NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS: The National Whirligig

WASHINGTON By Paul Mallon

DEBTS—They treated Mr. Hoover rougher than you have heard in these recent debt conferences at the White House.

Treasury Secretary Mills well-connected in England told the congressmen confidentially he thought England would default.

Garner is the power behind the scenes in this new Congressional debt attitude. He is a smart reader of the public mind.

Republicans generally are afraid to lie up against Garner on that issue. They realize he has both the popular and the parliamentary sides.

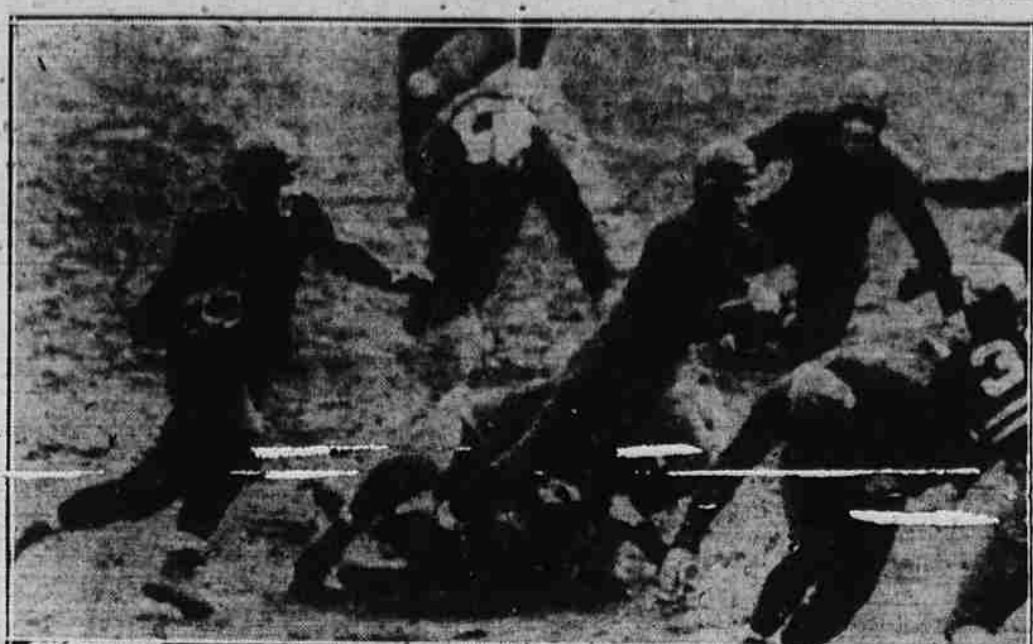

Not even political opponents of Governor Roosevelt have blamed him for refusing responsibility in the debt matter.

Mr. Hoover does not know it but his Secretary of State is not so strong for his debt policy.

Stimson, in buzzing with friends, has favored a strong international poker table conference in which we would use the debt as a device.

Support For Scout Work To Be Asked

Seven Local Troops Work Toward 10-Year Program Goal

One week from Tuesday men interested in the Boy Scout movement, nationally and locally, will conduct a campaign rallying citizens to support the program being sponsored in this area.

"In times like these food is an important item," said A. C. Williamson, area executive, "but food alone does not make good, substantial citizens. It would be pure folly to leave off the Boy Scout program of citizenship-training and character-building at this time."

Nationally the Boy Scout organization is in the midst of what it pleases to term the "ten year campaign." Briefly it is this: Enlist one out of every four boys in the United States in the Boy Scout work and hold him there for a period of not less than four years.

Seven Big Spring troops, now far short of that goal, are making slow but steady progress towards that objective.

For the past few years Boy Scout funds have been forth coming from the Community Chest. This year the scout movement will be forced to sustain its own expense.

County And City Officials Declare Practice Of Grocers Of Staying Open Sundays Will Be Stopped At Once

A move reported started among downtown grocers to remain open all day Sundays will be nipped in the bud, county and city officials said Tuesday.

Suburban stores, proponents of the movement, also will be forced to abandon the practice of remaining open during Sundays as has been done for several months, they declared.

County officials said Tuesday morning it was against the state law for groceries to remain open after 9 a. m. on Sunday and that the law would be enforced. Responsible city authorities gave notice the city would cooperate in any steps county officers took.

By prevailing on suburban stores and the "transient" merchants here for the fall business, took up the practice, and have remained open for business during the last few weeks. Other merchants, declaring it a move in self defense, have thrown open their doors on Sunday. Larger groceries, retailing, have threatened to remain open.

Officers confessed a dislike to prosecute violators of the Sunday law governing mercantile establishments, but were firm in saying that precautions would be taken to prevent any undue practices of remaining open on Sunday.

Teachers Of County Home From Meeting

Howard county teachers, returned from the annual meeting of the Texas State Teacher's Association here this year in Fort Worth, expressed themselves pleased with the program and with resolutions adopted by the association.

Lee Simmons, manager of the Texas prison system, related crime to lack of education. In what Mrs. Pauline Cantrell Brigham, county superintendent, considered one of the outstanding addresses of the entire program.

Less than ten per cent of the prisoners under his supervision have had any high school education, said Simmons. Approximately ninety per cent got no further than the fourth grade.

Prevention of crime is a matter for the home, he said. Parents must cease passing the responsibility to teachers and realize their own duty, he declared.

Simmons went on to describe an educational program now being fostered and financed by the Texas prison system. He told of how the program was instigated in 1929 with less than 200 students, only to be abandoned months later. Reorganized in 1930, more than 2200 prisoners now are taking part in the classes, he said.

The Red-Cross Of Poverty
AMERICAN newspapers have seldom carried a stranger or more pathetic story than the one they drew out of Potsville, Pa., recently.

This story was a little one-paragraph affair about the life and death of John Connor. Connor was born 69 years ago in the county of Potsville, Pa.

And the other day he died in the poorhouse and now he has been buried in the potter's field. Things like this, apparently, will happen now and then no matter how prosperous a nation may be or how thoughtfully it tries to take care of its unfortunates.

It tells about a man who had somehow, through cruel pressure of circumstance, become something less than a man. Life had him beaten before he even knew that he was in a fight.

as it ought to be. And there, in the last analysis, is the real tragedy of all poverty. Poverty brings ruin and suffering and hunger and deprivation—but those, after all, are things that can be endured. They are things some men have even heroically invited. What makes poverty a curse is that it destroys life itself. It reduces its victim to a machine for eating and sleeping; it is a thing that must always stir a thinking man to the profoundest indignation.

Using of a dreamer—a man of imagination. I learned that he had dreamed in his youth of breaking the biggest monte bank in Mexico. I learned that he had dreamed of finding the Lost Wigger Mine of the Big Bend, and had a wonderful story of his adventures in searching for it. Then, in the summer of 1925, I learned that he was dreaming of writing a book in a very realistic manner about a very real thing—his own life.

It was from the last dream that 'Vaquero' sprang, and that the world was given a picture of range cavaliers, gentlemen on horses, 'privileged to come it proud over all nesters, squatters, Kansas jayhawkers, and other such earth-clinging creatures.' Young told his story to Dobie, but occasionally he left out relevant. He refused to tell, for instance, what happened at the Mexican ranch-fort occupied by desperate murderers. The writers could learn only from George Sanders, that John Young rode up to the porch-hole through which his friend had just been killed and shot into it. It was Sanders who said 'John Young would charge hell with a bucket of water.'

A NATIVE TEXAN; WENT UP TRAIL: Young was born at Lockhart, Feb. 12, 1856, in a log cabin. Raised in Bee and Refugio counties, he went up the trail five times with Simpson, Jim Reed, Jim Hall, Goodnight and Clair. He was a Texas, but in his own words, his trail stretched to the Platte, circled around to Dodge City, pronged out across the Plains into the Rockies, meandered up and down the Nueces, Pecos and Devil's R. Rivers, lead into immense bonanzas that ranked the drifts and die-ups of the open range... ran into the Big Steel, into mustangs, rattlesnakes, barbed wire and lots of other things.

He had swum every river from the Rio Grande to the Platte, and once almost lost his life while crossing a herd on the Colorado in 1880. The river was on a rampage and 400 yards wide, when, in mid-stream, a drifting treetop brushed Young off his horse and sent him to the bottom. When he came up his horse was gone. He struck out for shore, but had drifted several hundred yards downstream before his friend, Gus Claire of Beville, rushed to him on horseback. As he passed by, Young caught the horse by the tail, but a swift eddy carried the horse and two men under a bluff where they could not land. They drifted downstream until the eddy changed, then swam back to the opposite side of the river. Young married Miss Lizzie Drake at Tilden, Nov. 28, 1883. She and seven children survive him.

CHAPTER XIII

There was no doubt that it was Eddie Harkness' coat. Mary ran investigating fingers under the collar, and found the small black tape, littered in red, with his initials, "E. J. H."

"Well," said Bowen flatly, "this shows me up for what I am—beautifully dumb. I thought sure that coat belonged to one of the reporters. Never entered my mind it could be—Boy, if Kane ever hears of this! Well, well, well! Obviously he was readjusting his ideas to fit this new development."

"Then—he did come after all," Mary stroked the coat with gentle fingers, as if it had been a human thing.

"Looks like it," Bowen agreed. "But that doesn't prove he did it, you know," he offered by way of comfort.

"How was there, Mary repeated daily. "Perhaps—Kane was right. Perhaps they're all—right, and I'm wrong."

"We—el, I'm not convinced! Bowen said stoutly.

"Really? Mary lifted grateful, hopeful eyes. Really, don't you think so?"

"Listen, what did Kane tell you?"

Mary detailed their conversation with a little bitterness as she could. "That's what I thought," Bowen commented. One look at the girl's dejected face set his tongue in motion in an effort to divert her mind.

"I'll tell you what the matter with Kane," he said. "He'd be a good man if he were anywhere else but in this district. He's a stuffed shirt, a boot-licker. He was a poor kid from shanty-town when he went on the force and when they promoted him and put him out here where you can't spit without hitting a millionaire, it went to his head. He's got the dollar sign in front of his eyes until he can't see anything else."

"Money talks with most people, but with Kane, it positively shouts. He's so afraid of losing the 'friendship' of some of these rich birds that wouldn't use him for a doorman, that he wouldn't cross them if they said black was white."

"I've always played a lone game, ever since I've been on this job. All Kane ever hands out is a line of bull. He'd have chased this guy to hell and gone, and strung him up by the thumbs to please Jupiter—in fact, he was all set to make a name for himself by capturing the murderer single-handed. Then the word came down on high: 'lay off'—and he lay right down at his masters' feet and wagged his tail. That's the kind of a guy he is."

"But there's still you and me, eh? How about it? If you say the word, we'll go right ahead and dig up what we can. When we've got enough to make a case, we'll put it before the District Attorney. He'll have to act.

"But—are you sure you want it? It might make things pretty messy for you at home, you know. With our boy-friend, and all. He'd rather have it shushed, I understand."

How much did he know? Mary wondered with a sinking heart how public her affairs had become.

She looked down at the coat over her arm. "Do you honestly think there's any use?"

"Do?" By the way, something's been tickling my mind ever since you mentioned this being your brother's coat. What was it he said there in the ambulance? 'Make him give me my coat! Wasn't that it? Look here, I'll bet a cookie that coat was a plant! No thief goes around leaving his overcoat, you know—it's not being done."

"That's how I came to pick it up in the first place. I was the last man upstairs that night, and coming down I saw this coat hanging on the stair rail in the upper hall. I knew I'd be seeing all the police reporters next day—and I took it along to turn over to the owner. None of them claimed it, though. Then I thought it must belong to some detective, but I'd wasted enough time on it, so I hung it up in my locker and left it there. Nothing in the pockets to identify it by."

He saw that she was not listening. Her mind was on her brother. He could see that even her faith was shaken. He stopped short.

Mary held up the coat. "What ought we to do with it? Take it there?" She motioned toward the police station.

"Take it home. It's yours. You'd only give Kane more cause to say 'I told you so.'"

"You've been awfully kind. I'll never forget it," Mary told him seriously. "Ooddy and good luck!"

"I'll let you know what turns up," he replied. "Keep your nerve! Remember it's all in a lifetime."

It came to him as he stood watching the shiny black bus carry her away, that he had just stripped himself of his last dollar in her behalf. He had not so much as mentioned the information he had to his paper, realizing that it was far too slim a probability to impress a hard-headed editor. What kind of a sap was he becoming anyhow?

Mr. George Bowen heaved something that was very like a sigh.

Mary, hugging the damp coat and staring out at the vivid green of the trees and hedges as they rolled along the road to the Point, gradually lost the optimism that Bowen's loquacious enthusiasm had roused in her. She was going home to the Jupiter house reluctantly, for the first time. How could she bear to face Mr. Jupiter again, knowing what he thought? She felt alienated from those who had been closest and dearest to her. They had shielded her, or tried to; but they had kept their real thoughts from her as if she were a child or an imbecile. It frightened her, and made her feel small and young and inexperienced.

She was almost tempted to relax and rest against that love of theirs, that plotted for her own good without consulting her wishes in the matter. But at the same time, something prodded her uncomfortably forward. It was not their business; it was hers, and Eddie's. Gratefully fought with angry resentment in her heart.

All this sensational publicity about the murder of Mrs. Jupiter and Eddie's death—no one called that murder, she noticed bitterly—of course it was unpleasant. No wonder the chills had crept up and down Emily Ann Ruyther's patriotic back! But which was more important—justice or a stiff-necked old woman's pride?

Bowling along in the big, shiny bus between exquisitely landscaped private parks, studded here and there with the vine-shrouded homes of the ultra rich, all that had just occurred in the village seemed unreal. George Bowen and his scheme seemed fantastic, common. Had she really been in that horrible place, eating impossible food, with a foul-smelling waiter and a hare-brained "crime reporter" for companions? Looking back at herself through the cold blue eyes of Mrs. Ruyther, she began to think she was losing her mind.

What on earth would Dirk say? She should have consulted him, but she began to feel like a woman who had just left school.

Well, it was past. If George Bowen rang up the house she would not even talk to him. No doubt his schemes were just an excuse to print Heaven-know-what about her! She shuddered at the thought of her own name and what it might contain.

It was Thursday and she was dining at the Ruythers. Well, she would do all she could to make it up to Dirk. The truth, dimly felt before, now revealed itself to her bit by bit, as on an unrolling scroll. Dirk's worried abstraction, Mrs. Ruyther's fluttering apologetic air, Mr. Ruyther's booming heartiness. There was something they were all ashamed of that they felt had to apologize for. It had all passed unnoticed, except as background. She loom up on the hill ahead. Just then Cornelia looked around, whether guiltily or not Mary couldn't decide.

"Oh, my dear!" she shrieked, "I didn't see you there! She popped up and came back, followed by the other girl, and sat down opposite."

"How's the murder coming along?" Cornelia seemed determined to bolt out the memory of her former tearfulness by being unusually vivacious. "Dirk's a beast. He just says it's all settled, and he won't tell me a thing more about it. How can a murder be settled if the murderer isn't in jail?"

Mary merely shrugged. So Dirk had seen Cornelia, had he? He hadn't mentioned it.

Cornelia's gaze rested curiously on the man's topcoat lying across Mary's lap.

"That's not Dirk's, is it? Two-timing him already, are you?"

"It's my brother's," Mary said.

Cornelia gasped. "Oh, my dear, I'd forgotten about your brother. You must forgive me. So sorry."

Mary's silence began to eat the edge off the other girl's gushing manner.

"How's Dirk? Seen his mother lately?" Cornelia asked at last.

"I don't know," Mary said.

"All right, I suppose," Mary answered matter-of-factly although she knew the question was meant to scratch. "Call me tomorrow and I'll report. I'm dining there tonight."

"Oh, Cornelia's eyes slipped away evasively. "Well, we'll be seeing you, then. We're coming, too. Ethel's honor, I guess. Nothing formal, you know—just the family."

Mary's face felt stiff as she smiled goodby. They were approaching the gates of the Tabor place. Cornelia and her satellite swished off the bus, Ethel casting a provocative glance at the bus-driver as she bounced down the step. It was wasted; he was wiping his eyes, and seemed unaware of her existence. Driving the bus along "Rotten Row" had made him impervious to flirtation; too many kittenish debs had thrown themselves at his good-looking Irish head from time to time.

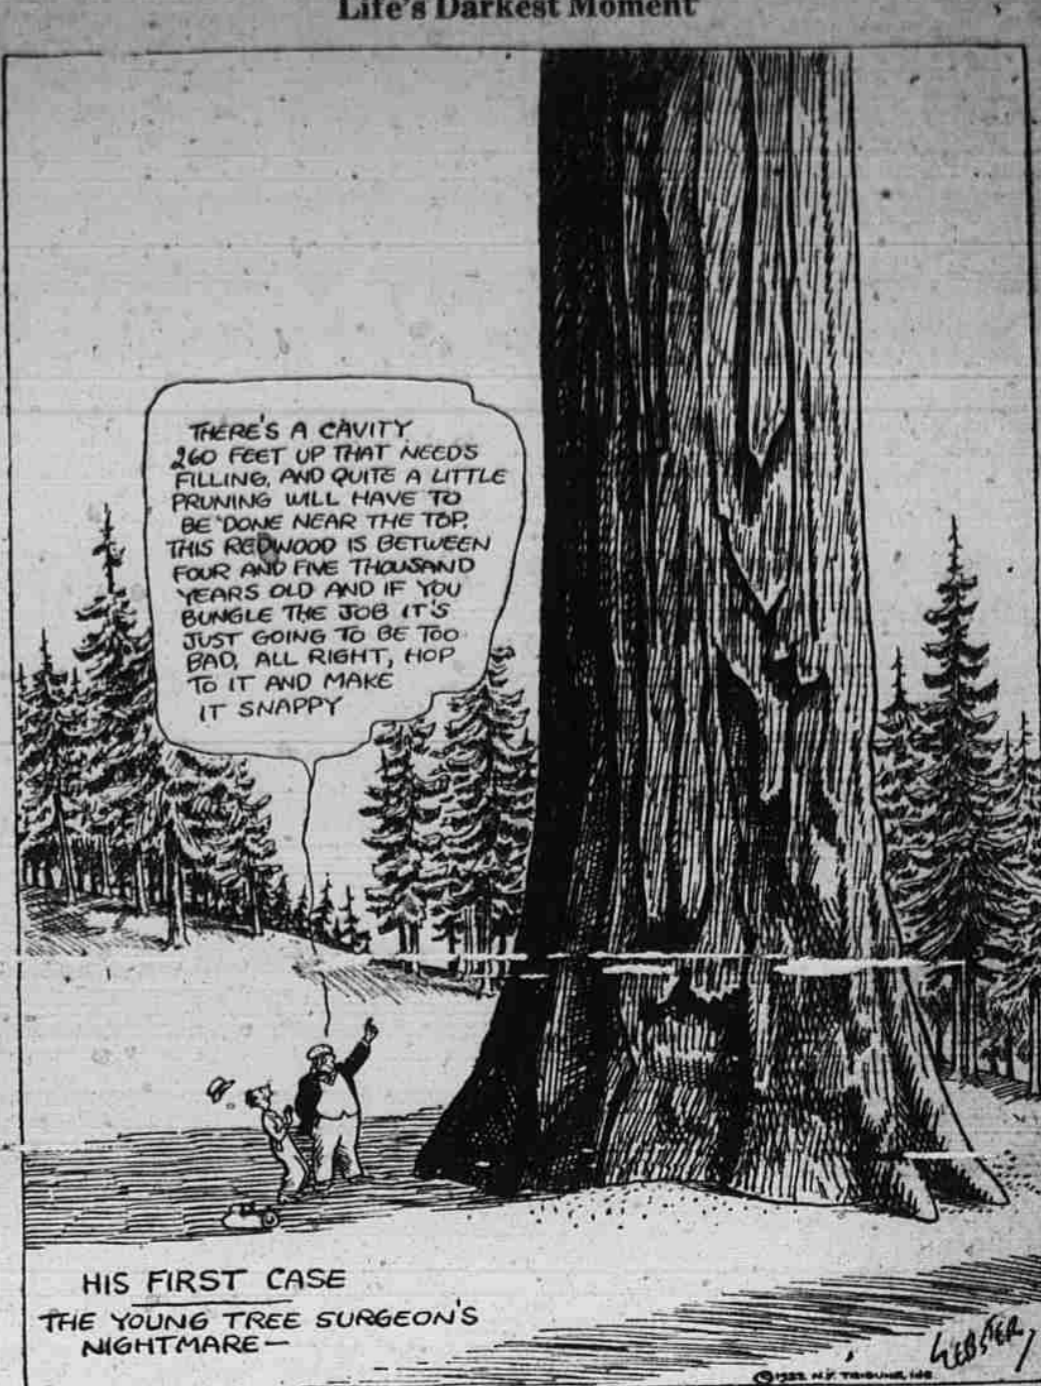

Mary seethed with jealousy as the bus ground on toward the Point, where the Jupiter mansion stood.

"Sorry I can't take you up to the ment of the President in their private confab.

There are many shrewd observers in Washington who think Congress will be obliged to come around to Mr. Hoover's position in the end. They say it may be six months or it may be a year but sooner or later we will have to negotiate with our debtors. They may have less propaganda and more facts then.

Our debt note to Britain was milder than the others. There is a reason. Our officials confidentially believe Britain has a much better proposition for revision than any of the other countries. Her interest rate is higher. She settled originally for more on the dollar.
 You will find from here on it that we shall treat the British with more consideration than the rest. That may prove to be a dangerous policy, but it is warranted by the facts.

NOTES—
 Make a mem. of it that Sumner Wells of Texas was an Assistant Secretary of State under Roosevelt. The best confidential information in official quarters is that he will pay when pressed except Austria and a couple of other smaller nations. Those who will default are the least. State Secretary Stimson really wrote those debt notes for the foreign powers in person. The ghost writer of notes for the Department, Moffatt, merely looked them over. Attachés of the department though Stimson did a forceful job.

NEW YORK WORK SHARING—
 By James McMullin
 More than six thousand firms of all sizes have so far officially joined the work-sharing movement throughout the country. Estimates indicate that perhaps double that number will participate before the closing out of the current campaign.

Especially good results have been obtained in the San Francisco, Houston and Atlanta districts. The Chicago, New England and Philadelphia districts are lagging. The oil industry is well represented among the committee workers who are helping to put the idea across. Apart from Walter Teagle—National Chairman—W. S. Parrish of Houston and K. R. Kingsbury of San Francisco are leading oil men who have been largely responsible for successful results in their districts. Benjamin Read, chairman of the Atlanta district, is associated with the Southern Bell Telephone.

One of the most important recent converts to work sharing is the Guaranty Trust company. The plan has been put into operation through a 4 per cent reduction for clerks and an 8 per cent reduction for officers. This saving will enable the bank to add about 200 employees to the payroll and to assure continued employment for several hundred more whose status had hitherto been in doubt because of the falling off of business. Nashville is the only city besides Minneapolis where the department stores have made an effort to apply the work sharing principle to date. The stores there have doubled the usual number of extra employees for the Christmas season by hiring each additional worker for three days a week.

RELIEF—
 A group of women in New York has been trying to help unemployed musicians by staging concerts with an orchestra consisting of men without other jobs. Conductors and soloists have donated their services.

LABOR—
 The increasing ascendancy of A. V. Whitney in Railway Brotherhood affairs is beginning to cause some uneasiness here. It is becoming apparent that Whitney's radicalism is not of the type that yields easily to persuasion. There is some pointed correspondence on record between him and the Share-the-Work committee.

TAXES—
 The financial district is not sooting at William Green's vigorous opposition to the sales tax. They figure here that Labor's powerful lobby usually concentrates on a few

Shoe Prints Point Toward State Penitentiary At McAlester

McALESTER, Okla. (AP)—Shoe prints found Tuesday at the scene of the axe slaying of Joe House and his wife yesterday furnished investigators a new clue.
 The prints were traced from the home several hundred feet in the general direction of the state penitentiary. Officers said shoes were issued certain convicts make similar tracks.

HOUSTON, (AP)—The defense in John Gregg's trial on charges of conspiring to misapply more than $250,000 of funds of the Merchants National bank of Houston introduced Dr. H. L. P. Kirham of Houston as chair witness in support of Gregg's plea of not guilty by reason of insanity.
 Dr. Kirham, formerly Gregg's family physician, said Gregg was suffering from Padgett's disease as early as last year. It was his opinion that Gregg "physically and mentally is a man who is through from a business standpoint."

Show Of Gas Reported In Borden Test

Tools Blown Up Hole By Pressure Found At 3,580 Feet

Reports from reliable sources Monday and Tuesday morning were that a gas show had been encountered in Westhedge Investment company's No. 1 Looney, wildcat test in southwestern Borden county.
 The report was that the gas had blown tools about 1,000 feet up the hole as drilling proceeded at depth of 3,580 feet.
 Much local interest has been shown in this test, due to its location north of the city in a section that long has attracted wildcaters. Previous reports had been that formations in the Looney test were running somewhat higher than in wildcats drilled several years ago in the general vicinity of the operation.

Mickey Mouse Notes

A promising staff of officers presided at the regular M.M.C. meeting Saturday. They were all pre-school age and conducted themselves on the stage in a very dignified manner.
 Chief Mickey's chair was occupied by Charles Ladd Smith, Chief Minnie was Naomi Ruth Snyder. The other officers were Juanita Smith, Rita Taylor, Jacqueline Perry and Patricia Frost.
 The flag was too big for the little Mice so Thomas Lee Watson, regular color bearer, was the only regular officer in place.
 Cubelle Howell gave a guitar number. Walter Moody as a black face, sang "O Susannah." Naomi Dayer and Mickey Moore gave a tap number.

Midland Folk Sing At Club Session Here

Rotarians Give Chamber Officials Luncheon Program Time

Tuesday's meeting of the Rotary club was turned over to Tom Ashley, president, and C. T. Watson, manager of the Big Spring Chamber of Commerce, for the various teams working in interest of the chamber to make their reports.
 Mmes. Clark, Douglas, Proctor and Miss Taylor of Midland supplied vocal music that was well rendered and enthusiastically received. The number "Did You Think to Pray," a trio, accompanied by Miss Taylor at the piano was especially pleasing.
 Theophilus Fitz, musical director of Midland, rendered a solo, "A Dream," by Bartlett, which was also a feature of the program. Mr. Fitz extended an invitation to all people of Big Spring to attend the musical program to be given at the Yucca Theatre in Midland Sunday, December 11, at which there will be a varied musical program rendered. He also stated that a group of singers from Midland would visit Big Spring Sunday, December 11, to render a like concert.

Following the musical feature of Tuesday's program, C. T. Watson called for a report of the committees, each captain making his report.
 President Bennett of the Rotary club announced that next Tuesday's meeting would be held in the evening at 7:30 at the Settles, to take the form of Ladies' Night, at which time Andy Anderson, district governor of Rotary, will be the principal speaker. The club voted not to meet Tuesday at noon.
 Program for the following week will be in charge of Paige Benbow and Joe Galbraith, Elmo Watson, program chairman announced.
