Wanted man eludes police

Charged in severe assault; accused of threats, break-ins

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Law enforcement authorities today continue their search for a Pampa man wanted in connection with a near-fatal assault, and a rash of threats, assaults and break-ins over the weekend. Police are looking for Marshall Clayton Johnson, 35, wanted on charges of aggravated assault. Johnson is the father of Marshall Tyler Johnson, the 9-year-old boy struck and killed by lightning on June 1.

Johnson is described as being a white male with brown hair (close cut on the side), blue eyes and as being six feet tall and weighing 175 pounds. He was last seen wearing black sweat pants and a white t-shirt with Budweiser logo on the front.

Wanted posters distributed by law enforcement authorities over the weekend describe Johnson as being "dangerous and possibly armed."

The assault victim, George Glen Eggleston, 34, 1120 S. Wells, remained in critical condition in the intensive care unit at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo at press time today, suffering from severe head wounds.

Pampa Police Chief Charlie Morris said Eggleston came to the Pampa Police Department Thursday afternoon to report an assault. According to the report, Eggleston was asleep in his living room at 1120 S. Wells about 4 p.m. Thursday when a man entered his home.

Weekend thunderstorms throughout the area were accompanied by powerful bolts of lightning like these in Pampa. The photo was taken north of the 700 block of Lefors Street. From Friday night's storms through the end of the weekend rainfall totaled 2.59 inches. More thunderstorms could be headed this way this evening, tonight and tomorrow.

'Caught in the act' Illegal tire dumping nets arrests

Gray County Sheriff's deputies arrested three men and detained a juvenile Sunday after a citizen reported someone was dumping old tires off a county road.

Three Pampa men remained in Gray County Jail early today on charges of illegal tire dumping, a Class B misdemeanor: Kevin Eugene Huddleston, 23, 2209 N. Sumner; Clifford Wayne Ledford, 21, 624 N. Christy; and Robert Gene Menatee, 21, 1019 E. Browning. A fourth person, a 16-year-old boy, was detained and turned over to juvenile authorities, according to sheriff's reports.

Bonds for the adults were set today at $1,000 each. Chief Deputy David Russell said a citizen called the Sheriff's Office on a cell phone and reported someone was dumping tires off Gray County Roads 1 and 9 1/2 Sunday afternoon.

Deputies Paul Ortega and Carey Rushing arrived at the location and "caught them in the act," said Sheriff Don Copeland.

"This is a case where the citizens really helped," Russell said. "They saw what was happening and called on their cell phone and stayed until the deputies got there."

charges depend on the materials being dumped. The charges against the three men are "subject to change," he said.

Deputies found approximately 30 old tires had been unloaded from a stock trailer, with many more tires still in the trailer, Russell said.

"Apparently the trailer had been spotted there before," he said.

The chief deputy said the old tires are health and fire hazards and should be disposed of in the proper way.

"There's nothing more aggravating than to have something like that dumped out on your property," he said.

Dangerous animal law discussion set

A review of the city's dangerous animal law tops the list of discussion topics for Tuesday afternoon work session of the Pampa City Commission.

City Attorney Don Lane will review the law with the commission at the request of Mayor Bob Neslage.

Another work session discussion will be led by Charles Henry who is to present a tourism issue on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce Tourism Committee.

Cable Advisory Committee members will also be on hand to give the annual report.

- Regular agenda items include:
- Declare old computers as surplus property
 - Accept bids on delinquent tax property
 - Resolution supporting interest in Borger's regional tub grinder program
 - Adopt on first reading, Ordinance No. 1349 authorizing the reconveyance of property.

Future of Beall's Store to be told in several weeks

By NANCY YOUNG
Managing Editor

The future of Beall's Department Store in Pampa is not clear, said Wendy Wall of Beall's corporate offices in Houston. She told The Pampa News the future of Pampa's store and other individual stores will not be determined for several weeks.

Stage Stores, a Houston-based company which operates Beall's and the Palais Royal chains, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy on June 1. Wall said last week the company is not closing as they plan to reorganize, restock stores and put the company back on solid financial basis as evidenced by filing the Chapter 11.

"We don't know about the future of individual stores yet. We won't know for several weeks," said Wall. "The future of the stores will be determined by the profitability and potential of stores not the market."

The company has 600 stores in 33 states.

Stage Stores' interim chief executive, Jack Wiesner, says the clothing retailer might close 75 to 100 stores to cut costs, improve its financial health and emerge from bankruptcy protection, according to associated wire service reports.

Wiesner said the company should play to its strength which is its base of stores in the Southwest, especially Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and New Mexico.

Wall said the objective of the restructuring will be for the Beall's (See BEALL'S, Page 2)

Message Sent by Car Ads Is Offensive to Safe Drivers

DEAR ABBY: I was pleased to see the letter in your column referring to the commercial showing two "ladies" driving aggressively to get a parking space ahead of each other. The third time we saw it, my husband and I decided to disconnect the television cable.

Whatever happened to "let others go first" and "do unto others as you would have them do unto you"? How can I teach my grandchildren to be polite when selfishness is presented as "sport"?

I refuse to buy a vehicle from a company that uses such advertising, even if it means keeping my old car.

ANN VANCE,
GREENWOOD, MISS.

DEAR ANN: The writer of that letter was Valerie Rivard. Her letter struck a chord with many people. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I are professional freight truck drivers. When a new auto ad comes on the air, we know we will see that kind of driving within 24 to 48 hours. People seem to think that if the driver in an ad can drive that way, they can, too. Because it didn't happen in the commercial, they fail to take into account that their reckless driving could cause a crash! We see it all the time.

One ad showed a car pushing through three big rigs as it came on the highway, cutting off at least one of them and almost side-swiping another. The driver in the ad gets away with it! What kind of example does that set for teen-agers and new drivers?

Abigail Van Buren

Please, everyone: Drive in a defensive, courteous, legal, professional manner. The result will be safe and happy roads for all.

HENRY A. PASCOE,
HARP TRANSPORT INC.,
SNOHOMISH, WASH.

DEAR HENRY: Hear, hear! Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Being a teen-ager myself, I can tell you that commercials for "fast" cars do not encourage me to drive fast. They are meant only to show the maneuverability of the vehicles. Some people actually drive off-road for a living and appreciate a car that can perform sharp turns.

I do not believe that these commercials send subliminal messages to make young drivers drive faster or recklessly. Anyone of any age can drive fast and irresponsibly.

TIFFANY IN WICHITA FALLS, TEXAS

DEAR TIFFANY: I agree that anyone of any age can have a lead foot and drive recklessly. Unfortunately, too many people do. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I see many SUV and car commercials portraying vehicles driving off-road, driving through streams and nature. This is an irresponsible message to send to people. Off-road driving is extremely destructive to our environment. Why can't car companies promote good citizenship while they market their cars?

SICK OF SUVs
IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR SICK: Good point; good question. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I have also become angry while watching those ads. Driving is portrayed as a competitive blood sport. To even suggest that there is something "glamorous" about ignoring traffic regulations and common civility borders on the criminal.

What can we do to get auto manufacturers and their ad agencies to stop contributing to the anarchy and carnage on the roads? Would a letter-writing campaign to car companies and their ad agencies be of any use? How about a boycott of the most irresponsible manufacturers?

MAD IN ATLANTA

DEAR MAD: I can think of no more effective way to communicate that message than by opening one's pen and closing one's checkbook.

Respond to others. An associate might be hedging. Be understanding. Tonight: Play the night away.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

* You are not seeing another clearly, as hard as you try. Wishful thinking seems to make a haze of reality. Anchor on family and home. Zero in on what is important. Build security on the domestic front. An investment could be key. Tonight: Follow instincts with family.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

* Get down to basics with another. Reach out and have a needed discussion. Keep communication flowing, even though your nerves could easily be frazzled. Review work, with an eye to success and efficiency. Make calls. Explain what you want and expect. Tonight: At a favorite place.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

* Others respond to your energy. Money matters come to the forefront. You can have what you want, as long as you don't take a risk. A loved one might coax you into taking unwise action. You might not be viewing a child clearly. Tonight: Be savvy with funds.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

* Your ability to take an overview allows you to see where another is coming from. Be willing to gather information. The more new ideas you incorporate, the better off you'll be. Make long-distance calls; reach out for others. Tonight: Do what you want.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

* A partner whispers in your ear. Listen carefully. There are some gems of wisdom here. Not everyone agrees with you, but you could be startled by feedback. Don't expect universal accord. Work with unpredictability. Tonight: Get extra rest.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

* Attend meetings, network and share. Unexpected money developments work in your favor. Review your finances and decide where you can make changes. Don't allow current restrictions to stop you. Aim for what you want. Tonight: Get together with a friend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

* Your unpredictability irks others, whether they admit it or not. Work needs detail attention. Don't skip steps or take shortcuts. Remember agreements and responsibilities, even if you feel a bit uncomfortable with what you must do. Others respect your steadiness. Tonight: A must show.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

* Reach out for others who are at a distance. Listen to feedback from a child or loved one. Your sixth sense works for you, but you might feel uncomfortable with what you perceive. Weigh a risk that might involve hush-hush information. Tonight: Catch a movie.

DALLAS (AP) — Jason Arnott scored in double overtime as the New Jersey Devils won their second Stanley Cup in six seasons Saturday night with a 2-1 victory over the Dallas Stars in Game 6 of the finals. Devils defenseman Scott Stevens won the Conn Smythe Trophy as the playoff MVP.

HORSE RACING

NEW YORK (AP) — Commendable, trained by D. Wayne Lukas and ridden by Pat Day, won the Belmont Stakes on Saturday. Commendable paid $39.60 as an 18-1 long shot. He snapped a six-race losing streak dating to a win in his debut Aug. 14. Lukas has won four Belmonts and a total of 13 Triple Crown races. Aptitude finished second by 1 1/2 lengths. Unshaded, making his Triple Crown debut, finished third.

BASKETBALL

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Take away Kobe Bryant, add 18,345 enemy fans and clamp several defenders onto Shaquille O'Neal. Suddenly, the Los Angeles Lakers don't look so invincible. Erasing any notion that the NBA Finals would be merely a coronation, the Indiana Pacers emphatically defended their home court with a 100-91 victory in Game 3 on Sunday night, cutting Los Angeles' series lead to 2-1. After losing two games in Los Angeles without much of a fight, the Pacers were talking trash, shoving the Lakers around and reveling in the support of the basketball fanatics crammed into Conseco Fieldhouse for the Pacers' first finals home game.

"We're not a team that's going to be pushed around," Indiana's Jalen Rose said. "We're not a team that's coming into the series like we're the JV team. We have to be on edge (and) we have to be excited."

Reggie Miller, who had 33 points after struggling in the first two games, exemplified the Pacers' newfound swagger when he muscled his way into Los Angeles' huddle during a fourth-quarter timeout to "save" teammate Mark Jackson, who became trapped behind several angry Lakers.

"It always comes down to me. This is my team," Miller said. "I've got to step up and I've got to do everything."

The Lakers struggled in their first full playoff game without Bryant, who asked to play on his sprained left ankle but was held out by the team's medical staff. None of the Lakers assumed Bryant's scoring load, and his absence on defense was obvious with every open shot taken by Miller and Rose, who had 21 points.

"His defensive energy is probably what we missed the most," said Lakers guard Derek Fisher, who had 10 points and 10 assists. "We feed off of him, and he's tough to replace."

O'Neal, who dominated the series' first two games, had 33 points and 13 rebounds but had to work for each one. The Pacers' defensive rotation against Shaq improved dramatically, and he faced two or three defenders almost every time he touched the ball.

The league MVP had just one shot in the first 11 minutes while Indiana went ahead to stay, and he rarely got the prime low-post position he claimed in Los Angeles.

"I thought we went a little harder tonight," said Indiana forward Dale Davis, who had 12 rebounds and fouled out playing tough defense on Shaq. "We forced them to make turnovers, and we were the aggressors tonight."

Game 4 in the best-of-seven series is Wednesday night, with Game 5 on Friday.

FDA wants doctors to heed drug warnings

By LAURAN NEERGAARD
AP Medical Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's one of medicine's thorniest issues: how to teach doctors the pros and cons of the dozens of new drugs that hit the market each year. A drug that's safe for one person can kill the next; it largely depends on how each patient's risk factors match each drug's side effects.

Yet many doctors never read the warning labels of drugs they prescribe. In 2 1/2 years, the FDA has banned four drugs that killed dozens of Americans in part because doctors disregarded or never read the warnings. A fifth such drug is scheduled to come off the market this summer.

Now the FDA is preparing to overhaul hard-to-read drug labels, hoping a new system similar to how foods are labeled will make it easier for doctors to spot the biggest risks.

■ Now the FDA is preparing to overhaul hard-to-read drug labels, hoping a new system similar to how foods are labeled will make it easier for doctors to spot the biggest risks.

"Our interest is the clinician who has 30 seconds to make that prescribing decision," says FDA drug chief Dr. Janet Woodcock. "They need something right in front of them."

That alone won't solve the problem, so agency scientists also are debating stricter measures — such as restricting which doctors can prescribe certain risky drugs.

A sobering exchange at a recent meeting of the agency's scientific advisers illustrates the heightened concern:

An experimental pill for impotence called Uprima will certainly kill some men if it's allowed to sell, the advisers said bluntly. But they called new impotence treatments necessary, so they urged strong warning labels to deter prescriptions for the men most at risk.

Yet when a top FDA official asked how to ensure those warnings would do any good, the advisers admitted they probably won't.

"I don't think any of us knows what does work," responded adviser Dr. Robert Califf of Duke University. "Less than 1 percent of physicians have seen a label in the last year. So I think it's highly unlikely that putting anything in the label is going to make any difference."

That's a message FDA "has been very slow to understand," says Dr. Jerry Avorn, medication safety chief at Boston's Brigham & Women's Hospital.

A drug's label is actually pages of tiny print mixing explanations of the drug's chemistry with how well it works and its side effects. Some doctors read these complex labels, but many say they're too busy and instead learn about new drugs from pharmaceutical salesmen unlikely to stress risks.

"We can't have a system that works for only the good doctors, because they're not the ones who are going to get their patients into trouble," adds Avorn.

The diabetes drug Rezulin, the painkiller Duract, the hypertension drug Posicor and the antihistamine Seldane all were pulled off the market — and the heartburn drug Propulsid joins them this summer — for causing lethal side effects. While critics question why the FDA didn't ban these drugs sooner, experts blame many of the deaths on doctors' failure to heed repeated warnings about how to safely prescribe the pills and for whom.

Simplifying the label might make more doctors actually read it. Woodcock says the FDA soon will propose new regulations making prescription drug labels look more like food labels, with special at-a-glance sections highlighting the biggest risks. The fine print would come later, giving more details.

Woodcock acknowledges that change isn't enough. "It can't be a cop-out. We can't just say, 'We're going to put it in the label and then it's the doctor's problem' — because it's the patient's problem."

Avorn wants FDA to restrict marketing of risky drugs, like the agency did in 1998 with its unprecedented order that doctors must be specially trained to prescribe the infamous birth defect-causing drug thalidomide. FDA officials are debating that idea.

But it's not just FDA's problem. Medical schools "do a very bad job" in teaching medication use, and no one requires that doctors prove they safely prescribe to get their medical licenses renewed, Avorn notes.

Avorn's Harvard-affiliated hospital is pioneering programs to teach doctors to prescribe better. Minutes after a prescription enters the hospital's computer system, his office can page the physician to urge a safer substitution. He also counters pharmaceutical sales pitches by sending experts on 15-minute visits with doctors to explain the safest use of new drugs, a program copied in several hospitals here and abroad.

"You can change prescribing practices," he concludes. But for most doctors today, "there's nobody coming to teach them anything except the sales reps."

Drug could help alcoholics stay sober

CHICAGO (AP) — A drug designed to help alcoholics abstain from drinking showed promise in its first American test, according to researchers.

Acamprosate worked best in people who aimed to avoid alcohol entirely, rather than just cutting down, said researcher Barbara Mason of the University of Miami School of Medicine.

"It's not magic," she said. "It's not something a spouse can put in the coffee of the alcoholic in the morning and the problem will go away. It has to go hand-in-hand with having abstinence as your treatment goal."

Acamprosate is now sold in Europe, South America, Asia and elsewhere, and more than a million people have taken it, Mason said. It is manufactured by Lipha s.a. of Lyon, France, which paid for the new study.

Mason presented the study's results recently at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association.

Dr. Anita Goodman, executive vice president of Lipha's clinical development group in the United States, said the company plans to get the drug on the American market "as soon as we can." That step, which would require federal approval, will take at least a year, she said Monday.

Doctors already have some drugs available to maintain abstinence. One, disulfiram, makes a user feel nauseous and otherwise sick if he or she also uses alcohol. Another medication, naltrexone, acts on brain circuitry to reduce the desire to drink. Acamprosate acts on different brain circuitry.

Mason's six-month study involved 601 alcoholics who were treated at 21 medical centers. They were randomly assigned to take either acamprosate tablets or a placebo twice a day, starting two to 10 days after their last bout of excessive drinking.

They also received psychological treatment, education about effects of alcohol, strategies to help them cut down and quit drinking and exercises to identify what led them to drink.

Only 41 percent of the participants, or 241 people, began the study with a goal of complete abstinence, Mason said.

Of those people, those on the placebo stayed away from alcohol on 58 percent of the days they were studied. Those taking 2 grams a day of acamprosate didn't drink on 70 percent of the days they were studied; for people on 3 grams, the figure was 73 percent.

In all, the members of the placebo group cut their weekly intake of drinks by 36 percent; the two other groups each reduced it by 40 percent.

Raye Litten, a program officer for medications development at the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, said acamprosate has a modest effect on drinking that's about the same as naltrexone.

"It's another way to treat alcoholism," he said. "The more weapons you have to treat, the better off you'll be, because what works for one person may not work for another."

Brain surgery offers temporary Parkinson's relief

By The Associated Press

Burning a tiny hole deep in the brain can relieve some symptoms of Parkinson's disease for more than five years, though certain major improvements wear off, researchers reported recently.

The surgery is called pallidotomy and involves the removal of a part of the brain that controls movement. It can be useful when medicine alone cannot control the progressive neurological disorder, doctors in Toronto concluded in their study published today in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The surgery is different from that undergone by actor Michael J. Fox, the Parkinson's patient who left television last month to focus on finding a cure. Fox had a thalamotomy, a decades-old operation that destroys overactive, tremor-causing nerve cells by burning or freezing a pea-size spot in the brain.

The study is a follow-up to one published in 1997 about the first 40 patients the doctors treated with pallidotomy.

Doctors knew that, over the short term, pallidotomy can relieve symptoms such as tremors and stiffness, as well as uncontrollable arm and leg movements caused by the medicines used to treat Parkinson's disease.

The earlier study of 40 patients found significant improvement both while taking medications and off them.

The follow-up found that the reduction in tremors and rigidity while off medication was nearly as marked 4 1/2 years afterward as at the first checkup six months after the operation. So was the reduction in the twitches and jerks caused by medicine.

But improvements in the level of daily functioning did not last. The study did not give details, except as composite scores in several scales designed for Parkinson's patients.

In addition, only 20 of the patients could be included in the follow-up, and they were generally the ones who had responded best at the start, wrote Dr. Jennifer Fine, a neurosurgeon at Toronto Western Hospital.

"This bias may limit the general applicability of our results," Fine wrote.

Study: Meningococcal vaccine proves effective in infants

CHICAGO (AP) — A new vaccine is the first to safely and effectively immunize infants against a form of meningococcal disease, a leading cause of bacterial meningitis, researchers reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

British researchers tested the meningococcal C vaccine on 182 infants in Oxfordshire, England, and found it gave them long-lasting antibodies against the bacteria.

Although Britain began routinely using the vaccine in infants at the end of 1999, it is not yet available in the United States, where approval could take two to three years, said Nancy Rosenstein, an epidemiologist at the Centers of Disease Control and Prevention.

Meningococcal C bacteria cause about one-third of the 3,000

U.S. cases of meningococcal disease each year, types Y and B cause the others. There are no vaccines against Y and B for infants.

Meningococcal disease can cause bacterial meningitis, an infection of the membranes covering the brain and spinal cord. The disease can also cause a fatal bloodstream infection.

A meningococcal vaccine now used in the United States is not recommended for infants, whose immune systems are not fully developed. It also eventually stops protecting. It is most often used to treat outbreaks of the disease and to inoculate travelers.

The U.S. government has approved two other infant vaccines to prevent diseases that can cause meningitis — one is effective against the Haemophilus influenzae type b, the other against pneumococcal bacteria.
