House and Senate Democratic leaders are to outline their approach to cleaning up the tainted relationship between lawmakers and lobbyists today, a day after House Republican leaders announced that lobbying reform had moved to the top of their legislative priorities.

The battle to gain the ethical high ground comes amid the election-year scandal resulting from the activities of former lobbyist Jack Abramoff, who personally or through his clients showered lawmakers with contributions, meals, skybox seats or golf trips. Abramoff has pleaded guilty to corruption-related charges and is cooperating with prosecutors.

"We have a duty to do everything we can to keep the trust and confidence of our constituents," House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., said Tuesday in describing legislation that would ban privately funded travel, tighten the gift ban, double to two years the time between a lawmaker's retirement and when he can become a lobbyist and increase disclosure requirements for lobbvists.

Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., said that while the Abramoff scandal was largely "a Republican sin," because the lobbyist was closely aligned with top Republicans, "neither party has a

"It is important for Democrats not to get on their high horse but to recognize that some of the corruption that's been taking place in Washington is going to require bipartisan work to clean up," Obama told ABC's "Good Morning America" on Wednesday.

In Columbus, Ohio, Democratic Party Chairman Howard Dean vowed that his party would "put an end" to the corruption. "This cycle of corruption has to be broken, and we will break it," Dean said.

House Rules Committee Chairman David Dreier, who is leading the GOP effort to craft lobbying legislation, said that when the House returns to business in two weeks his committee will act on a rule banning former members-turnedlobbyists from entry on the House floor. He said he hoped to pass comprehensive legislation by the end of February.

Democrats tried to link Abramoff to Republicans, the main recipients of his largesse, and insist that the only real solution was to vote them out of office next November. "Mr. Abramoff and his associates are just the symptom. The disease is right here in the Capitol, with the party of power in Washington," said Rep. Louise M. Slaughter, D-N.Y., the Rules Committee's top Democrat.

Two senior Republicans have already taken a fall because of their ties to Abramoff. Former Majority Leader Tom DeLay, R-Texas, announced after Abramoff's guilty plea that he would not try to regain the post he relinquished after being indicted on campaign finance charges in Texas. And Rep. Bob Ney, R-Ohio, temporarily stepped down as House Administration Committee chairman.

The legislation House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi and Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid are to announce will cover much of the same ground as Hastert's: tightening bans on gifts and travel and slowing the "revolving door" between Congress and lobbying jobs.

The scramble to write lobbying legislation was welcomed by long ignored clean government groups.

"This week we are in the middle of a bidding war with various reform proposals being announced by Republican and Democratic leaders in Congress," said Fred Wertheimer, president of Democracy 21. "This is a case where you are going to have to read the fine print to make judgments about the effectiveness of the proposals being announced."

The Democratic proposal also would crack down on special interest provisions slipped into legislation in the final moments before passage. Hastert said he was ready to discuss restrictions on earmarks as long as the House and Senate acted together on the issue.

The Democratic measure also has a provision to shut down "pay-to-play" ventures such as the "K Street Project" where Republicans pressure lobbying groups to hire Republicans and direct funds to GOP causes. K Street in Washington is a center for lobbying Even Lefors opted out of the district although Pampa voted to join.

"It took 30 years," Williams said, "but I think we currently cover the eated out in 1955."

Fifty year later, the district includes Gray, Carson, Donley, Armstrong, Roberts, Wheeler and Potter counties. It covers 6,309 square miles that have more than 4,400 irrigations wells, 185 municipal wells and 251 wells for industrial use.

When the first board met a month later, they approved eight pages of rules for the district. With water issues becoming more complex, Williams said today's rules have grown to 67

A.J. Weiser was hired as a part time manager in February, 1956. A year later, Felix Ryals replaced Weiser as manager, and Maureen Stalls was hired as the district's first secretary. Richard Bowers, a Gray County native who graduated from Pampa High School in 1963, was hired to replace Ryals in 1979, when Ryals retired.

"I was there about nine years," said Bowers, now the general manager of the North Plains Ground Water Conservation District in Dumas. "I started there 1979, and moved up here in 1987."

Bowers is from the Grandview-

Hopkins area, where is younger brother, Charles Bowers, still farms and today serves as president of the Panhandle Ground Water Conservation District.

Bowers moved to Dumas in 1986 as general manager of the North Plains Ground Water Conservation District, and Gary Walker, now general manager of Sandy Land Ground Water Conservation District and a former state legislator, took over the job as general manager of the Panhandle Ground Water Conservation District.

Walker was ranching near Groom and near Skellytown at the time. > Born Dec. 12, 1951, Williams is a Panhandle native.

"My granddad drilled the third irrigation well in Carson County," Williams said.

Williams said his grandfather, W.W. Evans, was always very water con-

"Looking back, I learned a lot from him," Williams said.

Williams said he doesn't remember his grandfather being active in the water district when it was formed, but their neighbor to the east was Arthur Stovall, the first president of the Ground Panhandle Water Conservation District.

Williams said the drought of the 1950s saw numerous irrigation wells being drilled because farmers saw the benefit of irrigation. They could put some water on the crops although it seemed like it might never rain again.

"I think what drove water districts was down on the South Plains," Williams said. "Irrigation started there in the late 1940's. They drilled so fast there that during the 1950s, they saw that if they drilled too fast, it might dry the aquifer up.'

Water districts were established to manage the state's aquifers.

"That was back in the 1950s, and summer. Walker designed the labora- we're struggling with the same questions today," Williams said.

Managing the production of ground water has changed over the years, Williams said.

Initially, the board did it through well spacing. Today, it's based on surface area.

Over the past half century, new issues have arisen and old issues have been revisited, but the thing that drives the Panhandle Ground Water Conservation District today, and has for 50 years, is making sure there is water here for future generations while still protecting the landowners' rights to the water beneath their prop-

It's a delicate balancing act, but Williams said it is also an evolving process. Because of the nature of the issues, the Panhandle Ground Water Conservation District is a work in progress and will likely continue to be in the future.

"I really think that we've got a firm foundation," Williams said.

The system over the years will be tweaked and corrections will be made, he said, but it's got a solid foundation that a future can be built on.

Author Tom Bethell takes on bad science

Global warming, the AIDS epidemic in Africa, the danger to humans of nuclear radiation, the environmental harm of DDT, the miraculous benefits supposedly coming from cloning and human stem cell research, the scientific certainty of Darwinian evolu-

These are some of the prevailing scientific myths or mistruths Tom Bethell sets straight in his new book, "The Politically Incorrect Guide to Science." Bethell, a conservative English-born journalist known for his excellent writing and critical thinking, is a longtime editor at The American Spectator magazine. I talked to him by telephone recently from his home in Washington, D.C.:

Q: If science is supposed to be about seeking the truth and being neutral, how can it be politically correct or incorrect?

A: Well, science can get politicized when the facts are uncertain. This has allowed people, in some cases unscrupulous people, to exploit the prestige of science. At first, people don't necessarily realize that. They know that water is made of oxygen and hydrogen - how do you politicize that? But then you come to something like global warming, when you are talking about the average temperature on the surface of the Earth and comparing it with the temperature hundreds of years ago, when they didn't have thermometers, and projectfuture, and the uncertainties are just huge. So it becomes possible for unprincipled people to exploit the prestige of science on some issues.

number of environmental epidemic in Africa, global issues, I would say. In fact, I quote an interesting guy called Patrick Moore in the book who was a founder of Greenpeace who kind of rethought his whole position. He reports that after the of people on the Left, who had been essentially advocates on behalf of socialist causes, realized it was not going to work out, so they came over to the environing, what other scientific mental movement. Such issues > endangered species have also been politicized. The growing ozone hole, the warming - most people are not skeptical of these things.

A: Actually, I don't know how much skepticism there is about AIDS, but it is undoubtedly the most politicized of all medical diseases ing it 100 years into the fall of the Berlin Wall, a lot or scientific issues that have come up in the last quarter century. I have a chapter specifically on AIDS in Africa, where the key point, which very few people know about, is that in order to diagnose AIDS in Africa you don't have to have an HIV test. They redefined AIDS at a conference in Bangui in the Central Africa Republic in November 1985 and they came up with various criteria weight loss, fever, and so on - which, if you met them, you could be classified as an AIDS patient without any HIV test. They said it was too expensive to do the HIV test. As one journalist in South Africa, Rian Milan, put it to me, at that point almost anybody in an

African hospital could be called an AIDS patient.

Q: Of all the scientific myths or untruths, what's the most dangerous one?

A: Well, global warming would be if the U.S. was about to act on the Kyoto accords and reduce its greenhouse gas emissions down to 1990 levels. But that is not going to happen. There's no chance. Even if Hillary Clinton was president, she wouldn't do it. The idea that nuclear radiation is dangerous is another myth that is itself dangerous, because it resulted in the more or less cessation or interruption of the development of nuclear power in this country, which needs to be brought back. The DDT ban has been a big problem in Africa because Similarly, the United States-2006 is not the same as the United States-1945. Of course, when we actively think about it, we say, "Sure, that's obvious." For some reason, though, the human mind tends to forget that and to blur the identity of something by mixing it all up with memories.

The Dallas Morning News on the legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King:

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s words and actions helped shape this nation's past half-century. His memory is not just an African-American legacy; it has permeated the world. And his work, which continues to touch generations, deserves a more fitting enshrinement than, unfortunately, his heirs have been able to deliver.

That's a tough thought for today, the commemoration of the slain civil rights leader's birth, but it's a crushing reali-from the civil rights movement and the tomb of the Nobel Peace Prize winner. It's in a neighborhood steeped in civil rights-era landmarks. Dr. King's birthplace and Ebenezer Baptist Church, where he and his father preached, are within walking distance.

Late last month, two of Dr. King's children again floated the idea of selling the center to the National Park Service a proposal that drew quick opposition from his two other children. Their mother, Coretta Scott King, established the center as a memorial to her slain husband in 1968. In recent years, however, family members have struggled to maintain the center. Moreover, they've been accused of being more interested in profiting from Dr. King's writings and image than in preserving his legacy, a charge they

There's a sense of urgency to resolving this impasse. With the illness of Dr.

King's widow and a clear split among his children, the center is lurching toward further decline.

A more-than-reasonable compromise would be for the family to allow the government to maintain the facility, while retaining some latitude to shape its programs and messages. The National Park Service has been praised for its care of historic civil rights landmarks in Atlanta. And it has the clout and resources to keep the center in good repair and its possessions safe.

A Park Service report issued last year estimated that the King center needed $11.6 million in repairs. The report cited leaks in the reflective pool, collapsed drainage pipes and problems with loose and exposed wiring.

The King legacy belongs to the nation, and it would be both heartbreaking and appalling if a family fight diminishes this tribute.

Dear Abby...

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: While visiting my aunt over the Thanksgiving holiday, I noticed your booklet, "Keepers," on her coffee table. While thumbing through it, I came across a poem that made me think of my mother, who died in early September. I was missing her terribly at that moment, and the poem lifted my spirits and comforted me. I asked my aunt where she had gotten the booklet, and she told me she had ordered it from you last spring. Is it still available, and how can I get some of them? I'd love to share that poem and some of the others in your collection with my sisters and brothers. - ISLAND GIRL FROM OAHU

DEAR ISLAND GIRL: Please accept my sympathy for the loss of your mother. I'm sure the holidays this year were especially poignant for you and your siblings, but please know that your mother would not have wanted her death to bring you sadness. She gave you life, and would want you to make the most out of every day that you are given. Yes, my Keepers booklet is still available. It contains some of the most frequently requested poems and essays that have appeared in this column. To order it, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $6 (U.S. funds) to: Dear Abby -- Keepers Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, IL 61054-0447. (Postage is included in the price.)

DEAR ABBY: After 26 years of marriage, my parents seem headed for divorce. My father is the one who wants it, and it sent my manic-depressive mother into the hospital with thoughts of suicide. Now I am in the middle. My mother doesn't want to talk to my father, so the only information he can get is from me. He has mentioned several times the idea of my moving back home and taking care of her.

(He is planning to move out in a month.) Abby, I only recently got out on my own, and I am enjoying my independence. I love my mother and don't want to lose her, but I am resistant to moving back into a house where I have experienced so much pain. Am I being selfish? What should I do? -FEELING GUILTY IN THE MID-

DEAR FEELING GUILTY: The person who's being selfish is your father. He's trying to talk you into assuming the responsibility he assumed when he promised to "love, honor and cherish" your mother at the time of their marriage. If your mother were in her right mind, she would not want you to sacrifice your independence. Do not allow your father to guilt you into moving back. This is his problem. Please do not allow him to make it yours.

DEAR ABBY: I have a 15-year-old son. "Max" has just announced that he has a girlfriend. He talks to her on the phone constantly. I have met her, and she's a very nice girl. I had the "sex" talk with Max. I explained about AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases, and how some girls who say they're on the pill really aren't, and that the pill does not protect either partner from STDs. I also gave my son condoms (only two) and explained that it was not permission to have sex. However, I'm afraid he might not listen and do it anyway. If that happens, I want my boy to be protected. I have gotten conflicting opinions from friends about having given Max the condoms. Do you think I did the right thing? -- DON'T WANNA BE A GRANDMA (YET) IN MANHATTAN

DEAR DON'T: I absolutely think you did the right thing, also the intelligent and pragmatic thing -- and in exactly the right order.

By MICHAEL J. STEVENS Sports Editor

Harvesters 57, Caprock 54

It was the dog fight many expected between the Longhorns and Harvesters at Caprock Tuesday night.

At least, they do now.

Pampa was found near the bottom of the list when it came to preseason District 3-4A predictions. Most had Palo Duro, Caprock and Randall playing for playoff seeding this year. Two games into the district season, and Pampa has changed a few minds.

"We beat two teams at their gym that were picked ahead of us so yeah, it was nice to beat them. Now we have to hold our home court," said Pampa head coach Dustin Miller.

It was clear early part of the 'Horn's game plan was to double on Pampa senior post Jarett Kotara and keep him from scoring. An effective tactic for the most part, but the 6'9" Kortara stepped up and hurt Caprock on defense, swatting away shots and gathering rebounds.

Said Coach Miller, "Jarett can do great things when he is on the floor." Kotara, who had gotten in foul trouble in the preseason, has played extremely smart ball in the Friday night. first two games of the district season. Noted Miller, "He makes all 'Horns 51 the difference because teams have to double down on him or he can

With Caprock focusing on Kotara Tuesday night, Sharod Young was left open for long shots and 3-pointers. Never one to shy away from the spotlight, the senior guard took advantage of the opportunity, scoring a game high 21 points. "With all the sagging and double teaming on Jarett, he (Young) had to hit those wide open jump shots," said Miller.

Braydon Barker finished with 14, Tyler Hall with 10.

The only quarter Pampa (17-4, 2-0) outscored the 'Horns in was the second (19-13). They trailed in the first and third (11-13, 12-13) and tied in the fourth (15-15). Stats not lost on Miller. "Caprock plays great defense, they do not give up many layups. The only time we got out and ran was in the second and looking at the line score, that was the difference."

This was a big win for Miller and his Harvesters. But he knows Caprock (13-7, 1-1) will regroup. "Caprock is a good team. We are not done with them yet."

Pampa's Kelsie Wyatt (#22) was called for a charge as a Caprock defender crashes to the floor during this shot Tuesday night.

> Freshman Haleigh Cearley made things tough on Pampa's Britteni Rice, who had been averaging well over 20 points per game so far this district season.

The 6'1" Cearley prevented Rice from penetrating the lane for easy buckets. She also gathered rebounds at the other end of the floor.

The Lady Harvesters, however, would adjust to the Caprock scheme as the game went on, relying on ball control and smart shooting to secure Pampa's third District 3-4A win in a row.

Rice did lead all scorers with 16 points. Jackie Gerber and Callie Cobb ended the night with 11 points each.

Kelsie Wyatt had a strong performance on both offense and defense. Her offensive rebounds and put-back attmepts often led to trips to the free throw line. She was just as tough on defense.

Haili Kotara and Krissie Alexander were big under the boards as well.

Lady Harvesters guard Felicia Urban was deadly from the 3-point arc. She was also instrumental in and the clock.

The win improved the Lady Harvesters' overall mark to 11-13. 3-1 in District 3-4A, where they sit alone in second, one game behind Palo Duro.

Pampa will host the Dumas Demonettes Friday night.

Coach Bobbi Gill and her staff will host a Lady Harvesters softball meeting at 6 tonight in the Pampa High School library.

The meeting is for players' parents.

The oft-injured senior forward was back on the court points and grabbing nine rebounds to lead the fifthranked Longhorns to an easy 80-46 win over Texas Tech.

"It was fun to be back," Buckman said. "I haven't played a full game in a while."

Buckman has missed four games and parts of several others with various calf, ankle and hip injuries and his absence has hurt the Longhorns (15-2, 3-0 Big 12) at crucial times. He had

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - six points and five rebounds in the first minutes of Texas' 58-55 win over Villanova last Saturday but had to leave the game when he twisted the ankle again.

He was a big force early Tuesday night, scoring 16 again, scoring 14 points and grabbing five rebounds against the Red Raiders in the first half. He hit two 3pointers.

Buckman's solid return was a big reason Texas put together perhaps its most complete performance in a seven-game winning streak.

LaMarcus Aldridge added scored 19 points and seven rebounds and Tucker and shooting guard Daniel Gibson each scored 16 points in the rout.

PAMPA SWIM TEAM

Coach Miller impressed with team's performance

The Pampa Swim Team had two solid days of competition during the Lubbock Invitational Friday and Saturday in Lubbock.

This particular meet is the biggest of the season for 4A and 5A schools in this area with teams coming from as far away as Houston and El Paso.

All swimmers were invited based on qualifying times. Pampa sent nine to the prestigious event. They included senior Derek Wishon (100 butterfly), sophomore Lydia West (200, 500 freestyle), freshman Nicki Cole (50, 100 freestyle), and Dustin Neef (50 freestyle).

Also competing for Coach Greg Miller and his Pampa Swim Team were Amber Bradford, Tyler O'Neal and Abby West, who qualified in the 200 medley relay and 200 freestyle relay for the girls. On the boys' side it was Colby Dennis, and Cole Guyer in the 200 medley relay as well as the 200 and 400 freestyle relays.

Each of the swimmers had a personal life time best in their events.

"This was a great warm-up meet for the upcoming district meet Jan. 27," said Miller. "It shows the kids are preparing themselves for the run at the championship this season.'

Miller says his kids' dedication to a winning season can be seen in their ever improving times. "The effort that these swimmers are giving is showing in our times. I am proud of all of them," he said.

According to Coach Miller, Cole swam the best times of the year at the Lubbock Invitational in the 50 freestyle at 26.51, and the 100 freestyle at 1:00.24. "With these times she is now ranked No. 1 in the region and has set herself up for a great opportunity to qualify for the State Meet in February.

Lydia West is ranked No. 2 in the 500 freestyle and fourth in the 200 freestyle the expansion of malaria means that about 1 million African children a year are dying who probably would not be dying if the DDT use had continued in the Third World, as it had in the Western world. I'm surprised that the Congressional Black Caucus doesn't get on Q: Is the debate over Intelligent Design and Darwinian evolution a religious squabble or a scientific squabble?

A: I maintain that it is a scientific squabble. When they tried to introduce some kind of balanced teaching on evolution back in the 1970s and '80s in places like Arkansas and Louisiana, the alternative they wanted to import into the classroom was religious and Biblebased. But the Intelligent Design people are not bringing up religious issues in any explicit way at all. They are talking about such things as the complexity of the organisms, the paucity of the fossil record and the feebleness of the Darwinian mechanism of natural selection as being inadequate to explain the species that we see, includ-

The science faculties at most major universities are pretty much dominated by liberals, not conservatives. It's certainly true in physics and biology.

Q: Who or what is responsible for spreading or perpetuating these myths, these untruths of science?

A: Overwhelmingly, it's people who are on the Left, I think. The science faculties at most major universities are pretty much dominated by liberals, not conservatives. It's certainly true in physics and biology. The one field where it is not true is engineering, where they are approximately equally divided between Democrats and Republicans or liberals and conservatives. I like to say that the reason for that is that buildings actually have to stand up. Q: So where is the skeptical media? A: Just about nonexistent. It's really shocking. I do complain about that in my book. Woodward Bernstein told us 30 years ago in Watergate, "Don't accept government (press) handouts." That's good advice, but the media absolutely do not pay any attention to it on scientific issues - or very little attention. This is why the Woodward/Bernstein philosophy is correct. We need to have journalists trying to shoot down almost anything government because they have the power of coercion, the power of taxing us and so on, to pursue what they are doing. And they need to be resisted.

images and violence in the media is a factor in producing so many sex offenders.

We have certainly become a more vulgar, profane and violent country, and I think the reason is plain: Bad behavior is tolerated because government has intimidated good people. If you whack some lout over the head today, you'll almost surely be arrested, prosecuted and packed off to prison.

A government that cannot control crime for some reason often gets hysterical when good people defend themselves. That is less true in the South than in the North, but the attitude of 100 percent dependence on the government is reinforced constantly on television. The message is that regardless of the circumstances, it is bad, bad, bad to "take the law into your own hands." To which I reply, horse apples. In a sane society, it would be the criminals who lived in fear, not the good people.

The point, however, is not to bemoan or try to resist change. Change is inevitable and unstoppable. The point of general semantics is to remember to always base our actions on the present reality and not on illusions made of memory. If you're over 30-years-old, then the country you grew up in is gone forever. Life is a process, and just as we change, our environment changes.

I freely admit that if I could, I would choose to live in the past, but we can't. The only world we've ever had, have now and ever will have is the present moment.

Central Baptist to host area's 'Singing Men'

"Panhandle Men," one of six regional groups comprising the Singing Men of Texas, will perform in concert at 7 p.m. Thursday at Central Baptist Church of Pampa.

According to a press release from Central Baptist, the group's mission is to "glorify God through music, proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ, and provide opportunities for Christian growth, inspiration, fellowship, and mission service to our members."

Panhandle Singing Men is primarily made up of ministers of music from Baptist churches across Panhandle though pastors, other church or associational staff members, and laymen actively involved in the music ministry of their churches are also welcome into the group. The group's membership includes Dan Turner, interim music minister of Central Baptist; Barry Owens, music minister of First Baptist Church of Pampa; Gary Jameson, music minister of Pampa's Calvary Baptist; and Larry Heard, Top O' Texas director of Missions.

Preschool care will be provided during Thursday concert.

Whatever living we are and future exist only in the going to do we must do right now. There's a phrase I've heard preachers quote: "Now is the time, and time is never the same as the world now." That's quite true. Past memory and imagination, never in reality, and the world you wake up in is you went to sleep in.
