MONTAGUE, (AP) — Gail Rich has sat through the final trial of her daughter's three killers. But even three convictions bring Ms. Rich no solice.

She said Thursday's guilty verdict in the capital murder trial of Randy Lee Wood swept over her with sadness and relief. Wood was the last of three men convicted for the murder of 16-vear-old Heather Rich of Waurika, Okla., nearly two years ago.

The cheerleader was shot nine times and dumped into a Texas creek just across the state line from Oklahoma.

"I didn't know what to expect," Ms. Rich said. "If they would have said guilty or not guilty, either way, I still would have been hurt.

Wood, also of Waurika. received an automatic life sentence after his conviction by a Montague County jury because prosecutors did not seek the death penalty.

U.S. Bus forced into bankruptcy

Staff Writer

The seemingly never-ending tale of U.S. Bus took another twist earlier this week when the Pampa Economic Development Corporation was notified that an involuntary bankruptcy had been filed in U.S. bankruptcy court against the defunct bus manufacturer.

The PEDC foreclosed on the company earlier this month and planned a Sept. 1 auction of the equipment. The auction will now have to be delayed while a federal bankruptcy judge decides what to do. The suit, filed by attorney John Lovell of Amarillo, lists four creditors. Named are Elliott Glass and Home Center, Pampa; Poarch Brothers Inc., Hereford; Murtex Co.,

A Sept. 1 auction set by the PEDC to sell bus equipment in an effort to recover funds has been called off as a result of the filing.

Amarillo; and Prax-Air Distribution, Borger. The documents list the amount claimed by the four as $42,882.

The suit was filed on Aug., 18, but PEDC officials weren't notified until earlier this week. PEDC Executive Director Lew Mollenkamp believes the auction and other legal recourses the PEDC is pursuing will still be available but the suit will delay action "perhaps for a month Mollenkamp said the loans to U.S. Bus give the PEDC 'first lien" on the equipment. That means it has first claim to the equipment until the amount owed is paid. The PEDC also has personal guarantees for the loans which the other creditors do not have. The amount owed by U.S. Bus and its owners to the PEDC is approximately $1.6 million dollars.

Lovell said the owners of U.S. Bus have 20 days from the date the action was filed to respond to the court. The judge will set a hearing date and he could force the company into Chapter 7 or Chapter 11 bankruptcy.

No action can be taken against U.S. Bus until that first court date. Mollenkamp said the PEDC is unsure exactly when it will be able to take the next step to collect what it is owed or what that step will need to be.

Farmers hear federal issues from Thornberry

Staff Writer

"I just have to tell you, that your involvement and Farm Bureau's involvement in Washington is needed now more than ever," said Congressman Mac Thornberry.

He was speaking to the annual Gray-Roberts County Farm Bureau Dinner at M.K. Brown Auditorium last night. He spoke after the crowd ate a barbecue dinner prepared by the Pampa Shriners. Proceeds go to their burn hospitals.

He told the crowd of over 100 that the House has passed a bill that will allow farmers to get their payments in October under the Freedom to Farm Act rather than waiting until December or January. Another payment is set for September, 1999. He said it's not extra money but should help with cash flow problems brought on by "the toughest times we've had in a long time."

Thornberry believes there's a good chance that within two years the inheritance tax will be eliminated Congress which will help agricultural land stay in the family although nothing will happen with them this year.

Thornberry said he thinks the looding in south lexas and the hurricanes on the east coast will probably bring a disaster relief bill up in Congress in September, and he will work to make sure victims of drought in his district are included in that bill.

Fight, knife assault leads to injury, arrest

A report of a fight in the 400 block of Pitts brought Pampa Police to the area just before 1 a.m. today.

According to reports, Orr and David Edward Dominguez, 35, 524 Davis, got into a fight. Dominguez reportedly said "That's enough," and went into a house. He allegedly emerged shortly with a butcher knife with a seven-inch blade and attacked Orr, cutting him on the

Timothy Claude Pyle, 23, 640 Roberta, reportedly tried to break up the fight and suffered a small cut. During the fight Domingez dropped the knife which Pyle then is reported to have thrown out

Orr was treated and released at Columbia Medical Center. At about 2:30 this morning both Pyle and Orr were arrested. Pyle for public intoxication and disorderly conduct and Orr for warrants, disorderly conduct and being a minor in possession.

A sampling of editorial opinion from Texas newspapers: San Antonio Express-News on flagging black drivers:

Recently, a group of black San Antonio males, all professionals, met for dinner and conversation. Eventually, the topic of police came up. Almost to a man, they recounted stories of being unfairly pulled over while driving.

The men were victims of a social malady, "Driving While Black," or DWB, by which blacks, particularly black males, are stopped and even arrested by police for no apparent reason other than their race.

DWB isn't the product of paranoid or overly fragile sensibilities. It is as much a part of the experience of black male drivers as getting a driver's license. It only happens more

U.S. Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., wants to document this discriminatory practice. Convers' The Traffic Stops Study Act of 1998, H.R. 118, passed the House and is pending in the

If it becomes law, the Justice Department will compile a U.S. database on police stops, including the alleged infraction that led to the stop, the rationale for a search and if an arrest was

Some DWB research already exists. A 3-year study on Interstate 95 in New Jersey found blacks are 16 times more likely to be arrested than other demographic groups. The New Jersey Superior Court ruled in 1996 that state police were targeting blacks and violating their constitutional rights.

A 1996-97 Maryland study found blacks made up 71.3 percent of those searched by the Maryland State Police on I-95.

The color of one's skin is not justification for harassment. Passage of H.R. 118 should document what has been a shameful practice and, we hope, lead to its abolition.

Being black is not a moving violation.

Fort Worth Star-Telegram on Russian turmoil:

There may be more method than meets the eye to Russian President Boris Yeltsin's seemingly impulsive firing of highechelon government officials.

Yeltsin has sent a mixed signal by firing Premier Sergei Kiriyenko and two of his deputies and reinstating Victor Chernomyrdin. Yeltsin obviously knows that and has done it for political effect.

He can justify his dismissal of Kiriyenko on the grounds that the premier promised, when he was appointed five months ago, that there would be no devaluation of the ruble. Although Yeltsin joined Kiriyenko in that commitment, the Russian president can assert that it was Kiriyenko's job to take charge and prevent that from happening.

The reappointment of Chernomyrdin, however, does not mean that Kiriyenko's policies will be reversed immediately. The reality is that Kiriyenko did reluctantly what had to be done in devaluing the ruble, declaring a temporary moratorium on foreign debt repayments and restructuring domestic Yeltsin really appears to be playing for time — i.e., trying to keep the political climate stable long enough for Kiriyenko's emergency measures to restore some semblance of stability to the Russian economy.

Kiriyenko lacked the political following to hold the rambunctious Duma (Russia's lower house of parliament, which has a high percentage of Communists) at bay. Chernomirdin, however, heads one of the Duma's biggest factions and has the support of Russia's wealthy elite.

Even though it seems erratic, Yeltsin's decision will make it easier for President Clinton, when he visits Russia next week, to declare this country's continuing support for Russia's efforts at market-oriented economic reform.

The wages of dishonesty

The truth is on our national mind lately. We keep hearing that a small amount of lying, about the right sort of subjects, is certainly a thing to be overlooked.

Can someone who lies about small matters and large, when it counts and even when it doesn't, ever be relied upon?

This administration has been extraordinarily lucky in facing no serious foreign policy crisis in five and a half years. That does not mean the Clinton administration has not been tested. It has, and has failed dismally, both to project resolve to enemies and to level with the American people about what we are really doing on the international front.

The latest news from Iraq suggests that Clinton administration dishonesty will have consequences for our national security for years to come and offers proof that when a ical and biological weapons inspectors and president lies promiscuously, a nation that ostentatiously kicked out of Iraq all of the elects him is asking for more than mere embar-

Secretary of Defense William Cohen appeared on television several months ago carrying a 5-pound bag of sugar. His warning was that an equal amount of anthrax could kill millions of people and that Saddam Hussein had already stockpiled great quantities of the stuff. A few months later, the United Nations inspection teams unearthed clear evidence that Iraq had loaded VX nerve gas onto ballistic missiles before the Gulf War and then attempted to conceal what it had done. Other administration officials, including the president himself, warned six months ago that Saddam would be severely punished if he refused to permit "immediate, unconditional and unrestricted" cooperation to U.N. inspection teams.

Mona Charen

Charen is a nationally syndicated columnist

All of the administration's warnings have amounted to empty bluster. Saddam has repeatedly flouted the U.N. sanctions imposed after the Gulf War and has found after each encounter that the U.S. president does not mean what he says.

When Saddam first thwarted the U.N. chem-American members of the inspection team, President Clinton rattled his saber a bit and then tamely backed down when the Russian foreign minister — an old ally of Saddam's brokered an "agreement."

Within a few months, Hussein again provoked a confrontation with the United States. The president harumphed and even threatened war — not because U.S. interests were at stake, mind you, but because Iraq had committed the truly unpardonable sin of defying the United Nations. But then, within a few days, when the soft-on-Iraq U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan offered to serve as mediator, the president backed down again.

Throughout these little minuets, the president signaled in ways Saddam Hussein understands that America is not serious. While Iraq the mess this president has left.

was thumbing its nose at us and moving forward with every deadly weapon it could lay hands on, President Clinton was permitting Iraq to double its national income by selling more oil for "humanitarian" reasons. By June of this year, President Clinton had cut in half the troops he had sent to the region during the last confrontation with Iraq in February.

But the story reported by Barton Gellman of The Washington Post recently goes one step beyond pusillanimity and into the realm of deceiving the American people. Though both the United States and Great Britain had promised immediate military action if Saddam failed to abide by the Annan-devised agreement — the so-called "snap back" policy both nations, apparently in collusion, have decided to simply pretend that the violations are not happening.

While Secretary of State Madeleine Albright boasts publicly that we are "keeping Saddam in his box," she is apparently directing Richard Butler, leader of UNSCOM, the U.N. inspection team, to refrain from making surprise inspections of suspected chemical, nuclear and biological weapons sites in Iraq. The Post reports that the go-slow directive Albright delivered coincides with Iraq's announcement of total non-cooperation with UNSCOM and the International Atomic Energy Administration. The Clinton administration has issued the all-too-familiar word-parsing explanation that the secretary of state didn't "order" Butler to do anything.

Americans will remember that reassurance months or years from now, when we must again sacrifice men and treasure to clean up

The world is a scary place

World War II, as the current movie "Saving Private Ryan" reminds us, was scary. It was violent. It was no place for kids.

Tough for parents to explain the war to their kids. Tough to explain why so many men in town went off to fight — and didn't come back. Tough to explain Hitler, fascism, the Holocaust. I remember turning to my own father for explanations. He followed the war news avidly, but he was no expert. If he correctly pronounced the name of any town in the North African campaign, it was an accident unlikely to recur.

the war was about. And then he handed me a We read together sometimes, and often our whole family assembled to listen to radio broadcasts. But many times, as the war raged on, I read and listened on my own.

The world of grown-ups, and their war, was strange. Perhaps it could never be adequately explained.

But it could be reported. Documented. Studied. And — eventually — understood, at least a little.

The war would always be terrible. But it could be less frightening. Those were the days when I decided I wanted to be a reporter. When my own children were growing up, their father was reporting the widespread criminal conspiracy known, shorthand, as

> Tough to explain that to a child. Even to a reporter's child, who follows the story perhaps a little more closely than the other boys and

Somehow my children came away with more confidence in our system of government, not less, with more hope for better leadership. They saw that the nation took a sharp blow and survived. That power was transferred peacefully, lawfully. That the Constitution, the rule of law, and the will of the people prevailed. I like to think that my children found the seeds of that optimism in the articles and broadcasts they read and heard throughout the investigation.

Overall, journalism isn't produced for children. Journalists generally address themselves to other grownups. But it has always been true Watergate. Every day newspapers, radio and that children who were maturing, who wanted to understand the grown-up world, have turned to newspapers and radio, to television and now the Internet.

The news is often harsh: war, crime, the very worst aspects of human behavior. But learning about these things is a part of growing up. Ideally, there are adults on hand to help children understand the news, as my father helped me, and as I tried to help my own children. But who can help a child understand the news out of Washington the past seven months? Much of the public dialogue has turned on subjects that previously weren't considered fit for conversation except with a doctor, clergy or closest friend. We're using language that, not long ago, would have been a scandal in itself. Sex and lies may be old news, but the way we're reporting them now isn't. And as for the motivations of the principal players in the present drama — neither Shakespeare nor Sigmund Freud ever quite managed to explain such things.

How can mere journalists expect to explain them?

How can parents?

And who can make the world seem less scary

- to the children? Or the parents? Those are questions President Clinton was not asked by Kenneth Starr. But they are questions that many parents are asking — while we journalists plunge on, ever deeper into the

Russian Prime Minister insists he has crisis under control

MOSCOW (AP) — Russia's Cabinet appointments and gov-interim government struggled to ernment policies. It would also The State Duma, the lo keep the lid on the country's exploding economic and political crisis today, claiming the situation was under control as the opposition demanded Boris Yeltsin step down.

"Now I have sorted out the situation in full and can say: Although it is certainly not simple, it is absolutely controllable," acting Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin told reporters

President Yeltsin was at work in the Kremlin today, after not being seen in public since Tuesday, an absence that added to the sense of crisis.

Russian television broadcast pictures of him smiling, looking relaxed and talking energetically with acting Foreign Minister Yevgeny Primakov and President Petar Stoyanov of Bulgaria.

The Kremlin continued today to deny rumors that Yeltsin would resign. Yeltsin spokesman Yastrzhembsky denounced the murmurs late Thursday as "absolutely groundless idle inventions."

Yeltsin's press service reiterated today that the summit with President Clinton in Moscow next week would go ahead as scheduled.

The deepening Russian crisis has jolted stock markets around the world, including the Dow, which tumbled 357.36 points Thursday, the exchange's third largest drop in a single session.

Parliament leaders began discussing today a series of Sovietstyle measures they said would contain Russia's escalating troubles — currency controls, fixed prices and state ownership.

Schizophrenia time of life

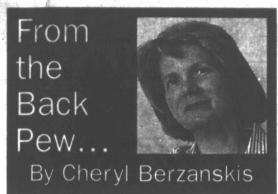

Not only am I not 18, I am over 40 and counting. The realization did not strike as I looked in the mirror - I've had gray hair for years - but when I said, "Yes, ma'am," to a woman younger than me.

"Wait a minute," I thought, "Why am I saying 'ma'am' to her? She's not older than me." Then I began to watch myself. I "ma'amed" or "sirred" everyone over 30, because after all weren't we taught to respect Then it dawned on me - I was the elder.

I am no longer the bratty little cousin, but more like the older aunt who gives nice gifts, make the mistake of weighing or I can't unsolicited advice, wears low heeled pumps and talks about getting Alzheimer's disease when she can't remember someone's name or why she walked into the kitchen.

I still listen to Simon and Garfunkel, the Lettermen, the Rolling Stones and the Eagles. Except when my body is stiff or I dividing my life into halves now, but I don't vinced my self it's true.

see what I'm reading, I feel 18.

There are marks along the time line of my life. I have two grown sons and a nearly grown daughter, I am an orphan, I've owned five houses, had six jobs and euthanized one your name, but I will pretend anyway. And if dog. I make remarks like, "Niels (or Andrew), when you grow up and have a daughter, I think Mary Laurel would be a nice name for her."

But how can 18 year olds have grandchildren? Because middle age is a schizophrenia time of life when one is still feels the memory of childhood hovering like a happy cloud but knows a little better the facts of life.

It is an ambivalent stretch of years when youth is close but maturity seems closer and there is a sense that pretensions of youth are more nostalgic than real.

I plan to stay 18 for a while longer. I may need my glasses and I may not remember GALESBURG, Ill. (AP) — In response to pressure from the clergy, the Knox County Board voted to open its monthly meetings with a prayer.

"Where are you going to find publicly known atheists?" Annie Laurie Gaylor, an investigator for the foundation in Madison, Wis., said.

The 4,000-member group is primarily an association of agnostics and atheists campaigning for a strict interpretation of the Constitution's separation of church and state mandate.

Mangieri said opening board meetings with a prayer is legal so long as there is no overt proselytizing for a particular faith. Prayer, he added, serves a secular purpose by focusing attention on the solemnity of the board's tasks.

College Degree Later in Life Is Good Cause for Celebration

"Alice," deriding her relative's accomplishment of graduating from college in her 40s, was so outrageous - and so touched a nerve personally — that I feel compelled write my first-ever letter to exess an opinion publicly.

I interrupted college to raise three children. Thirty years later, I received an AA degree, with a 3.64 average and while working full time. It wasn't easy, and I was gratified by the expressions of support and congratulations from family and friends alike. I'm now 52, a grandmother, and have just returned to college for my bachelor's degree while working full time. I'm dikely to be in my mid-50s before I finish.

"Alice" s mean-spirited condemnation misses the point entirely. Whether the degree helps in the current job or whether one "needs" a new career is irrelevant. What's important is the personal fulfillment that education brings, and the enrichment of one's life and the lives of others, that is inherent in being better educated.

Abby, your response to Alice was right on the mark. She should be thoroughly ashamed of herself. Her relative's accomplishment is indeed praiseworthy

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Alice," who thinks her relative should have pursued housekeeping rather than broadening her horizons and improving her mind by obtaining a college degree in her 40s

Wake up, Alice! This is the 1990s, not the 1890s. The definition of a good wife no longer includes maid service. You should be congratulating your relative rather than trying to pull her down. I detect more than a touch of meanspirited jealousy in your letter. Shame on you!

DEAR ABBY: I still have one of your columns from years ago, in which you answered a 36-year-old ing entering medical school. The writer said it would take seven answered by asking, "And how old will you be in seven years if you don't do it?"

Well, Abby, I entered college as a freshman at age 38. At 41, I graduated magna cum laude with my bachelor's degree, and at 42 I finished my master's of education with honors. My college experience encouraged my out-of-work husband to enroll in college, too. Now we have both graduated and work in careers we love. We've just purchased our first nice home and are paying our bills on time for the first time in our 28-year marriage. Our parents and grown children are proud of us. When I saw them cheering at my graduation, I cried. Nothing could have been nicer.

You were right when you said the relative of the graduate should be ashamed to have diminished her happiness. I wish her well. Education makes all the difference. Thanks for suggesting it.

HAPPY AGGIE GRANDMA, ENNIS, TEXAS

She was joined on the first team by two of her Comets teammates, forwards Sheryl Swoopes and Tina Thompson, Cleveland guard Suzie McConnell Serio and Phoenix center Jennifer Gillom.

DURANGO, Colo. — West Texas A&M University freshman Alina Apodaca, who prepped at Caprock High School in Amarillo, blasted a 30-yard kick past Fort Lewis College goalkeeper Charbri Cotter 10:17 into overtime to lift the Lady Buffs to a 3-2 victory over the Skyhawks earlier this week. It was the season opener for both schools.

"Alina had a great match," WTAMU coach Butch Lauffer said. "She was involved in all three goals. She got us the corner kick leading to Alicia Elemen's goal to tie the score. Alina then drew the foul in the penalty box allowing Amy Daniels to score."

Apodaca's winning score followed an FLC miscue. She intercepted Skyhawk keeper Charlori Cotter's kick and immediately pegged into the corner of the net just missing the cross bar.

Elemen, a sophomore transfer from San Jose State, knotted the score at one at the 28:36 mark when Julie Saylor's shot rebounded off the FLC goalkeeper.

Amy Daniels provided the Lady Buffs a 2-1 advantage 32:31 into the match on the penalty kick awarded to

According to Lauffer, the Lady Buffs controlled the pace of the match.

"FLC had a hard time breaking us down," Lauffer said. "They should not have scored two goals. We had mental lapses. In that sense, we have a long way to go."

The Skyhawks tied the score at two with just 3:13 left in regulation as WT goalkeeper Laura Faubion saved two shots, but the third shot in the sequence by Zoe Nelson trickled over for the goal.

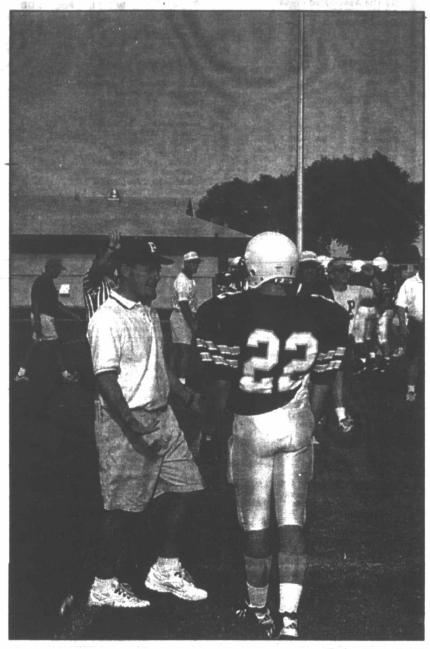

Faubion ended the match with five goalkeeper saves as the Skyhawks launched 16 shots.

DISNEY, OK-You're all set to go. You have the tackle, you've got the snacks, and you're about to depart on one of the greatest adventures you and your child will ever enjoy together. It's called bonding at its best. It's called fishing.

Be prepared to enjoy the sounds of nature, fresh air, and maybe catch a fish, too. But most importantly, it will be sounds of you and your child talking together and enjoying each others company and the great outdoors. But as with all wonderful experiences there are lessons to be taught and learned.

Let's start with water safety. Always, we repeat, always have your youngster wear a life jacket near the water. The next best idea is swimming lessons. This is a must if you live near any type of body of water or plan to take your child fishing or engage in any type of water-related activity. Swimming lessons should be high on your list of priorities. Lessons are usually available for a minimum charge through your local YMCA or parks and recreation department. The lessons will make your fishing experience more fun because you and your youngster will feel safer.

While we're on the subject of water safety, be sure to pick a fishing site that is not only comfortable for fishing, but is safe. Pick a bank with no loose gravel or slippery mud that might cause a youngster to slide off into the water. Another little tip...should vour child slide into the water,a fishing rod can be used as an object to grab hold of.

Safety can't be stressed enough help assure that the hook lands in stringer works fine for keeping Zebco.

Editor's note: This the last the proper place. Most junior the fish fresh. plug. Good news...no hook! Your youngster can practice in the back yard, if you lock up the dog. Or you can take the youngster to the park in a large open area with no trees or power lines to interfere. Take along a small bucket or box for them to aim at. The Bass Pro Shops and Tracker Marine Kids All-American Fishing Derby program annually conducts the Zebco Kids Casting Contest as part of the overall derby event, so they can practice for next year's entry into a local derby near your hometown.

> "We've seen thousands of youngsters cast." said Gordon Holland, co-founder of Hooked On Fishing International which provides instruction and supplies for setting up the local derbies. "Distance is hardly ever a problem when kids cast, nor is shanking it right or left. The major problem seems to be to much height. That's why why we recommend they try practicing in an open area with no obstructions," said Holland. "Encourage your youngster to practice. You'll be surprised how very quickly their skill will develop and how much more they will enjoy the actual fishing experience when

Okay, now you're at the waters edge. You've found that perfect spot, the hooks baited, the cast is made and, oh, my, they've got a fish on the line and they've landed it! Now what? The next discussion area is what to do with the fish. You basically have two choices: save the fish for dinner, or practice catch and release. works just fine, thank you. The second choice and most the wisest, is the "catch and release." Carefully remove the hook from the fish's mouth and gently lower the fish into the water. Try not to handle the fish to much or their protective coating will be disturbed. The lesson you want to teach the child is that letting the fish go will give it the chance to grow bigger and reproduce and thereby preserve a wonderful resource.

In the past articles in this 3-pert series, we have briefly touched on a handful of helpful topics that should add to the enjoyment and safety of a fishing trip with your youngster. Please remember a couple of things in closing: plan for safety, keep the trip short and simple, and don't forget the snacks. And last but not least, don't forget the camera. You are oing to have the time of your ife, and it needs to be recorded on film! Remember...vou're building a foundation for your future fishing partner. Do it right, and have fun!

And, when next season comes around, be sure to sign up your child in one of the more than 1, 000 Bass Pro Shops Outdoor World and Tracker Marine Kids All-American Fishing Derby events sponsored nationwide, in all 50 states, by Hooked On they can cast the line out by Fishing International.
