Bids—

Step up and meet two schools of thought in industry. Both thought they were smart. Now neither is sure. Both are wishing secretly they had played the other fellow's game.

It's all over Section 12 of President Roosevelt's blanket code. This declares that contracts entered into prior to June 16 should be adjusted to protect code signers against increased cost of fulfillment.

There are many solid business men in town at present who will tell you this provision will end in a lot of law suits. These are the ones who deliberately stumped new business until such time as a great majority might be wearing shiny new codes.

There is another group that says everything will work out all right. This fiction contrasted for everything in sight before the President decided to blanket all industry with an agreement to increase wages and shorten hours.

Now, paradoxically, those who have the business wish they had waited and those who turned it down wish they had proceeded as usual and trusted to Uncle Sam to adjust things.

Obviously it is going to cost more to deliver now than before. You can't pay workmen more to work less hours and make the same law bids of a month ago.

Chiselers— The group that may think it is holding the bag should take heart from what National Administrator Johnson told the printing people.

When they said they were ready to go on the 32-hour code he assured them he wanted them to make money. This meant they were to adjust prices accordingly.

"If chiselers under-cut you," said Johnson, "tell us, give us the names and we will deal with them in short order. We propose to create conditions under which money can be made and more employment created. There is only one way to do it."

This should suggest that the government's word to industry is about as follows:

"Don't come to us to find out how to run your business. Stick within the code and run it to make money. Then let us know when anybody gives you trouble. Our job is to take care of the lads who won't play ball. We have the set-up for that."

Plums— As soon as Postmaster General National Chairman Jim Farley trusted men to look out a list and had sent to a given Department for placement by the personnel lieutenant he has there for the purpose.

In the meantime down at the White House Col. Louis McHenry Howe is doing the same thing. Over at the Mayflower Hotel Frank Walker, executive secretary of the President's emergency council, is having his moments.

As it is the peculiarity of a plum seeker few of them put their eggs in one basket. Thus it has happened quite a few have got on two or more of these preferred lists. And some have clicked twice, what with the heat and the high-pressure humidity.

W. A. Sheets, cafe proprietor, was ordered to "hold 'em up" by a man with a drawn pistol as he stepped from the garage at his home late Sunday night. Sheets answered the command by drawing his own pistol and firing.

The hi-jacker fled with Sheets in pursuit. Another man showed up behind the garage and both the fleeing men ran into a clothesline, losing their hats, which bore names of Oklahoma City firms. A cigarette pack containing two cigarettes also was dropped.

City, County Officials In Line On Code

40 Hour Week Instituted For County Tractor Men; City Meets Hours

City and county officials, while not bound to conform to the NRA program, Monday said they would comply with the move.

Saturday county commissioners court placed tractor and grader corks on a forty hour a week basis and gave employment to two new men for three days each week.

The new employees will receive $10 each week for their three days of work. Their shifts will be so arranged as to leave two experienced men on duty with each man.

County Judge H. R. Debenport said that where possible other employees' hours would be made to conform to the NRA.

City Manager E. V. Spence said Monday most city employees had already had hours reduced in an effort to maintain employment for a full force.

Harrison And Rush Tests Go On Production

Joe Rush and others' No. 1 Dodge, which recently closed a gap between production in the west end of the Dodge-Dennan pool in Howard County, pumped 75 barrels daily late in the week.

M. D. Bryant and others' No. 1 Dennan, west offset to the Harrison well, filled 2,300 feet with oil after being shot with 480 quarts from 2,615 to 2,665 feet and had cleaned out to within 225 feet of the bottom.

The week before Rush and others' No. 1 Dodge filled 900 feet with oil in 50 minutes and 2,000 feet in 18 hours after being shot with 450 quarts from 2,642 to 2,834 feet of the total depth.

Sinclair-Prarie No. 7 Dodge, in section 11, block 30, had drilled to 2,475 feet in lime. A. J. Frasier and others' No. 1 Dr. G. T. Hall, in section 2, block 30, had reached 998 feet in red shale.

Ed S. Holmans, Inc., No. 1 Runney, Abrams & F-user, in section 3, block 32, township 2 south, T. & P. Ry. Co. survey, in the west extension to the Dora Roberts area, prepared to run and cement 6 5-8 inch casing before going on the pump.

Crosby Drilling Company's No. 1 Satterwhite & Leatherwood, in section 23, block 33, township 1 north, T. & P. Ry. Co. survey, one and a half miles north of Big Spring, was waiting for 10-inch casing, having had trouble with the 12 1-2 inch pipe in a cave.

Wayne Moffett won his individual match and carried his fight to the 20th hole before he and Frankie lost the low ball. Wayne carded a 76 to win and Earl had an 82.

Teagle Says He Will Work With Moffett

Reports Say John D. Rockefeller, Jr., May Move In Line

WASHINGTON (AP)—The oil industry is to find out by tonight just how Hugh Johnson, recovery administrator, thinks it should regulate production, increase pay, and shorten hours.

If he does propose a plan that would put James A. Moffett in as administrator of the oil industry, he can look for support promised by Walter C. Teagle, president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

Petroleum producers and refiners had been unable to agree on a code of fair competition under the recovery act.

Johnson took the job over, directing his assistants draw one. It is being presented tonight to the disputing industry.

One phase of oil's board differences today found Moffett mentioned as the man who would work either under Johnson or in the interior department under Secretary Ickes, to carry out the final plan.

Moffett, asserting his views were "not in accord" with those of New Jersey Standard officials, last week resigned, as vice-president of company so he could accept an appointment as a member committee that advised Johnson.

Then came reports that John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who usually lets his company's settle their own policies might move in line in the New Jersey Standard behind the stabilization program.

San Antonio Institution Which Bought Stolen Bonds In Statement

The bank in good faith, its officials said, bought the bonds which are claimed by a New York institution.

Claude V. Birkhead, president, said the bank was in good condition and that the conservator was asked for to protect interests of all depositors.

FARM COLONIES TO AID OUR CITY WORKERS
 One of the most interesting of all the experiments the Roosevelt administration is going to make will be its venture in "substantive farming" for industrial workers on the fringes of big cities.

A $25,000,000 fund is available for this work, and the first colonies will be established soon. What the stunt will amount to is simply this: Land will be obtained on the edge of a city and will be subdivided into small farms of one, two or three acres. A small home, perhaps to cost $2000, will be established on each plot. In the middle of the colony will be a store, a playground and social hall, and the like.

Occupants of these homes will be industrial workers from the city. Each family will have enough land to raise vegetables, chickens and a little fruit—and, possibly, to keep a cow. And the idea is that these workers will not only get the benefits of fresh air, open country life, and so on, but they will be far more independent of the uncertainties of industrial life than any workers can possibly be under ordinary conditions.

If the factory that employs one of these men shuts down, for instance, the man doesn't starve. He stays at home, raises his own food, keeps his expenses down to a very low minimum—and has, on the whole, a pretty fair sort of time. Furthermore, while he is working he has his own source of supply just the same. The arrival of the shorter work week gives him ample time to cultivate his garden and look after his place. He does not need to spend as much on his day-by-day expenses as he did formerly. His money goes farther. He is more secure in every way.

That, at any rate, is the theory, and it looks as if the $25,000,000 that will go into this experiment will be money very well spent.

To be sure, it may not work out as expected. It is quite possible, for example, that it will painfully narrow the market for the recalcitrant farmer. It may lead the worker into debt and give him more worries than he already has. There are half a dozen ways in which it may prove impractical.

But the experiment is very much worth making. It may be that a big part of the solution to the modern worker's problem is to be found in some such thing as this, and it is tremendously encouraging to know that Uncle Sam is going to spend money to find out about it.

Yankees Jump Back Into Scrap For Pennant By Beating Senators 7 To 2

WASHINGTON, (UP)—The New York Yankees bounced back into the fight for the American League lead Sunday by stopping the Senators, 7 to 2, behind the southpaw slants of Russ Van Atta, lone New York pitcher to win from Washington with any consistency so far.

Of the four games the Yankees have won from the league-leading Senators in thirteen starts this year, the team and hard-working Penn State College product has accounted for three and Herb Pennock the other.

Van Atta kept the eight hits scattered, granting no more than one an inning.

Nats' Errors Are Costly

Three costly Washington errors helped the Yanks break their rivals' winning streak and shorten their lead to two games after having dropped the first two battles of this big four-game series.

The Yankee bats, too came to life and piled up eleven hits off four Washington pitchers.

It was a blistering day of the type that wears down pitchers, and Manager Joe Cronin replaced Whitehill with Russell in the sixth. Seven hits had been collected off the southpaw, but the score was 2 to 2. Burke and Al Thomas followed Russell, with little success.

Joe Davis And Bill Savage Take City Championship In Doubles

Joe Davis and Bill Savage captured the city doubles crown Sunday after three hard fought sets against Felton Smith and Jimmy Jones. In spite of high winds, both teams played excellent tennis. Davis' overhead smash was the feature shot of the match.

Savage played erratically but was fairly consistent with his high lobs and angled volleys. Smith's service was a point winner for the losers, while Jones' volleying was a bright spot in his game.

Savage and Davis were pre-tournament favorites to cop the crown. They upheld the hope by losing only eight games out of the fifty played in the tournament. Smith and Jones fought for every point.

Savage and Davis had them match point three times before they succeeded in winning the match. Lobs far back on the court by Jones and Smith were responsible for a great many of their points. Only five times out of the match were Jones and Smith able to break the even functioning of the machine like tennis that Savage and Davis exhibited.

In the semi-final match against Preston Sligh and Fred Savage, Davis and B. Savage won points with startling consistency, losing only seven points out of two sets. Felton Smith and Jimmy Jones swept aside Bond Anderson and Earl Reagan in their semi-final match.

Joe Galbraith defeated Bond Anderson to advance into the semi-finals where he will play Joe Davis. The winner of this match will play in the final.

C. W. Corley and Bill Savage played a hard driving match with Savage possessing the advantage to enter the semi-final where he will play Felton Smith. Smith ousted Fred Savage from the tourney by a narrow margin. The Smith-Savage team will fight it out to see who will play the winner of the Galbraith-Davis match. Davis and Savage are hoped to capture their semi-final matches, with Davis favored to wear the singles crown his second year.

On an open flow proration test the well rated 22,944 barrels of oil daily with 11,000,000 cubic feet of gas and through 3-inch tubing rated 6,610 barrels of oil and 5,000,000 cubic feet of gas daily.

Pay was topped at 4.12 feet and drilling stopped at 4,234. Location is 1,325 feet from the south and west lines of section 20, township 1 south, range 38 east, along the east side of the north end of the pool.

No. 4-B McKinley was drilled with rotary in almost record time, being spudded June 16.

Autumn Expansion Program Planned By Public Library

The Public Library advocates a pay-your-dues week commencing immediately. Mrs. B. T. Cardwell, librarian, says that the library is planning a fall expansion that will include the ordering of many new books and that she would like all the dues paid, to aid in this program.

Summer reading is not greatly indulged in, in Big Spring, she and her assistants declare, if the library is a gauge. Many more books are taken out in the fall and winter. Therefore some of the new summer books have not been ordered; she is saving these for fall lists.

A few old books will also be on the fall list, books that have been demanded.

Mrs. Cardwell said that there are some books overdue. Those having these books are asked to return them this month if they care to use the library again.

Virginia Cushing, who has been visiting Marilyn Meyer at the home of Mrs. E. F. Wills, returned to her home at the Cushing Ranch today.

El Paso Lad Found By Policeman Going Walking In Sleep

Charles Morcos, 13-year-old El Paso youth, Friday night set a record for sleep walking in these parts.

Charles and a companion had retired for the night in a patch of weeds under the Gregg street viaduct, waiting for a westbound freight.

Policeman L. A. Coffey, returning from patrolling a dance north of town, picked up the lad in Government Heights.

Questions revealed the boy's mind to be absolutely blank. Finally Coffey was told the lad was "walking to El Paso."

More questions brought incoherent answers so the policeman thought it best to take the boy to the city hall for the night. Reaching the car there, Charles suddenly began to rouse.

Once awake, he remembered where he had gone to bed, who he was with, what his name was, and where he lived.

He had wandered across the Texas and Pacific yards fast asleep and had crossed the highway on his journey to the north part of town.

O'Connell Is Released As $40,000 Paid

Scion of Politically Powerful Albany, N. Y. Family Returns Home

ALBANY, N. Y. (UP)—John J. O'Connell, Jr., 24-year-old scion of the politically powerful O'Connell family of Albany, was released to an intermediary Sunday by kidnappers upon payment of $40,000 ransom.

Young O'Connell, who was kidnaped July 7, was uninjured but suffered from shock and nervous exhaustion.

An automobile carrying only young O'Connell and Louis Snyder, attorney, representing Manny Street, intermediary, who effected the youth's release, climbed the steep mountain road to the O'Connell camp at 4 a. m. Sunday and delivered him to his father, John J. (Bully), and his Uncle Dana. Ed another uncle, the county Democratic chairman, arrived at the camp later.

Kidnapers Alarmed

After holding him more than three weeks, in an attempt to collect $200,000 ransom, the kidnapers apparently became alarmed, possibly by the death sentence meted out in Missouri to Walter McGee, who kidnaped Mary McElroy, and hastened to restore the young Albany golfer and National Guard officer.

Near Monday the gang reduced the demand to $75,000 and when the family offered $40,000 and ignored other demands, the kidnapers finally agreed to accept less than one-sixth of their original demand.

In a limited statement given out for young O'Connell by one of his uncles, he was said to have had the impression that he was held in a comfortable New York City flat. He also believed, Dan O'Connell said, that four or five armed men snatched him, knocking him unconscious as he stepped from his motor car about 1:15 a. m. July 7. When he recovered consciousness he was in the flat.

"I was not tied or ill treated," he said. "They gave me plenty of good food and shaved me twice."

Greets Relatives

Morning fog veiled the Helderberg Mountains when the youth wearily slid out of Snyder's car into a group of County, State and New York City detectives. He smiled through a growth of beard and raised a hand in a wordless greeting to his father and uncle and District Attorney John T. Delaney. After a bath and a nap his mother greeted him. She had not been informed of the boy's release until daylight. Before dawn police cars sped away from the camp over the dusty roads to the valley in which lie the cities of Albany, Troy, Schenectady and Rensselaer. The legislature Monday night likely will hear a special message from Governor Lehman, advocating more strenuous punishment for kidnaping.

In spite of Lieutenant O'Connell's safe return, an air of uncertainty and mystery still shrouded his long absence. The uncle refused to let young John say more than a few words and gave only a sketch of the kidnaping. Their reticence was explained as necessary to the efforts of Delaney to find the kidnapers and, if possible, recover the ransom money, which was marked.

Newspaper men in Albany were notified by Dan at 8 o'clock that his nephew was home.

Drying Up Of 'Hot Oil' In Texas Gratifying To State Officials

By BOB JACKSON
 Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON—Members of the Texas Railroad Commission and other prominent Texans who are here to confer with administration leaders regarding the oil situation have expressed gratification of the reports of decreased production of illegal oil in Texas since the arrival of Federal agents in that state.

Colonel Ernest O. Thompson, of Amarillo, a member of the commission, said that since he had arrived here he had been informed that the situation in East Texas has improved greatly. The Federal agents are enforcing the Connally amendment which was put into effect by an executive order issued by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Senator Tom Connally of Texas, the author of the amendment prohibiting the interstate shipment of illegally produced oil, has been conferring with Secretary of the Interior Ickes and with L. E. Glavin, in charge of the Department of the Interior's agencies for enforcement.

In discussing the matter, Senator Connally said:

"The President in an executive order has placed in effect enforcement of the so-called 'hot-oil' amendment offered by myself and adopted by the Senate. Its enforcement has been vested in the Department of the Interior, and I am striving to secure hearty cooperation between the Federal and state authorities in bringing about effective and aggressive enforcement of its provisions. If Federal and state agencies can act harmoniously I believe that the oil situation will be greatly improved and that the laws of Texas will be adequately enforced."

"I have been greatly gratified at the distinct improvement in oil prices and in conditions in the oil fields of Texas since the enactment of the 'hot-oil' amendment, and hope its enforcement may be of still greater benefit to the producers and land owners of Texas."

Roosevelt Administration Just Now Getting Around To Huey Long

By RAYMOND CLAPPER
 United Press Staff Correspondent (Copyright, 1933, By United Press)

WASHINGTON (UP)—The Roosevelt administration is just now getting around to the case of Senator Huey P. Long, the Democratic "bad boy" of the senate.

The irrepressible Louisiana senator declared his independence several times in the last session. Sunday Jim Farley, postmaster general and chief patronage dispenser, has been sharpening his ax for some time. Now the resounding whacks are being heard.

Long came to Washington to find out where he stood. The first answer was appointment of one of his political movements, Paul Hanson, as Louisiana state manager for the Home Loan Corporation, a road job which carries control of many appointments with it.

Still Long wasn't sure he knew just where he stood. He and Farley went to the White House to see President Roosevelt. The next day another hostile appointment was announced. Edward Rigney, New Orleans attorney and one of Long's bitter political enemies, was appointed a member of the federal public works advisory committee for Louisiana. Long would much prefer to have a friendly man in that job.

How Senator Long will take this no one can predict. He has said that he stands ready to use his influence to bring about Louisiana's ratification of the repeal amendment whenever it is needed.

But he also reports that he has 2,000,000 subscribers in prospect for his contemplated personal weekly newspaper. It is to carry at its masthead the motto "Let the 'Cur Fly' and Senator Long is temporarily qualified to make good.

These patronage developments are widely accepted among politicians as notices that the Roosevelt administration will be decisive in moving down those who oppose it. Although Senator Long threw his support to Mr. Roosevelt in the Chicago nominating convention, he broke away in the emergency session of congress on several occasions. He opposed confirmation of William H. Woodin as secretary of treasury, conducted a brief filibuster against the emergency bank bill on the first day of the special session, and defied the administration on veteran economies.

Farley's indifference to Tammany Hall and his insistence that those who supported Mr. Roosevelt before he was nominated be given patronage preference have reflected the same determination to command absolute loyalty in the administration ranks.

That this loyalty is returned was demonstrated in the case of Democratic National Committee member Wolf of Minnesota. At the office of the Home Loan Board it was stated a few days ago that Z. H. Austin of Minneapolis had been selected to be Minnesota manager for the Home Owners Loan Corporation. He was described as a Democrat, but some Minnesota Democratic leaders said he had been selected through the influence of Walter H. Newton, former secretary of Herbert Hoover, who was appointed to the Home Loan Board by President Roosevelt at the request of the former president.

When National Committeeman Wolf rushed to Washington and protested to Wolf, the selection was withdrawn. Emery Swenson, supported by Wolf, was named instead.

Scientist Counting Birds' Feathers In Washington Museum

WASHINGTON, (UP)—A scientist in the national museum is counting the feathers of the principal bird species. No such scientific count of bird feathers has ever been made before.

Girls do the actual counting. They take small pluckers and pull out one feather at a time, placing them carefully in a glass jar.

Song sparrows, the scientist has found, have about 2,500 feathers, but the number varies from 50 to 300 feathers. In hot weather they lose an average of 600 feathers each.

There is no special object in mind. The scientist is just exploring in the hope that something important will be discovered. The experiment is carried out with private funds.

In the national museum are almost 14,000,000 catalogued separate objects. They range from almost invisible insects to fossils of huge prehistoric animals. From primitive charred rocks taken from the caves of earliest men to the Lindbergh airplane, the "Spirit of St. Louis."

Col. Lindbergh has a strong sentimental attachment for the plane in which he flew from New York to Paris. Recently during a visit to Washington he sent to the museum and asked to see the plane.

He climbed a ladder and looked inside the tiny cabin in which he sat through the long uncertain hours he was alone over the Atlantic on his flight to fame and fortune.

Climbing down he asked museum officials if they would like some other relics.

A few days later they received a box containing the flying toga he wore on the historic flight.

The Chicago Century of Progress exposition tried to get the plane for exhibition at the fair. National museum officials felt that in justice to Washington visitors it should be kept here. The Chicago group then approached Lindbergh, who refused to consent to moving the plane.

Fred Keating is visiting his parents in Madison, Wis. He plans to visit a Century of Progress at Chicago enroute home.

ADVERTISEMENTS

Make The Pennies Bigger

WHEN James Buchanan was President and tall beaver hats were in vogue; when gentlemen wore broad cavats and ladies wore hoop skirts, the pennies they tossed to children were as big as quarters. But the cart-wheel coppers your grandfather got for keeping his lace collar clean were not as big in buying power as the pennies of today.

A penny then might buy a pastry, or ten of them take one to the Fair, but your great-aunt and great-uncle couldn't have gone to a movie at any price.

Sixty years ago the ladies could go shopping for dry goods and buy silks that would make you green with envy, linens that were linens and broadcloths that beggar description. But what their favorite store did not have they usually got along without.

You can pick up your daily newspaper and in fifteen minutes you can know what the different shops are offering in fabrics, patterns, varieties and qualities that great-grandmother never dreamed could be gathered together under any conditions.

Times have changed, and so have merchandise and business methods. One of the influences that has helped to bring about so much of change, that has helped to multiply opportunities and increase the spending uses of our pennies is advertising.

Every merchant, every manufacturer knows that advertising materially reduces selling costs by increasing the demand for and distribution of the products of hundreds of thousands of mills. Indeed, many of the things we count today as necessities or simple luxuries could not be made and sold at their reasonable prices except as advertising has created a broad market for them, making millions of sales at little prices and little profits.

CHAPTER 20

Mary went. At sight of her, Willie gasped. "Child! you look really ill. Has it hit you so hard as that? I'd like to tell Dick what I think of him!"

"That wouldn't help," Mary said soberly. "I'll get over it sometime. That is, I hope I shall. He can't help not loving me."

"I wonder if he would know it if he did," Mary smiled wanly. "It would be a pity for him if he discovered it too late. But he may find it is Bonnie after all."

"How is it with her?" "I don't know, really. She is fascinated with him. I doubt if she could analyze her own emotions, herself."

"To shallow for analysis," thought Willie. "Her kind never analyzes any thing. They just skim the surface, take what they want, Mary is the kind that gives double for everything she takes."

They went downstairs where Ramon greeted Mary with warm friendliness. He wore an ink-daubed smock and there was a smudge of India ink on his forehead where an ink finger had reached up to rumple his bright, disordered hair.

Willie smoothed it with her fingers, carelessly, as they commented on this and that; sitting on the arm of his chair.

Then the three of them prepared dinner. It seemed that everything in the Duchon household was done with co-operation. Ramon broiled the steaks, Mary prepared the combination salad, Willie arranged the table and made coffee. There were baked potatoes in the oven and pie in the refrigerator.

Willie explained her routine. "You see, we can't have a third person smiling around here under foot all day. We never could get our work done. Chico, the maid, stays at home nights and gets here early to clean up downstairs. While we breakfast, late and leisurely, she does the upstairs rooms, then prepares and plans dinner in advance, and leaves us free with solitude and the afternoon and evening."

"We like getting our dinner together. It's a good chance to relax, so we are fresh for the evening."

"You work evenings, too? I thought only brokers' secretaries worked evenings," Mary laughed with the first real interest she had displayed in ten days.

"Why, we often work most of the night, don't we, darling?" Willie put her arm around her big aproned husband, absorbed with steak-broiling.

"Uh-hum. Then she thinks I should be up and at it early in the morning, too," he complained to Mary. But he didn't sound convincing. "You know, at home I was always drilled with such maxims as 'The early bird catch the worm,' and 'Early to bed, early to rise.' If dad and mother knew the hours we keep they would wonder how we manage to exist. Fortunately, they are out in Kansas on a ranch and our lax habits don't worry them."

"But you must work that way because you have discovered it is best," Mary suggested.

"Oh, sure. Their policy is just as good for them as mine is for me. Early mornings and when the body is rested is the time for physical work. But mental work requires an alert brain. And your brain doesn't waken when you first stir around. The longer you're awake, the keener it gets. Events and impressions stimulate it. And there is something psychic about the early, night hours that you can't deny, even if you can't explain them. They are favorable to creative work."

"I've always wondered why I seem to have better ideas and accomplish more when I work late at the office, even when I am tired from the long day. Often, it seems to me as if the morning hours are practically wasted. If it weren't for opening the mail and watching the market open, there would be no need to get to work before noon."

"You mean," Willie exclaimed, "Ramon and I have often advocated that office hours for the people who do the responsible, creative work should be arranged like our days. But then, they would have no evenings for recreation and that would never do. We do as we please. But on the whole, we do stick to business pretty faithfully. We don't expect to have to grind always, though. That is why it is easy to work hard now."

So the pleasant evening slipped away. They sat before the fire after dinner and sipped coffee. Willie wisely evaded further discussion of Dick. She guessed that Mary needed to forget him as much as possible. No doubt she had lived with only her work and her grief, day after day. So Mary had.

She went upstairs early, leaving her hosts to their "psychic hours." The little guest room was a welcome change from the room shared with Bonnie and her misery.

It was quaintly furnished in maple, early American period, with a single four poster, chest of drawers, leatherback chairs, flowered chintz curtains and coverlets, hooked rug, a framed sample and two aquatints of old English scenes.

Its charm and peace enveloped Mary, like balm of healing herbs. She slept well. Chico served her a delicious breakfast in the strange morning stillness of the big studio room and she walked the short distance to L-station through the crisp air, feeling as if she had a pleasant vacation from depressing duties and surroundings.

One of the most difficult things she had to endure these trying days was to lie in her bed, with torturing wakefulness and conscious that Dick's car was parked in the street below—that Bonnie was in his arms, that his lips were kissing Bonnie's now. In spite of her knowledge, too, that he was unfaithful to her memory, that he wounded her pride by flaunting his devotion of her before her own family—she loved him.

All efforts to forget, self-involvement, trying to remind herself that he was unworthy of her—were in vain. For one thing, she was grateful. Dick never came into the house when she was about. Just once, when she had retired, she heard his voice downstairs. All the agony of many days leaped back to her with increased force. Every sound of his deep, vibrant voice reverberated through her body. She wondered if Bonnie ever could know such a love for any man. She doubted it. In a way, she rather hoped that she wouldn't. If love was destined for such cruel suffering as hers, better never to experience it.

In less than a month, however, from the time that Bonnie displayed to work in New York, she displayed a handsome diamond ring on the third finger of her left hand.

It cost Mary every ounce of the generous love she bore for Bonnie, to wish her joy and good fortune. Her last hope was gone. No longer could she even hope that Dick might return to her. He had done for Bonnie what he had refused to let himself do for her—he had bound himself to an engagement before he accomplished his ambition. Moreover he had invested a considerable amount from his previous bank account in the ring which Bonnie wore.

Bonnie made a pretense of regret for Mary by saying "I'm sorry, kid, that it couldn't be you that Dick wanted," almost sure, at the same time, that she was turning the knife in the wound for Mary. She was more heartless than she knew, having no vulnerable heart of her own.

"Why should you be sorry for that?" Mary did a little pretending on her own part. She tried to appear indifferent, yet interested as she should be. "If you and Dick are in love and happy, there is no thing for which to be sorry. Love seeks its own," doesn't it?"

Bonnie demurred. "I suppose that's the answer. We're both crazy about each other."

"Are you—planning to be married soon?"

"We might—We don't know. I certainly don't intend to pinch and slave to save money. He will just have to dig in and get more, as other men do."

Mary was frightened at her callousness, anxious for Dick's future.

"But, honey, they all had to have a start. Dick's whole future depends upon his widow now."

"Well, don't lecture me. That's our affair, how we want to manage his money."

"Of course, dear. I only want you both to be happy, and so much depends upon your start."

She did honestly want them to be happy. If Dick had decided that he would find more happiness with Bonnie than with her, she was a glad that he could have her little sister. She had no fear for Bonnie, in Dick's care, despite the caustic remarks of others.

But Mary loved Dick so much that she wanted his happiness above everything, even though it broke her heart to give him to the girl he wanted more than he wanted her.

It would be something to see him—sometimes, she tried to console herself. Still, seeing him as Bonnie's husband—could she bear that? Blood might be stronger than water. But it was more than that—it was her love for Dick.

Under The Dome At Austin

By GORDON K. SHEARER

AUSTIN, (UP)—Northern Mexico with its cool mountain country and other attractions has come to be a popular summer resort for Texas officials and others who toil under the capitol dome.

Nearly every prominent state official has at some time or another been a visitor at Horseshall Falls on the huge ranch leased by Frank Gibler, former Houston newspaper man and political enthusiast.

Former Governor Dan Moody, Attorney General James V. Allred and many others drop in on Gibler for hunting at intervals, and practically all the Austin correspondents have been there this summer.

Allred was there just before leaving for the Washington oil conference. He was out for bear. Instead he got into poison ivy and hurried back to Austin. He will be graced to learn he left just a few days too soon. There is now salt-drying on a large frame at Gibler's hacienda the very brown bear Allred was pursuing.

Former Governor Dan Moody says that Former Governor James E. Ferguson is all wrong about him being in Washington to block the Ferguson administration.

"I was there on business," said Moody. "The only ones I talked about Ferguson to were those who asked."

"A great many inquiries were made," added Moody with twinkling blue eyes. "In answer, I said about him just what I have said in many Texas speeches."

Former Governor Moody will return to Washington the end of this week. He said the trip would be purely one of professional business and would have no political connection.

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1) seems to be the man of the hour... about him are in order wherever the highball or the teacup is lifted locally. Here's one that demonstrates his impulsive nature, and also explains why he's in a new and more private office down at NRA headquarters. The Industrial Administrator was seated at his desk in the office he had originally in the big Department of Commerce Building. It wasn't such a good office because it was a by-way to others on both sides. He was talking policy earnestly to an assistant. Suddenly, within the space of half a minute, about six persons passed nonchalantly through the office. Johnson brought his feet off the desk and banged it with his first simultaneously. "What's this?" he roared. "A big parade? Yesterday I was talking to one of the biggest men in the country here and a messenger came leaping through with an ash can over his shoulder. And I'll be there was a dead cat in it!"

Dollars—Theoretically speculation in foreign exchange is forbidden in this country. Actually there is plenty of it. For one thing exporters are shipping merchandise abroad and leaving the money they receive over there in pounds or francs or what have you. Stock market traders are working another gag to get around the restrictions. They buy stocks here, sell them again in London and leave the proceeds over there. This sounds like that terrible menace, a flight of capital. Federal Reserve if it doesn't reach serious proportions, helps keep the dollar down in terms of foreign currencies. And that's just what we want right now. So the people who take so much trouble to evade Treasury regulations are playing squarely into Uncle Sam's hands, to his satisfaction.

Garbage

The City of New York is in contempt of the Supreme Court of the United States. Several years ago New Jersey complained that New York City garbage was ruining her beaches. The Supreme Court agreed and ordered that the city must arrange to have all its refuse incinerated not later than July first, 1933. So far nothing has happened. It's standing joke among coast pilots that navigation to New York is easy. You just cruise north or south until you run into a collection of orange skins and empty bottles. Then make a right-angle turn and there you are. The Supreme Court has other things to think about besides New York garbage. But some New Jersey lawyers think it would be a lot of fun to prod the Court and see what happens. (Copyright McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

Sport-Lines

Late Saturday afternoon we received a very interesting note from Dr. J. R. Dillard, now of San Antonio. Dr. Dillard is a very reliable source of information and from past experience he should know the tricks of golfing. The Doctor tried to protect "Red" McMahon by saying he had been associated with one of the greatest "foot masher" artists in the world. He further stated that if we didn't believe Ray had learned from the best "foot masher" artist in the world, to ask Paige Benbow, who is also well acquainted with the "expert."

NEW YORK

By James McNeill Banks—The Glass Act's teeth are beginning to bite the New York banks. They have been ordered to prepare detailed reports of their affiliates for submission to the Federal Reserve Board at Washington. An affiliate is defined as any company in which they owned a majority of the stock actually voted at the last election of directors. Also they have to report on companies in which a controlling interest is held by their affiliates under this definition. It would take a couple of Einstein's to figure these things out for some of the larger banks or private bankers. And they have been ordered to do it three times a year. Hence a bull market for headache remedies. Nobody knows exactly what the Reserve Board is going to do with all this information. But local bankers are sighing and expecting the worst. Every member bank in the country has to do the same thing. Even companies which are controlled by the majority stockholders of the bank, not by the bank itself, must be reported. New York experts say this may mean infinite complications in small cities where the local banker is also the local department store, hardware and hay and grain merchant. Still another report is required of all directors in Federal Reserve member banks. They will be obliged to submit complete lists of their security holdings three times a year. They will be living like gold fish so far as the Reserve Board is concerned. The whole thing brings home the reality of the Glass Act to the banks. They feel like Huckleberry Finn when he was sent to school. They are mighty sorry for themselves but you don't hear any talk of rebellion now.

Devaluation

All kinds of rumors about dollar devaluation have been floating around in inner circles lately. The best sources say there is nothing to them yet. The hope is that devaluation will be held in reserve against a serious business recession or to help out government financing by broadening the gold base. Professor Warren, who favors devaluation, seems to have gained an edge on Professor Rogers, the credit expansionist. Recent local visitors to Washington report that administration conservatives are getting over their fear of devaluation and credit Warren with the missionary work which brought

Big Jim' Unable To Attend Coaching School

COLORADO—"Big Jim" Cantrell, mentor of the Wolves, stated Tuesday afternoon that his plans would not permit him attending annual school of coaching to open at Texas Tech, Lubbock next Monday. The Wolf mentor, however, will be busy with last minute plans for marshaling a potential Class A grid machine with opening of school in September, hopeful that Colorado will send a much stronger machine into the district than last year. Several men who starred on the Wolf squad during the season of 1932-33 are to be back, while as many others, some of them among the best men Colorado high has claimed in several years, will be absent, due to graduation last Spring. With the promising "timber" to be available through recruits and the return of several regulars, Cantrell expects to formulate an eleven calculated to bring additional credit to Colorado's athletic record. Just where and how he expects to make improvement over last year's defects, the big fellow has nothing to offer. Silence that dominated Cantrell in other pre-season days, continues to dominate him now. Colorado fans will await developments with much interest. It is probable that the Wolves will be rounded up and given work-out tests before formal opening of school. This, however, remains to be confirmed or denied by the coach.

Mattern Back In New York

Thousands At Airport To Greet Young Texas Flier NEW YORK—Jimmy Mattern, smiling broadly as when he soared away June 3 to fly around the world, completed the circuit Sunday, but his hopes of setting a solo record lay dashed with the wreckage of his plane in the Siberian wilds. The young Texan, who had been lent a ship to finish the journey after a Soviet pilot carried him from Anadir to Nong, Alaska, landed at Floyd Bennett Field at 3:45 p. m. (Eastern Standard Time). He had flown from Toronto, Ont., in 4 hours, 15 minutes. "Hello, everybody!" he shouted as he climbed from the cockpit. A crowd estimated by airport officials at between 5,000 and 8,000 persons gave a prolonged cheer. Twenty motorcycle policemen surrounded the red and silver plane. Mattern, wearing a pair of big Russian boots, limped as he walked to the administration building to be greeted by friends. He had injured his leg when his ship crashed in the wastelands of northern Siberia on June 14. It was not until July 7 that he reached the little trading post of Anadir, and informed the world, which had given him up for dead, that he was safe. Paul Codos and Maurice Rossi, who have been awaiting favorable weather for a projected nonstop flight to France, rushed to Mattern's side. Representatives of Mayor John P. O'Brien expressed gratification that he had returned safely. John H. McCooney, Brooklyn Democratic leader, also was on hand to greet the flier. "I'm glad to see you back and looking so well after a trip by easy stages from Terrace, B. C. Others in the party, which was financed by Irving Friendman, Brooklyn brewer, were Thomas Abby, Fred Fetterman, and Harold Person. Mattern, whose world journey
