SOUTH AMERICA'S WOES

Getting straight on the ins and outs of the latest revolutionary disturbances in South America is more of a job, probably, than the average newspaper reader cares to tackle. Most Americans, no doubt, will be content to set the entire difficulty down to Latin-American effervescence and let it go at that.

However, it is more than likely that the revolution in Peru and the threatened uprising in Argentina would be worth serious study. At this distance it is hard to make an exact diagnosis in either case; nevertheless, it is evident that democracy in Latin America has not yet reached the orderly, smoothly-running status that we had been led to suppose.

The trouble in Peru is not so surprising. Leguia, the deposed president, tended to fit the pattern of the traditional dictator more than that of the constitutional president of a democracy. Oddly enough, however, it is reported that one of the grievances held against him by certain Peruvian factions arose from the fact that he tried to "Americanize" his government too much. Instead of giving places and influence to members of the upper-class clique that has been accustomed to such favors, he gave them to political supporters after the manner of an American "boss." His regime was perhaps little better, from the standpoint of graft, than those of his predecessors; but the method of distribution was different.

It is harder to assay the situation in Argentina correctly. Of recent years Americans have regarded Argentina as one of the most advanced countries in the southern half of the New World. But the chance of revolution, apparently is always present in South America.

However, it would be easy to exaggerate the seriousness of these recent disturbances. The lot of the ordinary citizen, in Peru and Argentina as in other South American countries, is vastly better now than it was a few decades ago. The present outbreaks are not symptoms of backward civilization. They merely indicate that democracy in Latin America is still suffering from growing pains.

For a democracy to function effectively there must be a high standard of public education and a widespread sense of civic responsibility. Considering our own lapses in this respect, it hardly becomes us to shake our heads too dolefully over the troubles of Peru and Argentina.

WASHINGTON.—A very few states provide for run-off primaries, but the large majority of them do not. Recent political news appears to demonstrate the frequent value of the run-off as a method of most accurately attaining the desires of the voters.

Texas, South Carolina and Oklahoma are going in for run-offs this year. Texas and Oklahoma have had theirs.

Other states find themselves with duly nominated candidates who probably could not have received the primary votes of the voters of their party in any straight-out two-man contest.

Here is how the run-off system has worked in a few states: In a three-cornered primary fight the other day Senator Cole Blease had a plurality, but no majority. In most states that would have meant Blease's nomination. But under South Carolina law Blease must now fight it off in a run-off with his nearest opponent, former Congressman James F. Byrnes. The other candidate, who ran far behind both, was a vigorous anti-Blease man named Leon W. Harris. The combined Byrnes-Harris vote exceeded the Blease vote by a comfortable majority. Now the South Carolina voters will have an unhampered chance to decide between the two leading candidates.

In one of those grand Texas free-for-all primaries with 10 candidates for governor Mr. Ferguson led the list by about 65,000 votes in about 750,000 cast. But her single opponent, Ross Sterling, the next man up, beat her by 100,000 votes out of about 900,000 in the run-off. Obviously Texas didn't want Ma for governor again, but if there had been no run-off that's just what they would have had.

The difference between the size of the total votes cast in the two primaries indicates that many voters are content to wait for the run-off before casting a ballot.

In Oklahoma's Democratic senatorial primary ex-Senator Thomas P. Gore had a tiny plurality in a field of five candidates. His majority over C. J. Wrightman in the run-off, however, was comparatively enormous.

Instances where the candidate who runs third in the count is found to have determined the result between the two strongest candidates by pulling votes away from one or the other are rather common in primaries and general elections.

In California this worked out so as to assure the state a wet governor and in Pennsylvania it did the same for a dry. The two California candidates for the Republican nomination who had the official dry support, Governor C. C. Young and Byron Pitts, polled a combined vote of more than 200,000 above that of the wet candidate, Mayor James Rolph of San Francisco, who won the nomination. In Pennsylvania the moist machine candidate lost to the dry Gifford Pinchot because 275,000 wets voted for a third candidate.

It might reasonably be inferred that California is dry and will have a wet governor and that Pennsylvania is wet and will have a dry governor—although your correspondent seeks no arguments as to the wetness or dryness of either state.

Ohio Democrats appear to have nominated a wet senatorial and a dry gubernatorial candidate on the same ticket because Robert J. Bulkley, the former, was good and wet, whereas a much larger vote than his was divided among four other dry or straddling candidates.

Destroyer Will Carry Relief to Santo Domingo

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8. (AP)—The navy department announced today that a destroyer would be sent to Santo Domingo with medical and relief supplies to aid hurricane victims.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti, Sept. 8. (AP)—Heavy rains lasting more than 24 hours have seriously swollen the Ozama river and made travel through the hurricane zone in the interior of Santo Domingo all but impossible today.

Planes today formed virtually the only mode of travel into the area where last week about 4,000 persons lost their lives and far more than that number received injuries.

When the hurricane hit the side of the mountains arising almost perpendicularly in its path, the storm actually skinned the south slope of the mountain range there and hurled into the air, touching only the high points in the succeeding ranges upon its course to the sea.

The area of the Santiago, Vega and Boca Valleys, which are the productive part of the country, were spared. The people of Santiago with whom observers talked related that they could hear the storm howling like a million fiends in the air as it passed overhead.

Plantations east of Santiago within the area of the storm were wiped out for a distance of 15 to 20 miles.

Woman Renews Hunt for Father

David Lloyd George, noted British statesman, drove a vegetable wagon, drawn by a donkey, and peddled his edibles from door to door.

A clue concerning the whereabouts of her father, Frank Cox, 80, was obtained Saturday by Mrs. M. Larue, who has been searching for him since September of 1928, when he disappeared from the home of his daughter at Phoenix, Ariz.

Saturday she received information from a friend that the aged man was ill in a West Texas hospital six months ago. Today, Mrs. Larue began communicating with various hospitals in West Texas and the Panhandle.

Mrs. Larue said that six months ago the sheriff of a West Texas county informed a California relative of Mr. Cox in a letter that the latter was ill in a county hospital. The letter was lost and Mrs. Larue today began the task of finding the hospital where her father was confined.

"...here's a Story You will enjoy"

an intensely interesting human tale--a story of the people--by the people--for the people...

a Story that runs the gamut of human emotions

"Wait, Jim, here's one . . ."

Lost: Antique Ring of Silver. Symbolic design, with secret compartment beneath, between city hall and depot. Liberal reward. Ardmore 5839.

"... what do you make of that?"

"Well, Ruth, the ring seems to be a cheap affair. But the reward indicates that the owner sets great store by it just the same. Perhaps it's a family heirloom, handed down from generation to generation. Then again, it may be greatly valued because of some supposed magical property . . . lots of folks treasure old cabalistic relics as powerful charms. Poisons may have been carried in the secret recesses centuries ago . . ."

"Shall we look at another?"

"Sure. Here is one . . ."

Wanted Young Married Man to develop German territory for milling machinery manufacturer. Must have large selling experience and speak German. We will instruct in product. Wife should be able to act as secretary. Chance to travel, good salary, fine opportunity for right man. 256 Butler Building.

"Why, Jim, you could handle that job! You have the selling knowledge, and can speak German perfectly."

"But, Ruth, I don't know a thing about milling machinery." "They say that they will teach you. Oh, Jim, we've never been to Europe and here is our chance to travel and get paid for doing it. And I could, certainly act as your secretary with my training."

"What about the children?"

"We could send them to school in Berlin and work out from there, couldn't we? Jim, it will be such a wonderful chance for you . . . get in touch with those people now . . . please!"

"Ruth, I got the job! They were pleased with my ability . . . and the job will pay even better than I thought. We will be over there for at least two years. They want us to sail within a month. We'll work out from Berlin, just as you suggested and keep the children in school there. It will be wonderful!"

"Oh, Jim, it's too good to be true. I'll make preparations to leave while you are taking their instruction course . . . and Jim! You were right about the want ads in the Daily News. Reading them is just like reading a story . . . only not every story has such a happy ending that comes true!"

FOR SALE—High Chair fine condition . . . . .

High chair for Sale—Fine condition; enamel tray; also baby's play-yard; name your price. Sycamore 5667.

"Who can guess what prompted this ad? Maybe it's just a case of Johnny or Susie grown up to the romper stage . . . their baby things are no longer needed. Then again, hard times may have hit that family, and a mother is forced to part with the treasured memories of her children's babyhood to raise cash. Or it may even be a sadder story . . . little, toddling footsteps that will no longer be heard around the house . . . and only photographs to recall a happiness too brief . . ."

"Why, Jim, it is just a book or a play; let's go on."

"All right. Now this one sounds more like farce to me . . ."

WANTED TO BUY—Watch dog. Fish merchant desires big dog . . .

Wanted to Buy Watch Dog.—Fish merchant desires big dog trained to keep cats away. No pedigree necessary. Bittersweet 1730.

"That certainly is a scream, Jim. From the looks of it, that fellow's store must have been burglarized plenty by cats. A big hound with a hatred for felines seems to be his only sure insurance policy."

"Either that, or he wants a dog to drown out operatic renditions on his back fence every night!"

Well . . . let's go on to the next ad . . ."

"These Lost and Found ads are always interesting, Ruth. Seems folks are losing everything from autos to bracelets and from legal papers to canary birds."
