LOCAL

PAMPA — The Pampa Parks and Recreation Advisory Board will meet at 5 p.m. Thursday in the city commission chamber on the third floor of City Hall.

Agenda items include a report on a possible volleyball court at Central Park and a tour of parks for a possible Frisbee golf course location.

Parks Director Reed Kirkpatrick and Recreation Director Shane Stokes will present staff reports.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Prosecutors have decided not to file child molestation charges against Michael Jackson, the Los Angeles Times reported today.

Jackson was accused in a civil lawsuit of molesting a 13-year-old boy he befriended while the two pursued their friendship in Los Angeles and at Jackson's "Neverland" ranch in Santa Barbara County.

Prosecutors are likely to say they considered the teenager, now 14, a credible witness — but he has declined to testify, unidentified sources told the Times.

Larry Feldman, the teenager's lawyer, told the Times he met with prosecutors from Santa Barbara and Los Angeles counties Monday. He would not disclose what was said.

"I believe a statement will be made shortly outlining the district attorneys' position," Feldman said.

Los Angeles District Attorney Gil Garcetti said Tuesday that a decision would be made "very soon," but he would not be more specific. Santa Barbara District Attorney Tom Sneddon also declined to say anything more.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A 360-pound woman who sued a theater because she couldn't fit in its seats is glad she stood up for her rights, her lawyer says.

Deborah Birdwell settled her federal lawsuit against the Carmike Cinemas chain for an undisclosed amount.

"She feels she hopefully has broken the ice for obese people and others," lawyer Jim Goodman said Tuesday from his office at the Persons With Disabilities Law Center in Atlanta.

"She hopes they will stand up and demand to be treated as human beings, and if they are not, they know they have a course of action," he said.

Birdwell, 38, sued last September after being denied access to see Jurassic Park at a Cookeville theater three months earlier.

Birdwell, who is 5-foot-4, said she offered to provide a folding chair, but was told it would create a fire hazard in the wheelchair section.

WORLD

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — American soldiers stood grimly by as Haitian police chased a crowd of people down the street, beating one woman on the back and, when she turned around, smashing her in the face.

The soldiers outside the Port-au-Prince docks on Tuesday clearly wanted to stop the savage beatings that took place under their noses, but they had orders not to get involved. Some hoped that would soon change.

The U.S. troops are in a difficult position. Part of their mission is to reorganize the Haitian army and police in an effort to end the oppression that has characterized Haiti for decades. Yet the Americans have to work with these same soldiers and police.

Thousands of people lined the street in front of the docks on Day 2 of the U.S. intervention. Many were curious, anxious to peer into the faces of the Americans who had come to restore democracy, and perhaps order, to their impoverished country.

TOKYO (AP) — Foreign Minister Yohei Kono left for Washington today to try to talk the Clinton administration out of imposing trade sanctions if Japan fails to agree to set import goals intended to cut its trade surplus.

The Clinton administration has set a Sept. 30 deadline for breaking a deadlock in talks on improving access to Japan's auto, auto parts and insurance markets.

Kono is to meet President Clinton, and is expected to argue against standards proposed by the United States for measuring foreign access to Japan's markets.

IRI International under new ownership

IRI International Corporation, headquartered in Pampa, is under new ownership.

Dresser Industries Inc. and Ingersoll-Rand today announced they had sold IRI International Corporation to Energy Services International Limited. IRI officials at the Pampa plant were not immediately available for comment.

Dresser officials said the papers were signed Tuesday night. IRI was a joint venture between Dresser and Ingersoll-Rand. Details of the sale have not been disclosed, but company officials in Dallas said that only the Pampa facility was involved in the sale.

IRI International, owned equally by Dresser and Ingersoll-Rand, according to Dresser officials, is one of the largest manufacturers of mobile drilling rigs in the world. Pampa sources indicated that IRI stock was divided between Dresser and Ingersoll-Rand with each company owning 45 percent. The remaining 10 percent of the stock was held by IRI management.

The buyer, Energy Services International Limited, is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Parman Capital Investments, a privately-held investment group engaged in international trade, manufacturing, resorts, and time-share and financial services, according to Dresser officials.

Sources close to the IRI plant operation said the man heading the new company was born in Iran and was a naturalized U.S. citizen.

He reportedly met with plant employees this morning and was on his way out of town by noon today.

Iranian officials in Washington and the United Nations said today they knew nothing of the sale or the people involved.

Company employees described the man who addressed them this morning as positive and that he indicated the plant would remain open in Pampa. One employee, who asked to remain anonymous, quoted the man as saying he had enough connections to keep the plant covered up with work.

An IRI worker said the man told employees he had made up his mind in his youth to be a millionaire by the time he was 25, but that he had made his first million dollars by the time he was 22 years old. The worker described him as being in his 50s.

Dresser officials said IRI serves two market sectors, the well servicing and workover market and the drilling and exploration market. Principal products and services include wheel-mounted rigs, skid-mounted drawworks, masts and substructures, duplex and triplex mud pumps, rig accessories and special application and custom rig packages.

"Dresser is a Dallas-based supplier of highly engineered products and services utilized in hydrocarbon energy-related activities throughout the world," according to Donald R. Galletly of Dresser.

Ingersoll-Rand is a New Jersey-based manufacturing company of air compressors, pumps, construction and mining equipment, bearings, power tools, locks and door hardware.

Students gather for prayer at schools

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

Close to 200 students met on local campuses today joining youth across the nation and 12 other countries in a time of prayer called "See You at the Pole."

About 100 middle school and 70 high school students prayed silently and aloud for their schools, their country and themselves as they gathered around their campus flag poles.

"Let us not be ashamed to stand up for You," intoned one high school student who joined his hands with others gathered to pray.

The student-led event is sponsored by a Fort Worth parachurch ministry called "See You at the Pole," said First Baptist Church youth minister David Poupard.

Students at Pampa High School formed a handholding circle and nearly half the gathered 80 students prayed aloud.

At Pampa Middle School, Principal Tim Powers reports around 100 students assembled for prayer.

Melea Mechler and Waylon Griffin, both eighth-graders, handled campus publicity with Griffin opening and closing the session.

"The turnout was great," Griffin said.

All students prayed silently, though only six prayed aloud, he said.

Mechler noted the session was advertised in the school by posters and flyers. They would have liked more time to prepare for the special day, she said.

"Next year - my sister is in seventh grade - I'm gonna make sure she does it right," Mechler said.

Waylon Griffin and Melea Mechler, Pampa Middle School eighth-graders, organized and led that campus's celebration of "See You at the Pole."

Federal courts continue ban on TV cameras

WASHINGTON (AP) — There will be no television cameras in federal courtrooms, a panel of judges who make rules for the courts has decided. The action was formally announced today.

"Their basic concern was the potential impact on jurors," said David Sellers, a spokesman for the Judicial Conference of the United States.

He said the judges worried about "any negative impact on jurors, witnesses, potential distraction of witnesses and whether jurors were made nervous by any fear of possible harm."

Cameras have become the norm in many state courts, allowing the general public to see proceedings in highly publicized cases, like the murder case against O.J. Simpson in Los Angeles and the rape trial in Florida of William Kennedy Smith.

After a three-year experiment in six U.S. district courts and two appeals courts, the panel on Tuesday voted down a proposal to make the pilot project permanent. The experiment will end on Dec. 31.

Research presented to the conference said that between July 1, 1991, and June 30, 1993, news media filed applications for photo coverage of 257 cases and that 82 percent were approved.

"The most common type of coverage was television coverage of trials," said the research by the federal judicial center. "Overall, attitudes of judges toward electronic media coverage of civil proceedings were initially neutral and became more favorable after experience under the pilot program," the report said.

The Judicial Conference of the United States, the policy-making arm of the federal courts, discussed the issue for about 20 minutes before voting nearly 2-1 against making the change. Sellers would not release the actual vote, but said Chief Justice William Rehnquist, who heads the Conference, votes only in case of a tie.

Lawmakers clear path for vote on GATT

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — After weeks of contentious closed-door negotiations, key lawmakers reached agreement on legislation implementing a new, tariff-cutting 123-nation world trade accord.

The deal, announced Tuesday evening by Rep. Sam Gibbons, D-Fla., and Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., paves the way for congressional passage by mid-October of the pact reached under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

"It is the most important financial and economic agreement that has ever been agreed to," Gibbons said. "This will vastly stimulate the American job market and the American economy as well as the world economy."

Because GATT implementing legislation cannot be amended once it is introduced, the Clinton administration has engaged in a lengthy consultation process with congressional committees before it actually submits its proposal. It hopes to do that on Monday.

Delegates from Gibbons' House Ways and Means Committee and Moynihan's Senate Finance Committee left a few outstanding issues for the administration to resolve, including provisions affecting Caribbean trade, textile quotas and tobacco. But lawmakers said nothing remains unsettled that could defeat GATT.

The two panels agreed on a financing package to offset $12 billion in tariff revenues expected to be lost during GATT's first five years. However, farm state legislators in both the House and Senate remain unhappy with administration plans to cut agriculture funding by about $1.6 billion.

The funding package includes provisions that would require corporations to shore up their pension funds, thus reducing potential losses for the government's Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. by about $900 million. Lawmakers agreed to drop proposed tax changes in inventory accounting rules that provoked complaints from retailers.

At a White House meeting of Democratic and Republican congressional leaders, President Clinton urged lawmakers to set aside partisanship in considering the trade accord, which was negotiated over seven years that ended last December.

"GATT was started under President Reagan, continued under President Bush, completed under our administration," Clinton said. "It has been a bipartisan effort all the way, and I hope it can be completed in a speedy and bipartisan fashion this year."

Although the deadline for approval is July 1, the administration contends that failure to win congressional passage this year would damage America's global economic leadership, because many other countries are holding up their own approval waiting to see what Congress does.

Painting case settled

CHICAGO (AP) — The city has agreed to pay $95,000 to an artist whose painting of late Mayor Harold Washington in G-string and bra was removed from an art show by three aldermen.

The city also agreed to give police detailed instructions on when materials protected by the First Amendment may be seized, according to the settlement announced Tuesday.

David Nelson's painting, titled "Mirth and Girth," depicted the city's first black mayor in a bra, G-string, garter belt and stockings. It was displayed in May 1988, months after Washington's death, as part of a private student exhibition at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago.

Aldermen Allan Streeter, Dorothy Tillman and Bobby Rush seized the painting and the police superintendent then took it into custody. It was returned to Nelson the next day after repeated demands by the American Civil Liberties Union.

The aldermen claimed they wanted to save the painting from mob destruction and prevent it from inciting riots.

They agreed not to appeal a federal court's ruling that they had violated Nelson's rights.

One of the aldermen, Rush, is now a congressman.

Rep. Mike Synar loses runoff in Oklahoma

By ANN LEVIN
 Associated Press Writer

Oklahoma Rep. Mike Synar narrowly lost a Democratic runoff to a retired school principal who spent less than $17,000 on his campaign, making him the third House member defeated in primaries this year.

Synar, who was seeking a ninth term in Tuesday's runoff, had a history of close races in northeastern Oklahoma's conservative 2nd district. He was seen as more liberal than the farmers and ranchers who make up most of the rural district.

While 2nd district Republican nominee Tom Coburn sought to portray the stunning upset as a rejection of President Clinton's policies, Synar said the results were "a referendum on Mike Synar and not on Bill Clinton."

Elsewhere, Massachusetts Republicans nominated W. Mitt Romney to take on Democratic Sen. Edward M. Kennedy in November, and Democrats in that state picked state Rep. Mark Roosevelt to challenge popular GOP Gov. William Weld.

Washington's primary ballot included races to pick challengers for House Speaker Tom Foley and GOP Sen. Slade Gorton, whom Democrats consider vulnerable.

In other Oklahoma races, voters overwhelmingly approved a measure that will restrict U.S. representatives to three two-year terms and senators to two six-year terms.

And Democrats chose Lt. Gov. Jack Mildren over state Sen. Bernice Sheddick, 59 percent to 41 percent, in a gubernatorial runoff. Mildren, a former University of Oklahoma football star, will face Republican Frank Keating, a former Justice Department official, and independent Wes Watkins, a former congressman.

The biggest surprise was Virgil Cooper's upset victory over Synar.

With all precincts reporting, Cooper had 47,798 votes, or 51 percent, to 45,189 votes, or 49 percent for Synar.

Cooper — who said he spent just $16,900 on his runoff campaign, $9,000 of it from his own pocket — acknowledged that some of his votes were protests against Synar.

Synar, who raised nearly $300,000 for the year through Aug. 31, was forced into the runoff after failing to get a majority of the vote in the Aug. 23 primary.

"People would grab your hand and you would tell them you're running against Mike Synar. They would say 'You've got my vote,'" said Cooper, whose campaigning consisted largely of placing business cards under the windshield wipers of cars in parking lots.

The only other House members defeated in primaries this year were Reps. Craig Washington of Houston and Lucien Blackwell of Philadelphia. New York freshman GOP Rep. David Levy was trailing in unofficial returns but the race still had not been decided a week after the Sept. 13 primary.

Cooper will face Coburn, a Muskogee, Okla., doctor, in the Nov. 8 general election.

In Massachusetts' GOP Senate primary, Romney swamped fellow millionaire John Laskin 82 percent to 18 percent, with 91 percent of precincts reporting. Kennedy had no primary opposition.

GOP officials believe they have a real chance of ousting Kennedy with the 47-year-old Romney, who has never held elected office.

Rolls over the summer show many voters think the 62-year-old Kennedy, the fourth-longest serving member of the Senate, has been in office too long. He was first elected in 1962.

In the Democratic gubernatorial primary, Roosevelt collected 48 percent of the vote to 27 percent for his closest challenger in the three-way race, with 92 percent of precincts reporting.

In Washington, veteran King County lawmaker Ron Sims defeated eight other Democrats for the right to challenge Gorton. Gorton, whose polls standings have never topped 50 percent, easily won nomination over token opposition. Sims would be the state's first black senator.

In eastern Washington's 5th district, Foley was the only Democrat on an open primary ballot that was seen by some as a test of the speaker's popularity. George Nethercutt, a Spokane lawyer, defeated three other Republicans for the right to challenge Foley.

With 85 percent of precincts reporting, Foley had 35 percent of the vote and Nethercutt had 29 percent.

Foley, who has represented the 5th District for 30 years, said "I welcome a vigorous campaign. I have won them in the past, and intend to run and win this one on the issues of concern to the hard-working families of Eastern Washington."

In Oklahoma, which adopted term limits for state lawmakers in 1990, the proposal to restrict the terms of congressmen and U.S. senators was passed 67 percent to 33 percent.

Two polls released Tuesday found overwhelming support for term limits for members of Congress: 80 percent in a survey of 4,809 people done by the nonpartisan Times Mirror Center for the People and the Press, and 74 percent in a poll of 743 people sponsored by the advocacy group U.S. Term Limits.

In a case pending before the U.S. Supreme Court, the Clinton administration is arguing that states have no constitutional right to regulate membership in Congress.

Fifteen states have adopted term limits since 1990.

Shooting victim's relatives want store closed

FORT WORTH (AP) — The City Council has been asked to intervene in a rift between Stop Six residents and store owners following a shooting that killed one man.

A group of black residents from the southeast Fort Worth neighborhood Tuesday asked the City Council to close Jason's Food Mart, a convenience store owned by Korean-American Jason Noh, who has been arrested in last Friday's shooting death of Darrell Bivins, 42.

Noh told police that he shot Bivins because Bivins had previously stolen from his store although he did not accuse Bivins of doing anything wrong the night of the shooting.

Noh has been released on $50,000 bond. Iolma Robinson Holbert, a second cousin of Bivins', told the council that many store owners wear handguns in holsters and make other weapons visible from behind the counter.

"If anyone is that afraid of being somewhere, they are in a highly emotional state of being," Robinson Holbert said. "That, combined with a loaded weapon, is a time bomb waiting to go off. One of those time bombs went off Friday night."

Residents who spoke at the council meeting also accused store owners in their area of selling alcohol and drug paraphernalia to minors and asked council members to crack down on the practice and to ban the sale of liquor in the area.

Councilman McKinley Jackson termed the shooting of Bivins a "senseless, stupid, premeditated murder" and said Noh's store "needs to be shut down."

Jackson, who is black, said some store owners are not culturally sensitive to blacks and "don't really understand us."

The Rev. Michael Bell, who represented the Southeast Fort Worth Community Action Group, said the city should look into establishing sensitivity training sessions for store owners of foreign heritage.

Jimmy Carter returns to Korean peace effort

ATLANTA (AP) — Former President Carter emerged from private meetings with ambassadors from North and South Korea to say he is willing to return to the divided peninsula to foster talks on defusing nuclear tensions.

Buoyed by his last-minute mission to avoid a U.S. invasion of Haiti, Carter met with the ambassadors separately at the Carter Center on Monday and Tuesday to offer his aid, but no peace talks were scheduled.

"I don't have any specific plans to return to Korea," Carter said Tuesday after a meeting with Han Seung-Soo, South Korea's ambassador to the United States.

In June, he traveled to North

Korea and helped arrange a series of accords, including an agreement for an unprecedented summit that was put on hold after the death of North Korean President Kim Il Sung in July.

"I think that both the North and South Korean people would like to see steps resumed at an early date that would lead to the complete reconciliation and understanding between North and South Korea," Carter said.

On Monday, after returning from a weekend of negotiations in Haiti, Carter met with Pak Gil Yon, North Korea's ambassador to the United States.

Coronado Hospital administrator to speak on health care issues

Doug Garner, administrator and chief executive officer of Coronado Hospital, will be the featured speaker for the Pampa Lions Club noon meeting Thursday at the First United Methodist Church.

Garner will address the organization on physician hospital organizations (PHO's) and how they will affect the way health care is delivered in Pampa and the surrounding area. He will detail how the Coronado Hospital-sponsored PHO will benefit the community and affect the quality and cost of local health care.

Garner will also discuss the community health plan currently being developed by the hospital. That plan will directly utilize the local PHO.

According to hospital officials, Garner will talk about the hospital's position on managed care in general and spend time answering questions from club members and guests about the local health care system.

This is the third in a four-part series of programs on health care, according to Lions Club program chairman David Webster.

Marty Dale of Dallas will conclude the month-long series on Sept. 29. Dale is former president of Health Network of Southern California (HealthNet). This network recently made national news when it was handed down an $89 million judgment for refusing to provide a bone marrow transplant to a breast cancer patient.

Dale will present an analysis of the effect of national health care reform on our nation and our community. He will discuss what individuals and business owners can do to better benefit from the changes created by health care reform.

Dale now serves as regional sales manager for American Medical Security, one of the nation's largest third party administrators.

The Pampa Lions Club meets at noon each Thursday in the First United Methodist Church basement and invites interested citizens to be their guest as these special meetings. For more information, contact any Lions Club member or call 669-2233.

Loaned executive

William F. (Bill) O'Brien of Coronado Hospital is one of the loaned executives working with the Pampa United Way fund-raising drive this year.

O'Brien is a member of the Pampa United Way executive board and has served as a member of the United Way board of directors. He also is a past member of the American Heart Association board of directors.

United Way is "the best way to donate funds to non-religious charities," he said. "You know where the funds are to be spent."

O'Brien received his BBS degree in industrial engineering and a master's degree in management science.

He and his wife Jane have three children: Sean O'Brien, Erin Hatfield and Connor O'Brien.

As a loaned executive, O'Brien will be given time by the hospital to help with the United Way campaign.

William F. (Bill) O'Brien

Charges dropped in motel fire that killed four Texans

METAIRIE, La. (AP) — Prosecutors have dropped criminal charges against two housekeepers who were accused of starting a fire that killed four Texas men last May in a suburban New Orleans motel.

The charges were dropped after arson investigators concluded that such a large fire couldn't have resulted from a cigarette the housekeepers allegedly threw into a bin containing dirty linen, Walter Rothschild, chief felony prosecutor for the Jefferson Parish District Attorney's Office, said Tuesday.

The fire destroyed 18 units of the Peacock Plaza Inn and trapped the four Texans in their room. Killed were Glen Carruth, 24, of Kilgore; Russel Saunders, 27, of Beckville; and Anthony Haliburton, 18, and Douglas Hayes, 37, both of Longview.

Rothschild said the investigation has been reopened.

Investigators initially focused on the maids' report that they saw a man running from the laundry room at the Peacock Plaza Inn just before the building burst into flames on May 29. They said the man became irate when they had told him to go through the front office to get a towel.

Deputies found a man fitting the maids' description early in the investigation, but witnesses could not positively identify him, Rothschild said.

The housekeepers, Lillie Tackles, 18, and Ruby Washington, 20, both of New Orleans, had been scheduled to go on trial this week.

They had each been charged with four counts of negligent homicide and 12 counts of negligent injury to the 11 firefighters and a motel guest who were injured in the fire.

Prosecutors have one year to bring new charges against Tackles and Washington, if new evidence is obtained.

The women told police they tossed a lit cigarette into the laundry bin when they heard someone approaching because they weren't supposed to be smoking on duty.

Defense budget faces gap

WASHINGTON (AP) — Clinton administration defense spending plans for the next five years total over $40 billion more than what will be available to pay for them, according to a top Pentagon official.

Deputy Defense Secretary John Deutch told the Senate Armed Services Committee on Tuesday that the administration has not yet approved a plan for how to close the gap in its defense spending plans for fiscal years 1996 through 2001.

"Our estimate is that over this period we are about $40 billion short," Deutch said. The key question occupying defense planners and White House budget officials, he said, is, "Does the Department of Defense have enough money to fulfill its missions it has been assigned both in the short run and in the long run?"

Deutch also confirmed that the Pentagon will be seeking a supplemental appropriation to cover the military mission in Haiti but he did not provide a precise figure. He said the administration estimates the total cost to the military for peacekeeping activities is running about $1.5 billion a year.

Congress was considering taking up a debate on whether to formally approve of the Haiti occupation or, as was done in Somalia, to impose a time limit on the military mission.

About $11 billion of the $40 billion defense budget gap represents military pay raises Congress will approve over the next five years that are expected to be higher than President Clinton's requests.

Quality-of-life improvements such as better military housing, as well as moving up the date of cost-of-living increases for military retirees, add up to about $7 billion. Increases in Army readiness funds add another $3 billion.

The rest consists of $15 billion in future estimated inflation costs and more than $5 billion to pay for higher pay raises approved in past years by Congress, Deutch said.

Those amounts, while considerable, represent a relatively small portion of the roughly $1.3 trillion the government will spend on defense during the next five years, Deutch noted. He rejected a claim in a recent report by the General Accounting Office, Congress' watchdog agency, that the defense budget gap is closer to $150 billion.

The gap is the difference between what the Defense Department has said it needs to buy in goods, services and labor, and what it anticipates it will have available to spend.

Volcanoes lead to tidal wave warning

PORT MORESBY, Papua New Guinea (AP) — Radio broadcasts warned villagers today of possible tidal waves as two volcanoes erupted for a third day, dumping ash on the devastated port city of Rabaul.

The National Broadcasting Commission warned residents to take cover if they noticed a sudden drop in the sea level, an early sign of tidal waves.

"The water will definitely rise again, and tidal waves could happen," the broadcasts said.

Continuous earthquakes from volcanic eruptions could trigger the huge waves, but none had been reported by today, said Hugh Davies, a geology professor at the University of Papua New Guinea.

Ash steadily poured down on Rabaul, 500 miles northeast of the capital Port Moresby, as authorities launched a relief effort to help more than 30,000 people who fled the eruption zone.

Flights carrying emergency supplies of food, clothing, tents and medicine were due to arrive late today.

Witnesses said huge mushroom clouds of dense, black smoke and debris continued to pour high into the sky from the Tavurvur and Vulcan volcanoes, which violently erupted early Monday.

Game officials seize 2,000 snakes

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Game officials snuck up on 2,000 snakes and put the bite on 15 people suspected of illegal collecting and black-market poaching.

Tuesday's raids in 11 counties capped a two-year operation aimed at crimping California's estimated $100 million-a-year illegal trade in native reptiles.

"Poachers are hammering California wildlife," said Fish and Game Director Boyd Gibbons. "No species escapes the poachers."

Officials arrested or issued citations to 15 people and were seeking eight more. They face charges of unlawfully selling or buying native reptiles.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

More education not the key to more jobs

Labor Secretary Robert Reich says that more education is the key to more good jobs for more people. The Economic Policy Institute (a "New Democrat" think tank that of late seems to have gotten more media ink per policy study than other Washington policy institutions) says that might not be so. But the major lesson for Americans to learn from all these dueling studies is that no individual or organization has enough wisdom or information to develop a one-size-fits-all strategy for improving the employment prospects of 250 million Americans whose main common attribute is diversity.

Reich, it will be remembered, harps constantly on the importance of education, training and new technological skills in an increasingly complex and high-tech-dominated U.S. and global economy. "The fundamental fault line running through today's work force is based on education and skills," Reich said in a recent high-profile speech. Training and education programs have become a big part of most Clinton administration initiatives, from welfare reform to crime to health care.

A study released by economists Jared Bernstein and Lawrence Mishel of the Economic Policy Institute doesn't deny that education and job skills are important for many - perhaps most - American workers. But they throw doubt on the idea that education is the most important factor in what they see as a gradual but steady decline in inflation-adjusted wages for many Americans. The influence of the global economy, the decline in union power, the importance of small businesses in job creation, and the increase in numbers of temporary or part-time workers contributed more to wage erosion than did technological change, they say.

The two economists also cite figures that indicate that college-trained men (whose incomes rose steadily until 1989) seem to have suffered more wage erosion than people in other education groups. That certainly raises questions about whether a college degree is any longer (as it has long been assumed to be) the most important key to high-paying jobs.

The most significant policy implication of all this is that the Clinton administration's emphasis on more job training is likely to be expensive and produce little in the way of higher-paid jobs for more people.

As the U.S. economy becomes increasingly complex, influenced by new inventions and developments in other countries that nobody can predict or anticipate, the most important survival skill is likely to be flexibility and openness to innovation. That suggests a policy not of government guidance, but of government establishing a framework within which people can apply their own knowledge to their own unique circumstances and individual values to improving their own economic and personal circumstances.

Such a policy would require both government and think-tank gurus to view the world with a little more humility and a little more respect for the rights and abilities of all 250 million Americans. Unfortunately, such a pleasant and productive development doesn't seem likely.

Questions from the experiment

Nat Hentoff

In the October 1983 issue of Pediatrics, a medical team, then at the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center, told of a five-year experiment on infants. All these babies had spina bifida - an imperfect closure of part of the spinal column.

The team evaluated the infants as to whether "active vigorous treatment" or "supportive care only" would be indicated. The criteria included a "quality of life" formula. Taken into consideration was the baby's natural endowment (physical and intellectual). But emphasis was also given to the quality of support the handicapped child would likely get, as time went on, from his family and from society.

As the medical team put it plainly in the Pediatrics article, the treatment for babies with identical natural endowments "could be quite different, depending on the contribution from home and society." A low-income home could help determine whether the child had a future or not.

At that time, I told one of the physicians that this clearly was a means test. He denied it, but could not explain the formula otherwise. The concept turned out to be a precursor of the current cost-benefit ideas about which sick people are worth keeping alive.

Sixty-nine spina bifida infants were made part of a grand experiment between 1977 and 1982. Those chosen for "active vigorous treatment" were operated on to close the spinal lesion. Those given "supportive care only" were given no active medical treatment: no surgery, no sedation and no antibiotics to treat infections and other acute illnesses. Of those laid aside, 24 did indeed die. Of the 36 babies given full treatment, 35 survived. (The exception was killed in a car accident.)

In each case the parents were informed beforehand whether the physicians recommended full treatment or not. Parents could reject the alternative of "supportive care only." But some have since claimed that the medical team's recommendations were not clear or complete enough to be fully understood, nor was the "quality of life" element revealed.

One of the infants left without medical treatment was Stonewall Jackson Smith. His lifespan was 53 days. His mother, Frieda Smith, told me that she agreed to only "supportive care." But, she added, "we did not make the decision to let Stony die. All we were ever told was that any treatment would only cause him to suffer needlessly. Like any caring parents, we wanted to spare him any pain and did what the doctors recommended. But we trusted these doctors to do everything possible to save his life under any circumstances."

Frieda Smith also notes that the doctors "failed to tell us we were part of an experiment. We were completely unaware of this until six years later when we saw something about it on the news. At the same time we became involved in a class action suit against these physicians of the Oklahoma Medical Center."

The primary claim by parents and guardians of several of the dead infants is that those children not given full medical treatment were discriminated against because they were handicapped. And that was a violation of Section 504 of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act.

Another cause of the discrimination, it was claimed, was that the parents of these infants had low incomes and therefore could not provide the "support" their spina bifida children would need.

Joining in the litigation was the National Legal Center for the Medically Dependent & the Disabled, along with the American Civil Liberties Union. Their arguments did not prevail in the lower courts, which ruled that the parents, after all, had been involved in the treatment decisions.

Last year, however, the U.S. Supreme Court - without comment - refused to review the cases of those infants denied life of any quality at all.

A few days before what would have been Stony's birthday, Frieda Smith told me: "We realize that life would not have been easy, but we would have liked to have had the chance. We wonder what we would have said and done. We see handicapped children and wonder if he would have been like them. Finding out, afterward, that we let him die was like burying him all over again. How the doctors say they did nothing wrong is something I just don't understand."

As for the five-year experiment, Dr. John M. Freeman of the Birth Defects Treatment Center at Johns Hopkins Hospital wrote to Pediatrics that the team surely did prove it could get "infants to die quickly." The 24 who died, Dr. Freeman added, "might have done well and might have ... walked with assistive devices, gone to regular school and be of normal intelligence."

Says Frieda Smith: "With the doctors' attitude toward the lives of people in low-income brackets, it's no wonder people like us don't trust those in authority."

Said the medical team in Pediatrics: "The 'untreated survivor' has not been a significant problem in our experience."

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, Sept. 21, the 264th day of 1994. There are 101 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Sept. 21, 1893, a horseless carriage - believed to be the first gasoline-powered automobile built in the United States - was taken for a short test drive in Springfield, Mass., by Frank Duryea, who had designed the vehicle with his brother, Charles.

On this date:

In 1792, the French National Convention voted to abolish the monarchy.

In 1897, the New York Sun ran its "Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus" editorial in response to a letter from 8-year-old Virginia O'Hanlon.

In 1931, Britain went off the gold standard.

In 1937, The Hobbit, by J.R.R. Tolkien, was first published.

In 1938, a hurricane struck parts of New York and New England, causing widespread damage and claiming more than 600 lives.

In 1948, Milton Berle made his debut as permanent host of The Texaco Star Theater on NBC.

Too many passengers for lifeboat

"Good morning, Paul Harvey: "I am an ex-Marine, a Korean veteran, and I'm wondering what country I fought for. "People are pouring into our country who don't even bother to learn English. "I was born here, and I'm feeling like an alien in my own country. "Let's remove that torch from the hand of Lady Liberty and put up a stop sign!" - Liborio LaRusso, Jersey City, N.J.

LaRusso speaks for a growing tide of resentment. Americans, historically generous in adopting an orphan on our shore's step, now feel that greedy, law-breaking, illegal sneak-ins are corrupting our country. Governors of five states, in their desperation, are suing our federal government in an effort to get help with the care and feeding of the immigrant influx. The Immigration and Naturalization Service does not even pretend to know how many "undocumented immigrants" are in our country. "At least four million," they say. And that number is increasing "at least a thousand a day."

With the United States presently prosperous, most Americans have not yet felt a resultant financial squeeze. But the day unemployment lines begin to grow longer, the fuse on this time bomb will grow shorter.

Californians are already feeling the squeeze. There, each family of four is contributing $400 a year to feeding, sheltering, educating, medicating and incarcerating illegals.

Nearly 10 percent of California's total general fund budget goes to support illegal aliens. In Arizona, they spend five percent.

Illegals are costing Florida 900 million dollars a year - plus the steeper cost of escalating crime.

Most of the rest of us on Main Street and in Congress still construe these to be regional problems.

Does anybody dare propose isolating from our federal budget a specific allotment for "hospitality"?

Were each tax-paying American to see a separate item on his tax bill identified as "hospitality," then, perhaps, he'd get the message.

Until big-hearted Americans get the bill for all their generosity, they are unlikely to slam the door. And by then, it may be too late.

The French gave us the word "triage" to define life's most difficult choices - when the lifeboat must turn away any more passengers rather than swamp the boat and drown everybody.

Comet vindicates us Serious Worriers

Perhaps now the Serious Worriers of this world will get some respect. Perhaps now, all you Normal People who fret over such minutiae as the price of coffee beans or iron overload or the inadequacy of landfill space will finally begin to applaud what Serious Worriers have been doing for you all these years.

We've been telling you for eons that the planet Earth could be bombarded with objects from outer space. Did you listen? Nooooo. You chortled up your sleeves until this July, when huge chunks of Comet Shoemaker-Levy 9 crashed into Jupiter with the force of 6 million nuclear bombs, creating fireballs and flashes and colossal craters.

Now all you Normal People know that what we SWs have been warning you about all this time is very possible. Our lovely planet could be slammed by some humongous object that could turn the metropolis of Omaha into Lake Omaha in the blink of the eye.

I bring this matter up at this point because we have just entered the official 1994-95 Worrying Season, and it is the perfect moment to honor the Serious Worriers who have done so much for humanity with so little recognition through the years.

For the uninitiated, the official Worrying Season begins the day after Labor Day and runs through the following Memorial Day, with a week off between Christmas and New Year's. Although Serious Worriers allegedly get the summer months off, they don't really because they gnaw their nails to nubs worrying about what they're going to worry about after Labor Day.

Until Shoemaker-Levy 9 came along, frankly, it had been a season of pretty slim pickings for SWs. For example, these are a few of the things I had on my personal worry list:

Drinking just two cups of coffee a day can weaken women's bones, leading to crippling fractures ... Raw oysters continue to be a health threat because they tend to become contaminated with a bacteria called Vibrio vulnificus and eating them, experts say, is tantamount to "a game of seafood roulette."

Hot chili peppers may be carcinogenic, studies show, and people who say they are "heavy" consumers of them are 17 times more likely to develop stomach cancer ... Children who eat more than a dozen hot dogs a month are nine times more likely to develop childhood leukemia; if your father ate hot dogs during conception or your mother ate hot dogs during pregnancy, your risk of brain tumors is double that of kids whose parents avoided wieners ... Autopsies performed in Australia disclosed that drinking eight beers a day can cause brain damage.

Bungee jumping can pop the veins in your eyeballs ... Rural rivers are so polluted it's putting a crimp in total submersion baptisms ... Anger more than doubles the risk of a heart attack in people with heart problems ... Research on 5,000 people show that Monday morning is the most likely time for working person to experience a heart attack.

As I said, it was fairly routine stuff until summer brought with it the comet bombardment of Jupiter and - get this - threats of voodoo curses from Haiti. This is true: Haitians who do not want the United States to invade their island are casting spells designed to blind and confuse American troops. Other believers in this curious practice have said they will dispatch Zombies to fight the Marines and douse them with poisonous powder.

I do not know how to evaluate such ominous threats, but I will tell you a story. Back in the 1970s, Haitian First Lady Mamma Doc Duvalier cast a hex on Jimmy Carter by burying a bull alive and dancing around the grave. As we all know, Jimmy turned out to be a one-term flop.

So listen to this Serious Worrier and take no chances. Wear a cross to ward off Haitian hexes. Avoid hot dogs, oysters and chili peppers. If you're prone to anger, stay in bed on Mondays. If you've got bulging eyeballs, avoid bungee jumping. And as a general rule, limit yourself to seven beers a day.

Congress members wary of long-term commitment in Haiti

By JOHN DIAMOND
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the U.S. military machine churns forward in Haiti, members of Congress are voicing increasing concern over the possibility of a long-term commitment of American troops in the volatile Caribbean nation.

Senate Republican and Democratic leaders spent the day Tuesday haggling over the wording of a tepid resolution congratulating President Clinton for avoiding a full-scale invasion. And exiled Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide issued a statement that carefully avoided endorsing the agreement between the United States and Haiti's military junta.

The day of negotiating in the Senate yielded a non-binding resolution introduced by Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, and Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan. Scheduled for debate and a vote today, the measure "supports a prompt and orderly withdrawal" of U.S. troops and the lifting of American and

United Nations economic sanctions

The House approved a similar measure on Monday, although it omitted mention of the sanctions.

The resolutions skirted controversial policy issues, and some Democrats said they would seek a vote next month on a measure to limit the length of the Haiti deployment. Lawmakers of both parties hastened to voice support for the troops in Haiti but then quickly added their critiques of administration policy.

"I don't want anything that I say to be misconstrued as in any way pulling the rug out from under our troops," said Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo. "Having said that, I would like to voice my concern about what we are up to in Haiti."

Lawmakers repeatedly questioned the duration of the U.S. mission and asked whether the administration had devised an exit strategy.

"We should not be lulled into a premature declaration of victory," said Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska.

In a letter to Congress, Clinton said most troops would be replaced by UN forces "after a period of months."

On the Democratic side, Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa said the administration policy is too soft on Haiti's military leadership by allowing them to remain in power for nearly a month.

He said Aristide, the democratically elected president ousted in a military coup three years ago, should be returned to Haiti by next week.

And Sen. Russell Feingold, D-Wis., said the administration was ignoring the congressional responsibility to approve foreign military commitments.

A senior Pentagon official, speaking on condition of anonymity, defended the diplomatic approach to the Haitian junta as crucial to avoiding an outbreak of violence.

"We don't want to create an 'in-your-face' atmosphere. We're going to create a constructive atmosphere," the official said.

Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said the military leaders in Haiti will leave power by the 15th.

"Of that I have absolutely no doubt," he said.

Aristide, a populist Roman Catholic priest, issued a general statement decrying the military junta and supporting a return to democracy.

"We remain vigilant to the declaration of democracy expressed by the people of Haiti, as together with the people of Haiti, we move toward a new beginning," Aristide said.

A State Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity, described Aristide's statement as "very welcome." The official acknowledged that the statement was not an endorsement but "he didn't trash it either."

Another official said the administration plans to bring human rights monitors back into Haiti as soon as possible. The military is also prepared to "provide protection" to members of the Haitian Parliament who seek to return to work.

Another contentious issue was when economic sanctions would be lifted. The resolution introduced by Dole and Mitchell supports lifting "without delay" the U.S.-imposed economic sanctions and those imposed by the U.N. Security Council.

Ex-chief of Mexican federal police arrested in United States

MALLEN (AP) — One of Mexico's most noted fugitives, accused of ordering torture while a top commander in the Mexican federal police, has been arrested in the United States.

Guillermo Gonzalez Calderoni was brought before U.S. Magistrate Peter Ormsby late Tuesday afternoon, the first step in efforts to return him to face justice in Mexico. A bond hearing was scheduled for Thursday.

His attorney, Tony Canales of Corpus Christi, limited himself to saying that he will fight the Mexican government's extradition request.

U.S. authorities arrested Gonzalez

Calderoni Monday night at the McAllen airport on Mexican charges of torture and abuse of authority, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael F. McCormick.

The Mexican attorney general's office has charged Gonzalez Calderoni with torturing members of the Quijano Santoyo family in January 1990 while director of the national anti-narcotics unit.

The torture occurred as agents tried to learn the whereabouts of Francisco Flavio Quijano Santoyo during an investigation of a smuggling ring, according to the Mexican attorney general's office.

The office said federal police officers used pliers to yank the teeth of Hector Quijano and tortured Francisco Quijano Garcia by placing a plastic bag over his head.

Three Quijano brothers died because of the acts, according to an Oct. 16 statement from the attorney general.

The attorney general's office also has issued statements that Gonzalez Calderoni had amassed property worth more than $6 million, including cattle, trailer trucks and heavily guarded ranches.

Mexican officials said most of the wealth was acquired after 1985, when Gonzalez Calderoni became a commander in a division of the Federal Judicial Police, Mexico's main anti-drug agency.

Charges of "unexplained enrichment" were dropped later for lack of proof, according to the Excelsior news agency in Mexico.

Gonzalez Calderoni took leave in October 1992. The attorney general's office said in February 1993 that he had fled to the United States.

Under the U.S.-Mexico extradition treaty, Mexico now has 60 days to present evidence against Gonzalez Calderoni to a U.S. judge, who determines whether to return him to Mexico.

Espy begins repaying questionable expenses

By ROBERT GREENE
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy has begun writing personal checks to clear up problems with his travel expenses, including some he had originally tried to pass on to taxpayers.

The latest reimbursement includes $450 to the American Crop Protection Association, a trade group for the pesticide industry, for a night he spent a year ago as the group's guest at a West Virginia resort.

Jay Vroom, president of the group, known until Tuesday as the National Agricultural Chemicals Association, said the money was repaid in August.

Espy's attorney, Reid Weingarten, did not respond to a request by The Associated Press to explain why the reimbursement was made in late August for an event that occurred in September 1993. Espy's original travel voucher claimed some small personal expenses but did not note the lodging expenses.

Weingarten confirmed to The Washington Post that the repayment had been made.

Espy is under investigation by independent counsel Donald Smaltz, who was named by a three-judge panel on Sept. 9. Among the areas of his inquiry is Espy's acceptance of travel on a corporate jet, lodging and professional sports tickets from Tyson Foods Inc., the Arkansas-based poultry empire with ties to President Clinton.

Espy released travel documents and other information to reporters last Friday in response to Freedom of Information Act requests by The AP and other news organizations.

Espy also said then he would have an Agriculture Department lawyer review his travel plans.

CBS News reported Tuesday that Espy had written a $700 check for four Super Bowl tickets Espy received in January from an Atlanta Museum that received Forest Service funds to develop a Smokey Bear exhibit.

Espy had originally filed a disclosure form valuing his tickets at $350, the price of two.

When The Associated Press first reported about the tickets last month, the Fernbank Museum of Natural History said it had to pay $900 for the tickets, reflecting the face value of four plus $200. The museum had to pay the higher price because of the difficulty in finding tickets that close to the game.

"We haven't received that check," said museum spokeswoman Mary Stimmel. "It's probably somewhere between Washington and Atlanta."

Espy also has reimbursed the government for about $6,200 in lease payments for a Jeep Cherokee he sometimes uses for personal transportation in his home state of Mississippi. In a report today, The Wall Street Journal said Smaltz is looking into whether Espy used a second government car for personal transportation.

Espy also wrote a personal check last week to reimburse the government for $193.50 to cover travel expenses for portions of a trip to the state.

Appeals court upholds federal anti-porn law

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal appeals court reinstated on Tuesday a law requiring people who produce sexually explicit films and photographs to keep records of the names and ages of their actors or models.

A three-judge panel of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia said the law, the Child Protection and Obscenity Enforcement Act of 1988, and regulations linked to it do not violate free-speech rights.

The 2-1 decision reversed a federal trial judge's ruling that had struck down the law and regulations. They had been challenged by the American Library Association, American Booksellers Association, American Society of Magazine Photographers and other groups.

"We are satisfied that the act and regulations are constitutional as they apply to the vast majority of the materials affected by them, namely the commercially produced books, magazines, films and videotapes that cater to 'adult' tastes," Judge James Buckley wrote for the court.

His opinion was joined by Judge Stephen Williams, but Judge John W. Reynolds dissented.

"This law is over-broad, chilling and a questionable deterrent to child pornography, and thus runs contrary to the First Amendment," said Reynolds, a federal trial judge from Wisconsin.

The law, as amended, requires producers of materials depicting sexually explicit acts to make and keep records documenting the names and ages of the persons portrayed. Statements must be attached to the materials telling where such information is kept, and on request must be supplied to federal investigators.

Failure to keep the records is a felony, and first-time offenders can be sentenced to two years in prison and fined.

But the required information may not be used as evidence in child-pornography prosecutions — those in which people are charged with exploiting minors.

Buckley said Congress intended that the law would help "prevent the exploitation of children by requiring those responsible for photographing or videotaping sexually explicit acts ... to secure proof of the performer's age and to keep a record of the same as evidence of their compliance."

His opinion rejected arguments that the law is "content-based."

"The fact that those covered by the act are content-defined does not affect the content of the speech they are engaged in producing and distributing," Buckley wrote. "We conclude that the requirements imposed ... are addressed to legitimate governmental concerns that are unrelated to speech."

The appeals court also ruled that the law could be applied to producers outside the United States.

Government prosecutors have a "most definite interest in plugging a loophole that would be created for domestic child pornographers if they were able to send their wares to secondary producers abroad for re-export to the United States," Buckley said.

Bomb spews nails into two soldiers

FORT POLK, La. (AP) — One of the soldiers injured by a homemade bomb remained hospitalized Tuesday in guarded condition but the other was released from the hospital, the Vernon Parish Sheriff's Office said.

Detective Scott Mount said he hoped to interview Sgt. Ed Luckini, 28, of Pueblo, Colo., late Tuesday, if Luckini was in shape to talk. "He's in a lot of pain," Mount said.

He said he spoke Tuesday with Luckini's roommate, Sgt. Lloyd Bailey, 26, of Marceline, Mo., but did not get any leads to whoever set the bomb loaded with finishing nails on the hood of Luckini's car.

"He's got quite a few holes in his head and face. He's very sore. He's on medication. But he's going to live through it," Mount said.

He said Bailey told him, as Luckini had Monday, that they walked out of Luckini's mobile home early Monday and found the bomb on the hood of his car. It went off in Luckini's hands, injuring both men and damaging the car and mobile home.

Neighbors said Luckini had 1 1/4-inch nails protruding from his eyes, face, lips, arms and upper body. His right arm reportedly was broken, and he was severely burned.

"I was pulling nails out of his lips so he could talk," next-door neighbor Marie Fontenot said. Luckini was in LSU Medical Center in Shreveport on Tuesday.

Both soldiers are members of the 2nd Battalion, 43rd Air Defense Artillery (Patriot).

House bill would reduce federal regulation of drinking water

By CURT ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation to reduce federal regulation of drinking water and help small communities pay for improvements to their systems was approved Tuesday by a House panel.

The bill sent to the House floor by the Energy and Commerce Committee represents a hard-fought compromise between environmental groups, states and cities and the Clinton administration over how to comply with water quality laws.

"We've achieved a consensus bill," said Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., a prime sponsor. Environmental groups said the breakthrough was "significant" but cautioned they would withdraw support if any major changes are made in the compromise.

"We're very skittish," said Erik Olson, an attorney for the Natural Resources Defense Council. "Tugging on any yarn in this would unravel the whole thing."

Current law has been criticized for requiring all systems to adhere to "cookie-cutter" standards, for not helping small water systems pay for government-mandated improvements and for unworkable monitoring requirements.

The legislation approved Tuesday cuts the number of contaminants a water system must test for, provides $200 million in financial assistance, more technical help for small systems to meet standards and allow exemptions from some rules where water is still assured to be safe.

"It is balanced, in providing relief to the states for public works," said Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman John Dingell, D-Mich. "At the same time, it ensures the public health and existing national standards."

Slattery, whose home state of Kansas is eligible for $14 million in grants for water treatment improvements under the bill, said reducing the number of contaminants that must be tested for won't jeopardize public safety.

He said current rules that require Kansas water systems to test for herbicides that aren't used in the state are a waste of time and money. The bill allows local authorities to decide the contaminants sought in water testing.

The measure would greatly cut compliance costs for small systems, generally those that serve fewer than 3,300 people. The Senate version would affect systems serving 10,000 people, which is about 90 percent of those in the United States.

The bill also would rescind a requirement that EPA each year come up with a list of 25 new contaminants to be checked in drinking water, whether there is a scientific reason or not.

"We don't need that kind of ridiculous regulation," Slattery said.

If the bill passes the House, it must be reconciled with the Senate version before final passage is possible. With time running out in this session of Congress, it is uncertain when or if that will occur.

Unusual event for China: Eight killed, 30 wounded in Beijing street clash

By CHARLENE L. FU
Associated Press Writer

BEIJING (AP) — Even with rising crime in China, a shootout in Beijing on Tuesday that left eight people dead and more than 30 wounded was highly unusual in a nation that keeps a tight grip on its citizens.

An Iranian diplomat and his son were among those killed in the early morning shootout on a major thoroughfare.

China has a strict ban on civilian ownership of guns and ammunition and harsh penalties meant to deter crime, including wide use of the death penalty.

Yet, the government reported a 20 percent increase in the number of serious and violent crimes nationwide in the first six months of this year.

Current economic reforms have made many Chinese richer. But they also have led to enormous leaps in crime, drug abuse, prostitution — and the most corrupt government since the Communists took power in 1949.

"China is becoming an increasingly anarchic society," David Shambaugh, senior lecturer in Chinese politics at the University of London, wrote earlier this year in Current History. "China's social fabric is fraying."

The rush-hour shooting rampage occurred shortly after 7 a.m. when a single gunman fired indiscriminately on the Second Ring Road, near a compound where foreign diplomats and journalists live.

The man ran down the middle of the road, firing an automatic rifle, probably an AK-47, witnesses said. They saw the windows of a passing bus explode and saw the gunman shoot a motorcyclist.

He hailed a minivan taxi and got into the back, said an Asian diplomat whose apartment faces the road. When the driver and a passenger in the front seat tried to flee, the gunman shot both at point-blank range. The passenger appeared to have died, said the diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

After shooting the two men in the minivan, the gunman fled down the road, pursued by police with automatic rifles who shot him to death.

Officials at the Iranian Embassy said Yusef Mohammadi Pishknari and one of his sons were shot to death. Another son was shot in the leg.

The official Xinhua News Agency reported Mohammadi's two daughters were taken to a hospital.

It was unclear if all the victims were hit by the gunman. The son who was wounded ran back to the diplomatic compound screaming that police had shot his father and siblings.

The Iranian government summoned China's top diplomat in Tehran to protest the shootings and planned its own investigation, said Tehran radio, monitored in London by the British Broadcasting Corp.

Footage taken by a Canadian camera crew after the shooting showed at least one person lying dead on the pavement, and an elderly woman who was bleeding profusely being loaded into an ambulance.

Xinhua carried a four-sentence report saying eight were killed and more than 30 injured, but did not give a motive. The front page of the tabloid Beijing Evening News carried an even briefer report.

Chinese authorities stopped a Western television crew from feeding their tape of the shooting, and briefly detained a Japanese photographer who was on the scene.

Police would give no information about the gunman, but the fact that he had use of an automatic weapon suggested he may have been part of the military or China's armed police force.

The number of illegal weapons has soared in recent years, particularly in the countryside where security is more lax.

EEOC drops its religious harassment guidelines

By DAVID PACE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Religious groups and conservative lawmakers declared victory Tuesday after the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission withdrew guidelines dealing with religious harassment in the workplace.

The proposed rules were part of comprehensive guidelines governing workplace harassment that the commission voted 3-0 Monday to withdraw from further consideration.

The controversy arose a year ago when an Atlanta lawyer began advising business clients that they could avoid religious harassment lawsuits under the proposed guidelines only by banning all religious expression in the workplace, including the wearing of a cross or a yarmulke.

Church groups quickly took up the cause, flooding the EEOC and congressional offices with thousands of letters and telephone calls. Mike Widomski, a spokesman for the EEOC, estimated that the commission received more than 100,000 letters urging it to drop religion from the harassment guidelines.

As originally drafted, the guidelines defined unlawful religious harassment as any verbal or physical conduct that "denigrates or shows hostility or aversion toward an individual because of his/her ... religion ... or that of his/her relatives, friends or associates."

Widomski said the commission "felt it was better to withdraw the guidelines in light of the public outcry and the number of letters that were received."

Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., one of the leaders of congressional opposition to the guidelines, said, "There will be many more battles to fight but this is certainly a victory for religious freedom."

The commission's vote was the second victory in a week for religious groups. President Clinton last Thursday ordered government lawyers to stop arguing before an appeals court that a couple's creditors could seize money they gave to their church.

James A. Smith, director of government relations for the Southern Baptist Convention, said the two events suggest the Clinton administration is making a concerted effort to score political points with religious Americans.

"The likelihood is that these things are part of a larger attempt to reorient the administration's perception among religious peoples," he said.

In June, the Senate approved a resolution by a 94-0 vote calling on the EEOC to drop religion from the proposed workplace harassment guidelines. A month later, the Senate inserted an amendment to fiscal 1995 spending legislation for the EEOC instructing the commission to remove religion from the proposed rules.

Gary Bauer, president of the Family Research Council, a conservative lobbying group that has been fighting the guidelines, said Tuesday the fact they were even proposed shows "how out of touch the bureaucracy of Washington is with the concerns of average Americans."

While the religious harassment rules sparked the controversy, the guidelines also were intended to address workplace harassment on the basis of race, color, gender, national origin, age or disability.

Widomski said the commission has no immediate plans to draft a new set of guidelines to cover either religious harassment or any of the areas included in the original proposal.

That could change, however, when the Senate confirms Clinton's nomination of three new commission members, including a new chairman. The current chairman, Tony Gallegos, will leave the commission once the three are confirmed.

Broadway composer Jule Styne dies at 88

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Composer Jule Styne, whose brash Broadway musicals like Gypsy and Funny Girl showcased such stars as Ethel Merman and Barbra Streisand, died Tuesday at 88.

Styne, who won an Oscar and a Tony and wrote 1,500 songs during a seven-decade career that continued into the 1990s, died at Mount Sinai Hospital, where he had undergone open heart surgery six weeks ago.

Styne wrote for some of the theater's biggest names and most distinctive performers, once saying, "Without the rendition there is no song."

He gave both Streisand and Carol Channing their signature songs — "People" and "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend," respectively.

He also created music for Judy Holliday in Bells Are Ringing; Phil Silvers and Nancy Walker in Do Re Mi; Silvers and Nanette Fabray in High Button Shoes; Bert Lahr and Dolores Gray in Two on the Aisle; Carol Burnett in Fade Out-Fade In; Robert Morse in Sugar; and Mary Martin, for whom he wrote several songs for Peter Pan.

Styne was the last link to such master American stage composers as Irving Berlin, Cole Porter, George Gershwin, Jerome Kern and Richard Rodgers, who honed their craft on Broadway in the 1920s and '30s and whose tunes were the pop music of the day.

"He gave me the divine gift of 'Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend,' and anyone who ever worked with him would say Jule Styne is a star's best friend," Channing, who became a star singing Styne's music in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, said Tuesday.

Styne's masterpiece was Gypsy, written for Merman, who played the domineering mother of stripper Gypsy Rose Lee. The 1959 musical, which has lyrics by Stephen Sondheim, includes the defiant "Everything's Coming Up Roses" and the lyrical "Small World."

The show has had a remarkable life, receiving successful Broadway revivals in 1974 with Angela Lansbury and again in 1989 with Tyne Daly. Bette Midler played Mama Rose in a well-received TV version last year.

Besides Sondheim, Styne worked with such lyricists as Frank Loesser, Sammy Cahn, Betty Comden and Adolph Green.

He won an Academy Award for "Three Coins in the Fountain," from the 1954 movie of the same name, and a Tony for Hallelujah Baby in 1968. "People," from Funny Girl, was a top five chart hit in 1964 for Streisand at a time when few non-rock songs topped the charts.

Among his other songs were "I Don't Want to Walk Without You, Baby," "Make Someone Happy," "I'll Walk Alone," "It's Been a Long, Long Time," "I Guess I'll Hang My Tears Out to Dry," "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend," "I Fall in Love Too Easily," "It's Magic," "The Party's Over" and "I Still Get Jealous."

Styne, whose first name was pronounced Julie, was born in London.

As a child entertainer, he once ran on stage to sing with the great music-hall star Harry Lauder, a performer the youngster would often imitate. His parents were furious and made him go backstage and apologize.

Lauder told the youngster, "You're very talented but don't do what I do or anybody does. Do what you can do. Take piano lessons or violin lessons."

Styne took Lauder's advice. When the family emigrated to America in 1912, they settled in Chicago. Styne's parents were poor but bought a piano for $4 a week.

By the time he was 11, Styne was a guest soloist with the Chicago and Detroit symphonies. He later won a scholarship to the Chicago College of Music. He became a U.S. citizen about this time, in 1916.

His career as a child prodigy ended abruptly when he injured his finger, losing feeling in it for several years. Yet Styne never gave up the piano.

Corpus Christi still faces rough sailing for Columbus ships

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Three replicas of the ships Christopher Columbus sailed to the New World have hit rough waters.

The Spain '92 Foundation, a Washington, D.C.-based group that helped bring the ships to the United States, is accusing the financially troubled Las Carabelas Columbus Fleet Association of mismanagement and breach of contract.

"We are most displeased and wholeheartedly disagree with this drift from the agreement," wrote Rafael Mazarrasa, president of the Spain '92 Foundation in a Sept. 13 letter to Rick Stryker, fleet association president.

Spain and the fleet association agreed in April 1993 to allow the ships to be displayed in Corpus Christi for the next 50 years. Spain '92 is a partner in the exhibit.

Stryker downplayed the rift, saying the two groups are fighting for the same goal: to put the ships in a safe, visible location.

"We've got some significant problems, and we've got to figure them out," Stryker said.

The fleet association says its financial problems are driven by high maintenance costs of the ships, difficulty raising money and an April barge accident that damaged the Pinta and Santa Maria.

The damage led to a 38 percent drop in attendance during the summer, according to the fleet association.

But Mazarrasa was skeptical.

"None of the woes that you report, neither solely nor combined, explain the deviations from the original plans," Mazarrasa said in the letter, excerpts of which were published Tuesday in the Corpus Christi Caller-Times. "From a legal standpoint, according to our lawyers, this constitutes a breach of contract."

Mazarrasa's letter does not threaten to take the ships out of Corpus Christi. But he has said that he will consider other offers if the problems can't be worked out.

The fleet association is looking into a plan to move two of the ships from a Port Authority cargo dock where the ships currently operate as a floating museum.

Under the plan, the Pinta and the Santa Maria would be moved to repair damage caused by the out-of-control barge.

Mazarrasa said splitting up the ships would "put an end to the Fleet's cohesion, thus destroying its public appeal and adversely affecting revenues."

Mazarrasa also said the plan differs from the original agreement and proposal that Corpus Christi sent to Spain, which said a permanent site for the replicas could be between the Texas State Aquarium and the Lexington Museum on the Bayfront.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I must comment on your reply to the woman whose gentleman friend's only drawback is his terrible teeth. You recommended candidly saying, "You really need to see a dentist — let me refer you to mine."

I hope it works for her. When my husband I were courting, the only thing I found seriously disturbing was the miserable condition of his teeth. The one time I mentioned it, he blew up, and I never mentioned it again. However, our compatibilities far outweighed the teeth issue, so I decided to bear with it and hope he would change. He didn't.

After we were married, I got him to brush his teeth more regularly, but he still refused to see a dentist — even when his gums were in such bad condition, he bled on the pillowcase! When I pointed this out to him, he said, "I'll be fine." (Need I tell you what his breath smells like?)

Abby, what would make a grown man behave this way? Is there anything I can do?

BAFFLED IN VIRGINIA

DEAR BAFFLED: He behaves this way because he is absolutely terrified of seeing a dentist. As a boy, he probably had a very painful experience in the dentist's chair.

Perhaps if you told his physician about this hangup, he could explain that a person's general health is seriously threatened if his teeth are rotting.

He could also explain that dentistry has come a long way in recent years, and while the discomfort is temporary, the rewards are permanent.

DEAR ABBY: Re the rooster-shaped alarm clock and where you can buy one: Your search is over — you can have mine. But I must warn you that this is the most annoying alarm clock ever made!

The alarm is bad enough: "cock-a-doodle-doo" at an ear-shattering volume over and over again. But when you finally shut it off by pushing down its comb, the rooster says "Good morning" in an unnaturally cheerful voice.

Abby, nobody should be that cheerful at 7 a.m. — least of all the fatuous fowl that disturbs my slumber. This chicken is really starting to get on my nerves, so please take it off my hands before I choke it.

Since the clock was a gift from a friend, please don't mention my name. Just sign me ...

NOTHING TO CROW ABOUT

DEAR NOTHING: Thank you for the rooster clock, whose cock-a-doodle-doo is so authentic I thought I had a live rooster in the house.

And to all who wrote asking where such a clock is available, they are advertised in numerous mail-order catalogs — and many novelty shops and electronics stores also carry crowing clocks.

DEAR ABBY: "Delaware" asked, "What does it mean when a person puts a postage stamp upside down on an envelope?"

You replied, "It could mean, 'I love you,' 'I'm in a hurry' or 'I need glasses'."

Abby, that may be correct, but it also means that the writer is right-handed and buys 29-cent stamps by the roll.

When those stamps are used by a right-handed person, they come off the roll upside down! When I have a lot of envelopes to stamp, I can't be bothered turning each stamp right side up. This has been my pet peeve for years.

Treatments for sickle cell anemia show promise

By DR. ALEC S. GOLDENBERG
New York University
Medical Center
For AP Special Features

Three experimental treatments undergoing testing today promise future hope for patients with sickle cell anemia.

Experimental treatments are now being made available to a small number of patients participating in controlled trials at a few major medical centers.

Sickle cell anemia occurs primarily in persons of African descent, although it can occur in other ethnic groups.

People who inherit the two genes for the disease, one from each parent, develop an abnormal form of hemoglobin that causes red blood cells to lose their flexible disk shape and assume a sickle shape.

Sickled red cells can get caught in small blood vessels, causing joint destruction, extreme pain and other damage. Such sickle cell crises are often unpredictable, but they can be brought on by an infection or trauma.

A crisis is usually treated by giving the patient oxygen, painkillers and extra fluids, and antibiotics if an infection is present. In some crises, a blood transfusion may be required.

Two of the new treatments use an identical and unusual strategy. They are designed to switch on the activity of a gene that produces hemoglobin during fetal life but becomes inactive after birth. Fetal hemoglobin does not cause sickling, and so the patient is given a supply of red cells that behave normally.

There are hopes that turning on the fetal hemoglobin gene for a prolonged period with drug treatment will stop the body's production of abnormal hemoglobin, eliminating sickling crises.

One of the treatments uses a combination of hydroxyurea, a drug used to treat some forms of leukemia and which activates the fetal gene, and erythropoietin, a growth factor that stimulates red blood cell production and is available in a genetically engineered form.

A second treatment uses arginine butyrate, a compound derived from an organic chemical named butyrate, to stimulate production of fetal hemoglobin. The potential beneficial effects of the compound were discovered in a screening program that tested many chemicals for their possible use against sickle cell anemia.

Side effects of hydroxyurea can include lowered levels of white and red blood cells. The potential side effects of butyrate are not well known, since the compound is in the earliest stage of testing.

Both treatments are in clinical trials and are not widely available for sickle cell anemia patients, although hydroxyurea and erythropoietin are approved by the Food and Drug Administration for other conditions.

In some severe, life-threatening cases, patients may undergo a bone marrow transplant, wiping out the sickle hemoglobin-producing cells with drugs and radiation and replacing them with normal cells from a matched donor. However, this can be complicated by an immune rejection reaction.

Approximately one in 10 Americans of African descent carries the sickle cell anemia gene. When two carriers have children, there is one chance in four for each child to inherit two disease genes.

The ultimate value of these new approaches is yet to be determined. It will emerge over the next few years as results of the experimental trials become known.

Nursing can be a rewarding career

As a young girl, Jackie Sublett felt drawn to nursing as a career, and today students and patients at Coronado Hospital benefit from her foresight. Sublett, a 1977 graduate of Frank Phillips College in Borger, joined the college's instructional staff as a full-time vocational nursing teacher in August 1994.

Sublett currently provides pre-clinical training on campus while continuing to nurse at Coronado Hospital where she has been employed for over 15 years. Beginning in October, Sublett will spend two days per week teaching FPC nursing students during clinical training at Coronado Hospital.

She was a nurse's aide at Highland General Hospital before graduating from the FPC vocational nursing program in 1977. After fourteen years as a Licensed Vocational Nurse in Pampa, Sublett received an associate's degree in nursing from Amarillo College.

She taught part-time at FPC for three years before joining the staff on a full-time basis.

Sublett's father was a strong influence in her decision to enter the field of vocational nursing.

"He suffered a heart attack on Labor Day weekend just after I had started nursing school, and I spent five years nursing him until his death in 1985."

Her experience spans many areas including emergency room, intensive care, MedSurg (medical surgical floor), and quality assurance.

"ER is my first love, though. It is always different; it's not always trauma and bad experiences. We get to work with the police department, sheriff's department and other community services. We really have the satisfaction of knowing we do some good work for people," she said.

Psychological strain, Sublett notes, is the most difficult aspect of emergency room nursing. "Sometimes when we've had a particularly tough day, the nurses all get together and lend support to each other. The camaraderie among nurses is really wonderful."

Sublett notes that FPC nursing program students commit to several months of intensive classroom study followed by clinical application in numerous environments including doctors' offices, all hospital units, home health care and nursing homes.

The students graduate as vocational nurses who, after passing the state board exam, become licensed vocational nurses. According to Mackie Wood, division chair of the FPC nursing department, about 60% of FPC licensed vocational nurses go on to become registered nurses during their first post-graduate year.

Nursing is a career choice requiring both commitment and character, according to nursing instructors. "You must have a true, deep desire to help people. Nurses aren't dealing just with budgets, profit margins or bottom lines — their primary objective is the welfare of the patient," said Sublett.

The FPC vocational nursing program includes pre-clinical and clinical training in Borger as well as in the off-campus locations in Dalhart, Dumas, Pampa, Perryton and Guymon, Okla. Students who satisfactorily complete the college's 12-month training course receive a certificate of completion and are prepared to work in a nursing situation as graduate vocational nurses. The program is jointly approved by the Texas State Board of Vocational Nurse Examiners and the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board.

The vocational nursing division is currently accepting applications for the 1995-1996 class. Application deadline is April 1, 1995.

After a decade, the mystery is solved

By PHIL THOMAS
For AP Special Features

Owen Keane, the moody, introspective lead of Terence Faherty's novel, "Die Dreaming," hasn't done much with his life since graduating from high school.

Keane once aspired to be a priest but dropped out of the seminary because of his "desire to solve mysteries, the need to know the answers, especially those that couldn't or shouldn't be known."

A series of odd jobs followed, and Keane is working as a liquor store clerk when he gets an invitation to attend the 10-year reunion of his high school class. The invitation also contains a solicitation to buy ad space in the reunion program.

So, along with his acceptance, Keane buys an ad in which he lists himself as a private detective.

A harmless enough joke — for anyone but Keane.

When he arrives at the reunion, his detective services are quickly sought by a former classmate who tells him she is being blackmailed.

Keane agrees to look into the matter, only to find that a practical joke is being played on him. But soon enough a real mystery arises when another classmate refers to an incident that he and others who belonged to the school's "in" group had taken part in years earlier.

The talkative classmate is quickly hushed by the others, but Keane's need to know the answers cannot be put down and he spends years trying to find out just what the mystery was that involved his former schoolmates. He does, just in time for the group's 20th high school reunion.

His revelation almost costs Keane his life in what makes for a terrific ending to an engrossing plot.

BASEBALL
BOSTON (AP) — Butch Hobson was fired as manager of the Boston Red Sox after three losing seasons.

Hobson's record was 207-232. He played eight years in the majors, six with Boston.

MONTREAL (AP) — Acting baseball commissioner Bud Selig has responded favorably to a suggestion to hold a World Series between the Montreal Expos and the New York Yankees, the Montreal Gazette reported.

But the proposal has not been met with a response from the Major League Baseball Players Association, the Gazette said.

The Expos had the National League's best record, the Yankees had the best mark in the AL.

TENNIS

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. (AP) — Former tennis star Vitas Gerulaitis was killed when a broken propane heater filled the cottage where he was staying with so much carbon monoxide that investigators had to retreat for gas masks.

Gerulaitis, 40, was found dead Sunday afternoon. Police said the fumes seeped into the heating and air conditioning system of the cottage.

The Suffolk County medical examiner found carbon monoxide traces during an autopsy. Investigators recorded carbon monoxide levels that were described as "off the scale."

LONDON (AP) — The three major organizations that run international tennis announced an agreement aimed at unifying their anti-drug programs.

The agreement will unite the testing and review guidelines of the ATP men's tour, the WTA women's tour and the International Tennis Federation, which runs the four Grand Slam tournaments and the Davis Cup.

Under the agreement, a single anti-drug program will be administered by a third party, FirstLab, to ensure consistency. Random testing will continue, with a list of prohibited substances to be adopted, similar to the list used by the International Olympic Committee.

HOCKEY

NEW YORK (AP) — The NHL apparently has rejected a tax plan proposal by players, leaving collective bargaining negotiations at a standoff.

As of now, the two sides seemingly remain far apart on a new CBA as the opening of the NHL season approaches on Oct. 1. Players fear that owners will lock them out unless a new agreement is reached by then.

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Buffalo Sabres goalie Dominik Hasek, last season's runner-up in the most valuable player vote, skipped practice and began a holdout. Hasek's agent said the Sabres had suspended Hasek.

Hasek led the NHL last season with a 1.95 goals-against average and won the Vezina Trophy, awarded to the league's best goaltender.

Hasek has said he wants a contract "somewhere between what they're paying Alexander Mogilny (about $2.5 million) and Pat LaFontaine ($4.5 million)."

BASKETBALL

DETROIT (AP) — The Phoenix Suns will not match Detroit's offer to restricted free agent Oliver Miller, clearing the way for him to join the Pistons.

The Pistons signed the 6-foot-9, 300-pound center to an offer sheet on Sept. 6 worth a reported $10 million over four years.

Miller played two years with Phoenix, averaging nine points, 6.9 rebounds and two blocked shots.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The Portland Trail Blazers signed free-agent center James Edwards to a one-year contract.

The 38-year-old Edwards, who played for the Los Angeles Lakers last season and is entering his 17th NBA season, is expected to back up Chris Dudley.

In 1,112 career games with Indiana, Cleveland, Phoenix, Detroit, the Los Angeles Clippers and Lakers, Edwards has averaged 13.2 points and 5.3 rebounds.

NEW YORK (AP) — Bob Gutkowski resigned under pressure as president of Madison Square Garden.

A report in The New York Times said Gutkowski, handling negotiations with Rangers holdout Mark Messier, had reportedly offered the Stanley Cup champions' captain $5 million a season. Gutkowski may have been forced out because the new management did not want to pay Messier more than $4 million.

Dave Checketts, president of the New York Knicks, took over for Gutkowski on an interim basis. Viacom, Inc., last month sold the Garden, the Knicks and the Rangers to ITT and Cablevision in a $1.075 billion deal.

Turnovers trouble Cowboys in loss to Lions

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
 AP Sports Writer

IRVING (AP) — Barry Switzer doesn't like the feel of his first football loss in six years.

"It's the same thing," Switzer said. "Losing isn't fun."

Switzer, who hadn't coached in five years after resigning under pressure at Oklahoma, suffered his first NFL loss to Detroit on Monday night, 20-17 in overtime.

"I told the team this is just the start of a long journey and there will be setbacks along the way," Switzer said. "We're just going back to work to be the best team we can be. We've been in deeper holes before."

It was the first loss for the Cowboys in 11 games stretching back to Miami's 16-14 victory on Thanksgiving Day.

Dallas defensive end Charles Haley was preaching patience after the defending Super Bowl champions' loss on a 44-yard field goal with 27 seconds left in overtime.

"This is a veteran team and we'll bounce back," Haley said.

"It is hard to do when you lose in this fashion. Both sides of the ball lost this game. You can't pin the blame on the offense or the defense."

Haley, who led the NFL in sacks, had trouble getting to Lions quarterback Scott Mitchell because of the great blocking by left tackle Lomas Brown.

"The Lions just dictated the tempo of the game to us," Haley said. "Barry Sanders was exceptional. We knew he would get the ball a lot, and we still had trouble stopping him."

Sanders rushed 40 times for 194 yards in a duel with NFL rushing leader Emmitt Smith, who pounded out 143 yards on 29 carries.

Leon Lett blocked two field goal attempts by Jason Hanson, but couldn't reach the kick that gave both teams 2-1 records.

After reviewing the films, Switzer said "turnovers killed us and Barry Sanders had a great game. Lett kept us in the game with those blocks, but we just couldn't make a play in overtime when it counted. Too many mistakes. This is the first time I've lost a game in six years and it hurts."

Switzer was out of coaching for five years after he resigned at Oklahoma before he was hired by Jerry Jones to replace Jimmy Johnson.

Now, the Cowboys have a week off and they need it. "I would like to think we can execute better than we did," disgraced quarterback Troy Aikman said. "Stupid mistakes killed us."

Tight end Jay Novacek said the off-week comes at a good time. "We need it to heal up," Novacek said. "It isn't the end of the world. There has only been one team to ever go undefeated. Being two-time defending world champions, people are going to play like this against us all year."

Still Switzer said he is enjoying his rookie NFL year.

"I'm having fun and we're going to win a lot of games. We're in a lot better position than this team was last year."

Tarrence Lemons scored two touchdowns for the Packers and was the leading rusher with 119 yards on six carries. Oscar Ortega added 51 yards on 10 carries and one touchdown while Randy Tice had 51 yards on four tries.

The Packers had 277 yards in total offense.

Jarrett Woodington and Brandon Albus each scored on punt returns of 35 and 57 yards respectively.

Tarrence Lemons had 11 tackles, four for losses. Jarrett Woodington had nine tackles. Tanner Dyer and Aaron Ace combined on four tackles for losses.

Ace Acevedo is head coach of the Packers. Assistants are Tony Ferrell, Ben Woodington and Ron Alford.

Andrews having hard-luck season so far

ANDREWS — Last season, the Andrews Mustangs posted an 11-2 record and advanced to the Class 4A quarterfinals, losing to Sweetwater, 17-7. This season, the Mustangs are going to have to step it up a notch or two to get that far after an 0-3 start.

The Mustangs' misfortunes actually started before the first practice when 225-pound linebacker Chace Gore, one of the team's top defenders from a year ago, transferred to Carlsbad, N.M. Gore made the all-district team a year ago and had a strong shot at all-state this season.

Then senior running back Kevin Lawrence, who rushed for over 1,200 yards last season, missed the last two games with an injury. He is expected to suit up when Andrews takes on Pampa at 7:30 Friday night in Andrews.

With Gore gone and Lawrence sidelined, the Mustangs have certainly had to fight an uphill battle. But even with those two in the lineup, Andrews could still have had problems getting into the win column.

"Turnovers have been the number one problem. They've had trouble hanging onto the ball every game," says Sports Editor Rudy Diaz of the Andrews County News. "The offensive line has been a weak point. Everybody is new up front and the whole offense has had to be restructured."

Andrews' basic wishbone is directed by 5-10 senior Chris Miller, who could be the one of the best quarterbacks the Harvesters face.

"Miller has an excellent arm. He's real good at throwing out of the pocket," Diaz said.

Chris Fisher, a 5-8, 150-pound split end, leads the receivers with five catches for 180 yards.

Andrews' 4-3 defense is led by 200-pound junior lineman Brian Valenzuela, who is the team leader in tackles. Defensive back Felipe Ortiz (155-pound junior) was all-district last season.

Andrews has lost to Sweetwater, 42-26, Lubbock Estacado, 21-7, and Snyder, 17-7.

Players meet

ATLANTA (AP) — In a meeting that reaffirmed player solidarity but broke no new ground, union head Donald Fehr briefed his members Tuesday on the negotiations that failed to save the 1994 season.

"Everything was about what we expected," said Tom Glavine, the Atlanta Braves' player representative. "Everybody is on the same page. Everybody is behind it the way we've been all along."

Thirty-three players representing 19 teams met with Fehr in a nearly 3 1/2-hour session, the first of a seven-city tour. "Basically I guess you could say it was an information session to make sure everybody was up to date," said Fehr, who will hold another session Wednesday at Tampa, Fla. "We were pleased with how it went. There's no news beyond that."

Brett Butler, the Los Angeles Dodgers' player representative, said the meeting was to clarify the executive board's position for players who were relying on news reports.

"Until they're ready to negotiate, all we can do is inform our players, keep having these meetings and keep them up to snuff on what's going on," Butler said.

Carter wants more catches

HOUSTON (AP) — Tight end Pat Carter has made an unhappy discovery: The Houston Oilers are still a run-and-shoot team.

That's not what he was told when he took advantage of his free agency to sign with the Oilers in the offseason. He wanted to be a part of the offense, and the Oilers promised him more exposure.

With one catch in three games, he's still waiting. "I was only in on three passing plays (in Sunday's 15-7 loss to Buffalo) and one of those I had to stay in and block," Carter said. "I was expecting to be more a part of the offense. They told me I would be involved when they were courting me."

Carter languished on the Los Angeles Rams, eager to catch a few passes. It didn't happen. So when he had a chance at free agency he took it, even though the Oilers had been strictly run-and-shoot.

The Oilers hired Dick Coury as offensive coordinator to implement the tight end system, and Coury brought in quarterback Sean Salisbury, adept at the pro-style offense but new to the run-and-shoot.

But Salisbury has been waived and the tight end alignment is on the back burner.

"It's not even close to what I was expecting," Carter said. "I guess we're still a run-and-shoot team."

Carter thought Sunday's game against the Bills would be his chance after watching film of New England tight end Ben Coates catching nine passes for 124 yards the previous week against Buffalo.

It didn't happen. The Oilers offense, struggling to mesh the run-and-shoot with some forms of the tight end and two-back alignments, has had problems since training camp. Those woes only increased in the regular season.

Bucky Richardson has tried to learn on the run while playing for injured starting quarterback Cody Carlson.

The offensive line has been struggling with the loss of Mike Munchak to retirement and the departure of Doug Dawson to the Cleveland Browns.

The Oilers have been slow to adapt to the use of Carter's catching abilities, although they admit he's a better receiver than they expected.

Casillas happy to be playing again

By BARRY WILNER
AP Football Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The fear of not playing pro football this year was too real for Tony Casillas.

Casillas admitted Tuesday that he was concerned about not reaching a contract agreement with any NFL team after the Kansas City Chiefs voided a four-year, $6 million deal during the summer. Casillas claimed he was suffering from hypertension, and Kansas City's team doctors said he was OK to play.

He wound up returning a $1.2 million signing bonus and being declared a free agent again.

"The only thing I said was I had a chance to go back there on a Friday and report, and they felt they didn't have time to wait that long," Casillas said Tuesday, one day after signing a one-year contract with the New York Jets. "So they said they would put me on the NFI (non-football injury list, where he could be sidelined for the season). I think if they showed patience, the whole thing would have been resolved.

"When you are not able to play the whole year, it kind of threatens you to make a decision and that was my decision, to settle the contract.

"I ended up being a Jet and I was happy to get it done. I'm happy to come back and play football again."

He'll play for a team that couldn't stop the run in its first loss this season, last Sunday against Miami, and has no stars at defensive tackle, where Casillas has been a stronger performer for eight NFL seasons.

"Eagle tackle is a lot better for my style," he said of the inside spot that has been shared by Paul Frase and Mark Gunn (out 6-8 weeks with an elbow injury). "I can get upfield and get penetration. That is basically what I like to do, an attack position, and there's a chance to make big plays there. It's definitely a position where you cause a lot of problems."

The Jets had salary cap problems that delayed the signing of Casillas.

They had to waive three players — defensive lineman Coleman Rudolph, the team's second-round pick in the 1993 draft; wide receiver Rob Carpenter; linebacker Tuineau Alipate — to make room for the 30-year-old Casillas.

The one-year deal is worth about $650,000, less than Casillas made with Dallas last season. But Casillas will be a free agent once again in 1995.

"With the salary cap and a lot of different things, I knew obviously the money wasn't going to be as much," he said. "I just want to get back into it and hopefully sign an extension here or go somewhere else. My main concern is to get on the football field and play."

Lady Harvesters sweep Canyon

PAMPA — The Pampa Lady Harvesters moved into third place in the District 1-4A volleyball standings with a 15-5, 15-9 win over Canyon Tuesday night at McNeely Fieldhouse.

The Lady Harvesters are 2-1 in district play and 9-5 for the season.

Pampa's attack was paced by Serenity King with nine digs and Tammy Chesher with eight kills. Jane Brown and Jennifer Jones had eight digs each while Mechelle Abbott had four kills and three blocks.

The Pampa girls play at Dumas on Saturday with the matches starting at 2 p.m.

In 9th grade action, Pampa also beat Canyon, 15-11, 15-10.

Heather Robben served eight points for the Pampa 9th graders, who now have won eight of nine matches this season. The Pampa 9th graders play Dumas there Saturday at 10 a.m.

Michigan, Colorado clash should be close

By RICK WARNER
AP Football Writer

The last time Michigan played Colorado, Bill McCartney was in his first year as a Wolverines' assistant coach under Bo Schembechler.

McCartney will be on the other side Saturday when fourth-ranked Michigan meets No. 7 Colorado in Ann Arbor. And the Colorado coach will be rooting for a different outcome than 1974, when the Buffaloes were blanked 31-0 at Michigan Stadium.

This year's game should be much closer.

Both teams are 2-0, including victories over nationally ranked teams in their last game. Michigan hasn't played since beating No. 9 Notre Dame 26-24 on Sept. 10. Colorado crushed No. 16 Wisconsin 55-17 last Saturday.

McCartney is impressed by the Wolverines.

"This is a very, very good Michigan team, one of their best in recent years," he said. "We will have to play a great game in all phases of the game to beat them."

Michigan coach Gary Moeller, who was an assistant with McCartney on Schembechler's staff, has similar praise for Colorado.

"They have talent all over," Moeller said. "In my opinion, they are much more athletically talented than Notre Dame. We are going to have to play our greatest game ... to win."

The game will feature two of the most versatile offenses in the country. Colorado has Kordell Stewart, the nation's second-rated passer, and Rashaan Salaam, who leads the NCAA in scoring and is among the leaders in rushing and all-purpose yardage.

Michigan has Todd Collins, whose 65 percent completion rate is the best in school history; Amani Toomer, the Big Ten's leading receiver; and Tim Biakabutuka, who has rushed for over 100 yards in both games as a fill-in for injured star Tyrone Wheatley.

Wheatley, the preseason Heisman Trophy favorite who has been sidelined with a separated shoulder, is practicing this week but his status for Saturday's game is still uncertain.

Whether he plays or not, it's going to be a high-scoring shootout that won't be decided until the closing minutes. Michigan is a 3 1/2-point favorite, but the pick here is ... COLORADO 35-31.

Chiefs' coach draws criticism for keeping Montana in Atlanta game

By DOUG TUCKER
AP Sports Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — If Joe Montana gets hurt after a game is out of hand, Marty Schottenheimer would have to duck and cover.

Many fans were horrified Sunday night when Schottenheimer left his aging quarterback in the game after the Chiefs were well in charge of a 30-10 victory over Atlanta.

Where was backup Steve Bono? Isn't Montana's health the top priority for the Chiefs this season, when a Super Bowl berth seems closer than it has for 25 years?

"In retrospect, I should have given Steve Bono the opportunity to play," Schottenheimer said Tuesday. "Not to keep Joe from getting hurt, but to give Steve a chance to play."

Criticism for keeping Montana in harm's way found its way to the coach's door before his weekly media luncheon.

"I guess the experts are questioning why we'd leave Montana in and risk one thing or another," Schottenheimer said. "At about the 10:30 mark, (offensive coordinator Paul Hackett) said, 'Do you want to get Steve ready?'"

"It was 23-3. I said not yet, let's see what happens with this drive. Then they went down and scored and made it 23-10. Then if they get another touchdown, we've got a problem. So I said not right now, and we took it down and scored again."

Schottenheimer said he and Montana have not discussed when they're going to bring in the backups after any victory is assured.

"I'm going to err too late rather than too early making a decision like that," Schottenheimer said. "I've seen it happen before when you take the starter out and put the other guy in. Then something goes sour and you say, 'Well, I'll just put the starter back in and it'll be all right.' But it doesn't get to be all right because all of a sudden the emotion and the momentum of the game has changed.

"I'm always going to probably put the guy in later than somebody else might."

Montana lost time last year to an injured thumb, a pulled hamstring and a teeth-rattling head knock he took in the AFC title game at Buffalo.

Nevertheless, so far this season Montana has taken every snap. Bono has watched from the sideline as the highest-rated passer in NFL history hit 71 of 103 throws for 879 yards and six touchdowns.

Without a doubt, there are fans who figure Montana's health should be Schottenheimer's biggest worry.

"If what they're suggesting," deadpanned the coach, "is you'd better keep your starting quarterback healthy, then I would say, 'Good answer, Sherlock, what other observations do you have today?'"

Unbeaten Giants finding ways to win

By TOM CANAVAN
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — There's only one undefeated team in the NFC and it isn't the Dallas Cowboys or San Francisco 49ers.

It's the New York Giants. They've found a way to open the season with a 3-0 record despite the retirement of Lawrence Taylor, the salary-cap decision to let Phil Simms go and the loss of six other starters to free agency.

"People didn't expect us, of all people, of all teams, to be sitting here," linebacker Corey Miller said Tuesday as Giants left for a five-day vacation. "It really feels good going into the bye week, having beaten three divisional teams and sitting at the top all by ourselves. It's early, but we have to be excited about what we've done."

What the Giants have done is totally unexpected, considering the changes to a playoff team that went 11-5 in 1993. Many predicted nothing better than an 8-8 record and coach Dan Reeves' best estimate was 9-7.

"I knew that's the way it would be after three games," Reeves cracked Tuesday. "That was my prediction all along."

What the Giants have done is find a way to win. Special teams and Dave Meggett did the job in the opener against Philadelphia. The defense stepped up the following week against Arizona. Then Meggett and Dave Brown came up big this past weekend against Washington.

And when the two-time defending Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys were stunned in overtime by the Detroit Lions on Monday night, lo and behold, the Giants were atop the NFC.

"I'd be crazy to tell you I was cheering for the Cowboys," Miller said. "But, hey, it's early. We started out last year the same way and they lost their first two, and they came back and ended up taking the division from us. We have to stay on our toes, rest up and get ready for a 13-week stretch."

While enjoying the start, long-time Giants guard William Roberts preached caution.

"I guess you can say I'm surprised," Roberts said. "I'm happy and I'm proud. I'm not content though. We are going to see most of our adverse situations ahead of us. We have to enjoy this now and realize it is going to take a lot more to get it done."

One person definitely enjoying the view at the top was former Cardinals guard Lance Smith, who signed with the Giants as a free agent in the offseason.

"This is the first time I've ever been 3-0 and the first time I've been on a team that has won games back-to-back-to-back," Smith said. "This is a pretty good feeling."

No one on the Giants thought the quick start would lead to overconfidence.

"We're too young to do that," safety John Booty said. "We're not the world champions. We're not the Super Bowl champions. We can't have that confidence saying we know who we are. We have to keep working hard, everybody."

The sobering thought for the Giants was that they still have to play Dallas twice, Detroit and Minnesota, a team that beat Detroit.

"It's nice to be in this position," Reeves said. "The more big games you play, that means you're playing well. If we can continue to win, then we'll be in a lot of big games. It's when you don't win, you're in trouble."

And right now, the Giants are a long way from trouble.

Discovery lands in California

By JANE E. ALLEN
AP Science Writer

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — No sooner had Discovery and its crew of six made a perfect landing in the Mojave Desert than NASA resumed planning the next space shuttle mission, 10 days away.

The interval between Discovery's 2:13 p.m. landing Tuesday and the planned Sept. 30 launch of Endeavour would fall just short of the nine-day record set last year.

"Any kind of turnaround that short ... is quite an accomplishment," shuttle manager Loren Shriver said after Discovery's wheels touched down on a concrete strip along a dry lakebed.

Shriver said Endeavour's engines have been replaced since they shut down 1.9 seconds before takeoff last month.

Discovery's smooth landing in clear blue skies was marred only by the failure of part of a navigation system, although backup units took over without incident. The easy descent followed an 11-day, 4.57-million-mile journey highlighted by the first unthundered spacewalk in a decade.

The approaching shuttle generated a pair of thunderous sonic booms that rattled windows throughout the Los Angeles area, 70 miles away.

The landing drew 300 to 400 visitors to a hillside viewing stand and another 1,000 NASA employees watched from the base. The astronauts' families, who were expecting the shuttle to land at Kennedy Space Center in Florida, were forced to watch on television.

"This is from your families. They said you landed on the wrong coast," Mission Control told shuttle commander Richard Richards.

"Probably my wife said, 'Again!'" Richards replied. His last shuttle flight in 1992 was supposed to end at Edwards Air Force Base, but rain there forced a detour to Kennedy.

NASA would have preferred a Kennedy landing because the West Coast diversion costs more than $1 million and it takes an extra week to ship the shuttle to home to Florida atop a jumbo jet.

But two days of storms finally forced the second California shuttle landing of 1994. Bad weather brought another shuttle to the desert in April.

State puts liens on lawyers not paying professional tax

AUSTIN (AP) — The state Tuesday started placing liens on the properties of 850 lawyers in Texas who failed to pay their $200-a-year professional tax.

Calling the group "chronic tax chiselers," State Comptroller John Sharp said "Operation: Make 'Em Pay" was aimed at lawyers who haven't paid the tax since it was established in 1992.

"Unfortunately a relatively small number of licensed attorneys seem to think they don't have to play by the same rules as every other Texan, particularly members of every other profession," Sharp said.

The 850 attorneys owe $650,000 in back taxes, penalty and interest, Sharp said. That's money that would go to the state's general revenue fund, which finances education and numerous other services.

In addition, Sharp said his office is double-checking the addresses of another 1,600 lawyers who may have dodged the tax over the past three years.

Of the 43,000 licensed attorneys in Texas, 8,593 — about one in five — aren't up-to-date on their professional tax, Sharp said.

Sharp said the 850 targeted lawyers have received at least six past-due notices. He said if the liens don't make them pay, the state may try to seize their bank accounts.

Professional fees from lawyers, doctors, engineers and others generate about $68 million per year.

There is no problem collecting the tax from other professionals because they risk losing their license to practice since the tax is collected by boards that regulate them, Sharp said. But the lawyer tax is collected by the comptroller's office, which can't revoke their licenses.

That law needs to be changed by the Legislature or the Texas Supreme Court, Sharp said.

Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice Tom Phillips said the court is studying ways to ensure that lawyers pay their taxes.

"We're concerned about the substantial number of lawyers who have not complied with the law," Phillips said.

He said the Legislature, state Supreme Court, or lawyers through a referendum conducted by the State Bar of Texas, could adopt measures to ensure the taxes are paid.

"I think something will happen before the taxes are due next," he said. The annual taxes are due June 1. The 1995 Legislature convenes in January.

Earlier this year, state Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, called on the State Bar of Texas, which regulates and disciplines attorneys, to crack down on lawyers who dodge the tax.

Study: Exercise can reduce breast cancer risk

By JANE E. ALLEN
AP Science Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Women who exercise an average of four hours a week over the course of their childbearing years run almost a 60 percent lower risk of breast cancer, according to a study.

"Four hours of exercise per week is not difficult," said Leslie Bernstein, a professor of preventive medicine at the University of Southern California School of Medicine and the study's chief author. "Even one to three hours of physical exercise per week reduces a woman's risk of breast cancer by about 30 percent."

The findings appear in Wednesday's issue of the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

They were drawn from surveys of 1,090 Los Angeles County women 40 and younger — 545 with newly diagnosed breast cancer and 545 without the disease. The study analyzed the women's exercise habits since they began menstruating.

The risk of breast cancer among those who averaged four hours of exercise a week since menstruation was 58 percent lower than that of women who did no exercise at all.

For younger women, Bernstein said, it's not too late to start exercising. She said the determining factor for women in the study was how much exercise they did when it was averaged out over their childbearing years.

The study did not prescribe any particular sport or type of exercise. But among the activities reported by the women surveyed were individual or team sports, dance or exercise classes, swimming, jogging and working out at the gym.

"I think this is an extremely exciting study," said Dr. Susan M. Love, director of the University of California at Los Angeles Breast Center. "This is the kind of prevention we need. This is lifestyle changes instead of drugs."

Promoting exercise in young women "will not only prevent breast cancer, but osteoporosis and heart disease," said Love, author of "Dr. Susan Love's Breast Book."

The researchers speculated that exercise may protect by altering the production of the ovarian hormones estrogen and progesterone during menstrual cycles. Other research has shown that vigorous athletics can delay the onset of menstruation and halt ovulation in some women. A woman's cumulative exposure to the sex hormones is believed to be associated with breast cancer risk.

Love suggested other mechanisms may be at work. "It may be that (exercise) decreases body fat and increases muscle mass. We know women with a higher percentage of body fat have a higher incidence of breast cancer," she said.

But Bernstein said she observed no association between breast cancer risk and the body mass and body fat of her study subjects.

Once again, an event featuring pairs makes history.
