Demand high for oilfield workers

By DAVID BOWSER
Staff Writer

As any first year economics student can tell you, the basis for price movement is supply and demand.

The world is using record amounts of oil and gas. That, in turn, is driving petroleum prices up which is fueling exploration and drilling in the Texas Panhandle.

But drilling companies in the panhandle are facing another side of the supply and demand equation. There is a shortage of laborers in the oil patch.

"The interesting thing that's happened in just the last month is that salaries for drilling crews, roughnecks, entry level laborers, has gone from about $10 an hour to around $18," said H. Wayne Hughes, executive director with the Panhandle Producers and Royalty Owners Association. "It's incredible."

Hughes said the high wages were offered by one drilling company in the Last Christmas, when oil prices dipped to historic lows, the industry lost its workforce. Worse, among those who decided to leave the business were the veterans of the oil patch.

"People who had been on drilling operations for 30 of 40 years decided to hang it up," H. Wayne Hughes said. "They decided this was as good a time as any to hang it up and move on to something else."

Hughes said that in addition to being short-handed, there is an experience deficit.

Texas Panhandle.

"Everybody else followed suit," Hughes said.

The result has been drilling companies stealing employees away from each other in bidding wars.

There is the story of a tool pusher, the man in charge of operating a drilling rig, sending a roughneck to check on a water well a quarter mile away. When the man didn't return, the tool pusher went to investigate. He found the pickup the man had been driving with a note taped to it saying that a company running a rig across the road had offered him a $6 an hour more than he was making.

Other companies are actively recruiting Mexican national crews for oil and gas drilling rigs.

At least one drilling company in the panhandle requires that all signs posted on the rigs be in both English and Spanish.

"That's the state of things," Hughes said. "It's running white hot."

Last week, the rig count in the Texas Panhandle topped 25 rigs operating in the area for the first time in four years.

"I'm convinced that if we could get them, we could have 50 rigs running in the panhandle right now," Hughes said.

This week, Service Drilling Company will roll out a brand new rig in Stinnett that is already booked through next year.

"It will be turning to the right in two weeks," Hughes said. "It will be making a hole."

It will continue to do so, guaranteed,

Like it or not, famed squadron in for new name

What started as a moment of whimsy has become an issue to be set before a national organization this fall, and two Pampans aren't happy about it.

When the general membership of the Confederate Air Force meets in October, they will vote on forming a committee to review suggested new names for the organization. Four of these names will then be submitted to the general membership at their annual meeting in October, 2001. The name with the most votes will become the new name for the Confederate Air Force as of Jan. 1, 2002.

"I hate to see it," said Pampa businessman Buck Worley. Worley said he and Pampa attorney Ken Fields fought the idea vehemently when it was first suggested two or three years ago, but, like Fields, Worley sees the change as inevitable.

"It will be," Worley said. "I initially was completely opposed to it," Fields said. "I have since decided that it is inevitable."

Although no names have been put forth for the record, Fields said the organization already calls itself the Confederate Air Force Ghost Squadron.

"We ought to just say Ghost Squadron," he said. "It has a lot of mystique to it. It's already in use. That would be my preference."

The reason for changing the name of the organization is the difficulty in raising money from corporate sponsors, CAF officials said. There is an objection to anything with the word "Confederate" in it.

"The Confederate Air Force has nothing to do whatsoever with the Civil War. It is an organization that maintains and flies the great war planes of World War II."

Boy dies, six hurt in SUV accident Shredded tire gets study

ENCINAL, Texas (AP) — A 10-year-old boy died and six others were injured when the driver of a Ford Explorer equipped with Firestone tires lost control of the vehicle and it tumbled off an interstate. At least one of the tires appeared to have shredded.

Authorities didn't know if the tread separation contributed to the accident or was a result of the vehicle skidding off the highway and rolling onto its roof Sunday afternoon.

Jose Martinez, deputy chief of the Webb County Sheriff's Department, told the Laredo Morning Times in Monday's editions that the shredded tire was possibly related to the recent Bridgestone/Firestone tire recalls and that the incident would be investigated further.

The child died in the crash about 4:30 p.m., some 40 miles northeast of Laredo. Six people were taken to hospitals with shoulder and other injuries after the vehicle overturned and landed on its roof.

Congress opens hearings this week aimed at determining when Bridgestone/Firestone Inc. and its customer Ford Motor Co. knew about tire problems that have been linked to 88 deaths in U.S. accidents and more overseas.

Last week, federal authorities updated the number of reported deaths from 62 and issued a consumer advisory that said an additional 1.4 million tires could be dangerous and should be replaced. Previously, 6.5 million tires were recalled by the tire company.

It wasn't clear Sunday whether the tires on the SUV that crashed were under the recall.

Music man ...

Into his fourth decade of Western Swing, Tiny Duncan at the keyboard plays with the Magic City Cowboys during the Old Mobeetie Music Festival this summer in Wheeler County. Duncan will be inducted into the Western Swing Society Hall of Fame this fall.

Western Swing artist going into Hall of Fame

By DAVID BOWSER

A music teacher once told Hubert "Tiny" Duncan that his fingers were too short to play the piano. She told him that he should give up his dreams of music.

Next month, Duncan will be inducted into the Western Swing Society Hall of Fame, after an almost a half century music career.

Duncan will be inducted during ceremonies Sunday, Oct. 1, at the Western Swing Society Hall of Fame in Sacramento, Calif. The induction ceremony will cap three days of continuous music by some of the outstanding Western Swing bands.

Born at Quanah in 1937, Duncan moved with his family to Pampa in 1943 as Duncan was starting first grade. They left in 1945, after World War II, and moved to Lubbock, but returned to Pampa in 1951.

"When I was a little kid, three or four years old, my sister would set me up on my knees on the piano stool and taught me how to play some relatively simple stuff like Roll Out the Barrel," Duncan said.

His older brother would bring high school friends over and charge them each a nickel or a dime for concerts by Duncan.

"They'd get me to play, and they'd make money off of it," Duncan said. "That's how that got started."

Duncan graduated from Pampa High School in 1955. The next year, he began his career as a professional musician.

From 1956 through 1958, he played in Oklahoma and Texas.

Investigators say part matches one that gashed tire

PARIS (AP) — French investigators said Monday a metal piece that gashed a tire of a supersonic Concorde in July — causing a fire in the fuel tank and dooming the flight — apparently came from a Continental Airlines plane.
 The Continental DC-10 took off from the same runway minutes before the Concorde, which caught fire and crashed into a hotel, killing 113 people, said France's Accident and Inquiry Office.
 A Continental DC-10 had a missing part "which appeared to be identical to the metal piece found on the runway after the July 25, 2000, accident," said a statement from the office, known by the French acronym, BEA.
 The part was found to be missing from a space between a fan and a door on the right-wing engine of a Continental DC-10.

for almost the next two years. It is booked that far ahead.
 "That's not just true of them," Hughes said. "That's true of all drilling companies. Every drilling company I know is booked well in advance, for the rest of 2000 for sure, and it's not unusual to hear about them being booked through 2001."
 This amounts, he said, to more than full employment.
 "We're really at a manpower deficit in this industry," Hughes said.
 Last Christmas, when oil prices dipped to historic lows, the industry lost its workforce. Worse, among those who decided to leave the business were the veterans of the oil patch.
 "People who had been on drilling operations for 30 of 40 years decided to hang it up," Hughes said. "They decided this was as good a time as any to hang it up and move on to something else."
 Hughes said that in addition to being short-handed, there is an experience deficit.
 "I don't mean to imply anything negative about anybody who's out there, but these guys who are now tool pushers on rigs may have been working in the industry no longer than four years," Hughes said. "Now, they're in charge of a multi-million operation."
 There have been no disasters, he said, but there is a vast amount of experience that is no longer there.

 "That's symptomatic of what's going on in our industry," Hughes said.
 From the long term projections for oil and gas, Hughes said, the industry will remain busy for at least a year, a long horizon in such a volatile industry.
 "It's one of those rare, predictable good times for the industry," he said.
 Even if OPEC nations began increasing their output, as the Saudis threatened last month, it would have a relative small impact on the domestic industry.
 "If they got back in for 1.5 million barrels a day, it would only affect our prices by three dollars," Hughes said. "That's the kind of demand is being put on petroleum in the world economy in general. We're moving more ton-miles out there on 1-40 today than we were a year ago. Everything is ramped up."
 Still, Hughes, like other veterans of the oil and gas industry, warned that things can change over night.
 "It's like running a motor boat across a lake at full throttle," Hughes said. "It's a lot of fun until you hit a sand bar."
 Hughes said he doesn't see any sand bars, but being a veteran of the oil and gas business, he warned, "You never do, though, when you're running this fast."

 He said it paid well, and it was a regular job.
 "When I first started, I'd go play just to get to play because I liked it that well," Duncan said.
 But economics is always a factor. There were times he had to work three jobs just to make a living.
 His father was a carpenter and in construction. "Along with my music, that's what I had done also," Duncan said.
 Despite long hours of work and strain, his love of music never wavered, and he said he's never stopped learning.
 "The good Lord gave me a lot of talent," he said. "But that talent has to constantly be refined. Consequently, Duncan said he's spent a lot of time in jam sessions.
 "To learn anything," he said, "you have to get with somebody that knows more than you do."
 Although a list of the people that Duncan's played with reads like a Who's Who of Western music, one of the people he enjoyed meeting the most was the legendary Duke Ellington.
 "I was hesitant about telling him about my interest in Western music," Duncan admitted. "He said, 'Hoss, let me tell you something. There's two kinds of music. There's good music. There's bad music.' Ellington told Duncan to remember one thing.
 "You've either got to be good enough that people will want to come listen to what you do or you're going to play what people want," Ellington said.
 Whether it's Cuyler Street in the summer where Duncan plays with the Magic City Cowboys or the Western Swing Society Hall of Fame in Sacramento, Calif., they're still lining up to hear Tiny Duncan play what he wants to play.

 Fields said it is to these people democracy caters these days.
 "The Confederate Air Force has nothing to do whatsoever with the Civil War," Fields said. "It is an organization that maintains and flies the great war planes of World War II. It started down in Harlingen, and one day somebody went out and painted the name Confederate Air Force on the tail of a P-51 Mustang that they'd bought in the early days as a joke. That's where the name came from."
 Worley said he sees it as a generational change. As a newer generation takes over leadership position in business, it no longer has the historical perspective of the one before.
 "It's a different generation," Worley said.
 "That name by and of itself has a long and proud history," Fields said.
 The Confederate Air Force has existed well over 40 years.
 "Now, we're going to lose that name because of the necessity to pander to the intellectually lame and infirm," Fields said. "So goes life in America today."
 "I hate to see it," Worley said. "I'll have to go along with it."

Officials: Man lived with bodies for two months

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — An unemployed shrimper remained in jail Sunday after authorities discovered he had been living with corpses believed to be his dead parents for as long as two months. Police believe he was collecting their retirement benefits.
 David Sidney Hisey, 51, was arrested around midnight Friday when sheriff's deputies, who had been trying to check on his parents' welfare for days, discovered two bodies in a back bedroom of the island couple's home, said Galveston police Lt. Mike Putnal.
 Hisey had allegedly taped the door to the bedroom and used insect bombs to conceal the stench of decay and kill parasites feeding on the bodies, Putnal said.

 Hisey was being held in Galveston County Jail on $10,000 bond for two counts of abuse of a corpse, a jail spokesman said.
 The bodies are believed to be Hisey's pensioner parents: Hollis Hisey, 85, and Sunny Hisey, 91. Hisey is believed to have concealed their deaths to collect $3,000 a month in Social Security and other benefits, Putnal said.
 Hisey had also allegedly been eating Meals on Wheels food brought to the home for his parents.
 An autopsy has been ordered for the two badly decomposed bodies to identify them and determine the cause of death. Foul play has not been ruled out.

Weather focus

PAMPA — Continued hot today with a high of 102 and southwest winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight, clear with a low of 72 and south winds at 5-10 mph. Tomorrow's high is expected to be about 100. Sunday's high was 101; the low this morning was 72.
STATEWIDE — A ribbon of low pressure was slung across the nation's northern tier this Labor Day, while rain splashed the mid-Atlantic coast and triple-digit temperatures continued in the South.
 A strong cold front was expected to push south through the Ohio Valley and northern mid-Atlantic, triggering showers and thundersstorms into the Great Lakes and New England.
 Scattered showers and thundersstorms were forecast to erupt strongly across the Carolinas, Deep South, Gulf Coast, Tennessee Valley and Florida.
 A stalled frontal boundary over the northern and central Plains was expected to produce afternoon showers and thundersstorms from the Dakotas south to northern Oklahoma and Arkansas.
 Low pressure over the West Coast was predicted to produce scattered showers and a few thundersstorms to the Pacific Northwest and Montana. Stronger storms could bring powerful wind gusts, hail and frequent lightning.
 Upper level moisture over the southern Rockies was expected to produce isolated afternoon showers and thundersstorms over Colorado, northern New Mexico, Pacific Northwest and northern Arizona. Stronger storms were forecast to produce gusty winds, small hail and occasional lightning.

 Highs Monday were forecast in the 60s and 70s across the Great Lakes, northern Ohio Valley, Upper Mississippi Valley, New England and Pacific Northwest; in the 80s and 90s along the southern Ohio Valley, central and southern Plains, mid-Atlantic, Georgia, northern Florida and Great Basin; and in the 100s over Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Texas, Desert Southwest and southern California.
 Temperatures in the Lower 48 states on Sunday ranged from a high of 111 degrees in Ardmore, Okla., to a low of 28 degrees in McCall, Idaho.

Study: Removing part of lungs helps some with emphysema

By LINDA A. JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

A risky surgery to remove part of the damaged lungs of emphysema patients appears to at least temporarily improve their ability to breathe, walk and lead more normal lives, a small study found.

While a few thousand people with severe emphysema have had the operation and reported substantial improvement, Medicare and private insurers won't pay for it without proof it works better than standard medical care.

This study of "lung-volume reduction surgery," and a much larger federal study under way, could change that.

"We're claiming a short-term benefit and hoping that will also bring a long-term benefit," said lead researcher Dr. Duncan Geddes, a professor of respiratory medicine at London's Royal Brompton Hospital. "When it succeeds ... the effect on a person's life is really quite astonishing."

Some patients who have had the surgery have been able to resume activities such as shopping, even golf, he said.

Emphysema is an incurable lung disease affecting 2 million Americans, with an estimated annual cost of $2.5 billion. Severe emphysema kills 30 percent of patients within a year and 95 percent within 10 years.

Caused by smoking, genetic flaws or exposure to hazardous fumes, emphysema damages the lungs' air sacs, trapping air and destroying the airways' elasticity and structural support. That makes it hard to inflate and deflate the lungs, causing progressive shortness of breath that leaves patients unable to work, and eventually makes walking or other physical effort too difficult. Patients feel as if their lungs, enlarged by the disease, are too full to inhale or exhale much air.

Removing up to 30 percent of the lungs so they fit better inside the ribs makes it easier to inhale and exhale. The surgery works best if some tissue is undamaged.

"Ideally, you want (the emphysema) bad in patches and good in patches and then you take away the bad bits," Geddes said.

The surgery was tried — disastrously — in the 1950s, then resumed in the last decade after advances in postoperative care and development of sealants for air leaks improved survival after surgery, said Dr. Mark Lavietes, director of the pulmonary function lab at the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey in Newark.

The British study appeared in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The surgery was performed on 23 patients, while a comparison group of 24 got standard medical care: a smoking-cessation program, several types of medication, vaccinations to prevent a dangerous pneumonia or flu infection, physical and occupational therapy, and supplemental oxygen.

Various tests of patients' lung function and sense of well-being found the surgical patients, on average, did better than the medical care group on several measures for three months to a year.

When each patient's original scores were compared with their scores at three, six and 12 months, the surgical group had big improvements in several key tests of lung function, while the medical group declined steadily.

Altogether, five patients who had the surgery — and three who underwent the standard regimen — died during the study. Also, five patients who had the surgery didn't benefit.

Lavietes, who was not involved in the study, noted that improvements in how well the patients' lungs got oxygen into their blood declined over time — while the measure improving most was the subjective one, how well patients felt and could perform daily activities. He said that could be a placebo effect.

However, Geddes said that doesn't mean the surgery isn't worthwhile.

"If they are actually doing more and feeling happier, whatever way it came about, that's what we wanted," he said.

A much larger study with 2,500 patients is under way. The lead researcher, Dr. Gail Weinmann of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, expects results by 2004.

Researchers splice pig cells with nerves

By JOSEPH B. VERRENGIA
AP Science Writer

Scientists have successfully spliced pig cells into the injured spines of paralyzed mice and restored some nerve impulses.

In an additional twist, the pig cells were bioengineered with a human protein that helped to prevent the immune systems of the mice from rejecting the foreign tissue.

The study, conducted at Yale, provides the latest evidence yet that pigs may provide the most promising new source of cells and organs for transplant into humans.

Researchers said the experiment, published in the September issue of Nature Biotechnology, is also another step toward repairing spinal cord injuries.

"Though unthinkable only a decade or two ago, it now appears that reparative treatment for spinal cord injury may be within reach," said Lars Olson of the Karolinska Institute in Sweden, who reviewed the Yale experiment.

Researchers said the experiment shows how transplantation of cells and organs across species lines, known as xenografting, may prolong patients' lives and improve their health, at least until a human transplant became available.

Other researchers were surprised that the bioengineered pig cells were so readily compatible with the nervous systems of the mice.

Restoring nerve function with cell transplants is just one promising area, they said. As the immunological barriers are lowered, pigs also may provide humans with hearts, lungs, kidneys and livers.

Earlier this month, research groups in the United States, Japan and Scotland announced they had successfully cloned pigs. But it may take several generations of laboratory-bred pigs over many years to weed out the genes that trigger immune-system rejection.

In the experiment, Yale researchers severed the spinal cords of mice. Then they implanted cells derived from the snouts of pigs. The pig cells were engineered to express a protein that suppresses the immune system's rejection for foreign tissue.

The pig cells were two kinds of nerve fiber-ensheathing cells — olfactory ensheathing cells, or OECs, and Schwann cells.

The researchers reported the pig cells served as a bridge across the mice's damaged spines, prompting new nerve connections and some regrowth of the myelin sheath that insulates nerves.

American Academy of Pediatrics wants feds to adopt uniform testing standards

CHICAGO (AP) — All newborns in Maine, but not neighboring New Hampshire, are routinely tested for a sometimes fatal metabolic disease called MCAD. In Colorado, they're tested for sickle cell disease, but not across the state line in Utah.

Concerned by such inconsistencies, the American Academy of Pediatrics wants the federal government to adopt uniform testing standards for the 4 million infants born nationwide each year.

The academy urges the move in a supplemental report published in a recent issue of its journal, Pediatrics, summarizing recommendations of a task force that met in May 1999 at the request of the federal Health Resources and Services Administration.

Health Resources and other agencies will use the report in working with states to "try to produce some national agreement on what tests should be developed or be part of a core set of tests that at a minimum states should test for," said Dr. Peter van Dyck, director of HRSA's Maternal and Child Health Bureau.

Tests are available for about 30 inherited diseases, but few states require newborn screening for them all.

The report does not specify which or how many diseases should be included.

All states have mandatory newborn screening for phenylketonuria (PKU) and hypothyroidism, which can cause retardation if untreated. Most also routinely test for galactosemia, a rare inherited disorder in which the body can't metabolize sugar. Forty-one routinely test for sickle-cell disease, an inheritable blood disorder that occurs primarily in blacks.

The March of Dimes believes tests for these four diseases are among eight that should be mandatory for all newborns, spokeswoman Michele Kling said. The other four are congenital adrenal hyperplasia, a set of inherited disorders involving the synthesis of hormones; biotinidase deficiency, involving a crucial enzyme; maple syrup urine disease, a rare inborn metabolic disorder, and homocystinuria, another rare enzyme deficiency.

Cultural values and economics are among reasons for the testing disparity, the task force said.

States that don't have mandatory sickle-cell tests for newborns argue that they don't have enough blacks to justify the cost or effort, but in many cases they test for diseases that are even more rare, said Dr. Edward McCabe, co-chair of a task force that prepared the report and physician-in-chief at UCLA's Mattel Children's Hospital.

Robert Burke, whose son, Bryce, faces a lifetime of medical bills that already have surpassed half a million dollars, says that economically, uniform testing "is a no-brainer."

The Fort Worth, Texas, boy was born in 1996, seemingly healthy until he fell into a coma at 19 months. Bryce eventually was diagnosed with MCAD, an inherited enzyme deficiency disease that is easily treated with diet if detected early, but can otherwise cause severe retardation or death. It was too late for Bryce, now 4, who can't walk, talk or feed himself.

MCAD occurs in as many as 1 in 10,000 births and is about as common as PKU, said McCabe. But only four states routinely test all newborns for MCAD. Texas does not.

Testing for a single disease like PKU involves taking a drop of blood from a newborn's heel and costs $1 or less, McCabe said. With technology called tandem mass spectrometry, the same blood drop also can be used to test for MCAD and more than 20 other diseases at a total cost of about $25, he said.

Burke, 41, worries that without uniform standards, the same thing that happened to his son will affect other families.

"Somebody out there today has a child being born and they're sitting there holding their son or daughter and thinking it's a miracle, so thankful that they have a healthy child, when what they really have is a time bomb waiting to go off," Burke said. "Somebody should have told them ... there's a way to defuse it."

Parents should know basics of childhood eye care

HOUSTON — It is never too soon for parents to learn the basics of childhood eye care.

"Almost all newborns will experience some drifting or misalignment of the eyes," said Dr. Kathryn Brady-McCreery, a pediatric ophthalmologist at Texas Children's Hospital in Houston. "But by the time an infant reaches three months, he or she should be able to fix on a parent's face with both eyes aligned straight ahead and follow the parents' movement."

"If the baby cannot do this, there might be a visual problem or ocular misalignment, which can include 'lazy eye,' strabismus (a child's eyes turn in, out, up or down) or amblyopia. A pediatric ophthalmologist should be consulted right away."

Children go through a period of visual maturation, which begins at birth and is completed at 7 or 8 years of age. Any disruption in this process, such as ocular misalignment, can result in decreased vision in one eye, known as amblyopia. Treatment of this condition is most effective when the child is young and may consist of an eye patch, glasses or eye-muscle surgery.

As the child prepares to enter school, parents should schedule a routine eye exam prior to entering pre-kindergarten, usually when a child reaches four years of age.

Brady-McCreery suggested that parents explain to their child that the exam is not painful, but the doctor will use special eye drops to help the doctor see the eyes better. The visit usually takes up to two hours. Vision can be assessed using toys, a picture chart or an alphabet chart. The eyes are checked for misalignment, and the pupils are dilated. Dilation of the pupils allows the physician to examine the retina and determine if there is a need for glasses.

"It's important for parents to catch any drifting or misalignment of the eyes after their child reaches three months," said Brady-McCreery, also assistant professor of ophthalmology at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston. "Early intervention can preserve the child's eyesight and may prevent any additional visual impairments in the future."

Words of Prophecy as received in Israel by Hattie August 23-25, 2000

"I heard a voice say: 'You must wake up and tell your son to warn the people!'"

"You stand on the edge of Eternity! What you have done you have done, it is done Forever, no more time, no more time to Repent! This is eternity, there is no more time! Unless you have Repented before it is now too late!

But even at this late, last moment, I will help you if you only trust in Me."

"No Time to REPENT! NO TIME TO REPENT! I have given you time to repent and you did not repent! Now You stand on the edge of Eternity!"

"Oh! I heard that over and over, it was awful!"

"And then I saw—a Cemetery,—and the Dead in Christ shall arise first. And in that day some shall arise to Everlasting Life and some shall arise to Everlasting Death!

Oh choose you this day whom you will serve, for the Devil and the World are making a bid for thee—"

FOOTBALL

GROOM — Groom kicked off the football season in a big way Friday night, rolling past Higgins 40-0.

Groom quarterback Grant Weinheimer threw three touchdown passes, two going to Clay Ritter covering 6 and 41 yards. His other TD aerial, a 22-yard completion, went to Hugh Weinheimer.

Dwayne Gray scored on a 9-yard run and he also caught a 35-yard TD pass from Ritter. Garrett Britten threw to Doug Fields for a 2-yard scoring strike and Britten also scored when he returned a fumble 10 yards to the end zone.

Grant Weinheimer was deadly-accurate with his passes, completing 6 of 7 attempts for 111 yards. Gray and Ritter each caught two passes for 62 and 49 yards, respectively.

The six-man contest was halted at halftime because of the 45-point rule.

MIAMI (AP) — Even without Dan Marino, the Miami Dolphins had the better quarterback Sunday. They also had the better running game and better defense.

Jay Fiedler threw for 134 yards and Lamar Smith ran for 145 in their Dolphins debuts, and Miami forced six turnovers to beat the Seattle Seahawks 23-0 Sunday.

The opener was Miami's first without Marino since 1983, and he was hardly missed. While Fiedler went 15-for-24 with no turnovers, Seattle counterpart Jon Kitna threw four interceptions and lost a fumble before being benched early in the third period.

Smith, a 29-year-old journeyman who has twice been released by NFL teams; carried 27 times and repeatedly took advantage of blocking by rookie tackle Todd Wade. Olindo Mare, who set an NFL record last year with 39 field goals, went 3-for-3, with kicks from 48, 25 and 30 yards.

Flashback

1990: Pampa opened the season with a 20-0 win over Levelland in high school football.

Three different players, Quincy Williams, Wayne Cavanaugh and Zach Thomas, scored touchdowns.

Defensively, Steve Sanders had two interceptions while Chris Archibald, Ron DeWitt and Thomas each had a fumble recovery.

Everson takes 1-stroke lead at Top O' Texas

PAMPA — Pampa product Phil Everson grabbed the second-round lead Sunday at the Top O' Texas Championship being played at the PCC course. Everson, who plays collegiately at the University of North Texas, shot a 2-under 69 yesterday to lead by one stroke going into the final 36 holes today.

Everson took the lead from Dan Nicolet, who had held first place with a 69 after Saturday's opening round. Everson had trailed Nicolet by three shots at the end of the first round.

Everson has a two-round total of 141, but three players are only one shot back at 142. College players Aaron Sletten (Cameron University), Bo Johnson (University of North Texas) and David Bolen (Texas Tech) are all tied for second place.

There are six players at 144 — defending champion Michael Pruitt of UNT, Nic Ware of Grayson County Junior College; Goran Da Silva of Oklahoma City University; Freddie Especueta of UNT; John Kaplan of Borger, and Casey Weiss of Amarillo.

Nicolet is at 145 along with Rex Hughes of Oklahoma City University and Shawn Creighton of Cameron University.

Everson, who won the tournament in 1998, had three birdies and only one bogey in Sunday's second round. He finished second behind Pruitt last year.

Early season contests filled with blowouts

DALLAS (AP) — Ah, the early season. Time for offenses and defenses to break in new plays and players, and for Big 12 teams to feast on weak opponents.

Most of them, that is. Colorado, Texas A&M and Kansas all took on schools with something to prove and were reminded why the rest of their conference brethren were playing teams they were supposed to beat.

The seven Big 12 teams that fulfilled expectations did so convincingly. They won by an average of 26.6 points or 32.6 if you take out Baylor and Iowa State, teams that are just happy to win.

Baylor snapped a six-game losing streak and a 16-game skid on the road by beating North Texas 20-7 on Thursday night. Iowa State beat Ohio 25-15 Saturday, and the Cyclones were a bit disappointed it was so close.

"There isn't a lot of hooting and hollering, jumping around and celebrating," said coach Dan McCartney, whose team had a chance to pull away in the fourth quarter, when Ohio had four turnovers. "It's a win."

Top-ranked Nebraska scored on its first four possessions in a 49-13 victory over San Jose State, No. 7

Kansas State won its 54th straight game against an unranked team by beating Louisiana Tech 54-10, and No. 20 Oklahoma ruined the coaching debut of its former offensive coordinator Gary Nord by beating Texas El-Paso 55-14.

Texas Tech's new offense looked great in a 38-16 victory over Utah State, and Missouri needed drives of just two plays, one play and three plays to start its 50-20 victory over Division I-AA Western Illinois.

Colorado and Texas A&M fell from the top 25 with their losses, ruining the conference's claim of having half its teams ranked.

Texas and Oklahoma State were off. Both have their openers Saturday, the No. 6 Longhorns taking on Louisiana-Lafayette at home and the Cowboys playing at Tulsa.

Pampa's Fatheree wins at Borger

BORGER — Pampa's Rebecca Fatheree finished first in the individual standings Saturday at the Borger Cross Country Meet.

Fatheree was clocked at 12:43.56 while Palo Duro's Blanca Ramirez placed second at 12:57.80.

Pampa was fourth in the Division Two standings with 93 points. Palo Duro had 44 points to take the team title.

Also for the Lady Harvesters, T'andra Holmes was seventh (13:28.35) and Kori Dunn was tenth (13:44.91).

White Deer's Suni Jo Petty was 20th (14:36.37) in the Division One girls' division.

Eagles roll past Cowboys

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The hardest hits Duce Staley took were a flip over his own bench after a long run and a celebratory chest-bump with Donovan McNabb.

"Duce didn't get high enough," McNabb, the Philadelphia quarterback, said of the celebration after his 3-yard TD run in the fourth quarter of a 41-14 victory at Dallas. The chest-bump knocked Staley to the ground, something the Cowboys had a hard time doing in the season opener Sunday.

Staley ran for 201 yards, becoming the Eagles' first 200-yard runner since Steve Van Buren set a team record with 205 in 1949. He was also the first person to run for that many yards against the Cowboys since 1984.

Philadelphia quickly set the tone with a game-opening outside kick, and went ahead to stay when McNabb threw a 1-yard touchdown to Jeff Thomason eight plays later.

Eagles coach Andy Reid said he decided to start his second season with an inside kick while watching film a month ago. When the Cowboys won the coin toss and chose to receive, Reid got his chance.

"Dallas has this image at Texas Stadium, but one advantage of Andy Reid is his aggressiveness. He's not afraid to try things," said Eagles owner Jeffrey Lurie.

Punt return

Pampa's Tristan Brown (5) takes off for a touchdown on a punt return in a junior varsity game last week against Dalhart. A penalty nullified the TD, but Pampa won the game 38-6.
