"We all see the world from the filter of our own experience," mused

Mark Cradduck after talking with fellow Vietnam veterans for more than an hour last week.

While some of the former soldiers viewed their service in a positive light, others still hold deep resentments from that time in their lives.

Gary Steward remembers being drafted and taken from his wife of only two weeks without being able to arrange for her welfare while he was gone.

Vietnamese people for years," Danny Martin said. "I didn't trust them.'

Some of the veterans say they can never eat rice again because they ate so much of it while in Vietnam. Some don't have a problem with eating rice at all.

"I couldn't wait to get over there," Cradduck remembers. "I was ready for a fight. I was afraid it would be over before I got there.'

Cradduck respected • the Vietnamese, he said. They were hard-working people. He remembers being guided by a man he knew was a North Korean into extremely dangerous areas. Yet he was never threatened, probably because of the North Korean's protection.

Chaney remembered a local soldier who tried to help a little Vietnamese girl and she blew up, killing him.

Analysts see more Fed rate hikes coming down the pike

WASHINGTON (AP) — In coming months, consumers can expect more of what they have seen for nearly a year — a gradual increase in interest rates controlled by the Federal Reserve.

That was the message delivered by the Fed when on Tuesday policy-makers for the eighth time increased a key interest rate by a quarter-point, pushing the federal funds rate up to 3 percent.

That increase was immediately matched by a quarter-point increase in commercial banks' prime lending rate, the benchmark rate for millions of consumer and business loans, which moved up to 6 percent, the highest that rate has been since the fall of 2001.

The latest Fed action came despite the fact that the economy has slowed in recent weeks under the weight of rising energy

The Fed took note of the slowdown in the statement explaining data suggest that the solid pace of spending growth has slowed somewhat, partly in response to the earlier increases in energy prices."

But the Fed also noted that "pressures on inflation have picked up in recent months and pricing power is more evident."

> While they are getting a little worried about growth, they are still more worried about inflation.'

> > — David Wyss Economist

Analysts say Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and his colleagues, caught between a slowing economy and rising inflation, have decided to worry more about inflation. "While they are getting a little worried about growth, they are still more worried about inflation," said David Wyss, chief economist at Standard & Poor's in New Tuesday, saying that "recent York. "We should expect more of the same in terms of interest rate increases." Wyss predicted that the nomic activity.

Fed could very well keep raising rates by a quarterpoint at its five remaining meetings this year — in late June, August, September, November and December. That would leave the funds rate at 4.25 percent by the end of the year.

Wyss said that may be the "neutral" level the Fed has been seeking, meaning a rate that is not so low that it stimulates extra growth or so high that it is holding growth back.

The Fed is seeking to move rates up from the unusually low levels where they were pushed to jumpstart the economy in the wake of the 2001 recession and the extended jobless recovery that followed. The funds rate was at a 46-year low of 1 percent last year before the Fed started tightening credit.

Carl Tannenbaum, chief economist at LaSalle Bank, said he looked for quarterpoint increases at the next three meetings through September, but he said the central bank could well pause at that time to take stock of how the rate increases are affecting eco-

Baby at center of life support fight dies

terminally ill infant at the center of a life support fight died Wednesday while still receiving full medical treatment.

Six-month-old Knya Dismuke-Howard had leukemia that spread to her

Doctors at Memorial Hermann Children's hospital said continued care would be futile and a hospital ethics committee decided last week

HOUSTON (AP) — A to remove her from life support Monday, despite objections from her family.

Knya also had multipleorgan failure and a serious bacterial infection and was on morphine to relieve pain. She was diagnosed with leukemia five months ago.

U.S. Rep. Sheila Jackson Lee faxed letters to Memorial Hermann and Texas Children's hospital Monday, asking that Memorial Hermann reconsider or that Children's assume care.

About three dozen people protested the hospital's decision on Tuesday. Some held signs that said "euthanasia is not ethical" and "thou shalt not kill."

Another protest and prayer vigil, organized by community activist and family spokesman Quanell X, had been planned for Sunday.

Better option: A real filibuster

the false choice between toleration Democratic filibusters that enfeeble their majority and the so-called "nuclear option" - a ruling that filibusters of judicial nominations are unconstitutional which will set off partisan wrangling for the balance of the Bush tenure.

It is absurd to try to tell the American people why filibusters of judicial nomiviolate nations Constitution while those of presidential nonjudicial appointments and of regular legislation do not. The American people are going to see the denial of the right of unlimited debate as the equivalent of FDR's courtpacking plan, which doomed the second term of his presi-death. Give them enough rope and they will hang themselves by their vocal cords. Frist just needs to end the "virtual" filibuster and make the Democrats stage a real one, replete with quorum calls, 24/7 sessions and truly endless debate covered word for word by C-SPAN for all the nation to see - and ridicule.

Frist should bring up a say Charles Pickering - and let the Democrats explain, at tedious length, why they are tying up the entire nation over a judgeship for Mississippi. While the public would possibly tolerate a filibuster over a Supreme Court nomination or over a particularly important piece of legislation with enormous consequence, they would never allow a filibuster over so inconsequential an item, and the backlash would be fierce.

To force the Democrats to filibuster over such a matter would be akin to the way

Republicans to shut down the government in the budget fight. In the era of 24-hour news and cable TV, the Democrats will find that they cannot stage a real, redblooded filibuster without hurting themselves politically each day they talk.

A filibuster would attract wide notice. Bring the cots into the Democratic and Republican antechambers and stage quorum calls throughout the night, as in the old days of civil-rights legislation, and the nation will notice. The Democrats will leave America to wonder why they are spending all of their time debating a judgeship in Mississippi when they are not addressing the problems of healthcare,

HIV education improves in prisons

Last year, among Texas' most isolated and dangerous population, 73,800 teaching moments occurred.

This was the number of times, according to the AIDS Foundation Houston, that trained inmate educators gave relatives, friends and fellow inmates facts about how to prevent HIV. The figure doesn't count the waitlisted classroom presentations that these volunteers deliver each week. That such teachable moments happen daily is a public health success for all Texans.

Though budget cuts have forced prisons to remove most chaplains and end substance abuse programs, HIV agency showed commitment education actually improving.

turns out to be highly effective. It's far less costly than hiring doctors to do the same job.

Douglas, others compete in final Tri-State event of high school rodeo season

By MICHAEL J. STEVENS Sports Editor

Members of the Pampa High School Rodeo Club competed in the final Tri-State Rodeo event of the season last weekend in Dalhart. The two day event was the final opportunity for riders to hone their skills before state and other post-season events

When she isn't competing, Douglas says she likes working with her dad in his body shop. "We rebuild old cars and go to car shows," said Douglas, who spends her winters taking part in stock shows.

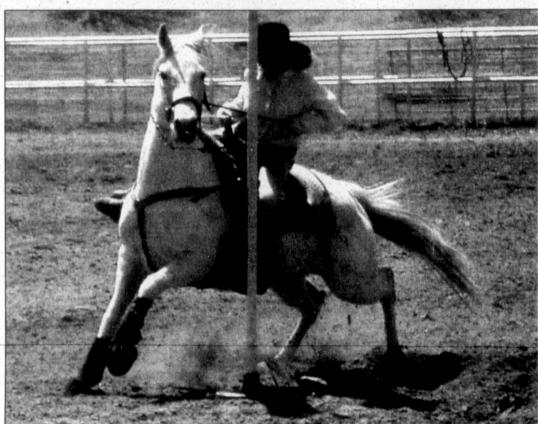

Douglas plans to attend West Texas A&M University after she graduates. She says she will compete on the WT rodeo team. She later plans to attend a finishing school with a degree in psychology. "I have always enjoyed helping people," said Douglas, a well-spoken, polite young lady.

Until then, there is still plenty of high school rodeo ahead for her and her PHS

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: My in-laws are retired and live about four hours dog loves and owner myself, I don't mind them bringing the dog. What I do mind is that Liebchen keeps marking his territory INSIDE my home. During a two-day visit at Easter, he urinated in at least four locations.

When this happens, my mother-in-law just giggles and says, "That's what little boys do." I have pointed out that my dog doesn't do it, and it is not acceptable behavior. She just shrugs. After they left, I found another spot where Liebchen had urinated. This time he took the finish off an antique copper plant stand. My mother-in-law never even considered punishing or scolding

There is no question that it's Liebchen doing this. He has ruined a sofa, a chair and a dining room rug in my sister-inlaw's home. Abby, the dog is house-trained and he's not incontinent. He does it because he thinks he's in charge -- which in their house he is.

My husband is reluctant to say anything to his parents, although this bothers him as much as it does me. Is it appropriate for me to discipline their dog in my home? If not, how can I politely tell them that if they can't control their dog, he is no longer welcome? -- SATURATED IN ATLANTA

DEAR SATURATED: That your in-laws would allow their animal to destroy your home is disgraceful. It should not be your job to discipline their dog. That's THEIR job.

seem to be up to it, the next time they mention they're coming for a visit, offer to board little Liebchen at a kennel. Or try this: Suggest that instead of them coming to visit you -- you and their son will go to visit THEM. answer a lot of painful ques-(And take your dog.)

DEAR ABBY: My husband's aunt, "Vivian," recently confided away. When they visit, they bring a family secret. She told me that their male miniature schnauzer, my father-in-law is not my hus-"Liebchen," with them. Being a band's biological father. (I have always instinctively felt that he wasn't.) Aunt Vivian also informed me that the person was her now-deceased husband, "Uncle Zeke." Abby, it was incest. Uncle Zeke was my husband's mother's brother.

Aunt Vivian asked me never to divulge this to anyone, but my husband and I have a marriage that's based on trust. I feel that I should tell him. But if I do, it will mean breaking a promise to an old woman whose husband is no longer here to defend himself. Should I go to my husband with this, or go to my mother-in-law and tell her?

My husband and his parents do not have a close relationship. He has always been treated like the black sheep in the family. His younger brother was given all the attention and was treated like a prince by his parents. An example: My in-laws had a family portrait taken of them with their youngest son. My husband was not asked to be in the picture. Because of this, I feel I wouldn't be upsetting a close family if I reveal this.

What should I do? I'm afraid if I don't tell my husband and he finds out later that I knew, it will cause problems in our marriage. -- LOST IN SOUTH CAROLINA

DEAR LOST: Aunt Vivian didn't confide a family secret; she exploded a family bombshell. It would explain why your husband has been treated the way he has by his parents all these years.

It was unfair of Aunt Vivian However, since they don't to place such a burden on your shoulders, so go back to this fountain of information and tell her that you don't keep secrets from your husband and she has a choice -- she can tell him or you will. It could tions for him.
