WASHINGTON.—At least a dozen senators will be leaving Congress when their terms expire next March. Most of them are elderly and of the type usually described as conservative or reactionary.

The liberal, progressive forces in politics have not lost anyone from the senate as a result of primary defeats or retirement. They stand to gain somewhat in strength with the elections.

Although the close of the primary season still shows no sign of a significant progressive revival in national politics, there is considerable evidence on which an argument might be based that voters have lost some of the apathy induced by prosperity.

The Democratic senators defeated in primaries were Furnifold McEndell Simmons of North Carolina, Joseph E. Ransdell of Louisiana and Cole Blease of South Carolina.

It so happens that all these men are in their sixties or seventies except Baird, who is only 59. It so happens that there is hardly an ounce of "progressivism" in the lot.

Age probably isn't a prime factor in driving them out of politics. Borah of Idaho, Norris of Nebraska, Walsh of Montana and other men in their sixties have all had their renominations.

But the victims were all set in their ways and they were the type of legislators who believe things are pretty fine as they are, and that it is better to leave most things unchanged.

The rough and tumble career of Governor Huey P. Long of Louisiana probably appealed to such restlessness as possessed the voters of his state.

often supported candidates for no apparent good reason except that the candidate knew how to give them a good show. Long, it appears, managed to convince the ordinary voters of his state that he was one of their own kind.

Bleuse, who has been licked by former Congressman James F. Byrnes, has also put on many shows in public life, not always edifying ones. But he wasn't punished for that. His constituents doubtless would have stood for his pro-lynching stand and his eccentricities.

The Phipps candidate for the Republican senatorial nomination was beaten in Colorado, suggesting that Phipps' own withdrawal was strategic.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

DAN RORIMER, temperamental young man of Hollywood, can't get along with the studio manager at Continental Pictures and tears up his contract as scenario writer and asks to be fired. But he isn't. Dan has become keenly interested in ANNE WINTER, a young girl from Tulsa, Okla., who is working as an extra girl. She has had stage experience, and she knows enough to warrant a screen test at Grand United studios.

Rorimer, former newspaper man from New York, lives with PAUL COLLIER, who writes a daily movie column for a string of newspapers. Anne lives with MONO MORRISON, and EVA HARLEY, two extra girls. Eva is rather bitter. She does not get enough work to make a living, and Dan suspects that there may be some sort of tragedy in her life.

GARRY SLOAN, famous Hollywood director, has shown some interest in Anne Winter, although hardly enough for her to warrant any high hopes. Dan does not care much for Sloan; he is an admirer, however, of MARTIN COLLINS, formerly of Continental, now with Amalgamated. Collins invites him to a housewarming at his home, and he brings Anne along.

There Dan meets a charming young actress named MARIS FARRELL, who takes a liking to him, and Anne meets and is annoyed by FRANK MAURY, a conceited character of the screen. Maury makes himself obnoxious to Maris and Anne, and it falls to Dan's lot to rescue them from his unwelcome attentions. Maris is curious about Anne. She seems interested in knowing whether she is a particular friend of Dan's.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XIX

Rorimer said, "Why, I hope so," and he wondered then if Anne possibly regarded him as something more than a friend and a companion to play around with. Anne was hard to figure that way; you never knew just where you stood. True she seemed to enjoy herself whenever he was with her, but that might mean much and it might mean nothing; Anne had never given him reason to think that it had any special significance. He grinned inwardly, remembering the night that he had kissed her and she had told him calmly that she hoped he would not do it again. That was Anne for you; always calm, always composed; knowing just what she was doing and where she was going.

He remembered now that he had last seen her in the patio, talking with a little gray-haired man. He hoped she was still there, felt a little uneasy, because Frank Maury had passed that way, and Maury was in no mood to be unpleasant. He heard Martin Collins's voice calling from the house, and Maris Farrell, beside him, clutched his arm.

"Martin says everyone's going swimming," she said, "Are you?"

Maris' head barely reached above his shoulder. He looked down at her and smiled and nodded emphatically.

"Absolutely. How about you?"

And Maris nodded, too.

Rorimer recollected something. "Did you find that green bathing suit, by the way?" he asked. "Because if you didn't, somebody's going to have to explain to Frank Maury."

Maris said that Maury probably wouldn't remember a word that had been said. "Anyway, I found it," she answered him.

She left him then, and went off to change her clothes, and Dan told her he would meet her in the pool, and he started toward the house in search of Anne. But he heard voices, and presently a crowd emerged from the house, led by Collins, who had a girl on either arm. And one of them, Rorimer saw, was Anne so he made for the men's dressing room and was among the first to get into a bathing suit.

He heard someone say in the dressing room that Maury was "sleeping it off," and another voice said, "Yes, Frank said he had been insulted and he wasn't coming in. Do you think we ought to drag him out and throw him in?" But Martin Collins quietly said it would be better if they let Maury alone.

The man next to Dan said in a low voice that that was a good idea. "It'll suit me fine," he told Dan, "if he doesn't wake up till I'm gone."

When Anne Winter emerged from the little building, Rorimer, dripping with water, was sitting on the edge of the pool, watching for her eager eyes. Gorgeous looking, Anne was, in a black bathing suit and white rubber helmet. He waved to her and she came over and stood beside him and asked him how the water was.

"Fine," he said. "Going in the deep end?"

Anne smiled and nodded, and he got up and took her by the hand and led her to the springboard.

"You first, Anne, and I'll race you to the other end. Okay?"

It was, Anne replied gaily, and he watched her walk confidently to the end of the board, poised for a moment and then, a slim and lovely figure, cleave the air with bewitching grace and disappeared beneath the water with a little splash. He followed and, swimming under water, took her hand and came up laughing happily.

"That was a great dive, Anne. You're good." And he added: "I like you in black, too."

Anne said, "Your taste is too fickle."

"Meaning just what?" he urged, swimming beside her. Something in the curtness of her speech led him to think that she might possibly be thinking of Maris Farrell. He found himself hoping eagerly that this was so, remembering an earlier reference Anne had made to Maris; she had said something about his not appearing to be perishing on the vine in Maris' company.

But Anne refused to elaborate, even after he had repeated his question, and he let her beat him to the end of the pool, where they stood up in the shallow water, and Anne scolded him mildly for not exerting himself to win.

"Masculine superiority of the worst sort," she termed it.

"What? Because I didn't break my neck to beat you? Life's too short, Anne."

"Because you showed so plainly that you weren't trying." He eyes flashed scornfully.

"Well," Dan said meekly, "can I square it if I try real hard this time?" and Anne assented.

So they retraced their course, and this time Dan won by more than a length. He said he hoped she was satisfied. "You made me work every inch of the way."

The sky was turning pale gray in the east as they drove back to Hollywood. Dan told her of what Maris Farrell had said. "Coming from her, I'd call it a real tribute," he said.

And he talked a good deal of Maris, hoping that Anne would say something that would enable him to feel that she was jealous; but there was nothing in her comment to indicate that she resented one bit the attention Maris had demanded of him.

He would have known a savage joy if she had resented it and had intimated as much. Then he could say the things that he wanted to so badly to tell her. But they were things that could not be spoken without some sort of encouragement; they were not easily said. The trouble with Anne Winter was, she was so difficult. Always, when he tried to steer their conversation into very serious channels, he reached a point sooner or later where she matter-of-factly manipulated it back again, or wrecked it on a shoal. It was a little maddening.

Rorimer had never known a girl like her. He sometimes suspected that her matter-of-factness was a shield beneath which she hid emotions as strong and as tumultuous as his own; but it was a barrier he had been unable to penetrate. Sometimes when she talked about the work she had chosen to do, there was a breathless parting of her lips and a dreamy light in her wide dark eyes and a rush of color to her cheeks, and Dan knew a feeling that was akin to jealousy. Anne was driven by ambition; it fogged her on; nothing else seemed to matter.

He was reminded now, with Anne sitting beside him as they drove toward the dawn, of the night that he had gone to meet her in compliance with Ziggy Young's request. That seemed like a long time ago, and it seemed like yesterday. She had persuaded her father—a gainst his better judgment, Anne admitted—to let her come to Hollywood. She had had her own way. Ziggy Young said she was "bull-headed." Maybe Ziggy knew what he was talking about; the expression was inelegant, but it was applicable to people who insisted on having their own way and were not to be swerved from it.

He watched her from the corner of his eye, saw her yawn. Anne glanced quickly his way, caught his look, and smiled. "Sleepy," she said, and Dan nodded. "Just a couple of minutes now."

There was something so delicious about her, he thought—even when she had yawned.

A few minutes later they were at her door. The sky was much lighter now, and Anne observed that it was nothing less than a scandal to be returning from a party at such an hour.

"But I had a wonderful time, Dan. It was glorious."

"You'll be the first one home. Most of the others will swim until breakfast and go home full of ham and eggs. I hated to leave the pool myself, didn't you?"

"Yes. . . . Good night, Dan."

Paul Collier's movements aroused Dan some hours later. Collier was cooking breakfast—Sunday morning breakfast being the one meal they religiously ate at home—and Collier was making a great fuss with frying pans.

"What's the big idea?" Rorimer demanded from his bed, and Paul appeared in the doorway, a dressing gown thrown over his pajamas. "It's 11 o'clock, my boy. Going to sleep all day? What time did you get in?"

"None of your business," Dan told him. "I'll have my orange juice in bed."

"Oh, yeah?" Collier came into the room and grabbed Rorimer by the foot and began to haul him out of bed. "Come on now, get out of there."

"Have a heart!" Dan cried, but Collier was heartless.

"The toast is burning; I smell it," he said, depositing Dan on the floor. And he ran back to the kitchen, wanting to know if Rorimer wanted his eggs sunny side up.

"Scrambled," said Dan, flinging out of his pajamas and dashing under the shower.

Collier made some sarcastic comment that Dan could not hear for the noise of the shower, and when he emerged from the bathroom, looking presentable once more and with his appetite sharpened by the tempting aroma of frying bacon and eggs, Paul demanded some gossip.

"How was the party, anyway? Anybody get crooked?"

Dan wolfed his orange juice and chuckled. "In a mild way," he said. "Your friend Frank Maury was there, by the way. He had a fine edge. I had a little run-in with him."

And he recounted it to Collier. "Where's Maury from?" he asked, and Paul answered that Maury had been an extra. "He hung around for several years before he got a break, and when he did, it went straight to his head. That's pretty good, taking two girls away from Maury in one evening. He'll never get over it. He thinks he's God's own little gift to women. I understand he saves his fan mail and sits in front of a mirror and reads it over."

Collier served the bacon and eggs and sat down. "I wish you'd punch him in the nose. I know a lot of people who would have enjoyed it."

And he added: "We're having open house this afternoon, by the way, just in case you forget. I ran into Louise Watkins last night, just for a minute. She said she wanted to talk to you about something. She's coming over."

Harvesters Prepare For A Hard Game With Oklahomans

VISITORS ARE RATED STRONG AS PAMPANS

Pampa's Harvesters today (temporarily) forgot next week's game with Lubbock and gave some thought to the best way to meet the powerful Hollis, Okla., eleven here at 3 o'clock tomorrow.

The Hollis team's picture appeared in last year's football annuals as one of the outstanding high school machines at Oklahoma. It has consistently defeated such teams as Wichita Falls, Frederick, and Clinton. A victory over Pampa would especially please the Oklahomans, who take great pride in whipping teams across the state line.

Each Mitchell does not use his crimples very much, but they are out of condition for the highly important Lubbock game. The list of incapacitated is almost wiped out in theory, but the fact is that Iard and Salsbury have been greatly slowed down by rib injuries. They appear all right in light workouts, but suffer considerable soreness.

New plays have been studied all this week, with scrimmages held to a minimum. This is one of the most important weeks for the local athletes, who showed much improvement last week, but who are now getting down to the head work of the grand old game. Some heads give more trouble than feet, the coach finds, but patience on the part of the mentors and hard work on the boys' part are expected to bring about the desired performance.

Since tomorrow's game is the last prior to the long trip to Lubbock, a large local crowd is expected. In addition, the scouts from other schools will not be missing.

CARDS LEAD BY SHADE IN WARM RACE

BY HUGH S. FULLERTON, JR., Associated Press Sports Writer

St. Louis was a shade ahead in the National league race today. With the Great Dazzy Vance and brilliant Bill Hallahan on the mound St. Louis and Brooklyn battled ten innings yesterday and the Cards won, 1 to 0, to take first place by the margin of a point.

The league's four contenders today stand this way:

St. Louis, won 63, lost 60, pct., .500 11 games to play.
Brooklyn, won 64, lost 61, pct., .517, 9 games to play.
Chicago, won 62, lost 62, pct., .500, 1 1-2 games behind, 10 games to play.
New York, won 59, lost 65, pct., .477, 4 1-2 games behind, 10 games to play.

Brooklyn's winning streak of 11 games ended in perhaps the most thrilling game of the season. Dazzy Vance fanned eleven Cards and gave them only seven hits but a double by pinch-hitter Andy High and a single by Taylor Douthett came in the tenth with Hallahan's sacrifice in between and produced the only run of the game. The St. Louis youngster, belted his nickname of Wild Bill by giving only two walks and not allowing a Robin to reach first base until the seventh inning. He allowed only five hits.

Carl Hubbell, Giant southpaw, gave New York a 7 to 0 victory over the Chicago Cubs. Hubbell yielded only three hits and fanned ten.

Two teams with little in store for the future but a few chances to cause trouble for the leaders sharpened their batting eyes against each other in the other National league clash and after ten innings of slug-fest Philadelphia defeated Pittsburgh, 15 to 14. A triple play, Chuck Klein's 34th home run and the nine-run tenth inning stood out from the mass of hits.

In the American league, the Philadelphia Athletics continued to move pennantward by taking a doubleheader from the Chicago White Sox while their only rivals, the Washington Senators, were kept idle by rain at Cleveland. With Mose Graye turning in his 27th victory of the season, the A's won the first game, 5 to 4, then they bunched their hits in two big innings behind Bill Sporens to take the second 10 to 2. The Athletics now need but two victories to reach the total of 100, which is the highest Washington possibly can attain.

The New York Yankees and St. Louis started out after the scoring mark made by the Phillies and Pittsburgh and after nearly 2 1-2 hours of slugfest, the Yankees came out on the long end of a 19 to 10 score. New York made all its runs and 20 of its 23 hits in the first five innings.

A Four-Sided Thrill In a Hot Bike Race

The National Amateur Bicycle Races at Kenosha, Wis., gave spectators a thrill they hadn't looked for when a group of riders piled up in a grand smash-up during one of the sprints. Four riders hit the dirt when this picture was taken—though you may have to look closely to see them all. None of the riders was seriously hurt.

Longhorns Are To Have Practice Tilts Saturday

DALLAS, Sept. 17. (AP)—There is no such thing as beating the gun on the Texas Longhorns. It looked for a time that Texas Christian University, with two bouts scheduled this week-end, would bet a long start on other conference members whose opening tilts were scheduled a week later, but the Longhorns have remedied that.

Coach Clyde Littlefield has arranged two practice games at Memorial stadium, St. Edwards' supplying the opposition Friday and the San Marcos Teachers on Saturday. Both will be regulation games in every respect other than that the coaches will be permitted to follow their team up and down the field and make all the replacements they wish.

The Horned Frogs are expecting some pretty stiff opposition against the Denton Teachers on Friday. Coach Schmidt will take all of his lettermen and first line reserves on the trip and expects to use them very freely. There is an understanding that only one Frog letterman may be in the line-up at a time against the East Texas Teachers Saturday at Fort Worth.

Southern Methodist's football warriors will be attired in flaming red jerseys when they meet Notre Dame Oct. 4 at South Bend. Only the numerals, fore and aft, will be blue to carry out that part of the school's color scheme. In explanation, the Mustangs have not lost a game since they switched to red early last season. Texas Christian no doubt will stick to its white "sweat" shirts which were worn to a conference title last year.

Flint Rhem Is Telling Story of Guns and Drink

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 17. (AP)—Flint Rhem, whose sturdy right arm has played an important part in the St. Louis Cardinals' drive pennantward, has fallen from the water wagon. But he told Manager Gabby Street the fall was forced upon him by "two armed men."

Rhem, today's Globe-Democrat says in a story from a staff correspondent, returned to the Cardinals' hotel in New York late, last night. After being missing for 24 hours, and reported to Street two armed men forced him to accompany them to a roadhouse Monday night and then poured liquor down him all that night and yesterday. Releasing him near the Cardinals' hotel last night, he said, the men warned him not to pitch against Brooklyn.

MEMPHIS AND PANTHERS TO CLASH TODAY

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 17. (AP)—Tomahawks sharpened and claws extended, the Memphis Chickasaws and Fort Worth Panthers made ready to come to grips this afternoon in the opening skirmish of the 1930 Dixie series.

It will be the third meeting of the Chickasaws and the Panthers, Southern and Texas League pennant winners in the annual post season warfare started nine years ago to settle the question of baseball supremacy in the south. The annual series to date the Texas leaguers have emerged victors in seven and Fort Worth has twice won over a Memphis team.

Ideal weather was promised today by the weather man.

The Fort Worth club made an overnight journey to Memphis accompanied by a delegation of several hundred supporters.

Battery selections will not be announced until final practice but it was expected that either Harry Kelly or Walter Beck would be sent to the mound for Memphis and Dick Whitworth or Red Roberts for Fort Worth.

Rob Roy Says Clingman Cannot Throw Him Twice in Half Hour—Fans Will See Who Is Correct

Brotherly love sometimes takes the form of brotherly cruelty when pugilistics or grappling tactics are concerned.

Otis Clingman and Rob Roy have been pretty good friends in the past, but just now one or the other has talked too much. Roy has been learning a lot of tricks, and he has seen fit to challenge Clingman's oft-repeated statement that he (Clingman) could throw Rob Roy twice in 30 minutes.

So the semi-final in the Pia-Mor program Thursday evening calls for such a display between Clingman and Roy. Clingman has not said how he plans to throw the youngster twice in half an hour, but he grinned when it was remarked that he couldn't do it in any pink tea fashion.

The main event will be between Charlie Carr of Colorado and Silent Rattan of Dallas. Rattan has spent the week at Amarillo working out in an attempt to reach top form in this high altitude. Carr is completing a tour in which he is said not to have lost a match.

The alley between West Kingmill and West Francis in the 100 block was being paved today.

THERE'S a harmony between the natural loveliness of this modern age and the natural, mild goodness of Camels. And if you find them keeping company, don't be surprised.

Camel has given the world the luxury of a naturally mild cigarette—a cigarette that preserves all the refreshing fragrance of the choice, mild tobaccos from which it is made—a cigarette that is delightfully smooth, but never flat, never parched, never tasteless.

Modern smokers are awake to the fact that mere flatness doesn't mean mildness. That's one reason there's such a swing to Camels. Watch it right in your own crowd. Join them in Camels—a smoke that's enjoyable all the way—all the time.
