PAMPA — Gray County commissioners will meet beginning at 9 a.m. on Wednesday in the second floor courtroom of the Gray County Courthouse.

Items scheduled to be discussed include a resolution designating Labor Day as "Try American Day," county maintained roads, approval of the Lake McClellan Improvement RC&D Project Plan, a request from the district attorney's office to hire a full-time employee, mandatory training by the county auditor and an agreement on a hangar site at the Perry Lefors Airfield.

In addition, the commissioners will discuss financial matters dealing with pay salaries and bills and the transfer of funds.

PAMPA — The wheat harvest in the Pampa area could be underway as early as Thursday, Gray County extension agent Danny Nusser said today.

Hot temperatures and warm, dry winds are helping the hasten the start of the harvest, which could be in full swing as early as the weekend.

Concern for yields has grown over the spring after two late-season freezes and a lack of moisture hindered plant growth.

"Some fields look pretty good. But we won't know the full picture until we get out there," Nusser said.

An outbreak of weeds in many fields after recent precipitation will cause producers some headaches during the harvest, Nusser said.

AUSTIN (AP) — Republican gubernatorial nominee George W. Bush has named Abel Guerra as director of Hispanic relations for his campaign and Karen Hughes as director of communications.

Guerra, an executive for the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, "will focus his expertise and energy on reaching out to the Hispanic community of Texas, one of the keys to victory in November, along with all other groups of Texans," Bush said Monday.

Ms. Hughes, who has state GOP executive director since 1992, "has helped make Texas Republicans competitive across the state," he said.

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards has named Jean Birmingham of Marshall to the State Commission on Judicial Conduct.

Ms. Birmingham, 65, is a former teacher, owns a furniture and appliance store and is a member of the Marshall City Commission. She replaces Dr. Roderick Nugent Jr. of Amarillo, whose term expired. Her appointment is subject to Senate confirmation.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — District Attorney Steve Hilbig said he'll investigate a report that members of his staff became intoxicated and made a nuisance of themselves during a charter bus trip to a Houston Astros game on Sunday.

"If somebody acted inappropriately, they will have to suffer the consequences," Hilbig said Monday.

He said he asked for an investigation after hearing reports Monday morning of the incident.

Passengers included District Judge Terry McDonald and his wife, several members of the district attorney's office, their spouses and friends. Four lawyers, including two members of Hilbig's staff, were cited in public intoxication complaints Sunday.

DALLAS (AP) — After two days of wrangling, a hospital was found that would accept an uninsured Bridgeport, Texas, carpenter in need of surgery for a rare brain aneurysm.

Zale Lipshy University Hospital agreed Monday to accept Gary Gober, 46, from Harris Methodist-Fort Worth, and surgery was quickly scheduled for Tuesday morning.

Hospital officials began trying to transfer Gober to Dallas so he could be operated on by Dr. Duke Samson, chief of neurosurgery at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas. Harris had tried to have Gober transferred to Dallas' Parkland Memorial Hospital, but Parkland turned him down unless he paid a $10,000 deposit.

AUSTIN (AP) — The maker of a popular pep pill is claiming victory in its battle with the Texas Department of Health, which has tried to ban the diet supplement containing the stimulant ephedrine.

Alliance USA officials said the health department has abandoned its plans to issue administrative orders against its product, Nation's Nutrition Formula One. Now the Richardson-based company is free to ship Formula One to its nearly 100,000 distributors throughout the country.

"We are pleased that the TDH has made this decision" to drop the administrative orders against the product, Larry Cantrell, Alliance USA vice president for corporate relations, said Monday in a prepared statement.

North Korea says it will leave U.N. watchdog group

By PAUL SHIN
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The United States, South Korea and Japan — the prime backers of sanctions against North Korea over its nuclear program — all voiced strong concern today over the North's announcement it would pull out of the U.N. nuclear watchdog group.

The North's plan to quit the International Atomic Energy Agency, announced by the North's official news agency late Monday, would make it virtually impossible to check whether North Korea is complying with an international nuclear arms-control pact it signed in 1985.

President Clinton told Japanese Prime Minister Tsutomu Hata by telephone today that the North's move, if confirmed, would make the situation much more serious, Japan's foreign ministry said.

The IAEA, based in Vienna, said today that North Korea had not officially communicated its intention to withdraw from the 120-member organization. Agency spokesman David Kyd said the two IAEA inspectors at the North's main nuclear complex at Yongbyon had not been asked to leave.

Top South Korean security officials met in emergency session for two hours today to discuss the North's announcement, which heightened tensions on the Korean peninsula. The Koreans' 2 million troops are already on high alert.

After the meeting, Deputy Prime Minister Lee Hong-koo said the North's move would only strengthen international resolve to seek U.N. sanctions, a process he predicted would take two or three weeks.

The Seoul stock exchange's main index today plunged 2.1 percent, its biggest one-day loss in four months.

South Korean Foreign Minister Han Sung-joo said the prospects for dialogue with the North had diminished.

"We have now run into a critical juncture where decisive and firm measures are necessary," he said.

A Japanese foreign ministry statement said North Korea was going against "the desires of international society" and asked it to reconsider.

South Korea and Japan, much of which is within range of North Korean missiles, have agreed, in concert with the United States, to push for punitive steps against the North, which would gradually increase in severity.

But Japan's foreign ministry today said Japan would not act prior to U.N. sanctions. Ruling coalition strategist Ichiro Ozawa told reporters Japan might be asked to stop letting North Korean residents send money to their homeland.

The North's move Monday was seen as retaliation for the United Nations' first formal sanctions against it over its nuclear program, suspected of being used to make nuclear weapons.

The IAEA's governing board voted Friday to suspend $250,000 in non-medical technical aid to North Korea.

North Korea also repeated Monday that U.N. sanctions would be considered a declaration of war.

The U.S.-led push for sanctions began after the IAEA said

June 2 that North Korea had refueled an experimental reactor in a way that made it impossible to say with certainty it had not diverted plutonium, possibly for nuclear arms.

The North says its nuclear program is peaceful.

Former President Jimmy Carter, in Seoul for talks, plans to visit North Korea for four days starting Wednesday as scheduled despite the North Korean announcement, the national Yonhap news agency said, quoting South Korean officials who met with him.

South Korean newspapers, quoting unnamed government sources, reported today that Carter, in meetings with North Korean leaders, would convey U.S. conditions for high-level talks with the North on improving ties, something the North has expressed interest in.

Local GOP leader: Convention a success

From staff and wire reports

This past weekend's state convention for the Republican Party was a success for conservatives across Texas and in Gray County, according to the local party's leadership.

Tom Mechler, Gray County chairman, said that following the Fort Worth convention, there is no doubt that Republicans embody conservative doctrine.

"It was a good convention," he said. "There was a lot of active participation and a lot of energy that was demonstrated. There's not going to be any question that the Republican Party is a conservative party, contrary to the liberal Democrats."

Gray County's Republican contingent consisted of 12 people, including seven seated delegates, two alternates and three guests, according to Mechler.

Tom Pauken, a Dallas lawyer, was named the party's state chairman after the two other candidates running for the post retired from the contest.

Dolly Madison McKenna, a Houston businesswoman and a freedom of choice proponent, and U.S. Rep. Joe Barton, who had been supported by Sen. Phil Gramm, withdrew from the race after seeing that Pauken would carry a majority of the delegates.

Mechler said that while the race was competitive, it wasn't at all divisive to the party or the convention.

An opponent of abortion rights, Pauken said the Republican party needed fewer political professionals and more volunteers.

Besides the election of Pauken, the convention, whose membership consisted of a majority of delegates and alternates who are evangelical Christians, abortion opponents and home school advocates, chose Susan Weddington of San Antonio as vice chair and swept out many veteran members of the State Republican Executive Committee.

The GOP platform committee endorsed a document opposing abortion except when a mother's life is threatened and calling for "total constitutional rights for the unborn child."

With the adoption of more conservative policy and personnel, some people warn that moderate Republicans and the would-be support of some Democrats would jeopardized.

Texas Christian Coalition Chairman Dick Weinhold, who backed Pauken, said he didn't believe moderates would leave the party and echoed GOP leadership that said Republicans would be united when the November election arrives.

As for Mechler, he said that he believes the more conservative political approach will appeal to voters in Texas.

"I think that it helps the Republican Party because I think the state of Texas is a conservative state and it demonstrated, at least from what I see, that the Republican party is entirely in step with the population of Texas," he said. "We'd probably not do very well on the East Coast, which is pretty liberal, but Texas is conservative, Gray County is conservative and the Republican Party is conservative."

No consensus on health reform in Senate panel

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate leaders emerged from a meeting with President Clinton today saying "there is not now a majority for any health-care reform plan" in a key committee, but they agreed to continue their work.

Recognizing the lack of consensus, "the president asked that we take no votes in the committee at the moment," said Sen. Robert Packwood of Oregon, ranking Republican on the Senate Finance Committee.

"He obviously doesn't want any vote that causes his plan to be defeated," Packwood said.

Committee Chairman Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., summed up the meeting: "We agreed that ... there is not now a majority for any health-care reform plan in the Senate Finance Committee, that we will continue to work on a bipartisan basis to provide legislation that covers everybody."

Meanwhile, Hillary Rodham Clinton refused to rule out the possibility of sacrificing abortion coverage to win a universal plan. She told the League of Women Voters that "the way this whole debate is developing it is very difficult to tell exactly where" compromises will be made.

"Let's focus on getting everything possibly done to make sure we get a system for universal coverage and then I think we can really begin to fight out some of the issues that will come from that," she said.

On another front, Democrats on the House

Education and Labor Committee rejected, 28-15, a Republican plan that would require employers to offer, but not pay for insurance coverage for their workers.

Moynihan insisted Clinton's health-care reform plan was not dead, saying, "Not at all. This is a large piece of legislation and some of the principles are absolutely essential. Others are negotiable and he knows that."

Packwood put it another way. "At the moment, all plans are dead," he said. "Anybody's plan."

"There's not a majority for any single plan," Packwood added. "So the question is, can we accommodate ourselves to different parts of different plans and reach a majority."

Clinton scales down welfare reform

By TERENCE HUNT
White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Moving to redeem President Clinton's pledge to "end welfare as we know it," the White House today unveiled his $9.3 billion reform package imposing a two-year limit on cash benefits and steering aid recipients into the work force.

"Under the president's reform plan, welfare will be about a paycheck, not a welfare check," according to a summary of the plan obtained by The Associated Press.

The five-year plan, which Clinton will announce today in Kansas City, Mo., would largely be paid for by cutting social programs, especially aid to immigrants and the homeless. Subsidies to wealthy farmers would be cut at a savings of $500 million.

A huge chunk of the money — about $7 billion — would be spent on education, training and day care programs, with only $1.2 billion targeted for work programs.

The tilt away from jobs programs is expected to draw criticism.

Clinton's speech forum was the Commerce Bank, where Harry Truman once worked as a teller. Now, the bank is known for hiring people from training programs intended to move them from welfare to jobs.

More than a year in the making and long delayed in its presentation, Clinton's plan is intended to frame a national debate on welfare reform, a politically popular issue among Democrats and Republicans alike.

With health reform already clogging both houses of Congress, it's doubtful that welfare reform will be enacted this year even though there's strong support for change.

Polls find that the overwhelming majority of Americans are disgusted with the current welfare system; most people believe it discourages poor people from finding work.

Clinton said overhauling welfare is an issue that cuts across political lines. "This is something the Bubbas of America and the liberals can get together on," he said in an interview published this week by U.S. News & World Report magazine.

The centerpiece of Clinton's plan is a two-year limit on cash benefits for single parents 18 and older. The proposal singles out the youngest women on the rolls — those born after 1971 — for intense job training, placement and child care to help them prepare for the work force.

Baptist teens pledge no sex until marriage

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — It's a sexual revolution in the opposite direction: More than 100,000 Southern Baptist youngsters are pledging to refrain from sex until marriage.

Under the hot June sun, hundreds of teens began setting up a stadium-sized display of chastity pledge cards this morning as the 137th annual meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention opened.

"It's a way to tell the world not to have sex before marriage," said Katy Burks, 13, of Ferris Avenue Baptist Church in Waxahachie, Texas. "It's really important to me. All my friends and stuff are getting pregnant and it hurts to see them getting hurt like that."

Since its humble beginning little more than a year ago, when 59 teens took vows of chastity in a Nashville church, the "True Love Waits" campaign has inspired more than 100,000 youths in the nation's largest Protestant denomination to pledge to abstain from sex before marriage. Thousands of signed cards were brought to Orlando to set up today's symbolic display in the lawn outside the convention center.

Risking the ridicule of their peers, teens say abstinence is an opportunity for redemption in a culture that often seems to expect them to give their libidos free rein.

"It gives other youths a place to look at and say, 'We're not so odd. Look, there's 100,000 other people that are not having sex,'" said Rob Ladd, 18, of Nashville. "Even if five of my friends are having sex, I don't have to."

What has captured the imagination of these teens is the opportunity to "get in the face" of the free love generation that expects them to be promiscuous, said the Rev. Richard Ross, who started it all.

Poor districts seek order against tax abatements

AUSTIN (AP) — A state judge agreed today to at least temporarily block a wealthy school district from giving a tax break to a private company in a move poor school districts said was meant to skirt the new school finance law.

Judge F. Scott McCown also set a Monday hearing on how such agreements must work under the new law, which requires the state's wealthiest school districts to share with the rest of the school system.

"It's a sham to get around" the law, said lawyer Rick Gray, representing more than 100 poor school districts who oppose a tax abatement proposal that would lower a wealthy school district's property values. In return, a private company getting the tax break would give the school district a monetary gift.

Gray specifically referred to a tax abatement proposal between the Calhoun County school district and Formosa Plastics Corp. Other school districts also have discussed such abatements, Gray said. Calhoun County Judge Howard Hartzog has compared the school district's situation to that of American colonialists who fought against British taxation in the 18th century.

"This nation was founded by a group of immigrants who came to this country because of the resources it found," Hartzog told the Houston Chronicle. "And we had war because England said: 'No! It all belongs to England.' It almost continues to be the same now."

The school funding law was approved by the Legislature last year in response to a court order to even out funding available to districts of differing property wealth.

The Calhoun County school district is among those that must share some wealth under the law.

But a proposal is being considered that is envisioned as keeping some Calhoun County wealth off the tax rolls, and thereby allowing the school district to keep extra funds without sharing, the Chronicle reported.

Under the proposal, a tax abatement currently granted to Formosa Plastics Corp. would be extended for a major expansion of the company's Point Comfort plant.

The tax break would mean as much as $54 million in taxes wouldn't be collected from the company between 1997 and 2000. In return, Formosa would donate money to the school district. The exact amount of the donation still is being negotiated, but could be tens of millions of dollars, according to the newspaper report.

Before the law was approved last year, tax abatements were subtracted from a school district's taxable property value. That value determines how much wealthy school districts must share with poorer schools, and how much state aid school districts get.

The new law says abatements granted after May 31, 1993, won't be subtracted from the property value of a school district.

PECOS (AP) — After a 28-year-old man admitted fatally stabbing his mother and sister, various satanic paraphernalia was found in his residence, authorities say.

Robert Carrasco Chavarria, 28, of Pecos was arrested Saturday after he told police that he killed his mother and sister, Feliz Carrasco Chavarria, 68, and Dora Chavarria Machuca, 43, at their residence, 910 S. Walnut. Chavarria was charged with capital murder.

Brewster County officials vote to temporarily reopen jail

ALPINE (AP) — Inmates will likely be returning temporarily to the trouble-prone Brewster County Jail, which was shut down following an investigation by the district attorney.

County commissioners on Monday voted in favor of reopening the facility until a new jail can be built to replace it, said County Judge Val Beard.

observer who asked not to be identified, includes satanic symbols and words like "Lucifer" on the walls, three "double-six" dominoes on a table, a satanic bible and a letter from Chavarria.

A "boom box" with satanic music was found covered with blood, officials said.

Police said the two women had just returned from a shopping trip around 7 p.m. Saturday when they were attacked. They had numerous stab wounds in the face and neck.

Police went to the residence after Chavarria drove up to the police department about 7:30 p.m. and honked his horn, officials said.

A patrolman noticed Chavarria had cuts on the palms of both hands.

When the officer asked how he got the cuts, Chavarria replied that he had killed his mother and sister, officials said.

Chavarria was known as a quiet, soft-spoken individual who worked as a welder for the city of Pecos in the sanitation department. He also drove garbage trucks when another driver was off work.

Chavarria was taken to a hospital for treatment of cuts on his hands that were described as self-inflicted.

"Once we have the case reports done I'm going to visit with the Major Crimes Unit in Austin, which is a division of the DPS, and analyze the findings based on the reports," Montgomery said.

The jail, which is housed in a historic building, was closed two weeks ago after an investigation prompted by District Attorney Albert Valadez charged that inmates nearly controlled the facility and that the building was unsafe.

Beard said commissioners were concerned about the jail long before the raid. But she said it would be needed to house prisoners because the alternative — housing inmates in an adjacent county — is too costly. Brewster County inmates removed during the shutdown are in the Presidio County Jail.

The Sheriff's Department has also been directed to hire a chief jailer and to create a wage scale that would allow certified jailers to earn more money, Beard said.

Baptists convene to discuss politics, social issues and to elect new leader

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Fundamentalists are in control, and conservative political and social causes are expected to dominate the annual gathering of the Southern Baptist Convention in Orlando this week.

Some 23,000 delegates representing 15 million church members are selecting a new leader today.

Jim Henry, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Orlando, and Fred Wolfe, pastor of Cottage Hill Baptist Church in Mobile, Ala., are the candidates for president. They are both conservatives.

Wolfe is considered the front-runner, but Henry is seen as having strong support from many of those tired of political infighting.

Wolfe, 56, has been "in the trenches" of the conservative movement since it seized control of the denomination in 1979, observers say. The Alabamian is supported by an influential group of former presidents of the Southern Baptist Convention.

The more moderate Henry, also 56, decided not to campaign, but Wolfe supporters are worried about his popularity in his home state.

They also think Henry might make appointments that could make some changes in the denomination's political direction.

"There are indications that the conservative leadership considers this race to be closer than originally anticipated, and they're stepping up their efforts in recent days to bolster the vote for Wolfe through telephone campaigns, etc.," said Greg Warner, executive editor of Associated Baptist Press.

The Jacksonville-based news service covers Southern Baptists and is supported by moderate Baptists.

The activist arm of the convention is the Christian Life Commission, which produces tapes, pamphlets and other materials for those who wish to spread the message for school prayers, against abortions and anti-gay rights positions.

"We are neither Republican nor Democrat. We are God's people," said Louis Moore, the commission's media director. "God expects us to bring Biblical principles to bear in the public policy arena."

Others disagree, saying that religion should be strictly separate from government and that the commission is trying to legislate morality.

The commission is "ready for government entanglement and involvement in religion, and we're not," said James M. Dunn, executive director of the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs.

The committee represents about 20 million other Baptists.

"The fundamentalists are in complete control" of the convention, Leo Sandon, chairman of the department of religion at Florida State University told The Orlando Sentinel for a Monday story.

"I see them as fully aligned with the political right."

Convicted killer Crank executed

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A former construction worker from Houston was executed early today for the abduction and fatal shooting of a supermarket manager during a $39,000 robbery 10 years ago.

Denton Crank, 39, had insisted he was innocent of the slaying of Terry Oringerdoff in Houston. Witnesses said a masked gunman brought Oringerdoff into the store and warned he had wired dynamite to the manager's back and would detonate the explosives if his demands were not met.

Oringerdoff, 32, was found dead several hours later. He had been shot numerous times in the head.

Crank's attorneys appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, contending his trial lawyer had a conflict of interest because a law partner had represented a possible witness in the case and should have been disqualified from representing Crank.

Prosecutors, however, said Crank was given the opportunity to get another trial attorney but refused.

The high court refused the last-day appeal, rejecting the claim about 2 1/2 hours before Crank was placed on the Texas death chamber gurney and given lethal injection just after midnight.

"To my family who kept me strong I give my love," he said in a brief final statement.

Crank became the seventh convicted killer to be executed this year in Texas and the 78th since the state resumed the death penalty in 1982. Both figures are the highest in the nation and the total represents one-third of all executions in the United States since the Supreme Court in 1976 allowed capital punishment to resume.

Oringerdoff was kidnaped from his home Jan. 16, 1984 and was taken to his store where he was forced to open several safes and fill a garbage can with the cash. Crank was arrested and charged eight months later. He had been under suspicion within days of the killing after police received a tip through a crime-stopping group.

Crank, however, insisted he was innocent. "They lied about it," he said in an interview last week.

"If there had been any doubt in my mind, I never would have asked the jury to give him the death penalty and I would have never asked them to convict him," Jan Krockner, the Harris County district attorney who prosecuted the case, said.

Jury finds Exxon, skipper acted recklessly in oil spill

By T.A. BADGER
Associated Press Writer

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A federal jury has opened the way for victims of the Exxon Valdez disaster to seek $15 billion in punitive damages from Exxon Corp. and skipper Joseph Hazelwood, ruling that their recklessness led to the nation's worst oil spill.

The more than 10,000 fishermen, Alaska natives and property owners who are suing claim that Hazelwood was drunk the night of the spill and that Exxon had known about his drinking for years and left him in command anyway.

The jury deliberated for more than four days before finding recklessness, a necessary step in the plaintiffs' attempt to collect punitive damages for the 11-million-gallon spill that blackened Prince William Sound in 1989. The jury also said Monday that Hazelwood acted negligently.

The 12 jurors will decide how much to award in damages during the next phase of the case, expected to begin next month.

"It's my fervent hope the punitives are set at a level that will not be just a drop in the bucket for Exxon," said Dome Hawthurst, executive director of the 300-member Cordova District Fishermen United. "Exxon effectively ruined our community, and I don't want to see that happen to other communities."

The plaintiffs are seeking $15 billion in punitive damages and about $1.5 billion in compensatory damages. Punitive damages are meant to punish and deter wrongdoing. Compensatory damages cover actual losses.

"Exxon still thinks it's above the law," said Brian O'Neill, the plaintiffs' lawyer. "You need to take a substantial bite out of their butt before you can change them."

He and his legal team swept each other up in a silent, tearful hug after hearing the verdict.

Exxon stock fell $2.625 after the verdict, closing at $59.50.

Hazelwood refused to answer questions. One of his lawyers, Thomas Russo, said the former tanker captain will keep trying to clear his name.

At Exxon's Texas headquarters, Chairman Lee Raymond apologized to the victims and said the company has been punished enough. The company has said the spill has cost it more than $3 billion.

The plaintiffs contest that total, saying it includes legal, public relations and other expenses not directly tied to the cleanup.

Defense lawyers admitted Hazelwood had a few drinks before sailing but said alcohol had nothing to do with the wreck. In 1990, he was found innocent of operating his ship under the influence of alcohol but was convicted of the negligent discharge of oil.

The defense blamed the grounding on third mate Greg Cousins, saying he failed to carry out a simple turn Hazelwood ordered before leaving the tanker's bridge to tend to other business. Cousins was at a loss to explain why he failed to execute the turn.

Russo and Exxon lawyer Patrick Lynch said an appeal is possible, but it can't be filed until the entire trial is over.

O.J. Simpson questioned in death of ex-wife, another man

By SUE MANNING
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police briefly handcuffed O.J. Simpson and questioned him for three hours after the bloodied bodies of his ex-wife and another man were found outside her condominium.

Simpson denied involvement in the deaths of Nicole Brown Simpson, 35, and Ronald Lyle Goldman, 25. He was not arrested, but today's Los Angeles Times quoted an unidentified police source as saying the football Hall of Famer is under investigation.

A passer-by found Mrs. Simpson's body near a gate to the West Los Angeles condominium early Monday. Police found Goldman's body in shrubbery nearby. Police wouldn't say when the two died.

A blood-soaked glove was found at Simpson's home, the Times and the Daily News of Los Angeles reported, citing unidentified police sources. The Daily News reported that the glove matched one found near the bodies.

"I know nothing," Simpson said as he got into a patrol car Monday.

Simpson flew to Chicago on business about 11 p.m. Sunday and returned around noon the next day, after police notified him of Mrs. Simpson's death, said his lawyer, Howard Weitzman.

"Mr. Simpson is not being treated as a suspect," Weitzman said. "He had nothing to do with this tragedy."

Police aren't ruling anyone out as a suspect, Cmdr. David Gascon said.

Autopsies were planned for today. Coroner's spokesman Scott Carrier said "sharp-force injuries," which might include stabbing, contributed to the deaths. The Daily News said the victims' throats were slashed.

Goldman was a waiter at the restaurant where Mrs. Simpson dined Sunday, but he didn't serve her, restaurant owner Karim Souki said.

"She had dinner here. She called later to see if we found her glasses and we found them," Souki said.

He said Goldman volunteered to return them.

Neighbor Beverly Newman told the Daily News that she had often seen Goldman playing with Simpson's children.

The 5-year-old boy and 7-year-old girl were found sleeping, unharmed, in their mother's condominium. They were turned over to relatives.

The Simpsons were divorced in 1992 but were said to be discussing a reconciliation.

"The situation had seemed better," neighbor Robert Gerard said.

Weitzman said the two were often together on family outings, and both attended their daughter's dance recital Sunday.

 EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
 TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Immigrant fight heating up again

A bit more fuel is being added to the ongoing differences of opinion over the impact illegal aliens are having on this country and its economic future. The biggest battleground continues to be California, with Texas as anxious spectators.

Earlier this year, Florida put the spotlight on the question of aliens and their cost to legal residents by suing the federal government for $1.5 billion to cover health, education and incarceration costs for illegals. Two more border states have sued since — California for $2 billion to cover costs of imprisoning immigrant felons and Arizona for $121 million, also to pay for imprisoning immigrant felons. There has been considerable talk about Texas either joining in Florida's suit or filing a suit of its own.

Now California apparently will shed some light on how its citizens feel about the problem of illegals. A "Save Our State" ballot initiative apparently has enough signatures (600,000 names with only 384,974 required) for it to be included on the November ballot.

The initiative is quite sweeping. It provides that aliens are ineligible for any government-paid social services other than emergency health care. It also would bar enrollment of illegals in public schools and colleges. The most repressive feature of the initiative is that it would require police, teachers and health care workers to report anyone they believe to be an illegal immigrant.

According to an Associated Press story, civil rights and Latino groups are calling the measure "gestapo tactics," but supporters such as Harold Ezell, former western regional director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, ask, "How many can we educate, medicate, incarcerate and compensate? Just because they're here illegally doesn't mean they have a right to our tax dollars."

Are aliens actually costing more tax dollars than they produce? Depends on what set of statistics you use. A Dallas Morning News story quotes the Urban Institute as saying that illegals pay $30 billion more in taxes than they get in benefits, although the Institute's study admits some state and local governments pay out more in benefits than they receive in taxes from aliens.

The study also notes that illegals even help expand the job market in growing economies, although they may cost some low-skill jobs in stagnant or slow-growing economies. In fact, the Urban Institute even predicts that if the economy keeps growing, labor shortages may develop.

But other studies reach different conclusions. And the Federation for Immigration Reform claims the Urban Institute's findings are based on flawed numbers. The Federation points out the Institute said there were 3.2 million illegals in the U.S. in 1992, while other studies estimate the number at 4.8 million, quite a wide disparity.

Texas Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison has also gotten into the immigration picture by offering a bill that would make undocumented aliens ineligible for various publicly-funded benefits, increase the number of Border Patrol agents and provide stiffer penalties for alien smugglers. A similar bill was introduced in the House by Rep. Lamar Smith, R-Texas, but Hutchison's bill wisely eliminates the controversial — and easily abused — immigrant identification cards provided in Smith's bill.

So, the battle has been joined on several fronts. It will be interesting to see where the chips fall.

Clinton in Asia: Trial and error

"Significant improvement in China's human rights situation, including freedom for all those imprisoned solely for the peaceful expression of their beliefs, remains our objective. It is easy to be discouraged by the pace of progress in this area. But it would be a serious mistake to let our frustration lead us to gamble with policies that would undermine our goals, withdrawing MFN ... will not promote these goals."
 — George Bush, Sept. 28, 1992

Americans who voted for George Bush or Bill Clinton are enjoying the best of both worlds: a Clinton presidency with Bush's policies. A cynic once remarked that you should always vote for the candidate you dislike most, on the theory that he will faithfully renege on most of what he promises to do. Rarely has a candidate vindicated such distrust more thoroughly than Bill Clinton.

It is Clinton's peculiar genius to arrive at sensible policies only through a process of personal and national humiliation. Time and again, he has staked out a rash position and then, after close examination of the issue, executed an embarrassing about-face.

His administration is a case of irresponsibility rescued by weakness. Its credo is: "Never mind what we said before we knew what we were talking about."

In the case of China, the president has backed down not once but twice. After pledging during the campaign to firmly link trade relations to human rights, he blinked when the issue arose early in his presidency. Instead of following through, he gave Beijing an extra year to ease its repression.

Last month, with the deadline looming, he extended its Most Favored Nation status once again, despite his admission that China has not made adequate progress. But he went further still — explicitly renouncing use of the trade lever to promote demococracy in China. The implication was that George Bush was right all along.

In Asia, even more than elsewhere, Clinton is cementing a reputation as a man who should never be believed. Irresolution has been the hallmark of his policy with respect to the three biggest issues occupying the United States in the Pacific: human rights in China, trade with Japan and nuclear proliferation by North Korea.

Just two days before he capitulated to Beijing, Clinton abandoned the centerpiece of his trade negotiations with Japan: insisting that Tokyo prove its willingness to open up its import markets by setting numerical targets for U.S. sales. That demand had led to the cutoff of the trade talks, alienated even those Asian countries that dislike Japan, weakened the dollar and helped to bring down the government of Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa — which had been notable mainly for its support of freer trade.

One high-level State Department memorandum admitted that the policy was "giving ammunition to those charging we are an international nanny, if not bully." In announcing the policy, U.S. officials admitted they had badly mishandled the disagreement with Japan. Most experts, of course, had warned that Clinton was making a major error at the start, only to be roundly scorned by an administration that claimed to know better.

The president took an even bolder stance toward North Korea, vowing last November that it "cannot be allowed to have a nuclear bomb." His line echoed George Bush's pledge after Iraq invaded Kuwait: "We will not let this aggression stand." But Bush had the will and the means to undo what his enemy had done. Clinton had neither.

Six months later, the evidence suggests that Pyongyang may already have the bomb, a development that the United States is probably powerless to change without a full-scale invasion — and one the administration has so far tried to ignore. A few weeks ago, Assistant Secretary of State Robert Gallucci effectively revoked Clinton's November promise by admitting that negotiations aren't likely to resolve the dispute and that it isn't worth going to war.

Revoking promises seems to be the favorite pastime of this president, who can never seem to recognize a sound policy until he has first wedded himself to an unsound one. It's better to give up a bad approach than to stick to it, but it's better still not to make a habit of adopting bad approaches in the first place.

Clinton's errors have the effect of squandering international respect that the United States has spent years building up. His attitude about American credibility is like a drunken sailor's attitude about money in his pocket: What good is it except to spend?

In his defense, it may be said that he is steadily learning how to handle our international affairs. But Americans may wish he had found some other place to get his education.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, June 14th, the 165th day of 1994. There are 200 days left in the year. This is Flag Day.

Today's Highlight in History:
 On June 14th, 1777, the Continental Congress in Philadelphia adopted the Stars and Stripes as the national flag.

On this date:
 In 1775, the U.S. Army was founded.

In 1801, former American Revolutionary War Gen. Benedict Arnold died in London.

In 1841, the first Canadian parliament opened in Kingston.

In 1846, settlers proclaimed the free republic of California at Sonoma.

In 1940, German troops entered Paris during World War II.

In 1940, in German-occupied Poland, the Nazis opened their concentration camp at Auschwitz.

Professional politicians are problem

Charley Reese

If you asked Bill Clinton how many pairs of running shoes he had, my guess is that first instinct would be to lie. He would either overstate or understate the number, depending on which answer he thought would be most politically advantageous.

This is a common characteristic of professional politicians. Clinton has never been anything but a politician or an aspiring politician. A professional politician necessarily must always be thinking about manipulating public opinion, and it becomes a reflex.

Since I enjoy a genuine exchange of ideas, I can hardly stand to be in the same room with a modern politician. I know that whatever words are coming out of his or her mouth, they are carefully calculated for political effect. Some journalists waste a lot of time interviewing politicians and reporting what they say. I avoid them.

There are some exceptions, of course. There are some men and women in public office who actually have genuine convictions about public issues and political philosophy. Whether their ideas are on the left or the right, I respect such people. They are the only ones who see public office as a public service rather than as a vocation.

That's why the American people have made a huge mistake by allowing politicians to raise their salaries and benefits to the point of being in the top 1 percent of income in the country. The idea that you have to pay a lot to get a good public official is not only wrong but actually achieves the opposite result.

It makes the office attractive to people who simply need a job and aren't very successful in any other endeavor. Or it attracts greedy people. Remember, pay and perks are only the legal part of the rewards. It's amazing how many public officials suddenly become, for the first time in their lives, astute investors and the objects of warm affection by bank loan officers.

Here's a simple way to test this proposition. Think of a politician in your community. Ask yourself if you had ever heard of the guy before he won an election. In most cases, the answer will be no. Let undistinguished people occupy positions of power and you get — at best — undistinguished leadership.

Benjamin Franklin actually boasted to a British critic that since Americans didn't pay their public officials much, they got good representatives. On another occasion, Franklin observed that all schemes to reform bad government would never work. The only answer, he said, was to keep the government too poor to pay bribes.

Our government, of course, is today handing out in one way or another $1.5 trillion per year. Anybody surprised there is political corruption? Anybody surprised there are highly organized factions bidding for a slice of that pie? Anybody surprised that politicians barter their votes for campaign contributions and other considerations?

It is always a mistake to believe that the experience of generations can be discarded and that you can do what history teaches no one else was ever able to do successfully. You can't have sound families and no morality. You can't have honest but luxurious government. You can't have a free society and an all-powerful government. For that matter, you can't have a free society and a people who want to be taken care of.

Another thing people ought to avoid is treating public officials as if they were athletes or movie stars. It's adolescent to be either fanatically devoted or fanatically opposed to any public official. They are just temporary employees. To the extent they do what's right, they should be supported; to the extent they don't, they should be opposed. But to see any individual as either a messiah or an antichrist is to make a mistake.

The job of self-government never ends and involves every citizen, not just the politicians.

Dan Quayle: The media made me do it

The making of a familiar scapegoat is about to happen, once again, right before our video eyes.

Television's most polite news — host, ABC News' David Brinkley, has asked his guest, the noted author Dan Quayle, about his new book. "You have some unkind words for several prominent Republicans," Brinkley said, with admirable understatement, in a recent Sunday interview. "... If you decide to run for president, won't you need their help?"

(Here it comes. But be alert. For in the midst of some disingenuous scapegoating, a fleeting moment of truth occurs.)

"Well, I have some very kind words to say about these same individuals," replies Quayle. "Unfortunately, the media focuses on, more or less, the CANDID side rather than the very COMPLIMENTARY side."

Translation (courtesy of our handy "thesaurus" function key): The news media focused on the candid — GENUINE, HONEST, SINCERE AND TRUTHFUL — sentences, not the standard insincere compliments politicians reflexively emit. In short: The news media found and focused on the news.

Now it is important to say a word here in defense of our former vice president. Dan Quayle knew precisely what he was saying when he wrote his book and when he indulged in this ritual political pastime of media scapegoating — to deflect responsibility for his own words. "I wrote this more as a journalist than a politician," Quayle told Newsweek about his new book, Standing Firm.

Quayle knew he could make news by taking well-calculated shots at Republicans who may be his 1996 presidential adversaries, and that those news reports would: (1) promote book sales; and mainly (2) signal the Grand Old Party that each adversary has negatives that may be more unacceptable than Quayle's.

There have been times in Quayle's career when he surely did not know what he was saying. But those moments usually came when he felt insecure because he was among people who were not his political friends, or else, well, just not his kind of people:

- May 1989 — Gazing at the faces of his United Negro College Fund audience, Quayle attempted to repeat their slogan ("A mind is a terrible thing to waste") and solemnly declared: "What a waste it is to lose one's mind" — (he tried to recover) — "Or not have a mind. How true that is."

- April 1989 (a lesser-known classic but my personal favorite) — Again gazing out at faces unlike his own, Quayle blurted this greeting to 2,000 Samoans at the Island's airport: "You all look like happy campers to me. Happy campers you are. Happy campers you have been. And as far as I'm concerned, happy campers you will always be."

But book-writing is not blurtation. So we must credit Quayle with having known full well what he was writing:

Of Jack Kemp: "Kemp periodically opposed the president publicly — only to meek claim that he'd been misquoted ... Many questioned Jack's loyalty to Bush, and there were times when the president would have been justified in letting him go."

Of William Bennett: "He got caught up in turf wars ... he declared victory and went home."

Of James A. Baker III: "On almost every matter that came before him, he'd want to know what was in it for Jim Baker."

Back in the '80s, I occasionally took issue with the reportorial style of a colleague and friend, who was then the chief White House correspondent for ABC News. My view: If Sam Donaldson had not existed, Ronald Reagan would have had to invent him. Reagan masterfully used Donaldson's badgering image to make himself appear besieged by an unruly news mob — whenever Reagan wanted to duck a question, yet not look like he was ducking his responsibility to the public.

Now Quayle is trying to convert the entire mainstream media into his personal/political Donaldson. "I guess I had failed to appreciate what the (media's) cynical spin would be," Quayle, playing the role of Broadway's Pippin (so blond, so naive), actually told David Brinkley.

Quayle's complaint about the media distorting his message with its "cynical spin" is, of course, the ultimate cynical spin cycle.

It won't wash.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: "Mike" and I were very much in love and even planned to buy a house together. Our relationship had spanned several years, so we felt comfortable opening a joint charge account. Mike used the card frequently and offered to pay for anything that I charged.

We ended that relationship a few months ago, and, Abby, he reneged — I have not received any payments for the balance on the account. My letters and phone calls continue to be ignored.

I believe that it is fair that I pay my bills, but what can I do to get the money Mike owes me for his balance?

DESPERATELY SEEKING PAYMENT

DEAR DESPERATELY SEEKING PAYMENT: It appears that Mike is a con artist and that he used you. Depending on what he owes on the balance, you may be able to take him to small claims court, or even launch a civil suit. But unless you have unlimited resources, I wouldn't advise going that route.

Write off the loss. Call it a "learning experience," and thank the good Lord that you didn't invest any more of your love, time and money in this chiseler.

DEAR ABBY: I am going to be married for the third time; however, this will be my bride's first marriage.

What is the proper etiquette for sending out invitations? If it were up to me, my lady and I could just go to Las Vegas or the local courthouse and tie the knot. But since this is her first marriage — and, I hope, my last — she wants a big church wedding, which I fully understand. (We are both Catholic.)

I am in the process of having my previous marriages annulled. Please advise me concerning the wording of the invitations, as I am sincere about wanting no gifts.

OHIO READER

DEAR READER: I understand your feelings concerning wedding gifts, but since this is your bride's first marriage, she should not be deprived of wedding gifts.

A suggestion: Inset a small note in the wedding invitations to be sent to your friends and relatives bearing the message, "Your presence would be greatly appreciated — but no presents, please."

DEAR ABBY: A reader wrote to say that he was fed up with having to crawl under his truck or fight with the neighbor's dog for his daily paper. We are familiar with this problem — our newspaper usually lands in the bushes or on top of the porch roof.

Requests for better service were ignored. Finally, after three consecutive porch roof deliveries, which landed in wet, slushy snow and required the use of a broom from an upstairs window to salvage what was left of an unreadable newspaper, I put these three soggy newspapers, plus $1.75 in pennies (weekly charge) in a plastic bag, added more water, shook up the whole mess and placed it in my freezer!

On Saturday (collection day), I handed our paper boy the frozen bag.

That put an end to the rooftop delivery for sure. W.J.F. IN DETROIT

From the Panhandle town of Texline to the gulf coast town of Orange, Fran Kludt and Bob Davis cycled more than 1,000 miles across this state beginning around the first week of June.

"It's good to challenge yourself with something you're not sure you can do," said Kludt, who viewed this trip as "vision quest."

It took Kludt and Davis over a week to complete their quest which ended in Orange, where Kludt is originally from.

Both have been cycling for several years and have trained over 2,500 miles this year.

They had planned on doing a trip like this for quite a while just to see if they could do it.

Davis had been sick the first couple of days they started and thought on the first day that he shouldn't be going on the trip, but he got better as they went along.

Starting at Texline, the two rode forty miles the first day and the next several days they did more than 100 miles a day varying between 105 and 130.

"We went an extra few miles everyday," said Kludt.

"What we had planned we were right on schedule. We finished up to an hour or two ahead of schedule," Davis added.

As for meeting their expectations of what a journey like this entailed, both admitted that they knew what they were facing — such as the elements of nature — before they got started.

"I knew it was going to be hot.

I knew it was going to be windy. And I knew it was going to be hilly," said Davis. "We were quite fortunate. The weather was good," said Kludt. But he added that they had to deal with riding against headwind all along the way and they had no tailwind.

There was also a matter of a little rain as they rode through College Station.

"Going through College Station," said Kludt. "We got thoroughly soaked."

But both looked on the rain more as a blessing than a hindrance though they did say they had to pay for it later on.

"It was refreshing," said Davis. "It was a relief to have a little rainfall."

They tried to stay on the shoulders and highways where they could and Kludt's 17-year-old son David drove alongside them making sure they were both doing all right.

Davis also kept them supplied with water and things to eat.

"We were eating and drinking continuously," said Kludt. They drank an average of five gallons of water a day.

"We ate things that we could easily carry," he added, such as fruit and power bars.

They also ate large meals before they got started and after they stopped each day.

"What really surprised me," said Davis. "Was how you could refuel yourself everyday and do it all over again."

"I didn't know it could be done."

Kludt said what also helped was staying in a hotel and being able to get a good night's rest before each day's trip.

Cycling through Texas gave both the chance to take advantage of the scenery that they had only seen by car.

Both said this state is full pretty countryside and nice small towns. What surprised Davis, though, was the intensity of the humidity as they trekked in the southern part of the state.

"It was stronger than I last remembered it," he said.

Davis admitted that he still had his doubts while he was on the road, but once he would look at the map and realized how far they had gone and that their goal was within reach, he got a little more excited.

They also ran into a few unanticipated difficulties — road construction, rush hour, and trucks. Kludt said they had to ride in line with cars in some construction areas.

"You're going through one line of traffic that's held back and you're leading the cars down," he said.

They also related what it was like going through morning rush hour traffic in Temple, something they didn't plan on, and also added that they had some "exciting" river bridge crossings with gravel and logging trucks.

They also mentioned how it was interesting the way they could judge the characters of each of the towns were going to by the roads in the county.

This was one area where they gave kudos to the Panhandle roads for being the better roads in the state.

"I believe by far of all the roads, the Panhandle roads are more reliable, the motorists are friendlier, and they have good shoulders," said Davis.

As for another trip of this sort, Kludt and Davis said there may be another one but it definitely wouldn't be this summer and they may even take a few of their friends who have expressed interest along with them.

Rangers, Canseco explode against Mariners

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Jose Canseco hit three homers and drove in eight runs, offsetting Ken Griffey Jr.'s grand slam and six RBIs, leading the Texas Rangers over the Seattle Mariners 17-9.

Canseco went 5-for-6 with a team-record 14 total bases. He set a career-high for RBIs, as did Griffey. Canseco had missed the past three games with a hip injury.

Canseco hit a two-run homer in the first inning and a three-run shot in the third that went an estimated 480 feet, the longest in Arlington since the Rangers began recording distances in 1987. He hit a solo shot, his 19th, in the seventh, matching his career high for homers in a game.

In addition, Canseco had RBI singles in the second and fifth innings. He struck out in the eighth, an inning in which Juan Gonzalez and Ivan Rodriguez hit consecutive home runs.

Jose Canseco
 Canseco became the fourth player to homer three times in a game this season. Karl Rhodes, Tim Raines and Cory Snyder all did it in April. In his last eight games, Canseco is 19-for-34 with eight homers and 20 RBIs.

Griffey hit his 26th homer, and sixth career grand slam, in the sixth inning as the Mariners pulled within 11-5. He had a two-run single in the seventh and finished 3-for-5.

Texas had 22 hits, including three by David Hulse, Rusty Greer, Bill Ripken and Esteban Beltré. Seattle had 12 hits.

Canseco had his seventh multi-homer game of the season and 19th of his career.

Bruce Hurst (2-1) held Seattle hitless until the sixth, when Seattle scored five runs. Greg Hibbard (1-4) lasted three innings, allowing 10 runs and 12 hits.

Giants slip by Astros

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Matt Williams hit his National League-leading 23rd home run and William VanLandingham and three relievers combined on a eight-hitter as the San Francisco Giants beat the Houston Astros 5-2 Monday.

The Giants, who totaled five runs in being swept by San Diego last weekend, also got a home run from Todd Benzinger and a base-running boost from Barry Bonds in ending their four-game losing streak.

VanLandingham (2-0) allowed two runs on four hits over 6 2-3 innings in his fourth major league start. He walked four and struck out five. Dave Burba and Mike Jackson followed, and Rod Beck worked the ninth for his 13th save.

Beck did allow a two-run homer by Andujar Cedeno, his eighth, in the ninth inning and walked James Mouton before a bit of luck helped him get the final out. That came when Kevin Bass hit a grounder with Mouton running, and the ball bounced up and hit Mouton, the interference providing the final out.

Bonds singled to start the fourth, and his aggressive base running led to two runs that put San Francisco ahead to stay, 3-2.

Shockers down Lubbock in West Texas League tilt

PLAINVIEW — The Pampa Shockers split a pair of West Texas League contests last weekend.

Ryan Cook pitched a four-hitter as Pampa beat Lubbock, 11-3. The Shockers dropped a 6-5 squeaker to Plainview.

"Pampa played very aggressive this weekend. Defensively, we've improved greatly. The pitching was exceptional by Ryan Cook," said Shockers' coach Jack Gindorf.

Cook struck out eight and walked six against Lubbock to gain the win for the Shockers, who play Randall at 6 p.m. Wednesday at Randall.

Hank Gindorf (2 for 3), Jamison Hancock (2 for 4), Brian Waldrif (2 for 3) Augie Larson (2 for 3), Ross Watkins (2 for 3) and David Gamblin (2-3) delivered the big hits for Pampa.

Fowler was the losing pitcher. Hancock and Gindorf each had two hits in three times at bat against Plainview. Watkins had two stolen bases.

Cramer, Plainview's winning pitcher, gave up five hits. Cook took the loss and also allowed five hits.

The Shockers also played some outstanding defense in the two games. Waldrif and Gindorf at catcher combined to cut down seven baserunners. Gamblin, Jason Wesbrooks and Hancock looked sharp in the field.

Olajuwon, Ewing find points hard to come by in NBA Finals

By HOWARD ULMAN
 AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It was a highly anticipated matchup. Hakeem Olajuwon vs. Patrick Ewing. Two of the NBA's best offensive centers going head-to-head for the championship.

Olajuwon's scoring has dropped in each of the first three games of the NBA Finals. In each of the last two games, Ewing missed more shots than any of his teammates took.

Their underachieving isn't likely to change when the best-of-7 series resumes Wednesday night with Houston holding a 2-1 lead over the New York Knicks.

"The odds are it's going to be very hard for them to explode," Rockets coach Rudy Tomjanovich said Monday. "Everybody's focusing on the primary offensive weapons. If the guy starts getting hot, you're going to do something to adjust to that."

The aggressive defense of both teams has kept the centers, who were among the NBA's top six regular-season scorers, from their usual production.

Olajuwon tries to post up, only to find Anthony Mason's knee in his thigh or forearm in his back. Ewing gets the ball for what seems like an open jumper, but Olajuwon leaps with his arm up to distract him.

In Sunday night's 93-89 Houston win, Ewing missed 20 of 29 shots, although he put New York ahead with jumpers twice in the last three minutes.

"He had a lot of good shots, his normal shots, but he's playing against a great defensive center that's closing out on him strong," Knicks coach Pat Riley said. "I thought he hesitated maybe a dozen times when he should have just gone up and shot the ball."

"Hakeem was 8-for-20 (Sunday) night. There's a lot of pressure being put on these guys. Right now we're contesting every one of (Olajuwon's) shots. I think Patrick had 19 or 20 of his shots contested or else a hand up chest or face level."

While Olajuwon has guarded Ewing, the Knicks center has been able to conserve his energy when Houston has the ball. Olajuwon's defensive nemesis has been the brutish Mason, a powerful man at least three inches shorter than the Rockets center.

"That's my private secret, just take him out of his comfort zone," Mason smiled when asked how he defends Olajuwon. "Hopefully, he's getting frustrated. You see signs (of that) but he's a great player and he makes up for it by throwing the ball out to the open man."

Olajuwon's pass while surrounded by several Knicks set up Sam Cassell's 3-pointer that gave Houston the lead for good, 89-88, with 32 seconds left Sunday.

Ewing and Olajuwon have been strong in other areas despite their subpar offense. Olajuwon's seven assists Sunday night were three more than any of his teammates had. He and Ewing each blocked seven shots and led their teams in rebounding.

Both centers speak confidently about regaining their offensive impact.

Mason "did a great job. He's a very physical player," Olajuwon said, "but for me there's no one way of scoring. We still have to get our points one way or the other. They can take this away but they can't take everything away," he added. "I don't expect them to make me feel comfortable, but I don't mind working for my points."

Ewing said he doesn't plan any adjustments for Game 4, when a Knicks victory would guarantee the series returning to Houston for a Game 6 next Sunday night.

"I'm just going to take my shots when I have it, not worry about them flicking at the ball or changing my shot," Ewing said. "If I have to drive, drive, and just take it to the hole."

His reluctance to do that in the first three games has produced an amazing statistic for a player who shoots so much. He has made only five of six free throws despite taking 74 field-goal attempts. He averaged 7.4 free throws a game in the regular season.

"I think he'll be more aggressive," Riley said. "You've got to earn your right to make free throws, but they give us a lot of the perimeter shots."

Ewing took about 14 outside shots Sunday and missed most of them. For the series, he's 26-for-74 from the field and averaging 19.0 points per game, compared to 24.5 during the season.

"I remember one (open jumper) in the beginning of the second half (Sunday). The ball went in and came right back out," Ewing said. "I'm just going to shoot it. I ain't even going to think about it."

Olajuwon is just 2-for-11 in the fourth quarters of the three games and is averaging 24.7 points compared with his regular-season average of 27.3.

Chicago investors to purchase CBA's Wichita Falls club

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — The board of directors of the Continental Basketball Association has approved the sale of the Wichita Falls Texans to a group of investors from Chicago, club officials say.

"On the recommendation of the commissioner (Mark Lamping), the board approved the sale for $800,000 to a group ... named Major Broadcasting," Texans owner Latham Lyne said Monday.

Lyne said he has heard that the new owners will move the team to the Rosemont Horizon, "although that's not a definite. If not, I think they're looking at an arena near Oakbrook, Ill., on the west side of Chicago."

"Their main deal is syndicated radio programming," Lyne said of the new ownership.

The Texans had been in Wichita Falls the past six years.

Lyne and a group of local investors purchased the team in 1990 from Steve Baxter and Bret Hanes, who moved the Mississippi Jets to Wichita Falls in 1988 from Biloxi, Miss.

The Texans won the CBA championship in Lyne's first year as owner.

"We had a lot of good times and a lot of frustrations. We had hoped the city would embrace it more strongly, but that didn't happen. We thought it was something very good for the city, but not enough people wanted it. That's what it boiled down to," Lyne said.

"Most people understand it was a business decision. We've lost money every year we've had the franchise and tried several different things, but none ever worked."

Lyne said Lamping recommended a fine of no less than $100,000 for relocation of the franchise at a late date in the season, but the board upped the fine to $150,000.

Lyne said that he had spoken with the new owners and that "we're going to work together" in paying the fine levied by the CBA.

Irish all wet about water, FIFA says

By FRED LIEF
AP Sports Writer

The Irish complained about water. The Belgians complained about heat. Nobody complained about the officiating Monday. Then again, the World Cup doesn't start for four days. Everything in due time.

The Irish team apparently was under the impression that FIFA would not allow players to drink water during World Cup games.

"Unless FIFA lift this water ban, there could be a fatality at this World Cup," Michael Walsh, chief medical officer for Ireland's Football Association, was quoted as saying in British newspapers.

FIFA said the Irish, who open play Saturday against Italy, had it all wrong, and soccer's governing body responded as if giving a primer on sports nutrition.

"FIFA encourages players to drink, but they can't do it in the middle field," FIFA spokesman Guido Tognoni said in Dallas. "We don't want bottles thrown on the field."

Tognoni was baffled over the Irish misinterpretation since the regulation is unchanged from the 1990 World Cup in Italy.

"I think they do understand," he said. "We would be crazy not to let them drink."

FIFA, in an effort to eliminate any unofficial advertising, supplies all teams with any equipment they need to take on the field, including water bottles.

"The field is to play, not to drink," Tognoni said. "The field is not a bar." The Belgians also wondered about fluids Monday, sweating up a storm amid temperatures of more than 90-degrees during a 6-2 tuneup victory over the U.S. under-23 team at Ormond Beach, Fla.

"It is as if you are immediately spent and empty," midfielder Danny Doffin said.

"After 20 minutes, you just had to have water," said Belgian midfielder Lorenzo Staelens. "And after that, it's like every two or three minutes that you need to tank up."

Belgium plays its World Cup opener against Morocco on Sunday at Orlando, Fla., and temperatures there are expected to be even higher than on Monday.

In other World Cup news:

—Roy Wegerle, the most experienced forward on the U.S. soccer team, won't start Saturday in the Americans' World Cup opener against Switzerland.

Wegerle was injured Jan. 8 and had three arthroscopic operations on his right knee this spring, the last on April 15. He hasn't played a full game since Jan. 3 in England's Premier League. With Wegerle out, it appears Ernie Stewart and Eric Wynalda will start up front.

U.S. coach Bora Milutinovic wouldn't say whether he thought Wegerle was fit enough to play a full game, but Wegerle thought he was.

"I think I can, and I want to play," he said from Mission Viejo, Calif. "But that's what Bora's decided to do."

—In Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, assailants armed with automatic weapons mugged the pregnant wife of Brazilian soccer star Bebeto and almost kidnapped the player's brother.

The assailants escaped in de Oliveira's new imported car, but did not harm any of the victims, police reported.

Last month, gunmen kidnapped the father of Bebeto's teammate, Romario, for four days. After a massive search by police — and reportedly even Rio's drug bosses — the abductors released their victim unharmed.

—Organizers have warned fans of major traffic jams before World Cup games at Stanford Stadium south of San Francisco and are worried the Russian team may not make it in time for its opener against Brazil.

Officials tried to persuade the Santa Cruz-based Russians to spend the nights before their games at a hotel near the Stanford Stadium.

But Russian team officials refused, saying players would have trouble accommodating to new sleeping arrangements. They said they are counting on a police escort to negotiate the traffic.

—According to a Harris poll released Monday, 71 percent of Americans surveyed still don't know the World Cup is being played in the United States. Fifty-six percent said they're not interested in watching any games on television and 65 percent aren't interested in attending. Only 38 percent know that the World Cup involves soccer.

—Switzerland's team refused to allow reporters to cover its arrival in the United States on Sunday night.

—Two defenders on the Italian team, Alessandro Costacurta and Mauro Tassotti, managed to get tickets for Sunday night's Game 3 of the NBA Finals between New York and Houston at Madison Square Garden.

Mr. Gattis topples Citizens Bank

Mr. Gattis defeated Citizens Bank, 18-1, Monday in a girls' 10-12 year-old softball game. The winning pitcher was Tandri Morton, who gave up one hit while striking out four and walking one. Top hitters for Mr. Gattis were Kimberly Clark and Jill Forman, two singles each; Angela Brown, triple; Kim Grice and Sabrina Johnson, one single each. Lindsey Hampton had a single for Citizens Bank. Only four baserunners reached base for Citizens as the game was called after four innings due to the 10-run rule.

Spurs expected to name Lucas next coach

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers will name former San Antonio Spurs coach John Lucas as their new coach and general manager Tuesday, The Philadelphia Inquirer reported. The team will introduce Lucas at a press conference today, one day after 76ers owner Harold Katz met with Lucas in Philadelphia, the newspaper said, quoting unidentified sources close to the team. The team told head coach Fred Carter Monday that his one-year contract, which expires in two weeks, will not be renewed, the Inquirer said. The 76ers have been without a general manager since Jim Lynam left last month to become the head coach of the Washington Bullets. Lucas, 40, who resigned from the Spurs last week, has also been contacted by the Portland Trail Blazers. But he was attracted by holding two positions, the first time in 76er history that one person has been both coach and general manager, the newspaper said. "The main reason he's coming is he wants to run the whole show and not answer to so many people," one source told the Inquirer. Katz and Lucas negotiated a contract Monday that covers at least three years, the newspaper said. Carter was expected to meet with Lucas today to discuss another position in the franchise. The sources said an assistant general manager may be needed while Lucas is on the road. "I'm coming to listen, I'm keeping an open mind," Lucas said before his meeting with Katz on Monday. Lucas has less than two years' experience as an NBA coach and none as a general manager. A former cocaine addict, he has founded a chain of drug treatment centers. Katz had continued to look around for candidates for both jobs. He obtained permission from the Charlotte Hornets to contact player personnel director Dave Twardzik, and has also interviewed New Jersey assistant coach Brendan Suhr, the Philadelphia Daily News reported. The newspaper also said that Mitch Kupchak, assistant general manager of the Los Angeles Lakers, turned down an offer to become the 76ers' general manager. Katz had denied his reported interest in Seattle general manager Bob Whitsitt, New York Knicks Coach Pat Riley, University of Massachusetts coach John Calipari and University of Utah coach Rick Majerus.

Navratilova seeded fourth at Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Although it may be Martina Navratilova's final appearance at Wimbledon, the nine-time champion isn't getting any special treatment. Navratilova was seeded fourth on Monday, matching her current world ranking. Last year, she was placed ahead of higher-ranked Arantxa Sanchez Vicario of Spain and seeded No. 2. In fact, Wimbledon went strictly with the world rankings for all 16 women's seeds, while the men's list was juggled to reflect the grass-court strength of players such as Andre Agassi, Boris Becker, Jim Courier, Todd Martin and Goran Ivanisevic. The draw for the two-week tournament was scheduled for this morning. The top seeds were no surprise: defending champions Pete Sampras and Steffi Graf. Seeded second and third in the men's draw were Michael Stich and Stefan Edberg, also mirroring the rankings. From then on, the seedings varied among the men, with clay-court specialists penalized in favor of those who excel on grass. Agassi, the Wimbledon champion two years ago, was seeded 12th, five places above his world ranking. The flamboyant American has dropped in the rankings due to a long layoff at the start of the year following wrist surgery. Martin's victory over Sampras on Sunday in the final of the Queen's Club tournament earned the ninth-ranked American the No. 6 seeding. Three-time Wimbledon champion Becker was boosted to No. 7, though he is ranked 10th. Courier, last year's runnerup, was seeded fifth, two places above his ranking. Ivanisevic, the 1992 runnerup, was seeded one spot ahead of his ranking at No. 4. Twenty-year-old Russian sensation Yevgeny Kafelnikov will make his Wimbledon debut at No. 15. Switzerland's Marc Rosset, No. 14, and Frenchman Arnaud Boetsch, No. 16, were the other two seeded players not ranked in the top 16.

Indians defeat Blue Jays behind Clark's pitching

CLEVELAND (AP) — Mark Clark, one of baseball's best-kept secrets, won't let himself think about All-Star possibilities just yet. With American League All-Star manager Cito Gaston watching from the opposing dugout Monday night, Clark kept his Jacobs Field record perfect and pitched the Cleveland Indians to their 12th consecutive home win, beating the Toronto Blue Jays 7-3. The home streak is the Indians' best since they won 13 in a row at Cleveland Stadium in 1965. Winners of three straight overall, they remained tied with Chicago for first place in the AL Central, marking the latest they've been in first place since July 5, 1974. Albert Belle hit his 16th home run and Manny Ramirez his 11th for Cleveland. Joe Carter hit his 16th for Toronto. Clark (8-1) won his sixth consecutive decision and improved to 5-0

Lowe's MARKETPLACE

Dear Pampa,

We at Lowe's Marketplace are pleased to have the opportunity to serve you. Now we would like to announce that the store, formerly known as Food King; in Pampa, has been welcomed into the Lowe's Marketplace "family". This association will offer an even greater opportunity for us to meet your shopping needs. In our Pampa Location, you will continue to find the freshest and most wholesome foods as well as a variety of other essential grocery items. We strive to offer only the highest quality products available.

Our corporation has been in existence for 31 years and includes Lowe's Pay-N-Save and Lowe's Marketplace supermarkets. Lowe's was founded on the idea that the customer is always first and this philosophy remains the cornerstone of our company today. Our goal at Lowe's Marketplace is simple: to give fast, friendly service; to sell you the freshest and highest quality food products; and to offer you the best value for your grocery-buying dollar.

We are happy to be joined by many of the Food King employees who will remain on staff with us. Together, we are looking toward many more years of serving the Pampa community.

We are excited about our growth and invite you to visit our newest location in Pampa.

Sincerely,
Roger and Yvette Lowe
