HOW TO MAKE DARNING more DIFFICULT!

Sewing and darning demand even more from the eyes than reading. Nature didn't plan for such tasks! She had outdoor, distance seeing in her mind. So, to keep the nervous muscular tension as low as possible—and to avoid eyestrain—we must give care to light.

- KEEP THESE LIGHTING RULES IN MIND 1. Use lamp bulbs of the correct wattage... never less than 40-watt MAZDA lamps for three-socket lamps, 60-watt for two-socket lamps, 100-watt for single-socket lamps.

STUDY LAMP Darning or any other close-up task is a cinch if a Reading and Study Lamp is furnishing the illumination. Just the right amount of light with no glare or shadows makes it much easier to study, read or sew.

CHAPTER 26 NEW SURPRISE

McSwain stood, head to one side as if listening. In a moment Marian also caught faint voices calling.

"Daddy," called Silver, then, "Lun."

A white-garbed servant came softly down the path, saw the two of them and turned to go back. Still Marian didn't answer. Marian heard footsteps now and the voices of Silver and of Lon, coming towards them.

"Haven't time to say much," began McSwain. "I'm mighty thankful my fate fell into the hands of a girl of honor, like yourself. Give me a little time; this has been a shock, a tremendous shock."

"Daddy, you old shiek," cried Silver, rounding the shrubbery at the corner. "The idea of your being out in the garden mooning with that red-headed gal. Marian, shame on you!" Her laughter ripped out, covering their silence—been looking all over for you. If you don't come in and drag mother and Wylie apart there's going to be another bridge murder."

Lon stepped to Marian's side and as the other two preceded them down the garden path, slipped one arm about Marian and found her trembling. "Honey, what's wrong?"

"Oh, Lon," she whispered. "I wish we could go home right now."

"We can't very well, it's only half past nine."

"Only half past nine?" she repeated. She had left the card room at nine. Had that whole episode taken only half an hour? To her it had seemed hours.

The group out for partners. Marian found she had drawn Blaine Kelly, McSwain, Mrs. Wylie, Lon Silver, Mr. Wylie and Mrs. McSwain were at the other table.

Marian, who played with brilliance at some times and stupidly at others, found this was one of her worst nights. She could not forget that McSwain was sitting near her watching her covertly with his heavily lidded eyes.

Midnight came with trays of sandwiches and tall, iced nightcaps, and after these were consumed, the Casca left. Escaped, Marian felt, as she sat beside Lon, heard the purr of the motor and the clang of the gates behind the car.

They drove in silence for a while, then Lon spoke. "Silver has certainly changed; she's evidently decided to set her age."

"Either that or she's been taking lessons from Mae West."

"Pr-meww!" trilled Lon, chuckling. "I like her a lot better this way."

"So does Blaine Kelly."

"Silver says he's a new kind of porous plaster, sticks so close she doesn't know how to get rid of him."

"She might try marrying him," came in ironical tones from Marian.

Lon looked at her. "Night cap upset you?" he asked solicitously.

"Sorry," she answered softly, "did you enjoy yourself?"

"I'll say I did. It's like getting a fresh grip on life, stepping out with that crowd. I feel, oh I don't know, all confident again. I was going to take the car down and sell it tomorrow; now I'm going down and beat one of these fellows into giving me a job."

Marian felt crushed. Her weeks of yearning to help had meant nothing, this one evening with those people, had inspired him with fresh confidence in himself. She should be glad, should rejoice in it, but somehow she felt that coming away with this renewed assurance, he would go back there whenever the opportunity presented itself and that was the last thing in the world she wanted him to do.

Hero greeted them boisterously as they drove in. He seemed in as good spirits as Lon.

"Let's go sit on the hill," suggested Lon. "I'm too pepped up to sleep. I'll bring a rug and we'll have a nice powwow before we turn in, eh?"

Hero, tired of chasing shadows, came close, settled down at Marian's side, nuzzled his soft nose into her hand. She looked down and thought of the night in the Nevada cabin. There was one creature who would not desert her for Silver.

"I believe that dog likes you better than he does me," declared Lon, arrested in his talk of Silver.

"No," countered Marian, softly. "He feels I need protection, he knows you don't."

"You need protection?" repeated Lon. "Don't you think I can protect you?"

Marian hesitated a long moment, then—"You can if you recognize the danger."

She recognized the danger now that it was too late. Looking down into the bowl of shadows, beneath the mountain, she picked out the cluster of lights that marked the village in which McSwain lived. Whatever had possessed her to talk as she had? She needed the counsel of a wise, older head than her own to deal with a man like that.

"But the more I see of other women," Lon was saying, "the more I love my wife."

Do you, Lon? she asked eagerly.

"Um-huh," he answered. "You should see the two of you together as I do. You're like the sun, vital and warm, and she's like the moon, mysterious and... perhaps white ice is warm, but I prefer sunlight."

"She's very beautiful," Marian said.

"When she's all dolled up, but I wonder if she'd be as sweet as you are in the mornings, when you're flying around a hot kitchen cooking for your worthless old man. I'll bet she wouldn't."

"My old man isn't worthless," Marian reminded him, but, comforted, went back to the house, grate-

NEW DEAL IS ISSUE IN OKLAHOMA

The new deal will be on the testing block in Oklahoma in the November 6 election. "Bring the new deal to Oklahoma," is the campaign cry of Rep. E. W. Marland (left), a vigorous supporter of President Roosevelt and democratic candidates for governor. W. B. Pines (right), republican candidate for governor, has attacked alleged "wasteful expenditure of relief funds" by democratic politicians. (Associated Press Photos) ful at least that Lon was roused into belief in himself.

She watched him leave in the morning, assurance in the firm line of his chin, confidence in the warm hazel eyes. The stamp of the unemployed had been sloughed off during the night. He was the Lon Casca she had married.

She waved from the hilltop, then raced to the house; there was much to be done before Lon returned. It was Lon's birthday.

After taking a shower and donning a cool, green linen dress she walked down to the highway to the mail box and found a handful of mail and a package.

A letter to her from her mother and a ten dollar bill. "Just remembered it was Lon's birthday, wondered if you had change on hand for sending this for you to use for him as you please."

There was a letter from her father to Lon, a very thin letter. She held it up to the light. It was a check. And the box, addressed to Lon in her brother Jack's scrawling writing. Bless them. What a birthday party they would have! She would use some of the ten dollars, take a bus to Walnut Creek and buy groceries for a dinner royal.

Late that afternoon she toiled back up the hill. No trace of the car yet. Another shower, a fresh frock. The heat was searing the hillside; Lon would be tired, hot. She went into the kitchen and started the fire. A salad of avocado, cream-whipped potatoes, filet mignon steaks with mushrooms, hearts and artichokes browned in butter, fresh sliced peaches and Sauterne. She would compete with the McSwains.

She laid the table in the patio, after hosing the stones until they were cool. There was a car coming, she dashed into her room. Tuffed a powder puff over her nose, patted her hair, sprayed perfume over her shoulder and dashed back.

It was Lon, alone, his face as radiant as the waning sun. She rushed into his arms. "Happy birthday, Lon."

"Birthday?" he asked in surprise. "Well, by George, it is... and what a birthday, Lon, I've got a job."

"I know it," she answered, wrinkling her nose.

"Who told you?" he asked in surprise.

"Your face... and Lon, you've got a package and a couple of letters and mother and dad sent you some money and I used part of it to build you a grand birthday dinner." She paused for lack of breath.

"Hurray for the Cascas," chortled Lon, walking towards the house, Hero nibbling daintily at one hand, the other arm about Marian.

"Looks like winter's over, doesn't it?"

The cake was duly admired, then Marian started dinner while on showered and changed to cool linens. Coming in sleek, immaculate, he smiled at her.

"You haven't asked about my job," he chided, "don't bother, I'll tell you. I'm the new foreman for the Madden Construction company, building the East Brazos high school."

Marian gave one gasp, then crumpled in a heap on the kitchen floor.

Stockholders - New York has reason to know that the administration isn't entirely satisfied with big business contribution to reemployment. Large corporations are feeling quiet but potent pressure to use their accumulated surpluses for the rehabilitation of plant and equipment. The pressure is all unofficial but business leaders have no doubt that it's inspired. They are told by Washington contacts that the government would appreciate constructive cooperation along these lines. There is also an appeal to self-interest. It's pointed out that the most men are put to work on industrial modernization the less federal money will have to be spent for relief—thus reducing the future taxes which industry is so perurbed about already. Behind these arguments lurks the persistent threat of a tax on idle surpluses. So far corporations have been more inclined to meet the threat by declaring larger dividends than by spending money for renovation. This is largely because they fear stockholders' objections to such "disipation" of surplus more than they do the government. All negotiations on this subject have been kept sub rosa to date. New York understands there are two reasons for Washington's indirect approach. It doesn't wish to invite fresh charges of coercing or intimidating industry and it doesn't want to publicize a recovery measure that may come to nothing. But keen observers believe the government must come into the open if the plan is to succeed. They say that corporate reluctance to take a chance on offending stockholders can only be overcome by an educational campaign to sell the idea to the stockholders themselves.
Ironies - Most member houses knew as little as the general public about the Stock Exchange's financial condition until its long-awaited statement was published. Wall Street was favorably impressed. A deficit of only $287,000 under the adverse conditions of 1933 is rated evidence of remarkably canny management. The Exchange's strong asset position banished the fears of many firms that they might be called upon for an extra assessment. Informed circles get a kick out of three ironic features of the report and the manner of its publication. One was the Exchange's urgent plea to the Securities and Exchange Commission to make it clear that the Exchange's assets cannot be used for the payment of its members' debts. The boys wanted to make damn sure they wouldn't be swamped with lawsuits. Another is that restoration of a 10% pay cut to Exchange employees in the middle of 1933 accounts for about three-fourths of the deficit. The Exchange would have been $215,000 better off except for this burst of generosity. The third is the aura of mystery which surrounds many items in the statement. The Exchange declines to clarify them further. Comment runs that if any listed corporation were so vague as to details in its reports to Exchange authorities it would run the risk of being bounced off the Board.

capital—regardless of political attitudes—has developed a lively interest in Manchukuo. The Japanese army guarantees safety of investments and the promise of fat profits has led a group of prominent British financiers—headed by Lord Bessborough—to come to Harbin to look things over personally. These men are keen to get in on the ground floor of public utilities—transportation, telegraph, electric power, and especially cold and iron mines. They know manufacturing must wait a while. If investigation confirms rosy prospects they are prepared to offer large amounts of capital for broad scale development. Realism is the watchword. Political questions don't matter because everything will be done through Tokio. The British will work closely with the Japanese—the former supplying the authority and the latter the money. The Japanese are eager to cooperate. Members of the commission have unofficially indicated that some sort of Anglo-Japanese treaty is possible. Japan may even be offered a position comparable to that of the Dominions in the British Empire economic bloc. English industry will concede a victory to the Dominions if Britain includes Japan as part of the Empire system instead of fighting her. Japan is an indispensable market for Australian wool, Canadian wood-pulp and Indian cotton. British manufacturers must therefore accept Japanese competition in these territories—and like it.
Issue - New York is stirred up by Father Coughlin's reference to annual wages in his latest radio talk. Informed sources believe this will be part of the administration's plan to stabilize employment and heavy industry in particular is set to battle it to the last ditch. The issue could cause a serious rift in the building alliance between FDR and conservative forces.
Sad - The Securities and Exchange Commission is probably the most sought-after tenant in New York. A number of buildings in the financial district are trying to land it as a permanent occupant. The Stock Exchange itself could use tenants in the buildings it owns but sadly enough is disqualified as a landlord. The Commission cherishes the notion that any such relationship might be misconstrued as favoritism.
Sidelights - New York's most original boarder has been discovered. He's laying in a warehouse full of various chemicals as a hedge against inflation—Auto circles expect better sales in 1935 than they had this year. Five million more cars have been scrapped since 1930 than have been replaced. (Copyright McClure Newspaper Syndicate) throting down until we almost called, trying to get here at 9:30 a. m.

That was my one chief worry on this flight. Neither Captain Taylor nor myself are tired, the flight was so easy.
Fly At High Altitude
I flew at the start at an altitude of about 6000 feet and then went between 7000 and 12,000 feet the rest of the way.
We started out at 140 miles an hour, then hopped the plane up to 150 miles and flew the last quarter of the journey at 125 miles an hour.
He and Captain Taylor ate only one sandwich piece of their small food supply during the 15 hours of flying.
And Sir Charles didn't play the ukulele that he got in Honolulu, nor did we have time to sing, Captain Taylor remarked with a smile.
There also was a bottle of liquor in the plane, but it had not been opened.
I "didn't need it," Sir Charles remarked laughingly.
Longs For Highball
But I'm going to the home of my brother and I hope he passes a highball around. I hope I'll get a home cooked meal at his home.
Sir Charles' brother is E. H. K. Smith, who watched anxiously while his "kid brother" was making the long journey over the ocean.
Captain Taylor said that a few hundred miles from the California coast line the plane ran into heavy fog and he had to navigate with instruments.
We struck the California coast a few miles north of San Francisco, he said, "and located our direction by sighting the tops of the hills sticking out of the fog."
The Australian pilot remarked that trans-Pacific commercial flights were a possibility in the not distant future, but said trickiness of the weather, with storms arising in five minutes, was one bit of obstacle to be overcome.
Equipment Being Perfected
But air equipment is being perfected," he added, "and it won't be long until we have commercial flights over the Pacific."
Sentimental reasons caused Kingsford-Smith to land at Oakland, from where he took off on his flight to Sydney in 1928 with three companions in the tri-motored Southern Cross.
Many regarded the flight as "sheer suicide." He left the Oahu land airport May 31, landed in Brisbane. He then hopped to Sydney and the government presented him with $25,000 and knighted him.
Bell Riggs, Durwood Riggs, Horace Tilson, all of Big Spring and Jim White of Coahoma, patients at the institution. They reported such as getting along splendidly. Mr. Edwards and Mr. White are expected to return to their homes later part of this week.

Twelve Enroll For Curriculum Course
Twelve of 23 necessary for such a course had enrolled Monday for the extension class in "curriculum construction."
Mrs. Pauline C. Brigham, county superintendent and class organizer, said that she was anxious that others who are interested in taking the course enroll immediately so the class can be started at once. She expressed the opinion that recognition would be given to teachers who complete the course and said she believed that in a short time credit in the course would be required for certain positions. The course carries with it two hours semester credit.
NO CHANGE REPORTED IN EMPLOYMENT SITUATION
AUSTIN - Reports from 1,501 Texas establishments covering the week ended October 13 showed practically no change in employment and payroll from that of September, according to the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research. In comparison with the corresponding week in October, 1933, however, the number of employees increased 2 per cent and the total payroll increased 4 per cent.

They want to make it 218—a majority—but everything depends on the incoming leadership. Last session recalcitrants succeeded in bringing several measures to a vote that the White House would rather have kept buried.
Yule - A lot of the boys running for Congress tomorrow are trying to read the signs of the times and set themselves up on issues that will keep them in office in 1936. This group—regardless of party affiliations—has been impressed with the vote-appeal a federal Santa Claus commands. Many of them are promising their constituents a house and lot, a new flivver and a bonus. Delivery notes to be rather impossible but that won't stop a number of them from being elected. Huey Long's war-cry of "Share the Wealth" is a seeming natural in many Congressional Districts this time. Socking the rich will be most fashionable among a certain bloc in the next Congress. The "rich" will include everyone who makes a dollar more than the $10,000 a Congressman is paid.
Rebuttal - Never let it be said the National Association of Manufacturers is sleeping at the switch. Since the administration sent almost everybody abroad but Vice-President Jack Garner to burrow into the social problem, the Manufacturers decided to collect a little dope of their own. John C. Gall, associate counsel for NAM, has been dispatched to England to get the other side of the New Deal picture. He has been charged with studying British legislation involving unemployment insurance and recognition of the labor movement so he can come back and refute any testimony New Deal Braintrusters may present.
NEW YORK
By James McMullin
Smart - New York learns that the Treasury is quietly getting ready to cut loose with its heaviest financing salvo yet on December 15. Nearly a billion dollars in certificates mature on that date and would have to be refunded in any case. But Mr. Morgenthau will probably tack on at least another billion to cover more than half the 4th Liberties called for payment next April well in advance of the call date and an additional five hundred million in spare cash for relief purposes. These items add up to the tidy sum of two and a half billion dollars. Such a stupendous operation would have been out of the question two months ago except at prohibitive interest rates. The fact that it's seriously contemplated now is striking evidence of the new entente between Washington and Wall Street. Experts predict—barring a relapse into mutual distrust which FDR's diplomatic skill should be able to avert—that the banks will shoulder the lion's share of this imposing load with scarcely a whimper and on terms agreeable to the Treasury both as to interest and length of maturity. This doesn't mean that bankers will leave their hats in air at the prospect. They are still distressed so to voice about further unbalancing of the budget. But their leaders are pretty thoroughly sold that cooperation with the Treasury is

Recent Bride Honored With Shower Friday
Mrs. Claude Walters was hostess to a group of friends of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Earl Walter, Friday evening. The affair was a surprise shower for Mrs. Walters, a recent bride. The evening was spent in conversation and in playing games. After the presents were passed to the honoree they were passed for the guests to see. A delicious refreshment plate followed. Present were: Mmes. Earl Walters, Martelle McDonald, R. A. Elder, E. P. Crook, T. L. Lovelace, J. D. Stemberge, W. E. Fleming, and Misses John Anna Barbee, Robbe Elder and Alice Rawlings. Those sending gifts were Mmes. Clyde Thomas, H. C. Carson, J. C. Lane, L. P. Ward, Jack King, Sam Barbee, J. H. Crawford, W. P. Prescott, Misses Dorothy Meador, Elizabeth Hanson, Marcella King and Winona Prescott.
Supreme Court Agrees To Rule On Oil Case
WASHINGTON (AP) - The supreme court agreed Monday to rule on validity of the Texas gross production tax law as applied to royalty oil. The question was raised by trustees of the estate of Mrs. M. M. Cook, owning oil lands in Western Texas. The trustees contended a taxing statute was at issue and was enacted last year attempted to bridge contractual rights existing before its passage.

Harmony - Investment bankers are following the example of their commercial brethren by straying roses in the New Deal's path. An inside check-up reveals that their homage is something less than whole-hearted but the significant point is that they also have decided cooperation is healthier for their own interests than defiance. Robert Christie—late president of the Investment Bankers' association—fought hard to put that idea across and his seeds are sprouting. Ralph Crane—the new president—is distinctly not a New Deal enthusiast. But Earle Ballew—now vice-president—has worked closely with Secretary Morgenthau and served more than once as liaison man between Wall Street and the Treasury. His selection is a gesture for peace and harmony.
Dawn - At heart the investment bankers are even bluer than the commercial banks. Their business remains a dim shadow of its former robust self. Leaders among them protest bitterly in private that the chips are stacked against them. They contend the inherent risks in floating securities far outweigh potential profits—especially as the government claims a large chunk of their profits in the form of taxes—while their losses are strictly their own. They can't foresee any remedy for this situation and many investment firms are likely to disintegrate within a year unless there's a miraculous comeback in corporate financing. The one faint streak of dawn on their horizon is the Securities and Exchange Commission's apparent willingness to accept their recommendations for amendments to the Securities Act and sponsor them officially. Simplification of registration requirements for new issues would dry a lot of Wall Street tears.

Health Official Urges Precautions Against Diseases

AUSTIN—Speaking of the precautions that should be taken in households, during and at the close of an illness from any of the "catching" diseases, which are prevalent at all seasons, Dr. John W. Brown, State Health Officer, said recently: "Any plan for the prevention or control of this sort depends upon the intelligent cooperation of individuals and communities with the medical profession and the health authorities for its success."

of the patient's clothing, sheets, towels, and pillow cases, are equally necessary. Then, at the close of the illness, a thorough cleaning of the room, bedding, and personal belongings of the patient, scrubbing the floors and woodwork, and opening the place to the fresh air and sunlight, are urged as a final precautionary measure.

Moore McDowell, Skelly 1-DU. Drill Rapidly For Ordovician

Fast time by John I. Moore and others' No. 1 L. S. McDowell in Glasscock county and by Skelly-Utah Southern and others' No. 1-D Grayson-University in Reagan county featured drilling last week by six tests seeking Ordovician production in West Texas, so far found only in the Big Lake field in Reagan. A Real county test prepared to deepen and one wildcat each in Schleicher and Sutton counties prepared to get under way, all in search of Ordovician pay.

In Schleicher county Humble No. 1 Ike Honig, 10 miles northeast of Eldorado, fished out drill collars and bit beamers at 5434 feet in shale and lime and had made new hole to 5442 feet in shale. The fishing job was cleaned up with a spear early Friday night and the hole was washed from 5272 to 5-230 feet. The test is 10 feet west of the center of section 38, block M, G.H.S.A. Ry. Co. survey.

John Cooper's No. 1 Bert Page, 12 miles south of No. 1 Honig and 9 1/2 miles southeast of Eldorado, drilled Friday to 5866 feet in lime that was reported softening somewhat and shut down for engine repairs. Parts for the engine are expected to reach the lease today. No. 1 Page is in the northwest quarter of section 40, block L, G.H.S.A. Ry. Co. survey.

Seek Water For New Test J. D. Wesner and Kemper Kimberlin of San Angelo and W. Carl Proctor of Dallas started water well during the week for their No. 1 Judkins & Spencer, a scheduled 6,500-foot test on Pure Oil Co.'s block in Schleicher county. Location is in the center of the southwest corner of section 6, certificate 127, W. W. Russell original grantee, about eight miles northeast of Cooper No. 1 Page and nine miles southeast of Humble No. 1 Honig.

Paul C. Texas' No. 1 Clarendon E. Mower, scheduled 4500 foot wildcat in eastern Sutton county, was rigged up and scheduled to spud late in the week.
