PAMPA — Beginning at 5 p.m. today, Randy Matson Avenue will become a one-way eastbound street, according to Phillip Smith, city street superintendent.

The two-way traffic pattern was abolished by ordinance and the one-way pattern established on recommendation from school officials and the Traffic Commission in an attempt to simplify coming and going around the Pampa High School campus, Smith said.

The parking lot west of Harvester Stadium will offer entry only from Randy Matson and exit only onto Worrell Avenue. Worrell will remain a two-way thoroughfare, he said.

All parking stripes are in the process of being repainted to match the one-way flow of traffic. Restriping is expected to be complete today.

Speed limits on Randy Matson continue at 30 miles per hour, except during school hours, when the speed limit is 20 miles per hour.

SEATTLE (AP) — In the eight-year string of bank robberies, authorities say, the pattern was always the same: A man would leap the counter, confront a teller, fire a handgun once or twice into the ceiling, and demand money.

Then, disguised with a false hairpiece, mustache or beard, he fled in a waiting car.

Once, the man known as "The Shootist" got $38,000 for a day's work. Sometimes, he got nothing.

On Saturday, FBI agents and police say, he got caught. Johnny Madison Williams Jr., 43, also known as Robert James Hall, and his wife, Carolyn Williams, 34, also known as Carolyn Hawkins, were arrested at a motel in Bothell, a suburb northeast of Seattle, about $110 million in late 1991.

LUBBOCK (AP) — An Amarillo state senator says he's reigniting his efforts to keep legislators who also are attorneys from representing clients before state agencies.

The practice "smacks of intimidation," Republican Sen. Teel Bivins said.

"If we're going to have ethics legislation, let's start in our own back yard," he said.

Bivins tried to pass the measure in 1993, but it stalled in a Senate committee. He rewrote the proposal and offered it as an amendment to an ethics bill, sparking a fierce debate on the Senate floor.

Senators rejected the amendment, but Bivins said the vote was close enough to inspire him to try again.

DALLAS (AP) — Sgt. James Brown has been called a devil worshiper and a killer cop. He's been accused of involvement in a satanic murder that he was investigating. He's been indicted and jailed.

And he's been cleared.

In January, the Gilmer policeman was indicted on charges of kidnapping, rape and capital murder in the disappearance of high school senior Kelly Wilson. The charges were dropped two months later because of lack of evidence.

The Top O' Texas Golden Horseshoe was still up for grabs this morning. Today's clue can be found at an insurance agency. Tuesday's clue can be found at an appliance store. Sunday's clue is located at Alco Discount Store. Previous clues can be found at National Bank of Commerce, Larry Baker Plumbing, Watson's Feed and Garden, and Northgate Inn. Persons seeking the horseshoe must enter the businesses to get the clues. No information will be provided over the telephone. The person finding the hidden horseshoe must bring it to the Top O' Texas Rodeo office, 200 N. Ballard, to claim the prize, a box seat for all three performances of the Top O' Texas Rodeo.

Clinton: Trade will define Europe's future

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

BONN, Germany (AP) — President Clinton today promised to help accelerate the dismantling of remaining Cold War vestiges in Europe and suggested that he might welcome a more active role for Germany's military.

A court decision is expected this week on whether a reunified Germany still is bound by restrictions on the use of its military imposed more than four decades ago as result of Nazi aggression.

Clinton, during a joint news conference with German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, said he hesitated to get involved in an issue before the German courts but added: "Anything that can be done to enable Germany to fulfill the leadership responsibilities that it is plainly capable of fulfilling is a positive thing."

"I do hope that we will have the benefit of the full range of Germany's capacities to lead," he added.

Kohl all but urged German courts to reverse the restraints and permit him to send peacekeepers beyond the country's borders.

"When things get a bit rough we cannot simply sit back and let others do the work," Kohl said. "We have to assume our international responsibilities."

Kohl said it was "unacceptable" for Germany, now a unified country of 80 million people with one of the world's strongest economies, to continue to be bound by a constraint put in place after Germany's World War II surrender.

Despite support for a more active role for Germany's military, Kohl said at a luncheon speech that he still welcomed the U.S. decision to keep 100,000 troops in Europe.

Clinton, at the news conference under sunny skies in the gardens of Bonn's Chancellery, said that Europe's future will be defined by trade as much as troops.

He also praised Kohl's efforts in promoting economic growth throughout the region.

"What we have to do is to integrate Europe's other half" to allow former Soviet bloc nations of central and eastern Europe to take their place alongside Germany and more affluent neighbors, he said.

"Germany's leadership to a truly united Europe is crucial," the president told a luncheon audience at the Petersburg Palace overlooking the Rhine River.

Germany already is energetically constructing economic and political ties to Russia and the other democratic nations in Eastern and Central Europe that have supplanted communist regimes. The last Russians are about to depart; the elite U.S. Berlin brigade also is saying farewell to once-divided Berlin.

Clinton was to visit Berlin on Tuesday.

His visit comes on his way home from a summit meeting in Naples of the world's seven major industrial nations and Russia.

On other subjects, Clinton:

— Defended his issuance of condolences to the people of North Korea on the death of their beloved leader, Kim Il Sung, and rejected criticism by Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole that doing so was inappropriate. He said North Korea was only beginning to emerge "after years of isolation" and that it was in everyone's interest — including U.S. Korean War veterans — that a current dispute with North Korea over nuclear inspections be resolved.

— Denied anew that the United States wanted to see the weak dollar maintained to help narrow the U.S. trade deficit. "We will not use the dollar as an implement of trade," he said. "Fundamentals of the American economy are sound." However, he said, "I'm reluctant to say more than I already have." Similar comments by Clinton on Friday sent the dollar plunging on currency markets.

Clinton also praised Germany for promoting NATO's Partnership for Peace program, which has resulted in ties for 21 former communist and neutral European nations with the Western alliance.

The president, who also had seen Kohl at the summit in Naples, planned to visit the German leader's boyhood home of Oggersheim, 125 miles south of Bonn, later today.

Kohl is up for election in October, and Clinton's visit may help his already improving showing in the polls.

Tactfully, Clinton also will meet with opposition leaders, but Kohl will be front and center throughout the two-day visit.

The president also is making up for not going to Germany on his trip to Europe in June. That trip celebrated the Allied D-Day victory over Germany in World War II.

Clinton will preside Tuesday over the deactivation of the U.S. Army's elite Berlin Brigade, which first raised the Stars and Stripes over Berlin 49 years ago.

There the American troops stood guard against the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact. Unlike the Russians, who must quit Germany completely by September, American, British and French troops will remain in western Germany.

Under the 1990 agreement that unified West and East Germany, the allies must be out of Berlin.

Haiti's government orders U.N. human rights observers to get out

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The army-dominated government today ordered all human rights observers from the United Nations and the Organization of American States to leave Haiti.

Dante Caputo, the special U.N. envoy for Haiti, said the monitors had been given 48 hours to leave the Caribbean country by the ministry of foreign affairs. He said the verbal order was delivered at 9 a.m. and included the warning that the army would enforce the expulsion if necessary.

"I consider this an outrageous decision. More than that, it is an insult to the international community. They kill, they murder and rape people and they do not want any witnesses," Caputo said.

He said it was a "very, very delicate situation as far as security is concerned" for the monitors.

There are 40 U.N. observers and 64 OAS observers in Haiti. The joint mission was sent in February 1993 to investigate human rights abuses by Haiti's military and its right-wing supporters.

The expulsion order came as the United States was massing additional warships and 2,000 more Marines just off Haiti's shores.

Eight warships and 15 Coast Guard cutters already are stationed off Haiti to deal with a wave of Haitians fleeing their nation and to enforce a U.N. trade embargo to pressure Haiti's military leaders into giving up power.

President Clinton has repeatedly said he would not rule out the use of force to restore the constitutional government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, who was ousted in a 1991 coup. He was Haiti's first democratically elected leader.

Oklahoma woman dies in accident early today

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

The Panhandle's most deadly type of car accident — the one-vehicle wreck — claimed another life today when an Oklahoma woman headed home from an southwest Indian powwow was killed about 2 a.m. today on Interstate 40 in north Donley County.

Gwendolyn W. Taylor, 50, of Tulsa, was pronounced dead at 3:36 a.m. 7.7 miles west of Alanreed after the van in which she and four others were riding rolled over three or four times, coming to rest on her.

Transported from the scene to North West Texas Hospital via Medivac helicopter was Maria Tackett, 16, also of Tulsa, who is in serious condition suffering head and internal injuries, said Department of Public Safety trooper Wayne Bieghle.

McLean and Groom volunteer ambulance services rushed Aaron R. Tackett, 21, Wallace Deo, 43, and Owen B. Lokoy, 20, all of Tulsa, to the Amarillo hospital, where they were treated and released, Bieghle said.

Taylor and Mrs. Tackett were ejected from the 1987 gray Dodge Caravan which landed on top of them, said Gray County Deputy Steven Lewis, who with DPS trooper John Holland worked the accident scene. Semi truck drivers lifted the van from the two women, Lewis said.

Lokoy, driver of the van, was east-bound when he apparently fell asleep and the van drifted left from the roadway and into the center median. Officials believe he awoke and oversteered to the right. When the van returned to the pavement, it spun and rolled, landing on its right side, Bieghle said. The vehicle came to rest in the median facing southwest with all its windows broken, Lewis said.

None of the four were wearing seatbelts at the time of the fatal accident.

Traffic was blocked in the west-bound lane of Interstate 40 so that Medivac could land. The eastbound lane was blocked for nearly three hours while the accident was investigated and wreckage cleared, Lewis said.

In 1993, one-vehicle accidents accounted for 34 fatalities in the northernmost 30 counties of the Texas Panhandle, Bieghle said. Accidents involving alcohol accounted for 16 accidents.

Bring out the jeans, boots and hats!! Top O' Texas Rodeo action is here this week!!

'I don't put no spells on nobody,' says man linked to eye gouging of woman

ARCADIA, La. (AP) — Two women accused of pulling out their sister's eyes to exorcise demons face arraignment Thursday in Dallas on charges of aggravated assault.

Doretha Crawford and Beverly Johnson were indicted even though Myra Obasi refused to press charges against them. Ms. Obasi told Dallas investigators that her sisters were trying to drive out the spirit of her father or a demon.

The sisters told police that their father had sent them to a man named Bennie Morgan for prayer. Morgan, 65, said he does not remember them. "Many people come and go. I don't keep no record of names."

However, he said, "I don't put no spells on nobody. I pray to get the spell off of them."

After leaving Morgan's white frame home in the Morehouse Parish town of Collinston, the sisters headed for Dallas.

Obasi was blinded during a prayer session at a church and home for outcasts in a Dallas suburb.

The sisters' friends and relatives say a man named Bennie scared the women by saying they were being attacked by demons.

Morgan said he knows nothing about the sisters' ride from Arcadia to Dallas or the "demonic possession" and blinding.

He said he is a seer, and has been one for 36 years. Up to 200 people a year, black and white, rich and poor, come to his remote farm to learn what ails them — be it cancer, tuberculosis or demons — and possibly to find a cure in prayer, he said.

"The spirit of God sees through you and shows it through me," Morgan, a retired millworker, said. "If you are hurt or sick, then He will show this is what is the matter with the person."

Investigators have said that the case involves hoodoo, a mixture of Christianity and voodoo that is based in the rural South and uses charms and potions to cast out demons.

Dallas police say Obasi initially told them that Crawford pulled out her eyes while quoting the Bible verse, "And if your right eye causes you to sin, pluck it out and cast it from you."

Now family members say the sisters don't remember exactly how it happened. The sisters have refused to talk about the case.

Morgan said he belongs to a Baptist church and gives the same spiritual prescription to all his visitors: Read Psalm 37, about the true state of the wicked, and the 23rd Psalm, which begins "The Lord is my shepherd."

Morgan said he prays during and after the Bible reading.

"No way am I a hoodooist," Morgan said. "I am a God man and I always will be. I accepted Christ in 1942."

Hoodoo is a type of voodoo practiced in predominantly rural, minority areas of the deep South, said David Otto, an associate professor of religion at Centenary College. It's difficult to know how widespread it is because hoodoo is passed on by word of mouth.

Voodoo is a Haitian spin on African religion, sometimes including elements of Catholicism. Slaves brought it to the Caribbean and then to Louisiana.

Hoodoo incorporates more Catholic elements than voodoo and was born in southwest Louisiana and East Texas, Otto said.

Both see the spiritual-world as a battlefield between good and evil, but while voodoo has many gods, hoodoo sees the battle as one between Satan and the Christian God, Otto said.

Hoodoo's goal is to give people the ability to tap into the power of good to restore the balance in the physical world, and most hoodooists use hoodoo to supplement Christianity, Otto said.

"Hoodoo uses prayer, the names of saints and the belief in Jesus to do battle with good and evil forces in the world," Otto said.

Abilene computer users upset by fictional request

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Abilene computer users who were told their community was chosen as an "ideal city" are angry that a sociology professor duped them into serving as his project's guinea pigs.

At least 30 Abilene residents on the American Online computer network responded to a request from someone claiming to be Fordham University student Sharon S. Neistein.

She said that as part of a sociology class project, she had picked Abilene as an ideal city. She asked them for help by listing the city's advantages and disadvantages.

Later, when the Abilene Reporter-News began trying to communicate with Ms. Neistein via E-mail messages, it was discovered no such student existed.

The E-mail message was actually from the sociology professor himself, Dr. Samuel Brown of Fordham in the Bronx, N.Y. Brown said he sent his request to about 100 Abilene residents last month to test the idea before he actually tries it on his students next fall.

He picked Abilene, not because it's particularly ideal, but because alphabetically it comes first in a list he had of U.S. metropolitan areas, he said.

Brown, who lives in Hackensack, N.J., says he meant no harm. He just wanted to know if people would respond to a student's E-mail request.

"Think they will forgive me?" he asked the Reporter-News.

Brown said he will teach a course this fall called "The Modern City."

Using computer software, students will fill out a questionnaire listing preferences for cost of living, climate, crime, health care, etc.

The data will be fed into a computer to determine which of 343 metropolitan cities most closely fits the student's criteria. Students then will seek personal comments from that city's subscribers of America Online and possibly Prodigy, another online computer network.

Brown agrees he faced an "ethical quandary" in using a fictional student, but he wanted the test to resemble reality as closely as possible. Sharon Neistein is his wife's maiden name.

"It's always bothered me when teachers give an assignment without trying it out first to see if it works," he said.

U.S. attorney to review abortion protest arrests

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — U.S. Attorney Paula Casey says her office will review trespassing arrests made at an anti-abortion protest last week.

Ms. Casey said Sunday the review would include videotape of the arrests made Friday at a clinic where abortions are performed.

Little Rock police arrested 30 people on criminal trespass charges. Two of those arrested remained in jail on a $2,500 bond each after they refused to sign arrest citations.

Abortion-rights advocates are pushing for those arrested to be charged with violating a new federal law, the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act.

That law, signed by President Clinton on May 26, provides for prison time and fines for those who bar clinic access, damage clinic property, or injure or intimidate patients or staff.

Casey said that a decision whether to file federal charges would be made after consultation with Attorney General Janet Reno.

After wrapping up three days of protests with a memorial service for what they said was an aborted fetus on Saturday, a few of the 200 anti-abortion protesters showed up Sunday at President Clinton's home church. But they arrived a bit late, in time only for the closing hymn.

Democratic Criminal Court of Appeals candidate to be in Pampa

The Democratic nominee for Place 2 on the state Criminal Court of Appeals will be in Pampa on Tuesday.

Betty Marshall of Arlington will speak to Gray County Democrats at a covered dish supper in the Lovett Memorial Library auditorium. The dinner is set to begin at 7 p.m.

The current head of the appellate division of the Tarrant County Criminal District Attorney's Office, Marshall has been endorsed by the Combined Law Enforcement Agencies of Texas and Potter County District Attorney Danny Hill among others. She was voted more qualified than her opponent in the State Bar Poll of all licensed attorneys in Texas.

A graduate of SMU Law School, Marshall is board certified in criminal law by the Texas Board of Legal Specialization. And she is licensed to practice before state and federal courts, including the U.S. Supreme Court. Marshall was involved in the first DNA criminal case in Texas.

The public is invited to Tuesday's covered dish supper.

Buyers reap huge profits from government sales of S&Ls property

By RICHARD KEIL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Charles Keating's grand hotel. A lavish office building outside Dallas. A 224-unit apartment complex near the Mexican border. All three properties, once owned by failed savings and loans, were sold by federal regulators at prices far below market value.

In each case — and in many other similar transactions — the buyers were able to turn around and resell the properties at much higher prices, according to an Associated Press review of the disposition of property by the government's S&L cleanup agency, Resolution Trust Corp.

The RTC sold one property, a 17.5-acre Keating parcel in Arizona, for $875,000 last December. The same day, the buyer resold the parcel to other buyers for $1.225 million — a one-day profit of 40 percent.

Another profitable deal for investors was the Phoenix Hotel, the lavish monument Keating built against the scenic Camelback Mountain outside Phoenix before being convicted in one of the most notorious S&L failures.

RTC sold its 55 percent share in the hotel, along with another hotel, to a Kuwaiti investment group for about $110 million in late 1991.

That investment group, which already owned the rest of the Phoenix, then sold it, complete with its mother-of-pearl swimming pool tiles, gold ceiling inlays and marble columns, and the other hotel, to the ITT-Sheraton hotel group for about $312 million earlier this year.

A court record obtained by the AP shows that a former federal regulator testified that the Kuwaitis were initially willing to pay $145 million for the two properties. The government rejected the figure, he said.

The RTC states its mission is to sell all properties it inherited from the failed S&Ls of the 1980s "in a manner that ... maximizes return and minimizes loss."

But congressional reports and agency documents show that RTC sales average at or less than 50 percent of the properties' appraised value.

The agency blames the poor recovery on two factors: its former strategy of selling real estate in discounted bulk packages and the recession, which drove down real estate values in many areas.

"We've always said real estate will be the thing we take the biggest hit on," RTC spokesman Steve Katsanos said. "It's the toughest sell."

But while the RTC says it has had trouble getting fair market value, those who bought properties from the agency often did not, the AP review of land deeds in several states found. For example, the RTC:

— Rejected a $9.6 million bid for a 224-unit apartment complex in San Ysidro, Calif., in late 1992, according to San Diego real estate broker Eric Melby, who tried to assemble the deal. Instead, the RTC sold it for $6.6 million in a bulk sale to GE Capital. Melby then helped a client purchase it from GE for $7.5 million last December.

— Sold a residential parcel in Phoenix in April 1993 for $185,000 to Kramer Investment Co., which more than doubled its money when it resold the land eight months later for $395,892.

— Sold in February 1993 for $22.6 million the headquarters for the failed Sunbelt Federal Savings Association near Dallas to Don Carter, owner of the Dallas Mavericks professional basketball team. The facility cost more than $100 million to build. Officials familiar with the transaction, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said Carter has since agreed to resell the complex to the parent of Mary Kay Cosmetics Corp. for about $36 million — a 59 percent return.

Critics say the RTC performance has allowed real estate speculators to profit at the taxpayers' expense.

"We're talking about extraordinary sums, without a full explanation of how or why," said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., a member of the Senate Banking Committee. "The consequences are, the taxpayer gets hit again hard, subsidizing someone else's profits."

Experts cite several reasons the RTC failed to earn as much as private investors on the sales.

"Sometimes, the agency lacked good information on the asset, given the large volume of properties and the shortcomings of the ... information system and the great pressure to move assets quickly," said Peter Monroe, former head of the RTC's Oversight Board. "Also, timing is everything in real estate sales, and it was often very difficult to get the RTC to make a decision."

Added Bob Frank, the Phoenix lawyer who turned the one-day $350,000 profit on the Keating property: "Real estate is driven by people who are willing to put lots of money and time into it, and who are not averse to risk. The government doesn't work that way."

The RTC says it has recouped some $400 billion from its property sales. While it has done relatively well in disposing of other parts of former S&L portfolios — mortgages or securities — there are numerous indications it could have collected substantially more from real estate sales.

Guess who

These four young women help advertise the Top O' Texas Rodeo in a 1947 photograph. Anyone able to identify them may win two tickets to Friday night's performance of the Top O' Texas Rodeo by being the first to call the rodeo office, 669-3241, with the correct names. The two young boys in Friday's photo were Wyatt Earp and Ronnie McConnell. The girl on the horse in Sunday's photo was Janie Price.

Cousins sought in multiple deaths

HOUSTON (AP) — Two cousins were being sought today for the deaths of four people found shot execution-style at a northeast Harris County residence, authorities said.

Harris County deputies believe Jonathan Lee Wingate, 22, and his 26-year-old cousin, Idolina Escamilla, were both at the scene where two women and two men were killed early Sunday.

Both have felony records. Wingate was a sometime employee of one of the victims.

"It's a real bloody scene. It's a real gruesome scene," said Harris County sheriff's detective Sgt. Danny Billingsley. "It definitely has the earmarks of an execution-style killing."

Authorities were told Wingate was at the house at 2 a.m. Sunday and said the shootings occurred at about 2:30 a.m.

Arrest warrants, charging the two with capital murder, were issued Sunday by the sheriff's office.

A co-worker who went to the house to pick up one of the victims for work discovered the bodies late Sunday morning and told a neighbor to call police, said sheriff's Detective J.B. Hoffman.

Victims were identified as Rebecca Sue "Dusty" Shepherd, 30, her brother, Travis Lee Shepherd, 21, Ronald Everett Reed, 23, and Paige Renee Grosz, 21.

Shepherd's body was found outside the home in a pickup truck. The other three were found inside the house. Two of the victims in the house were found lying face down, shot in the back of the head, Billingsley said.

Billingsley said he would classify all four deaths as execution-style slayings.

"All of them sustained gunshot wounds to the head," Hoffman said. "This appeared to be methodical in nature and these folks knew where to shoot to do the most damage," he said.

South Texas politicians' legal troubles causing concern

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Three Zapata County elected officials are nabbed in a federal sting. Hidalgo County's sheriff is accused of accepting more than $200,000 in bribes. The Maverick County judge is charged with tampering with government records.

Is political corruption running rampant in South Texas?

"This eruption of cases could just as easily have come from East Texas as the border," Austin political consultant George Christian said. "I've known county judges and officials all over the state, and they've all managed to get themselves into trouble."

Others say the border is another world, where politicians play by different rules. "Most people think that the Rio Grande Valley or Laredo are well into Mexico," said Jim Lund, a San Antonio Republican strategist.

"It's shocking to people ... because we just don't see things like that every day," Lund said of the preponderance of cases involving elected officials.

In one of the more titillating cases, opening arguments were scheduled to begin today in federal court in the racketeering and bribery trial of Hidalgo County Sheriff Brigido "Brig" Marmolejo Jr.

Marmolejo is accused of accepting more than $200,000 in cash, property and dried meat in exchange for allowing a convicted marijuana smuggler conjugal visits with his wife and girlfriend over a two-year period.

The sheriff often stood guard outside his office while Homero Heroldo Beltran Aguirre had sex inside, court documents state.

Beltran, who was a federal prisoner in the sheriff's custody, paid Marmolejo a flat monthly fee of $5,000 plus $1,000 per visit for the privileges, the court records charge.

Beltran allegedly gave Marmolejo 5 pounds of dried beef and a kid goat to seal the cash deal in January 1992.

The case was moved to Laredo from McAllen because of pretrial media coverage.

Recent layoffs not last for major oil producers, analysts say

By SUSAN HIGHTOWER
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) — More than 5,500 oil industry workers have seen their jobs vanish in the past three weeks, and analysts say this round of layoffs won't be the last for major U.S. oil companies.

Texaco Inc. said last week it will eliminate 2,500 jobs, or 8 percent of its work force, and shed half its U.S. energy fields in the next year.

In late June, Mobil Corp. said its chemical business restructuring would cost about 2,300 jobs, or 4 percent of its employees. And shortly before that, Atlantic Richfield Co. said it would lay off about 750 workers, part of the 2,300 jobs eliminated since a restructuring began last October.

The job cuts mark the latest round of restructuring for an industry that has suffered as oil prices declined during the past decade. More than 500,000 oil sector jobs were lost in that period, according to the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

"It's a continuing restructuring that's going on here in the industry again. Some people would argue that maybe it hasn't stopped over the last several years," said Duff & Phelps analyst Thomas C. Lewis.

In fact, the ax will fall again this summer at Arco, which employs about 25,000 people, said spokesman Al Greenstein.

Although crude oil prices have recovered in the past few months, the drastic slide that started last fall and saw prices drop to five-year lows may have helped initiate the latest round of cuts.

Light sweet crude closed at $19.48 per barrel Friday on the New York Mercantile Exchange. But that's up nearly $5 per barrel from late March, when it was trading at those 5-year lows.

"Some of these plans probably were developed when crude prices were lower than they are now. But I think people are not looking at these short-term fluctuations as they are at the prices over a number of years," said John L. Kennedy, editor of the Oil & Gas Journal.

"On the average, I think companies realize that prices won't increase significantly, so they have to be in position to be very profitable at somewhere between $16 and $20" a barrel, Kennedy said.

As major oil companies face the prospect that they cannot count on strong growth in oil and natural gas prices, they are taking a hard look at where they should focus their resources.

Some of the cutbacks can be traced to exploration and production leaving the United States and moving overseas, where costs are lower, environmental laws are often less strict and the chance of major finds is greater.

"To some extent lower crude prices are the key to it," said Stephen McDonald, an economics professor at the University of Texas at Austin. McDonald said when prices fall, companies will look to places where costs are lower. They tend to be outside the United States, he said.

However, analysts stressed that is only part of the picture.

"Even companies that are concentrating more on that (overseas operations) also are finding that they need to slim down their companies and concentrate on the things that they do best," Kennedy said.

"A large company might be getting rid of some of its small and marginal and widely dispersed properties to people who can operate those more efficiently," he said.

When oil prices were stronger, Lewis said, "You got probably pretty fat, your operations in many cases got very inefficient. You had high people costs, you had offices and people everywhere."

"What we have to do is make sure that we have the operations that we want, that we're in the businesses we want to be in longer term," Lewis said.

The consolidation might mean spinning off other businesses, or selling older fields to the smaller, independent oil companies. McDonald said that's a problem because the independents generally are more poorly financed and don't do as much research or technology development as the majors.

Analysts agreed oil industry layoffs will probably continue. While Kennedy said the overall number likely will decline, McDonald predicted more as the move overseas escalates.

"My feeling is that this is a signal of rather rapid decline in oil production in the United States and more rapid increase in our dependence on foreign oil in the years ahead," McDonald said.

Firefighters remembered by community they died to protect

By ROBERT WELLER
Associated Press Writer

GLENWOOD SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — As wisps of white smoke drifted skyward from the ashy mountainside, mourners held hands, sang "Amazing Grace" and wept at a service for 14 firefighters who died trying to stop a runaway wildfire that threatened this resort town.

Fourteen chairs draped with American flags and black and white ribbons stood before the stage as about 3,500 people gathered Sunday to honor the firefighters, who were burned to death when the wildfire suddenly roared up Storm King Mountain's steep, rocky slope on Wednesday.

"We're glad they died doing what they liked to do," Montana firefighter Ted Murray said.

Five helicopters flew past in the missing man formation, with four leading and one bringing up the rear. A 30-foot electric cross, high on nearby Red Mountain, was illuminated. Usually only lighted for Christmas, it will blaze for 14 days, one for each victim.

The dead firefighters were veterans, highly skilled at the dangerous work of containing the wildfires that blow up across the hot, dry West each summer. Nine were from Prineville, Ore.; others were from Montana, Idaho and elsewhere in Colorado.

"These 14 are now part of Glenwood Springs," said Bob Zanella, mayor of this Rocky Mountain town of about 6,000. "They are ours. They will be remembered."

Up the mountain's slope, black skeletons of juniper stood out against the gray ash dusting the ground.

"Please forgive this mountain, she couldn't control what happened up there," U.S. Rep. Scott McInnis told those gathered at Two Rivers Park, where the Colorado and Roaring Fork rivers meet. "It's truly a beautiful mountain. If it had emotions it would feel as deeply about this as we do."

The fire, which burned 1,856 acres, was surrounded Saturday by firelines dug into the ground. Crews dumping water from a giant bucket suspended from an Army helicopter assisted those on the ground, struggling to put out the remaining small, isolated blazes on Sunday.

A week ago, half a dozen major wildfires were burning across Colorado. The Rocky Mountain Fire Coordination Center in Denver said Sunday night that only three new fires — all under 20 acres — had been reported since Saturday.

In California, meanwhile, a 19,900-acre wildfire six miles south of Palm Springs was extinguished Sunday, a day after firefighters controlled a 12,238-acre fire near Lake Arrowhead.

And in Oregon, firefighters had to put aside their grief after a memorial service for the victims Saturday to keep a 3,500-acre blaze in north-central Oregon from reaching the town of Grass Valley.

Report: NIH lost track of drugs developed with tax funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans often pay for their medicine twice — once through taxes and again at the pharmacy — because the government isn't keeping tabs on the way private industry uses taxpayer-funded research, critics contend.

Under law, the government has rights to any drug or medical device developed through federally funded research. Among other things, the government is entitled to lower the price of an excessively expensive treatment.

But it can only do so if it can prove government research was used — and the National Institutes of Health has lost track, concludes an investigation by the inspector general of Health and Human Services.

"NIH needs to do a better job," Assistant Inspector General Michael Hill told a congressional hearing today.

In fact, one employee is charged with tracking the $8 billion NIH annually awards to outside scientists and how many medical discoveries result, he said.

"One person is watchdogging this $8 billion program? Unbelievable," said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., chairman of the House Small Business regulation subcommittee who requested the probe.

When scientists receive patents even partially funded by tax dollars, they must report them to NIH. NIH then has certain rights: It can license the product to a competitor if it's priced too high; make sure companies don't sit on cheaper treatments; and make sure U.S.-funded developments are made available here, not just abroad.

Such steps can be effective: NIH's threat to step in when the AIDS drug AZT hit the market is credited with halving its price.

But Hill discovered one agency, California's Scripps Research Institute, that only reported 51 federally funded patents since 1979 — and NIH didn't catch on.

The institute was awarded at least 94 federally funded patents in that time.

It receives $70 million a year from NIH.

Health care plan can't fit everyone

The current flap over whether abortion should be included among the services offered by all health-care plans in the New Health Order demonstrates how politicized health-care decisions already are — and how much more politicized they will become if anything resembling the Clinton plan becomes law. Whatever one's position on abortion, this episode is a warning against further government involvement in health care.

The question of abortion has been lurking just beneath the surface of the health-care debate for months. The administration's draft proposal included "reproductive services" in the benefit package, and abortion advocates and opponents have been wondering aloud whether that means abortion on demand.

The House Ways and Means Committee clarified the issue recently by rejecting an amendment that would have struck abortion from the required benefits package except in the case of rape or incest, or where a mother's life was in danger. It also defeated a measure that would have allowed health-plan providers to decide whether they wanted to offer abortion services as part of their package.

To be sure, this is not the end of the matter. Other committees will get a crack at this and other health-care proposals before a final plan goes to the full House, and the Senate will undertake a parallel procedure. But the vote shows that advocates of ClintonCare envision a uniform package of medical services that includes elective abortion.

About two-thirds of private health-care plans now cover all pregnancy-related services, including abortion. The backers of the Clinton plan want the figure to be 100 percent. "If we fail," says California Sen. Barbara Boxer, "the impact on women will be swift and devastating." But that lust for uniformity is both ethically dubious and politically dangerous.

Backers of Clinton-style reform note that the plan addresses moral and religious views by allowing health-care facilities or professionals who have a moral objection to abortion not to perform or participate in them. But the plan forces those with moral objections to pay for abortions. Should people who believe abortion is murder be forced by government to pay for such procedures?

Most Americans understand the distinction. The Hyde Amendment, which restricts the use of tax money for abortions, is passed as a rider to appropriations bills every year by a Congress that is not inclined to challenge the idea that abortion has become a constitutional right.

We can expect more fireworks on this issue. But the most important lesson is that any attempt to create a uniform government standard for what health insurance covers will inevitably and repeatedly create political controversies, most of them devoid of reliable scientific or medical knowledge.

This is a diverse country containing people with a wide range of views on what constitutes appropriate and effective medical care. Why should we even want to think about imposing a one-size-fits-all federal strait-jacket on the field of health care?

Simpson and social stability

If you will permit me to speak for the common man, here is how/why he/she is troubled.

In an absolutely sane world, no one would doubt that on June 12, O.J. Simpson killed his ex-wife and her friend. The world would acknowledge that there are legal technicalities to be got by before sending Mr. Simpson away to jail or to the gas chamber. But it would be widely assumed that these are really only what the French call a "toilette des condamnés" — the ablutionary niceties that precede the guillotine.

The same public would acknowledge that every now and again something as apparently clear-cut as the O.J. Simpson case springs a truly incredible surprise.

— That was the night the UFO came down over Los Angeles and mangled two citizens.

— It was a pure coincidence that one of those victims had been married to O.J. Simpson, that O.J. Simpson had abused and threatened her and been castigated by the courts for doing so; pure coincidence that he was in the area; another coincidence that the blood found on the scene is of the same type as O.J.'s.

— If it transpires that there is DNA correspondence between hair or blood samples at the scene, and hair and blood samples taken from O.J., why don't we in fact concede that there is a chance, one in 1.25 million, that another person walking the streets (or flying in the UFO) might have the very same specimens?

Still, the public is perfectly prepared to condone the official trial. But suddenly there is a tremor of alarm out there. The television cameras train on fancy lawyers coming into town from all over the United States. What is the function of fancy lawyers? In such situations as murder, to transform it into something else.

Very recent experiences with legal alchemy flash through the public mind. The Menendez brothers were not found guilty by the jury. So that the public was instructed that if two men in their middle 20s aim shotguns and kill their mother and father, somehow, in the hands of the law, they did not actually commit murder. The people wonder whether, assembling in Los Angeles, there are technicians who are going to "prove" that O.J. did not "murder" his ex-wife and companion.

And at about the same time that the lawyers are foraging, O.J. goes on the most publicized drive/chase in history, viewed for several hours by 95 million Americans, courtesy of television cameras situated in helicopters. And lo! a substantial number of onlookers are cheering not the Christians, but the lions. Some people are sublimat-ing the car chase into the legendary football figure O.J., back in the glory days, running and weaving and side-slipping right through the ranks of the enemy, toward the magical goal posts!

There is something about the old spirit that overwhelms, and we are hearing shouts of "Go, Juice, Go!" And we are looking into the depraved face of that America that is utterly insensible to the beautiful young mother chopped to death, and her companion dead with 20 knife thrusts. And the public begins to wonder: Is there an operative animus still left in the United States against criminals? If some witch doctor can lucubrate a defense thesis sufficiently potent to hypnotize a few jurors, who can be got, after a numbing few weeks, to intone, War Is Peace, Freedom Is Slavery, Ignorance Is Strength?

This is, after all, a season in which it is everywhere documented that what the American people fear most is crime. Crime bills in gaudy dress rise and fall in the Congress. Less than 1 percent of the nation's murderers are sent to death. This is the country in which 16 years after he had mutilated his 33rd victim, one murderer finally gets executed and you sense the general feeling of fatigue over the corporate effort to bring him to justice. It is as though we had just dug a Chunnel from Chicago to Detroit.

Our disorientation has to do with the giddy despair that comes from losing the coordinates that provide for social stability. A philosophical anarchy sounds through the echo chambers of nihilism, chanting, Go, Juice, Go!

In our nation's Declaration of Independence, there is a significant declaration of "dependence" also.

Our text for today is taken from the next to last sentence in our nation's Declaration of Independence.

Understand, I am no preacher. The pulpit is a responsibility infinitely higher than any to which I would aspire. But I am a historian, and inevitably, our professions overlap.

Our nation's Fourth of July celebrations have tended to focus on the word "freedom." Yet even as our nation's founders offered their lives and fortunes to win for our fledgling nation "freedom" from British rule, in that same eloquent document, they sought the guidance and blessing of the Almighty.

They appealed, quote, "to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our institutions."

Our founders proclaimed themselves "free" to do whatever they might want? Hardly. They declared themselves free to do "what they ought."

mulate more than half of all the world's good things — collecting on God's written promise that "believing" on certain things and "behaving ourselves," all else would be added.

And so it was.

It was only in recent generations that Americans, mouthing platitudes about "freedom," have obscured the very meaning of America, and now, all over the bleak, black and bloody front page, it is apparent that self-government without self-discipline won't work.

You can say that another way — capitalism without God is no better than communism.

The Third Reich was a classic example of capitalism without God.

The land that had produced Bach, Beethoven and Brahms ... ended up producing Auschwitz, Dachau and Buchenwald.

Self-government without self-discipline won't work.

Today, once-free Americans have to be searched before they can board an airliner — not because there is a dictator in Washington — but because a handful of irresponsible ingrates are running around loose.

Because some who are free don't deserve to be — none of us can be.

They are taking away our Fourth of July fireworks and threaten to take away our guns because some misuse theirs.

Because some sickies hide razors in apples, whole states have had to outlaw Halloween.

Again, not because there is tyranny in government — but because there is anarchy in the unbuttoned brains of a handful.

And it's down that road of thumbing our noses at rightness and wrongness that whole nations go from regulation to regimentation to tyranny.

Self-government without self-discipline won't work.

Much more important than our nation's Declaration of Independence from foreign domination is our nation's declaration of dependence on divine providence and sacred honor.

Ignore the "guidance system" that was built into our republic, and we are, like any guided missile, inevitably destined to self-destruct.

Political 'danger' from the Christian right

Our ever-liberal media are making a big to-do just now about the alleged efforts of "the Christian right" to "take over" the Republican Party.

According to the media, it all goes back to that supposedly awful-awful Republican convention in Houston in 1992, when Pat Buchanan, Pat Robertson and their followers allegedly proclaimed their hatred of everyone unlike themselves and unleashed a jihad to capture the GOP.

Since then, avowedly Christian conservatives have indeed taken control of the party machinery in a few states (by the good old democratic process of being elected as its officials), and Ollie North won the Republican senatorial nomination in Virginia with the help of similar religious activists.

The liberal media want us to believe that these developments represent some new and deadly lesion in the political universe, and that they herald the crack-up of the Republican Party, which is allegedly torn between these fanatics and its more sensible "moderates."

A moment's thought, however, will convince anyone that there has to be more to the problem than that. Since when has it been a fixture of liberal policy that religious groups must stay out of politics?

I don't recall liberals objecting when Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and his Southern Christian Leadership Conference plunged deep into politics on behalf of civil rights for blacks. Nor did they condemn such vociferous opponents of the Vietnam

William A. Rusher

War as Rev. William Sloane Coffin and numerous Roman Catholic bishops and priests for straying from their ecclesiastical concerns.

Listen, however, a bit more closely to what the critics of the Christian right are saying. They will tell you that they don't mind "these people" holding whatever views they want to; they merely object to them "trying to impose their views on everybody else."

But are the Christian conservatives really so different from anyone else in this regard? The aforesaid Revs. King and Coffin certainly did their level (and frequently successful) best to impose their views on everybody else. So does the National Organization for Women, and the AFL-CIO, and People for the American Way, and the Friends of the Earth, and the Anti-Vivisection League, etc., etc., ad infinitum.

If you make that point, however, you will be told that the Christian right is somehow crazier, or more fanatical, than these other lobbying organizations. Now, while it is true that there are extremists in every movement (one leading environmentalist called the human race a "cancer" on the face of the planet), it is a flat lie to depict the average Christian conservative as some sort of nut, out to abolish abortion at all costs.

Ralph Reed, the executive director of the national Christian Coalition, has publicly urged his fellow Christian conservatives not to become Johnny-One-Note foes of abortion, but to broaden their concerns to other issues as well. And Sara de Vito Hardman, head of the Coalition's large California chapter, worked heart and soul for the election of Republican Richard Riordan as mayor of Los Angeles, even though he is "pro-choice."

No, there is more going on here than meets the eye. The fact is that America's elite thought that it had permanently banished religious believers and their views to the margins of political and social relevance. Instead, as Irving Kristol among others has pointed out, there is a long-term revival of religious concerns going on in this still highly religious country, and our politics must take this, like any other important development, into account.

No wonder our media elite (86 percent of whom, according to the famous Lichter-Rothman study of 1980, "seldom or never" attend a religious service) feel uneasy as the Christian right begins to stir. The Atheist Party just isn't winning many elections these days.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing in response to the letter from Dr. Findley complaining about individuals who did not address her as "Dr." since she had earned a Ph.D.

As a doctor with neither patients or patience with such fools, let me tell you about Margolis' first two laws of pedantry:

1. Anybody who has a Ph.D. or Ed.D. and writes "Doctor" before (or after) his or her name has a third-rate degree from a fifth-rate institution.

2. Anybody who is impressed by someone who has a Ph.D. or an Ed.D. and writes "Doctor" before (or after) his or her name has a fifth-rate degree from an eighth-rate institution.

JOEL MARGOLIS, ALBANY, N.Y.

DEAR JOEL: The High Priestess of Etiquette, Letitia Baldrige, says: "People with Ph.D.s who are in academia or in research laboratories, or involved professionally in the field in which they received their degrees, may be addressed as 'Dr.' and certainly written to with 'Ph.D.' after their names."

"However, many people today believe that Ph.D.s look slightly pretentious if they insist on being called 'Dr.' outside their technological or teaching environments."

"Pretentious or not, it is a matter of choice."

READERS: For some "doctor" letters that were informative or tickled my funny bone, read on:

DEAR ABBY: You mentioned a very embarrassed doctor of English literature who begged off administering first aid treatment to an airline passenger who had suffered a heart attack in flight.

In the early years of modern medicine, the only medical treatment available was administered by barbers. In order to disassociate themselves from the quacks in their profession, the ethical medical-barbers associated themselves with the doctors of philosophy at universities, and adopted the title "Doctor."

Nowadays, a physician who graduates with an M.D. degree and also has good grades may be allowed to study for a Ph.D.

ARIZONA PH.D. SCIENTIST

DEAR ABBY: Your article concerning Dr. Findley, Ph.D., who wished to be addressed as "Doctor," reminded me of a local university professor who was a Ph.D. He delighted in telling this story of himself:

Because he was listed in the telephone directory as "Dr.," he frequently received calls at home for medical assistance. One day, his young son answered the telephone, and the professor heard him say, "Sorry, my dad is the kind of doctor who doesn't do anybody any good."

JACK COLE, M.D., BETHLEHEM, PA.

DEAR ABBY: The letter in your column about the mix-up that sometimes occurs when Ph.D.s are confused with M.D.s brought to mind the great Canadian scholar and humorist Stephen Leacock.

He tells of an experience similar to that of your Ph.D. on the airplane: Soon after achieving his doctorate (Ph.D.), he was a passenger on a cruise ship on the Great Lakes. An attractive young lady had fallen down the stairs to the deck, and the purser was calling out for a doctor to attend her. Leacock battled with his conscience for a minute or so, then decided to volunteer and ran to the scene, but was beaten out by a doctor of the divinity (D.D.).

No longer is it to trade only

Falling in love with a piece of furniture or an accessory advertised in one of the glossy decorating magazines is easy. The hard part comes with the small print: "Available through designers."

But increasingly, design showrooms across the country are finding ways to accommodate the shopper who doesn't want to hire a decorator just to help buy furniture.

"Almost every design center in the country, and there are more than 20 of them, is offering some kind of controlled consumer access," says John Vogel, marketing director for the New York Design Center.

Pat Linden of New York, publisher of I.D. Confidential, a monthly trade newsletter, counts among centers with some public access as those in Boston; Dallas; Houston; Los Angeles; New York; Seattle; Dania, Fla.; and Troy, Mich.

This open-door policy comes after years of denying public access to the inner sanctum of high-end home furnishings.

"As designer business dropped in the late 1980s, the design buildings had to do something to bring in customers," Linden says. "Many showrooms that used to be to-the-trade-only are making it easier for the public to come in, either by admitting them without a decorator or by giving them a list of decorators through whom they can buy. Some buildings also hold open house days and designer clinics, and some even run floor sample sales."

Since early this year, the New York Design Center has offered an escort and buying service run by a local chapter of the American Society of Interior Designers.

The ASID Service Bureau provides a variety of services, from walking someone who comes in off the street through the desired showrooms to helping the consumer identify a source for a particular item and handling a purchase.

"If someone has always wanted to see Baker, the designer will take them to Baker," says Michael Love, ASID member and coordinator of the Service Bureau. "But this is not merely an escort service. We give them the benefit of every bit of knowledge that we have as designers, and of our knowledge of the product that is in the building."

If furniture is purchased, the consumer's cost is the ticketed price, minus 20 percent. For fabrics and floor coverings, the cost is list price minus 10 percent. Some decorators buy the furniture for a client at discount and sell it for list price as payment for their services. Others set their fees in other ways.

The ASID Service Bureau is staffed with a professional designer from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Tuesday through Friday. Walk-ins are possible, but it is best to call ahead. Visitors have been averaging four or five a day.

ASID does not offer the service at New York's D&D (Decoration & Design) Building, with 110 showrooms. The D&D's official policy is to exclude shoppers not accompanied by a designer. Some showrooms, however, keep a designer referral list and allow visitors to walk through. In addition, there are occasional events open to the public.

The Interior Design Center of New York, across the East River in Long Island City, has about 50 showrooms and is open to the public.

"It is up to the individual showrooms to set their own sales policy," says Joanne Markowitz, vice president of marketing and communications at IDCNY.

In March, the Decorative Arts Center, another New York City resource, bent its rules and allowed American Express platinum card holders to visit the building's 16 showrooms and buy. A portion of every purchase was contributed to the Cooper Hewitt Museum.

"Generally speaking, someone without a decorator would be able to come in and look around," says Barbara Fagan, general manager of the building. She says each showroom has its stable of decorators "so it's easy to refer someone."

At the Architects & Designers Building, also in New York, shoppers are encouraged to visit 3 1/2 floors of showrooms devoted to kitchen and bath products, residential fabrics and accessories. Contract furnishings firms on other floors also are accessible.

"We are user friendly," says Liz Bruder, marketing and communications director of A&D. "We tend to do events to attract the general public as well as the architectural and design community, including showroom sales."

Love says admitting shoppers to the showrooms makes perfect sense.

"The public buys a great deal more furniture than designers," she says, "and vendors cannot afford to turn them away."

Girlstown gets visit from Miss Teen USA

Miss Teen USA, Charlotte Lopez, will visit the youths of Girlstown, U.S.A. during festivities at the Whiteface campus on Saturday.

Miss Lopez's appearance will occur during the annual reunion of the Girlstown Alumnae Association, a gathering of women who once lived at Girlstown and who continue efforts to benefit residents there today. Recognized as the first foster care teen to ever win the Miss Teen USA competition, Lopez's visit is expected to be very inspirational for the young ladies of Girlstown and returning alumnae.

Girlstown, USA, located 45 miles west of Lubbock near Whiteface, is presently home for up to 75 girls, primarily teenagers. Many of the girls come from broken home situations, in need of guidance, social development and a chance to earn a high school diploma. In 1987, Girlstown became an affiliate of Cal Farley's Boys Ranch, headquartered in Amarillo.

During Lopez's visit to Girlstown, youths will enjoy her encouraging remarks, telling about growing up in the foster care system. Her presentation is scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, July 16. Those attending the event may also tour the Girlstown campus beginning at 11 a.m.

Members and friends of the Girlstown Alumnae Association are encouraged to contact the Whiteface campus to make reservations. Along with activities Friday evening, other reunion events continue on Saturday beginning with registration at 9 a.m.

Girlstown officials welcome the general public's attendance of the presentations by Lopez. Everyone wishing to attend, however, is asked to contact Girlstown, USA, P.O. Box 135, Whiteface, Texas 79379. Additional information is also available by calling (806) 229-6361.

Gathering for a day of fellowship and activities will be many women who share a common bond as former residents of Girlstown. Since the Alumnae association was formed in 1988, members have returned to recall the home and family they enjoyed as children. Some alumnae return with families of their own and as successful homemakers and businesswomen.

President of the Girlstown Alumnae Association is Melissa Jenkins, a legal assistant in Lubbock.

In the AL, there was agreement on seven of the eight starters, with the managers selecting Cleveland outfielder Albert Belle over the fans' choice of Toronto's Joe Carter. Nine AL and 11 NL manager took part in the poll.

St. Louis first baseman Gregg Jefferies wasn't named by a single manager and Atlanta outfielder David Justice and St. Louis shortstop Ozzie Smith were mentioned only once. Philadelphia outfielder Lenny Dykstra was picked just twice and Phillies second baseman Mariano Duncan three times.

After wild weekend, World Cup enters final stage

By FRED LIEF
AP Sports Writer

Swedish and Bulgarian are languages in demand at the World Cup. German is out, the country's hopes for a second straight title left like a wreck on the autobahn.

Italy's Roberto Baggio is hailed as a Michelangelo of soccer. And even in the Brazil the critics have come around, convinced their team knows a thing or two about this game.

The World Cup began more than three weeks ago with 24 teams and is now down to a precious four.

The last semifinals were put in place Sunday, with two of the tournament's most riveting games.

Bulgaria, ordinarily noted more for its weightlifters than soccer players, beat Germany 2-1 in East Rutherford, N.J., in one of the great upsets in World Cup history.

Sweden's victory carried more of a theatrical than historical wallop. The Swedes defeated Romania 5-4 in penalty kicks after regulation and overtime ended 2-2 in Stamford, Calif.

Swedish goalkeeper Thomas Ravelli made the final save, with the penalty kicks having gone to sudden-death. The exhausted Romanian players lay flat on their backs, covering their faces. Some left the field in tears.

"This was a heart attack match," Romania coach Anghel Iordanescu said.

On Wednesday, Bulgaria will play Italy at Giants Stadium and Brazil will face Sweden in the Rose Bowl at Pasadena, Calif.

Sweden and Brazil drew 1-1 in the first round, prompting the first rematch in a World Cup.

since 1982. Sweden's best World Cup finish was in 1958, when it was runner-up to Brazil.

Italy and Brazil, both three-time champions, won semifinal spots Saturday, although neither had an easy time. Italy downed Spain 2-1 in Foxboro, Mass., and Brazil edged the Netherlands 3-2 in Dallas.

The Italians were saved again by Baggio, deemed a saint in some quarters in Italy. With the score 1-1 and less than three minutes left, he took a looping pass from Giuseppe Signori, dribbled past the charging goalkeeper and curled a shot into the net.

Coach Arrigo Sacchi, now regarded back home as more genius than buffoon, hopes his weary team can summon its strength for Bulgaria.

"Roberto was so exhausted he could not even raise his arms in triumph," he said.

The Brazilians played plodding soccer in a scoreless first half before Romario and Bebeto scored in a dazzling sequence 10 minutes apart. The Dutch responded behind goals from Dennis Bergkamp and Aron Winter.

That left matters to Branco, the substitute defender who replaced the suspended Leonardo. His 28-yard free kick in the 81st minute was right on the money.

"It was a put-up or shut-up goal," Branco said.

The Germans did not meet their moment of truth so convincingly. They are three-time champions and have played in the last three World Cup title games. But Sunday they were caught by Bulgaria, which until this tournament had never won a game in five trips to the World Cup.

"I think the world will realize that we have some very classy soccer players in Bulgaria," Bulgarian star Hristo Stoichkov said.

Germany went up 1-0 in the 49th minute on a penalty kick by Lothar Matthaeus.

"I was not scared," Bulgaria coach Dimitar Penev said. "Nor were the Bulgarian players."

In the 76th minute, Stoichkov's free kick from 25 yards nearly brushed the scalps of the jumping players on the seven-man wall. So precise was the left-footed shot that goalkeeper Bodo Illgner didn't even attempt a save.

Three minutes later, Bulgaria's Jordan Letchkov scored on a diving header from inside the box.

It was not long before the Bulgarian locker room was taking calls from the country's president and prime minister, and German coach Berti Vogts was trying to explain a champion's fall.

"We, in Germany, have to start acknowledging the performances of other teams," Vogts said. "Other nations have caught up and we have to search for new ways."

The Swedes and Romanians played soccer's version of Russian roulette. Each team made four penalty kicks in the shootout, forcing sudden-death. After Henrik Larsson put Sweden up 5-4, Ravelli guessed correctly on his dive and made a one-handed stop on a shot by Miodrag Belodedici.

"I wasn't nervous," said Ravelli, the most experienced goalkeeper in the World Cup. "I had everything to win and nothing to lose."

"What can I say?" Belodedici said. "My teammates are not blaming me for the miss, but I know how they feel. I feel even worse. But this is soccer."

The game was scoreless until 11 minutes remained in regulation. Tomas Brodin of Sweden struck from the edge of the penalty area before Florin Raducioiu rescued Romania in the 89th minute, scoring after a deflected free kick.

Raducioiu delivered again, scoring in the 101st minute after a botched clearance. The Swedes, playing a man down, were not through. They tied it in the 114th minute on Kennet Andersson's header, and the shootout was on.

"Maybe this was our fate," Iordanescu said. "We could have been the winner, too. But soccer has no mercy."

Baseball ready to party in steel city But is All-Star game year's last dance?

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Baseball's big names — Griffey Jr., Thomas, Bonds, Bagwell — are ready to party in Pittsburgh.

As baseball interrupts one of its best seasons in years for its annual mid-July respite, a troubling, persistent question hovers over this 65th All-Star game: Is this a farewell party?

For the first time since a titanic homer by 39-year-old Babe Ruth inaugurated the first midsummer classic in 1933, the specter of a season-ending strike hangs over the All-Star game like a badly thrown slider.

The All-Star game usually is a time to look back on past games — Pete Rose's head-on collision with Ray Fosse in 1970 and Reggie Jackson's monster homer in '71.

The three-day All-Star break also is traditionally a time to look ahead, to the second half of the season when division titles and MVP awards will be won and lost.

But when the executive board of the Major League Baseball Players Association meets today, it won't be to divvy up licensing money. A strike date may not be set, but the mechanism for a season-stopping shutdown surely will be put into motion.

"I don't see how there won't be a strike," the Pirates' Andy Van Slyke said. "The owners want a salary cap, and there will be peace in the Middle East before the players accept a salary cap. And there hasn't been peace in the Middle East in 2,000 years."

There have been seven prior work stoppages in baseball, four of them strikes, but only one (1985) was after the All-Star game, and it was settled with little rancor in two days. This almost-certain strike — with the players unwilling to give up their past negotiating successes, the owners refusing to accept anything less than a radical reshaping of baseball's finances — promises to be much longer. Aug. 15 and Sept. 1 are the potential strike dates most mentioned.

Maybe this All-Star game shouldn't be billed as the American League vs. the National League but the Players vs. the Owners, Donald Fehr vs. Richard Ravitch.

It's ironically appropriate that a game with such a tradition-filled past will be played in a city that may not have a baseball future. The Pirates, a major-league franchise for 107 years, contend a salary cap and revenue sharing are essential for their very survival.

"We're trying to save baseball in Pittsburgh ... that's why these labor negotiations are so important," Pirates president Mark Sauer said.

Still, for all of the talk this isn't a baseball town, Pittsburgh is the first city to sell out both today's All-Star workout, featuring an old-timers game and home run hitters contests, and the All-Star game well in advance.

Scalpers were getting $75 for workout day seats that sold for $10, and $500 or more for choice All-Star boxes that sold for $65.

The last time the All-Star game dropped by cavernous, conventional Three Rivers Stadium in 1974, there were 10,000 unsold seats a month before the game and the workout day was a private affair, with only the media attending.

Then, the National League was all powerful, and was in the midst of winning 19 of 20 All-Star games. Now, the American League has most of the stars — Ken Griffey Jr., Frank Thomas, Cal Ripken, Kenny Lofton, Albert Belle, Kirby Puckett — and, not surprisingly, a six-game winning streak.

Of the 11 homers hit in the last six All-Star games, all but three were by the AL's young bashers. So if it's the All-Star game, how come the AL has all the stars?

"The guys are powerhouses over there, and they're tearing us up," the Giants' Barry Bonds said after the AL's 9-3 win on a 99-degree night in Baltimore last summer.

The AL is so loaded that Jose Canseco and Julio Franco, who would rank near the top of the NL in RBIs, didn't even make the AL team because of the rule that every franchise must be represented.

Jeff Bagwell of the Houston Astros is having a monster year and is threatening to win the NL triple crown, yet none of his numbers (.352, 26 homers, 77 RBIs) would lead the AL.

"I don't put myself into the category of a Ken Griffey Jr. or a Frank Thomas," he said. "I'm just Jeff Bagwell, and I'm having a good first half. There's still a long way to go."

Perhaps not for this All-Star of a season, much to the disappointment of fans eagerly watching the Cleveland Indians' first legitimate pennant race in four decades, and the possible pursuit of Roger Maris' magical 61-homers record.

"I don't think a strike is inevitable," said the Pirates' Jay Bell, the NL player representative. "There's plenty of time for both sides to come together and work something out."

Late homer downs Rangers again

DETROIT (AP) — This was a game that mirrored the season for both teams. Both headed into the All-Star break feeling they can do better in the second half of the season. But they're not certain they will.

It was another game where the Tigers got little pitching, but pulled out a victory with a home run. For the Texas Rangers, it was another wasted opportunity.

The bottom line was that Tony Phillips tagged Tom Henke for a three-run homer with two outs in the ninth inning Sunday, rallying the Tigers past the Rangers 6-5. It was the final game between the two teams this season.

The record will show that Texas leads the AL West at the All-Star break, despite a 42-45 record. The Rangers are the only club in major league history to own a division lead after July 4, despite being under .500.

Yet things are even worse for Detroit. Last year at the All-Star break, the Tigers were 48-40 and in second place in the AL East, one-half game out of first. This year, they are 40-47 and could slip into last place in a heartbeat.

By rights, Texas should be miles in front of the rest of the pack by now. But the late-inning homer, which beat them Sunday, has plagued the Rangers all season. The Texas bullpen leads the major leagues with 18 blown saves, five by Henke.

"It kind of epitomizes the first half for us, doesn't it," Rangers' manager Kevin Kennedy said. "I think we've had something like 15 game-winning homers hit against us in either the eighth or ninth inning."

Henke (2-4), the fourth Texas pitcher, started the ninth and gave up a one-out single to Junior Felix and a two-out walk to Chad Kreuter, who was replaced by pinch-runner Juan Samuel.

Henke got ahead in the count 0-2 on Phillips, who was fooled badly by an off-speed pitch for the second strike before hitting Henke's next offering into the upper deck in right for his 14th homer.

"It was a pretty good pitch, really," Henke said. "It was down. He just got down there and golfed it. You have to give Tony Phillips some credit. It was a pretty good piece of hitting, really."

Phillips conceded the pitch was probably a mistake on Henke's part. He figured Henke, that far ahead in the count, would probably bounce a split-finger pitch up to the plate.

"I was just trying to make contact, with two strikes on me," Phillips said. "The pitch I hit was a good pitch. It was down. I didn't think it was going out when I hit it. But the wind was blowing that way."

Joe Boever (7-2) pitched a hitless 2-1-3 innings in relief of starter David Wells for the win.

"This game won't affect the outcome of the season one single bit," Detroit manager Sparky Anderson said. "But, for the next three days, everybody will have a nice taste in his mouth. You can always go home and hold out hope."

El Paso edges Shreveport in Texas League play

By The Associated Press

Scott Karl allowed only six hits in pitching the El Paso Diablos to a 2-1 Texas League victory over the Shreveport Captains.

In other league games Sunday, Arkansas edged Wichita 2-1, Jackson blanked San Antonio 1-0 and Tulsa and Midland split a doubleheader. Tulsa won the first game 5-2 and Midland took the nightcap 6-2.

Karl struck out 11 and walked three in his complete game performance after learning he was being promoted to New Orleans, the AAA farm team of the Milwaukee Brewers. Karl was 5-1.

The Diablos took an early 2-0 lead in the second inning off losing pitcher Doug Vanderweele (4-4).

Tim Florez had a solo homer for Shreveport.

Tom Nevers doubled home the winning run in the eighth inning to give the Jackson Generals a 1-0 victory over the San Antonio Missions.

Chris Holt pitched eight scoreless innings to pick up the victory. He is now 5-7 and struck out six, allowing just four hits and no walks.

Nevers' double scored Fletcher Thompson, who had walked and advanced to second on a sacrifice bunt by Buck McNabb.

Chris Hill picked up his first save. The losing pitcher was Antonio Osuna (0-1).

Joe Aversa came home on a bases-loaded walk in the ninth inning to give the Arkansas Travelers a 2-1 victory over the Wichita Wranglers.

Dmitri Young sacrificed home Terry Bradshaw for the other Arkansas run.

Wichita's only run came in the third inning when Homer Busch singled home Randy Curtis.

The winning pitcher Frankie Martinez (5-3). Cam Cairncross (1-1) was the loser.

Mike Edwards and Andy Mota each slugged two-run homers to lead the Tulsa Drillers to a 5-2 victory over the Midland Angels in the first game of a doubleheader.

Edwards homered in the fourth inning after Rob Nelson doubled.

Mota homered after David Rolis had doubled.

The winning pitcher was Julio Santana (2-0).

In the second game, Midland scored four times in the fifth inning of a 6-2 victory over the Drillers.

The winning pitcher was Omar Bencomo. David Holdridge picked up his first save of the season.

Braves slip into second, Astros gain on Reds

By TOM WITHERS
Associated Press Writer

After opening the season 13-1, the Atlanta Braves looked like runaway winners in the NL East. Now look who's in second place.

Atlanta is looking up in the standings for the first time since Sept. 9 of last season. The Montreal Expos finally caught the Braves after nipping at their heels for the past month.

Montreal, which trailed Atlanta by 8 1/2 games before the season was even a month old, won their fourth straight game Sunday, an 8-2 victory over the San Diego Padres.

Wil Cordero, named to replace Cincinnati's Barry Larkin on the NL's All-Star team before the game, hit his first career grand slam as the Expos completed a four-game sweep of the Padres.

"Things have really come together for this team," Cordero said. "Things have come together for me. I mean, making the All-Star team is just unbelievable. This is something you dream for."

The Expos, who outscored the Padres 34-3 in the series, have been a nightmare for the Padres.

Sunday's win was Montreal's ninth straight over San Diego, and the Expos' 19th in 21 games with the Padres.

"We could have been playing anybody the way we were playing," Montreal manager Felipe Alou said. "The kind of pressure we put on them in these four games, not too many people can outs for his first save as the Pirates snapped a four-game losing streak with their first win at Riverfront Stadium since July 2, 1993.

Trailing 6-0, Brian Hunter hit his second career grand slam in the sixth before the Pirates tied it with two in the eighth.

Mets 5, Dodgers 1
At Los Angeles, Bobby Bonilla, Rico Brogna and Joe Orsulak home: d to back eight solid innings by Bret Saberhagen.

Saberhagen (10-4) ran his career record against the Dodgers to 5-0 with his third straight win.

Pedro Astacio (6-6) gave up just two hits in seven innings, striking out 10. He absorbed his first loss since June 1 in Atlanta.

Jeff Kent was hit by Astacio with one out in the second and Brogna, a rookie, homered for the fifth time in 10 games.

Astros 5, Cubs 3
At Chicago, Orlando Miller, playing his third major-league game, hit two home runs completely out of Wrigley Field.

Jeff Bagwell drove in his NL-leading 82nd run and Pete Harnisch (5-4) got his third straight victory for Houston, which enters the All-Star break 2 1/2 games behind Cincinnati in the Central Division.

Miller, called up from Class AAA Tucson on Wednesday, hit his first homer in the fourth, giving the Astros a 3-0 lead. In the eighth, Miller homered again, making it 5-1.

Kevin Foster (2-3) took the loss, giving up six hits and four walks in six innings.

Giants 2, Phillies 1
At San Francisco, pinch-hitter Jeff Reed's single in the 10th scored Dave Martinez to give the Giants a four-game sweep of Philadelphia.

Reed's two-out single off Doug Jones (2-3) drove in Martinez, who led off with a single and moved to second on Royce Clayton's sacrifice. Dave Burba (1-5) pitched 1 2-3 innings for the victory.

Phillies starter Bobby Munoz took a three-hit shutout into the ninth before Darren Lewis led off with his fourth homer.

The Phillies have lost six straight games, their longest streak this season.

Marlins 6, Rockies 4
At Miami, pinch hitter Mario Diaz hit a bases-loaded triple and the Marlins rallied from a four-run deficit for their third straight win.

Bret Barberie doubled, homered and scored twice for the Marlins. They improved to 7-2 against Colorado, clinching the season series in the matchup of second-year teams.

Luis Aquino (2-1) pitched one scoreless inning, and Robb Nen got the last two outs for his 10th in 10 tries.

Florida trailed 4-2 when Barberie led off the sixth inning with a double against Mike Harkey (1-5). Kurt Abbott singled and Bob Natal walked to load the bases. Diaz then tripled on a 3-2 pitch to clear the bases.

Indians look to hold lead in AL Central

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

The Cleveland Indians will not use the All-Star break to celebrate their shock occupancy of first place in the American League Central.

They will be thinking about staying in the race in the second half — a rarity on the shores of Lake Erie, where nary a championship flag has flown in 40 seasons — and the Chicago White Sox.

"We recognize that we haven't played well against them," pitcher Jack Morris said Sunday after the Indians retained a lead of two percentage points over the White Sox. "We're going to have to turn it around."

Thanks to the schedule — or perhaps curses to it — the teams will decide the upper hand immediately after the break. Chicago, holding a 3-1 advantage, will meet Cleveland eight times in the first 11 days back to complete their season series.

For the Indians, it's been more than the offensive thrust of All-Stars Albert Belle and Kenny Lofton. Morris, a questionable free agent signee who has won eight games, and Mark Clark have joined Dennis Martinez and Charles Nagy to give Cleveland a solid starting rotation.

On Sunday, Clark — with Morris warming up in case — braved a sore neck to pitch eight strong innings as the Indians beat the Minnesota Twins 9-1.

"I woke up (Saturday) and my neck was stiff. Later in the day, I couldn't turn my neck," said Clark (10-3), who allowed six hits, walked none and struck out four. "I couldn't even play catch."

"I still felt stiff today. But once the game started, I think the adrenaline kicked in."

"I was hitting my spots. I had the best split-finger I've had all year. All my pitches — sinker, fastball, in changeup — I had them all going ... my best stuff all season."

Elsewhere, it was Chicago 7, Milwaukee 2; Boston 9, Seattle 2; Toronto 7, Kansas City 3; Detroit 6, Texas 5; California 9, New York 6; and Oakland 5, Baltimore 4.

While Clark held the Twins at bay, Lofton was busy proving why he is an All-Star. He had a homer among four hits and drove in four runs.

Lofton homered off Scott Erickson (8-7) in the first inning; his 10th after hitting only six in each of his first two big-league seasons.

"Home runs just happen," said Lofton, who is batting .378. "I have the power, but I don't go for them."

Lofton also singled in a second-inning run and doubled home two in the eighth. He has 43 RBIs, breaking his previous best of 42.

Carlos Baerga, Jim Thome and Sandy Alomar Jr. also homered for the Indians, in first place at the break for the first time since 1959. Cleveland (51-33) has its best record at the break since 1954, when it was 56-27 and went on to win its most recent pennant.

White Sox 7, Brewers 2
Jack McDowell won his fifth straight game, and Lance Johnson had three RBIs and stole home as visiting Chicago won its sixth straight game.

McDowell (7-7), last year's AL Cy Young Award winner, scattered 10 hits, walked one and struck out five in eight innings. Bill Wegman (6-2) allowed five runs in 5 2-3 innings as Milwaukee lost its fourth straight game.

The White Sox, winners in 18 of their last 22 games, took the season series 9-3.

Johnson hit a sacrifice fly in the second inning for the game's first run. Darrin Jackson's RBI single in the sixth made it 2-0. Johnson followed with a two-run triple down the first base line for a 4-0 lead, then stole home.

Athletics 4, Orioles 3
Mark McGwire hit a two-run homer off Lee Smith in the ninth inning as Oakland won at Baltimore. The Orioles were three outs away from taking over first place in the AL East when McGwire hit an 0-2 pitch over the center field wall.

A victory would have pushed the Orioles past the first-place Yankees. Instead, Baltimore enters the break a half-game down.

Smith (1-2) has four blown saves in 33 chances.

Ron Darling (8-9) allowed four runs and six hits in eight innings. It was his first victory over Baltimore, the only AL team he had never beaten.

Red Sox 9, Mariners 2
Rich Rowland had a homer among three hits and two RBIs as Boston — worst in the American League in batting — came alive with 13 hits.

Joe Hesketh (5-5) allowed five hits in seven innings. Both runs came on a homer by Marc Newfield.

Small names, big action help make Olympic festival successful

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The 13th U.S. Olympic Festival wasn't loaded with big-name athletes, and didn't need to be.

Festival organizers said they would wind up in the black when all the bills are paid, and the event that culminated a 10-day run Sunday drew strong praise from U.S. Olympic Committee officials.

"It will probably be tabbed as the greatest festival we've ever had," said Leroy Walker, president of the USOC. "This has been outstanding."

The biggest name on any roster was that of Olympian Jackie Joyner-Kersey, who grew up in nearby East St. Louis, Ill. She returned to run the 100-meter hurdles, do an exhibition in the high jump and run a leg on a relay team.

Joyner-Kersey was one of about 100 Olympians who attended the Festival. Hers was perhaps the only name that would jump out to the average sports fan, but it didn't seem to matter.

Through Saturday night, there had been $2,729,000 worth of tickets sold, said Mike Dyer, president of the local organizing committee. That places St. Louis fourth on the Festival list, behind Minneapolis-St. Paul ($3.4 million) and North Carolina and Oklahoma City ($3 million each).

Dyer and others associated with this Festival were quick to point out that tickets to opening ceremonies here were free, while at those other three Festivals they were not.

"We've surpassed all ticket sales for the events themselves," Dyer said. "Everything came together for the last 10 days. I couldn't be more proud for our staff. I'm going to let the other people talk about it being the greatest ever."

This Festival had its share of highlights:

- Joyner-Kersey, performing on the new track at Southern Illinois-Edwardsville, set a Festival record in the hurdles with a time of 12.69 seconds.
- Basketball player Ray Allen of Connecticut set a Festival scoring record with 101 points in four games, breaking the mark of 98 set by Shaquille O'Neal in 1990.
- Tara Lipinski, a 12-year-old, 66-pound figure skater from Sugar Land, Texas, won the ladies' championship.
- The brother-sister team of Tony and Julie Goskowicz of New Berlin, Wis., won a combined eight gold medals in short-track speed skating.
- Shane Swartz and Fernando Vargas, the only U.S. champions in the boxing competition, each won gold medals.

Shuttle crew happy with progress of experiments

By MIKE DRAGO
Associated Press Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Some of the youngest passengers aboard space shuttle Columbia - more than 140 embryonic newts - are growing by leaps and bounds since their launch into orbit last week.

The eggs of Japanese red-bellied newts are part of the creepy, crawly cargo filling Columbia during its two-week laboratory mission.

Researchers expect the flight to reveal secrets about how the newts, along with two kinds of fish, sea urchins, fruit flies, plants and millions of cells, rely on gravity for development and how they behave in weightlessness.

The embryos appeared to be doing well when astronaut Donald Thomas checked on them early today. Video images beamed from orbit showed the tiny creatures already sprouting tails within the translucent eggs.

"There's really good gill development on a few of them," Thomas said. "The other ones are just in the late tail bud stage."

Scientists handpicked 144 fertilized newt eggs to send into space. Four female adult newts also riding aboard Columbia have increased that count by 15 since Friday's launch, NASA said today.

The adults, dubbed "astronewts" by Thomas, were injected with hormones before the flight to induce egg-laying. In the video images, two adult newts were seen squirming around a small aquarium tank.

Japanese researchers in charge of the newt studies expect most of the eggs to hatch before the shuttle and its crew of seven return to Earth on July 22.

Miss Amarillo Area crowned Miss Texas

FORT WORTH (AP) — Arián Archer, Miss Amarillo Area, won the 1994 Miss Texas crown at the scholarship pageant Saturday at the Fort Worth-Tarrant County Convention Center.

Ms. Archer, a 20-year-old Texas Tech University student who sang "Some Enchanted Evening," won a $10,000 college scholarship and a chance to represent the Lone Star State during the Miss America Pageant. That contest will be Sept. 17 in Atlantic City, N.J.

It was Ms. Archer's second attempt at the title.

"I worked very hard for this," said Archer, who was selected over 63 other contestants. "I'm breathless and tearful. I honestly didn't think I'd make the top 10."

A crowd of about 2,900 was on hand as Archer, a graduate of Borger High School, captured the title at the 59th annual Miss Texas Scholarship Pageant. She also attended Lubbock Christian University. Her platform is child abuse and gang-affiliation prevention.

Anna Villalobos, Miss Oak Cliff, was named first runner-up and awarded an $8,000 college scholarship. Ms.

Villalobos is a 21-year-old student at the University of Texas at Dallas.

Miss Dallas, Julie Tisdale, won a $6,000 scholarship for her showing as second runner-up.

Rounding out the top five were Shannon Sheppard, Miss Haltom-Richland Area, and Miss Metrocrest, Reagan Hughes. They won scholarships of $4,000 and $2,000, respectively.

In choosing Miss Texas, the judges evaluate the contestants' overall performance and level of proficiency as well as the individual talent selection. Also considered are poise, perseverance and discipline demonstrated in each contestant's chosen talent.

This year, contestants competed in the newly named "physical fitness in swimsuit" category.

The 64 contestants competed in three nights of preliminary events before a panel of seven out-of-state judges. The 10 contestants in Saturday's finals were selected based on their scores in the preliminary events.

Archer takes the crown from Miss Texas 1993, BaShara Chandler of Garland.

Search continues for two kids swept away in Oklahoma flood

DAVIS, Okla. (AP) — The mother of two young children swept away in a car caught by rising storm waters at Turner's Falls says the recovery of the empty vehicle has given her hope.

"I was convinced they were in the car, that they had been trapped in the car. But they apparently weren't," Stacy Caldwell said Sunday. "I believe if they were dead, that they would have already been found with so many people looking for them. I can only believe that they (the kids) are on the move" trying to find help.

By late Sunday, Davis Fire Chief Norman Shiplett said, hundreds of rescuers from surrounding communities, "everybody you can imagine within 50 miles of here," had combed the area as they looked for 4-year-old Amanda and 3-year-old Casey Caldwell.

Officials at the scene thought they got a break when they finally found the car that was last seen floating down Honey Creek early Saturday with the missing children in it. But those hopes were dashed when it was learned the vehicle was empty.

"We did a walk-through search," Shiplett said. "On the first pass through we were unable to locate anything."

However, the next sweep led authorities to the car, resting about 5 feet under water.

"We were able to pull it out, but the children were not there," Shiplett said.

The children were with their parents as the Ada couple was trying to cross a bridge over Honey Creek when their car was pulled into the water about 3 a.m. Saturday.

"It was completely crushed," Mrs. Caldwell said after the car was recovered. "It looked like it had been run over by a monster truck. The roof was smashed in. The water pulled the tires right off the rims. It's incredible."

Sunday's search was called off about 10 p.m. and was to resume early this morning.

"Everyone is very helpful," Mrs. Caldwell said. "We even had one lady from Washington state who was visiting here, drove up to the park's ticket office and told them 'I want to help.' Everybody is really knocking themselves out trying to find our children."

On Sunday, divers probed the muddied bottom of the creek as helicopters circled above hoping to get a glimpse of the children. Shiplett said a canine unit also had been brought up from Dallas to assist in the efforts.

The rescue effort continued under a flash flood watch and the threat of more rain in the area.

Mrs. Caldwell, 25, said the family's visit to the park was its first camping trip. Her husband, Keith, 27, was taking a two-week vacation and they were enjoying his weekend off work at the Solocup plant in Ada.

"We bought brand new camping supplies," she said. "It was very exciting."

Former state senator says pot isn't his

EL PASO (AP) — Two days after sheriff's deputies are alleged to have found a bag of marijuana in his briefcase, former state Sen. Tati Santiesteban said Sunday he doesn't know its origin.

"I don't know how it got there, and it definitely was not mine," Santiesteban told the El Paso Times. Santiesteban declined further comment on the incident, which came after deputies allegedly found about 2 ounces of marijuana in the briefcase as he tried to visit an inmate in the jail. Officials said they believe Santiesteban, a lawyer, was at the jail to visit a client.

Santiesteban, 59, was arrested Friday and was released after posting a $1,500 bond. He was charged with having a prohibited substance in a correctional facility, a third-degree felony.

If convicted, Santiesteban could face up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Parts of Georgia brace for record flooding

By DAN SEWELL
Associated Press Writer

BAINBRIDGE, Ga. (AP) — A devastating flood that already has killed 28 people surged toward Georgia's southwest corner today, threatening a fertilizer plant loaded with toxic chemicals and forcing nearly a third of the city's residents from their homes.

"I never thought Bainbridge would look like this," said Shareen Davis, 16, among dozens of residents who watched brown water bury a riverside park Sunday evening. "I've seen this on TV, but always somewhere else."

Two bodies were discovered Sunday, both in Americus, about 95 miles to the north: A man whose tractor-trailer was washed off a road and a 3-year-old boy who was in a car with his mother that was swept into a creek. The mother's body was found Saturday.

The flood also soaked at least 400,000 acres of rich cropland, stunting peanut plants and leaving peaches to turn white with mold and rot on trees because pickers and trucks can't get to them.

The Flint River swelled from 25 feet Friday to an estimated 35 feet today, and was expected to crest Wednesday at 45 feet. That would be 20 feet above flood stage, and nearly 5 feet higher than the record set in the 1925 flood.

Riverside homes just outside the city that bills itself as "Georgia's First Inland Port" were swamped Sunday, and the area on the river's west bank was expected to be covered today.

National guardsmen worked Sunday night to shield a fertilizer plant housing 9 million pounds of toxic ammonia.

City officials and a spokesman for Vigoro Industries said they were confident the 10-foot dike being built around the plant's 200-foot-tall ammonia tank would prevent a catastrophe.

"We can't be 100 percent certain because nobody has ever encountered this before," said Vigoro spokesman David Prichard.

Mayor B.K. Reynolds declared a citywide state of emergency and ordered a 9 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew that started Sunday night.

Public Safety Department spokeswoman Charlene White said about 3,000 of the city's 10,000 residents were evacuating.

"Just about everybody is cooperating," she said. "There are some diehards. Hopefully, they're going to leave when the water gets higher, or we'll have to go in for them in boats."

Sporadic showers Sunday evening raised concerns about potential sewer backups, and officials advised residents in neighborhoods outside city limits to boil their water.

The flooding began Tuesday after Tropical Storm Alberto brought heavy downpours.

Torrents also surged south through the Florida panhandle, where 3,200 people were evacuated. Florida Gov.

Lawton Chiles asked President Clinton on Sunday to declare four more counties federal disaster areas.

In Alabama, at least one person was killed and two more reported missing.

The flood has damaged just about every crop grown in southwest Georgia, said Bob Marlowe, a commodities specialist with the Georgia Farm Bureau. The extent of crop damage won't be known until the water recedes.

Even in cities to the north of here where the flood had already crested, flooding was expected to linger for days because of swollen tributaries.

In Americus, where flash floods killed 15 people, ripped highways in two and ruined drinking water, churchgoers at Bethesda Baptist on Sunday sought a sign of hope.

"The force of water is awesome, but we will survive with God's help," said the Rev. Fer-Rell Malone. "If you've got life, you still have another chance."

Clinton dismisses Dole's criticism on Korean condolences

BONN, Germany (AP) — President Clinton today dismissed Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole's criticism of his condolences on the death of North Korea's President Kim Il Sung. Clinton said his remarks had been "to the point and appropriate and very much in the interest of the United States."

Dole said Saturday that the president's remarks were "inappropriate" and insensitive to American veterans of the Korean War and their families.

Asked about Dole's criticism, Clinton said, "I would think that the veterans of the Korean War and their survivors as much as any group of Americans would very much want us to resolve this nuclear question with North Korea and go forward."

At a news conference after meeting with German leaders, Clinton also welcomed North Korea's initial assurances that it will resume talks on its nuclear program "after an appropriate time for grieving."

Clinton's point man on North Korea, Assistant Secretary of State Robert Gallucci, said today that North Korea had assured him "that we should expect that the policy pursued by President Kim Il Sung would be continued by the new government."

Thus, U.S. officials expect North Korea to honor its pledge to freeze its nuclear program while talks are ongoing, Gallucci said. International Atomic Energy Agency inspectors remain in North Korea with access to suspect sites to make sure that the freeze is continued.

Clinton said he hoped a summit between North and South Korea, indefinitely postponed in the wake of the North Korean leader's death, "will be held as soon as it's appropriate," but that would be up to the two countries.

On the death of Kim Il Sung, Clinton had extended "sincere condolences" to North Koreans and said the United States appreciated Kim's "leadership in resuming the talks between our governments" which are aimed at resolving nuclear and other issues.

Dole, the Kansas Republican who is considering a presidential bid, said Kim's death and the end of his "brutal dictatorship" should be viewed as helping the cause of democracy in North Korea.

Clinton said today that "the statement that I issued was brief, to the point and appropriate, and very much in the interest of the United States."

Gallucci, who is heading the U.S. delegation at the nuclear talks in Geneva, said he had discussed future U.S.-North Korean talks with North Korean negotiator Kang Sok Ju.

"We have an agreement that after the period of mourning, which will end with a funeral on the 17th of this month, that the North Koreans will contact us through their mission in New York and give us a date which they will propose for the resumption of our talks," Gallucci said in an interview on ABC.

Vice President Al Gore this morning said that agreement was "one good sign" amid uncertainty over the intentions of Kim's son, Kim Jong Il, who appears slated to take over as the leader of the isolated communist country.

"There had been reports Kim Jong Il, the new leader, had been supervising the preparations for those talks, and so that is the one bit of good news," Gore said in an interview on CBS.

Gore also cited reports that behind the scenes the shadowy son "has been making an awful lot of the decisions for quite some time ... controlling the flow of information to Kim Il Sung and was deeply involved in all the affairs of the North Korean state."

Beyond that, U.S. officials know little about him, Gore said.

North Korea has zigzagged in the past, declaring it was interested in negotiating with the United States and then causing talks to be shelved by denying access to the inspectors.

U.S. intelligence suspects North Korea already may have produced one or two atomic weapons, using plutonium from its experimental reactor. By the end of the year, unless the program is frozen, the country could have about a half-dozen weapons, according to some U.S. analysts.

Israel closes Gaza Strip, imposes curfews in West Bank towns

GAZA CITY, Gaza City (AP) — Israel barred thousands of Palestinian workers from entering Israel today after a riot at the main crossing point injured three Israeli soldiers a day earlier.

The army also continued restrictions on the two largest West Bank towns, Hebron and Nablus, where round-the-clock curfews kept nearly 200,000 Palestinians off the streets.

The crackdown came as Israel-PLO talks on expanding Palestinian self-rule began in Cairo, Egypt.

The restriction on Gaza came after several thousand Palestinians stormed the Erez border terminal in an attempt to enter Israel on Sunday. The army said the ban was necessary to allow for reorganization of the crossing.

The restrictions imposed today were originally to last only 24 hours, but a military official said the reorganization might take longer.

Palestinian police put up an additional checkpoint in Gaza City, 3 miles south of Erez, to inspect papers of Palestinians seeking to enter Israel. Palestinians must now pass four such checkpoints before reaching the crossing.

Groups of Palestinian day laborers sat waiting at the checkpoints with bags of bread and cheese in hope they would be allowed to reach their jobs in Israel.

"I feel bad because, despite the peace, despite Abu Ammar's visit, we have no freedom," said mechanic Ziad Nasrallah, 26, using PLO chief Yasser Arafat's nom de guerre.

Arafat last week concluded a visit to Gaza and the West Bank town of Jericho, his first to the areas since Israel seized them in the 1967 Mideast war.

The peace accord Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization signed May 4 granted Palestinians limited rule in Gaza and Jericho, as well as a promise to talk about other areas.

The leader of the PLO delegation at the Cairo talks, Nabil Shaath, did not comment on the border closure. But in Jerusalem, Israeli spokesman Uri Dromi admitted it could strain the atmosphere in Cairo, although he added the talks "have gone through worse tests than this."

Unemployment is high in the Gaza Strip, and its residents were hit hard when Israel drastically cut the nearly 120,000 day labor permits for the West Bank and Gaza Strip in March 1993 after a wave of knifings in Israel.

According to U.N. statistics, 16,000 Gazans enter Israel daily. Israel last month raised the number of work permits issued to Palestinian workers from Gaza and the West Bank to about 55,000 — 25,000 of them to Gaza residents.

The Israeli military official said that despite the ban on workers, the transportation of goods would continue and Palestinians seeking medical care or going to visit relatives would be allowed through.

A curfew was still in effect in Hebron, a city of 80,000 people, for a fourth straight day, following the killing of an Israeli teen-ager and the wounding of her father. Israeli officials believe the drive-by shooting was carried out by militant Muslim opponents of the Israel-PLO accord.

The 130,000 residents of Nablus were also under curfew. The army gave no reason for the closure.

Meanwhile, in the West Bank Jewish settlement of Kiryat Arba, settlers began moving out of government-built houses they took over Friday in a violent confrontation with the army. The conflict was defused when soldiers allowed 15 families to stay temporarily.

Settler leaders met with President Ezer Weizman on Sunday and agreed to leave after being promised a meeting with the housing minister to discuss their demand that the government put the houses up for sale.
