AUSTIN (AP) — Condemned serial killer Kenneth McDuff secretly helped authorities find the bodies of three of his victims in exchange for a reduced sentence for his convicted drug dealer nephew, the Austin American-Statesman reported today.

McDuff is scheduled to be executed tonight for the abduction and slaying of Waco convenience store clerk Melissa Ann Northrup.

The newspaper reported that in a highly unusual move, McDuff was taken out of death row under heavy guard for two days in October to search for the body of Colleen Reed of Austin after authorities were unable to find that body with maps he drew.

Derailment cost put at $4 million

By JEFF WEST
Staff Writer

Railroad crews are cleaning up today in the wake of a train mishap near Price Road where 10 railroad cars, on two sets of track, were damaged, destroyed or derailed.

An early estimate of $4 million in damages resulted from the accident Monday that also blocked traffic at the railroad crossing at Price and Highway 60 for several hours.

The accident happened about 3:40 p.m. while an eastbound train was switching from the south track to the north track, said conductor, Darren Mooneyhan.

He told The Pampa News everything seemed fine until the emergency brake system engaged. He said he looked back and saw the cars kicking up rock and dust as they came off the tracks, some turning on their side.

Luckily, while there was a car on the train that contained fuel oil, none of the derailed cars had any hazardous material on board. Most of the cargo was food including a lot of canned goods, according to Mooneyhan.

He said the train was only going about 35 miles an hour at the time. Each car weighs about 130 tons loaded and all 10 cars were loaded at the time. Initially the count was 11 but the last car apparently remained on the tracks enough to be moved.

Canadian district petition circulating to drug test pupils

By DAVID BOWSER
Staff Writer

CANADIAN — Residents concerned about illicit narcotics among the youth here were circulating a petition today calling for drug testing all students in the Canadian Independent School District.

Kim Parnell, leader of the group, has organized three meetings of concerned citizens, the most recent of which was Monday night at the Hemphill County Courthouse.

A crowd of more than 150 overflowed the 31st District Courtroom as they listened to Parnell and law enforcement officials and exchanged ideas and anecdotal evidence of what they perceived to be a growing problem in their community.

"We're not here as a vigilante group," Parnell said in her opening statement. "We're here to find solutions."

Parnell said some solutions to the problem of drug use in Canadian might be an increased education among parents concerning drugs and gang activities. She also suggested talking to students in the school system and insisted that local law enforcement officials increase pressure on drug dealers in the community.

'Here's to you, Mrs. Robinson' Family learns to deal with grief

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
For The News

Editor's Note: This is the second of a two-part series about one family's experience with the death and grief.

Reeling from the unexpected death of their loved one, Hazel Robinson's family went about the business of living even though their lives had been totally disrupted.

"Mother was the hub of our family," Shirley Maddox, Robinson's daughter, explained. "At her funeral, all three granddaughters stood up and gave a eulogy. When I go, I hope someone loves me enough to say things like that."

Keith Robinson, Robinson's husband, remembers the granddaughters coming to their house often.

"She was close, very close, to all of them. They all had times of being frequent visitors," he said. "We knew that on Friday night and Saturday night, the youngest granddaughter - Stephanie, would come to stay with us. She did up until she was 17 years old."

After the funeral, Robinson's family members each found themselves reacting to their loss in different ways.

Keith's own mother had died in way similar to his wife. She died in a hospital in Groom, waiting for the results of a test that confirmed she had acute leukemia. Keith had driven to Pampa to arrange for blood donations.

Extension study: Park, recreation resources need more support

COLLEGE STATION — Texas parks, historic sites and other outdoor resources are vital to the state's economy and social structure, but face a number of threats, including inadequate funding, according to a Texas A&M University study released recently.

"Texas Outdoors: A Vision for the Future" recommends greater support from both public and private sectors if the state is to meet growing and changing demands for outdoor recreation benefits. The report is the culmination of a nine-month study of how to best provide adequate natural, historic and cultural resources for the state.

"Texans are blessed with wonderful resources even though we lag behind other states in investing in those resources," said Dr. Peter Witt, co-manager of the report's project group. "We often take those benefits for granted, even when they're in danger of decreasing or disappearing."

The outdoor recreation study, commissioned by Texas Parks and Wildlife in cooperation with the Texas Recreation and Park Society, was conducted independently by the Texas A&M group. Findings were based on a variety of sources including a statewide survey of citizens and input from conservation organizations, government agencies and private landowners.

"This study will help determine the long-term future of Texas Parks and Wildlife by helping to guide policy decisions on how we meet the needs for hunters, fishers, campers and other outdoor recreationists for the next 20 years," said Dr. Bob Brown, head of the A&M department of wildlife and fisheries sciences and co-author of the study. "I've already had calls from other states, and I have no doubt this will serve as a national model for other state natural resource agencies to map their futures as well."

The A&M report follows closely on the heels of an audit of TPW management of state parks released by the State Auditor's Office in October, which found a $10.1 million annual shortfall in funds needed to adequately fund state park operations. TPW asked for the audit to help improve state park management and identify long-term needs.

"The auditors recommended decreasing services and curtailing opening of new parks until budget shortfalls are met, among other actions. We recommend greater support for resources that are vital for a prosperous, healthy and well-rounded citizenry," said Witt, who directs Texas A&M's recreation, park and tourism sciences department.

Witt said the study team concluded the public has a vested interest in the educational, economic, historic and health benefits of outdoor recreation and other sites. Public funds from various sources, including outdoor-related taxes, he added, should therefore be used to support the system of natural, cultural and historic resources in which the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and local park and recreation departments play a central role.

The team identified five critical issues facing parks in the immediate future.

First is that recreation demand will increase, but demographic changes in visitor profiles will mean challenges for TPW and other providers in responding to Texans' recreational needs.

Second, the inventory of resources managed by the department is part of a statewide system of private lands and public holdings that does not function in a unified way, and system holdings are inadequate in some areas and redundant in others, the report notes.

Third, Texas Parks and Wildlife must increase public understanding of its management, stewardship and conservation roles, the report concluded. In addition, the department and other entities must increase awareness of their contributions to economic development, alleviation of juvenile crime, reduction of health care costs and enhancement of education.

Holiday program provides gifts for neglected children

AMARILLO — Bank One customers will have the opportunity to touch a child's life this holiday season when The Spirit of Christmas program begins Nov. 12. Presented by Bank One, Texas and sponsored by FAO Schwarz, The Spirit of Christmas provides holiday gifts to children supervised by Child Protective Services.

Now in its 19th year, The Spirit of Christmas serves children who might not otherwise receive a gift for the holidays. Participants can select one or more Wish Cards at any Bank One location and give a child the gift he or she wants. Once the gift is returned to Bank One, volunteers ensure it is delivered in time for Christmas morning.

Last year, The Spirit of Christmas program in Amarillo provided more than 1,011 gifts to 337 children. Statewide, more than 46,000 gifts were provided for 22,000 children. The program runs through Dec. 12 at all Bank One locations.

"Each of us has the opportunity through The Spirit of Christmas to make a difference in the life of a child that's been neglected or abused," said chairman and CEO of Bank One, Texas, Tyree B. Miller. "And few things in life are

Amarillo gallery announces exhibit featuring American, European artists

AMARILLO — The James M. Haney Gallery, located at 3714 Olsen Boulevard, will be mounting an important exhibition of European and American paintings from the 19th and early 20th centuries. This exhibition will focus on artists that exhibited at the Paris Salon; Royal Academy; London and the National Academy of Design and will run from Nov. 19-21.

The earliest of the works featured in the exhibition is Pieter Gerardus Van Os' (1776-1839) "By the Road." A small, intimate, work that portrays a group of figures and animals captured in a typical Dutch landscape. The Van Os family of artists were among the most influential Dutch painters at the end of the 18th through the beginning of the 19th centuries. The father Jan (1744-1808) and his son Georgius (1782-1861) continued the great tradition of Dutch still life painting, while Pieter continued in the footsteps of Paul Potter (1625-1654) painting rustic landscapes.

Also included in the show will be three works by the English Victorian landscape artist Henry H. Parker (1858-1930). Born in London, Parker painted view of the lush countryside surrounding the many rivers in England in a colorful and impressionistic style.

The theme of animals and the countryside will also be seen in a number of other important works. John Fredrick Herring, Jr. (1815-1907), who is considered one of England's finest 19th century farmyard artists, will be presented by his large work entitled "Farmyard Friends." This painting features a group of horses in the foreground with a beautiful vista of the English countryside.

Julien Dupre's (1851-1910) "Le Repos," "The Young Milkmaid" and "The End of the Day" with their large figure and/or animals show why Julien Dupre, "Le Repos," oil on canvas.

Dupre was considered, during his lifetime, one of the most rising artist of the French School. His mastery at portraying both animals and humans, powerfully yet gracefully, made him one of the favorite artists at the Paris Salon.

The American ex-patriot artist Daniel Ridgway Knight (1839-1924) will be represented by one work, "Fishing," measuring 22 x 18 inches, is an early work dating from 1889/1890 and features two women, on a boat, fishing. The work's style and coloration is very reminiscent of Knight's painting "Hailing the Ferry" that is in the collection of The Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, PA.

This particular exhibit will feature a large collection of works that are priced under $15,000. Among the artists featured will be Oliver Clare and Vincent Clare (a family of Victorian Style Still Life artists who worked during the mid to late 19th century); Paul Bive (1851-1900), Herbert Davis Richter (1874-1955), Henry H. Parker (1858-1930) and William Didier-Pouget (1864-1954).

Sharp says TSPR team helps Texas schools

AUSTIN — In the latest issue of his award-winning monthly publication, "Fiscal Notes," State Comptroller John Sharp discusses the accomplishments and findings of his Texas School Performance Review team, and highlights the top 10 recommendations his team has made to school districts across the state.

In 1991, at the direction of the Legislature, Sharp's TSPR team began conducting a series of detailed studies of Texas public school districts. The objective of these reviews is simple: to help communities rise to the increasingly difficult challenge of running their schools as efficiently as possible. Since that time, TSPR has performed management reviews of more than two dozen school districts — large and small, rich and poor, urban and rural.

"We work by invitation only," Sharp said. "We've found that the degree of local support for a performance review is the best indicator of how effectively our recommendations will be implemented."

"After seven years of these reviews, we have proposed more than 3,000 ways for communities to spend their scarce education dollars in their classrooms, rather than on red tape, paperwork, and bureaucracy," Sharp said.

So far, school districts across Texas, from Texarkana to El Paso, have implemented about 89 percent of the TSPR team's recommendations, for an estimated savings of $80 million.

"We've pointed out ways school districts can hold the line on costs, reduce administrative overhead, streamline operations, and improve educational services," Sharp said. "All told, we've offered local taxpayers savings of more than $3.40 million."

Along the way, the TSPR team has found that some recommendations are worth repeating. Among the top 10 recommendations:

- allocating resources fairly;
 - using automation to reduce paperwork;
 - encouraging campus-level decision making;
 - planning carefully for district growth; and
 - investing any cash the district is not using.
- School administrators, faculty, parents, students, and community leaders are consulted throughout the process, Sharp noted. In addition, local residents are invited to attend public meetings, and everyone is encouraged to call a special hotline to offer their best ideas.
- "Some of our best recommendations come from parents, teachers, and students. What they say at our public forums often forms the blueprint we use to guide us through the review itself," Sharp said.
- "One of our most ambitious undertakings was in 1991, when we dug in for a detailed study of the Dallas public schools," Sharp said. "Our 296 recommendations resulted in a projected $60.6 million in savings. I am pleased to report that 99 percent of those recommendations have been implemented."

"In 1996, at the direction of Sen. John Whitmire, we presented a comprehensive study of the sixth largest school district in the nation to the Houston Independent School District. Children First contained 228 recommendations that promised savings of $116 million over five years," Sharp said.

The Comptroller's TSPR team currently has performance reviews under way in the El Paso, Comal, and Mount Pleasant school districts. Sharp's Fiscal Notes is published monthly by the Comptroller's Research Division. It is available by writing P.O. Box 13528, Austin, TX 78711-3528, or by calling toll-free 1-800-531-5441, ext. 3-4900. GRIEF her once or twice a week, not a 24-hour a day thing.

"With a wife or spouse, it is different. Then 50 percent of the household is gone, someone you are used to being with all day-long isn't there anymore," he said.

Carol Deavers, another of Robinson's daughters, knew grief well after experiencing the sudden deaths of a daughter and of her parents-in-law.

"The loss of a mother is different to the loss of a daughter," she said. "They're both hard but they're different."

"Carol and Shirley have had death in their lives, but they had not been there when the death happened (until Robinson died). It's not an easy thing to do, to stand there and watch someone you love die," Keith said.

"For me, I had seen it both ways. I had been with somebody in the hospital when they died and with hospice. I prefer the hospice way. The result was the same - the person died," he explained.

Shortly after Robinson's diagnosis of terminal cancer was confirmed, she and her husband had enrolled with Hospice of the Panhandle, a local non-profit organization. She died 10 days later.

"(Mrs. Robinson's) dog was in bed with her. Everybody was there. There were no restrictions of any kind," Keith remembered. "Everybody knew that everything that could be done had been done. Everybody knew in their heart that she was in a better place, that she wasn't in pain anymore. She had been in pain a long time."

Penny, Robinson's beloved miniature dachshund, "stayed right there with her until she died" Carol remembered. "These things may not mean anything to anybody else, but they meant a lot to us," she said.

As Robinson's primary caregiver, Keith received grief support services from Hospice of the Panhandle, beginning immediately after she died.

He read the booklets and letters, enjoyed visits and phone calls from Hospice staff, and often rode his bicycle to the Hospice office to talk with Blanche Ryel, RN, bereavement coordinator, or one of the nurses who had cared for his wife.

"It put me in a different mood," he recalled. "It was better than sitting alone at the house being morbid. The dogs were getting tired of me. If she had died at a hospital, I wouldn't have seen anyone after that."

Keith attended a grief seminar, one of several each year sponsored by Hospice of the Panhandle and led by Ryel and John Southem, M.Ed., a licensed professional counselor.

"Seeing the other people, the people that run it and the outline of it - it just fit what you were going through. You saw you were normal," he said.

For Keith, the seminar allowed an opportunity to voice one of his private pains - that Robinson's family found it hard to come visit him.

"I knew the house didn't mean anything but sadness for them, but nobody would come to the house," he said. "It's been a long time coming, but they are starting to come over now."

Though they attended the seminar, Carol and Shirley confessed they did not find comfort there.

"(The seminar) did help you realize you were not alone in your grief," Shirley said. "There were other people there who had lost children, who had such terrible things happen. I couldn't say anything. Who were we to say anything?"

Shirley still struggles with anger, frustration, and fear. Surely, someone was responsible for her mother's death so soon after the diagnosis of cancer. Why didn't the doctor who had treated Mrs. Robinson for so many years discover the cancer before it invaded her whole body? Why did the actual death process take 18 agonizing (for the family) hours? Why was her mother's breathing so labored? Why was her mother acting so restless, even though she didn't seem to be in any pain. Why hadn't she been told that her mother was dying? Worst of all, did the medicine she gave her mother shortly before her death cause her mother to die? Why hadn't Hospice called her or her sister?

"When we experience the death of someone we love, we have to ask 'why' over and over," Southern explained. "When an individual perceives the death is sudden, their shock is great and their anger is great. You have to let them keep telling their story until they can get a good perspective on it. In this case, the cancer was there regardless of whether anyone found it or not. The patient was going to die. But the family has to find a way to come to terms with that."

"Maybe we went too soon. It was about three months after Mother died, maybe if we went now we could understand better what they were talking about," Shirley said.

Southern agreed that the grief seminars are more beneficial for persons who are not in the early stages of grief.

"I recommend that they wait at least three months until the psychological shock (from the death) begins to fade," he said. "Because of the shock a person can't concentrate. In the case of a sudden death there's an element of denial that takes time to wear off."

Southern also pointed out that people express grief in different ways.

"Some grieve in an outward way and some grieve inwardly," he said. "But don't mistakenly think they're not grieving just because you don't see it. Some seek professional help, while some read everything about grief they can find."

"Usually they're looking for an answer to take the pain away immediately," he added. "We're in a culture that believes in immediate relief. We see it in our commercials and everything else. There is not a surgery, there's not a pill that will take the pain of grief away. You can only work through it by talking about it until you can make sense of something that makes no sense at all."

He added that it is often hard for someone who is grieving to help someone else who is grieving.

Keith, as the primary caregiver, became the main recipient of the hospice grief support.

"Our grief and bereavement services, which are supported only through memorials and donations, is limited usually to the primary caregivers, but we encourage them to share the information and materials with all their families," explained Sherry McCavit, executive director. "Not only does it make our

Former plant managers indicted

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal indictment alleges two former managers of a Port Arthur chemical plant plotted to conceal the release of dangerous pollutants.

The indictment, returned Sept. 14 and unsealed Monday, names Jeffrey L. Jackson, 43, a former manager of a Huntsman Petrochemical Corp. plant, and Michael Peters, 55, a former environmental manager for the plant and a former state air pollution regulator.

They were charged with conspiracy and making fraudulent reports about volatile organic compounds allegedly released by the plant from December 1994 to June 1997.

Both Peters and Jackson worked at the plant before Huntsman bought the plant from Texaco Chemical in April 1994.

Before working for Texaco, Peters worked for 19 years as an official of the Texas Air Control Board.

Teen inmate gets furloughs

HOUSTON (AP) — A 13-year-old boy accused of dousing a younger boy with gasoline and setting him on fire has been approved for periodic furloughs from Montgomery County's juvenile detention center.

Don Collins, 13, of Splendora has been detained in the juvenile lockup since July 3 on allegations that he torched eight-year-old Robert Middleton on the younger boy's birthday.

Collins spent at least one furlough at the home of the aunt and uncle with whom he was living when Robert was attacked, the Houston Chronicle reported today.

Robert, who was burned over 99 percent of his body in the attack on the wooded trail across the street from where he and Don both lived at the time, is recovering at the Shriners Burns Hospital-Galveston.

Starr probe threatens Independent Council Act

WASHINGTON (AP) — Enacted by a Democratic-led Congress, the Independent Counsel Act is up for renewal next year, its prospects dimmed by a change of heart among Democrats unhappy with Kenneth Starr's four-year investigation of President Clinton.

"This is one issue on which the Republicans were right, and we were just wrong," Sen. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., said in a recent interview. "The independent counsel statute is dead."

Most Republicans opposed the law when it was passed in 1978 in the wake of the Watergate scandal. The fact that the law now is working against a Democratic president and his administration has not generated much change in Republican distaste for it.

"I am no fan of the Independent Counsel Act. Never have been," said Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott.

"When we created the Independent Counsel Act, we never dreamed that a special prosecutor could use these enormous powers to investigate accusations of the private sexual conduct of a president," Rep. John Conyers, ranking Democrat on the House Judiciary Committee, said last week.

Under the act which that June 30, there have been seven investigations of Clinton administration officials that have led to two indictments: former Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy and former Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros.

Even one of the law's authors, Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., conceded in a recent speech that the statute, intended to take the bias out of presidential investigations, needed to be "radically reformed" to "rein in the independent counsel," if it is to be renewed.

The Senate, he said, should consider placing time limits on such probes, for example.

But Levin put much of the blame on Starr, who he said circumvented the law's limits on an independent counsel's authority.

"Starr has made a mockery of the independent counsel process," Levin concluded.

The law had staunch critics long before Starr's investigation into Clinton's Arkansas land dealings wound its way to the president's affair with Monica Lewinsky and landed in Congress in the form of a referral outlining 11 possible grounds for impeachment.

Under Presidents Reagan and Bush, congressional Republicans howled for years that the statute permitted independent counsels to conduct politically inspired, perhaps unconstitutional, investigations. Independent Counsel Lawrence Walsh's probe into the arms-for-hostages dealing known as Iran-Contra was the GOP's chief example.

Senate Republicans almost didn't renew the act in 1993, upset over the six years and $48 million Walsh spent investigating the Reagan and Bush administrations. But a newly elected Clinton lobbied for the law, and prevailed.

Then a three-judge federal court panel in 1994 appointed Starr to investigate Clinton. Democrats who complained of Starr's conservative leanings now are willing to kill the statute.

As chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, Sen. Fred Thompson, R-Tenn., will play a key role in the decision whether to renew the law for another five years. Thompson has remained non-committal.

If Congress refuses to renew the act, such investigations would be handled by the Justice Department. The attorney general would retain authority to turn an investigation over to a special prosecutor in the manner followed in the Watergate probe of President Nixon.

Even before Starr sent his referral to Capitol Hill on Sept. 9, Thompson acknowledged he knew of no way to fix the law without stripping independent counsels of the power they need to investigate high-level executive branch officials.

Time limits, as Levin suggested, could prompt the officials under investigation to stall to run out the clock, Thompson said.

"The burden really is on the proponents of the law right now," he said in an interview. "They need to show us why it's worth the trouble."

A partial survey of members of Thompson's committee and other legal experts on Capitol Hill turned up no outright supporters of the act.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said in an interview that while he opposes the act, he thinks that because of the current standoff with Attorney General Janet Reno "some kind of law" is needed that separates the administration in power from those investigating it.

Long frustrated by Reno's refusal to seek an independent counsel to investigate Clinton's alleged 1996 fund-raising irregularities, Hatch insists that a conflict of interest exists between the Justice Department investigators probing the conduct of the man who is ultimately their boss.

The law says Reno must ask an appeals court panel to appoint an independent counsel upon finding reason to believe "specific, credible allegations" that a high senior official of government has done something criminal. The law covers the highest 50 officials in the executive branch.

Dinosaur embryos newly found

NEW YORK (AP) — Scientists have found a vast dinosaur nesting site in Argentina that includes thousands of fossil eggs. Inside egg fragments, they found the first embryo remains from a major class of large dinosaurs, and first definite fossils of embryo skin from any dinosaur.

Discoveries from the site should shed light on the early development of sauropods, a class of plant-eaters with long necks and tails, small heads and four elephant-like legs that included the biggest animals ever to walk the Earth.

The badlands site, which covers a square mile, is littered with dark-gray fossil fragments of round, rough-textured, six-inch eggs. "You see eggshells everywhere," said Luis Chiappe of the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

The eggs were laid 70 million to 90 million years ago, apparently by titanosaurs that stretched about 45 feet long. The hatchlings might have been only about 15 inches long.

From the embryonic remains, "we're really getting a look at what these animals would have looked like to us, and felt like to touch, when they hatched," said Lowell Dingus of the museum.

Chiappe, Dingus and others describe the finds in Thursday's issue of the journal Nature.

Scientists found so many embryonic remains that it appears catastrophe struck the nesting ground, keeping many eggs from hatching, Chiappe said. Floods may have penetrated the porous shells and drowned the embryos, he said. The flooding also could have carried in layers of silt that kept the eggs so well-preserved.

The modern-day result are embryonic bones, which look like tiny light brown flakes surrounded by green mudstone in eggshell fragments, and dark patches of fossilized skin within the shells.

The haul includes 70 or so shell fragments containing pieces of fossilized skin, in fingernail-sized patches or smaller, their scales clearly visible. No complete embryo skeletons were found, but even finding the collapsed bones is a rarity. Before the new find, embryonic remains had been identified from only five species of dinosaur.

"If you're a dinosaur paleontologist, then I think it's a pretty exciting and wonderful discovery," said Kenneth Carpenter of the Denver Museum of Natural History, who was familiar with the work.

For one thing, it knocks down a controversial suggestion that sauropods gave live birth, Carpenter said. That idea had arisen because sauropod fossils are common in some older rocks in North America, yet no remains of eggs had ever been found.

Police face charges in Louima case

NEW YORK (AP) — Three police officers accused of torturing a Haitian immigrant in a stationhouse bathroom face new charges of obstruction of justice.

In a federal indictment announced Monday, Thomas Bruder, Charles Schwarz and Thomas Wiese were accused of plotting to conceal Schwarz's role in the incident.

The announcement came three days after authorities unsealed court papers in which Bruder and Wiese were quoted as singling out a fourth officer, Justin Volpe, as the one who rammed a stick into Abner Louima's rectum.

"The conduct alleged today goes beyond the so-called blue wall of silence," FBI Assistant Director Lewis Schiliro said. "We are not talking about a failure to come forward. We are talking about the propagation of deliberate falsehoods."

Bruder's attorney, Stuart London, denied the charges.

"There was no conspiracy," he said. "My client never concocted a story. He's only told the truth."

A federal grand jury indicted the four officers in February on charges they violated Louima's civil rights.

Prosecutors say the officers beat Louima in a police car after arresting him in a street brawl outside a Brooklyn nightclub on Aug. 9, 1997. Later, prosecutors allege, Volpe dragged a handcuffed Louima into the bathroom and with Schwarz's help rammed a wooden up the immigrant's rectum, causing severe internal injuries.

The new indictment accuses Bruder, Schwarz and Wiese of secretly speaking to each other days after the arrest. They allegedly agreed that Wiese and Bruder would lie to investigators by indicating they never saw Schwarz in the bathroom.

A fifth officer, Sgt. Michael Bellomo, already had been charged with covering up the attack.

STUDY

A fourth issue is that a lack of basic information about users, nonusers, the resource base and the system limits the ability of TPW and other providers to make optimum decisions.

The final critical issue is that infrastructure (facility) integrity and compliance with health and safety regulations must continue to be addressed methodically by all system elements.

The report suggests more than 100 potential actions for addressing those five issues, but eight emerged as most critical, Witt said.

First is that additional dedicated financial resources should be allocated to outdoor recreation providers so that they can meet their "public trust" responsibilities to protect invaluable cultural and ecological resources, since all Texans benefit from their preservation.

The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and other providers must respond to the needs of under served constituents as the population changes, the report said, through programs and facilities that reach such groups as at-risk, urban youth and growing ethnic populations. For example, new large parks and greenbelts should be developed near major cities because almost 90 percent of the state's population is expected to be urban by 2030, the report said.

A third potential action is increasing joint ventures with nonprofit and private entities, and a fourth is a "rigorous review" of TPW holdings to determine what new sites might be needed, which state parks deserve support and which holdings lack statewide merit and should be divested or managed locally.

The department and other resource managers must clearly communicate the importance of protecting Texas' resources and their benefit to all Texans, the report said, and improve infrastructure maintenance and repairs. The report also recommends improving information gathering and database capabilities, as well as nurturing more relationships with supportive citizens, private groups and businesses.

Asians gathering for meteor storm

DOI INTHANON, Thailand (AP) — With wishes on a star and sleeping bags to weather the cold, spectators came to Thailand's highest peak to watch the most spectacular meteor shower in 33 years.

The celestial fireworks were actually the long tail of the Comet Temple-Tuttel. The shower is nicknamed the Leonids because ancient observers thought the meteors came from the constellation Leo.

The meteor shower was expected to blaze forth in its entire glory over Asia and the Pacific after midnight and into early Wednesday, regaling millions with a heavenly display of falling stars.

The front-row seats were expected to be wherever the sky was darkest and clearest — from the Mongolian steppes to the mountains of northern Thailand to U.S. research planes breaking through cloud cover over Okinawa, Japan.

For millions of others — those bogged by weather or living in North America, when the spectacle was to reach its peak at midnight, the worst time for viewing — the Internet was the place to be.

In northern Thailand, hotels, camp grounds and airlines were booked solid with people who planned to head to Doi Inthanon, its highest peak at 8,464 feet and Doi Suthep, another mountain with a famed Buddhist temple on top. Police feared car accidents on the treacherous mountain roads.

A newspaper teamed up with an astronomer from Switzerland to hold a star party, charging $40 a head for food, drink and a lecture on what's happening in the heavens.

Stargazing early birds curled up in sleeping bags under the chilly skies at Doi Inthanon on Monday night, cracking beers and making wishes as the partial star-fall came into partial view today about 1:30 a.m.

To a backdrop of "Oohs" and "Aahs," 33-year-old

Thamrong Kudpong made his wish: "I already have a daughter. Now, I would like a son."

Rati Cholunyai, 33, who came with his girlfriend of nine years, told her to wish for a successful wedding.

Many in Japan were wishing for the weather to clear today. The government urged businesses to turn off their lights after nightfall to enhance viewing.

Tens of thousands of grade-school students across Japan began preparing to observe the shower and compare notes through the Internet.

In New Delhi, the Nehru Planetarium, India's largest, also was asking local authorities to turn off streetlights after midnight so people could watch the show.

In Thailand, police anticipated a rush out of Bangkok, the smog-ceilinged capital, by people looking for a clearer view.

The meteor shower occurs every November, usually with little fanfare. But every 33 years, the comet speeds through the inner solar system and sheds swarms of particles as it nears the Sun. In 1966, the Leonids display peaked at 150,000 meteors per hour.

Technicians on Monday maneuvered the world's 600 satellites to reduce potential damage when the Earth plows through the wake of Comet Temple-Tuttel. The speeding grit could poke holes in solar panels, pit lenses, blast away mirror coatings or cause damaging electromagnetic pulses.

Experts said the odds of any damage were slim, and meteor showers from the dusty wake of comets are fairly common.

The crew of the Mir space station was prepared for a too-close encounter and planned to enter the Soyuz escape capsule when the shower was at its peak.

"It is better to be on the safe side," Deputy Mission Control chief Viktor Blagov was quoted as saying by the ITAR-Tass news agency.

In Romania, the Bucharest daily Evenimentul Zilei said in a front-page headline: "Romanians, Stay Inside! Leonide, the Toughest Meteor Rain."

Two U.S. research planes stuffed with scientific instruments were going to take off from Okinawa, Japan, and fly above the clouds tonight to catch a crystal-clear look.

Sister-in-Law's Big Mouth Is Used to Bad-Mouth Family

DEAR ABBY: My brother "Pete" is married to "June," an opinionated big-mouth who never has a kind word to say to anybody. She frequently berates Pete and other members of our family. This behavior is disturbing to the entire family, especially to our mother.

My other brother, "Seth," was sentenced to prison on drug charges. Our family has suffered a great deal of pain because of Seth, but we have found strength in our unity and have remained supportive of him. June, however, never misses an opportunity to express her hatred for Seth. She's completely insensitive to our feelings. Although she's Pete's wife, I don't consider her a sister-in-law because she does not behave like a member of the family.

I would like to write her off and never have any contact with her again, but I worry that it would upset my mother and Pete, and they don't need any more problems.

Abby, can you please advise me how to deal with June without starting a lifetime family feud?
 HAD IT UP TO HERE

DEAR HAD IT: Yes. Take June aside and tell her that the family needs her support right now, and to knock off her negative remarks about Seth because they are hurtful and not appreciated. If that doesn't put a stop to it — tune her out or limit your time with her.

Abigail Van Buren
 SYNDICATED COLUMNIST

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "Second Love, Pleasant Plains, Ohio," the second wife who described her in-laws displaying pictures on their walls of her husband and his first wife, while relegating pictures of him and her to the albums, struck a chord with me.

My fiancée has a "family pictures wall" with all her family members including her late husband. He was a dashing fellow. She displays his police badges, awards, and his folded casket flag on her mantel. Does this bother me? Not in the least! I am her living companion for the remainder of our lives. That she will be buried with him in the military cemetery is OK by me. I will be buried in the same cemetery, although not beside her. That's also OK by me.

Abby, they met and married in Vietnam when they were both Army nurses. They shared 23 happy years together. With God's blessing, I hope to share as many more with her. She is a jewel without price!
 TED BENDER, SAN ANTONIO

DEAR TED: And you, my friend, are the platinum band to hold such a jewel. Your compassion and understanding are precious indeed.

DEAR ABBY: I am newly married, and I just found out from a friend that my husband's ex-fiancee has a tattoo on her behind with his name. Everyone in this small town knows about it, because he bragged about how "cute" it was.

My friend says the girl has offered to have it removed since he has married someone else, but she can't afford it. My husband paid to have the tattoo put on, and I think he should give her the money to have it removed since he can well afford it.

He reads your column faithfully, so I think he will listen to you better than he would to me.
 NEWLYWED IN DECATUR

DEAR NEWLYWED'S HUSBAND: I agree with your wife. It's time to put the tattoo behind all of you. Since you paid to have it put on your former fiancée's derriere, ante up for the surgery to remove it. That should put an end to it.

PAMPA — The Harvester Booster Club has tentative plans to take two chartered buses to El Paso for the area football game Saturday between Pampa and El Paso.

Interested persons need to call Dennis Roark at 665-5788 or 665-2892 (after 6 p.m.) as soon as possible.

AUSTIN (AP) — A loss to Texas Tech that cost No. 25 Texas a chance at the Big 12 title game was a crushing blow, but one the Longhorns will recover from before playing archrival Texas A&M, coach Mack Brown said Monday.

"They were crushed. I was crushed. It made you sick," Brown said of a 42-35 loss in Lubbock that snapped a six-game winning streak after a 1-2 start. The Red Raiders scored touchdowns on their final three drives, the last one coming with 25 seconds left.

"To get beat like we did, to come so far and put ourselves in the position that we put ourselves in, it made me want to throw up. I don't think I've seen a bunch that disappointed in so long," Brown said.

Had Texas beat Tech, the Longhorns' Nov. 27 game against No. 6 Texas A&M would essentially have been the Big 12 South championship. Instead, the Aggies have locked up the division for a second straight year and will play Kansas State for the conference title.

"The team won't go into a shell," Brown said. "If it was going to go in a shell it would have done it after (losses to) Kansas State or UCLA when we had shell written all over us."

After going 4-7 last year, the Longhorns weren't expected to contend for the division title. Texas was viewed as a one-man team with record-setting tailback Ricky Williams.

Instead, Brown groomed a team that reached as high as No. 18 in his first season in Austin. The Longhorns are 7-3 overall and 5-2 in Big 12; their only two losses before Tech were to No. 2 Kansas State and No. 3 UCLA, both of which are undefeated.

"We also can be proud of seven wins," Brown said. "A lot of people in America would like to have our problems."

A victory over the Aggies would put the Longhorns in position for a berth in a top-flight bowl game. The team still has the goal of helping Williams break the Division I-A career rushing record.

After gaining 141 yards against Texas Tech, Williams needs just 63 to break Tony Dorsett's 22-year-old mark of 6,082, a record the team is determined to help him break, said linebacker Dusty Renfro.

"The better he does, the better we do," Renfro said. "We definitely want him to break the record."

"The season is not over," said receiver Wane McGarity, who set a school record with four touchdown receptions against Texas Tech. McGarity also is the first 1,000-yard receiver in Texas history with 1,028.

"We did something no one thought we would do, and that was to win seven games and get a chance to go to a bowl," he said. "It was a tough loss that we've got to get over."

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Coach Chan Gailey was so thankful his Dallas Cowboys escaped Arizona without being victimized by Jake "the Snake" Plummer that he let them have an extra day off.

Plummer passed for 465 yards and three touchdowns on Sunday but the Cowboys fled with a 35-28 victory that put them in charge of the NFC East with a 7-3 record. Dallas stands 6-0 in games against division foes, having already swept the Cardinals and the New York Giants.

Gailey decided the Cowboys didn't need to see films on Monday of their harrowing victory after almost blowing a 28-0 lead. They will also be off on Tuesday. "They needed a mental break," Gailey said.

El Paso Riverside has deceiving record

Give the Pampa football team credit. They didn't lose their composure after giving up two fourth-quarter touchdowns to Frenship and being held scoreless for almost 23 minutes of the second half.

Pampa got its passing game clicking as quarterback Justin Roark completed 10 of 15 passes for 193 yards. Of course, the biggest pass play of the night came on Roark's 46-yard touchdown strike to split end Joel Barker with 1:13 left in the game. It turned out to be the winning TD as Pampa came away with a hard-fought 21-14 victory.

Barker had an outstanding receiving night — 4 catches for 127 yards — as Pampa's passing yardage totaled more than the last four games combined. Justin Barnes and Jarred Bowles had 2 catches apiece for 33 and 30 yards, respectively.

Pampa's defense has a habit of shutting down those star backs with the outstanding numbers this season.

Tiger tailback Jonathan Shelby came into the bi-district tilt with 1,131 yards and 11 touchdowns. Shelby managed only 43 yards on 18 carries against the Harvesters and was held scoreless.

I counted eight times where Shelby was stopped at or behind the line of scrimmage. Tackle Tyson Curtis and linebacker Brent Phelps had at least two solo stops apiece on Shelby and were in on several other tackles. Tackle Calvin Tucker, end Andy Schroeder and linebacker Jared White also corraled Shelby behind the line.

Frenship managed only 169 total yards with just 47 coming on the ground.

I'm a big fan of those offensive linemen. Where would a running back be without them?

Give guard Jess Baker and tackle Cody Sheppard a A plus for their blocking efforts against Frenship.

I'm going to have to give some credit to the Frenship team, also. Some Frenship school officials in the press box had written off the Tigers at halftime when they were trailing 14-0. Frenship came out fired up the second half and made a game of it.

El Paso Riverside, Pampa's area opponent on Saturday, has a deceiving 11-0 record. Three of Riverside's wins came against schools that had just started a varsity football program.

At this stage of the season I know the Harvesters won't be taking Riverside lightly. They do have a 300-pound lineman (Saumane Kennach), who made second-team all-district at offensive guard last season. Junior running back Mike Flores was the El Paso Times Offensive Player of the Year in '97.

EP Riverside has won three consecutive district titles, so the Rangers know what it takes to win.

Harris Ratings has Riverside favored by 7 points. However, the Harvesters play a much more competitive schedule. I'm picking Pampa by at least 14 points.

By the way, it wasn't coach Dennis Cavalier's idea to make the 450-mile journey to El Paso, which sets right on the Mexico border.

Cavalier wanted to find an in-between site to play the game, but Riverside coach Tom Work wanted a home and home coin flip.

"I think it's silly to have to go all the way to El Paso. I wanted to have the game halfway. It's all El Paso's doing," he said.

The Harvesters leave Thursday night after school is out. The bus will take the southern route and they will spend the night in Carlsbad, N.M.

Flashback, 1960: Center Duke Garren was the only Pampa Harvester named to the All-District 3-4A Football Team. Garren, 190-pound senior, was a first-team pick.

Canadian favored over over Jim Ned by 21

CANADIAN — Canadian is favored by 21 points over Jim Ned in a Class 2A regional semifinal game against Jim Ned, according to the Harris Ratings. That game will be played at 7:30 Friday night in Vernon.

Canadian clinched its first playoff berth since 1995 with last weekend's 25-6 win over Quannah in the bi-district round.

Ty Dickinson rushed for 134 on 16 carries and scored on a 61-yard run to lead the Wildcats. Three other Canadian players had touchdowns. Jose Morales opened the scoring with an 85-yard punt return in the first quarter. Eric Hall scored on a 6-yard run and George Payton had a 24-yard TD run.

Canadian's defense held Quannah to 151 total yards as cornerback Todd Ridgway, tackle Travis Francis and end Jose Morales had 10 tackles each.

Canadian improved to 10-1 on the season while Quannah finishes with a 6-5 mark.

"Right now our entire defense and offense is playing good," said Wildcats' head coach David Flowers. "We've got a good group of seniors. That's really made a difference."

Pampa tight end Justin Barnes (80) makes a pass reception for a short gain in last weekend's bi-district game against Frenship. Two plays later, Pampa scored the winning touchdown on Justin Roark's 46-yard pass to Joel Barker as the Harvesters came away with a 21-14 win. Pampa meets El Paso Riverside at 3 p.m. (CST) Saturday in the area contest in El Paso.

Tennessee still atop BSC standings

By RICHARD ROSENBLATT
AP Football Writer

Kansas State's decision to play a weak non-conference schedule could cost the Wildcats a trip to the Fiesta Bowl, where the national title will be on the line.

For the second straight week, Tennessee was first, UCLA second and Kansas State third in the Bowl Championship Series standings released Monday.

The BCS standings, calculated by using The Associated Press' media poll and the coaches' poll, three computer rankings, strength-of-schedule and number of losses, determine who plays in the Fiesta Bowl on Jan. 4.

K-State (10-0) beat Nebraska 40-30 for its first win in 30 years over the Cornhuskers on Saturday, while the Volunteers (9-0) barely beat Arkansas 28-24 and UCLA (9-0) defeated Washington 36-24.

However, because of the Wildcat's soft schedule — rated 68th toughest compared to 13th for Tennessee and 12th for UCLA — prevented them from overtaking the Bruins in the BCS point totals.

In this week's AP media poll, Tennessee was No. 1, followed by Kansas State and UCLA. In the coaches' poll, it was Kansas State, Tennessee and UCLA.

After all the BCS computations, Tennessee had 3.77 points — 1.5 points for poll average, 1.75 for computer rank average, .52 for strength-of-schedule and zero for losses.

The Bruins had 5.81 points — 3 for poll average, 2.33 for computer rank average, .48 for strength-of-schedule and zero points for losses.

Kansas State had 6.55 points — 1.5 for poll average, 2.33 for computer rank average, 2.72 for schedule strength and zero for losses.

The Wildcats, who have played the weakest schedule of the first 12 teams in the standings, gained some ground, on the Bruins' as their schedule strength improved 11 spots from last week's rating of 79th toughest. They trail UCLA by 74 points, down from 1.26 points last week.
