Saudi foreign official bashes Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saudi Arabia's foreign minister says the Bush administration did not heed some Saudi warnings on occupying Iraq and that he doesn't believe a new constitution and elections will solve the emerging nation's problems.

Prince Saud al-Faisal also said his country was still holding out the prospect of a peace treaty with Israel, but could have no diplomatic contact in the meantime, as other Arab and Muslim countries have had. He said Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon has not acted on opportunities for peacemaking after his withdrawal from Gaza.

"He does something and then immediately goes to the United Nations and makes a speech saying, 'I am not going to do this, I am not going to do that,'" Saud told The Associated Press.

"We are not establishing relations just for the heck of it," he added. "It would be false because we are in a state of conflict."

In a wide-ranging interview Thursday, Saud said he'd like to see oil prices drop about $20 a barrel from their current $60-plus range, but predicted a lack of refineries will keep consumer prices higher even if crude becomes cheaper.

JIHAD

Terror charge added against son in Lodi case

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A man already being held on charges of lying to authorities about attending a terrorist training camp in Pakistan has been indicted on federal charges alleging he intended "to wage jihad in the United States."

Thursday's indictment accuses Hamid Hayat, 23, of providing material support to terrorists, the most serious charge that could be filed absent an actual terrorist act, prosecutors said.

Hayat was one of five men from the same suburban mosque arrested earlier this year in Lodi, an agricultural town of 62,000 about 35 miles south of Sacramento.

"Whatever was taking shape in Lodi isn't going to happen now," U.S. Attorney McGregor Scott said.

Scott said he doesn't know exactly what was planned in Lodi, but he believes indicting Hayat and deporting two Islamic leaders connected to the mosque ended it.

The government never charged the two religious leaders, but it has alleged the two intended to set up a terror training camp as part of a planned religious school in Lodi. During an immigration hearing last month, an FBI agent testified that at the camp, "individuals would be taught ... to commit acts of violence against the U.S."

The indictment alleges Hayat provided support and resources for carrying out acts of terror between March 2003 and June 2005, when he was arrested shortly after returning to the United State from Pakistan.

Hayat "intended, upon receipt of orders from other individuals, to wage jihad (holy war) in the United States," it says.

If convicted of all charges, he could face up to 31 years in prison.

Hayat's attorney, Wazhma Mojaddidi, said prosecutors still offered no concrete evidence that her client attended the camp.

USS Oriskany, moved to Texas, now faces Hurricane Rita

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — A retired aircraft carrier towed from the Florida Panhandle to Texas to avoid hurricanes this season now faces a menacing Hurricane Rita, officials said.

The USS Oriskany was moved in June from Pensacola to a Navy Reserve Fleet facility in Beaumont, Texas, to continue environmental testing that would determine whether it can be safely sunk in the Gulf of Mexico as an artificial reef.

The ship is currently moored about 75 miles east of Houston, facing a storm that forecasters at the National Hurricane Center said would make landfall as a "dangerous hurricane of at least Category 3 intensity."

The Navy has no plans to move the Oriskany out of Rita's projected path, said Lisa Coghlan, a Pensacola Naval Air Station spokeswoman.

"The protocol in the military is to send ships out to sea during a hurricane — if they're seaworthy," she said. "But, in this case, we don't have a choice."

The 888-foot carrier, a combat veteran of the Korean and Vietnam wars, would be the largest ship ever purposely sunk to serve as a reef.

It was originally set for sinking this summer.

In January, the date was delayed until after the hurricane season due to the death of a key scientist working on the environmental analysis.

PRMC on standby to take in up to 22 evacuees from Hurricane Rita

By MARILYN POWERS
Staff Writer

Pampa Regional Medical Center is prepared to receive up to 22 evacuees from the Texas Gulf Coast area which is expected to be hit by Hurricane Rita sometime this weekend.

"We're just on standby," said Terry Barnes, PRMC marketing director, in a telephone interview this morning. "It hasn't been confirmed whether we're going to get any evacuees."

"If patients come up to Amarillo, Amarillo will take care of all they can and then will disperse them among four area hospitals, us being one of them," Barnes said.

The Eastern Texas Panhandle Chapter of the American Red Cross, headquartered in Pampa, is also on standby.

"We are not opening a shelter at this time, but we are on standby. We've been put on standby to assist Amarillo with their shelter as needed," said Jana Gregory, executive director.

A total of 65 evacuees are on their way to Pampa, but all are going to be housed with family members or private individuals, not in a public shelter, Gregory said. Fifty of those are being assisted by one family, with the remainder being relatives of three Pampa families, she said.

Persons interested in donating cots, bedding, pillows and food to hurricane evacuees may call the Red Cross office at 669-7121 and have their names and telephone numbers placed on a list to be contacted if the items should be needed later, Gregory said.

"I can't take any items right now because I don't have any place to put them right now. We don't need the donations at the moment, but would be interested in putting their names on a list," Gregory said this morning.

The center of Hurricane Rita was located 220 miles southeast of Galveston and 210 miles southeast of Port Arthur at 10 a.m. today, according to the National Weather Service. The Category 4 hurricane was expected to make landfall near the southwest Louisiana and upper Texas coasts early Saturday.

Hurricane Rita is also expected to cause flooding in the area along the Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama coasts where Katrina made landfall. Tides there are running about two feet above normal and are expected to increase to three to five feet and be accompanied by large waves and swells, according to the NWS.

The hurricane is moving to the northwest at about 10 miles per hour. Maximum sustained winds this morning were at 135 miles per hour with higher bursts. Hurricane force winds extend outward up to 85 miles from the center, and tropical storm force winds extend outward up to 205 miles.

Texas has been hit by 59 hurricanes in the period from 1851 through 2004, according to the NWS.

hundreds of workers were evacuated from offshore oil rigs. Texas Gov. Rick Perry said state officials had been in contact with plants about "taking appropriate procedures to safeguard their facilities."

At 11 a.m. EDT, Rita was about 210 miles southeast of Port Arthur, moving northwest near 10 mph. Its winds had weakened to near 135 mph — down from 175 mph on Thursday. That meant Rita was on the border between a Category 3 and a Category 4 storm.

Its hurricane-force winds extended up to 85 miles from the center, and its tropical storm-force winds reached outward 205 miles, meaning Houston and Galveston might not feel Rita's full fury but could still get battered.

Two communities that stood to bear the brunt of the storm were Port Arthur, a city of about 58,000 that is home to industries that include oil, shrimping and crawfishing; and Beaumont, a petrochemical, shipbuilding and port city of about 114,000. Beaumont was the site of the 1901 Spindletop oil gusher that gave birth to the modern petroleum industry.

The first bands of rain were expected before nightfall Friday. Forecasters warned of the possibility of a storm surge of 15 to 20 feet, battering waves and rain of up to 20 inches, with more than 25 inches possible over the next several days as the storm moves inland into Texas and Louisiana and wrings itself out.

Texas officials scrambled to reroute several inbound highways to accommodate outbound traffic, but many people were waiting so long they ran out of gas and were forced to park.

"We know you're out there," Houston Mayor Bill White said of the congestion that extended well into Louisiana. "We understand there's been fuel shortages."

Texas Army National Guard trucks were escorted by police to directly provide motorists with gasoline. The state was also working to get more than 200,000 gallons of gas to fuel-starved stations in the Houston area.

By late Thursday night, the traffic was at least moving slowly, but was still backed up for about 100 miles in what White called "one of the largest mass evacuations in American history."

Rita brought steady rain to New Orleans for the first time since Katrina. The forecast was for 3 to 5 inches in the coming days — dangerously close to the amount engineers said could send floodwaters pouring back into recently dry neighborhoods.

est from loans and money from the Texas Revolving Loan Fund, the PEDC had an income totaling about $9.6 million before it was dissolved. About a half million dollars of that remains in city coffers, said City Manager John Horst.

Of the rest, $4.4 million was used for financial incentives, Horst said. About $2.3 million was used for loans and loan guarantees, and about $2.9 million went for expenses.

John Curry said the city received about $10 million in construction value, taxable assets of about $5 million and an estimated promotional value across the nation of $1 million.

Chuck White said there are 250 jobs in Pampa today with an estimated annual payroll of $6.5 million because of the former PEDC. He said the estimated payroll dollars since the inception of the PEDC would total about $50 million.

The committee is planning a town hall meeting concerning the economic development corporation at 6:30 p.m., Thursday, Oct. 6, at M.K. Brown Auditorium.

The next scheduled meeting of the Pampa Economic Development Group Promotional Committee is 5:30 p.m., Thursday, Sept. 29, at the Pampa Chamber of Commerce offices.

Rita estimates

By The Associated Press
Jack Colley, the state's emergency management coordinator, said he expects the storm to:

- Affect 19 Texas counties, 5.2 million people and 1.8 million households.
- Destroy 5,687 homes.
- Generate 26 million tons of debris.
- Leave a damage total of $8.25 billion.

20 killed in bus blast

WILMER, Texas (AP) — A bus carrying elderly evacuees from Hurricane Rita caught fire early today on a gridlocked highway near Dallas, killing as many as 20 people, authorities said.

"Deputies were unable to get everyone off the bus," spokesman Don Peritz said. "We believe it's going to be closer to 20 fatalities."

The bus, carrying about

45 people who had been traveling since Thursday, was engulfed with flames, causing a 17-mile backup on Interstate 45 that was already congested with evacuees from the Gulf Coast. The bus was reduced to a blackened, burned-out shell, surrounded by numerous police cars and ambulances.

Don't forget the heaven in your own backyard

The drive to heaven on earth is one of the most scenic routes in the Texas Panhandle. Once the highway drops off the caprock, you are encompassed in rolling hills with tree filled creek and river bottoms and communities populated by farmers, ranchers and oilmen — Texas folk.

On either side of your auto, the mesas and buttes created by God and His timeless landscaping technique show their ramparts. As you drive closer to heaven, the prairie becomes stepped and covered by a sagebrush sea, also laced with tree lined creeks abundant with wild turkey and deer.

Heaven itself is situated on the east side of Wolf Creek, one of the most historic running water streams in the Panhandle, and, if one didn't know heaven was hidden under the tree canopy, you'd pass her by.

"We've got the corner on Texas" is one of heaven's monikers. Another uses the words "middle" and "nowhere" to describe where she sits on the road map. This little piece of heaven is a jewel undiscovered by most travelers. One has to know something is happening under her trees to experience her shine.

Saturday evening and night in Lipscomb, Texas, with the late summer sky filled with turkey vultures and hawks working the overhead breeze — the sounds of children running and playing in a carefree environment void of the worries presented in larger cities, a herd (it twern't no m e a s l y flock) of wild turkey seemingly uncaring of the event going on in their backyard, a full moon coming up and providing its natural light along with the glow from lanterns, laughter and conversation as friends and acquaintances dined on brisket, homemade cobbler and ice cream, and the sounds of renowned fiddler Frankie McWhorter and his band playing western swing music with boot scooters of all ages (Closet Writer and his two left feet included) promenading the dance floor situated under the huge trees, the fiddling of Canadian Rose — Annie Alexander — added a special moment to my night in heaven.

It could not have been a better night out in our Texas Panhandle! And folks, this little piece of heaven is right in our own backyard, but, don't blink or yawn for you'll miss her and perhaps, wind up in Oklahoma!

Lipscomb represents a place in Closet Writer's mind that takes me away from the humdrum events of the world around me — of war, politics, natural disasters, loss of loved ones — and permeates within me a calmness, a licking of wounds respite that reminds me there are still places on earth, in our Panhandle, that can be called heaven.

Today in History

By The Associated Press

Today is Friday, Sept. 23, the 266th day of 2005. There are 99 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Sept. 23, 1779, during the Revolutionary War, the American warship Bon Homme Richard defeated the HMS Serapis after the American commander, John Paul Jones, is said to have declared: "I have not yet begun to fight!"

On this date:

In 1642, Harvard College in Cambridge, Mass., held its first commencement.

In 1780, British spy John Andre was captured along with papers revealing Benedict Arnold's plot to surrender West Point to the British.

In 1806, the Lewis and Clark expedition returned to St. Louis from the Pacific Northwest.

In 1846, the planet Neptune was discovered by German astronomer Johann Gottfried Galle.

In 1938, a time capsule, to be opened in the year 6939, was buried on the grounds of the World's Fair in New York City.

In 1939, Sigmund Freud, the founder of psychoanalysis, died in London.

In 1952, Republican vice-presidential candidate Richard M. Nixon went on television to deliver what came to be known as the "Checkers" speech as he refuted allegations of improper campaign financing.

In 1957, nine black students who had entered Little Rock Central High School in Arkansas were forced to withdraw because of a white mob outside.

In 1962, New York's Philharmonic Hall (since renamed Avery Fisher Hall) formally opened as the first unit of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts.

In 1973, former Argentine president Juan Peron was returned to power.

Ten years ago: In a wide-ranging interview aboard Air Force One, President Clinton admitted he had tended in the past to get hung up on details, and pledged to do a better job in providing reassuring leadership to Americans confused by tumultuous times.

Five years ago: At the Sydney Olympics, Marion Jones won the women's 100-meter final in 10.75 seconds; Maurice Greene took the men's 100 in 9.87 seconds. Commentator Carl T. Rowan died in Washington at age 75.

One year ago: President Bush denied painting too rosy a picture about Iraq, and said he would consider sending more troops if asked; Iraq's interim leader, Ayad Allawi, standing with Bush in the White House Rose Garden, said additional troops weren't needed.

Congress extended three middle-class tax cuts in a $146 billion package.

Government is not universal panacea

Here's another example of federal help: The Environmental Protection Agency has announced that the floodwaters in New Orleans are dangerous.

I don't know what kinds of tests the EPA ran, but everybody already knew that. All it takes is a glance and a sniff, not to mention the incessant commentary from the television reporters wading around in it.

Personally, I have always been skittish about drinking New Orleans water, even before the recent catastrophe. After all, the city is at the tail end of the Mississippi River, which has collected other people's dumping all the way from the Rockies and the Alleghenies. Of course, on my youthful excursions to the Crescent City, I never drank much water anyway.

All too often, the government and politicians spend our money to tell us what we already know: Stagnant floodwater is dangerously polluted; the federal budget is out of balance; the border is out of control — our control, anyway.

Now we can all look forward to expensive windbag hearings on something else we already know. The Federal Emergency Management Agency fouled up, dropped the ball and flubbed the dub. After unwisely boasting during a press conference before the storm even came ashore that the agency had prepositioned people and supplies, it took FEMA three days to deliver a single bottle of water, longer in some places.

It doesn't require a logistical genius to load a helicopter with bottled water and Meals Ready to Eat and deliver them a few miles to a crowd of people complaining on international television that they have been abandoned and some are dying of dehydration.

FEMA had too many tailored trousers on chairs and too few Gucci loafers on the ground. The director of FEMA, Michael Brown, even claimed to have been surprised to discover there were people at the convention center.

The president of an adjoining parish said the first he saw of FEMA was a full seven days after the storm, when two bureaucrats showed up and announced they were there to "assess your needs." Those bureaucrats are lucky the folks in that area didn't shoot them on sight.

Mistake One was when Congress, in its usual thoughtless and sloppy fashion,

Feulner on enduring influence of Hayek

More than 60 years ago, when the world was at war and government planning of economies was held in the highest esteem by the Western democracies, the great libertarian economist F.A. Hayek wrote "The Road to Serfdom," a provocative work that quickly became one of the century's most important manifestoes for economic, political and personal freedom.

Hayek warned that giving governments more and more control over the economies of free societies was not going to lead to socialist utopias but to totalitarian hellholes like Nazi Germany. "The Road to Serfdom," one of those masterpieces of liberty that rocks the lives and awakens the minds of many who read it, is as influential and relevant today as it ever was.

Ed Feulner, the president of the Heritage Foundation public policy think tank in Washington, knew Hayek personally and is something of an expert on the "The Road to Serfdom's" ideas and its enduring influence.

Q: Why should everyone who is serious about politics, government policy and freedom still read "The Road to Serfdom" today?

A: I think "The Road to Serfdom" is essential for understanding the modern political landscape, wherever you live. The point Hayek makes in an educated but not supercilious way is that the road to hell is paved with good intentions. You've got a lot of people who see a problem, whether it's a social problem or some difficulty afflicting some part of the body politic, and the immediate suggestion or thought is, "Gee, somebody ought to do something about that" and the second thought is, "It ought to be the gov-

As Hayek points out, different government bureaucracies operate different agendas. The legislators, when they put things in terms of central control, remove options to people. So "The Road to Serfdom" really is a set of guideposts for what the individual citizen's relationship is to government. The basic principles outlined there are as relevant today as they were 60 years ago.

Q: What did Hayek mean by "serfdom" in 1944?

A: His fundamental belief was that during wartime, when you have a concerted effort and everyone is pulling together to defeat a common enemy, you're willing to give up certain freedoms. But, when the war leaves, it is very hard sometimes for the government to go back to the way it used to be. Instead, they think, "Hey, this is efficient. This is the way it ought to continue to be and let's keep it that way." So what you have is an individual controlling less and less of the decisions in his private life.

Basically, what he's talking about is that the more decisions are made by somebody else about where you live, what kind of job you have, how much taxes you pay, what you can do with your own property — whether it's real estate property or other things like a car — the less real freedom you have. The more of a serf you are. The more subservient you are to government.

Q: The book's central message was that the difference between Nazi Germany, fascist Italy and communist Soviet Union is not that great when you are the individual and you're looking at big government.

A: Right. The notion in all three cases that you just cited was the idea that it could very easily happen in a democratic structure like ours, where if we just give up a little more freedom, somehow we're going to be more secure. Government will be able to provide this for us, whether it is cradle-to-grave health care or whatever other desirable sounding program it might be. The next thing you know, you've got the government fundamentally making decisions like who goes to the head of the line to get a gall bladder operation or to have their cancerous prostate removed.

Q: In America was Hayek seen as a dangerous radical nutcase by the establishment?

A: Oh, yeah. The establishment, especially in Washington, which had the levers of power and which had built up boards and commissions and control groups here for virtually every part of the economy, didn't like to hear what Hayek had to say. But at the same time, there was a residue of sufficient popular belief that man's destiny is not to be controlled, rather it is to be free and to expand freedom. That you could actually have a book of this intellectual content be run in a condensed version of the monthly Reader's Digest, as it was, is unbelievable, when you think about what's in every current magazine today.

Q: Who were some of the powerful people who would eventually read "The Road to Serfdom," love it and put its ideas, lessons and values into practice?

A: In the political arena, probably the most prominent one who immediately comes to mind is Ronald Reagan. But even today Hayek's book has a continuing influence. When I visited former Gov. Jim Gilmore of Virginia in his offices in Richmond, he asked me, "Who is the most important person in terms of ideas that you have dealt with, since Heritage is involved in ideas?" And I said, "Oh, probably Hayek" and he reached behind his desk and pulled out a thumb-worn, paper-bound version of "The Road to Serfdom." He said, "This is one of the most important books I ever read. I read it in my freshman year in college and it changed my life."

I was at a new-members of Congress conference in Baltimore a year and a half ago. I was sitting next to a brand new member from Tennessee, Marsha Blackburn, and we started talking about influences on our lives. The first person she mentioned was Hayek and "The Road to Serfdom." Who would think a first-term congresswoman from Tennessee would come up with an answer like that?

Q: The book is a classic, but 99 percent of the college kids in America have never heard Hayek's name or been introduced to his ideas.

A: No, they haven't. But that goes back to the notion of how does the influence of an idea spread. It's there. A lot of the faculty who have their heads more or less screwed on straight at some point or another have, if not been influenced by him, at least been exposed to Hayek.

Is it as widely taught as it should be, or as widely influential as it should be? No. But it is probably more so than John Maynard Keynes. Keynes, who was his great intellectual nemesis in the late 1930s, through the '40s and into the '50s, and who was then infinitely more popular and people would say more influential than Hayek, is no longer considered mainstream. His economic theories no longer hold. Hayek, on the other hand, has still got the fundamentals right. They're still as relevant as they were back then.

Q: What would Hayek think about the size, scope and power the federal government has today?

A: He'd be dismayed, for a couple of reasons. First of all, he'd be staggered by the sheer size of the federal government and the size of the tax bite, both in absolute numbers and also in terms of the percent of GDP. But he'd be more concerned about the regulations coming out of the government.

Q: Have today's conservatives forgotten Hayek's lessons and principles?

A: No. I don't think so. They're probably not as visible in terms of our day-to-day activities as they should be ... But the bottom line is, Hayek is there to remind us of the longer-term truths. He doesn't operate in two-year election cycles. That's why Hayek is important.

Q: Milton Friedman in the 50th anniversary of "The Road to Serfdom" said it's not overstating it to say on both sides of the Atlantic that we preach individualism and competitive capitalism and practice socialism." Do you agree?

A: I'd say it is mixed. It is true to a large extent. Milton was right then and it still would be right now. But at the same time, you've got Tony Blair — a self-admitted socialist Labor Party leader as prime minister — and he is not undoing the Thatcher economic reforms. He has not tried to re-socialize housing or unscramble the privatized steel mills or the gas companies or anything because the privatized systems are working so much better. So there are mixed signals on both sides.

The fact is, it's very easy to get depressed day-by-day and say, "Boy, it's going the wrong way." But there are some hopeful signs out there. It takes a long time for these ideas to become both popularized and to have really the fundamental impact on the system.

From the writing of Marx to the rise of Lenin, you had 50 years. Now I guess that's about where we are now with Hayek. We did have Reagan and Thatcher and we did have the most obvious version of state serfdom pulled down, in terms of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. So we've come a long way positively. At the same time, yeah, there's a lot still to be done.

ion, dumped FEMA into the Orwellian Department of Homeland Security, a virtually unmanageable bureaucratic monster. Mistake Two was appointing Michael Chertoff to head the Department of Homeland Security. The guy's a New Jersey lawyer with no management experience. The third mistake was appointing Michael Brown to be the director of FEMA. He used to run a horse owners association and had no managerial or leadership experience. The fourth mistake was to obsess over terrorism.

In an emergency, you can respond either to rules and paperwork or to the reality on the ground. Obviously, the FEMA bureaucrats went with the rules and the paperwork, and while they were doing that, people were suffering and dying. People in Mississippi have been told they must fill out FEMA forms before they can get aid. Of course, many of them have no way to get to the forms. FEMA people ought to be aiding those in need. The paperwork can catch up later.

I've never had the faith in government that some people have. I've been too close to it and on three occasions a part of it. The larger government gets, the more inefficient it becomes. Those who responded magnificently in this tragedy were the American people, not the federal government.

I don't believe race was ever an issue as the PBs (Professional Blacks, like Jesse Jackson) claimed. The rather well-to-do, mostly white suburbs got even less help, and that later, than the people in New Orleans. Of course, poor people are less mobile than rich people, but that's true everywhere in the world and has nothing to do with race.

I'm with the mayor of New Orleans. I'd like to see a moratorium on press conferences, studies, commissions and windbag hearings in general. As for the state government's role in this debacle, the people of Louisiana will solve that problem at the next election.

Simulcast resource for women

BORGER — On Nov. 12, First Baptist Church in Borger will host a luncheon for area women in conjunction with THRIVE! simulcast. THRIVE! is a division of INJOY, Inc.

A news release from the church explained that THRIVE! hopes to attract more than 50,000 women to local churches across North America as "they explore what it means for women everywhere to start living their best life."

Themed "Leading a Life of Significance," the fourth annual live national simulcast conference will be broadcast from Atlanta, Ga.

Dr. John C. Maxwell, Elizabeth George, Carol Kent, Ruth Graham, Liz Curtis Higgs, Drs. Les and Leslie Parrott and others will seek to inspire and equip women for ministry during the upcoming day-long event.

"All of THRIVE!'s programs are created," the press release said, "in response to statistical trends showing a nation of women hungry for spirituality, increasingly unclear about their faith, overworked on numerous fronts and stressed in their most fundamental relationships. The THRIVE! simulcast will offer training and resources that focus on helping women lead a life of significance."

Tickets, on sale at Borger First Baptist, are $25 apiece. This price covers the simulcast and lunch. Early registration deadline is Oct. 3. Early registrants qualify for a special door prize drawing.

For more information, contact the church at (806) 273-5621.

St. Paul United Methodist Church to host revival services

Saint Paul United Methodist Church, 511 N. Hobart, will host revival services starting at 11 a.m. Sunday with the Rev. John Barrett.

The Rev. Barrett, a native of Louisville, Ga., graduated from Clinch County High School in Homerville, Ga. He holds a bachelor of science degree in business administration from Columbus State University, Columbus, Ga., attended Asbury Seminary and received his master of divinity degree from Candler School of Theology, Emory University, Atlanta, Ga.

Barrett served under appointment in South Georgia prior to transferring to New Mexico in 1984. In 1996, he became a full-time general evangelist.

He and wife Juleanne have four daughters.

"John's preaching style could best be described as 'down home,'" a church press release said. "His story-telling ability helps illuminate the Scripture themes he uses so effectively."

The services will be open to the community. For more information about the upcoming revival, call 665-8951 or 665-1167.

MINISTER'S MUSING

Terry Fox, greatest athlete ever!

At the recent Chautauqua, I met a young man who lost his leg back in February. He and some friends were sitting on the rail of one of the walkover bridges at the park. When I passed by the first time, they had taken his prosthesis and put it in the middle of the bridge.

As Shari and I walked by, I picked up the prosthesis, moved it over out of the way and put a $5 bill in it and kept on walking. I think it kind of stunned the kids. Well, in a couple of minutes I was walking back across the bridge and noticed that they hadn't moved it back into the middle of the bridge.

I stopped and said, "I'm very impressed with you guys. I thought for sure that the moment that I walked away, you would probably just put the leg back in the middle of the bridge. Thanks for not doing that."

Well, that started a conversation. One of his friends said, "Now you've gotta rub his nub."

I think they probably thought I wouldn't do that. I took hold of the end of his leg and held it tightly and massaged it for a few seconds. He looked surprised, but pleasantly so.

I asked him when and how it happened. Then I asked him if he knew who Terry Fox was. He said that he didn't.

I told him, "Terry Fox is the greatest athlete who ever lived."

I asked him if he had Internet access, and he said that he did. I encouraged him to check Terry's story out when he got home.

A few moments later when I walked back by, I stopped by and asked him,

"Now what was the guy's name?"

He replied right back, "Terry Fox."

I hope that he has checked his story out because what Terry Fox did was the greatest athletic accomplishment in all of modern history.

Mike Sublett
Hi-Land Christian

Terry Fox was born in Winnipeg, Manitoba, and raised in Port Coquitlam, British Columbia, a community near Vancouver on Canada's west coast. An active teenager involved in many sports, Terry was only 18-years-old when he was diagnosed with osteogenic sarcoma (bone cancer) and forced to have his right leg amputated 6-inches above the knee in 1977.

While in the hospital, Terry was so overcome by the suffering of other cancer patients, many of them young children, that he decided to run across Canada to raise money for cancer research. He would call his journey the "Marathon of Hope."

After 18 months and running over 3,000 miles to prepare, Terry started his run in St. John's, Newfoundland on April 12, 1980. Although it began with little fanfare, enthusiasm soon grew, and the money collected along his route began to mount. He ran a marathon (26 miles) each day through Canada's Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Ontario. It was a journey that Canadians who saw Terry have never forgotten.

However, on Sept. 1, after running 128 marathon runs in 143 days (3,339 miles), Terry was forced to stop running outside of Thunder Bay, Ontario, because cancer had appeared in his lungs. An entire nation was stunned and saddened. Terry

Dear Abby...

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I am 76, my wife is 65. Our neighbor "Roy" is retired, but probably less than 60 years old. The fence between Roy's property and ours is 6 feet tall, but the wood has shrunk and there are gaps of about half an inch or more between the boards.

Abby, Roy likes to work nude in his back yard and has told my wife he does this. Otherwise, he seems like a decent fellow. He has given my wife nectarines from over the fence, which is as close as I want his naked presence to my wife. Roy insists he has the "right" to go naked in his own back yard. Unfortunately, my wife agrees, and tells me she's not looking. I have asked her not to accept any more gifts over the fence from Roy and to keep her contact with him to a minimum. Am I being foolish? How would you recommend I handle this? -- TOO CLOSE FOR COMFORT IN CALIF.

DEAR TOO CLOSE FOR COMFORT: With a 6-foot fence around his property, Roy is probably within his rights to garden "au naturel." One way to handle the problem would be for you to develop an interest in horticulture. Perhaps the appearance of that fence could be improved by planting bougainvillea, or poison ivy on your side of it. Or a lovely cactus garden ... the possibilities are almost endless if you put your mind to it. P.S. Just be sure to wear gloves.

DEAR ABBY: Hello! I am 11 years old. I have known my best friend, "Dawn," since preschool. She has always been one step ahead of me. If I managed to get one step ahead of her, she'd get jealous and mad. Recently my mother got pregnant. A few days ago she heard the heartbeat. Dawn was there when Mother was telling me and my brother the good news. Dawn said, "Oh, it's not dead yet?"

She thought it was a funny joke. She has been saying things like that ever since she heard about the pregnancy. Abby, I have told her once to stop all the chaos. I'm afraid to tell her again. My parents are now telling me they no longer want me going to Dawn's house. Please help me. -- WONDERING IN DODGE CITY, KAN.

DEAR WONDERING: The person who needs help isn't you, it's Dawn, who appears to be insecure, jealous and lacking in judgment. Her remark was extremely inappropriate and not in the least bit funny. Your mother should have explained that to Dawn and also discussed it with her mother. My advice to you is to do some serious rethinking of your relationship with Dawn. Best friends support each other; they don't one-up each other or put each other down. Your parents are looking out for your best interests in wanting you to limit your time with her.

DEAR ABBY: My fiance, "Simon," and I are being married in three months. Although my parents are paying for the wedding and reception, we would like to acknowledge his parents in the invitation. The problem is Simon's mother passed away last fall, and we're trying to find an eloquent way of including her name on the invitation. Any suggestions? -- "STUCK" IN SHREVEPORT, LA.

DEAR STUCK: The invitation could be worded this way:
Mr. and Mrs. John Smythe
Request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter Louise "Stuck" Smythe to Simon Wallace Penn Jr.
the son of Simon Wallace Penn Sr. and the late Sylvia Palmer Penn etc.

Big 12 Preview: Texas Tech keeps throwing and scoring

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Tech keeps throwing passes and scoring points, the nation's best team in both of those categories.

The No. 19 Red Raiders (2-0) broke a 52-year school scoring record in an 80-21 victory over Sam Houston State last weekend. And now they play another NCAA Division I-AA opponent, winless Indiana State (0-3) on Saturday.

So is scoring 100 points in a game possible, or even a goal, for Texas Tech?

"We don't go into a game with a set goal of points we want to score," coach Mike Leach said. "We do look at everything from an improvement standpoint. We need to keep playing better and work hard on every play, especially this week before we start conference play. I've been pretty pleased with what we have done so far, and we just need to keep getting better."

The Red Raiders, who have never played Indiana State before, are averaging 68 points and 584 passing yards a game. But the competition level will increase significantly after this weekend when Big 12 play begins.

Texas Tech is one of just five Big 12 teams playing this weekend. The other seven have already completed their non-conference schedules and have open dates.

The specter of Hurricane Rita spurred Texas A&M and I-AA Texas State to reschedule their game from Saturday to Thursday night.

Reggie McNeal threw for 317 yards and two touchdowns as the Aggies (2-1) beat Texas State (2-1) 44-31 in a stadium rendered unusually bare and an area choked with evacuating traffic from the approaching storm.

No. 22 Iowa State (2-0), which had extra time to savor its Sept. 10 victory over then-No. 8 Iowa State, has a televised game Friday night at Army (0-2), which lost its home opener 20-10 against Baylor last weekend.

Iowa State played against Army just one other time, losing at West Point in 1964. The Cyclones forced five turnovers, scoring after each one, against Iowa in its last victory.

In the other games Saturday involving Big 12 teams, Colorado (2-0) goes to No. 12 Miami (1-1); Kansas State (2-0) plays North Texas (1-1).

Second-ranked Texas, Nebraska, Kansas, Baylor and Oklahoma State are all 3-0 waiting for the start of league play Oct. 1. Missouri is 2-1 and defending Big 12 champion Oklahoma (1-2) is the league's only team with a losing record.

"It's a good time, I guess for an open date. We have a lot of work to do as a team," said Sooners coach Bob Stoops, his team coming off a 41-24 loss at UCLA.

Volleyball

The varsity and junior varsity Lady Harvesters will travel to Hereford Saturday to take on their Lady Whiteface counterparts. Both should be tough matches for each school. The JV game will start at 2 p.m., varsity at 3:30 p.m. The freshmen team will stay home to host Hereford. That game will begin at 10 a.m.

Tennis

Coach Emily Laurence and her Pampa High School tennis team will also travel to Hereford Saturday for a meeting that was scheduled to be played in Pampa. However, due to the updating of the Harvester tennis courts, those matches were moved.

Football

Both the varsity and junior varsity teams are off this week. The freshmen team defeated Hereford Thursday. The final score was not available at press time.

Gas prices putting strain on schools, fans

DALLAS (AP) — Two fans Cisco football can always depend on are Grady and Sue West.

Except if it's a road game that requires a fill-up.

"They don't miss a game," said Cisco head coach Brent West, the couple's son. "But they said Seymour was too long a trip and the gas prices were too high."

Rising fuel costs are keeping more than just fans home Friday nights. Midland Lee made its last two road trips without its marching band. Malakoff has seen opponents unload buses without cheerleaders.

School officials put the blame squarely on high gas prices, which are straining budgets and mapping boundaries on how far some teams can travel. The U.S. Department of Energy reported the average price of gas in Texas was $2.71 on Monday, about 50 cents higher than when teams began reporting for practice Aug. 1.

School districts pay less for fuel than motorists thanks to tax exemptions and bulk discounts. Officials put the difference between 10 and 45 cents less than pump prices, but that hardly translates into a savings for schools.

Mesquite ISD transportation director Mike Horn said his school district has traditionally spent around $450,000 annually for fuel. But Horn said if prices stay at current levels, the price tag may swell to as much as $650,000 by the end of the school year.

"It's killing us," said Mesquite ISD athletic director Mickey Delamar, who oversees five high schools that travel upward of 230 miles round trip for district games in East Texas.

"When we put our budget together for fuel we estimated a three to four percent increase. That increase has jumped around 25 percent."

Delamar said he's seen visiting teams bring fewer fans to Mesquite stadiums. Malakoff ISD superintendent Larry Hulse said he also expects a slide in gate receipts this season, and Cisco's West said he knows road turnout is bad when he can't even get his parents to make the drive.

About 80 miles southwest of Dallas, Malakoff shares District 21-2A with schools some 75 miles away. Hulse believes gas prices make it too prohibitive for many visiting fans to justify the drive.

"It's not tremendous if we lost

$5,000 (in ticket sales)," Hulse said. "But that's $5,000 we don't have to spend on something we need."

The impact of gas prices hasn't been limited to budget spreadsheets. Some teams enter visiting stadiums without bands to blare their fight song or cheerleaders to rouse their fans — however few there might be thanks to deterring gas prices.

Midland Lee didn't see its band for three weeks after its season opener in Abilene against Southlake Carroll. Midland ISD athletic director Davis Corley said high gas prices kept the band parked in Midland for Lee's next two games, both about 330 miles away in Dallas.

School administrators felt the savings.

Unfortunately, so did the Lee football team.

"One of my kids told me he felt like he was playing in a junior high or jayvee game," said Lee coach Randy Quisenberry, whose team lost both games in Dallas. "It completely changes the atmosphere without them there. It's one of those things you take for granted."

Big 12

"You don't ever think about getting off to a bad start."

While the Sooners have struggled, Baylor is 3-0 for the first time since 1996 and Kansas for the first time since 1997.

Colorado will try to become just the 12th NCAA I-A team to score in 200 straight games when the Buffaloes play at Miami in the series' first game since 1993. The game in Florida begins at 10 a.m. Colorado time.

"This game was scheduled 11 years ago, and I know our players are looking forward to the challenge," Buffs coach Gary Barnett said. "Somebody may be making this a statement game, but we look at it as an opportunity to get a valuable win. All these games have the same value as a win or loss, and I don't know how this game will impact our Big 12 chances."

The Buffs have won five of seven games in the series.

Texas A&M finally was able to get past its season-opening Sept. 3 loss, and took it out on SMU 66-8 when Reggie McNeal became the first Aggie and 16th NCAA player to pass for 300 yards and rush for 100 in the same game. The Aggies rolled up 714 yards, and now play Texas State, an instate school they've played only once — in 1919.

Kansas State tailback Thomas Clayton is the nation's leading rusher (165 yards per game) going into the Wildcats' game against North Texas, which has the backfield of Patrick Cobbs and Jamario Thomas — who won the national rushing titles the past two seasons — and is coached by Darrell Dickey, a four-year starting quarterback at K-State from 1979-82.

Palmeiro says Tejada gave him vitamin that caused positive test

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Rafael Palmeiro said a vitamin he received from Miguel Tejada might have caused the positive test for steroid use that led to the first baseman's suspension, an assertion his Baltimore Orioles teammate dismissed as implausible.

Palmeiro said he received vitamin B-12 from Tejada, a person familiar with Palmeiro's unsuccessful grievance hearing to overturn the suspension said.

Palmeiro has not publicly discussed details of his testimony, which came during an unsuccessful grievance filed by the players' association to overturn his 10-day suspension, which followed a positive test for stanozolol.

Another hurricane is rearranging schedules, forcing teams to scramble

By RALPH D. RUSSO
Associated Press

With Tulane's plight fresh in their minds, University of Houston officials told the football team to pack for a lengthy trip with Hurricane Rita bearing down on the Texas Gulf Coast.

The Cougars were ready to go but unsure early Thursday where they were headed and how they would be getting there.

The second hurricane in less than a month had college sports teams scrambling again to rearrange schedules — and in some cases — to relocate teams. No. 3 LSU had its home opener delayed for the third time, when the Southeastern Conference decided to push back the Tigers' game against No. 10 Tennessee two days to Monday night.

Houston's initial plan was to bus the football team, coaches and support staff — about 125 people — to Sheppard Air Force Base in Wichita Falls, Texas, about a six-hour drive in normal conditions, far longer with much of southeast Texas fleeing the likely destination of a powerful hurricane.

That plan fell through late Wednesday night when the state wouldn't authorize the team's move to the base, according to Houston athletic director Dave Maggard.

And then the Cougars lost their ride when the bus company informed them that they had no drivers for the five buses the school hired, Maggard said.

"It's left us in a real quandary," Maggard said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press on Thursday.

After having no luck finding a charter plane to take the Cougars to Tulsa, Okla., where they play football next Saturday, the team decided to bus it the nearly 500 miles to Tulsa.

Maggard couldn't find any buses in Texas — "That has been amazing to me," he said Thursday night — but secured four in Tulsa. The Cougars expected to be on the road Friday morning.

The Cougars play Tulane in Lafayette, La., the following week, before their next scheduled home game at Robertson Stadium against Memphis on Oct. 15. Houston's home game against Southern Mississippi scheduled for Saturday was postponed on Wednesday because of Rita.

If you are single, you might be more in love with romance than with the person you hook up with. Be clear about what is going on here. If you are attached, the two of you might frequently act as if you've just met. GEMINI helps open doors in your mind.

Politicians looking beyond Roberts court confirmation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans and Democrats alike are looking beyond John Roberts' virtually certain confirmation as the nation's 17th chief justice to President Bush's next nominee to the Supreme Court, expecting a quick announcement from the White House and a much tougher confirmation fight.

Three Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee sided with the panel's 10 Republicans on Thursday in a 13-5 vote to endorse Roberts, sending his nomination to the floor of the Senate for a confirmation vote no later than next Thursday.

With little suspense left in Roberts' climb to the Supreme Court, speculation focused on whether the support from three Democrats gives Bush any more or less leeway to nominate someone more conservative than Roberts to replace retiring Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

"I think there were people in the White House who hoped the Democrats would all vote for him and show that Roberts was a high-quality nominee," said Stephen Wermiel, an American University law professor. "There were other people in the White House who hoped the Democrats would all vote against him, thinking that would help the president feel liberated to do whatever he wanted to do next."

Regardless of their motives, it was clear the Judiciary Committee members were eyeing Bush's next pick for the court.

"I think that some of the voting today was calculated to impact on the next nomination," said Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., chairman of the committee. Some senators believed that backing Roberts puts them in a better position to oppose the next Bush nominee, while others thought that opposing him puts the president on notice that he had better put someone up who was acceptable to a broad spectrum of senators.

Norm Ornstein, a political analyst with the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative think tank in Washington, said anyone familiar with the Bush White House knows that a strong Democratic vote against Roberts would convince Bush that Democrats would reject anyone he'd nominate "so why bother nominating anyone but a fire-breathing conservative."

The White House, which has been keeping details of Bush's selection process secret, said only that the president planned to nominate a highly qualified candidate whom Americans can be proud to have on the court.

"The historic standard, particularly with recent nominees, has been based on qualifications," White House press secretary Scott McClellan said. "Judge Roberts clearly has far exceeded that standard, and earned broad-based support. The Senate has traditionally joined together in support of those nominees who were well-qualified to sit on the court, and avoided becoming beholden to partisan interest groups."

Some lawmakers and legal analysts claimed the three Democrats — Sens. Patrick Leahy, Russ Feingold and Herbert Kohl — likely supported Roberts so they would not be cast as obstructionists.

"If the Roberts' confirmation is a foregone conclusion, why look like a knee-jerk obstructionist?" asked Brad Berenson, formerly a lawyer in the Bush White House. "It's far better to preserve the appearance of being fair-minded and try to convince the president he has a chance to get your vote if he nominates someone to your liking. It also gives you the ability to oppose the next nominee with greater credibility."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Churches and other religious groups are allowed to receive federal money to provide preschool to poor children. Now, the House says, they should be allowed to hire based on religion.

In a broad update of the Head Start program, the House voted Thursday to let preschool providers consider a person's faith when hiring workers — and still be eligible for federal grants. The Republican-led House said the move protects the rights of religious groups, but Democrats blasted it as discriminatory.

The debate over religion overshadowed the main parts of the bill, which had drawn bipartisan support.

Overall, the House bill would insert more competition into Head Start grants, require greater disclosure of how money is spent, and try to improve collaboration among educators in different grades.

Only 23 Democrats supported the House bill, which was approved 231-184. The vote on the amendment allowing the religion-based hiring was even tighter. It passed 220-196, with support from 10 Democrats.

Rep. John Boehner of Ohio, the Republican chairman of the House Education Committee, said the bill ensures that faith-based centers "aren't forced to choose between relinquishing their identities or being shut out of the program altogether."

Launched in the 1960s, the nearly $7 billion Head Start program provides comprehensive education to more than 900,000 poor children. Though credited for getting kids ready for school, Head Start has drawn scrutiny as cases of financial waste and questions about academic quality have surfaced nationwide.

Yet most of the debate Thursday was not about oversight. It was about religion and civil rights.

The Republican plan would, for example, allow a Catholic church that provides Head Start services to employ only Catholic child-care workers, and to reject equally qualified workers of other religions.

"This is about our children, and denying them exemplary services just because the organization happens to be a religious one is just cruel," said Rep. Virginia Foxx, R-N.C.

Lobbyist probe takes new turn

WASHINGTON (AP) — The arrest of a former White House official marks a new phase in the investigation of Jack Abramoff in which authorities seek to extract information about the high-powered Republican lobbyist.

David Safavian was arrested Monday and charged with making false statements and obstructing a federal investigation relating to a 2002 golf outing to Scotland with Abramoff, former Christian Coalition executive Ralph Reed, Rep. Bob Ney, R-Ohio, and others.

Safavian is the first person to face charges arising out of the probe of Abramoff, a major Republican fundraiser with close ties to GOP leaders in Congress.

Investigators frequently seek to pressure minor players in complex federal probes as they build a case against their principal target.

"You squeeze that person and hope he flips as you work your way up to the top," said Kirby Behre, a former prosecutor who is a partner at the Paul, Hastings, Janofsky & Walker law firm in Washington.

Abramoff is under investigation for his lobbying activities on behalf of Indian tribes and his role in paying for overseas trips for House Majority Leader Tom DeLay.
