Russians talk about country's financial woes

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

President Clinton's meetings with his Russian counterpart, Vladimir Putin, have brought America's attention to a country racked with difficulties after the fall of the Soviet Union.

Four former USSR citizens visited Pampa recently to raise public awareness to the social and economic plight of their country Belarus, a Russian republic, and their church's efforts to meet the needs of the citizens.

Rev. Yauheni (Eugene) Starbivem, pastor of the Gomel Grace Church; his brother Sergei; Igor Ivonou, a church deacon; and Slava Andreyev, a church member and English interpreter, came to Pampa as the guests of Carolyn Hall, Jay Knight and Kim Laylock.

RUSSIANS

While here they visited First Baptist Church, Trinity Fellowship and attended the Saturday morning Biscuit Ministry at First Christian Church.

"We have come here from an area near Chernobyl," Rev. Siarhiyenia explained through Andreyev. "God told us that He would bless us. That's why we are here, looking for His blessing."

Rev. Siarhiyenia said the group has visited a number of churches in Washington, Colorado, Oklahoma and now Texas.

"We've been sharing what God has been doing in our country, our economic situation, our economic difficulties," he said. "We are looking for support and cooperation from the American churches."

Belarus is an independent country about the size of Kansas that was once a part of the Soviet Union. Belarus' population is approximately 15 million. Siarhiyenia and his group come from Gomel, one of the country's largest cities with a population of 500,000 people.

"Due to the economic recession, many people need very basic things like clothes and food stuffs," Rev. Siarhiyenia said. "Economic difficulties brought social difficulties, drug addiction, alcohol, despair, no hope.

"That is why people are looking for God," he explained. "The problems of the people become the problems of the church. We're trying to teach the Gospel and at the same time set up ways to help them with their problems."

Rev. Siarhiyenia said that while Pampa has more than forty churches, a city the size of Gomel has only "several" churches. "Some don't have buildings of their own. They just meet where they can. And some can't get together at all because the government is interfering."

Yet it seems that most efforts to resolve the social problems due to the economic situation are being met by these small groups of Christian.

"With the fall of Communism, the church is being entrusted with the care of the people," he said. "Enthusiasm alone is not enough."

"After Chernobyl, we had lots of help. As the years pass by, interest is decreasing but the problems remain. What was once high dose radiation has decomposed and now we are dealing with the effects of low dose radiation," he added.

"We've had many after effects of Chernobyl, like weak immune systems," he said. "People are more subject to illnesses."

"Many of the children have thyroid problems," said Sergei Siarhiyenia, the pastor's brother. "It's not always cancer."

Sergei said that many children have had to have their thyroid glands removed and live the rest of their lives taking hormones.

Deacon Ivonou told of Natasha Stukanova, a 15-year-old, with bone and heart problems who was placed in a local orphanage.

"She has no one to care for her. She has never been properly examined," he said. "Her father is gone. Her mother is an alcoholic. Several of the children from her family are in the orphanage. She's one in greatest need."

While they hope to encourage American donations to help needy persons in their country, the Russian visitors are also sharing personal testimonies with churches and groups.

"We are sharing how God is helping us and what he has done in our lives," Rev. Siarhiyenia said.

"We were not born believers," he explained. "Every one of us came to know Jesus at a mature age."

Rev. Siarhiyenia asked that any donations be given to the CIS Foundation, a non-profit, non-denominational organization, 1101 Fritch Highway in Amarillo. For more information, contact Bill Duncan, director, at 806-383-6990.

OPEN LETTERS TO THE VOTERS OF THE 31ST JUDICIAL DISTRICT

A recent court ruling based on extensive evidence has overturned the district attorneys race in the 31st Judicial District. There are those in the district who have some ill feelings about the election, and it is for that reason Bill Arrington and I are paying for this ad.

Following the run-off election, D.A. Mann had three options. He could: (1) Ask for a recount.. (2) File the lawsuit, as there were so many discrepancies. (3) Do nothing and let the election stand. Needless to say, John's supporters would not hear of option #3, and we let John know that in no uncertain terms. There were procedural problems in four of the five counties involved, and that is why option #1 was not encouraged by all of us. A recount would do nothing to help futures candidates avoid these problems, and option #2 was the best option to get a fair and accurate election in this extremely important race.

John Mann was strongly counseled by us to take this action, so to those of you who disagree, we respectfully submit that John did what we felt was the right thing to do under the circumstances. If allowing our sacred election process to be tainted by glaring discrepancies and in some cases fraud, is how you think an election should be run, that is your right.

Our founding fathers never intended for our system to be anything but the purest and most objective form of government of the people, for the people and by the people. We sincerely hope this has made totally clear why this action was taken, and after taking time to consider the facts, we believe many if not most will concur with our decision.

Respectfully,

Bill Arrington John L. Tripplehorn

Education better served at local level

Can you imagine losing track of a thousand dollars? For most American families, that would be unthinkable.

But in Washington, it happens more than we'd like to think. The only difference is that it's often not just thousands of dollars that get misplaced — it's billions of dollars.

The department has failed two audits because it could not account for $32 billion in taxpayer funds. Additionally, last December the agency mistakenly issued duplicate payments to more than 52 schools totaling more than 6.5 million dollars.

That was the conclusion of a recent task force hearing in the House Budget Committee, which looked into financial management practices at the Department of Education.

The department has failed two audits because it could not account for $32 billion in taxpayer funds. Additionally, last December the agency mistakenly issued duplicate payments to more than 52 schools totaling more than 6.5 million dollars.

Congress has sent more federal dollars to our nation's schools and colleges than ever. Pell Grant funding is up — at its highest level in history. Funding for special education and teacher training programs also has been increased.

Education is important, but we've got to know where this money is being spent. At the same time, we've got to continue doing all we can to give states, parents and teachers more control over what is being taught in the classroom.

The House passed a bill last fall that will give states more flexibility in how federal school funds are spent.

The bottom line is that the key to improving education lies with local communities, not Washington. It is important that the federal government is helping to provide the resources, but neither the taxpayers nor our children can afford to have one dollar of it wasted.

About 300 persons have registered for the Red Cross summer swimming courses which begin tomorrow at the municipal pool.

Sgt. E. G. Albers, head of the Highway Patrol in Region 5, proved himself a real Texas sharpshooter by taking first place in slow-fire shooting competition at the state revolver meet of the Texas Department of Public Safety in Austin.

A large crowd turned out today for the opening of Pampa's summer recreational program and the Red Cross summer swimming courses.

Pampa's Industrial Foundation and Chamber of Commerce will join Gov. Dolph Briscoe's Texas First Program designed to spur economic growth locally and statewide through creation and identification of job opportunities.

Dr. Philip Gramm, who recently addressed the Pampa Chamber of Commerce, told the 55th Annual Convention of the Texas Association of Realtors in El Paso Saturday that American home buyers could have four percent mortgage rates again if the federal government would balance its budget and cease to absorb over two-thirds of available capital to finance growing federal deficits.

Pampa city commissioners find themselves back in the middle of the Hobart Street widening project following a state-sponsored public hearing on the issue Tuesday night at the M.K. Brown Civic Center.

Entries open today for the Top O' Texas rodeo office for the annual Kid Pony Show set for July 9-11 at the Top O' Texas rodeo grounds.

The Pampa Mall began operating under new ownership earlier this month and the transition has gone smoothly, said Fred Meno, president of Woodmont Property Management Co., in Fort Worth.

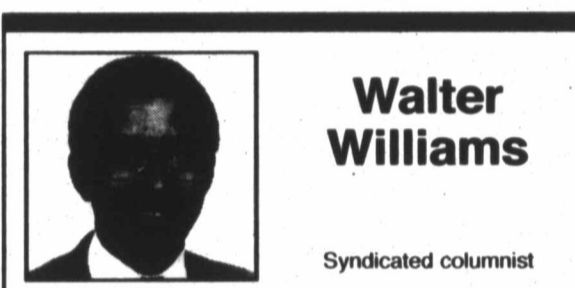

Economics is a way of thinking ...

More than anything else, economics is a way of thinking. At the heart of economics are several simple and easily observable characteristics of humans and the world in which we live.

The first is that people prefer more of those things that give them satisfaction and fewer of those things that give them dissatisfaction. Second, when the cost of something goes down, people tend to take or do more of it, and when the cost of something increases, people tend to take or do less of it. Finally, having more of one thing requires less of something else. Or, as my colleague Professor Milton Friedman puts it, "There's no free lunch." Let's apply these simple postulates to public-policy issues.

With any public policy, there's a benefit and there's a cost. Intelligent public policy discussion requires an examination to determine whether benefits outweigh costs.

For example, there'd be a clear benefit to mandating a national speed limit of 5 mph. The enormous benefit from doing so would be the virtual elimination of the tens of thousands of highway fatalities and injuries each year. But the costs of a 5 mph speed limit would be enormous. We sensibly conclude, without saying so, that a 5 mph speed limit and the lives it would save wouldn't be worth the hassle. The lesson here is that we can't simply look at the benefits. If we only look at benefits, we'd do just about anything because everything has a benefit.

Our nation is in a frenzy about child victims of gun homicides and accidents. Many people are becoming increasingly shrill in demands for all manner of supposed gun safety measures. First, let's put the magnitude of accidental gun deaths in perspective. The following are Centers for Disease Control 1997 statistics for types of accidental deaths of children from birth to age 14: drowning (1,910), auto (2,608), bicycle (201), pedestrian (675) and gun accidents (142). Gun homicide in the same age group totaled 346.

It turns out that among all the causes of accidental deaths of children, the chances of death by a gun accident are the remotest. That means the benefit of child safety locks might be 142 fewer accidental deaths in 1997.

Reported in John R. Lott's book "More Guns, Less Crime," 15 national polls, by groups such as the Los Angeles Times, Gallup and Peter Hart Research Associates, have found there are an estimated 760,000 defensive handgun uses to 3.6 million defensive uses of any kind of gun per year. Crimes that have been prevented included robbery, car-jacking, burglary, assault and murder.

I doubt whether these crimes would have been as effectively prevented if a gun owner, awakened by a burglar in the dead of night, or approached by a carjacker, had to first worry about scrounging around for the key to unlock the safety lock.

But you might say whatever it takes to prevent the accidental death of our children is worth it. Then I suggest that you prioritize things a bit. The number of children killed accidentally by guns is 142. We'd save more child lives (1,010) by closing swimming pools, save 201 lives by banning cycling and 675 by banning pedestrian activities. Again, if we only look to the benefit (saving lives), we might outlaw these activities, but what would be the cost? Our children would lose all the joy and entertainment from swimming, bicycling, and playing in the streets.

Economics gives no clue about the motivation of people who push for one public policy or another. So I'm going to go out on the limb regarding the motivation of gun-safety-lock advocates: These people want ultimate gun confiscation, and gun locks are just another nuisance factor toward that end.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Sunday, June 18, the 170th day of 2000. There are 196 days left in the year. This is Father's Day.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 18, 1940, during World War II, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill urged his countrymen to behave in a manner that would prompt future generations to say, "This was their finest hour."

On this date:

In 1778, American forces entered Philadelphia as the British withdrew during the Revolutionary War.

In 1812, the United States declared war on Britain.

In 1815, British and Prussian troops defeated the French under Napoleon Bonaparte at Waterloo in Belgium.

In 1873, suffragist Susan B. Anthony was fined $100 for attempting to vote in the 1872 presidential election. (The fine was never paid.)

In 1928, aviator Amelia Earhart became the first woman to fly across the Atlantic Ocean, completing a flight from Newfoundland to Wales in about 21 hours.

In 1945, William Joyce, known as "Lord Haw-Haw," was charged in London with high treason for his English-language wartime broadcasts on German radio. (He was hanged the following January.)

In 1948, the U. N. Commission on Human Rights adopted its International Declaration of Human Rights.

In 1979, President Carter and Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev signed the SALT II strategic arms limitation treaty in Vienna.

In 1983, astronaut Sally K. Ride became America's first woman in space, blasting off with four colleagues aboard the space shuttle "Challenger."

In 1984, Alan Berg, a Denver radio talk show host, was shot to death outside his home. (Two white supremacists were later convicted of civil rights violations in the slaying.)

Ten years ago: James Edward Pough went on a shooting rampage at an auto-financing company office in Jacksonville, Fla., fatally wounding nine people before killing himself.

Five years ago: A private plane carrying the Angolan soccer team crashed in Luanda, Angola, killing 48 people. About 300 inmates trashed an immigration detention center in Elizabeth, N.J. Serbs released the last 26 U.N. hostages held since NATO airstrikes.

One year ago: The House rejected gun control legislation, 280-147, with many Democrats rebelling against National Rifle Association-backed provisions in the bill. The Group of Seven leading industrial democracies opened a three-day summit in Cologne, Germany. Arsonists struck three synagogues in the Sacramento, Calif., area. (Two white supremacist brothers have pleaded innocent to federal charges of setting the fires.)

Democracy isn't what Russia needs now

Some Americans profess to be surprised or disturbed that Russia's new leader, Vladimir Putin, is not showing signs of being pro-democratic.

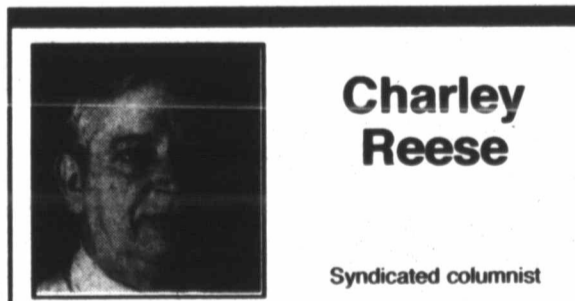

I'm not surprised. One, there is no tradition of democracy in Russia. Two, the KGB has never been known to attract libertarians to its ranks. Putin spent his adult career in the former Russian intelligence agency.

But that's not necessarily bad. Democracy is not what Russia needs at the moment. It needs serious economic reform. It needs monetary reform. It needs to reimpose the rule of law. It needs to clean up corruption. It needs to rebuild its military strength. Democracy is not likely to be helpful in accomplishing any of those tasks.

Survival always comes first. Even our own great democrat Thomas Jefferson said that there is no higher law than the law of necessity. Right now, the Russian people's survival as a great nation is threatened. At the moment, assuring the nation's survival is more important than freedom of the press or artistic freedom.

That might strike some as a shocking statement, but what Russia needs now are actions, not opinions and speeches. Liberty has to be earned, and it is really a reward, not an end in itself.

So the important questions in regard to Putin are: Is he going to clean up the mess, or is he just another puppet of the oligarchs who made themselves rich by looting the Soviet Union? Don't ask me. I don't know. It's too early to tell. If he intends to move against the oligarchs, then he must first consolidate his power, and that will take some time. In the environment in which he operates, Putin will have to keep his intention secret until he is strong enough to move decisively.

Charley Reese

I have a hunch that he will try to clean up the mess. His sad face doesn't seem to reflect any lust for money. I believe he is a Russian patriot. It is important for us to understand that a Russian patriot is not necessarily a democrat and is definitely not someone who will bend Russian policy to please the United States.

We bear some responsibility for Russia's present plight. We unleashed our own greedy moneygrubbers who ran to Russia as if it were a new gold field to be exploited. We gave the Russians a lot of bad advice.

Before you can have a free-enterprise economy, you need a government that respects and defends private-property rights. That is the true cornerstone of a free-market economy. Without property rights, no free market is possible — which, by the way, is a lesson that Americans seem to have forgotten.

No country can go from a command economy to a free-market economy overnight without creating a huge crisis. I'm afraid that's what Americans urged on the Russians in their euphoria over the fall of communism.

Well, the great fraud always possible is for one communist boss to sell state assets to another communist crony, at which point they both declare themselves democrats. That's what happened in Russia and also in some of the Eastern European countries. It was encouraged by Western businesses eager to do business with the same communists they had been doing business with. There is no discernible moral difference between communist apparatchiks and Western capitalist bosses.

Furthermore, American foreign policy under Clinton has amounted to a thumb in the Russian eye. The expansion of NATO, the shouldering Russia out of the Middle East peace process (they were originally co-sponsors), the attempt to cut Russia off from the Caspian Sea oil fields and the attack on Yugoslavia all undercut those Russians most eager to be a partner of the West.

I suspect that the United States will have zero influence on Putin.

Letters to the editor

There is a time, place for prayer ...

To the editor,
There is a divisive issue on the political landscape, which lauds one side as protectors of the faith while condemning the other as godless heathens. This issue does not involve the question of when life begins, nor does it concern the slaughter of children in school. It doesn't deal with who should be able to marry whom or whether or not one should be executed by the state. But, while the issue alluded to here is far less earth-shattering than any of the above, it elicits no less zeal from its opposing sides. The issue? School prayer.

Media depictions of satanic school teachers ripping Bibles from the hands of halo-bedecked children do little but fan the flames of this already heated debate. Those flames are further fanned by judicial decisions banning prayers before athletic events. Since neither side of this debate is prepared to give an inch, it seems unlikely that cooler heads will prevail any time soon. Perhaps, then, the issue simply needs to be put into a perspective that both sides can relate to.

Unknown to some is the fact that school prayer is not covered in the Constitution. Past judicial edicts have been primarily based on the "establishment clause" of the First Amendment and how the respective courts interpreted it. But this clause was probably not meant to address the topic either. It simply provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

The typical argument put forth by school-prayer advocates is that the founding fathers wanted children to pray in school, and they maintain that disallowing this basic right is in effect prohibiting the free exercise of religion. Naturally the other side comes back with the contention that prayer in school violates the theory of a separation of church and state, (something else not expressly stated in the Constitution).

Since the Constitution is inundated with ambiguities, perhaps another source should be consulted regarding this volatile subject. A very great man once said, "When thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen by men," (Matthew 6:5, KJV). So, while the founding fathers may or may not have meant for children to pray in school, it would certainly seem that the founder of Christianity had some pretty absolute ideas on the topic regarding, if not where to do it, then at least how to.

Of course there is no shortage of those who would interpret — or misinterpret — the aforementioned Biblical quote by contending that it only pertains to individual prayer and that groups should make ostentatious displays when they pray. These individuals feel that no student should be sanctioned for getting together with small groups and praying aloud in the lunch room, gym or recess yard. But if a white supremacist were to use that same lunch room as his forum for spewing forth his rhetoric to a group sharing his beliefs, the same individuals who fight for the rights of the small prayer group would applaud any sanctions the school placed on the racist group. And the racists do not even have a Biblical verse condemning their actions as the acts of hypocrites.

There is yet another clause in Biblical text that should apply when dealing with the issue of school prayer. In Romans 13:1 it reads, "Every person must obey the leaders of the land. There is no power given but from God, and all leaders are allowed by God. The person who does not obey the leaders of the land is working against what God has done ..." (Holy Bible: NIV).

Now, it is obvious that what the nation's founders intended cannot be considered here. Indeed, the fact that America today flies the Stars and Stripes and not the Union Jack is evidence that the founding fathers chose to disregard this bit of Biblical prose. For the purposes here, though, it is probably not asking much to abide by its admonition and simply comply. After all, it isn't as if the King of Great Britain is transporting Americans across the seas to be tried for pretended offenses — one of the infractions over which the founding fathers chose to revolt. And it is certainly not only religious practitioners who are forced to submit to school authority. Students are typically banned from reading magazines in class, using profanity or wearing T-shirts with offensive slogans written on them — all abridgments to individual freedoms.

Perhaps an example of walking in another's shoes will best put the issue into proper perspective. What would happen if an algebra teacher got up in front of a church service and gave a 20-minute sermon on the quadratic equation. It is highly unlikely that he would be well received by the congregation despite the current push for students to enroll in advanced math classes. Equally unlikely, though, is that something like this would ever happen. Most algebra teachers realize that there is a proper place for teaching the quadratic equation. And maybe that's the answer. There's a place for prayer and a place for algebra. If one can mandate that the latter stay in its place, why should it be wrong to ask that the former do so as well?

Presbyterian is a 'reformed church'

To the editor,
In response to last week's "Opening new ways

..." Cheryl did a great job portraying the Calvinistic roots of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). From her article, one could get the idea that the Presbyterian Church is cold and exclusive with a fixation on predestination. The exact opposite is true.

Reformed churches are continually reforming and do not claim perfection in their beliefs. Most other denominations are viewed as valid vehicles for the worship of God through Christ. The Presbyterian Church in Pampa works hand-in-hand with these other churches in our community. Projects such as Tralee Crisis Center, Good Sam and Meals on Wheels foster Christ's love and warmth in this whole area.

Presbyterians cannot be exclusive because they do not know who is predestined for what. That's God's territory. All people are loved as the children of God and their soul is to be nourished.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) promotes both free will and predestination. In fact, the theology of the Presbyterian Church is similar enough to that of the United Methodist Church that memberships can be directly transferred from Methodist to Presbyterian or vice versa.

Starting in September, the Presbyterian Church in Pampa will be having an early morning contemporary worship service in addition to the conventional service. Please drop by and enjoy the worship of God with us.

Keep up the good work, Pampa

To the editor,
Twenty-four years ago this month, Dan and I made a decision to move to Pampa, Texas. Little knowing the impact that decision would have on past and future generations of our family. We had both grown up and lived in cities larger than 250,000 all of our lives. Some people told us we would hate living in a small town, others thought we would love it. We just took the best job offer we got.

People treated us different here. You aren't just a face, you are somebody. The people here are genuine. Within a year we knew all our neighbors, had many good friends, and were welcomed as "Yankee" members of Hi-Land Christian Church. Our children grew up in this town, in that church, and both of them graduated from Pampa High School. Our daughter lives here and is a teacher here and both of our grandchildren were born here.

In 1991, Julie's parent and grandmother came for Christmas. On Dec. 21, grandma died suddenly. Mom and dad were overwhelmed by the outpouring of help, love and support which we received. In 1998, Julie convinced her parents to move here so she could better care for them. They had lived in Dayton, Ohio, for almost 50 years and had always lived in Ohio. Their lives and past were there but we were here, so they moved.

People from our church were waiting to help them get settled in their new home. Mom and dad didn't understand why, "They don't even know us!" Their air-conditioner broke while we were on vacation, a friend fixed it. Dad couldn't understand why our friend wouldn't accept payment. Mom had surgery and was in the hospital for several weeks. People from the church brought dad food everyday. Dad couldn't believe they would do that for someone they barely knew. Dad was homebound and could not get out to go shopping. The salesman from Radio Shack would patiently visit with him on the phone and then bring the items dad wanted to the house, "That would never happen in Ohio."

Mom's condition became terminal and we brought her home on Hospice. Dad was dumbfounded by the love, compassion and concern for them, not only by the BSA Hospice staff, but the Healthstar employee who brought equipment to the house, the Rural Metro Ambulance employees who brought mom home, the neighbors who checked in frequently, and even the postman, Willy, who often stuck his head in the door just to say "Hi" when he brought the mail. The nurses and aides we hired to stay with mom around the clock didn't just care for mom, they loved her. They also cared for dad and grew to love him, too.

Mom passed away in January of 1999 during the ice storm. People not only brought food, but wood, water, blankets and everything else we needed. Two weeks later dad began a year-and-a-half of hospitalizations and finally, he, too, passed away May 12, 2000.

Brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles, nieces and other family members have been astounded by the response of this community. They were also perplexed by the outpouring of love, help and support. We're not! After living here for 24 years, we know that this is a community blessed by God. The people of Pampa are good, kind and caring people. It is because of your love and kindness that we confidently believe Julie's parents are spending eternity together with their Lord. After a lifetime of rebellion, dad caved in the face of all the love and care he had experienced in the past two years and gave his heart to the Lord in January.

Friends, neighbors, Hi-Land Christian Church and St. Vincent de Paul Catholic Church fed our family of 27 for a week. Nurses who loved and cared for dad at Pampa Nursing Center attended his funeral (what an impact that had on my family), Carmichael-Whately made difficult decisions easier and Mike Sublett and the HCC praise team made Dad's service one that will be difficult to ignore. This list could go on and on.

Twenty-four years ago we took a chance on Pampa, Texas. The payoff just continues. Keep up the good work, Pampa. We love you!

Stealing from graves is despicable act

To the editor,
In regards to Jane Jacobs letter about the flowers being taken from her daughter's grave. I have the same problem.

I take fresh flowers real often to my husband's grave. I put a round cone in the vase to stick the flowers in. When I go back the next visit, all that is gone. Who ever is doing it has to have a screwdriver or something sharp to dig the cone out.

Our God in heaven said, "Thou shalt not steal." Stealing is taking something that is not yours. The caretaker cannot watch every one, he has chores to do.

Who ever is doing this, stop and think what you are doing to your soul. May God give you strength, hope and courage not to do these things.

It's past time to clean up drug problem

To the editor,
I write in response to Charlie Morris and Darrell Seahorn. I agree that it is past time to clean up Pampa's drug problem. This "problem" has been around for too many years. Some days I'm afraid to even leave my house because of all the drug dealers and thugs roaming free.

It's my understanding that the police receive "payoffs" from these criminals in trade for leaving them alone and not busting them. I'd like to know why? Are their salaries that low that they need to accept drug money?

And why do they (the police) not do anything about the drug activities that are reported? Crime stoppers does not pay because no one is ever arrested. Just who are we citizens supposed to turn to if our own police and sheriff departments are crooked? Tell me. I'd like to know.

I'd also like to know why criminals who are not reformed continue to use Pampa for their drug business even when they are on probation and parole? Do the people in this town realize that there are convicted rapists, drug dealers, murderers and child molesters living under our own noses? Continuing to commit those very crimes? And not being arrested if they have enough money to pay off the system?

Arrests need to be made and these people need to be shown that we as a city are sick and tired of the drugs and crime. Now, before it's too late for our children.

P.S. And if you don't print this then I'll know you've been paid off, too.

Where there's a will there is a way ...

To the editor,
At age 14, I went to my Dad and told him I can't do this. He let me know that can't was just another way to spell won't and the 1 x 4 he used helped me to understand.

So when I started trying to stop smoking and was up to 2 1/2 to 3 packs a day, I had a real battle on my hands. I don't smoke any more so don't tell me you can't quit.

Latino-museum curator sees his role as linking art to audience

By ELDA SILVAA
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — As a teen growing up in Corpus Christi, Henry Canales Estrada had two idols: Luis Jimenez and Andy Warhol.

"I really loved Luis Jimenez's sculpture," Estrada recalls. "And I loved the glamour of the art world that Andy Warhol epitomized." Since he was interested in art, Estrada thought he should be an artist. Over the years, he discovered that was not his calling.

"I always knew I was in love with art, but it took me a while to figure out what my role would be, and that role is to bring artists to their audiences and audiences to art," he says.

Hired in February as curator of the Alameda National Center for Latino Arts and Culture, a Smithsonian satellite, the board of Centro Alameda Inc. is counting on him to do just that.

Though the museum which will be housed in the Centro de Artes building in Market Square when renovations are complete isn't set to open until 2002, Estrada isn't waiting.

"I'm already curating, but it'll be within the cityscape, so I'll have a larger gallery to work with," Estrada, nattily dressed in a vintage pale blue jacket, says over a breakfast of bacon and eggs at Mi Tierra Cafe & Bakery.

For the fall, Estrada is planning several public art projects, including placing works by Tejano sculptors in the vicinity of Market Square. In June, he will be in Washington, D.C., to discuss borrowing work from the Smithsonian Institution's collections.

He also is negotiating with the Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden, part of the Smithsonian, to borrow a piece of billboard art by Cuban-American artist Felix Gonzalez-Torres that Estrada wants to place at various locations around the city.

"I think it's important to draw attention to the Smithsonian presence in San Antonio, draw attention to our museum and get the public anticipating the opening," says Estrada, well aware of the museum's identity crisis caused, in part, by its changing names. "Plus I think public art is a very important aspect of museum work. You get a wider audience, you have more of an interface with the city, you place it into a cultural context and create a dialogue with the urban landscape. I think it's a wonderful way to engage the wider public."

And for Estrada, engaging the public is what art is about. He sees museums and exhibitions as forums for dialogue.

"It's about conversation," says Estrada, who graduated in 1999 with a master's degree from the curatorial studies program at Bard College in upstate New York. "The art object is what brings us together, but it's really all about the conversation that ensues."

For Contemporary Art Month, Estrada is curating "Moving Images: Jesse Amado at the Alameda Theater," a multimedia site-specific installation in the lobby that pays homage to the theater's cultural and cinematic history. The exhibit opens July 20.

The installation "will be visible from the street, very much like a storefront display," Estrada says. "The lobby of the Alameda is all glass doors, so I guess I call it public art as well."

'He was the right one'

Estrada, who owned a gallery specializing in border artists before entering the curatorial field, was hired in February after a national search. With a mix of East Coast credentials and Tejano art savvy, Estrada fit the profile developed by the board with the help of an informal group of advisers including Latino art scholars Amalia Mesa-Baines and Tomas Ybarra-Frausto.

After graduating from the University of Texas at Austin with a degree in art history in 1997, Estrada had a research fellowship at the Smithsonian Archives of American Art, where he assisted in the processing of Ybarra-Frausto's research files. While attending Bard, Estrada interned at the New Museum of Contemporary Art in New York City. There, he was offered a guest curatorial position to do a show by Puerto Rican artist Anaïda Hernandez.

After his graduation from Bard, Estrada co-curated "Pressing the Point: Parallel Expressions in the Graphic Arts of the Chicano and Puerto Rican Movements" at El Museo del Barrio in New York City. The show will be at the Jack S. Blanton Museum of Art at UT Austin through Aug. 13.

"We wanted somebody who had at least some level of interaction with the Smithsonian Institution, and he did. And he had experience working in museums on the East Coast," says Henry Munoz III, who chairs Centro Alameda Inc., the umbrella group responsible for the museum and the renovation of the Alameda Theater and the Casa de Mexico International Building.

"All of that combined with the fact that he immediately was enthusiastic about the vision of the museum, the idea that this was the place that told the story of the Latino experience living in the United States."

In addition, Munoz says, "His demeanor and the fact that people who had worked with him before were positive about him made me think that for all the work it took to get to him ... he was the right one."

Estrada was no stranger to San Antonio, either. He began visiting the city regularly more than a decade ago, drawn by the Blue Star Art Space, which he saw as an "oasis for contemporary art" in South Texas. During that time, he began meeting and building relationships with artists, writers and curators here.

"I had always dreamed of returning to San Antonio, but I didn't think it was going to happen this soon," he says. "I was doing pretty well in New York and got a call from Henry Munoz last Thanksgiving and he said, 'You need to come back home. We've got this wonderful project going on.'"

The first thing Munoz did was take Estrada to see the Alameda Theater. Estrada had never been to the historic downtown theater where Mexican films and performers once played to packed houses. He was floored.

"Henry's a very charismatic person," Estrada says. "He took me up on the stage and made me stand center stage, turned on all the lights and said, 'Here's the audience you've been wanting.'"

Munoz's showmanship aside, what sold Estrada on the project was the new museum-studies program that will be centered at UTSA's downtown campus starting this fall.

"I had to go to New York to get my education in curatorial studies, and now we have (a program) here that's opening, and we can have a whole new generation of Latino curators coming out of our university," he says. "I thought if we're in partnership with UTSA, we'll have this pool of scholars, a pool of interns that can really collaborate with us on developing exhibitions, and sure enough it's working out really, really great."

Reinvention

In some ways, Estrada's story is a tale of reinvention. "I just kind of decided late in life to go back to school and go into the museum field," says Estrada, who gives his age as fortysomething. "People said, 'OK. We'll see what happens.' Little by little, I've been re-creating myself."

He came to his love of art early, but not conventionally. "I didn't grow up with museums," he says. "I didn't grow up with art around me. The closest thing we had to an art museum was the water color society gallery in the park downtown when I was growing up."

Instead, Estrada says, he was inspired by his mother and father. "My mother is a quilt-maker; she crocheted," Estrada says. "She always had a creative outlet in the form of craft, and my dad was a tinkerer. He liked to build things. He had a bar on the west side of Corpus Christi that he used to redecorate every six months with a different theme. It was very artistic. ... I guess I grew up around people who were always making things."

He developed an eye early, combing flea markets, thrift stores and vintage shops for collectibles.

"It was through that experience of looking and selecting that I developed a connoisseurship and educated myself about the different historical periods," Estrada says. "I was able to recognize something from the '50s and something from the '40s, and being able to discern the different kind of aesthetic qualities, and basically just collected a lot of junk along the way, which is what museums do."

It wasn't until the Art Museum of South Texas opened in 1972 that Estrada had the opportunity to see contemporary art. He recalls seeing Warhol, who came to town for the opening, being driven around in a vintage silver Jaguar.

CURATOR

"I'll never forget that opening of this Philip Johnson-designed art museum and having Frank Stella, Andy Warhol and Robert Rauschenberg all exhibit in the first year," he says.

The museum opening was a pivotal time, he says. "It put Corpus Christi on the map," Estrada recalls. "I think it probably influenced a lot of people who were going into the art field as artists or professionals because of the quality of exhibitions that were being generated the first few years that museum opened up. I mean, they were showing Donald Judd, a minimalist in a time when minimalism was so unpopular. I remember the newspapers were so critical of this Donald Judd plywood box they said looked like a shipping crate."

He left Corpus Christi when he was about 20 and spent a short time in California before moving to the border region. He settled in San Ygnacio, a small town just south of Laredo, where he shared an old stone ranch house with his former partner.

"It's a beautiful, historical town," Estrada says. "That was the '80s, and that was when the Texas-Mexican border was a very important cultural zone that was being discussed, the whole idea of being bicultural, the aspects of hybridity and cultural mestizaje."

In 1985, he opened the Studio of Henry Estrada there. "I was concentrating on artists from the Texas-Mexican border region and found that creating networks among artists was very exciting, and connecting artists with their audience was very exciting for me," he says. "I just didn't like the commercial aspect of running a gallery."

While he was running the gallery, a curator doing a show on border artists contacted him.

"He knew I was very familiar with that whole region and the artists, so he called me up and asked if I could suggest who he could talk to," Estrada says. "I gave him an entire list, and I actually set up a lot of studio visits for him, and then he put together the show almost using the exact same people. When the show opened, I didn't even get an invitation to it."

Though Estrada was irritated by the experience, it brought him to a realization.

"I realized this is part of the work of being a curator, to have the eye and the know-how and the ability to research a particular field and I'd done all the work for this guy," he says. "Basically, I'd curated the show for him."

Back to school

Running the gallery inspired Estrada to go back to school to pursue a degree in art history and then go through a professional museum-studies program.

Artist Rolando Briseno, who met Estrada about 10 years ago, was among those who encouraged him. "I could see all the passion for art, and all the interest, and he was not an artist," Briseno recalls. "I thought, 'Perfect.' Here we have a potential intellectual in the field and all he has to do is go get educated. He's already thinking."

Estrada, then in his late 30s, was nervous about going to college. "I had a lot of apprehensions about it because of this whole age thing, but actually it turned out I had a lot to offer in those classes with young people and they had a lot to offer me. So it was a very intergenerational exchange that made the whole experience richer," he says. "I highly recommend, if you're thinking about going back to college in your later years, (that you) jump in and do it."

At UT, he studied with respected Latino curator Victor Zamudio-

Taylor, who invited Estrada to co-curate "Memory Frames," one of three curatorial projects in "Tres Proyectos Latinos" at the Austin Museum of Art at Laguna Gloria in 1997.

It was Zamudio-Taylor who tipped him off to Bard. "It's a very tough program," Estrada says. "It's actually a very small class. It ranges from seven to 20 people a year, but not all of them graduate. I thought after graduating, I would work in New York for one to two years and get as much experience as I possibly could, and then move back to Texas. And, indeed, I did get to work."

Aesthetics and history

Yasmin Ramirez co-curated "Pressing the Point" with Estrada at Museo del Barrio. "He came to us highly recommended as Victor Zamudio-Taylor's prized student," recalls Ramirez, adjunct curator of El Museo del Barrio.

Estrada brought balance to a show about Chicano and Puerto Rican graphic art from the '60s and '70s, she says.

"He wanted an exhibition that looked good as well as had a solid historical grounding. That's very rare," Ramirez says. "He has the ability to both be sensitive to the historical conditions of the piece as well as to their aesthetic value, and how to coordinate all these properties, so the exhibition looks visually exciting as well as historically informative."

The big kickoff

Architects are drawing up schematics for the Alameda museum. Munoz says a groundbreaking at the end of the year will start renovations on the Centro de Artes building, at the corner of Santa Rosa and Commerce streets.

The building, which currently houses the temporary offices of Centro Alameda Inc., will feature a stucco exterior, sculpture garden and a punched-metal entrance in the style of Mexican hojalata art. Munoz says the total project will cost $6.5 million $4 million for the building renovations and the remainder going to preliminary operations, programs and exhibits. When the museum is up and running, Estrada will be part of a staff of nine.

Estrada is planning to kick off the museum with a survey exhibit of Tejano art.

"The board thought it was important to start at home and feature regional artists," Estrada says. "But placing them in a context with work that's already collected in the Smithsonian by other Tejano artists so that we're elevating the status of regional art to work that's already been collected in the Smithsonian."

It took Estrada a while to find the right path, but ever since he made the decision to go into the curatorial field, he has been working toward his goal.

"Every vacation I was doing an internship. Every summer I was doing a fellowship of some sort," he says. "It's been this big push to arrive where I've arrived now."

Greene home hub of activity for area children in early days

James Lemuel Greene, son of William Alston Greene and Ruth Beatrice Brown, was born Nov. 5, 1936, at Pampa Hospital. He and his brothers and sisters rode their horses like cowboys and Indians at their farm home north of Pampa. At one time, they had 18 Shetland ponies that they would turn loose in the lot and play a game of changing from horse to horse without touching the ground. Jim's horse was named "Trigger."

Jim's parents had friends who often came to play 42. Children of these friends always wanted to go to the Greene home because there were more playmates there with the Greene's five children.

Jim rode the school bus to Sam Houston School at 900 N. Frost and he remembered that the pavement ended where Culberson Chevrolet is now. He played football and ran track at Pampa High School where he graduated in 1955. After graduation, he attended West Texas State University before returning to the family farm to work.

For a time, Jim worked for Anderson Ditching Co. and windmilled for Emory Noblitt where he helped drill two wells with a spudder. He also worked in the grain elevators at Hoover and Pampa. He started farming on his own in 1953 but continued to day-work on many farms and ranches around the panhandle.

About 1954, Jim went to call for his date who was not ready and while he was waiting he was entertained by his date's younger sister. Upon leaving he said to himself that he would wait for the younger sister to grow up.

The younger sister was Mary Kathleen Dodds, born Nov. 9, 1940, at Worley Hospital in Pampa, Texas. She is the daughter of Hollis Read "Bob" Dodds who came from Breckenridge with the Gulf Oil Co. Kathleen's mother is Juanita Trusty Dodds who was employed by the Pampa ISD until her retirement. She was the secretary at Woodrow Wilson Elementary from 1952-79. Kathleen's aunt was Ruby Trusty who taught seventh grade for many years at Pampa Junior High School at 126 W. Francis.

A vivid memory of Kathleen's school days is of Pampa's second worst "duster" which occurred shortly before noon on Feb.

19, 1954. There was no electricity and students were not permitted to leave their rooms for any reason unless their parents came for them.

Jim and Kathleen began dating when she was a freshman and Jim finally asked her hand in marriage when she was a senior. After much discussion with Mrs. Dodds, they were allowed to marry on March 6, 1959, under the condition that Kathleen would continue to go to school and graduate from high school in May. After they were married, they moved to the farm of John McKamy, Jim's great uncle. This is where they have lived for 41 years.

In October of 1960, Jim went into the Army and served two years in the Panama Canal zone. Kathleen could not join him so they had to wait three years before they could celebrate a wedding anniversary together. Jim wrote every day and Kathleen went to the post office with much anticipation every day to receive his letters.

Upon returning from the Army, Jim and Kathleen began farming together, sharing the daily duties of a family farm. Kathleen not only brought the meals to the fields but operated the various farm machinery to help out as needed which sometimes involved driving the tractor and/or combines for days until the work was done. She is a substitute teacher for Pampa ISD. Jim has been Gray County Commissioner of Precinct No. 2 since Jan. 1, 1987. He was on the advisory board of White Deer Land Museum in 1995-96.

Jim and Kathleen have three children — all born at Highland General Hospital. Thad Dodds Greene, born Sept. 16, 1961, and his wife, Tammy Clark Greene, live 45 miles east of Trinidad, Colo. Thad is a federal trapper and saddle maker. Thad and Tammy have two children at home, Bobby Ka and Sally, and Thad has an older daughter, Cecelia Greene, who attends Frank Phillips College in Borger.

Jamie Kathleen Greene, born Jan. 1, 1964, teaches algebra classes at Pampa High School and is the head coach of the Lady Harvester Softball team. Her sons are Casey Coleman and Cody Lee.

Jim and Kathleen's youngest daughter is Amie Sheree Greene, born May 1, 1968. She and her husband, Ben Reid, live northeast of Amarillo in the River Road District. Amie teaches at Boys Ranch and Ben is completing his nuclear medicine degree at Amarillo College. Their children are Keeley and Corben.

(With appreciation to Jamie Kathleen Greene for her assistance.)

Children's nightmares though frightening have purpose

By JAVONNA MAY-MONS
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

FORT WORTH, Texas — Keisha Culp knows the fear all too well. While watching television one night last December, she was startled by her 3-year-old daughter's screams and cries. Moving frantically through the halls, the Royse City mother finally reached her daughter Briana's room and found her tossing and turning in bed, yelling the name of her 3-year-old cousin.

It was a nightmare.
"I shook her and finally woke her up," Culp says. "She was trying to tell me what he was doing (in the dream), but I didn't understand what she was saying. I think he was chasing her."

Nightmares and children are like peanut butter and jelly; you can't have one without the other. According to Bruce A. Epstein, a practicing pediatrician in St. Petersburg, Fla., 70 percent of children suffer from nightmares, and they are most common between the ages of 3 and 6.

But what exactly is a nightmare, and how should parents handle them? Simply defined, a nightmare is a scary dream that frightens and usually awakens us. Nightmares occur during the rapid eye movement (R.E.M.) cycle of sleep, the point in which we dream. Like dreams, nightmares tend to correspond to personal distress. They may manifest as a real representation of a troubling issue, or as a symbol. Generally, nightmares are a combination of both, helping a child to work out issues that carry over from his waking hours.

While most children's nightmares are nothing to lose sleep over, Ferber says that after ages 5 or 6, recurring nightmares could signal a problem. "Regardless of his age, if your child's nightmares continue to be frequent and persist for more than one or two months, and if you can't identify and help him resolve the stress he is feeling, then you should seek professional help," he says. "This is especially true if your child also has unreasonable fears during the daytime."

These "unreasonable fears" might include an unwillingness to separate from you, refusal to be in his bedroom alone, reluctance to go to school and other phobias.

Experts, including Richard Ferber, M.D., author of "Solve Your Child's Sleep Problems," also advise parents to determine whether their child is suffering from nightmares or night terrors, a hereditary sleep disorder.

For children suffering from the more garden-variety sort of bad dreams, getting nightmares to go away is relatively simple — but involves some time.

Denton mother Mona Satterfield has been awakened in the middle of the night by her 5-year-old son, Luke, plenty of times. "I let Luke get in bed with us because it makes him feel safe and, once he's asleep, I'll take him back upstairs," she says.

Some psychologists say that comforting should be just the first step. In his book "Dreamcatching: Every Parent's Guide to Exploring and Understanding Children's Dreams and Nightmares" (Three Rivers Press, 1998, $14.95), Dr. Alan Siegel explains his remedy for recurring nightmares. It consists of what he calls the four R's: reassurance, rescripting, rehearsal and resolution.

Reassurance is the most important of the four. It calls for comforting your child after he wakes up from a nightmare. You'll want to hold him and calm him until he is able to give you, if he's old enough, the details of his scary encounter.

"Poetically, that breaks the spell of the nightmare," says Siegel, assistant clinical professor at the University of California at Berkeley's school of professional psychology. "From there, you use more playful, artistic, creative approaches to kind of play with the dream."

Enter the rescripting phase. This involves creating a new ending for the nightmare. It can also involve writing a happy ending or drawing one.

"For younger kids up through elementary-school age, drawing the dream is very helpful because dreams are an incredible source of creativity," says Siegel, who is also president of the Association for the Study of Dreams. "When you draw the dream, it breaks the spell, because you see it from a different perspective."

Another suggested part of rescripting is the use of magical tools, says Siegel. For younger kids, helping them create an arsenal of magical weapons gives them a feeling of power. The tools can be anything from a magic wand to a superhero who saves the day at just the right time. Siegel cautions the use of violence in rescripting. He cites Ann Sayre Wiseman, author of "Nightmare Help" (Ten Speed Press, 1990, $9.95), who says that suggesting the murder of a dream foe may also encourage violent solutions to life problems.

He also warns against simply inventing a new ending to the dream without discovering the underlying problem that caused the dream. This is where the last two R's, rehearsal and resolution, come in.

Rehearsal involves putting rescripting to the test. Your child needs to review his new, happy ending and practice using his magical tools until he feels completely competent.

"This stage parallels the stage of psychotherapy called 'working through,' where for adults, the insights they have gained need to be put to the test — at first in the relationship with their therapist, and gradually by practicing new forms of relating with others and experiencing themselves in new ways," Siegel says.

In the last stage, resolution, parents work with their child to discover the source of the nightmare. By combining the three previous R's and deciphering the dream through exploration and brainstorming, parents and children can feel confident in overcoming emotional challenges.

Siegel says the most important thing is never to dismiss your child's nightmare fears. "You don't want to say, 'It's just a dream,' because that dismisses a fundamental, very powerful experience a child has had," he says. "You also don't want to say, 'Let's just create a new ending and that's the end of it,' because the problem that caused the dream may still be there."

Parents should look at recent changes in their child's life that may be causing tension and distress, like a death in the family or a new school. After listening to the child's description of the dream, look at possible metaphors and symbolism and work with him to create a solution.

"Ultimately, the nightmare tells the parents something that the child may or may not understand," he said. "It alerts the parents to something that's distressing the child."

For Keisha Culp, 3-year-old Briana's nightmare alerted her to the real daytime terror that her daughter was experiencing because she was afraid of her cousin. While Briana was too young to verbalize her feelings, the dream got an important message across to her mother, who could then take steps to help Briana.

The nightmare, like most, was temporary and terrifying. But the long-term effects of the bad dream would be good.

Billy Graham still inspires after 50 years

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — At 81, the Rev. Billy Graham says Parkinson's disease has made him unsteady and fluid on his brain has caused him to be forgetful.

On opening night of a recent four-day Nashville crusade, he still had eyes sharp enough to cut through a crowded stadium and a tone so therapeutic and reassuring, it could calm a crying child.

Many of those in attendance wondered if God himself was actually speaking through Graham.

"The spirit of God is on him," said Pearl Masters, 60, a kindergarten teacher who drove 72 miles for the event. "You can feel the spirit in his preaching."

With his visit to Nashville, in the heart of the Bible Belt, Graham continues to build a legacy that has made him one of the most beloved evangelists in American history. About 45,000 people turned out for the event at Adelphi Coliseum, where the Tennessee Titans play football.

The Bill Gaither Vocal Band and Steven Curtis Chapman performed for nearly an hour before Graham entered the stage, with a cane and the help of a few staff members.

He hunched his shoulders as he walked but straightened up once he took the pulpit, and the crowd stood and cheered. He spoke for nearly an hour, and his message was simple — God will welcome to heaven everyone who lives by his word.

"Jesus is knocking at your heart's door tonight," he said with a rolling Southern drawl. "He wants to give you peace and joy you've never had before."

It's a message that has reached hundreds of millions of people worldwide. In more than 50 years, Graham has spoken in person to some 210 million people in nearly 200 countries — and counting.

He defiantly refutes recent reports that quoted him as saying his failing health could make this his last year of crusades. He was diagnosed with Parkinson's disease about six years ago.

"That's not quite true," he said at a news conference before his Nashville appearance earlier this month. "I think we'll go on as long as God gives us the strength."

His son, Franklin, is ready to inherit the family ministry. The younger Graham bears his father's sharp eyes and pointed nose, and he attends each crusade in case his father can't preach.

His second daughter, Anne Graham Lotz, also has taken to the pulpit. Her first big crusade was last month in Knoxville.

"I cannot replace my father," Franklin Graham told The Associated Press. "I'll continue the work God has given my father to do, and that is preach the Gospel."

An ordained Southern Baptist preacher who was raised Presbyterian, Graham first gained national attention at a Los Angeles revival in 1949, but he had been preaching a decade before that. As vice president of the fledgling Youth for Christ organization started in 1945, he logged hundreds of thousands of miles a year leading revivals.

Since then, Graham has been compared to the Pope and has advised presidents from Dwight Eisenhower to Bill Clinton.

He commands a massive but highly efficient army of Christians to help organize his crusades. In Middle Tennessee, 2,400 Christian leaders from 600 churches were trained to promote the crusade. That's in addition to the 5,000 religious counselors, 1,000 ushers and 4,000-member choir.

The total cost for the Nashville event was $2.47 million, paid for mostly through donations and church contributions. Graham doesn't take a salary.

Bill Merrell, an executive committee member for the Nashville-based Southern Baptist Convention, said part of Graham's appeal hinges on his integrity.

"Billy Graham's life in ministry has been an open book for more than 50 years," Merrell said. "His commitment to financial integrity and to moral uprightness are well-known not only in the Christian world but also in the culture at large."

Texas winter wheat crop forecast less than last year

AUSTIN — The 2000 Texas winter wheat crop is forecast at 68.2 million bushels, 44 percent less than last year and 50 percent less than in 1998. The estimate is down 3 percent from the May forecast.

According to a June 1 survey conducted by the Texas Agricultural Statistics Service, statewide yield is expected to average 31 bushels per acre, down 5 bushels from last year. Harvested acreage, at 2.2 million acres, is down 35 percent from 1999.

"The drought has resulted in below average yields throughout Texas. Harvested acreage is also down in most areas of Texas, with the one exception being the Blacklands," State Statistician Robin Roark reported.

Production on the Northern High Plains is forecast at 28 million bushels, down 57 percent from last year. Winter wheat production on the Low Plains is forecast at 10 million bushels, down 56 percent from last year. The Cross Timbers is estimated at 2.3 million bushels, down 69 percent from last year's production. Production in the Blacklands is forecast at 23.5 million bushels, 23 percent more than the 1999 crop.

In South Texas, wheat harvest was completed by June 1. United States winter wheat production for 2000 is forecast at 1.62 billion bushels, down 5 percent from last year and down 2 percent from May 1. Yield is expected to average 46.7 bushels per acre, down 1.1 bushels from a year ago. Acreage to be harvested for grain is expected to total 34.7 million acres, 2 percent below a year ago.

Texan wrangles up plain good food

By ART CHAPMAN
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

FORT WORTH, Texas — Tom Perini is not a traditional ranch cook. He has certainly rattled his chuck wagon across some of the biggest ranches in the Southwest, but he has also prepared his Texas beef dishes at the governor's mansion in Austin and fed hundreds at sophisticated gatherings in Washington.

He once hauled 5,000 pounds of mesquite across Japan to fuel his fires and show the Japanese housewives how tender and juicy Texas beef could be.

But recently, while walking down New York's Fifth Avenue, he let just a little tip of his rural roots show.

"The Buffalo Gap came out in me," he said with a laugh, referring to his hometown just outside Abilene. "I looked up and saw a poster, and all my books there in the window and thought, 'Oh, my God, what has happened?'"

Perini, owner of Buffalo Gap's acclaimed Perini Ranch Steakhouse, is on a whirlwind promotional tour for his new cookbook, "Texas Cowboy Cooking" (Time-Life Trade, $24.95). It is a venture he never planned, never expected.

"We had been invited to cook at National Arboretum in June of last year," Perini explained in a telephone interview from a Manhattan hotel. "The arboretum has about 400 acres in Washington, D.C., and they were having a big Texas fund-raiser. They wanted the whole thing — a chuck wagon, cowboys, mesquite and Texas beef. They wanted a show."

Perini gave it to them, and while the event was winding down and people were filing by to offer their congratulations, one man approached him and asked if he had ever thought of doing a cookbook.

"I told him no, I had not considered it, nor had any of the English teachers I'd ever had," Perini said.

The man offered his card and walked off. Later that night, as Perini emptied his pockets at the hotel, he discovered the man was president of Time-Life Books.

It was enough to make Perini consider a book. Later, when he talked it over with friends, he became convinced.

"What we developed is a combination of stories and histories," he said of "Texas Cowboy Cooking." "The photographs are magnificent."

Perini's effort is both a cookbook and a history lesson. Food photographer Mark Davis filled the book with stunning photography, but he had to fight for precious space with historical cowboy artwork from Fort Worth's Amon Carter Museum, Sid Richardson Collection of Western Art, and the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Foundation.

There are also photos from noted cowboy photographer Erwin E. Smith, the Museum of Fine Arts in Houston, and the Swenson Land and Cattle Co. in Stamford.

Contemporary cowboy photography was done by Bob Moorhouse, manager of the famed Pitchfork Ranch in Guthrie.

But the recipes are pure Perini — simple, unpretentious and full of taste.

"They wanted real Texas food,"

Perini said of the cookbook editors. "This is the way we've always cooked. Our whole food situation is that we want to do food that tastes good, looks good and is recognizable."

"We don't do plate drawings. If you find a leaf on your plate, it fell from a tree. Send it back to the kitchen."

Perini began his "beef" career working on the other side of the chuck wagon. He tried to run the family cattle business back in the late 1960s, but was having a tough time. Between feeding and doctoring cattle, he also cooked on the ranch wagon, finding that work much more to his liking.

He eventually developed a reputation for quality food, and soon other ranches were calling, asking for his help.

"The Swensons would call and ask us to come over," Perini said. "They would have a sale or something and we would cook for their cowboys and guests. Eventually, we ended up cooking for the Pitchfork, the Long X and the Matthews ranch. I ended up catering all the big ranches."

As the catering business grew during the 1970s, the cattle business continued to suffer.

"Watt Matthews of the Lamshead Ranch was kind of my mentor," Perini recalled. "I would ask him a lot of questions, and he'd help me. I remember telling him I was having a hard time and he told me he thought the best cross for a Hereford was a pumpjack. Meaning it didn't hurt if the ranch had oil as well as cattle."

Eventually, Matthews advised Perini: "You can honestly do more for the beef industry by cooking it, instead of raising it."

Perini opened his Buffalo Gap restaurant in 1983 and launched his full-scale food enterprise. His biggest boost came in 1995, when he received a call from the prestigious James Beard House in New York City.

"They called and asked us to cook for them," he said. "We were very flattered, but I didn't call them back for two or three days. I really thought it was a situation where they had made a mistake. With a name like Perini, I figured they thought we were a fancy Italian place."

Within the same week, the governor's mansion called and wanted Perini to cook for an affair; then a friend in Abilene insisted that Perini send samples of his peppered beef tenderloin to newspapers and magazines around the country.

The Beard event was a tremendous success, as was the governor's dinner. "Parade Magazine" called to say it was going to do something about the restaurant, and then "The New York Times" called asking for another tenderloin.

"As it turned out, 'The New York Times' was having a contest for the best mail-order food items in the country. We just sent them a tenderloin to taste and they put it in the contest. They picked us as the No. 1 mail-order gift, which was great, but we didn't have a mail-order business," Perini confessed.

Now he does, and the mesquite-grilled peppered beef tenderloin is listed in both the Neiman Marcus and the Williams-Sonoma catalogs. It is also served on Northwest Airlines' European and Asian routes.

It is not in the cookbook. Perini is willing to give up some of his secrets, but not the one that established an entire mail-order business all by itself.

He does offer other Perini Ranch signature dishes, such as the green chile hominy, zucchini perini and bread pudding with whiskey sauce.

There are colorful recipes for drinks, side dishes, desserts and breads. The Texas history and cowboy lore fill the book from front to back. But the real essence of "Texas Cowboy Cooking" is clearly the beef.

"I really believe in simple food," Perini said. "Most chefs feel like they have to be creative to make food good. I want something that just tastes right. I don't want a chicken-fried steak with a mango glaze."

Perini recently made his third visit to the James Beard House, this time kicking off his book tour with a menu of fried catfish, chicken-fried rib-eye steaks with cream gravy, and fresh strawberry shortcake made with buttermilk biscuits. He also offered his mesquite-grilled peppered beef tenderloin.

"Dad Took Care Of Everything"

Dear Children:

When your Dad died, I was in a state of shock, I couldn't do anything; not even answer the simplest question. But Dad knew how hard it would be to take care of the endless decisions and duties that would arise, and he left me a Personal Emergency Portfolio which contained complete information and instruction for handling every detail in the event of his death. And most thoughtful of all, Dad had already purchased cemetery property. What a blessing it was, in my emotional condition, to have everything taken care of.

I know you will be relieved in the knowledge that all has been taken care of - funeral service information, in our Personal Emergency Portfolio, burial property, everything - so that some day you can say "Mom took care of everything."

Love,
Mom

P.S. You are all grown now, with children of your own. It would please me greatly to know that you have purchased cemetery property for yourselves. It's one of the most caring things you can do for one another.

Postal Service to discontinue cancer stamp

The United States Postal Service recently announced it will discontinue its Breast Cancer Research Stamp July 29. This first-ever postage stamp — issued to raise money for breast cancer research — was introduced in July 1998. The stamp's purpose is to encourage voluntary support of medical research for breast cancer and sells for 40-cents with 7-cents per stamp donated to breast cancer research, according to Amarillo Postmaster Dave Sanderson.

To date, the Postal Service has raised $10.9 million in an attempt to fund research for the devastating disease that threatens the lives of thousands of women (and men) each year.

The Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation and The Don and Sybil Harrington Cancer Center report:

- One in eight women will develop breast cancer;
 - Breast cancer is the leading cancer among American women and is second only to lung cancer in cancer deaths;
 - Breast cancer accounts for 30 percent of all new cancer cases in women;
 - This year an estimated 175,000 women and 1,300 men will develop breast cancer;
 - Approximately 44,000 women and 400 men will die of breast cancer each year.
- From now until May 19, the Postal Service will participate in a nationwide promotion to raise awareness of the Breast Cancer Research Stamp by promoting a Mother's Day campaign. The effort is designed to motivate Americans to purchase the stamps to give as a gift or for the use of mailing Mother's Day cards.

The Don and Sybil Harrington Cancer Center will present an information display area about breast cancer at its main office in Amarillo. The display will run through July 29.

For more information, call Martha Jordan, U.S. Postal Service, 468-1611, or visit @ www.harringtoncc.org.

Camp Alpie seeking campers

AMARILLO — Camp Alpie, an overnight summer camp for children with cancer and cancer survivors, is now accepting reservations. The camp will be held July 30-Aug. 4 at the Bishop Quarterman Conference Center near Amarillo.

Children ages 7-14 who have cancer or who have had cancer are welcome to attend Camp Alpie, and each camper may be accompanied by a sibling. Camp Alpie is free to campers, thanks to individual, business and civic sponsors who underwrite expenses. Sponsoring a camper costs $250.

Established in 1988, Camp Alpie offers all the normal activities of summer camp including indoor and outdoor sports and recreation, arts and crafts, swimming and much more. The camp provides special facilities, diets and trained staff to accommodate the needs of cancer patients.

The parents of Camp Alpie residents also receive a much-needed dose of relaxation and fun as they attend a free, concurrent parents' camp. While the children enjoy the outdoors, parents spend a week at an Amarillo hotel being treated to a variety of diversions such as special dinners and visits to area attractions.

All of this fun has a serious purpose though, according to Camp Alpie Board President Barbara Miller. "When cancer invades a family, the focus immediately is directed to the illness and its treatment. The family unit can come apart under the strain."

Miller said the camp gives everyone in the family a break and then helps them redirect attention back to the family unit.

The camp staff are volunteers and nearly all parents' camp activities are donated. Camp counselors are high school graduates and most are in college. They work on a volunteer basis and some are even cancer survivors.

Because of laws governing the confidentiality of cancer patients, Camp Alpie cannot contact eligible campers without their permission. Parents of eligible campers are encouraged to contact Camp Alpie by writing to P.O. Box 3819, Amarillo, TX 79116-3819. Preregistration is encouraged prior to June 30.

Camper sponsorships and activity sponsorships remain available. For more information, call Norman Stuppi at (806) 353-8941.

Chuong H. Pham, M.D. P.A. Obstetrics & Gynecology

Wishes to announce the closing of the medical practice effective August 1, 2000. Please contact the office at 806-665-5448 if you wish to have your records transferred.

Thank you for your support over the past three years.

PURDY, Wash. (AP) — Behind six locked doors and two layers of razor wire, Jennifer Palmer cuddles a fellow inmate — her golden retriever, Tanner.

Two years ago, Palmer's only skills appeared to be selling drugs and surviving on the streets. Not anymore: At the maximum security Washington State Correctional Center for Women, Palmer and other inmates are training dogs like Tanner to be service animals for the disabled.

It's a win-win-win situation: It's good for the dogs, often adopted from shelters where they'd otherwise be killed. It's good for the disabled, who experience a new world of freedom with the dogs at their side. And it can forever change the lives of the inmates.

"I've learned responsibility. I know now it depends on me to change my life," said Palmer, 29, who is serving almost four years on drug charges. "Doing this has given me some self esteem. This is something I can do."

The program works, by all indications. In Washington state, the recidivism rate for participants over the last three years is zero. Prisons in Connecticut, Kansas, Florida, Maine, Massachusetts, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon,

More than 75 women have taken part since the program began. They first must pass a 12-week course, where they learn the basics of dog care, grooming and training.

Wisconsin and New York have started similar programs, and other states are considering it.

"It is absolutely the best program that a correctional institution can have," said Nancy Bouchard, associate commissioner with the Maine Department of Corrections, which started the program in October and is expanding it. "Learning how to take care of something else other than just yourself — that is a lesson that is critical in a corrections setting."

In Washington, Sister Pauline Quinn persuaded skeptical officials to start the dog-training program in 1981 at the women's prison located across Puget Sound from Tacoma.

Quinn, a former street kid herself, believes the unconditional love of a dog can work miracles.

"In order to change our lives, we have to feel we are accepted and loved," she said. "People may have made a mistake in life, but they can change."

Five women at the 759-inmate prison participate in the program, with another four expected to start soon. Because of limited funds, staff, and dogs, the program can take only about 10 women at a time.

More than 75 women have taken part since the program began. They first must pass a 12-week course, where they learn the basics of dog care, grooming and training.

They work at a prison kennel in the mornings, feeding and grooming the dozens of dogs and a few cats boarded there by private owners. The boarding and grooming fees, plus donations and grants, sustain the nonprofit program.

One recent morning, Palmer gently snipped away tufts of hair from a trembling white poodle named Ragamuffin. Tanner, watching by Palmer's feet, thumped his tail and licked the bars of his kennel plaintively.

"Every dog is different, so it teaches you patience," she said, stepping back to scrutinize Ragamuffin's hairdo. Palmer hopes to find work as a dog groomer when she's released later this summer.

Training starts with simple stuff: sit, stay, come. Then it gets more complicated: inmates teach the dogs to switch lights on and off, to support someone who walks with a cane, to take laundry out of the dryer and put it in a basket and countless other tasks.

Only 20 percent of the dogs have the temperament to complete the eight-month training, said Executive Director Beth Rivard. The rest are adopted out into the community as "paroled pets." It costs about $5,000 to train one service dog, she said, and the disabled recipients pay only a $25 application fee.

At night, the dogs live in cells with their convict caretakers. For the inmates, many of whom left behind children in the outside world, the dogs are an emotional lifeline.

They also are a second chance — for both the women and their dogs. Palmer, who said she was abused by her father and her boyfriend, sees a kindred soul in the rescued dogs.

"Someone gave up on them," she said in a low, guarded voice. "You see a dog whose whole spirit has been broken, and you can change that — that's amazing."

With low water, alligators are more visible, more aggressive in swamp

FARGO, Ga. (AP) — With a 5-foot alligator sunning nearby, Barbara Lofton checked her tour boat and worried about the plunging water level in the Okefenokee Swamp that harbors thousands of wading birds, furtive mammals and slithering reptiles.

A three-year drought has lowered the water level at least 2 feet, acre swamp in south Georgia.

Lofton, a tour guide at the Stephen Foster State Park near Fargo, escorts visitors into the wilderness aboard a pontoon boat. The boat scrubbed bottom several times during a trial run.

"The water level is dropping every day," she said. "Ninety-eight percent of this water comes from rain. If we don't get any rain, it dries up."

The falling water level affects wildlife and vegetation. The cone-shaped trunks of the swamp's towering bald cypress trees are more exposed. Lilly pads that normally float on the surface, flap in the breeze, inches above the water.

Alligators and other aquatic creatures are more visible. They have had to congregate in deeper areas.

A haven for Indians as early as 2500 B.C., the Okefenokee is a bowl-shaped depression with islands, prairies, pine forests and dense vegetation.

It has been managed by the Fish and Wildlife Service since nearly 400,000 acres were designated as a National Wildlife Refuge in 1937. Besides its numerous plant and animal species, some endangered or threatened, the Okefenokee is the headwaters of the Suwannee and St. Marys rivers.

Between 350,000 and 400,000 people visit each year. James Burkhardt, refuge supervisor, said visitation is down slightly, possibly because of the drought and high gasoline prices.

He said this is an ideal time to see the swamp. "You've got stable, warm weather, very few storms, lots of wildlife and not many people to compete with," said Burkhardt. "There are a lot of birds. You're bound to see a lot of alligators that you might miss when the water is higher."

Burkhardt said he doesn't consider water levels to be particularly low, noting that fluctuating water levels and wildfires are part of the swamp's ecology.

The Okefenokee has three main entrances: at refuge headquarters on the eastern side, at the state park on the western side and at the Okefenokee Swamp Park, operated by a nonprofit group on the north side.

Martin Bell, manager of the swamp park, said he's had to cancel one- and two-hour boat tours but still offers 30-minute tours, which are the most popular anyway.

Barbara Pike, assistant manager at the state park, said her staff has had to block some canoe trails. Alligators, which normally shy away from humans, surround fishing boats, poised to snatch the catch as it is being hauled in.

"You have to really reel them in because the alligators are more concentrated," she said. "They're lazy. They're scavengers. They don't like to go any further than they have to for a free meal."

Eldin Rector of Columbus, Ohio, visiting recently with his wife, Cathy, said he enjoyed the alligators. Six large ones circled their boat, probably contemplating a fish dinner.

"At first, I was scared because the first one we saw, hissed at us," said Mrs. Rector.

Martin Treiterer and Lothar Westphal of Germany paddled a canoe amid the alligators. Treiterer said he was disappointed they could not cross the swamp and camp on special platforms above the water, but he was thrilled with the wildlife and the scenery.

"The Okefenokee was one of the main reasons we came," Treiterer said. "We've seen turtles, a hawk, a heron and lots of alligators."

PUC: Phone customers win slamming protections

AUSTIN — Texas phone customers now enjoy more protection from "slamming," the unauthorized switching of long distance phone service, because of new rules adopted recently by the Public Utility Commission.

Customer benefits in the new rules include:

—Refunds to telephone customers of any charges paid during the first 30 days after a slam, plus any amount more than what would have been paid to the original phone company after the first 30 days.

—Stronger verification requirements to ensure customers consent to the switching of their phone service provider.

—Requirements that phone companies provide "freeze" information to customers on how to keep from being slammed, including a customer notice along with a prohibition on charges to impose or lift a freeze.

A freeze prevents a change in a customer's preferred long disservice phony company unless the customer gives consent to the customer's local phone provider. A freeze may apply to local toll service, long distance service or both. A freeze for local telephone service is not allowed because dominant providers could use such a freeze to hinder competition.

The rules are designed to ensure customer protection while encouraging competition in the telecommunications industry. They are based on provisions included in Senate Bills 86 and 560 approved last year by the Texas Legislature and signed in to law by Gov. George W. Bush.

Violators of the Texas slamming rule can be penalized up to $5,000 per day per violation. Repeated violations can result in the revocation of providers' right to do business in Texas. Texas phone customers who believe they have been slammed should file a complaint with the PUC by calling 1-800-782-8477.

Lone Star Pastel Society exhibiting at Square House

PANHANDLE — Carson County Square House Museum is currently exhibiting a show by Lone Star Pastel Society through July 2. A public reception for the artists is scheduled from 2:30-4 p.m. June 25 at the museum. A fourth of the active members are participating. Well-known names such as Ben Konis, Len and Ginny Slesick, Beth Thomas, Ann Crouch, Steven Napper, Faye Killough, Cheryl Squyres, Joan Collins and Mel Richey will be featured.

LSPS was founded in 1995 when Len Slesick and Beth Thomas organized a meeting of interested artists. The objective is to further education and appreciation for the use of "pastel" as a visual fine art medium. The group is comprised of every level of artist from beginner to professional.

Workshops, seminars and exhibitions are held to further the goals and improve the quality of the product. Inclusion in the International Association of Pastel Societies extends the exposure to biennial conventions held at different locations and access through the Internet.

Since its inception, the LSPS has extended its mission to recognize outstanding artists with their inclusion as honorary members in the Society. Frank Reaugh, the earliest pastel artist of the area, was voted in posthumously, while Ben Konis, known worldwide, is a productive member of the current group.

BASEBALL

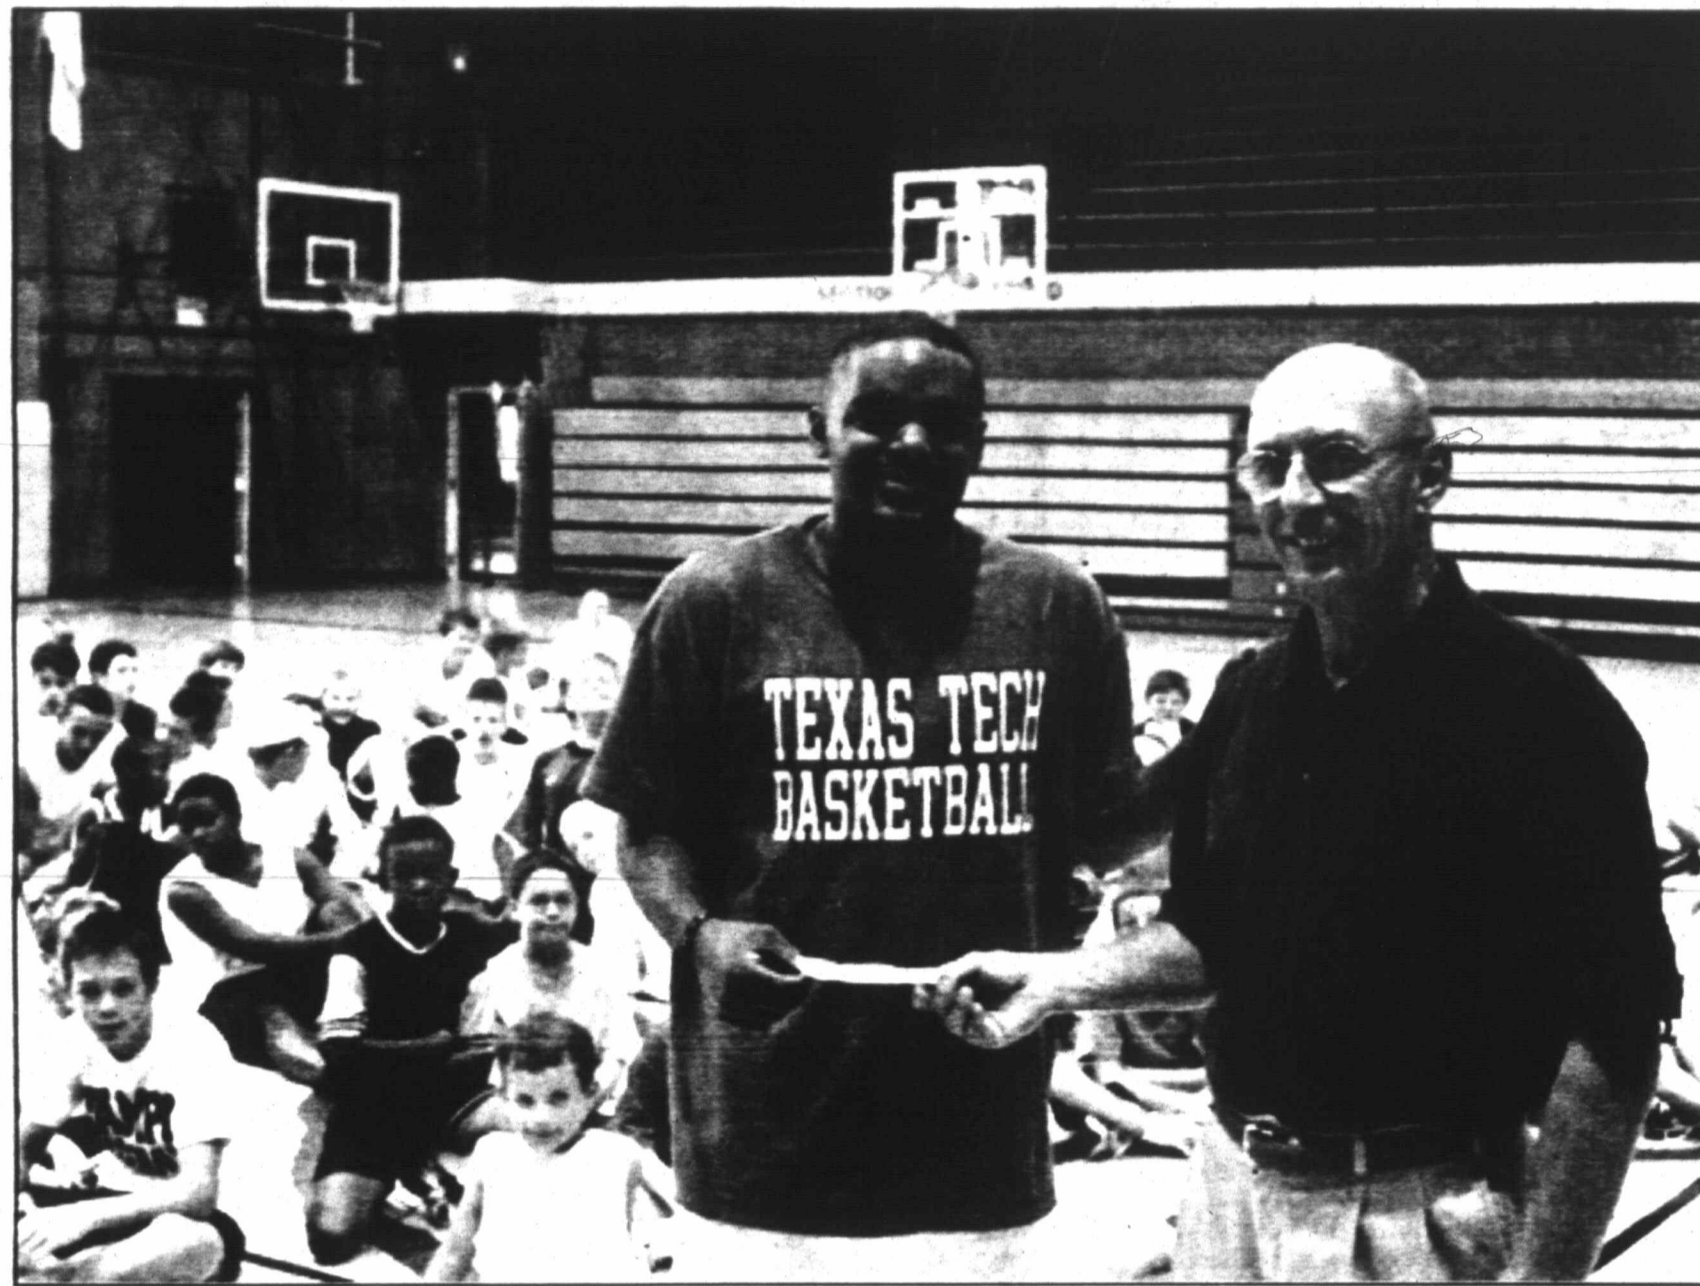

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Barry Bonds walked to the plate in the eighth inning to the sound of enthusiastic cheering, some of coming from his own dugout.

Bonds hit his major league-leading 26th home run, leading Shawn Estes and the San Francisco Giants to a 7-4 victory over the Houston Astros on Friday night.

Bonds had three hits, scored three runs and drove in two. He came to the plate in the eighth needing a single to hit for the cycle.

"We were hoping he would get that single and hit for the cycle," said Giants manager Dusty Baker, who led some of the cheering. "That's the second time this year we've had a player almost hit for the cycle."

Young gives something back to hometown

Former Pampa basketball star Rayford Young gives a $500 check to PHS Athletic Director Dennis Cavalier. The money will go to the school's general athletic fund.

Former Pampa Harvester basketball player Rayford Young, class of '96, presented Pampa High School athletic director Dennis Cavalier with a check for $500 Wednesday morning at McNeely Fieldhouse.

Young, in partnership with Pampa High School head basketball coach Jerry Schaeffer, is the star attraction at a week long basketball camp for area youth. Over 70 kids signed up for the clinic.

"I feel it is important to give something back to the athletic program which was so good to me", Young told the Pampa News.

Rayford is hopeful that other Harvester alumni will follow his lead to help the athletic department at Pampa High School.

Young went on to basketball stardom at Texas Tech, playing out his senior year this season. Young was a key part of the 1995/96 Harvester team that won the State Championship.

Although basketball was his sport at Pampa High, the six foot guard commented, "This $500 is a small contribution that I want to make to help the entire program, not just basketball but football, baseball, tennis, soccer and all sports."

Coach Schaeffer hopes to make Young's camp an annual event at McNeely.

Nicklaus bids emotional farewell to his final U.S. Open

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The fog lifted over Pebble Beach on Friday and revealed the passing of a generation — Jack Nicklaus limping home in his final U.S. Open, Tiger Woods breezing along on a brutally tough day.

Nicklaus bid an emotional and unforgettable farewell to 44 years in the toughest championship in golf, giving an adoring gallery one last thrill by lashing a 3-wood into a Pacific breeze and reaching the 545-yard 18th hole in two shots.

Nine minutes later, Woods stuck a peg in the ground and stayed on course for a chance to win his first U.S. Open.

Woods finished a long day of fog, sunshine and finally darkness by rolling in a 30-foot putt on the par-3 12th, his fifth birdie of the day on rock-hard greens, to get to 9 under for the tournament and build a three-shot lead over Miguel Angel Jimenez.

"I was just trying to get it close and get out of Dodge, and it went in," Woods said.

He refused to look too far ahead, or compare it to his record 12-stroke victory in the 1997 Masters.

"There's a long way to go. We haven't even finished the second round yet," Woods said. "This golf course is a lot more demanding than Augusta was."

Jimenez was at 6 under through seven holes when play was suspended by darkness. Fifty-six players will return at 6:30 a.m. Saturday to complete the third round.

Nicklaus will not be there. His anticipated walk up the 18th fairway came two days early, and the finish was not what he had in mind.

Nicklaus three-putted for par and signed for an 82, his worst score in 160 U.S. rounds dating to 1957.

"It's been a great run of tournaments," Nicklaus said, his blue eyes glistening as he tried to hold back the tears.

Pebble Beach made others break down Friday, but for a different reason.

The sea breeze that finally shooed away the fog also brought out the beast in Pebble Beach, its fickle winds that helped produce a hazy yellow hue on greens, turning them into crusty parcels on concrete.

"You could hear the greens yelling, 'I'm thirsty!'" said Lee Janzen, who had at 73 for a 2-over 144 total.

Greg Norman went eight straight holes with a bogey or worse for an 82, his worst U.S. Open round ever. He will miss the cut for the third straight time.

So will Davis Love III (75-79), for just the third time in his career.

None of this seem to faze Woods, who rolled in an 18-foot par putt on No. 2 and followed that with a 20-foot birdie on the third hole to get to 7 under, two strokes clear of Jimenez.

He made his first bogey of the championship on the par-3 fifth, and showed a slight chunk when his next drive sailed right into the rough. But Woods ripped an iron over Stillwater Cove and onto the green, setting up a two-putt from 15 feet for birdie.

He also birdied the 106-yard seventh from 10 feet, but was scooting along through the Cliffs of Dooms with minimal damage.

"I just sit back and stand in awe of the kid," said hometown hero Bobby Clampett, who started the day three strokes back and walked off the course 10 strokes back. "Any time you think he can't do something, he proves you wrong."

All corners of the globe were trying to catch him.

Jimenez, the Spaniard whom Woods beat in a playoff at Valderrama in November, made par on the first five holes and picked up his lone birdie on the par-5 sixth hole.

"If my game stays the way it is, I'm not afraid of anything," Jimenez said.

Angel Cabrera of Argentina also was bogey-free through seven holes and was another stroke back, followed by Thomas Bjorn of Denmark and Tom Lehman at 2 under.

No one else could make a move.

Despite fog that hugged the coastline overnight and well into the morning, the greens had virtually no moisture and the field had almost no chance. By late afternoon, only three players had managed to break par.

The best score posted was by Daley — that's Joe.

He followed up an 83 — the same score as John Daly, who immediately left town — with a 2-under 69, although he still missed the cut. Nine other players still on the course were also under par.

"I felt like I was playing with a marble out on the pool table," Nicklaus said. "If you're not quiet on your game, it eats you alive every time."

Kirk Triplett made a brief run, but he landed on the beach below the 10th hole and into the shin-deep rough on the 13th hole, both times making bogey. A brilliant start still led to a 71, and he was the early clubhouse leader after 36 holes at 1-under 141.

Three-time Masters and British Open champion Nick Faldo stubbornly tried to hang around the lead until he missed too many greens and failed to hole enough putts. He finished with a 74 for 1-over 143.

Their only hope was that Pebble Beach treated Woods with the same indignation. Woods opened with a 6-under 65, the lowest U.S. Open round ever at Pebble Beach, before fog suspended the first round on Thursday.

Nicklaus saved his best for last, soaking in the beauty of Pebble Beach one last time. He figured it had been 20 years since he tried to reach the 18th green in two, but turned to his oldest son Jackie, his caddie, and said, "Why not?"

He ripped his drive past the pine tree in the middle and hit a 3-wood for all it was worth. The ball hopped onto the front of the green, and the gallery rose to their feet and let out a roar.

"It's difficult coming up the last fairway, knowing it will probably be the last time you're going to come up the U.S. Open fairway," Nicklaus said. "It's been a big part of my life."

Back in the fairway, Tom Watson stopped and applauded as Nicklaus was on the green.

For most of the day, Woods' biggest battle was with boredom. Nearly 30 hours passed between his final putt for birdie on Thursday and his first tee shot Friday afternoon, thanks to the heavy fog that suspended play in the first round.

Seventy-five players had to return at 6:45 a.m., then waiting another 90 minutes for the fog to finally lift. Among them was Ted Tryba, who couldn't believe what he saw — or felt — when he got back on the course.

"We had moisture on the green last night with the fog and everything, but they're twice as firm," Ted Tryba said. "Go figure."

Go figure Woods.

He treated Pebble the same he did four months ago, when he came from seven strokes back over his last seven holes to win the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

Masters champion Vijay Singh had a 73 and was still in the picture at 1-over 143. No one since Faldo in 1990 has finished in the top 10 in a U.S. Open after winning the green jacket.

Fred Couples (75) bogeyed two of the last three holes to finish at 145, along with Watson.

Another senior tour star, Hale Irwin, capped off a 68 in the morning but limped home with a 78 and was at 146.

"The greens," Irwin said, shaking his head. "I'm not going to say they're impossible, but they're close."

Another stroke back was Colin Montgomerie (74) and two-time Open champion Ernie Els (73). Their chances were fading as Woods finished each hole, usually with no worse than par.

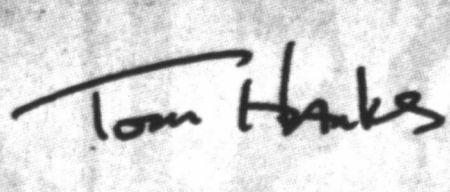

The 24-year-old, playing his 100th professional tournament in the 100th U.S. Open, had a chance to succumb to the torturous conditions — or take a huge step toward become the first wire-to-wire U.S. Open champion since the late Payne Stewart at Hazeltine in 1991.

It's the right time. It's the right place.

Please help build the National World War II Memorial, here on the Mall in Washington, D.C.

Because, incredibly, there is still no national memorial to honor the achievements of this great generation.

It's time to say thank you.

Pacers rout Lakers in Game 5

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — There was no coronation on this night. Not while the Indiana Pacers were still playing with passion — and playing for a coach who isn't ready to retire just yet.

With ferocity and veteran pride, Indiana routed the Los Angeles Lakers 120-87 in Game 5 of the NBA Finals on Friday night. Jalen Rose and Reggie Miller led the onslaught as the Pacers shot 75 percent in the first quarter, led by 20 points before halftime and never let up.

"We wanted it more than them, simple as that," Indiana's Austin Croshere said. "There was no way they were going to win."

Coach Larry Bird, who will retire when the series ends, left Indiana a winner. The final home game of the best NBA season in Pacers franchise history ended with the sellout Conseco Fieldhouse crowd, chanting "Larry! Larry!"

In typical Bird fashion, he didn't acknowledge the cheers as he left the court — but there was no doubt he heard them.

"We've had such a great year here," Bird said. "The support has been there every game."

Bird said before the game that the Pacers "hadn't played a great game" during the series. After watching his team dismantle the supposed — champs-in-waiting, even Bird had to admit Indiana was looking good.

"In (Game 4) we fought so hard and played so well and let it slip away," Bird said. "It's great to see the guys bounce back and play the same way. We hit shots, played unselfishly and we fought them."

The Lakers, who lead the best-of-seven series 3-2, were looking for a trophy presentation — but found serious questions about their ability to close out a series. It was Los Angeles' worst loss of the season and the most points it has allowed in a game this year.

Los Angeles lost a potential series-winning game for the sixth time this season and, more importantly, allowed the Pacers to grab the series momentum, 3/8.

The Lakers were at a loss to explain why they failed to show up on what could have been the season's biggest night.

"We just laid an egg out there tonight," Ron Harper said. "They came out from the beginning and hit shots and then just kept hitting shots. We didn't have a chance tonight."

Game 6 will be Monday night at Staples Center and Game 7, if necessary, will be Wednesday.

Rose, after playing poorly in Indiana's 120-118 overtime loss in Game 4, led the Pacers with 32 points on 12-of-18 shooting. Miller added 25 points as the Indiana stars hit four 3-pointers apiece.

"We're a team that plays better when our backs are against the wall, and 3-1 was a big wall," Rose said. "We just need to take it one game at a time and see if we can get this thing done."

The Pacers hit their first six 3-pointers while running their offense with a Lakers looked helpless — and that was just the first quarter.

"I understand we have what it takes to beat L.A., but it does nothing to talk about it," Rose said. "I was going to shut up and play."

A four-point play by Miller turned a five-point lead into a nine-point lead just seven minutes in, and three 3-pointers by Rose helped the Pacers score 39 points in the first — their best quarter of the postseason.

The lead went to 19 by halftime, briefly shrank to 13 in the third and then grew to 25 early in the fourth as Miller stood at the line and sank four straight foul shots — three for being fouled on a 3-pointer and one for a technical foul on Derek Fisher.

Shaquille O'Neal continued his dominating series with 35 points and 11 rebounds, but he got no help. Kobe Bryant, the hero of Game 4, shot 4-for-20 from the field for eight points, and no other Lakers player had more points than Glen Rice's 11.

"When a team is shooting like that, there's not much you can do," O'Neal said. "I'm kind of upset ... but they played very, very inspired basketball."

For the first time, the Pacers executed Bird's stated strategy of allowing O'Neal to get his points while controlling everyone else on the Lakers. If this is how well the strategy works, who knows what lies in store at Staples Center?

"We knew this was going to be a difficult game," coach Phil Jackson said. "We shot 45 percent in the first half, they shot 61. Their shooting really had us in a quandary, and in the second half they beat us on the boards and got to the line."

"We're still in the driver's seat; we're not in a situation where we need to panic. We need precision and execution."

While Rose and Miller carried the action early, Croshere led the way late with 13 second-half points and nine rebounds. The Pacers maintained their lead and stood up to the physical confrontations that usually result during a blowout.

Four technical fouls were called during a span of 32 seconds in the fourth quarter, and Lakers enforcer Rick Fox was up to his usual mischief.

The Pacers weathered those storms and set their sights on Monday night at Staples Center, when they'll try to take the second step in a three-part plan to shock the basketball world.

Area players win honors in Classic Bowl

WOODWARD, Okla. — Wheeler's Ben Dollar and Canadian's Eric Hall were among the football players honored at the annual 101 Classic Bowl awards banquet held recently in Woodward, Okla.

Dollar, a linebacker, received the East's defensive player of the year award. Hall was given the Classic Award.

Canadian's David Flowers was recognized as coach of the year for the West.

The 101 Classic Bowl Foundation handed out

$4,000 in scholarships and more than a dozen awards at the annual banquet.

A scholarship went to one male and one female basketball player. Gage's Kristen Workman was selected for her 4.0 GPA, extra-curricular activities like National Honor Society and Oklahoma Girls State. Her basketball abilities earned her all-conference honors four years. Kingfisher guard Todd Arms scored a 27 on his ACT and poured in 10.3 points per game during his career. Arnett's Kimberly Bayless and Fargo's Galeb Roberts received player of the year honors in boys' and girls' basketball.

The band scholarship was presented to Hennessey graduate Sarah Matousek. The snare drum player made the OSSBDA All-State Band, served as president of the National Honor Society, and was named Academic All-Stater.

Ryam Clem, a quarterback-defensive back from Sharon-Mutual, won the Drew Williams scholarship.

Rangers fall to Devil Rays

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Texas manager Johnny Oates is trying to keep a nine-game losing streak in perspective.

Most players left the Rangers clubhouse early following a 9-2 loss to the Tampa Bay Devil Rays on Friday night, leaving Oates to answer many of the questions about what's happened to the team during a skid that matches the longest losing streak in the majors.

The Rangers haven't pitched well, allowing 33 hits, 30 runs and 22 walks in the past three games. And Friday night, the offense produced just one extra-base hit — Frank Catalanotto's solo homer — against a team Texas had not scored fewer than five runs against in six previous meetings.

"The worst teams of all-time are going to win a third of the games, and the best teams of all-time are going to lose a third of their games," Oates said. "And everybody else is going to fall in between."

The streak matches Kansas City's nine-game slide in April. It's the club's longest stretch of futility since the Rangers dropped 10 in a row in July 1995.

The Devil Rays, on the other hand, are a last-place team that's played its best ball this month. They've won three straight, matching a season high, and have taken eight of 11 overall.

HAPPY FATHER'S DAY

My Father

When I was:

Four years old:
My daddy can do anything.

Five years old:
My daddy knows a whole lot.

Six years old:
My dad is smarter than your dad.

Eight years old:
My dad doesn't know exactly everything.

Ten years old:
In the olden days, when my dad grew up, things were sure different.

Twelve years old:
Oh, well, naturally, Dad doesn't know anything about this. He is too old to remember his childhood.

Fourteen years old:
Don't pay any attention to my dad. He is so old-fashioned.

Twenty-one years old:
Him? My Lord, he's hopelessly out of date.

Twenty-five years old:
Dad knows about it, but then he should because he's been around so long.

Thirty years old:
Maybe we should ask Dad what he thinks. After all, he's had a lot of experience.

Thirty-five years old:
I'm not doing a single thing until I talk to Dad.

Forty years old:
I wonder how Dad would have handled it. He was so wise.

Fifty years old:
I'd give anything if Dad were here now so I could talk this over with him. Too bad I didn't appreciate how smart he was. I could have learned a lot from him.

Now Comedy Central is heating up its summer schedule with a premiere week designed to further clarify its comic sensibilities. Starting Sunday, the cable network will launch three series, expand to a fifth night (Sunday) of original prime-time programming, and unveil new episodes of seven returns.

Keep safety in mind when walking or biking

The 10 teams registered for this year's "Walk Across Texas" are doing great! The group added 507.7 miles during the fifth week of the program. Teams reported for week four walking or biking: Altrusans and Friends/Kerrick Horton, 61.5 miles, 245.5 total; Better Than Before/Joni Morgan, 45 miles, 221 total; The Energizers/Lendi Jackson, 104.5 miles, 406.5 total; Fancy Feet/Pam Lash, 46 miles, 197 total; Go-Getters/Alice Damron, 15 miles, 67 total; Inchworms/Anne Stobbe, 58.6 miles, 301.86 total; Lefors/Bikers/Drake Jackson, 50.5 miles, 199.5 total; Pavement Stompers/Teresa Dyson, 80 miles, 395 total; Sweaters/Janie VanZandt, 76 miles, 128 total; and the Wilderness Walkers/Joan Gray, 61.6 miles, 350.55 total. This gives a grand total of 2,646.91 miles walked in three weeks.

Walk Across Texas is a fun and flexible way to exercise. Each team member keeps track of their miles, to see if their team can walk the 800 miles "across Texas" in eight weeks. Benefits of the program include: fitness, weight control, prevention of disease, stress reduction and quality time spent with friends and family.

Two of the most popular types of physical activities are walking and bicycling. Some people walk or bicycle for fun, some to get from one place to another and some for competition. For what ever reason you walk or bike, you should always keep safety in mind.

Here are some pedestrian safety tips:
—Never walk alone.
—Follow the same general walking route. It's a good idea to tell someone where you are walking and an approximate time of your return.

—Always wear reflective clothing or reflective tape! Walking at night poses safety and security problems.

—Always walk facing traffic.
—Always use crosswalks where provided.
—Always remember to stop, look and listen!
—Always be alert to traffic and to your surroundings.
—Always check traffic before crossing a street or thoroughfare.
—Before stepping off a curb, look left, look right and look left again over your shoulder.

—Remember, jaywalking is against the law!
Let's look at some things that can be done to reduce the risk and ensure safety and fun when bicycling.

The bicycle, like any other vehicle, needs to be in tip-top condition and "fit" the rider. Make sure your bike is the proper size. A bike that is too big or too small will be hard to control.

For fit: When standing on the ground there should be a 1-3 inch gap between the rider and the top bar. More room will be needed for a mountain bike.

Bike seat: When sitting on the seat with the foot on the pedal, the leg should be slightly bent.

Reflectors: Reflectors should be on the front and rear of the bike. The rear reflector should be red and at least three inches across. Check that the reflector is pointed straight back to reflect the headlights of cars that are coming from the rear. The front reflector should be white and most are round and two inches wide.

Joan Gray
Extension Agent

Bike chain: The chain should be clean and lubricated.
Brakes: Brakes should have even pressure. They should make the back wheels skid on dry pavement, but should not stick.

Tires: Tires need to be properly inflated. The side of the tire has the manufacturer's guidelines. Use a tire pressure to test for inflation.

Riders need to see and be seen! Wear fluorescent green, yellow or orange. When wearing these colors, other bikers, motorists and pedestrians will be able to see the bicyclist better in the daytime. If one must ride at night (which is not recommended for anyone!), clothing made with retro-reflective materials is recommended. Roll up, clip or tuck the legs of loose clothing into socks so it won't get caught in your chain.

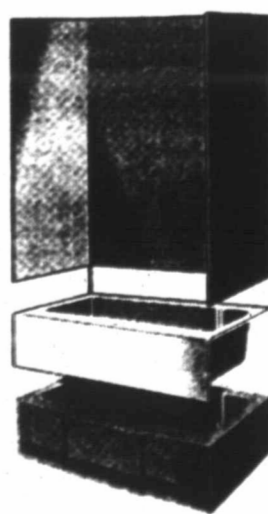

Last but not least: Wear a helmet! Helmets can prevent head injuries — the main cause of death and disabilities. A helmet is as much a part of the bicycle as the handlebars and tires. Don't ride without it!

I would like to thank the kind people of Pampa for all of the phone calls, cards, flowers, food & other acts of kindness during the illness & death of my sister, Georgia Holding. Special thanks to her good friends & neighbors R.H. & Betty Dyson, Drs. Craig Shaffer & Bruce Harrow, the staff of Pampa Regional Medical Center & nursing attendant Peggy Miller.

Is Your Bathtub Ugly?

Have BATH FITTER® install a New Tub OVER your old one!

Commonly Asked Questions?

Q. Why Shouldn't I have my tub refinished?

A. Refinishing may look good for a while, but such finishes are fragile and tend to chip and crack within a year or two. You may want to ask someone who has used refinishing what they thought about the results.

Q. I like the look of tile, but hate cleaning grout. Do I have an option?

A. BATH FITTER can install a beautiful tile-patterned wall that looks exactly like ceramic tile except that there is no more grout to clean and no more grout to dry out, crumble and allow water penetration. Your wall will be sealed dry and stay dry.

"Earn $$$$ Part-time With Your Computer"
Medical Billing, Hottest Home Business for 2000 and Beyond

Doctors desperately need your help and will pay you an almost absurd amount of money to work at home and process their insurance and Medicare claims electronically. Doctors will get paid in days instead of months, eliminate hassles and save a ton of money.

What an opportunity! The AMA recently estimated that only 40% of doctors are now putting their records on computers. The AMA also reported that Medicare plans to STOP accepting paper claims this year. Many doctors don't know what they're going to do.

You can use our software, training, 800# phone support and earn a very high income. It's easy. You work your own hours and it only takes about an hour a day for each doctor. No experience is necessary. (Of course, there's no guarantee you'll make money in any business. How much you earn depends on your talent and how hard you work.)

Med-Claim Plus, Inc. has limited openings in this area. If you're ready to own your own business and stop worrying about money, get all the facts now by attending a no obligation...

A Son Remembers His Father In Tribute to Dads Everywhere

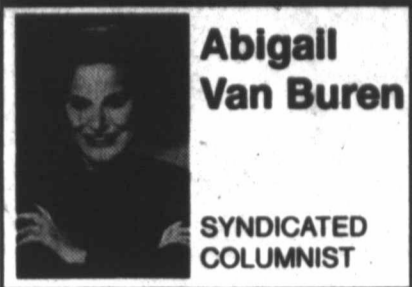

DEAR ABBY: After my dad died several years ago, I wrote a tribute to him. My friends, some of them former Marines like me, said it expressed what they felt and remembered about their fathers. I seldom see published tributes by sons to their fathers. Perhaps it's not macho to write such poems. If you feel this amateurish effort should be shared with others, I'd be honored to see it in your column on Father's Day.

WILLIAM W. BARTSCH JR.,
KINGS PARK, N.Y.

DEAR WILLIAM: You have written a beautiful tribute, and I'm pleased to share it with my readers on this holiday. Read on:

REMEMBERING DAD

A soft scratch of whiskers pressed on my face,
Bear-hugging squeezes
A rough gentle grace.
Running and racing, letting me win,
Falling asleep
My cheek on his chin.
The strong smell of work, of tools and of sweat,
Of dust and of rust
I'll never forget.
After-shave lotion, paint cans and pails,
The clips and cufflinks,
Galvanized nails,
Basements and attics, out-of-date ties,
Oceans and rivers
Fished at sunrise.
Whiskers grew grayer, yet

Abigail Van Buren

SYNDICATED COLUMNIST

scratched just the same,
And wrinkles were etched
On a more fragile frame.
Oh, how I long for that rough-whiskered kiss,
That sweet scratch of love
So dearly I miss.

DEAR ABBY: Raising children takes patience and a lot of humor. I'm passing this tongue-in-cheek tribute to fathers along to you hoping that you will print it for Father's Day.

A FRIEND IN IRVINE, CALIF.

DEAR FRIEND: It is both humorous and touching, and oh, so true. I'm pleased to share it:

A TRIBUTE TO FATHERS

My father when I was age ...
4: My daddy can do anything.
5: My daddy knows a whole lot.
6: My dad is smarter than your dad.
8: My dad doesn't exactly know everything.
10: In the olden days when my dad grew up, things were sure different.

12: Oh, well naturally, Father doesn't know anything about that. He is too old to remember his childhood.

14: Don't pay attention to my father. He is so old-fashioned!

21: Him? My Lord, he's hopelessly out-of-date.

25: Dad knows a little bit about it, but then he should because he has been around so long.

30: Maybe we should ask Dad what he thinks. After all, he's had a lot of experience.

35: I'm not doing a single thing until I talk to Dad.

40: I wonder how Dad would have handled it. He was so wise and had a world of experience.

50: I'd give anything if Dad were here now so I could talk this over with him. Too bad I didn't appreciate how smart he was. I could have learned a lot from him.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have:
5-Dynamic; 4-Positive;
3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

Manifest your financial abilities and impress the boss. Though at first you want to rein in and consolidate, opt to take a risk. Others approach you for advice. Schedule meetings for later in the day, when you peak. Your arguments win anyone over who doubts. Tonight: Join friends.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

Put your best foot forward. Be detached, but ask important questions. Prioritizing is key to a successful project. Discuss expenses and an eye-opening experience. Make calls. Present your opinion and the facts behind it to a boss or someone who can be a good sounding board. Tonight: Work late.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

You can identify with a yo-yo when you deal with a partner. You might think the ambivalence comes from him, when your uncertainty in reading the situation is actually the source. Detach, pull back and take an overview. Enjoy sitting on the mountain and looking down. Tonight: Relax your mind.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

Others direct the action, so you might as well sit back. Plug into work, but remain sensitive to requests. Another tries to enlist you in a project.

Why not take it on? Expand your circle of friends, but resist getting too convivial and social! Tonight: Brainstorm.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

Concentrate on work. A higher-up makes demands, but he also gives encouragement. Your ability to respond and get the job done enforces a boss's respect. Ask for what you want now, while the going is good. Meetings and interpersonal matters prove to be successful. Tonight: Out the door.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

Your vision of what can work is greatly enhanced by your creativity and efficiency. Ask for feedback, then seek out more information. Schedule a seminar. An expert proves to be an excellent resource. Don't forget the here and now and what is on your desk. Tonight: Get physical.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

Getting motivated takes unusual discipline today. Recognize an associate's efforts. A mixed bag of money options is presented. Use caution with any type of risk. Your imagination might need some restraint. Curb flirting at work. Tonight: Let the twinkle in your eye speak.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

Realize that what others consider important, you find easy and perhaps not very noteworthy. Muster up your diplomacy and deal with an associate's priorities. Concentrate on work in the afternoon. Screen calls, cocoon at your desk and tear through paperwork. Tonight: Mosey on home.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

Your efforts come back in multiples where it counts. You finally manifest the kind of money you would like to see. Making an effort remains pivotal. Working two jobs isn't out of the question. Employ your phone skills and discuss a potential work-related matter. Tonight: Out and about.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

You put forth 100 percent in both your work and your personal life; now you see the results. A loved one or child could be ambivalent about a suggestion. Focus on what you do have control over. Entrench yourself in the afternoon and breeze through paperwork. Tonight: Carefully consider an investment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

Don't share anything that makes you uncomfortable. Hatching an idea involves carefully weighing the pros and cons. Request what you need on the homefront. Proceed as planned. Beam in what you want. Popularity soars as you relax. Follow your intuition. Tonight: As you like it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

Calls, actions and messages involving groups can help you turn a long-term desire into a reality. Understand the need for support as well as feedback. Don't take it personally, though. If you aren't sure what action to take, do nothing. Time is your ally. Tonight: Inside your head!

Butterfly aviary offers alternative to Branson's fiddles

By DOUG JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

BRANSON, Mo. (AP) — At first, the room appears to be full of fluttering flowers, their vibrant-colored petals floating through the air, sometimes landing on the shoulder of an awestruck visitor before lifting up once again.

A closer look reveals the flowers are not flowers at all, but 1,500 butterflies of every color and breed dancing to soft music in a specially designed playground just for them.

Tucked in the hills outside Branson, The Butterfly Place is a giant aviary where tigers, monarchs, painted ladies, zebra longwings and other varieties play among a winding swath of milkweed and heather.

"If the butterflies could talk I think they would say they are happy here," says owner Bill Hill, who opened the attraction a year ago.

The 9,000-square-foot habitat is among a growing number of live exhibits, or "butterfly zoos" around the country. Visitors can sit on benches and take in the scene, snap close-up pictures of exotic breeds and learn something about the life cycle of one of nature's most mysterious creatures.

"Butterflies don't bite, they don't sting and you can walk among them without any threat," said Nancy Greig, director of the Butterfly Center at the Houston Museum of Natural Sciences. "Plus, butterflies are cool insects. It might be harder to sell something like a cockroach exhibit."

Live butterfly exhibits were popularized in England in the 1970s, appealing to European love for greenhouses and natural settings. The first one in the United States — built in Coconut Creek, Fla., in 1988 — was a bit more of a risk.

"We knew the English were into wildlife and plants, but here everything is Disney and animation. We weren't sure how people would respond," said Ron Boender, founder of Butterfly World in Coconut Creek.

After exposure in the New York Times and Good Morning America, Butterfly World took off. Now, hundreds of thousands of tourists stop through the exhibit yearly and 5,000 butterflies are aired every day.

"It's breathtaking. We keep so many so many flying that it's like rain," Boender said. "People are looking for alternatives to boring old museums without losing the educational value, and we give it to them."

A native of Chicago with a background in marketing, Hill left the city in 1979 looking for a life change himself. He opened a restaurant in Naples, Fla., but still wasn't completely satisfied.

Contemplating his move, Hill wandered into Butterfly World in Florida one day and was blown away. That's when a Blue Morpho landed on his shoulder and changed his life forever.

"They say it's lucky when a butterfly lands on you," Hill says. "This one was inspiring and lucky."

For 10 years, he has operated Butterflies in Flight, a butterfly breeding farm in Naples. On tropical plants in year-round warmth, butterflies lay their eggs and complete their life cycles.

Hill raises about 2,000 a week, which he distributes to his two live aviaries — one in Branson and the other in Westford, Mass., near Boston — and sells the rest to zoos, botanical gardens and other places. He's also doing a growing business in butterflies released at weddings and funerals.

There are about 20,000 species of butterflies in the world, and about 725 species have been identified in North America, north of Mexico.

Groups like the North American Butterfly Association, while vocal in their opposition to seeing butterflies released at weddings and public events, say live exhibits are usually harmless. "It's no different than a zoo. Some people don't like to see animals in the zoo, others appreciate it," said NABA President Jeffrey Glassberg. "We have no problems with live exhibits. In fact, if it helps expand the number of people interested in these glorious insects, all the better."

Bear trainer continues to work despite Little Bart's death

HEBER CITY, Utah (AP) — Doug Seus hops around in his back yard, surrounded on all sides by his past, future and present.

Buried at the bottom of a grassy slope behind him lies Bart the Bear. Star of more than a dozen feature films and a slew of commercials and documentaries, Bart died May 10 at the age of 23 after battling cancer for almost two years.

Across the driveway are Little Bart and his yet-to-be-named sister, in separate cages, eager for attention. The two 5-month-old grizzly cubs were orphaned in Alaska when their mother was shot and killed last month.

Directly in front of the rugged 57-year-old Seus is Tank, his star of the moment. Doug is in the middle of negotiating a contract which could land the 5-year-old lead role in the sequel to the 1998 film Dr. Dolittle.

"Peek-a-Boo!" Seus says to the seven-foot-plus, 700-pound grizzly, who complies by putting his skill-sized mitts over his eyes.

"Say your prayers!" Seus instructs the non-denominational creature, who almost looks reverent as he clasps his giant paws together in front of him.

"Good boy, Tank! Somersault!"

Somehow, the bear manages to incorporate both lumbering and grace into this front-roll, his shoulder softly initiating contact with the ground before he pops back up on his hind legs.

Tank is rewarded with a handful of apples and an emphatic chorus of "Gooood Booooy's," and after a few more tricks and a photo up with his human family, is escorted back into his pen.

It's a little different these days around the Seuses' Rocky Mountain Wildlife Ranch, 30 miles southeast of Salt Lake City. Old Reliable's gone, but between Tank and the two unpredictable kids, the Seuses' expect to have their hands full for a long time.
