Top Ranking Stars Feature Pampa Theater Programs

BEST PLAYERS IN FILMS AT ALL THEATERS

Stars whose names are top billing are featured in Pampa film programs this week. Among the top notch screen stars who are in the cast of pictures that will be exhibited here this week are: Clark Gable, Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone, Spencer Tracy and Charles Ruggles.

Tone will be seen in two pictures: in the film, "The Bride Wore Red," opening a three-day run at the LaNora today, and in "They Gave Him a Gun," showing at the same time at the State. Gladys George and Spencer Tracy are also featured in the State picture.

Jean Crawford and Robert Young are the other principals in the LaNora picture.

Jean Harlow has the feminine lead in "Saratoga," showing Sunday, Monday and Tuesday at the Rex. Clark Gable and Lionel Barrymore are the other featured players.

"Over the Goal" gives Johnnie

Davis his first starring role. June Travis and Mabel Todd are other new stars who are featured with Davis. The picture shows Wednesday and Thursday at the LaNora.

Guy Kibbee, one of the best comedians on the screen today, heads the cast of "The Big Shot," at the Rex Wednesday and Thursday.

On the same days, harum-scarum Jane Withers rambles in "Angel's Holiday" at the State.

Friday and Saturday the LaNora will show "Make a Wish." Bobby Breen who established himself as a singing star in "Rainbow on the River" and "Let's Sing Again," tops the cast with Basil Rathbone, Henry Armetta, Marion Caire, and Ralph Fortes are other players in the picture.

Ricardo Cortez and Marjorie Weaver play the leads in the picture of Harold Bell Wright's novel, "The Californian," at the Rex Friday and Saturday.

Friday only, the State will exhibit "Turn Off the Moon," with Eleanor Whitney, Charlie Ruggles, and Johnnie Downs getting the top billing.

William (Hop-a-Long Cassidy) Boyd is the star of "Hills of Old Wyoming," showing Saturday only at the State.

Warren Hull, Anne Nagel and Claudia Dell are the principal players in a gay farce titled "A Bride for Henry." Monogram picture, showing today, Monday and Tuesday at the Crown. A headstrong

Three Stars in Comedy-Drama

Scintillating comedy in romantic mood is contained in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer photoplay, "The Bride Wore Red," starring Robert Young, Jean Crawford, and Franchot Tone. Showing at the LaNora today, tomorrow, and Tuesday.

Donaldson, art direction by Cedric Gibbons. Showing today, tomorrow, and Tuesday.

GANG LEADER KIBBEE.
Small-town atmosphere is mingled with the rapid-fire tactics of big city gangsters in RKO-Radio's "The Big Shot," featuring Guy Kibbee, Cora Witherspoon, Dorothy Moore, and Gordon Jones.

Guy Kibbee is the timid horse doctor who inherits a million and the leadership of a gang of racketeers—novel twist to the gangster angle that has been the theme of many films.

Showing Wednesday and Thursday.

CABALLERO.
Harold Bell Wright's latest novel, "The Californian," based on the history of that era from 1840 to 1850, is pictured by 20th Century-Fox in the film by the same title.

Ricardo Cortez is a Robin Hood of the Old West, in the days when gold was discovered in California.

Others in the cast include Marjorie Weaver, Katherine DeMille, Nigel de Bruiler and Morgan Wallace.

Showing Friday and Saturday.

STATE HERO AND MORSTER.
In 1917, they gave him a gun. He learned to use it and liked the power it gave him. He used that gun so well in France they gave him a medal. He used a gun in America in 1937 and they killed him.

Adapted from William Joyce Cowan's novel by the same name, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picture is an original treatment of a much-used theme. It is not just another war picture.

Spencer Tracy, Gladys George, and Franchot Tone are the principal players. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke, II, who directed "San Francisco," "After the Thin Man" and other hits. Art direction by Cedric Gibbons.

Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday.

HIGH EXPLOSIVE.
Jane Withers, the mischievous "brat" takes charge of her uncle's newspaper and puts T. N. T. into the headlines. This is the situation on which 20th Century-Fox has built a hilarious comedy, "Angel's Holiday." Robert Kent, Joan Davis and Sally Blane, with the "brat" heading the cast.

Wednesday and Thursday.

JAMBOREE.
First it was jazz, then swing, now it's jammin'. Fun, music, and romance are contained in Paramount's "Turn Off the Moon." Eleanor Whitney and Johnny Downs show the newest dance craze, Phil Harris and his orchestra play hot rhythm.

Others starred in the cast are Kenny Baker, star of Jack Baker hour, Ben Blue the sensation of "College Holiday," Marjorie Gatencom, comedienne, and Romo Vincent, new laugh discovery. Charlie Ruggles heads the cast.

Four new songs are sung in the picture: "Turn Off the Moon," "That's Southern Hospitality," "Jammin'," and "Easy on the Eyes."

Produced by Francon. Presented by Adolph Zukor.

Friday only.

HOP-A-LONG CASSIDY.
Indians and crooked agents provide work for William Boyd in "Hills of Old Wyoming." He has to win the confidence of the wronged Indians, ferret out the crooked agents then lead the combined rancher-Indian forces against their enemies.

Saturday only.

CROWN GAY FARCE.
One of the most beautiful estates in California was used in Monogram's "A Bride for Henry," starring Warren Hull and Anne Nagel girl, a second-hand husband and a jilted lover go on a fling-together. Based on the Liberty magazine story by Josephine Bentham.

That's the predicament in which lovely Anne Nagel finds herself in "A Bride for Henry" at the Crown theater when her fiance walks out on her at the altar and Johnnie Davis acts as a last minute substitute.

Wendy Barrie and Lyle Talbot have the leading roles in "What Price Vengeance" showing at the Crown Wednesday and Thursday.

On Friday and Saturday at the Crown will be shown "Stars Over Arizona" with Jack Randall, and chapter 2 of the Dick Tracy serial.

LaNORA CINDERELLA.
A Cinderella who danced from a tawdry cabaret to luxury, who was a princess for fortnight, who wins a millionaire then drops him is the theme of "The Bride Wore Red." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Dorothy Arzner, Hollywood's only woman director.

Based on the play, "The Girl from Trieste," by Ferenc Molnar, which was originally produced in Vienna and Budapest. Produced as "The Girl Unknown" at New Theater, London, in September, 1936.

Art direction by Cedric Gibbons, musical score by Franz Waxman, lyrics by Gus Kahn.

Jean Crawford, Franchot Tone, and Robert Young are the principals in the cast.

Showing today, tomorrow, and Tuesday.

COLLEGIATE.
Grid teams of 1887 are contrasted with the present day Trojans of U. S. C. in Warner Brothers' "Over the Goal," a collegiate comedy-drama in which Johnnie Davis takes his first starring role. There's plenty of football playing of the modern Rose Bowl sort, the 1887 team being only incidental.

A rivalry between Carlton and State started in 1887, carried down to the present, with a mixture of romance, as the theme of the play.

Music and lyrics are by M. K. Jerome and Jack Scholl.

June Travis, William Hopper,

REX RACE TRACK.
Jean Harlow, Clark Gable and Lionel Barrymore, love, hate, fight, and laugh in "Saratoga," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film of the bet-a-buck or a million horse racing fraternity.

Directed by Jack Conway, who also directed "A Tale of Two Cities" and "Viva Villa." Produced by Bernard H. Hyman, who made "San Francisco." Story by Anita Loos and Robert Hopkins, musical score by Edward Ward, songs by Walter

The estate used was owned by the noted Janss family. Covering more than five acres, it consists of a large swimming pool, several tennis courts and a large barbecue pit on the grounds. The estate is used in "A Bride for Henry" for the mammoth lawn shot and the swimming pool scene.

This sequence in the film caused several weeks of research by the assistant director, Mike Eason. Too large to build on a motion picture set, it was necessary to tour Beverly Hills and Hollywood to locate just the right home. It is a common practice of movie studios to rent these estates and the rental money is given to some worthy charity organization.

"A Bride for Henry" concerns the story of a spoiled heiress who marries her lawyer when she discovers her fiance fails to show up for the wedding. It is her plan to divorce the lawyer but when he decides to remain married to her, many amusing complications arise.

Supporting Hull and Miss Nagel in the cast are Henry Mollison, Claudia Dell, Harrison Green and Betty Ross Clark. The picture was directed by William Nigh from the Liberty magazine story by Josephine Bentham. Screen adaptation was done by Marion Orth. Associate producer was Mrs. Dorothy Reid.

CLOTHING DRIVE TO BE STARTED IN McLEAN

Sponsored by the Lions club, American Legion post, and other civic organizations, a clothing drive will be started tomorrow in McLean. Boy Scouts will collect the clothing, cleaning and pressing shops have offered to clean the garments, at no cost and shoe repairmen will repair shoes at only the cost of material used.

A room has been reserved in the McLean ward school where the clothing will be brought. Distribution will be made by a county social worker upon recommendation of teachers.

Another movement in McLean, is the supplying of hot lunches to underprivileged children. This project is sponsored by the McLean Lions club, according to the relief office here.

The desperately earnest proletarian novelists who strive to put across the gospel of Marx in a coating of fiction ought to go to school for a while to Ernest Hemingway. As Jack and Jill walked up the hill they saw a hawk swoop down, grasp a gopher in its talons and fly away. This frightened the children so they jumped back, almost stepping on a cottontail hiding in the brush. Just then an owl on the fence slowly blinked one eye, while three larks started skyward, each with a worm in its beak. Jack and Jill, forgetting the pail of water they came to get, ran home to tell their mother all they had seen.

NO THREATS NEEDED

An excellent sample of the kind of advice our government can get along without in the present troubled international situation is provided by the recent statement of N. M. Hubbard, president of the Navy League of the United States.

COPY KANSAS CITY!

That the juvenile auto death toll in this country need not remain the insoluble problem it usually seems to be is amply proved by the experience of Kansas City.

In the average American city of 400,000 population, a child is killed by auto traffic once in 27 days. In Kansas City, however, an entire year has passed since the last child traffic fatality.

Kansas City did it, apparently, simply by deciding to spend the time and the money necessary to keep the youngsters safe. Elaborate safety campaigns were staged in the schools and over the radio.

TIRED CHILDREN

Many a child gets dozed for obscure organic ailments when all that is really the matter is over fatigue. So said Dr. Theodore C. Elterich of Pittsburgh, in a recent address before the annual convention of the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania.

"Every children's specialist," said Dr. Elterich, "has brought to him for supposedly difficult diagnosis, fundamentally normal children who are merely fatigued by the stress of modern civilization and too long hours of school.

We hear a good deal about the over-taxing pace which modern life sets for adults. It wouldn't hurt us to realize that the same pace is often a bit strenuous for children also.

OUTREADING THE BOSS

The clerk and the stenographer usually do a good deal more reading than the boss does, if a survey conducted by the Progressive Education Association is correct.

Dr. Ralph Tyler of Ohio State University, head of the survey committee, reported that clerk and typist outran their bosses, but that they go in for a different type of literature. The young man clerk is apt to revel in mystery and adventure stories; the feminine stenog goes for romances and "confession" stories.

WASHINGTON—Whether the Supreme Court's prestige has suffered because of the court's acquisition of Hugo Black, who now seems firmly planted in his new seat, presumably is a most important question. Opponents of Mr. Roosevelt, nearly all of whom have vociferously protested Black's appearance as the newest justice, are insistent that the Alabaman's presence there has given the court a terrible black eye and lowered public respect for the previously sanctified processes of justice.

Chapter XXVIII

This was the murderer, Cilly thought, yet she had not seen him nor could she guess his identity. This was the murderer . . .

For one eternal second, the world spun madly around; she could feel her lungs bursting for air as those powerful hands slowly, relentlessly, choked off her breath. It was the end for her, as it had been for Amy, just a few nights before. This was death the inevitable . . .

Eventually she returned to a dull consciousness. At first she dared not open her eyes, for fear it was another world to which she would awaken. She had died, even as Amy had died, and this was a new beginning, a new life . . .

It was a familiar voice which roused her. A voice which she had come to fear in these few days, but which would forever ring in her ears as the sweetest music.

"That's right, young lady," Sergeant Dolan said kindly, "open your eyes!"

Cilly opened them, looked around. Why, she was back in her own living room, stretched out on the divan! Perhaps she had never gone on the fire escape adventure. Perhaps it was all a wild dream. But—

"Another 10 seconds and you'd have been a goner," Dolan told her. "Whatever took you up there?"

Cilly sat up, smiling, a little forlornly. There were a thousand demons pounding in her head, and her throat still felt as if it were encased in an iron band, but she was glad to be alive.

She held her hand out weakly to Sergeant Dolan.

"Thanks for saving my life," she said simply. "You've got him?"

Dolan pounded his knee with a vicious fist.

"No, damn it, we haven't! My God, to think we were only 10 seconds behind him . . ."

"What happened?"

"Well, I hadn't gotten out of the front door after leaving you when Martin drove up. Seems he got a report from Connecticut. They checked on every old lady within a dozen miles of the town this Elliott woman was supposed to be visiting. There's no such person. There's nobody with a mother living on St. Ann's avenue in Brooklyn. Mrs. Elliott is a phony. So I came back and got Johnson here to let me into 2-A with his pass key. Just as soon as we opened the door, we heard something like glass crunching, and by the time we got to the bedroom, the bird had flown. Down the fire escape, of course. There wasn't a trace of him, except the footprints where he jumped, and a few tracks on the sidewalk. But we did get there in time to prevent his finishing you off . . . thank heaven!"

"Thank heaven, indeed," Cilly repeated, with forced cheerfulness. She stroked her throat tenderly.

"Now tell me," Dolan insisted, "what took you up there?"

"Curiosity, I guess. I had a feeling that we'd find something in one of the vacant apartments, either the one above me or Carruthers'. Only," she slumped back, despairingly, "I didn't see. He turned off the light before I could get a glimpse of him. Lord! To think how close we were!"

"What did you find up there?"

Cilly told him about the empty chest of drawers, the man's coat in the closet; she emphasized the barren atmosphere of the room, as if it were not really a woman's apartment home.

"I'm sure the secret to the whole affair is in that apartment upstairs," she finished.

Dolan nodded. "You're right about that . . . we're going back for a more thorough search. I wanted to be sure you were all right first."

"I'm fine now, thanks . . . I guess I don't choke so easily."

Dolan stood up and began to slip himself into his enormous raincoat. "Within 10 minutes," he assured her, "there'll be a man from headquarters to spend the night in Mrs. Elliott's apartment, just in case our friend does come back. In the meantime you're not to open your door to anyone understand that? Not to a soul! You don't know who this fellow may be. No matter who rings your bell, or whom you see standing out there in the hall, you're not to open that door. Remember that!"

"I won't," Cilly promised.

"Good. As soon as I can round up our fingerprint expert, I'll be back to go through that apartment thoroughly. And I'll bring along a good stout policeman to spend the night here with you. Now if you can just stick it out for 10 or 15 minutes . . ."

"Oh, I won't be afraid," Cilly assured him.

"All right. If you hear anything that frightens you, yell your lungs out, Johnson will hear you. I've asked him to keep a watch downstairs. We don't want anyone tampering with the lights, or hiding in the engine room . . . I'll be getting along; every minute I lose gives our gentleman friend that much longer to plan his getaway. I want the fingerprints in that place upstairs . . . they'll tell the story."

Left alone, Cilly shuddered. She was not near as brave as she had pretended to the sergeant. She sat there on the divan, where he had left her, straining her eyes to watch every nook and corner of the apartment at once. From where she sat, she could see into the bedroom next door; she could watch the fire escape window. If but a shadow crossed that window, she knew herself, she would scream loud enough to wake the dead . . .

She watched the banjo clock on the wall, listening to it tick away the seconds. She wondered which echoed loudest through the room—the sharp, staccato ticking of the clock, or the dull, thundering beat of her own heart.

Ten minutes, Sergeant Dolan had said. Fifteen minutes at the latest, until there would be a policeman on guard upstairs and a policeman down for company. She would breathe easier when they arrived.

But nothing could happen to her now. Over and over, she assured herself of that. The murderer would never risk a visit to her apartment, where all the lights were on, where he could not enter without her seeing him immediately. That would be walking into his own death sentence. He wouldn't dare.

Nervously, she rubbed a moist palm down her throat; it still pained from the pressure of the man's iron fingers . . . she remembered his hand as it slowly, cautiously reached in and switched out the lights.

Suddenly she wanted to scream. She imagined she could see that hand now, reaching to the switch on her wall; once more she felt those strangling fingers on her throat. . . . Why, that man would dare anything! He was a fiend, diabolical and cunning, and he did not fear a dozen Sergeant Dolans. If he suspected that she knew something, he would not hesitate now . . .

Then her eyes, glued on the fire escape window in the bedroom, noticed something she had quite forgotten. The window—that window alone of all those in the apartment—was not latched. She remembered leaving it open that way—about an inch—so that she could open it if she came down the fire escape.

Then, in the next instant, the room spun around to the insistent, intense ringing of the front doorbell. In sheer relief Cilly ran to press the lock-release buzzer in the foyer. Anything was better than the terrifying uncertainty of the empty apartment.

Halfway across the room she stopped. Sergeant Dolan's words rang in her ears: "No matter who rings your bell you're not to open the door!"

She stood there afraid to open the door and equally afraid not to open it. The bell rang again loud and demanding. Still she hesitated.

For the third time it sounded, but this time it was not one long, imperious ring. Three short rings sounded this time, three short, friendly rings.

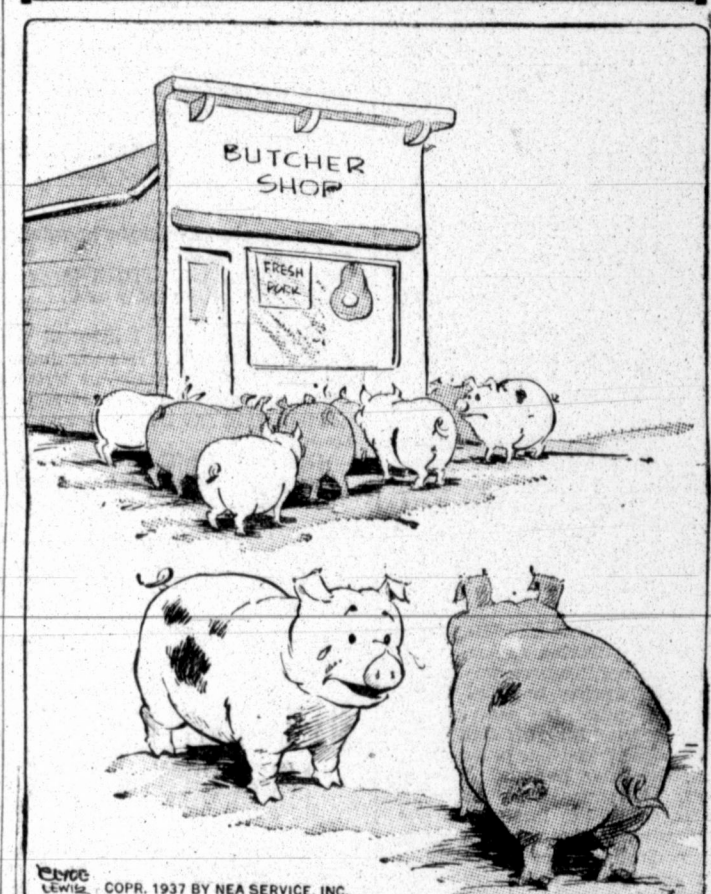

Instantly, Cilly ran to the foyer and pressed the buzzer. She pressed it eagerly, joyously, a new courage in her eyes transcending every vestige of the previous moment's fear.

Three short rings she had heard distinctly, and the one person in all the world who rang a bell with three short rings was Jim Kerrigan.
