Juvenile board hires grant writer

Professional to write million-dollar grant for drug treatment facility

By JEFF WEST Staff Writer

The Gray County Juvenile Probation Board approved hiring a professional grant writer to help get a grant of nearly a million dollars to build and run a juvenile drug treatment facility in Pampa.

The facility would be located in the building between NBC Bank and Allison Auto Sales in a nurses living quarters opened about 1960 when the county owned a hospital nearby. County Judge Richard Peet, Nine Gray County 4-Hers are spending a week in Washington, D.C. The trip is the culmination of two years of planning and fundraising that included pecan sales, a car wash, a garage sale, a raffle, a bake sale and concession stand work.

The "Wonders of Washington '98" students and four adult chaperones left Pampa last week for Canadian where they joined 10 other students and five adult leaders from Hemphill County. From there, the group took a bus to Garden City, Kansas, where they boarded a train for Washington by way of Chicago. While visiting Washington, the group will stay at the National 4-H Center in Chevy Chase, Washington, planning to make the most of their five days there.

The first night in town, they will visit five different memorials, including the Jefferson Lincoln Memorials and the Washington Monument. Among the many other places they'll see in Washington are Capitol Hill, the Smithsonian, National Cathedral, White House, Ford's Theatre, Arlington Cemetery, Old Town Alexandria, Mount Vernon and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. A day trip to Baltimore will take them to the National Aquarium, Harbor Place and Fort McHenry. On their trip, they'll stop in Chicago long enough to take a bus tour of the city and eat at the Hard Rock Cafe.

Barry Brauchi visited Washington on another 4-H-related trip in November 1996.

short time," he said of his previous trip. "This will be more like a vacation." Brauchi was especially eager to tour the White House this time. During his 1996 trip, the White House was closed to the public for decorating for the holiday season. The primary objectives of the trip are for the participants to develop an appreciation for America's historical, political and cultural heritage; learn the fundamentals of how the federal government works; and discover the principles and responsibilities of American citizenship. Upon their return, the students plan to share their experiences and impressions with other 4-Hers and interested community groups and classrooms.

State figures projecting increase in unemployed last month

By JEFF WEST Staff Writer

Gray County and Pampa's unemployment figures for May show a only a slight increase over April while the state wide figures held steady.

Unemployment came in at 3.9 percent for Gray County and 3.8 percent for Pampa. That is still lower than the state wide figures which held at 4.3 percent, making it the lowest May unemployment for the lone star state since 1979.

Raquel Moreno of the Work Texas force Commission said there were 10,998 people in the work force in Gray County, 430 of them were unemployed. Of those 430, 349 are in the city of Pampa.

The lowest unemployment in the state is in the Bryan-College Station which has the lowest figures in the state at 1.5 percent.

McAllen-Edinburg-Mission still has the states highest unemployment at 14 percent but that has dropped from 21.1 percent in the last five months.

Court says Terry Nichols' appeal premature

DENVER Oklahoma City bombing conspirator Terry Nichols must wait for a federal district judge to rule on his motion for a new trial before he can appeal his conviction and life sentence.

The decision came Friday from the 10th U.S. Circuit

Court of Appeals. Nichols, 43, was convicted Dec. 23 of conspiracy and involuntary manslaughter in the April 19, 1995, bombing that killed 168 people. He was acquitted of murder and weapons offenses.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch sentenced Nichols to life in prison June 4 after jurors were unable to decide whether he should be jailed or sentenced to death.

William and The Mail on Sunday "amicably resolved" a complaint about an article that speculated at length about his private thoughts and feelings, Buckingham Palace said Friday.

The young prince, who has been carefully shielded from media glare, also has answered written questions about himself in response to questions from Press Association, the domestic British news

William revealed how he will celebrate on Sunday his first birthday since Princess Diana's death: Quietly with friends, talking to his family on the After Diana died in a car crash while being folpayment will not cover the cost. Kaiser officials also said they will continue to cover medical care associated with the treatment of sexual dysfunction, except for the cost of pharmaceuticals.

"As more and more similar drugs appear with increasing frequency, we are facing the very real 🕺 possibility that health care in America will become so expensive that no one will be able to afford ! medical care," Crosson said.

Let's make it a team effort to help area's troubled youth

After much thought and reflection over our past public hearing, to include some of the recent comments by various citizens, I have ideas to share with you fellow citizens. If the general public is adamant about the teen drug and alcohol "lock down" facility, then we should provide that capability to some degree. The simple fact is that this initiative will only address a small portion of our problem. Whether we are talking about two, four or six youth in need is immaterial. Records from the Gray County Commissioners' Court reflect that there are approximately 100 youth on probation with drug and alcohol problems.

We in Gray County need an all encompassing network to aid and assist these youth regardless of their level of need. Many resources are available here in Pampa which could be utilized. Certified and trained drug and alcohol counselors are available in Pampa. There are nine funded beds at the Genesis House which could be used by local youth. I would bet that we have parents in the county who would be willing if not eager to place their teen in the Genesis House

There is no panacea to this problem but a solution must begin with elected officials, trained professionals in the field, school counselors, parents, law enforcement and licensed drug and alcohol counselors. We must collectively develop an all encompassing teen drug and alcohol network which will serve all our youth in need, regardless of their level of drug and alcohol dependency.

This can be accomplished by meeting together and having the county clearly articulate their current program of serving the needs of our youth, such as how the program is organized, what resources are used and how youth flow through the system. We must then identify the local resources which can be utilized to assist in our network of support. We must also identify resources external to the community which are vital to our needs

We can solve much of our teen drug and alcohol problems by educating the general populace on what our program exists of, how it functions and how it can be accessed Let's all work together toward solving this problem internally. Understanding, patience, flexibility and tenacity are a must. We are all seeking the same goal let's make a team effort. If funding is a major hurdle then we should all be aware of that fact and rearrange our priorities in order to assist our youth so desperately in need

Mom-like rules make sense

Whenever Mom told my sister and me to share the last piece of pie or cake, or divide a pot of catmeal that we both hated, she'd tell one of us to do the cutting or spooning, and the other had the first choice.

That rule gave whoever was the cutter or spooner uncanny incentive to be fair. For example, if I cut the cake unevenly, I'd lose because my sister had first choice and would choose the larger piece of cake (or the smaller bowl of oatmeal). Morn's strategy should be the basis for all societal rules. Good laws (rules) are those written as though our worst enemy had the power to enforce them.

Let's apply this idea to laws about speech and ask: If we seek fairness, what kind of laws should there be about speech? How about a law that says people are permitted to speak freely so long as they don't say something that offends another? Or, how about a law that mandates the nation's official language be English?

Some people might agree, pointing out they would promote sensitivity toward the feelings of others and strengthen the common culture. But what if your worst enemies win control of Congress and the White House? Then, if you said to a young lady, "Those jeans are really fitting you well," you might be fined or jailed for speech that the majority power deems offensive. If you're for making English the official language, a future majority might make the official language Spanish or

We don't have a lot to worry about with speech because the Framers anticipated Mom's rule, saying: "Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech." If there's respect for that rule, even if our worst enemies take over Congress and the White House, no sweat.

There are a bunch of Mom-like rules in our Bill Rights, containing distrustful and highly negative language like: "shall not be infringed," "shall not be violated," "shall not be required" and "nor be deprived."

Mom's rules would never be seen in heaven - they'd be an insulting insinuation that God cannot be trusted any day - until I have the power to impose my valwith power and that God is not a just God. However, it ues on others.

you are unfortunate enough to end up in the other place, you'd surely want Monn's rules, as you can't trust the Devil to do right.

We Americans have forgotten the warnings of James Madison and Thomas Jefferson about the tyranny of the majority. We think that because there's a majority vote of support, that fact alone confers legitimacy on laws passed by Congress. If you think a majority consensus is fair, how would you like enactment of the following law: Congress shall have the power to ban, regulate or tax out of existence any product found to have no nutritional necessity but is costly to the nation's health-care system?

While most Americans support what Congress is now doing to cigarette smokers, I'd be willing to bet my bank account they wouldn't support those actions as a general rule. For example, there's absolutely no nutritional reason for adding salt to food, or consuming beer, whiskey, butter, potato chips and candy - but consumption of these goods raises heath-care costs.

Why would Americans support cigarette control and not a general rule allowing Congress to ban or control consumption of other products deemed harmful to our health? Most of the answer is cigarettes are the other guy's vice, and a majority has the power to be arbitrary. For me, I'll take Mom's rule

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Sunday, June 21, the 172nd day of 1998. There are 193 days left in the year. This is Father's Day, as well as the first day of summer, which arrives at 10:03 a.m. EDT.

Today's Highlight in History: On June 21, 1788, the U.S. Constitution went into effect as New Hampshire became the ninth state to ratify it. On this date:

1834, Cyrus Hall McCormick received a patent for his reaping machine.

In 1932, heavyweight Max Schmeling lost a title fight by decision to Jack Sharkey, prompting Schmeling's manager, Joe Jacobs, to exclaim: "We was robbed!"

In 1948, the Republican national convention opened in Philadelphia.

Celebration of the best TV dads

In some ways, we'd like them to be our dad. They're patient, most of the time. They're knowledgeable, except when the script demands them to be the bumbling comedy relief. In honor of Father's Day, here are the best TV dads:

-Ben Cartwright (played by Lorne Green), "Bonanza:" During "Bonanza's" 14-season run, Lorne Green received thousands of letters from teenagers wishing that Ben Cartwright were their father. Who can blame them? Ben Cartwright was as perfect as they come – an ideal mix of guiding wisdom and letting his sons learn fromtheir own mistakes. Three times widowed with three sons (each son from a different deceased wife) Ben Cartwright indeed had a difficult job. Nearly every other week, one son was falsely accused of murder and sentenced to hang. Yet, Ben always kept his cool. True, the script said that everything would turn out okay, but much of Ben Cartwright's quiet wisdom was modeled after Lorne Greene's own father. "He had almost perfect control, never got excited," Greene said in a 1964 interview. "Like Ben, he thought things through.

Before beginning "Bonanza" in 1959 at the age of 44, Lorne Greene enjoyed a successful radio career in his native Canada. With his rich, soothing baritone voice, he broadcast the latest news of World War II and eventually became known as "the voice of Canada." He was executive producer David Dortort's only choice for Ben Cartwright after Dortort saw him in "Wagon Train," and noticed he was the only guest star that proved a match for the late Ward Bond.

David Dortort's objective with "Bonanza" was to fight what he called "Momism" on television. "Father always turned out to be the fool," he explained. "On TV it's mother who really knows best. Ben Cartwright is not a blithering idiot, but someone his three sons can respect."

Melany Shapiro Author, guest columnist

 Charles Ingalls (played by Michael Landon), "Little House on the Prairie": It's no wonder that Michael Landon's Charles Ingalls ranks among the best television dads. For 14 seasons, Michael Landon played Little Joe Cartwright on "Bonanza," the hot-headed, impetuous son who constantly tested his father's patience. Michael had Cliff Huxtable dealing with his daughters Landon frequently said in interviews that he thought of Lorne Greene as his surrogate father. So when he adapted Laura Ingalls Wilder's "Little House" books for television, he put some of Lorne Greene/Ben Cartwright into Charles.

Charles Ingalls, however, had a whole different set of challenges. Unlike the Cartwrights, the Ingalls' were poor. Charles was a farmer, who also worked part time in the local mill and did numerous other odd jobs to feed his family. Often a natural disaster destroyed the crop, forcing Charles to search for work - sometimes 100 miles from

With all the Ingalls' economic troubles, Charles was still dubbed "The Richest Man in Walnut Grove" by Nels Oleson, the wealthy but extremely hen-pecked local merchant. In this second-season episode of the same name, the Ingalls family once again faces a financial crisis. In an incredible show of strength, each family member pulls together and makes it through with their dignity

But Charles Ingalls' biggest challenge was facing up to his elder daughter Mary's blindness. In the Emmy-winning two-part episode "I'll Be Waving As You Drive Away," Charles learns that Mary's scarlet fever, which she suffered a year ear- Definitive Ponderosa Companion."

lier, is robbing her of her eyesight, and it's just a matter of time before she's bling for life. The scene where Charles breaks the news to Mary is without a doubt one of the best father-child scenes ever on television.

-Cliff Huxtable (played by Bill Cosby), "The Cosby Show": With five strong-willed children, Cliff Huxtable definitely had his hands full. "The Cosby Show" prided itself on realism, while never losing that sharp sense of humor that has been Bill Cosby's trademark for decades.

"The Cosby Show's" commitment to realism going away to college, his son's dyslexia and his son's reluctance to visit a friend afflicted with cancer. Cliff struggles through each crisis like no other father could, while taking time out to stage an appropriate send-off for Theo's goldfish. And if that's not enough, Cliff has the privilege of doing it all again with his twin grandchildren!

-Mike Brady (played by Robert Reed), "The Brady Bunch": "The Brady Bunch" has become such a cult classic for its hokey value that we tend to forget about Mike Brady as one of television's greatest fathers. But he was definitely ahead of his time, stating to his sons, "When I married Carol, I promised to love not only her, but her three girls as well." Having had no previous experience with daughters, he suddenly finds himself thrust into first crushes, first dates and wide slumber parties. I think all girls compared their own fathers to Mike Brady at one time or another, especially during our own wild slumber parties.

We've all occasionally looked with envy at the small screen, wishing we had that ideal scripted family. Thanks to the beauty of reruns, we can live those days all over again.

Fight for civil rights isn't over yet

John Lewis is talking about race in America. 'We need, all of us, rededication and new inspiration to advance the cause of racial cooperation, peace and harmony in America.

This is his story, this is his song; he has been singing it nearly all of his life long.

This night, as we talked, neither of us could know that far away, in Jasper, Texas, three white men allegedly dragged a black man to his death behind a pickup truck. We would not know of it until the next day, when news reports began to tell the story.

That story is in the present, but it is a throwback to the past, a past John Lewis and I know only too well.

We met in the very early 1960s. First in Mississippi, again in Georgia, and then in many datelines long since forgotten, as the American civil rights movement gained momentum, crested with passage of the Voting Rights Act in 1964, then crashed with the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in 1968.

Lewis was a young preacher then, a Christian true-believer in nonviolence. But an extraordinarily brave one. On two occasions, this reporter saw Lewis nearly beaten to death by segregationist thugs.

In those days he was point man for numerous nonviolent civil rights campaigns. He was challenging the United States to live up to its ideals. He still is. He believes passionately in America as a land of the free, where a diverse, multiracial mix of citizens can live the dream of liberty and justice for all.

Lewis is a United States congressman now, has been for 12 years. A Democrat from Georgia, representing a district that includes most of Atlanta. He remains committed to an America of inclusion and universality. Like Dr. King, Lewis hopes to advance the cause of ALL Americans, working He still believes in the dream of one America, not divided along the fault-lines of race.

"But just to talk about it anymore has gone out of fashion," he says. "So many people don't want. to think about, much less do anything about it." And this worries him.

In his profound and engrossing new book, "Walking With the Wind" (Simon & Schuster), he has written: "Talk is fine. Discussion is fine. But we must respond. We must act. Mother Teresa acted. She reached out to those who were left behind the forsaken, the poorest of the poor, the sickest of the sick.

"And where did she find the strength, her focus, her fuel? She was asked that question back in 1975. Her answer was succinct. The fuel, she explained, is prayer. 'To keep a lamp burning,' she said, 'we have to keep putting oil in it.'

That's one reason Lewis looks to America's churches and churchgoers for leadership.

Lewis is 58 now, and thicker through the middle than he was when we first met. But his energy hasn't diminished. He often paces far into the night, worrying, thinking and praying about what can be done to help America.

I picture him pacing and praying as our conversation nears an end, and he repeats the closing theme of his book.

"There is an old African proverb: When you pray, you move your feet.' As a nation, if we care for the Beloved Community, we must move our feet, our hands, our hearts, our resources to build and not to tear down, to reconcile and not to divide, to love and not to hate, to heal and not to kill. In the final analysis, we are one people, one family, one house - the American house, the American family."

HOUSTON (AP) — A jury on Friday convicted a man accused of strangling a jogger to death with her own shoelaces as she ran along a wooded bayou trail.

Arthur Lee Burton, 28, admitted to the July 29 slaying after his capture in August, but later denied it. He testified Thursday his confession was coerced, though prosecutors countered that he provided details only the killer could know.

The jury now must decide whether to give Burton the death penalty.

Prosecutors claim Burton came upon Nancy Adleman on his bicycle, took her under cover of brush and tried to rape her. He then choked her unconscious and, later, strangled her.

Burton, married with four children, was arrested after a release of a composite sketch of a bicyclist seen in the area near the time of the killing. Ms. Adleman's partially clothed body was found in a wooded area near the bayou.

C. Robert Keathley

Beloved English teacher taught me well ...

Several years ago, when I wrote a letter to the editor, it was always printed with not so much as a comma changed. Not so these days, and it isn't me that changed. The paper has only printed one article that I've written in the last few years and it was edited so I didn't recognize it. My husband said it sounded like a child, certainly not me. I titled the article "Alert For Road graders". Whoever worked on my article took the "surprise" out of the story by titling it "Alert for Road Graders aka Road Warriors." Since when do you tell the story in the title? The articles I was proud of, which were never printed, were "Abortion in Politics" and "Juvenile Delinquency and Guns."

My eighth grade English teacher, Mrs. Nichols, taught me well. It is she that I owe my writing ability and literacy to and I'm so grateful to her. She taught that the headline or title catches your attention, then the first line grabs you, and the article holds our attention. People in Pampa, Miami and Canadian ask why I quit writing. I have to tell them I didn't, my articles must be too conservative. A previous editor was sure he could get me syndicated but that fell through when he left. Someone explain to me why everyone's different viewpoints are no longer "allowed" in our paper. I guess maybe it's no longer "ours." I use correct English and punctuation, so what's the problem? Could it possibly be journalistic mediocrity? I'll take the days of Walter Cronkite any day, not opinion, just fact. When he made an editorial, it was presented as just that.

It feels to me that we lose a little of our First Amendment right when we're edited totally out of the paper for our opinion. Of course, the paper has the same right, but this paper claims teaching toler-

Gonzalez took over the RBI Gonzalez homered and drove in Aead from Mark McGwire, who has 82, as the Rangers ended Anaheim's four-game winning streak and cut the Angels' division lead to a half-game.

Gonzalez went 3-for-4, including a two-run homer in the ninth off Shigetosi Hasewaga and a three-run double in the seventh that snapped a 2-2 tie. He has 22 homers this season.

Rick Helling (10-3) gave up three runs and nine hits, walked none and struck out five in seven-plus innings. Chuck Finley (7-4) was the victim of four unearned runs.

Cecil Fielder, who hadn't made an error in 40 previous starts at first base this season, made two costly ones for the Angels. His error in the fourth led to Texas' first run, and his miscue in the seventh opened the door for the Rangers' three-run inning. Finley, a 4-2 loser last Sunday in the Angels' only loss in a fourgame series in Texas, was charged with five runs on six hits in 6 2-3 innings in the rematch.

Matt Walbeck's two-out RBI single for Anaheim tied it 2-2 in the sixth. Jim Edmonds and Tim Salmon singled to open the inning for the Angels, then Helling got Fielder on a foul pop and struck out Garret Anderson before Walbeck singled.

Helling ended the inning by getting Justin Baughman on a fly

Former Angel Luis Alicea had put the Rangers up by a run with a leadoff homer in the fifth. It was just the third homer of the year for Alicea, who played for Anaheim last year and signed as a free agent with Texas over the

Harvesters looked good at Greenbelt

The Pampa connection was looking good at last weekend's Greenbelt Bowl all-star Classic in Childress.

Harvester teammates Aaron Hayden and J.T. Hamilton helped the North dominate the South in the annual football clash highlighting area high school

Hayden and Hamilton, both First-Team All-District 1-4A picks, made some key plays along the line as the North rolled to a 32-0 win. Hamilton, who played center, was named the most valuable offensive lineman. Hayden was the North captain.

"Both played extensively. J.T. had an outstanding game. Aaron played defen-sive tackle and had all kinds of tackles," said PHS head football coach Dennis Cavalier, who was at the game.

Wheeler's Bryan Judd and Canadian's Taylor Tubb also made crucial contributions for the North. Judd scored the game's last touchdown on a 31-yard run in the fourth quarter. Judd rushed for 36 yards on six carries.

On the South's second possession of the game, Tubb ended a scoring threat with a fourth-down sack on the North 31. Josh Lee, also of Wheeler, played for the North.

The Super Eagles recorded their second straight victory and confidently moved into the second round of the World Cup on Friday, giving more credence to Africa's rise in world soccer.

"For people who like the spectacular, we make it spectacular," Nigeria coach Bora Milutinovic said following the Africans' 1-0 victory over Bulgaria in Parc des

With Spain and Paraguay playing to a comparatively dull 0-0 draw, Nigeria clinched the Group D title and will advance to the second round as one of the top eight teams at France 98.

Eight years ago in Italy, Cameroon's "Indomitable Lions" advanced all the way to the quarterfinals, shocking the world before being beaten by England in extra time. It was a wakeup call that alerted the globe to the emergence of African soccer.

Combined with a 3-2 victory over Spain, Nigeria joined Brazil and France as the third nation to guarantee its spot in the round of 16. It shared with the defending champion the honor of winning its group with a game left to play.

Mexico had a chance to clinch its place in the second round today, facing Belgium at Bordeaux. The Netherlands was to play South Korea in Marseille, and Japan faced Croatia in Nantes.

The United States-Iran game Sunday, with all its political over-tones, will be the focal point of what could be a wild weekend.

"It's nice to get some recognition from the political side of things," goalie Kasey Keller said. "I kind of wish they'd support the team instead of just one game.

"If they beat us, they've had a successful World Cup. I definitely expect the first 10, 15 minutes will be an emotional situation, especially for them."

GOP, withholding fund-raising documents, wins initial court victory

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Republican National Committee is refusing to provide 95 pages sought by federal prosecutors in an investigation of illegal fund raising and an appeals court today gave the party an initial victory.

The RNC's position came to light today when a federal appeals court ruled that U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson erred in dismissing the party's claim that the records were protected by attorney-

Mike Collins, spokesman for the RNC, declined to identify the attorney who gathered the documents, but said the decision vindicated the

The court of appeals has said that Johnson misinterpreted the law and ruled "consistent with our arguments," Collins said.

A federal grand jury probing campaign fund raising has been investigating a loan involving former GOP National Chairman Haley Barbour that provided the party $1.6 million in the days before the 1994

Hong Kong businessman Ambrous Tung Young guaranteed a loan from a U.S. bank for the National Policy Forum, a think-tank arm of the RNC established with Barbour's help.

Most of the loan proceeds went to the Republican Party to repay an old debt. The Internal Revenue Service has since revoked the forum's tax-exempt status.

Young's Hong Kong operation provided the money for the loan guarantee, but Barbour testified at Senate hearings last summer he thought the loan guarantee came from a U.S. subsidiary.

The appeals court said the grand jury in 1996 issued a subpoena directing a lawyer for the RNC to produce "memoranda, correspondence, notes and other written materials" related to the loan.

The lawyer handed over 140 documents, some of which were blacked out in part, and withheld 95 pages, "claiming they were protected by either the attorney-client or the work-product privilege. Justice Department attorneys pushed the case in court, seeking to compel the party and the attorney to produce the records. In a sealed ruling, Johnson held that the privilege claim was not applicable. The appeals court disagreed, saying the question "turns not on whether a specific claim existed, but instead on whether, under all the circumstances, the lawyer prepared the materials 'in anticipation of lit-

DisneyQuest first of Disney's high-tech indoor amusement parks

By MIKE SCHNEIDER AP Business Writer

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — It's a small world promising shorter lines and cheaper tickets at DisneyQuest, the first of Disney's high-tech ndoor amusement arcades Housed in an aqua-blue building the size of a five-story department store, the first stand-alone DisneyQuest opened this morning at Walt Disney World. The idea was to try out the first one where there were guaranteed Disney fans.

"This is a way to get Disney into your back yard," said Art Levitt, president of Disney Regional Entertainment.

While DisneyQuest has many of a theme park's touches such as a choreography between music, visuals and rides and the ubiquitous gift shop to hawk Disney merchandise — it differs from a Disney theme park in many ways.

Instead of setting aside a day, visitors to DisneyQuest are expected to spend a few hours there. The lines at the 100,000square-foot arcade are smaller. And while theme parks generally install a new ride once a year, DisneyQuest will change about a quarter of its rides every year or so.

A one-day pass at a Disney theme park costs $44.50. DisneyQuest visitors can purchase $7, $15 and $20 debit cards and deduct the cost of each ride or game.

Visitors can design their own make-believe roller coasters on a computer and re-enact a ride on them in a pitch-and-roll simulator the size of a ferris-wheel car. They can make toys based on characters from the Disney film "Toy Story." They can place themselves in a darkened room resembling the cockpit of a spaceship and, grabbing a joystick, blow away aliens approaching them on a large screen.

The company plans to open 15 to 20 DisneyQuests in cities around the globe to reach visitors reluctant to make the trip to Disney theme parks in Orlando, Anaheim, Tokyo or

A second DisneyQuest is scheduled to open in Chicago next year. Afterward, Disney plans to open up three or four a year at a cost of about $30 million each.

With military precision, the buggles carrying seismic vibrators line up to release their energy deep into the earth's crust, right. The signals, bounced off geologic formations thousands of feet below the ground's surface are detected by grids of sensitive geo phones like the one being examined by David Walker in the photo below. Computers in the truck behind Walker record the data that will eventually be used to paint a three dimensional picture of subterranean formations and the gas and oil that might be hidden there.

A whole lot of shakin' going on!

The four blue-cabbed trucks formed a line with military precision in the West Texas pasture and lowered the large flat vibrating panels from their bellies. The ground growled as a 10 through the earth's crust.

Five miles away a computer housed in an air conditioned mobile office recorded the shock wave received by a grid of listening devices spread across part of a 36 square mile track of ranchland to be surveyed.

The recorded signals would be digitized, processed and paint a three-dimensional picture of rock formations 15,000 feet below the surface that might contain crude oil or natural gas.

Geophysicist David Walker of Amarillo stood on a windblown bluff overlooking the ranch below, staring at the dark gray clouds.

"Rain can shut us down," he miles away, are sensitive enough that rain drops falling on them would also be recorded making the seismic record worthless.

The 3-D image painted by the sound recordings is a step up in megahertz shock wave shot technology in the oil patch. Although not new, the systems were first used two decades ago in off shore drilling, the 3-D images are becoming more common in oil and gas exploration as costs come down. The increased power of personal computers that can be loaded into trucks and at work stations in the office as well as more sophisticated software have led to wider acceptance of looking underground.

> Using vibrators as a transmission device is also becoming more wide spread. In the days when geophysicists collected data on subterranean formations in two dimensional cross sections bulldozing new roads across virand later as technology allowed the painting of three dimensional pictures of those formations, dynamite was used to emit the sound waves needed under- have ever been there.

"The landowners aren't too wild about it, either," Walker the system is infinite depending said. "It tends to make people nervous.'

Now, he said, he uses the noninvasive vibrating system exclusively.

"It's a much safer source," he said. "It's a controlled source. It's impressive."

Much of the exploration work has turned to non-invasive methods, Walker explained. With the vibrating system, the surface of the land is left almost totally undisturbed. Even the trucks, or buggies, carrying the vibrators travel on large balloon tires that can go almost anywhere. Not only does it preclude the need for gin prairie, the tire do not rut. A rain shower usually returns the grass to normal and there is little if any evidence the explorers

"In 3-D, there is a grid of receivers and a blanket of coverage," Walker said. "The design of upon the objective, the depth of the primary target. In this survey, we have two targets. One is about 10,000 feet. The other is about 15,000 feet. We're looking at a

"There was a lot of drilling in one or two particular zones, but with the 3-D we're going to identify some deeper targets which no wells out here have penetrated," Walker said.

There's a wealth of 2-D data that's available in mature fields like this that have been acquired over the years. Walker used the 2-D data to set up his 3-D shoot.

"We've got a pretty good feel that we have a good deep feature, but with the 3-D, we can pinpoint and recorded in the computers the exact spots we want to drill," he said. "We don't have as much guesswork and interpolation like we used to have. We now have Walker plugs it into his personal this blanket of coverage. You can computer at his office integrating drill fewer and better wells."

"Remember WENN" returns to American Movie Classics for a new season of 13 weekly half-hours Friday at 10 p.m. EDT, plugged into the lineup of vintage melodramas and comedies as if it came from a film vault sealed 50 years ago. Explains producer Howard Meltzer, "AMC wanted to create a show where viewers tuning in couldn't immediately tell if it was one of the network's classic movies, or original programming.

Remember Accordingly, WENN" takes its cue from those flicks, replicating the exuberance and ideals in which Hollywood once costumed American life.

"One thing I always loved about his writing was how it was so layered," says Meltzer, who sought out . Holmes for the project. "I also hap-pened to know that he's a complete mut for the '30s and '40s."

When "Remember WENN" premiered four seasons ago, the year was 1939.

"It was an era where America was still young and naive, while Europe had started going through the war," Meltzer says. "We wanted to capture the feel of what was going on in the country

TEX-A-SYST - IMPROVING LIVESTOCK HOLDING

Pen Management Open lots or holding pens for feeding and holding livestock can be sources of ground water contamination. The potential for this type of pollution depends on side selection, stocking diversity, and slope. Good management practices will also improve herd health, odor control, and fly control.

Livestock barnyards, holding areas and feedlots contain concentrated livestock wastes that contain nitrates and bacteria. They are the source of contamination and will most easily cause problems over coarse-textured soils, if water tables are at or near the surface, if fractured bedrock is at or near surface, or if polluted run-offs is discharged to permeable soils and bedrock.

This bulletin focuses on managing livestock holding pens and covers the following topics:

Separation Distance From Well Wells should be located in an elevated area upslope from the livestock feed facilities so that runoff will drain away from wells. The Texas water well code requires a minimum separation of 150 ft. between existing livestock facilities and new wells.

Site Characteristics

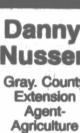

Topography, soils, and geology are factors considered in this section. Surface and sub-soil texture, depth, and permeability are important soil characteristics.

Clean Water Diversion

Terraces, waterways, roof gutters, ridges, and catch basins can reduce the amount of clean water which can enter an open lot.

Runoff Control

Problems associated with compaction due to animal traffic can contribute to runoff into ground here and gone. Good luck with the remainder of or surface water. This is a greater risk in areas with this harvest and above all, be safe!!

Danny Gray. County Extension

high infiltration and percolation rates. In large operations, producers must collect and store runoff from holding pens. smaller farm instances, the surface needs to be shaped to a uniform grade for water drainage.

This publication also discusses Feedlot Cleaning, Type of Surface, Manure Storage and Utilization, and Abandoned Livestock Yards. It makes suggestions to all size producers or risk associated with livestock pen management. Also included in this bulletin is an Evaluation Table that will help you determine the risk that your drinking water will become contaminated as a result of management. This information will help you determine your risk and provide you with ways of correcting the problems. If you would like a copy of this bulletin, call or come by the Gray County Extension Office and ask for TEX-A-SYST bulletin B-6031 "Reducing the Risk of Ground Water Contamination by Improving Livestock Holding Pen Management".

Next week we will discuss reducing the risk of ground water contamination by "Improving Pesticide Storage and Handling".

New hard white wheats redefining wheat industry in state of Kansas

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) – A mere 1,400 bushels of hard white wheat now ripening in Kansas fields may redefine the future of the state's wheat production.

That crop will seed a burgeoning shift away from the hard red winter wheat that made Kansas the breadbasket of the world.

About 98 percent of the 506 million bushels of wheat harvested in Kansas last year were hard red varieties. But a growing global demand for white wheat has pressured Kansas growers to develop new wheat for the changing marketplace, said Ron Madl, director of the Wheat Research Center at Kansas State University.

'Australia made a strategic decision in its wheat 20 years ago when they switched over to white wheat, and now they basically control a good deal of the Asian market for wheat because the market prefers the white wheat," Madl said.

After 15 years of research, two new hard white wheat varieties will be ready for planting this fall in Kansas under a strictly managed public

Under the release program, researchers want alliances of growers, traders and possibly retailers to ease the transition period, Madl said. Two groups have already said they would participate, and another two or more proposals are anticipat-

About 150 Kansas growers have fewer than 20,000 acres now in other hard white wheat varieties, said Kent Symns, general manager of the American White Wheat Producers Association, an Atchison, Kan.-based group with about 300 members. The group has been growing hard white wheat in Kansas for 10 years, mostly in the western part of the state.

Symns said his group will submit a proposal for to other sources of white wheat.

the new varieties, but added it is debatable whether they will bring a higher price.

"We tried to keep production in line with those markets rather than overproducing, and now the rules are going to change," Symns said. "Successful bidders will increase to commodity portions rapidly, and it will be a challenge to see how anybody can hold value for producers and increase to commodity portions at the same

Millers should be able to extract 5 cents to 7 cents more worth of flour from every bushel of hard white grain, Symns said, but it's uncertain how much of that they will pass on to the growers.

The milling and baking qualities of the new white varieties developed at Kansas State are comparable to those of hard red winter wheat, but also will help raise the value and demand for Kansas wheat, Madl said.

This fall's carefully orchestrated public release is designed to prevent mixing of the harvested grain, which would reduce the crop's value below that of either class by itself. Researchers also want to preserve the value-added qualities of the new varieties, Madl said.

Because white wheat does not have the red bran coating, more flour can be extracted so bread and other products have a milder, sweeter flavor. Millers are also able to leave the bran on white wheat, which is a source of fiber and nutri-

White wheat is also preferred for noodles, and international markets such as the North African and Middle Asian flat bread markets create demand for white wheat. Countries along the North African Mediterranean shore used to be strong customers for U.S. wheat, but have moved

Dentist slain two weeks after bequeathing $1 million to male model

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Guests at Dr. Stephen Grosse's parties dined on fresh shrimp and lobsters out of 4-foot rowboats in his living room. The dentist's "everyday car" was a cherry-red Porsche with the license plate "DR PAIN." He had debts of close to $1 million.

He was, in short, a man given to grand and impulsive gestures.

So his friends and family were not shocked when said. he changed his will and insurance policy in mid-May, naming as his beneficiary a male model he had fallen in love with on the Internet four months The shock came two weeks later, when Grosse

"There's a lot of people who might potentially want him dead — creditors, patients, people who benefit financially from Grosse's death," Castor

Grosse's body was found June 10 in his burning car on a deserted road in Lower Merion. He had been shot once in the back of the head. Police initially believed the car was set on fire but later said it is possible mechanical failure sparked the blaze.

Two weeks before his death, Grosse had called Steffey his "lover and soulmate forever" in a hand-

"That was Stephen. That's what he did. That was his lifestyle. He moved fast. He changed his mind often. He did things that sometimes a lot of people couldn't make sense of, and this was one of them,"

On Friday, Steffey denied they were lovers. He said they met in person four times and traded e-

"Personally, Stephen and I had a wonderful friendship," Steffey said in Los Angeles, where he moved earlier this month with financial help from Grosse. "The 'soulmate' part was a joke we shared. That was a private and personal message to me."
He added: "I'm as confused and astounded as Grosse's $10,000 parties were legendary among the city's gay community and drew celebrities and politicians. "He was a very flamboyant guy who loved to entertain people," said Mayor Edward G. Rendell, who had attended Grosse's Christmas parties sold nearly all his assets — including two luxury cars, a 26-foot speedboat, a condominium in Florida and his $900,000 five-bedroom Philadelphia home with glass walls - to pay off creditors. He cut his monthly expenses from $17,500 to $7,400.

A bankruptcy judge wiped out most of Grosse's debts last November, leaving outstanding a $356,000 bank loan and about $500,000 in unpaid taxes, said his bankruptcy lawyer, Allen B.
