Others marked the regime's dissolution more passively, picking flowers from a nearby garden and handing them to Marines. While the capital was celebrating, the fate of Saddam and his sons remained unknown, two days after they were targeted by four 2,000pound U.S. bombs in Baghdad.

The capital city is now one of those areas that has been added to the list of where the regime does not have control," said Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks at U.S. Central Command in Qatar.

Brooks said that Saddam loyalists were holding out in the north, notably at Saddam's hometown of Tikrit, and still posed a threat, including the possible use of weapons of mass destruction.

Gunshots and explosions rocked the University of Baghdad, where smoke rose over the campus after a firefight, CNN reported.

Marine tanks rolled into the heart of the city, on the east bank of the Tigris, greeted by people clapping and waving white flags. Civilians gestured to the Americans with V-forvictory signs. "We were nearly mobbed by people trying to shake our hands," said Maj. Andy Milburn of the 7th Marines. One Army contingent had to use razor-wire to hold back surging crowds of wellwishers.

"We're caught between a rock and a hard place," Porter said this morning. He said he finds it difficult to justify building while also decreasing staff.

"Our intent is to obey the law," he added. "We've approved to go ahead with the construction that meets Title IX requirements. Dr. Powers will go forward with the bidding and all that is needed to do that."

Porter said $175,000 has been set aside in the current budget for the girls softball field construction which should cover much of the preliminary work that needs to be done as soon as possible. The remaining costs can be covered in the next budget and beyond, if needed, ne said.

"Thank you, thank you, Mr. Bush," some of the looters shouted. An elderly man beat a portrait of Saddam with his shoe, while a younger man spat on the portrait.

Not everyone rejoiced.

"This is the destruction of Islam," said Qassim al-Shamari, 50, a laborer wearing an Arab robe. "After all, Iraq is our country. And what about all the women and children who died in the bombing?"

The U.S. Central Command reacted cautiously to the euphoria and chaos in Baghdad, pointing to locations in northern Iraq where significant pockets of pro-Saddam fighters remained.

"We'll continue to go where those pockets are and reduce them," said command spokesman Jim Wilkinson. "It'll just take time to find those pockets and destroy them and hopefully they'll surrender."

U.S. commanders focused attention on Tikrit, still a stronghold of loyalist troops, and the northern city of Mosul. Lt. Mark Kitchens, a Central Command spokesman, said special operations forces and airstrikes were "actively engaging" Iraqi forces in both cities.

U.S. special forces and Kurdish fighters seized a strategic hilltop near Mosul; senior Kurdish leader Hoshyar Zebari called it the most important gain in the region thus far.

Back in Baghdad, U.S. forces steadily expanded their reach, securing a military airport, capturing a prison and setting fire to a Republican Guard barracks. Milburn said the house of Saddam's son Odai was on fire, apparently hit by a bomb.

The Iraqi government's efforts to sustain its public relations campaign collapsed. State television went off the air Tuesday. On Wednesday, foreign journalists said their "minders" — government agents who monitor their reporting - did not turn up for work. There was no sign of Iraqi Information Minister Mohammed Saeed al-Sahhaf, whose daily briefings had constituted the main public face of the regime during the war. While intent on consolidating their hold on Baghdad, U.S. commanders also were turning their attention to Tikrit, about 90 miles to the north. Defended by well-trained troops, and home to many of Saddam's most devoted followers, the city of 260,000 is considered one of the few remaining strongholds of the Iraqi regime.

The Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, one of two main Iraqi Kurdish groups opposing Saddam, claimed Tuesday that Saddam already was hiding in Tikrit. U.S. officials said they didn't know if he had escaped Monday's bombing of a site in Baghdad's al-Mansour neighborhood where he and at least one of his sons reportedly were meeting.

The toll of journalists killed in the war reached 10, with three killed in U.S. military strikes in Baghdad on Tuesday.

Two cameramen, one from Ukraine and one from Spain, were killed when a U.S. tank fired into the Palestine Hotel, where hundreds of journalists are based.

commission reconvened

During the work session prior to their meeting, the commissioners heard a report on Promote Pampa Goals, an outgrowth of a goal-planning meeting the commission and city staff had in March at Pampa Country Club.

They also heard a recommendation to extend an audit agreement with Brown, Graham and Company in connection with implementing a new accounting system over the next year. John Horst, the city's director of finances, told the commissioners that it might be difficult to meet the mandated deadlines with a new audit firm. The only other firm that had bid on the auditing contract last time, he noted, has gone out of business and there appears to be no other local firm interested in bidding. The commission listened to recommendations from Bill Hildebrandt, city services director, and Sandy Burns, animal control supervisor, concerning rabies regulations. While the state recently changed rules allowing rabies vaccinations every three years, Hildebrandt and Burns recommended staying with the annual vaccination program because of the number of cases in Pampa.

Also on Tuesday, the board approved a report by Brown, Graham & Company on the school district's drop out reporting procedures. Gary Brown of the firm said they found seven student files from a total of 142 files tested in which documentation did not support the drop out code assigned to them and three files that had incomplete documentation according to Texas Education Agency requirements.

Brown attributed the problems to primarily to coding and clerical errors and recommended that the school district provide additional training in documentation and withdrawal paper work.

Burns said there were 27 cases last year and three cases so far this year.

The commission also heard a request from the High Plains Cruisers Car Club to use the M.K. Brown Auditorium parking lot Saturday without having to post liability insurance.

City Attorney Don Lane said the city regulations requiring insurance were developed for activities that required heavy equipment such as carnivals. He said the city could waive such requirements.

"We should have the field ready and playable by the 2004 season," he said.

Communist regime sees at least 75 dissidents convicted

HAVANA (AP) - Cuban courts have tried at least 75 government opponents in lightning-fast trials as ~ the communist island presses ahead with a crackdown on dissent, human rights activists said.

The known sentences for about half of them reportedly ranged from 15 to 27 years; the remaining sentences were expected by week's end. None of the trials has lasted more than one day, activists said.

Another four of those arrested in the crackdown were prosecuted on lesser crimes and received much shorter sentences, measured in months rather than years, yeteran activist Elizardo Sanchez said Tuesday. He was among the few leading government opponents not arrested last month.

International condemnation of the trials continued, with Peruvian writer Mario Vargas Llosa and the governments of Mexico, Canada and Sweden voicing protest on Tuesday.

The crackdown is "the natural expression of a dictatorship that has been oppressing human rights for years," Vargas Llosa said.

Some of the longest sentences were reserved for independent journalists, including 27 years for reporter and photographer Omar. Rodriguez Saludes; and 20 years each for poet and writer Raul Rivero, magazine editor Ricardo Gonzalez, and economics writer Oscar Espinosa Chepe.

Esther Mok went to Hong Kong to shop but came home carrying a deadly flulike virus that has since ter Lim Hng Kiang said at a spread to more than 100 people in Singapore and killed both of her parents and her pastor.

Miraculously, she has survived.

Mok, a 26-year-old former flight attendant, was one of three original cases of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome, or SARS, to emerge in Singapore early last month.

very contagious - when admitted to a Singapore hospital on March 1, but doctors had no idea that she was suffering from the strange form of pneumonia that had already killed dozens in China.

She had regular visits from her family and members of her church — all oblivious to the fact that they were exposing themselves to SARS.

Her father, mother and pastor have since died of SARS. Her uncle is in intensive care battling the illness. Mok's grandmother and brother are also sick but in stable condition.

In fact, all but a handful of the 118 reported cases in Singapore have been traced to Mok, and health officials have dubbed her a SARS "super spreader."

Two other Singaporean women also traveled to Hong Kong in February and developed SARS after exposure to a Chinese doctor, Liu Jianjun, while staying at the Metropole Hotel. They have not infected SINGAPORE (AP) — others, the health ministry said.

> "Esther Mok infected the whole lot of us," health minisrecent press conference.

> Two other so-called super spreaders, Canadian Kwan Siu-Chiu and American Chinese businessman Johnny Chen, fell ill after a stay at the Metropole hotel and have helped spread the illness around the world. Unlike Mok, both died.

"We don't know why some people are able to spread it so Mok was very sick - and easily and some don't," said Chew Suok Kai, health ministry's director of epidemiology and disease control.

> Experts from Atlanta's Centers for Disease Control will be in Singapore later this week to further analyze data from SARS patients here in a bid to find out how the "super spreader" phenomenon works, Chew said.

"There are so many things we want to know about this disease but don't know yet. One of the key things we are working on is how the superspreader spreads," said Chew.

Mok herself has recovered and could be released from a hospital, but authorities are reluctant to let her go, fearing the media frenzy that is likely to greet her.

Like "Typhoid" Mary Mallon, who famously infected dozens of people in the New York area in the early 1900s and was forced by the government to live alone on an island, Mok is living her own modern-day exile in a hospital room networked with televisions and telephones.

"He's got good stuff and he's really gotten smooth," Boone said. "When we got him, he was a thrower. But he has smoothed out his delivery."

Dempster scattered seven hits over nine innings and Jason LaRue hit his first home run of the season in the 10th inning to beat the Houston Astros 2-1 on Tuesday night.

"The thing about Dempster is he is a horse," Boone said. "But now he's gotten pitch efficient. He's a pitcher now. When he came to us, he was a thrower with a real good arm."

Deer Land White Museum has received a copy of "Taps" that tells the story of the simple bugle call consisting of only 24 notes. This bugle call has been a source of comfort to many - from Boy Scouts on field trips to men and women serving our country in foreign lands and to those who have lost loved ones. Author Richard H. Schneider, a veteran of World War II, is senior editor and writer for Guideposts magazine. After hearing "Taps" many times at funerals following the terrorists' attacks on Sept. 11, 2001, he began to search for the origin of the bugle call.

It was first played on a hot July night in 1862 when 140,000 Union soldiers were encamped in soggy mud at Harrison's Landing on the Berkeley Plantation in southern Virginia. These men had been a part of the Union's Army of the Potomac commanded by Gen. George B. McClellan (for whom McClellan Creek was named.)

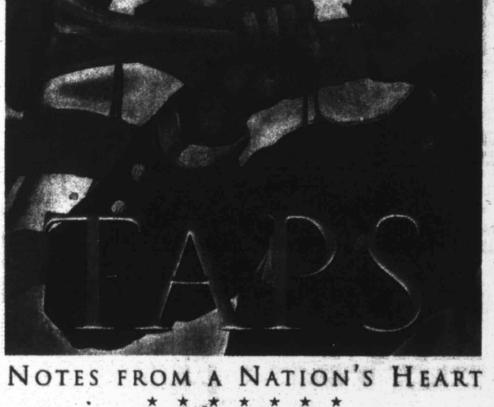

McClellan had expected to take Richmond, the Confederate capital, and end the Civil War quickly.

But the Union forces had been repelled by the Confederate forces of Gen. Robert E. Lee and had retreated to the protection of the Union gunboats at Harrison's Landing. Brigadier Gen. Daniel Adams Butterfield, a scholarly 31year-old former law student from N.Y., Utica, was deeply concerned his about dying men. Sitting on a chair outside the tent where he camped, he sent for his bugler, Private wounded and

Oliver Willcox Norton, and asked Norton to play some notes written in pencil on the back of an envelope. Butterfield changed the length of some of the notes and, when he was satisfied with the result, instructed Norton to play the new bugle call instead of the regulation

Bill freezing | Award-winning quilt postal rates sent to Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) -Americans will be spared another rise in the price of stamps for three years under legislation en route to President Bush for signature into law.

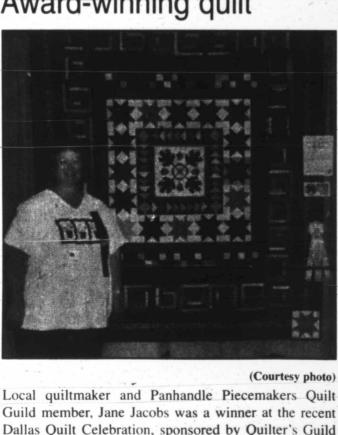

The legislation takes advantage of a discovery that the money-losing post office was paying far too much into the Civil Service Retirement System, a program that covers employees who joined the force before 1984.

The bill, which passed the House 424-0 on Tuesday, allows the Postal Service to correct its payment formula, but under the condition that the savings be used to pay off the agency's debts and to stop any further rate increases until at least 2006. The bill passed the Senate last week.

Rep. John McHugh, R-N.Y., chief sponsor of the bill, said it would provide future viability for a service that employs⁹ million people and accounts for some 9 percent of the gross domestic product. The bill "certainly would go a long way toward boosting the economic activities of this nation as a whole," he said.

It also "gives money back to the postal customer and allows us all to hold onto our 37-cent stamps for two more years," said Rep. Tom Davis, R-Va., chairman of the House Government Reform Committee.

Passage, the Postal Service said in a statement, "is good news not just for the Postal Service, but for everyone who uses the mail."

Dallas Quilt Celebration, sponsored by Quilter's Guild of Dallas. Jacobs' quilt, "Autumn Splendor," won third in the medallion division. Susie Edwards of Quilted Keepsakes did the quilting.
