampa Independent School District's Board of Education, beating his opponent by more than 320 votes.

"I appreciate the support and confidence of the voters and look forward to helping the kids," said Vanderpool.

In all, 729 voters or 5.8 percent of the eligible voters in Pampa turned out for the election.

In the Place 4 Vanderpool was running against Douglas Locke, an area accountant, who received 198 votes to Vanderpool's 519 votes. One write-in vote for Greg Sims, a candidate in the Place 5 election, as received.

As for Place 5, the other election on the school board ballot, James Frugé received the most votes, a total of 340, but failed to gain a majority of the total votes cast which is needed to win the post.

Frugé's 340 votes totaled 47.5 percent of the 716 total votes as his opponents Greg Sims got 169 votes and Albert Nichols got 207 votes.

A run-off election between Frugé and Nichols, the candidate with the next highest ballot total, will be held later this month to determine the Place 5 winner.

Frugé is an employee of the Hoechst Celanese chemical company and has been a resident of Pampa for 16 years. Nichols is a former teacher and coach and is presently the Gray County Juvenile Probations Officer. This is the second consecutive term for Vanderpool. He serve a previous term in the early 1980s.

Surgeon: Pool good for pope

ROME (AP) - Pope John Paul II should use swimming, one of his favorite pastimes, to help rehabilitate his hip, the surgeon who performed hip surgery on the pope said Saturday.

The pope will be able to leave the hospital, Gemelli Polyclinic, in two weeks, Dr. Gianfranco Fineschi told the Italian news agency AGI.

John Paul broke his thigh bone in a fall in his Vatican apartment bathroom on April 28 and underwent surgery the next day. Doctors have predicted he'll need months of therapy before he can walk well without assistance.

The pope "will need a pastime that he likes a lot ... swimming, which is therapeutic and rehabilitative," the surgeon said. "Thus in two weeks he must go to Castel Gandolfo, where there is a

Oldest American dies at age 115

RADFORD, Va. (AP) - Margaret Skeete, listed in the Guinness Book of Records as the oldest American, died Saturday at her home. She was 115.

Mrs. Skeete had been bedridden since a fall three weeks ago that apparently sapped her strength, said her daughter, Verne Taylor. She died in her sleep.

Bloodshed escalates in Yemen as northern troops near Aden

ADEN, Yemen (AP) - Guns northern troops advanced on the southern stronghold on the third day of civil war. Foreigners terrorized by the escalating bloodshed fled Aden and the capital, San'a.

Yemen produces about 320,000 barrels of oil a day, a third of it processed at the Aden refinery for domestic use. Oil is the economic lifeline of the nation, home to 12' million people at the southern corner of the Arabian Peninsula.

Conservative North Yemen merged with socialist South Yemen in May 1990, to form the Arab world's youngest republic. But the armed forces were never integrated and the union was not really implemented, leaving the southerners seething against what they called northern domination.

The southerners are outnumbered and outgunned by the more populous northerners, but they are well entrenched in Aden, and any attempt to take the city could be bloody.

The boom of artillery could be heard from Abyan province just to the east on Saturday and Aden was tense, a far cry from the calm that prevailed the day before. Residents hoarded food, gasoline and water. Nearly everyone on the streets carried guns.

The longer you live, the better your chances of developing cataracts, a clouding of the eyes' lenses that can severely limit

In fact, virtually everyone 70 years or older has some degree of cataract formation, although many people may not notice any vision problems. Even animals can suffer from this universal condition, which can be triggered by too much sunlight. Other causes of cataracts include diabetes, smoking, eye injuries and chronic use of steroid drugs

Two new studies recently reported in the British Medical Journal indicate diet may also play a role in cataract development. In one study, a diet low in vitamin A increased risk of cataracts. The other study indicated low levels of vitamin E and beta carotene might lead to cataract formation.

Alcohol consumption also seems to be linked to cataracts. Research conducted at Johns Hopkins Hospital focused on ways to prevent posterior sub-capsular cataracts, or those affecting the back membrane of the natural lens of the eye. That study indicated high alcohol intake is a factor. Doctors there recommend limiting alcohol to no more than seven drinks per week concluding that more increases the risk of this type of cataract.

More than I million cataract surgeries are performed in the U.S each year, making it the most common surgical procedure for Americans over 65. Modern advancements in equipment and technique make today's procedure vastly different than cataract surgeries performed 10 or more years ago. While the older surgeries typically required patients to spend up to 10 days in the hospital and as many as six weeks recovering, today the procedure can be done on an outpatient basis, with a quick recovery.

Originally, a cataract-clouded lens was removed intact through a half-inch or longer incision. The newer procedure phacoemulsification-uses ultrasound to essentially "break" the lens into tiny fragments, which are then suctioned away.

The chief advantage to the ultrasound technique is that it requires fewer stitches --as few as two and sometimes none. The traditional surgery, however, requires four or more stitches, and takes longer to heal. Surgical removal of the clouded lens is immediately followed by its replacement with a plastic one. Performed under local anesthesia, the patient is able to go home that same day and can resume most activities, including driving, as early as the next day. Although as many as 95 percent of the patients who have cataract surgery find their vision greatly improved and with minimal discomfort, there are limitations to the current technique that researchers are trying to overcome. Currently, the implanted plastic lenses used are able to correct vision only for distance or reading, but not both. After discussion with the physician, patients are implanted with either a lens that provides good distance vision and then fitted for reading glasses, or the reverse.

The FDA is currently evaluating multi-focal implantable lenses that would eliminate the need for glasses following surgery.

Another complication is that as many as 50 percent of those who undergo cataract surgery develop a secondary cataract three to five years later when the membrane that supports the implanted plastic lens also become cloudy. The problem is treated with laser surgery, which enables doctors to create an opening in the

The American Academy of Ophthalmology recommends everyone have an eye exam every two to four years after age 40 and yearly or bi-yearly after age 64. If cataracts are discovered, surgery isn't necessarily the only answer. For many, glasses or other visual aids can improve vision enough to not impede one's lifestyle. The surgeon and patient should discuss both the risks and benefits of cataract surgery.

Haiti sanctions still bad policy

In trying to fix what ails other countries, in particular our neighbor Haiti, the Clinton administration would do well to heed the physicians' creed of: First, do no harm:

With its current policy toward Haiti, the Clinton administration is inflicting terrible harm on the people of that poor Caribbean nation, without achieving any worthwhile policy goal.

American policy toward Haiti is not based on any direct U.S. security interest, but on our government's commitment to the concept of "democracy." In September 1991, the Haitian military overthrew the government of President Jean Bertrand Aristide, who had been elected seven months earlier. Backers of the coup had accused Aristide of wielding dictatorial powers and fomenting violence against his political opponents.

In an effort to restore Aristide to power, the U.S. has joined with other nations in imposing an embargo on arms and fuel. So far, the embargo has failed to dislodge Haiti's military government but it has inflicted tremendous suffering on Haiti's already impoverished population. The embargo, by cutting supplies of gasoline, has disrupted the distribution of food and medicine. As with most trade sanctions, the people who are suffering most in Haiti are those our government claims it wants to help.

The Clinton administration has compounded the suffering by continuing the U.S. policy of turning back virtually all Haitians trying to escape their hellish conditions.

Aristide and his supporters in the United States have sharply criticized President Clinton in recent days for his policy on Haitian refugees, while calling for the tightening of sanctions to include all goods except food and medicine.

Administration policy toward Haiti should be dramatically revised, but not in the direction the administration's critics demand. It should not be the policy of the U.S. government to restore elected heads of government to office. The downfall of an elected government in Haiti may be a setback for democracy in that nation, but it is not in any way a security threat to the United States. We should be especially wary of throwing our prestige and might behind a politician whose commitment to liberty and the rule of law is as dubious as Aristide's.

If the administration truly cares about the people of Haiti, it should lift the embargo, not tighten it. Ending the embargo would also lessen the number of Haitians desiring to flee their country. The United States also should open its doors to refugees from Haiti, however, provided that they don't become wards of the

To save Haiti, the Clinton administration's policy seems to be to do what it can to destroy it.

Government-created poverty

I've visited a number of poor countries. In countries like South Africa, Mexico, Brazil, Jamaica and the Bahamas, poor people are unimaginably much poorer than our poor people. But you don't have to be in those countries long before you develop an appreciation for their rich entrepreneurial spirit. In some cases, you see that spirit when you get through customs and become bombarded by people selling everything from food, watches and clothing to taxi rides and tours. With that spirit, you really have to wonder why they're still poor.

A large part of the responsibility for the grinding talk about shooting yourself in the foot. Third World poverty lies with their governments. Jamaica has a serious transportation problem. Entrepreneurial Jamaicans could buy mini-vans to provide jitney services. But because of the government's policy of granting restrictive and exclusive and official corruption where bribes and kickbacks purchased here for $16,000 might cost a Jamaican for the business are likely to cost multiples of what close to $50,000. Similar handicaps can be found in many other areas of potential business ownership.

Take South Africa. Here is a country faced with great political pressures for economic development and other high-tech goods. However, in

SHOULDN'T WE BILLIONAIRE!

Walter Williams

In many countries, most notably those in South America and Africa, in order for a person to get into the simplest business, like being a seamstress, requires hurdling a system of impossible regulations import licenses, plus taxes, a mini-van that could be are the order of the day. Plus, simple tools required an American businessman pays.

When you see the robust entrepreneurial spirit in some of these countries, you can easily understand why these people are such successes when they ment. You'd think it would welcome its citizens immigrate to the United States. Because these counimporting U.S. computer software programs, tries are too poor to have our kind of welfare, the mobile and portable telephones, educational equip- people must work to survive. That necessity coupled with a greater measure of economic freedom helps many cases, there are high tariffs and, in some explain their success in our country. Therefore, we cases, outright prohibition on their importation - observe the seemingly perplexing phenomena: Indians tend to do well everywhere except India; Vietnamese do well everywhere except Vietnam. As for Jamaicans and other Caribbean people, when they come to the United States, they've managed to earn a family income higher than the average American.

In order for the world's poor to become more prosperous, what they need is a greater measure of economic liberty. You can prove this several ways. Most American immigrants hit these shores poor. We were a Third World country. There was no foreign aid. What we had going for us was a large measure of economic liberty. There weren't the economic roadblocks found in many countries today. A simpler proof of the benefits of economic liberty comes if you list today's most prosperous countries. Richer countries like the United States, Hong Kong and Japan have a larger measure of economic liberty, while countries with grinding poverty, like Brazil, Mexico and most of Africa, have extensive government control and regulation of the economy.

During my visits, I found that the clite and politicians feed their poor people the same attentiondiverting line fed by our elite. They say more handouts (foreign aid) are needed. They blame the poverty on colonialism. That's just like our elite, who address poverty by calling for handouts and blaming racism. The last thing both elite propose is economic liberty and the right to be free from government interference.

Snakes aren't everybody's friend

Charley Reese

The Alameda Newspaper Group, run by my old pal and former boss Dave Burgin, has banned pictures of snakes "until a snake actually holds up a bank, is nominated for a Cabinet post or wins the Super Lotto."

I'm not surprised. Dave doesn't like snakes. To put it that mildly is like saying Stalin was not fond of political opponents. Actually, I'm not that fond of them myself, but Dave, besides being one of the last of the great newspapermen, is living proof of my theory that if we think intensely about something, we will attract it. I've lived in Florida for over 30 years now. I hunt. I fish occasionally. I've camped a lot and hiked and gone canoeing. And honestly, I haven't seen that many snakes. I've gone years without seeing a snake. That's because snakes are shy.

But Dave has a genuine phobia about snakes. When he first came to Florida, he bought a house in the burbs. The very first day he took occupancy, he walked outside and there was a water moccasin relaxing in his swimming pool. The odds against that happening have got to be in the millions. You see, he attracted the snake.

On the other hand, the snake held no attraction for Dave, who retreated to the second floor of his home. He called the real estate agent who had sold him the house and in language I shall not repeat suggested that the agent come instantly and remove the snake or he, Dave, was backing out of the purchase. Even now, safely in California, Dave is convinced there are millions of snakes in Florida. Actually, there are now more Yankees. In contrast to Dave, another old friend, Arthur Jones, the inventor of the Nautilus machine, loves Ambrose Bierce and Mark Twain. He was fond of saying, in his growling voice, 'You want to see the future? Go to Calcutta. That's the future.'

snakes - poisonous snakes. Jones reminds me of

His idea of a solution to the drug problem is make students line up by their lockers, check them with a drug-sniffing dog, and when you find drugs, shoot the student in the head on the spot. Another of his fond sayings was, "The only things worthwhile in life are bigger crocodiles, faster airplanes and younger women. He also raised crocodiles, but his real love, next to younger women and airplanes, was snakes. He kept a large room full of poisonous snakes from all

He had some rattlesnakes that were 10 feet or so. It was a bit creepy to walk into the room with glass cages floor to ceiling and hear all the rattling and hissing, and to see all the cobras with their hoods flared out. Once when he was being interviewed by a television lady, Arthur tossed the rattlesnake he was holding on the floor at her feet - just to see how fast she could move. Pretty fast, he said.

In his younger days, he was driving home with a friend after a day of catching snakes when they passed a hitchhiker. When they didn't stop, the hitchhiker gave them the one-finger salute. That was a mistake. It was almost dark, so Arthur had his pal, after they drove over the hill, turn around, drive past the hitchhiker and turn around again.

This time, the car slowed as if to pick the guy up and he, naturally ran up to the door. Arthur said, "Here's a present for you," and tossed a big vicious snake into the guy's arms and then drove off.

How conservative is Arthur? Well, he once decided to do some pilot TV shows at his studio with Gordon Liddy of Watergate fame, and invited me to be a test guest. When Liddy got off the plane, Arthur grinned his grim grin, stuck out his hand and said, "Hi, I'm Arthur Jones, and compared to me, Mr. Liddy, you're a (expletive) pinko liberal."

He and Dave are the two extremes on the snake question. I'm in the moderate middle.

Richard Nixon was larger than life

For all who covered his presidency and stayed to watch the parade of chief executives that followed, Richard M. Nixon made one thing perfectly clear: He was the last of our leaders who was even larger than the office he had occupied.

Richard Milhous Nixon: So large, so flawed. So large: Even after the ultimate ignominy of being the first president forced to resign his office, Nixon resurrected his shattered reputation to the point where the news media he despised began citing him as a foreign-policy wise man. Even our Democratic president sought his advice.

So flawed: As most larger-than-life figures, Richard Milhous Nixon became a part of American lore - so much so that critics made all three of his names epithets of barbed disrespect. "Tricky Dick" was what detractors called him to indicate his slippery way of smearing his early opponents as softon-communism; "Mill-house" was a movie, a dark comedy of villainy; "Nixonian" was shorthand for any down and dirty deed.

Yet this must be acknowledged: Nixon was the last figure who took complete command of the Oval Office and its decision-making and made them reflect his personality and will - for better, and ultimately, for worse.

From his pre-presidential transition in 1968 until the helicopter whisked him to his Elba on Aug. 9; 1974, I covered the Nixon presidency for Newsday. "Covered" doesn't capture what I did; investigated, probed and analyzed-with-great-skepticism is more like it. I didn't like his politics, policies or "Nixoni-

Nixon was defined, both positively and negatively, by the contradictions that ruled his public career and his private life.

Nixon was raised a Quaker. Yet he disastrously prolonged the Vietnam War, as tens of thousands of Americans died and hundreds of thousands were Pentagon Papers. wounded - because he didn't want his nation (or his presidency) to look weak.

Nixon talked a tough anti-communist line. Yet he opened ties with communist China and he pushed arms control with the Soviets.

Nixon talked a conservative Republican line at home. Yet he implemented a Democratic economic cure-all - wage and price controls. It failed.

Nixon was possessed by chronic resentment of those born to wealth and educated in the Ivy League. He was contemptuous of the Kennedys and their Irish-American noblesse, yet he tried to be like altogether different to lose a great enemy.

them. He dragged the White House press corps to Ireland just to celebrate the idea that he too had Irish ancestors. He held a photo opportunity, strolling the San Clemente beach with his new dog (yes, an Irish setter named King Timahoe), an image evoking that classic photo of Robert Kennedy barefoot on a beach with his dog. Well, almost like Bobby, until a large wave washed over Nixon's feet - which were still clad in his black wingtips.

In his every rise and fall, Nixon was master hater, as transcripts of his tape-recorded office conversations made clear. He scorned liberals, journalists, Jews (and often seemed to think they were synonymous). He kept a list of enemies, real and imagined, and he ordered retribution against them. He had a secret team of White House "plumbers" (as in plugging leaks) that wiretapped friend and foe; his agents burglarized the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist seeking dirt on the disseminator of the

And yet, on the night he died, I found myself thinking of that poignant, rambling, teary farewell speech to his staff. And I thought about that emotional yet eerie sensation that even we in the Nixon press corps felt when his helicopter lifted off the White House South Lawn. Washington slipped into a numb malaise - especially the journalists. Glories might lie ahead, but our jobs would never be the same. No reporting challenge could be so great, no assignment so gripping.

How many people look at the stagnant muddy water that is continually in the creek through Central Park?

In 1988 I made some sketches and rough plans for a proposed concrete drainage flume that would alleviate these unsightly mosquito breeding ponds of water in the park. I have brought this subject to the attention of the city managers and city commissioners on numerous occasions in the past six years. Similar drainage flumes have been utilized in Thompson Park in Amarillo and in one of the parks in Borger, as well as along some Texas

To date, no action has been taken by the City Commission, even though such a project was approved by the Parks Advisory Board. It has been requested that a survey be made of plans prepared so that a definitive estimate could be made. If this were done, we would know if it is a feasible project instead of "assuming" such a project is impossible.

Undoubtedly there are state or federal funds that might be available for such a project. There might be some philanthropist willing to help on such a project. No funds can be requested or considered until engineering drawings and estimates have been made. It seems six years is ample time to at least have made an engineering study.

If there are others that feel that the drainage in Central Park should be improved, contact your city commissioner or the city manager.

Tired of Democratic rhetoric

To the editor:

The more the leadership of the Democratic Party says, the more alarmed I become.

Last Monday morning the Gray County Commissioners Court selected Sammie Morrie to succeed Margie Gray as tax assessor/collector. Judge Kennedy noted that he had received a letter from Margie in 1987 that indicated that Sammie was Margie's chief deputy and requested that Sammie replace her if for any reason she was unable to complete her term. The judge indicated that he had spoken frequently with Margie over the years and that they were close friends.

At no time since 1987 did Margie indicate that it was her desire for anyone other than Sammie Morris to succeed her. Additionally, Commissioner Ted Simmons mentioned that he had spoken with Margie last summer when she indicated that she had total confidence in Sammie. Acting on this information and in the very best interest of the citizens of Gray County, the Commissioners Court voted 4 to 1 to select Sammie Morris as Margie Gray's replacement (Jim Greene voted against her).

Then in the Monday edition of The Pampa News we learn that a top leader of the local Democratic Party was quoted as saying that the other candidate for the job and the Democratic Party "got the shaft."

I don't know about year, but I am getting a little tired of the worn-out Democratic rhetoric. Unions select people by seniority. The tax assessor/collector position is in management, so I would like to know what seniority has to do with it. Besides, Sammie has over eight years more experience in the office than the other candidate. In addition, the Commissioners Court reports to the people of Gray County, not to the Democratic

We already have a president and his wife who have a long list of past dealings in self interest. Who will protect the interests of the citizens of the community? Thank goodness the county commissioners refused to bow to the pressure of the Democratic Party.

Support Commissioner Meno

Commissioner of Education Lionel Meno recently was criticized by legislative leaders over his request for a five percent salary increase for teachers. Rep. Tom Craddick (R-Midland) and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock charged Dr. Meno with misleading teachers by setting an expectation for a salary increase. I began to wonder, if Commissioner Meno is accused of creating a "sham" with his request, then Gov. Richards' campaign promise for a teacher salary increase must be a "shim-sham." I also wonder if Rep. Craddick and Lt. Gov. Bullock will criticize the governor during her campaign the way they did the commissioner.

The predetermined strategy of "no new taxes" has been publicly proclaimed by the legislative leadership. But to criticize Commissioner Meno in a public forum for requesting a salary increase for teachers concerns me greatly. The utilization of a public hearing to chastise people who provide testimony seems to be more common now than ever before. The kind of arrogance that some elected officials display may be interpreted as leadership, but it also may be interpreted as an inflated ego. The influence that Lt. Gov. Bullock expects is evidenced in the fear and reserve that even the

Lt. Gov. Bullock is one of the most intelligent and strategically-minded elected officials I have ever observed, but I am disappointed in the insensitivity presented to Commissioner Meno. Rep. Craddick may be a veteran of the Texas House of Representatives, but that does not excuse his behavior.

It is past time for educators to express their support to those like Commissioner Meno who seem to be trying to make things better for public education. It is all too rare for individuals of such influence to do what they believe is right, rather than what is politically expedient.

William Hammer of Augustana College in Rock Island, Ill., reports in the journal Science that fossils of a previously unknown dinosaur were found on an Antarctica mountainside 400 miles from the South Pole.

Hammer led an expedition that braved 25 degree-below-zero temperatures to dig out 5,000 pounds of fossil-bearing rock. The fossils have 400 miles from the South Pole." now been assembled to reveal a meat-eating dinosaur with a distinctive bony crest on top of its head.

The animal measured about 25 feet in length and stood about 12 feet high when it walked on its large hind legs. It had small forefeet, a long tail and powerful jaws armed with rows of sharp teeth, said Hammer. Its appearance is similar to a group of dinosaur meat-eaters called

Mixed among the bones of the meat-eater, said Hammer, were leg and neck bones from a prosauropod, a type of plant-eating dinosaur that has been found on other continents.

"This indicates to us that this thing was probably feeding on a herbivore skeleton when it died," said the scientist.

At the time the animal lived, Antarctica was still attached to other southern continents. A process called continental drift caused the large land masses to slowly separate from a single body over millions of years.

Hammer estimates that the site of his dig was at about 65 degrees south support large animal life, including latitude 200 million years ago. It

THE WORK OF THE CHURCH

When the word "church" appears in the scriptures, it always has reference to the family of God or a congregation of God's people (Matt. 16:18; I Cor. 1:2; Rom. 16:16.) The word is never used in regard to a material building of brick and stone. The people who composed the church in the early days of the gospel dispensation had 11:8.) But there was no man-made believed in Jesus Christ as the Son of God (Jn. 8:24), repented of their sins (Acts 17:30-31), confessed Jesus Christ as the Son of God (Rom. 10:9-10) and had been baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of their sins (Acts 2:38.)

The disciples of Christ were taught to have the greatest concern for spiritual and eternal things (Matt. 6:33; Col. 3:1-4.) It therefore follows then, that the physical methods employed by local churches was to be in order to their spiritual development and to the enlightenment of mankind concerning the salvation of the soul. Jesus emphasized the preeminence of the spiritual over the physical in laying down the requirements of discipleship (Matt.

16:24-26; Lk. 14:25-33.) We read of examples of local churches working in order to the furtherance of the gospel of christ. The church at Philippi had fellowship with Paul when he left there in that they sent him the physical necessities of life (Phil. 1:5; 4:15-16.) Paul remarked that he had received wages of churches when he was preaching at Corinth (2 Cor. organization involved in this work. The only organization involved was the local church made up of elders, deacons and saints (Phil. 1:1.) We read also of local churches taking care of their own needy members and, at times, assisting other congregations in caring for their needy (Acts 2:44-45; 11:27-30; I Cor. 16:1-3. But, again, the only organization involved was the local church

When local churches build kitchens fellowship halls, gymnasiums, etc., it is apparent that they have lost sight of the work of the church and are concerned only with the satisfaction of earthly appetites and pleasures. Further, we never read where churches in the early days used such frivolaties to entice people to attend their

Drilling Intentions

Minding your own Business By Don Taylor

Improving customer care

Today, small businesses must stay completely focused on their customers if they are going to survive. It will take superior customer service to hold market share and excellent service to gain on the pack. We're not talking about lip service, but real, honest-to-goodness cus-

Based on conversations we've had with hundreds of business owners and customers around the country, we believe there are five levels of customer service. You may see your business in one of the levels we describe. If you're not where you would like to be, you may want to move your service quality up a notch.

Five Levels of Care

No Care. The lowest level of customer service is no care. A recent study by Yankelovich Partners found that for many businesses "no care" is the norm. Sixty-two percent of the customers surveyed reported that they had walked out of a business because no one greeted them, no one waited on them or offered to help. That's no care.

In the same survey, 60 percent of the respondents reported asking a question that the sales clerk couldn't answer. To make matters worse, most didn't offer to find out. That's no service.

Barely Care. Barely care is the level where many small businesses perform. They barely give any real customer service. They do almost nothing to set themselves apart from the mega stores who also provide barely care.

Barely care givers greet their customers, offer assistance and say thanks. Then they go on to the next sale, The previous customer is quickly forgotten as the barely care giver repeats the process on the Reactive Care. Reactive care giver provides barely care and then goes one step beyond. The additional step is to let the customer know that they are there to help if needed. The customer must take the initiative, but they are assured of assistance if they call.

Each of these steps is an improvement. Barely care is better than no care; and reactive care is better than barely care. Barely.

Proactive Care. Proactive care is the level of care that goes beyond reactive care. Proactive care givers follow-up with customer. They initiate calls to see how customers are doing.

The proactive care giver really is concerned with how the customer is doing. They want to serve the customer more effectively because they know that the only way they can guarantee future business is to keep the customer satisfied.

Proactive care is a high level of customer service. However, if you're providing proactive care, you could still lose your customers to a competitor who goes all out to please the customer.

Whatever-It-Takes Care. Whatever-it-takes customer service includes the best of all other levels of service. In addition, it encompasses building a partnership with customers.

This level of service is not just based on giving great service to ensure the next sale, but also focuses on helping customers even if you don't make another sale. Your business becomes giving customers hat they want and need.

It will require a higher level of commitment and employee training than you've provided in the past. You'll have to stretch to build new relationships. You'll have to think like a partner with your customers. You'll have to know their needs as well as you know your own.

The reward is customer loyalty. I know you've heard that customer loyalty doesn't exist anymore. For most businesses that is true. Most businesses don't offer whatever-it-takes care. No care equals no loyalty. Barely care, reactive care and even proactive care offer little promise of "customers for life." Whatever-it-takes care will ensure satisfied customers who want to do business with you again and again.

Pampa linksters shine at tourney

Pampa players dominated the winning spots Saturday in the Hospice of the Panhandle Fourth Annual Golf Scramble at Hidden Hills Municipal Golf Course.

Hospice officials said 96 players, with 24 teams, participated in the 18-hole scramble events, the largest Hidden Hills has ever had.

The nonprofit home care organization raised $4,365 for Hospice programs from the fund raiser. Hospice of the Panhandle provides home care for the terminally ill and support of their families. The organization's service area includes nine area counties: Gray, Hutchinson, Carson, Collingsworth, Donley, Hemphill, Lipscomb, Roberts and Wheeler.

In the Palmer Division, all players on the top three teams were from Pampa.

Taking first place was the team of Terry Holt, Bobby Holt, Herman Watie and Wally Nickelberry, with a 61 score.

Winning second was a Pampa team sponsored by Lone Star Transportation, with a 62 score. Team members were Frank Brinsfield, Sonny Moore, Mike Zemanek and Jack Peoples.

Coming in with a 64 score for third place was the team of Ron Brauchi, Scott Harrelson, Leslie Jones and Nathan Bailey.

In the Nicklaus Division, keeping Pampa from a clean sweep of the top spots was a team from Dalhart, gaining first place with a 60 score. Team members were Charles Langan, Jeff Langan, Sharri Langan and G. Lantz.

In second place, with a 61 score, was the Pampa team of Ron Woods, Roy Don Stephens, Tommy Hill and Sam White.

Taking third spot, also with 61, was the Pampa team of Mike Handley, Eldon Maxwell, Dick Wall and Keenan Henderson. Dr. Fred Simmons of Pampa had the longest drive for the scramble play.

Three Pampa golfers were honored in "closest to the hole" competition. Gaining honors were Bobby Holt, hole No. 16; Terry Garner, hole No. 6; and Sonny Moore, hole No. 8.

Taking the closest to the hole honor for hole No. 12 was Bruce Wright of Borger. Payoff for the golf scramble action was first, $375; second, $300; and third, $225.

Each player in the first place team in each flight received a $96 gift certificate to Hidden Hills. Second place team members in each flight picked up a $75 gift certificate for use at Hidden Hills. Third place golfers won a $56 gift certificate for the course.

The fastballs kept hissing closer and closer, and yet the batter just stood still. Even when Pedro Martinez whizzed one right under the chin, the hitter did not flinch.

Of course, this was no ordinary batter. It was a mannequin, dressed up in a baseball uniform, and Martinez was using it to practice pitching inside.

Rather than charge Schilling, he spoke to Coleman, who said he would investigate the growing problem.

That means hitters feel comfortable - maybe too comfortable - in leaning over the plate to drive outside pitches. Home runs in April were up 41 percent over last April's pace, and a lot of those were hit to the opposite field.

It's been that way for years, the eternal battle between pitcher and hitter. Only now it seems that the days when Bob Gibson and Don Drysdale ruled might be coming back.

"When I grew up and my dad played, that's the way it was then,' said the Yankees' Danny Tartabull, who learned from his father, Jose. "If a pitcher wants to brush you back, that's fair game. But I have a problem with pitchers throwing around the head.

Indian mascot but kept the nickname Chippewas.

And Chief Illiniwek — a student dressed in full Indian regalia will still dance at Illinois games although he's banned from appearing with the Fighting Illini when they are at the University of Iowa.

More and more colleges and universities are concluding that team mascots and nicknames incorporating Indian images or stereotypes are offensive to American Indians.

The latest and one of the most prominent to change is Marquette, which reached the Sweet Sixteen in this year's NCAA basketball tournament. Once called the Warriors, Marquette teams are now known as the Golden Eagles.

And yet, many schools have kept their Indian-related names — more than 30 in NCAA ranks alone.

North Dakota's president, Dr. Kendall Baker, announced last summer the school would keep its 'Fighting Sioux' nickname, but only after careful consideration.

Baker met with alumni and fans throughout the state, visited Indian reservations and held three campus forums which drew 600 people.

"He came away with the feeling that we could keep it and by doing so, use it educationally and in a manner that's not disrespectful," athletic department spokesman Justin Doherty said.

In Mississippi, Alcorn State still calls itself the Braves but made several other changes, starting with dropping "Scalping" from its nickname. Its arena, once called the Scalping Ground, is now the Davey Whitney Complex in honor of a former basketball coach. And the school's logo was changed from an Indian with a knife to crossed tomahawks.

Spokesman Derick Hackett said several national organizations and an alumni group wrote the school complaining about the "Scalping Braves" name. He said the school feels there's nothing wrong with keeping Braves.

"That won't change," Hackett Braves. It's tradition."

"The important thing here for everyone is, are there any other groups of human Central Michigan has dropped its beings who are so targeted in the sports world and the answer is no."

Some schools without Indian nicknames also are taking a stand. The athletic board at the University of Iowa - nicknamed the Hawkeyes — voted last month to ban mascots that depict American Indians from its athletic events in Iowa City. The university also indicated that where it has the discretion, it won't schedule teams that have Indian mascots.

Minnesota and Wisconsin have similar policies. But none of the three can avoid playing Big Ten rival Illinois, whose mascot is Chief Illiniwek — a student who dresses in full American Indian regalia and dances at games.

Dennis Tibbetts, assistant dean of students at Illinois, said the university has shown no inclination to drop the Fighting Illini nickname or Chief Illiniwek. Tibbetts, who is Chippewa and Shoshone, disagrees with that stand.

"If you switched it around and said let's have Chief Zulu, a white person in black face, people would say of course we don't want to have that," Tibbetts said. "But because we're so indoctrinated to think it's OK to use Indian people like that, people don't object."

At least two newspapers — The Oregonian in Portland and the Minneapolis Star-Tribune — have stopped using Indian nicknames in their stories, although the Star-Tribune continues to use tribal names such as Seminoles and Sioux.

While lauding those efforts, Harjo said it's critical to the esteem of American Indians that all references to their culture be eliminated from athletics. She's one of seven plaintiffs in an effort aimed at forcing the Washington Redskins to change their name.

"Native people's teen-agers have the highest rate of suicide in this country and any suicide expert will tell you that low self-esteem is the cause of suicide generally and teenage suicide in particular," Harjo said.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) - The Bosnian government warned Saturday of a possible new Serb offensive as U.N. peacekeepers scrambled to find Bosnian Serb tanks believed to be inside the protected zone around Sarajevo.

U.N. officials conceded that as under U.N. escort. many as four tanks may be in the hills around Sarajevo in violation of a NATO ultimatum in February banning heavy weapons from within 12.4 miles of the city.

Police: Teen kills professor who took his BB gun

HOUSTON (AP) - A 15-year-old boy broke into a college professor's home to retrieve his BB gun and stabbed her to death with a kitchen knife, police said.

The boy, who was not named because of his age, was turned over to juvenile authorities Friday. Investigators said they will seek capital murder charges in the Monday night slaying.

The teenager told police that he was surprised to find Lillie Lockhart, 50, at home when he broke in.

Lockhart, an English professor at Texas Southern University, had confiscated the boy's BB gun after she found him shooting birds in the neighborhood, police said. The youth lives six houses away from

The boy told police that he stabbed Ms. Lockhart in the chest several times and fled, leaving both the BB gun and the knife behind.

"He appeared to be a little bit saddened," homicide investigator Clarence Douglas said. "He did tell me he was sorry it happened. He knew her. He liked her."

Elegant no-bake dessert starts with a purchased angel-food cake, raspberry sherbet, rasberry pourable fruit and fresh berries. Prepare and freeze seven or eight little scoops of sherbet and pack the rest into the center hole of the cake. Freeze.

At serving time, drizzle half the pourable fruit over the cake, place sherbet scoops on top and drizzle on the rest. Sprinkle fresh raspberries on top and serve with Something exotic: braised chicken with seafood over couscous or rice. About 8 to 10 minutes before chicken is done, add scrubbed clams and mussels to the pot. Cook until shells open.

Fork tines won't stick when you press them into rounds of cookie dough if you dip them in cinnamon or ginger first.

EL PASO (AP) - Astronmers, news crews and eclipse chasers from around the world are converging on Texas to watch the sun and moon keep a date made billions of years

The trip to El Paso, considered the best viewing spot for Tuesday's annular eclipse, will be well worth it, said astronomer David Menke, who describes an eclipse as "one of the greatest shows on Earth.

"Here is an event that has been planned for billions of years. It's been scheduled and we're in the exact location to be able to see this," said Menke, the director of the Buehler Planetarium in Davie, Fla. "It's like being one with the uni-

Tuesday morning's eclipse will be visible across much of North America, with the centerline stretching from San Ignacio in Baja California, Mexico, through El Paso and Amarillo and on to Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Viewers along this path will see the moon creep across the disk of the 8:44 a.m. MDT (9:44 a.m. CDT) as sun until it becomes a black dot surrounded by a flaming ring. The ring is called an annulus, which gives an annular eclipse its name and differentiates it from a total eclipse, during which the moon blocks the solar disk completely.

During the peak of the eclipse later in the Texas Panhandle). along the centerline, the moon will blot out 88.5 percent of the sun, or 94.1 percent of the sun's diameter, astronomers say. Those outside the centerline will see only a partial eclipse. El Paso is considered the prime viewing location in the United States effort to see it, provided they take because it is the area most likely to have clear skies during the eclipse.

That has drawn international film crews and other astronomers - professional and amateur - to the city, where they will set up shop on rooftops, open fields and probably even the surrounding desert.

"They've all pretty much decided that El Paso is the best spot in the country to see it," said John Peterson, administrator of the El Paso Independent School District Planetarium. "Most of your professional eclipses. The school will play host to eclipse people have booked passage a television crew from Japan's Asahi

"Seeing an eclipse is a very emotional event. You cannot explain it," he said. "People really kind of go wild. They shout. They scream. They don't realize what they're doing. ... It's just a feeling that comes over you. There's an electricity in the air."

In El Paso, the sparks have been building for weeks as preparations have been made for the big day.

Students at Canutillo Middle School last week were studying National Broadcasting Co., which will set up a camera on the roof.

"They (the kids) are excited," said Canutillo Principal Ron Haugen. "They're curious about what's going

Wheat fields in the area were severely injured this past week when temperatures dropped below freezing for several hours. Most of our wheat was in the boot stage and was very susceptible to-freeze injury.

Temperatures of 28 degrees or below can cause severe injury to wheat if temperatures remain this low for more than two hours. This varies depending on the wheat's state of development. For example, wheat that is jointing is susceptible at temperatures below 22 degrees and wheat that is blooming will become injured at temperatures below freezing.

Since the majority of our wheat was in the boot, we will concentrate on its injury symptoms. Most, if not all, damage will be to the head although some vegetative injury can occur. In other stages of development, injury to the growing point and nodes is more prevalent.

In the boot, cold temperatures cause sterility to the anthers, or male floral parts. This is detected fairly easily, as normal color prior to bloom is light green to yellow green, while frozen anthers are shriveled and white. Wheat is largely self-pollinating so yield reduction can CORN be severe. Head trapping is also a problem although trapped heads may not be injured.

Because our temperatures were well below 28 degrees and most of our wheat was in the boot stage, some injury has occurred and in many cases severe injury is evident. More fortunately, many fields have ing emergence, the food reserves in the seed may be less severe injury for whatever reason. This is probably due to insulation due to moisture, direction of furrows, slope of the field, etc.

As temperatures increase in the coming days, we will be able to determine more specifically the percent of injury to fields. Also remember that many of our fields Gray County Extension Office at 669-8033.

If I can help, please call. BUSHLAND FIELD DAY The wheat field day at Bushland will be held on May 26 at the experiment station beginning at 11 a.m. A barbecue will be served at noon and Bill Nelson from the Texas Wheat Producers Association will be the noon speaker. Subjects of interest such as alternative uses for wheat straw may also be discussed. Everyone is invited to attend. RANCH TO RAIL PROGRAM

The Texas A&M Ranch to Rail Field Day will be May 10 beginning at 9 a.m. at the Texas A&M Research and Extension Center on West Amarillo Blvd. Topics of discussion will include "Ranch to Rail Results and Updates," "Total Quality Management at the Ranch," "Health Problems That Work," "How Beef Producers Can Remain Competitive," and changes that are occurring.

Since the growing point on newly planted corn is still below the surface, little damage is expected on corn due to freeze. Complete loss of above surface plant should not have an effect other than delaying the crop.

If corn was planted deep and had a hard time reachused up. If this is the case, some plants in the field may die before new growth can be produced to feed the plant. It generally takes 7-10 days for a plant to begin creating its own food (photosynthesis).

KINGSEY FALLS, Quebec (AP) - He doesn't yodel or wear a hat with a big feather in it, and the only thing stereotypically Swiss about Kaspar Michel's farmhouse is the decorative cowbell hanging in the kitchen.

Michel is one of hundreds of Swiss who have taken up dairy farming in Les Bois Francs, a small area about midway between Montreal and Quebec City on the south side of the St. Lawrence River.

He bought his 300-acre farm in 1979, making him an old-timer among the Swiss immigrants at age 36.

"In Switzerland, it's impossible to buy a farm," he said over a cup of coffee in the family's spotless kitchen. "And here, you have a lot more freedom than in Switzerland. There are fewer rules.'

A half-mile up the road live some newcomers, Andre and Renate Badat, who bought their 200-acre farm a year ago. Life is a little tougher for them because neither speaks French in this largely francophone province.

"Sometimes I'm happy, sometimes I say: What are we doing here?" Mrs. Badat said. "But if I think about how it is in Switzerland, I'm glad we did it. I think it was the right thing.'

"How it is in Switzerland" is that virtually every square yard of exploitable land is in use. The few farms up for sale are very small and prohibitively expensive for such as the Badats, both 28.

Prime agricultural land costs at least $14,000 an acre in Switzerland, sometimes twice that, but can be had for about $300 in the Bois Francs.

As a result, the Michels, Badats and others like them are creating a little Switzerland in southern Quebec sans Alps, of course, but with plenty of snow.

The Bois Francs is a beautiful green land of rolling hills, much of it covered with forests of maple, elm and beech.

As Quebecois farmers leave the land in one of Canada's most important dairy regions, young Swiss are more than ready to replace them. Many of the immigrants are enticed by promoters or advertisements in Quebec's farm population has shrunk from about 60,000 in the 1970s to roughly 45,000. Big agriculture has taken over some family farms and better education has lured young people to better-paid occupa-

Of the 5,000 farmers in the Bois Francs, 250 are Swiss. They started arriving in the late 1970s, attracted by affordable land and the availability of complete farms: land, house, buildings, equipment and animals. Buy one day, start working the next.

"They are people who love the land, love animals and love the work," said Mihai Petculescu, president of the International Welcoming Committee of the Bois Francs. "The great expanse of Canada is a little bit of an El Dorado for them."

Michel, who grew up in Brienz in central Switzerland, has 52 milk cows and has integrated so well that he is vice president of the regional dairy federation.

He has become a Canadian citizen, but has not forgotten his roots. Ferme Brienz (Brienz Farm) is painted on one of his silos. "I think I feel more a Quebecois than a Canadian," said Michel, who has four children. "But first of all, I Many newer immigrants - including Badat, who is from Hinwil, near Zurich - speak neither French nor English, Canada's two official languages. The insular life of a farm, where most work is done by the family, means less contact with the outside and integration can be difficult without a special effort.

"It's a hard language, French," Mrs. Badat said in imperfect English. "The problem is we speak all day long German, and only occasionally need French."

Canada and Quebec, nonetheless, are happy to have "These people are good for Quebec," Petculescu said. "Otherwise, many of these farms would just be abandoned."

New Zealand possum poses health danger

"The presence of New Zealand brushtail possums in this country is a major threat to the health of domestic animals and wildlife in the United States because these animals are known to be highly infectious carriers of bovine tuberculosis," said Donald Luchsinger, acting deputy administrator of USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

"We are taking emergency steps to locate all of these imported possums to prevent them from establishing a population here that could become a wildlife reservoir for bovine tuberculosis," he said.

Scientists turn to stinkbug, bacterium, fungus to wage war against Colorado potato beetles

By MARGARET SCHERF Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Scientists who recruited a stinkbug, a bacterium and a fungus to wage war against Colorado potato beetles say the recruits are doing as well as a chemical insecticide.

It costs U.S. growers up to $100 million a year to keep the bright yellow potato beetle, festooned with black stripes and dots, from gorging itself on potato leaves. It also attacks tomato and other crops.

And it has developed strong resistance to conventional insecticides in many areas.

"We recruited a stinkbug, a bacterium and a fungus to kill potato beetles in an experiment last summer and fall in Maine, said entomologist K. Duane Biever of USDA's Agricultural Research Service.

'As far as we know, this is the first time this trio of natural biocontrol agents has been tested in potato and Vegetable Insect Research Unit in the large quantities farmers need, in Yakima, Wash., designed a study in cooperation with University of Maine scientists and carried it out at Presque Isle, Maine.

In comparisons of the biological agents and a conventional chemical insecticide, potato harvests were about the same, Biever said.

The biocontrol plots yielded the equivalent of 15.3 tons per acre. Those sprayed with conventional amounts of insecticide yielded about 16 tons per acre.

Biever said the difference is insignificant, because yields commonly vary from one potato plant to the next.

Biever raised more than 100,000 stinkbugs for the test.

"This stinkbug won't harm fields or garden plants," he said. "It lives about two months, and eats hundreds of the potato beetle's bright orange eggs, as well as numerous immature beetles that hatch from should exploit their full potential. those eggs."

Biever said.

The bacterium, Bacillus thuringiensis, or Bt, carries a toxin into the beetle's stomach. It is harmless to humans, It is commercially available in the United States.

The fungus, Beauveria bassiana, penetrates the beetle's cuticle, or skin, then feeds on the pest. It is not yet commercially available in the United States.

The researchers grew Atlantic and Superior potato varieties and used three applications of Bt in combination with the fungus.

"We know from smaller tests that Bt likely did the bulk of the initial work, because it acts faster than the fungus. But the fungus sticks around longer," said Eleanor Groden of the University of Maine.

"We hope to repeat the test this summer, using the stinkbug first and the fungus second," she said. "That And, it would allow us to use less Bt. The unemployment rate was 6.4 percent, down from 6.5 percent in February and March, the Labor Department said. It was 6.7 percent in January. The report said the nation's non-farm payrolls swelled by 267,000, considerably higher than the 170,000 or so new jobs many analysts were expecting.

"This is great news for main street America," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for Lehman Brothers in New York. "The economy is cooking. There is lots of hiring, workers are working a lot of hours, earing more money than before. That is the fuel for sustained expansion."

Katharine G. Abraham, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said job growth would have been even stronger if not for the nationwide trucking strike by the Teamsters, which idled 70,000 drivers and dock workers most of the

The report "demonstrates fairly conclusively that labor markets are continuing to strengthen," said Norman Robertson, an adjunct business professor at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

Investors, worried that strong economic momentum would fuel inflation, reacted negatively to the news and sent stock and bond prices tumbling.

In advance of the report, analysts suggested that even an increase of 170,000 jobs would worry investors and influence the Federal Reserve to tighten credit later this month. Investors fear that surges in the number of new jobs increase inflationary pressures, lowering the value of fixedincome investments. Higher interest rates tend to slow economic growth.

"This puts the heat on the Federal Reserve to move interest rates up," said Stephen S. Roach, senior economists with Morgan Stanley & Co. in New York.

Bruce Steinberg, senior economist with Merrill Lynch in New York, said, "This will assure that they tighten very soon."

The Labor Department said pleasant spring weather spurred job growth after a frosty winter in the Midwest and Northeast dampened job creation during the winter months. An average of 245,000 new hires were added each of the first four months of the year, for a total of nearly million. Non-farm payolls swelled by 464,000 obs in March, revised upward from the six-year high of 456,000 earlier reported.

Peru faces cocaine addiction problem

By ALEX EMERY Associated Press Writer

LIMA, Peru (AP) - Yoni sucked some white powder into a cigarette, lit up and blew clouds of pungent smoke around his dark, foul-smelling hovel.

He is in his mid-30s, but his gaunt, unshaven features make him look 10 years older, testimony to years of drug addiction. His shirt and trousers are ragged, his bare feet covered with sores.

"It makes you feel pain. I want to give it up. But I have an account to settle before leaving this place,"

Maybe he meant to take revenge on his attacker. Maybe it was just an excuse to stay in Rio Seco, a cluster of shacks that is one of many drug dens in Lima.

Yoni belongs to the growing ranks of drug addicts in Peru, a leading producer of coca leaf, the raw material for cocaine. Peru has been economically hooked on the $1 billion-a-year trade for years, but addiction to the drug itself is relatively new.

Prolonged recession, widespread poverty and discrimination against Indians drive many Peruvians to drugs, said Maritza Rojas, head of the private Center of cuts. Information and Education for the Prevention of Drug

"The crisis generates a lot of stress, and that's leading more and more people to look for a way out in drugs," Ms. Rojas said. "But we just don't have the infrastructure to fight addiction adequately."

Her center, financed by the U.S. Agency for International Development, deals with addiction to a wide range of drugs, from marijuana and cocaine to industrial chemicals and medicines.

By far the most addictive is "pasta basica de cocaina" or PBC, the semirefined compound Yoni was

According to a study by the center, nearly 40 percent of 2,000 Peruvian males surveyed had tried PBC, which resembles crack, and one-third were aged 15 to 18.

Increasing addiction and an attendant rise in street crime have begun to alarm Peruvians.

Newspapers and radio stations run anti-drug campaigns. Television news programs show drugged schoolchildren fighting in playgrounds. Still, little is being done to alter the trend.

One recent day, at the private Villa San Juan Bautista rehabilitation center on Lima's eastern outskirts, two dozen recovering addicts sweated their way through squats and push-ups.

Augusto Egoavil, a former addict who runs the center, said hundreds of families were begging him to admit their children,

"I'd love to open our doors to everybody, but without Yoni said, showing recent knife wounds on his chest any help from the state, we just can't afford to take in any more," he said.

The histories of addicts at the center are similar: As kids, they smoked marijuana with friends, then looked for stronger sensations in PBC, which diminishes the appetite, takes away all notion of time, and eventually impairs speech and brain functions.

"I was worse than garbage," said Henry, who would not give his last name. "The pasta made me steal from my family, my neighbors. It drove me crazy."

He pulled off his shirt to reveal a ladder of purple scars on both arms from self-inflicted razor blade

PBC is easily obtainable and relatively cheap - the equivalent of 45 cents for a "quete" or PBC cigarette. enough for a brief high. But many addicts smoke dozens of the cigarettes a day, forcing the men to steal and women to become prostitutes in order to support their habits.

As the coca industry booms, studies show a decline in cocaine consumption among the U.S. middle class. That decline could lead to overproduction, driving prices down and causing traffickers to dump cocaine on the local market, said Ricardo Soberon of the Andean Jurists Commission, a private think tank.

Meanwhile, under a bridge in an area of Lima called Amazonas, three filthy human wrecks sat on a pile of garbage smoking pasta, eyes staring wildly at nothing.

"They're too far gone to even try rehab," said Egoavil, who used to smoke with them. "They're just waiting to die.'

NATIONAL NURSES WEEK MAY 6-12

SALUTES OUR NURSES AND NURSING SUPPORT STAFF

NURSES By Rev. Joel F. Beam

At the center of all compassion Lies a Feart which God did fashion, And such a heart is what is needed As charts and time, with care, are heeded.

Caring is their way of living And well they know of gifts and giving Intangibles: a look, a way, A tone of voice by night or day.

Such are the gifts of those who dare Whose vocation and calling is human care. Between patient chart and human heart Is a place that few can be. It is a place that too few know, and even fewer see.

> In such a place, lives touch lives, and change begins as hope arrives. Hope enters where despair once dwelled, And by courage is their fear expelled.

The courage shown is what nurses own As a part of what they are, But their hearts and minds Between fine lines speak of their work unique.

And most unique is their singular skill In understanding the human will, Knowing well that lives do end And helping heal the hearts that rend.

Compassion's heart does its part Without display or show As nurses work their daily shifts And live the lives they know.
