GIVING THE CHILD A CHANCE: The prevention of child labor in America has been an important issue since the days in which factories were first established. In fact, most everyone has agreed that child labor, especially in its severest forms, should not exist.

Ordinarily, the invention of modern machinery tended to protect the unfortunate child. The manufacturer needed more skillful workers. Today, though, children need to be protected from conditions perhaps less conquerable than the unhealthy factory.

Obviously child conditions are much worse today on the basis of the present economic condition. However, such conditions have existed in years of prosperity.

ragging republican votes, but the best he could hope for would be to sell a state or two by narrow margins. He may lessen the popular-vote landslide but he can have little effect on the electoral college.

As to tax-paid speech writers, we refer to Sam Jones, former newspaper man, whose gaudy title is that of "civil administrative assistant" to Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ernest Lee Jahncke.

It should not be hard, therefore, for even staunch republicans to accept a democratic administration without distaste.

SYNOPSIS: About to meet death with her husband, Jervis, in the rising tide, Nan finds the key to his prison where Robert Leonard had dropped it. Released, they creep up the passage out of reach of the water, only to find the trap door closed. They are blocked with freedom.

Chapter 49
"BRAN FOUND YOU!"
Rosamund stood just inside Robert Leonard's door, waiting. She was drenched, her clothing torn. She had been half an hour covering the few hundred yards between the Tetterley house and where she stood.

"Bad night for travel," she said, looking at a half packed suitcase on a chair.
"Best for both of us. You'll finish us coming here like this. I'm off before you fit a rope around my neck."
"That's not the chief reason. Where's Jervis?"
"You'll have to dive to find him!"

Rosamund stood quite still for a moment, then ran for the door. She was hung aside.
"How dare you!"
"I'm going down; the water will pull me up to the roof by now!"
Rosamund calmly walked to the telephone and lifted the receiver.
"Give me Croyston police station."
"She covered the mouthpiece. And going down?" She looked into the mouth of Leonard's automobile; her eyes were steady.
"I'm worth something alive," she said coolly.
"Don't bluff me!"
A humming came from the instrument.

"That was bluff," she admitted. "But the operator's here now. She can hear shooting, too."
Robert Leonard flung his pistol down on the table.
"Hang up that damned receiver!" he said.
Rosamund hung it up.
"Now look here—I'll tell you the whole bed-rock truth. I wasn't to know you were liable to get a crazy idea when there was a storm—was I? I did my best. I went down into the damn passage and found the whole place under water. I went up to my neck—I couldn't do anything but what I suppose you didn't expect me to do—myself!"
"No," said Rosamund—just the one word, hard and cold. Then she put out her hand. "Give me the key—I'm going down."
"No, much!"

She struck him a stinging blow in the face, and at the same moment there came the sound of loud and heavy knocking upon the back door.
"Who is it?" said Rosamund suddenly. "The light had gone out of the door—know. They mustn't see me!"
She opened the door and looked out into the passage; and did so, the wind blew in from the kitchen, and along with it came Bran, and separated from him by a short length of chain, Francis. They seemed to be in a hurry.
Robert Leonard shut the door behind him. He thought carefully of the automatic on the table.

"He pulled on his chain, growling at Ferdinand said.
"I'm selling for Mrs. Wear."
"I don't understand. It's Mr. Leonard, isn't it?"
"Where is she?" said Ferdinand.
"I haven't the slightest idea what you're talking about."
"I've been here! I got back from a wild goose chase an hour ago, and I found a note from Nan saying she was coming here to find you!"
"I really don't know what you're talking about, Mr. Francis."
Ferdinand tightened the chain, and Robert Leonard jumped back, the great dog ran snuffing up the passage. He pushed whining against the door Nan had stood behind. Ferdinand with a quick movement flung open the other door, and was taken completely aback. Rosamund came, was leaning on the study table in an attitude of careless indifference. Ferdinand dropped Bran's chain in his surprise.
"Get this—a very early visit?" said Rosamund. "Hello, Bran!"

The dog wrinkled his brows, sniffed the air, and backed away from her outstretched hand.
"Where's Nan?" said Ferdinand.
"Well, not here."
"She said she was coming here," Ferdinand began; and then he saw Leonard's pistol lying where he had thrown it. He pocketed it, then turned to see Bran with his nose to the ground.
"Seek her, boy—seek her!" he said, and followed back to the kitchen, and across the kitchen to a door behind the dresser where Bran scented and whined.

As they went down the steps into the cellar, Robert Leonard let himself out of the front door. He had to crawl thirty yards to reach the shelter of the garage.
Bran was snuffing and scraping at the trap. Ferdinand began to roll the barrel away, and as he did so, there came a knocking on the under-side of the trap.
Rosamund stood where she was, and saw the barrel and the shadow of the barrel move together. She saw Ferdinand take hold of the iron ring that had been under the barrel and heave. She saw the trap rise, and Bran's great head thrust forward. He whined frantically. And then she saw Jervis coming up out of the trap, and her heart stood still, and her bones turned to water. A drowned man might look like that. He came up higher, and she saw Nan's face against his shoulder deathly white. Her eyes were closed, and her lips a little parted.

Jervis took a step forward and then stopped, and there was a sudden dead silence.
Then Nan opened her eyes. She gazed past Rosamund and rested on Ferdinand.
"Did you find us?"

"Bran found you?"
"Where's Leonard?" said Jervis harshly.
He and Ferdinand ran through the empty house, out into the raw, stormy dawn. They saw Leonard's car laboring toward the cliff road. They saw it lurch, swing across the road, the irresistible gale behind it. A huge gust caught it like a chip. It dropped over the edge into the sea.
"Let's go back to Nan, F. F." said Jervis.

'Thirteen Women' At Rex Theater

Using an entirely new field for drama, the RKO-Radio picture, "Thirteen Women," which opened Sunday at the Rex theater, succeeds in still another screen departure.
And that is in permitting an audience to think—and thoroughly enjoy thinking!

There are no blatant scenes, designed for the so-called "fourteen-year-old mind of the masses." This is intellectually planned entertainment full of suspense and powerful situations.
George Archibald, the director, and his featured players, Irene Dunne and Ricardo Cortez, took a great book—"Thirteen Women," written by Tiffany Thayer—and in a workmanlike manner have turned out an even greater picture. No dialogue bellows forth from the screen just because there happens to be some talkie-apparatus concealed back-stage. When the players open their mouths in "Thirteen Women" they have something to say; something which furthers the story.

Miss Dunne appears as a young American mother in "Thirteen Women." She's grand! The producers of the picture have been wise enough not to permit old-fashioned "hokum" situations to creep into the film wherein Miss Dunne would be called upon to make the usual cinema sacrifices on the altar of motherhood.

She goes through a great deal, however, to protect her small son from a weird and revengeful plot. And when you see the picture you, too, will go through it all. It's that convincing.

The Campaign Puzzle Study Past State-by-State Votes in Making Your Forecasts

Maine's vote for president in 1928: Hoover 179,923 Smith 81,179

Maine long has been regarded as staunchly dry and republican. It has given its vote to but one democratic presidential candidate since 1876, voting for Wilson in 1912. It has had but two democratic governors since civil war days.

In this year's state elections, September 12, Louis J. Manly, democratic advocate of repeal, was elected governor with 120,353 votes against 118,800 for Burleigh Martin, dry republican.

The result impelled President Hoover to ask a redoubting of efforts by republican national leaders. Maine's republican national committee asserted that the result was due primarily to a shift in Maine's sentiment regarding prohibition.

The prohibition issue has been in the foreground in this year's presidential campaign. Maine this year has five electoral votes, instead of six, as formerly.

amount of distinguished writing, subject always to the restrictions attendant upon compiling such a work. For example, there is only a handful of sonnets (by no means her best work) to represent Edna St. Vincent Millay, considerably less space than van Doren allots himself; less even, than is allotted James Rorty.

With the possibly unavoidable restriction of Millay, and the possibly excusable emphasis on van Doren and Rorty out of the way, there remains a well-chosen and important collection of good verse.

The novels. Among the many novels is Donald O. Peattie's brilliant "Sons of the Martians," an exposition of what happens when an American and a Czech, both sons of the same father meet. A sincere novel is Rolf W. Byorn's "Toward Romance," in which a sensitive and serious boy trails after romance.

The book is intelligent, too, for Brown treats his small boy as a little person and not as a little nuisance.

An exotic novel is J. Leslie Mitchell's "The Lost Trumpet," the trumpet being Joshua's, the scene being Egypt, and the technical detail impeccable. For Mr. Mitchell is also an archeologist.

Finally there must be mention of a distinguished reprint: Paul Wilstach's "Potomac Landings." The book's history is curious. In 1921, 1,640 copies were printed from type. The type was distributed, whereupon those with a passion for Tidewater lore turned the book into a collector's item in half a dozen years.

The present edition is from plates, and is designed for those to

North Dakota's vote for president in 1928: Hoover 131,441 Smith 106,948

North Dakota has voted for the republican presidential candidate in seven of the last 10 elections. In 1892 it voted for the people's party's candidate and in 1912 and 1916 for Wilson.

The political situation in the state is complicated by division of the republican party into two factions, the Non-Partisan league and the Independent Voters' association. Republican nomination for state office usually has been equivalent to election.

In the state elections of 1930, George F. Shafer (R.) was elected with 133,284 votes against 141,988 for Pierce Blewett (D.).

The presidential preference primaries of last March found the total of democratic votes exceeding the republicans for the first time in the history of the preference primary.

In the current campaign the republican state central committee, controlled by the Non-Partisan league, has made no expression on presidential candidates.

North Dakota, which formerly had five electoral votes, has four this year.

South Carolina's vote for president in 1928: Smith 62,700 Hoover 5,858

South Carolina was one of the states of the "solid South" which remained quite unshaken by disunion in the 1928 election. In that election Anti-Smith democrats mustered but 2,670 votes for Hoover and republicans cast but 3,188. Save for presidential electors, no republican ticket was offered that year.

The republican organization in the state this year is waging a more active campaign than in the past, under the leadership of J. C. Hambricht, national committee man, and D. A. Gardner, youthful state chairman who overturned the 50-year-old regime of "Teless Joe" Tolbert.

A full ticket of republican candidates for congress has been offered, the first since 1876, with Miss Clara Harbidge, national committeewoman, seeking the senate seat in opposition to Senator E. D. Smith, who defeated former Senator Cole Blease for nomination.

Gardner, in an appeal for support of republican candidates, emphasized prohibition as a major issue. Votes cast in this year's democratic primary totaled 271,000, an increase of 30,000 over 1930. Democratic leaders ascribed the increase to growing interest in public affairs.

South Carolina has 8 electoral votes this year. Before reapportionment it had nine.

COLOR THIS ANIMAL, CHILDREN Children, get out your paint box or crayons—here's an entertaining and instructive exercise in art for you. This animal is No. 4 about the thrilling jungle film, "Bring 'Em Back Alive," which will come to the LaNora theater next Wednesday. There will be six sketches in all. Clip out each, color all six, group them on a single large sheet, and bring them down to THE NEWS Thursday morning with one NEW weekly subscription costing fifteen cents. All children who do this will receive a free ticket to this great animal picture. IN ADDITION the 25 children who have the best and neatest colored layouts will receive two extra tickets, and the next best ten drawings will entitle the winners to one extra ticket. But be sure to clip and paint the sketches, get the subscription, and bring them to THE NEWS next Thursday morning, the second day of the showing of "Bring 'Em Back Alive." Put your name, address, and age on your layout.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES The lesson-sermon subject was "Doctrine of Atonement" in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, Sunday, October 16.

The golden text was from John 10:30. "I and my Father are one." As a part of the service the following from Joel 2:32 was read: "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered: for in mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call."

The following citations from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, were also read:

"Waking to Christ's demand, mortals experience suffering. This causes them, even as drowning men, to make vigorous efforts to save themselves; and through Christ's precious love these efforts are crowned with success. One sacrifice, however great, is insufficient to pay the debt of sin. The atonement requires constant self-immolation on the sinner's part."

Scanning New Books

By JOHN SELBY NEW YORK—Atop the heap of autumn books (it is a large heap, incidentally) lies Octave Aubry's "The King of Rome," almost an ideal biography of an almost perfect subject.

"L'Aiglon" was born of Napoleon I and Marie-Louise March 20, 1811, and lived 21 years, which was enough to carry him into Louis-Philippe's reign. The greatest of all modern empires was snatched from him; he was subjected to the systematic and cruel enfeeblement of Metternich. He was a spirited and charming boy, and the center of brilliant and harsh events.

It is made to order material for what has been the curse of Napoleon I and his relatives—the sentimentalized history. But M. Aubry decided to write it in the cool, clipped style of the French realist. This clear-headed approach was exactly what the story needed to make it what it is—one of the season's finest.

57 Poets. Of equal value in a different field is Mark van Doren's new anthology, "American Poets." "My aim," says van Doren, "was to leave out as many poets as I conscientiously could, on the theory that those who remained would appear to possess a genuine distinction."

He has left out all but 57 of them, and his volume does contain a great a member who is more than 75 years old. Germany, going through her fifth major campaign within a year, has been hearing radicalism preached with greater vehemence than in the other campaigns.

The national socialists, or nazis, no longer can plead for an authority government imbued with nationalism, for the von Papen cabinet fills that bill. Hence their newspapers team with appeals to overthrow the economic emergency degree of von Papen on the ground that the measure benefits the rich alone.

The Catholic center, usually known for its moderation and its effort to composed differences between the classes, also is stressing his issue. "Typical of their campaign talk is this utterance by Johann Becker:

"We must conduct an impassioned fight against social reaction as embodied in the von Papen economic emergency decree. The workers must be stirred and incited to an extent that will make it impossible for the police to dissolve the meetings."

The social democrats too are increasingly radical and Paul Loebe, their former speaker of the reichstag, demands in his stump speeches that the reich take over the key industries, such as coal, iron, steel, cement, chemicals and banking.

Outdoing all others, the communist party continues to agitate for a Soviet Germany. Of the five major political groups, only Hugenberg's nationalists, are campaigning for retention of the present economic order.

whom the text and not the rarely of a work appeals. "Potomac Landings" has a lazy charm, and Lees, Custice, Fitzhughs and Washingtons abound on its pages.

The Texas Centennial Means The 100th Birthday of Texas Celebrated in Honor of the Immortal Heroes of Texas' Early History "It now, sir, becomes my duty to make presentation of this sword... this emblem of my past office," said Houston at his inauguration. "I have worn it with some humble pretensions in defense of my country—and should the danger of my country again call for my services, I expect to resume it, and respond to that call, if needful, with my blood and with my life." In this dramatic manner constitutional government began in Texas nearly a century ago. The centennial of that event, and of other events which marked the birth of Texan independence, will come in 1936. We should observe it with a Centennial Celebration worthy of Texas and the heroes who won and established Texan independence. Such a Centennial Exposition can rival the foremost of such events ever held. Literally millions of people will throng the borders of Texas. They will not only see the glories of our illustrious past—but the golden opportunities of the present. Happily, such an Exposition will return revenue to the State far in excess of its cost... and individual Texans will see direct economic benefit.
