Senate passes energy bill favoring renewables, better fuel economy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats celebrated a step toward reducing U.S. dependence on oil as the Senate approved a bill calling for more ethanol and the first boost in gas mileage in decades.

Now the House plans to follow suit, perhaps as early as next week.

The Senate late Thursday voted 65-27 to pass the first energy bill since Democrats took control of Congress in January. But it was far from a complete victory.

Resistance to the new auto fuel economy standards threatened passage until the final hours. Democratic leaders held off a vote until shortly before midnight as senators were called back to the Capitol to assure the votes needed to overcome a threatened filibuster by opponents of the tougher fuel regulations.

The bill finally passed even as Republican senators grumbled that it did virtually nothing to increase production of traditional domestic fuels such as oil and natural gas.

Democrats saw it differently. "This bill starts America on a path toward reducing our reliance on oil," Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., proclaimed.

The legislation would require ethanol production for motor fuels to grow to at least 36 billion gallons a year by 2022, a sevenfold increase over the amount of ethanol processed last year.

And it calls for boosting auto fuel economy to a fleet average of 35 miles per gallon by 2020, a 40 percent increase over current requirements for cars, SUVs, vans and pickup trucks.

The legislation also calls for: —Price gouging provisions that make it unlawful to charge an "unconscionably excessive" price for oil products, including gasoline. It also gives the federal government new authority to investigate oil industry market manipulation.

—New appliance and lighting efficiency standards and a requirement that the federal government accelerate use of more efficient lighting in public buildings.

—Grants, loan guarantees and other assistance to promote research into fuel-efficient vehicles, including hybrids, advanced diesel and battery technologies.

But Democrats had wanted more for renewables than they got.

Earlier in the day Reid could not hide his displeasure as Republicans blocked one of the Democrats' top priorities, a $32 billion tax package aimed at boosting renewable fuels, energy efficiency and clean energy programs. The Republicans didn't like the $29 billion in additional taxes on oil companies that the plan required to pay for the new alternative energy subsidies.

"Big Oil seems to do pretty well here on Capitol Hill," Reid told reporters, making no effort to hide his sarcasm.

Democrats also failed to get a provision that would have required electric utilities to produce at least 15 percent of their electricity from wind, biomass or other renewables after Republicans refused to allow the measure to come up for a vote.

Intense negotiations among a small group of senators produced a compromise on the auto fuel economy matter that emerged as the crown jewel of the Senate-passed bill.

It requires automakers to make a 40 percent increase in the fuel efficiency of their vehicles by 2020 and for the first time puts SUVs, vans and small trucks under the same regulation as passenger cars.

Under the bill each vehicle group must achieve a 10 mpg increase in fuel economy by 2020 with an overall average requirement for a manufacturer's fleet increasing to 35 mpg. Currently cars must meet a fleet average of 27.5 mpg; light trucks — including SUVs and vans — must achieve an average of 22.2 mpg.

"We've been fighting to reach this day for over 20 years," said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., who was involved in the negotiations that led to the compromise. "For the first time in a generation we've overcome powerful opposition to make our cars more fuel efficient."

In an article from FOCUS on South Plains Agriculture, it said that sweep net samples have typically picked up to 10-20 Lygus per 100 sweeps, but will occasionally pick up as many as 60 per 100 sweeps.

This article reports that as many of the weeds start to "dry down," it is possible that Lygus bugs could move in fairly large numbers to some cotton and alfalfa fields.

Rules

road, including the rodeo arena, Clyde Carruth Pavilion and softball field.

Alcoholic beverages are not allowed in any other city parks with the exception of the softball complexes at Hobart Street Park.

No off-road driving of any kind is allowed at any of the city parks without special permission. No fireworks are allowed in the parks, with the exception of the professionally-staged display each Fourth of July at Recreation Park. No open fires are allowed; outdoor cooking may be done using grills provided by the city.

A curfew applies to all city parks, and is from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. daily.

More bicycles are evident along city streets at all times of the day and evening during the summer vacation from school. Bicyclists are required to follow all traffic rules and should ride along the right-hand side of the road, said Pampa Police Chief Trevlyn Pitner.

"We average a couple of people a year who are hit by vehicles while riding bicycles or as pedestrians," he said.

Motorized scooters are allowed to travel on city streets, but only on roadways where the speed limit is 35 mph or less, Pitner said. The scooters may cross roadways which have higher speed limits.

The rules allowing use of motorized scooters on some roadways do not apply to pocket bikes or mini motor bikes, which are not to be driven on city streets, Pitner said. Roller skates are also not to be used on city streets.

Pedestrians may walk alongside roadways.

"If possible, walk to the left side or left shoulder, facing oncoming traffic," Pitner said.

As the Fourth of July approaches, fireworks stands will be opening up for business. But their wares may not be set off anywhere within city limits.

"You have to have permission to shoot off fireworks on private property outside the city, and you have to abide by any burn bans," Pitner said.

A sign inside the entrance to Recreation Park warns visitors to watch for rattlesnakes, but the venomous reptiles are not as much in evidence around Pampa this year as last year, according to Burns.

"The wildlife is not too bad this year," Burns said. "That may change with another hot, dry spell."

Residents should be alert when working in their gardens, mowing or performing other outdoor chores.

"Be aware when digging in your yard," she said. "Poke the area with a long stick first."

Mothballs may be placed in garages and storage sheds to discourage snakes from staying in those areas. Animal control officers will respond to calls asking for removal of a snake.

Bees are also active during the summer months, and anyone engaging in outdoor activity should be alert for the possibility of a beehive or swarm of bees nearby.

Parents should supervise young children who are playing outside.

"We want to encourage people to watch their kids and not let them play in an unfenced area or a front yard adjacent to a street," Pitner said.

Intentionally or recklessly leaving a child under age 15 in a place where the child is in imminent danger of physical injury or death is a criminal offense and may lead to charges including criminal negligence, he said.

The beginning of a journey: Those were the days

Many kids today throw around the term "BFF - best friends forever" and my son is always telling my husband and I that if we let him do something "I'll be your best friend," but I doubt many people really have a best friend like the one I have.

I met a girl in first grade with a very weird name, Pyeper Peurifoy, who I liked a little bit and when she invited me to walk to her house, which was two blocks away, I jumped at that chance. This is where the lifelong journey between the two of us began, me getting lost walking to her house.

We were pet lovers and we decided to have a "pet show" with my dog, Scamp, and her cat, Stotter. We got tickets somewhere and walked around to neighborhood houses selling tickets and also inviting others to enter their animals. My mother was even nice enough to sew an outfit for our little dog so she could look good for the evening gown portion of the competition. When the time came for the pet show, her cat was not thrilled and ran back into the house, so my dog was declared the winner by default.

In subsequent years in elementary school, we became enemies and formed new friendships with other girls. My new BFF and I and she and her new BFF would have "wars" out on the playground. It was not physical at all, but we would see which duo could get the most people to be on their side and that decided the winner.

I guess this little game was bad enough to cause a problem for the teachers at Travis Elementary so they decided to make sure the next year, 5th grade, the duos were split up and put in different classrooms. I'm sure the teachers had no way of knowing that act would form a bond between Pyeper and I that would never be broken and would last a lifetime.

We ended up in the same classroom for 5th grade and it didn't take us long to get over hating each other and become good friends. Our families were similar, we both had one brother and our dads worked at Cabot. We were both good in school and making good grades was important to us even at that young age. Both of us were "early bloomers" so we were taller and more developed than most of the other girls.

During this time we started liking boys and we even ended up with boyfriends (I use that term loosely for that age) who were best friends. We had a great time hanging out together. One time Pyeper's mom made cookies that didn't set up correctly and ended up being runny, so we thought of plan B. We put the cookies in plastic cups and decided to walk around the neighborhood.

It was raining and when we ran into our boyfriends they decided to start bombarding us with fruit, which I believe were plums, from a tree. It's funny the things that stick in your mind and you never forget. We still laugh about the time we walked around in the rain eating cookies out of cups and getting attacked by our boyfriends with plums. Man, those were the days.

Government arbitrary, not trustworthy

In reading an excellent book, "Satanic Purses: Money, Myth and Misinformation," by R.T. Naylor (publisher is McGill-Queen's University Press), I suddenly realized why Adolf Hitler was so popular during the first years of his administration.

The funny thing is that the book is not about Hitler or Germany, but about the U.S. and the bogus war on terror. It is an outstanding book, carefully researched and footnoted, and written in a reasonable manner, though with delicious dollops of sarcasm.

It's the carefully detailed accounts of injustices committed by the U.S. government against American Muslims that gave me the insight about Hitler. In the early days of the Third Reich, if you weren't a criminal, a communist or a Jew, you never saw the dark side of the Nazi government. You saw an economy being revitalized, superhighways being built, Germans being put back to work, the disgraceful Versailles Treaty being scrapped. It must have looked a lot like morning in Germany to the people who had suffered through runaway inflation, economic depression and street riots.

Similarly, if you are not a Muslim or an Arab-American who has been a victim of the Patriot Act and other laws carelessly passed in the hysteria following the attacks in 2001, then the Bush administration probably looks perfectly normal. You probably even believe that it is really protecting you from terrorists, just as many Germans believed Hitler was protecting them from the "bad guys."

What Taylor's book demonstrates is how often this is pure nonsense, and at the same time what terrible damage is being done to the rule of law and America's traditional respect for human rights.

Typically, the government will swoop down and seize an organization's records and computers, while making public accusations of the people being "involved" with terrorists. The important point is that this is done before any determination of guilt or innocence has even begun. By the time a defendant gets to court, if he ever does, he's ruined. Quite often then, the fearless feds will say, "Well, never mind about this terrorist business, just plead guilty to a minor immigration violation." Often defendants are bullied into admitting guilt they don't deserve by threats of being declared an enemy combatant, which means indefinite imprisonment, probably for life.

You can see the process going on with the four men charged with planning to blow up the fuel lines to JFK International Airport in New York. In the first place, it is common knowledge that if you blow up a fuel line, you will get an explosion and fire at one point. The claim that the whole pipeline would blow up for miles is non-

San Antonio Express-News on mental health reform:

Mentally ill patients who end up living on the streets and getting caught up in the criminal justice system should be as lucky as Paul O'Malley.

He is the 39-year-old man who was befriended by employees at the Bexar County Courthouse. As courthouse reporter Elizabeth Allen wrote this week, they were ultimately able to reunite him with his sister, who has taken him to a center in Colorado to be near her.

Unfortunately, there are dozens of individuals like O'Malley in Bexar County who keep cycling in and out of the system.

Their names appear frequently on the civil and criminal dockets. Instead of receiving the help they need, they are shuffled in one door and out another, only to go through the same process time and time again.

A recent review of the civil court docket by the county's budget staff showed that one 65-year-old individual has been in and out of the county jail on petty charges 40 times over the past 20 years.

His 1,036 days in jail have cost the county more than $207,000 in jail-bed dollars. That does not include the police man-hours spent processing him and the court time and expense dealing with his cases.

County officials are trying to streamline the process and make changes in the system in order to deal with the special needs of the mentally ill population.

There is no simple solution, but we applaud Bexar County Jail Director Dennis McKnight's efforts. He is

"It Is No Secret"

Stuart Hamblen, a hard-drinking, gambling, and brawling cowboy western star and Los Angeles radio talk show host, attended the 1949 Billy Graham Crusade which launched Graham to worldwide fame. Hamblen met Graham in Beverly Hills, and for three weeks, Graham tried to lead Hamblen to Christ. After almost giving up, Graham received a call from a tearful Hamblen at 4:30 in the morning who gave his heart to Christ. Shortly after, Hamblen ran into actor John Wayne on the street, and Wayne said, "Stuart, what's this I hear about you?" Hamblen replied, "Well, Duke, it is no secret what God can do." "Sounds like a song," said the Duke, whereupon Hamblen went to his piano and wrote this and 225 other songs before his death in 1989.

God's cure for our ills ...

General Mills sponsored an essay contest on the subject, "America is great because ..." It was won by Blythe Anne Johnson, a 15-year-old schoolgirl from Litchfield, Minn.

Johnson wrote: "America is great because we drag our faults out into the open for all to see and criticize and help correct. We do not hush-hush and pretend all is well, to look beautiful outwardly, while rotting from the inside. This makes America noisy, and our faults public, but it is clean and healthy."

If any conditions are to be improved they must be faced honestly.

Dr. Jimmy Flynn

After Solomon and his people had dedicated the great temple, God spoke to him in the night and told him what to do when troubles came upon his people. (2 Chronicles 7:13-14)

The troubles faced by the people included lack of rain, parasites destroying wealth and pestilence.

Some ills man brings upon himself. Some ills he causes directly. Sometimes he suffers for sins of others. Always he should search his heart for occasions for rebuke.

God's role in our suffering: God's ways are beyond full understanding. He is always just and loving. Some things we call troubles He sends for our good. He permits things not His will. Always He will make trouble. See FLYNN, Page 10

Dear Abby...

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: One of my female co-workers regularly scrutinizes the wardrobe and accessories of all the other co-workers, male and female. Her scrutiny is so detailed that she notices the littlest thing -- even a change in nail polish color, or the buttons on a jacket. Every time she sees some new clothing or jewelry, she moves in for a closer look and often touches the item. Her comments are not casual, but very detailed. I feel like I am in the army and going through uniform inspection and that she is constantly judging everyone. Another co-worker has commented to me about this in a joking way, but I suspect she resents it, too. I want to say something to the offending co-worker so that she will stop examining me from head to toe every day. On the other hand, it's a small office and I want to maintain harmony. Any ideas? — UNDER A MICROSCOPE IN FLORIDA

DEAR UNDER A MICROSCOPE: It would not be unharmonious to tell this co-worker that her comments and touching are making you uncomfortable, and to please stop. Once you have done that, you have put her on notice. If she continues after that, then it's time to say something to your boss -- because this person's behavior could be considered a form of harassment.

DEAR ABBY: I have been dating a man for about six months. We are both in our 40s and have grown children. Things were becoming serious until about a month ago, when he said he had some personal problems "that I wouldn't understand." Well, yesterday he finally told me what the problem is. Apparently he likes to dress and act like a woman sometimes. He says he does it to "release tension." Some of what he told me seems petty -- he likes women's hygiene products. But I don't understand why he would find release by dressing as a woman because we have an active sex life. He said he has been to counseling many times, and it hasn't helped. I really like him, but I'm not sure if I can handle the whole dressing-like-a-woman thing. What would you do if you were in my situation? — TOTALLY CONFUSED IN IDAHO

DEAR TOTALLY CONFUSED: If I really cared about him, I think I'd ask to spend some time with his "other self." Then I'd make up my mind about whether or not I could accept the situation. Many cross-dressers are happily married and have perfectly normal marriages except for this one "quirk." (And let's face it -- is anyone completely quirk-free?)

DEAR ABBY: I am driven nuts by know-it-alls who like to correct others. Most often, the detail is small and superfluous. Why do people do this? Is it a matter of control? I am close to a couple of people who correct me in public on a regular basis. Hey, I'm flawed and I know it -- obviously they are perfect. How does one deal with those who constantly correct others? — CAN'T TAKE IT ANYMORE

DEAR CAN'T TAKE IT: People who feel compelled to correct others are practicing a form of one-upmanship. It can also be a reflection of their own social insecurity. The way to deal with it is to first point out to them that correcting others in public is rude, and if they continue, to avoid them whenever possible.

Clemens denied win No. 350 as Rockies sweep

By The Associated Press

The high altitude of Coors Field got to Roger Clemens. Unfortunately for New York, the thin air didn't have its expected impact on the Yankees' bats.

Clemens was denied his 350th win and the Colorado Rockies completed a surprising three-game sweep of the Yankees with a 4-3 victory Thursday.

"I don't want to see them again, how's that?" manager Joe Torre said.

Clemens (1-2) probably doesn't want to see Coors Field again, either. He was trying to become the first major leaguer to win 350 games since Warren Spahn did it for Milwaukee on Sept. 29, 1963.

Instead, he lost for the second straight time. He gave up solo homers to Garrett Atkins, his eighth, and Troy Tulowitzki, his fourth, to erase the Yankees' 2-0 lead in the second. Tulowitzki's shot to left-center traveled an estimated 445 feet.

Torre said Clemens got gassed because of a combination of the 93-degree weather and the high altitude.

"I was taking deep breaths on the mound. My mouth got dry a couple times," Clemens said. "That was the more difficult part. Heat or cold is not a big deal. The one inning a storm blew in and the wind changed direction. The wind hit my chest and caused me to throw the ball out of the zone. But I made the adjustment. Then, the wind started to blow straight out."

Five years ago, the Yankees scored a record 41 times on their first trip to Coors Field. But much has changed since then.

Giambi agrees to meet with Mitchell

NEW YORK (AP) — Jason Giambi will tell his steroids story to George Mitchell, bowing to pressure from baseball commissioner Bud Selig.

Giambi announced Thursday he would cooperate with the steroids investigator and publicly admitted for the first time that he had a "personal history regarding steroids." He will become the first active player known to speak with the former Senate majority leader.

No date was set for their session. The former American League MVP said he wouldn't implicate other players and appeared to backtrack on earlier remarks that the sport owed fans a collective apology for the steroids era.

"I alone am responsible for my actions and I apologize to the commissioner, the owners and the players for any suggestion that they were responsible for my behavior," Giambi said in a statement.

Selig said the meeting with Mitchell will take place "promptly." Following remarks by Giambi that seemed to be an admission of steroids use, the commissioner had threatened discipline if he didn't talk to Mitchell.

Selig again left open the possibility of punishment.

"I will take Mr. Giambi's level of cooperation into account in determining appropriate further action," he said.

Giambi's decision came two weeks after Selig requested the meeting and followed contentious negotiations between management and union lawyers.

Mahan shoots 62 to take first-round lead at Travelers Championship CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) — The scoreboard at Travelers Championship made the U.S. Open seem like a distant memory.

A week after only eight sub-par rounds were carded at the U.S. Open, 62 players broke par on Thursday before play was suspended with 39 golfers still on the course.

"This is what golf should be," said Chris DiMarco, whose 64 was only good enough for second place. "It shouldn't be about plus 20s and plus 25s. I think the fans, if we started doing that every week, I think we would lose our fans. I think they want to see us make birdies."

Hunter Mahan showed them a lot of those.

Mahan, who finished second here a year ago, shot an 8-under par 62, one shot off the course record, to take the first-round lead before play was suspended for the night at just after 7 p.m.

It was his sixth consecutive round in the 60s at the TPC at River Highlands.

"It's one of the courses that you look at it and you feel comfortable," he said. "There's not really a shot here that I worry about."

Mahan shot a 31 on his first nine holes, made par at number 10, then birdied his next four holes.

A rain delay of over an hour didn't seem to faze him, as he came back out and birdied 17.

"I hit my driver great, put the ball in play," he said. "I hit a lot of good irons and wedges."

That run allowed him to overtake early leader Chris DiMarco, who shot a 6-under par 64 despite an ailing shoulder.

"I hit a ton of good golf shots today," Mahan said. "But it's just the first round. We've got a long way to go."

North Carolina's victory over Rice sets up rematch with Oregon State OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — After finally showing a burst of power, the North Carolina Tar Heels are back in the championship round of the College World Series.

North Carolina beat Rice 7-4 on Thursday to set up a title rematch against Oregon State and the Tar Heels are hoping for a different result this year.

"Right now we just want to take a deep breath and realize we made it through our four-team bracket," Fox said. "We're happy to be playing, that's for sure."

Last year, Oregon State scored the go-ahead run in the deciding game on the Tar Heels' fourth error.

The teams meet Saturday night in the first CWS-final rematch since Southern California met Oregon State in 1972-73. USC won both years.

"We're playing more now, last year we got there winning three in a row and it didn't turn out too well for us," said Andrew Carignan, who retired seven of the eight batters he faced for his fifth career CWS save and 18th of the season. "We'll go the other way this time and see if it turns out a different result."

North Carolina (57-14) had just two homers in 14 postseason games before Dustin Ackley, Tim Fedroff, Seth Williams and Josh Horton connected against Rice.

"I'm not sure where the home runs came from on tonight," said Carolina coach Mike Fox. "I guess we saved it up."

The Tar Heels came back from the losers' bracket after losing to Rice 14-4 on Sunday. In three straight wins — once over Louisville and twice over Rice — North Carolina allowed just six runs against the CWS' two hottest-hitting teams.

Rice starter Matt Langwell had allowed just two homers in 79 1-3 innings coming into the CWS, but he gave up one to Louisville and the two to North Carolina here. Bramhall, who had given up just two in 60 1-3 innings entering Thursday, surrendered two in a span of five batters.

Adam Warren allowed three hits and three runs in six-plus innings in his first NCAA tournament start. The sophomore right-hander gave way to Rob Wooten after issuing a walk to start the seventh.

Wooten allowed back-to-back singles and an RBI double to Diego Seastrunk, who went 2-for-5 and drove in three runs after moving from the seventh to second spot in the batting order.

Joe Savery could have tied it with a home run in his last at-bat, but was called out on a fastball to end the seventh inning.

"It's tough to end your career on a pitch that's six inches outside," Savery said. "And for them to show it on the board, that ain't me complaining. It was up in front of God and everyone."

The Owls finished with a CWS showing that mirrored last year's.

Rice won its first two games in Omaha in 2006, then went home after getting shut out twice to Oregon State. The Owls scored 29 runs in their first two CWS games this year but scored only five in two losses to Carolina.

sense, and the government knows that, but it threw that out to claim the plot endangered "thousands" of lives.

The real question is, Did these guys actually plan it, or were they set up by the government's federal informant? The federal government has a terrible record of using informants to entrap people. The whole tragedy of Ruby Ridge, which cost the lives of Randy Weaver's wife and son, resulted from a federal informant who nagged Weaver into sawing off the barrels of a shotgun, something any kid can do with a vice and a hacksaw. The feds then arrested Weaver with the intention of forcing him to become an informant, and the tragic farce ensued.

So even though you haven't felt the arbitrary and unjust power of the government, you should read this book and find out just how much deception is involved in this war on terror. You'll discover how often oil, diamonds and big business play behind-the-scenes roles in this current so-called war.

As the German people discovered, once a government has unlimited power, it will eventually use that power against everyone.

ble to be a blessing for us if we let Him. God is the source of help. His ear is attentive: "Then I will hear from heaven." His heart forgiving. His hand healing.

His ear is attentive to prayers made in the temple. The church is God's house. We may not expect spiritual revival or moral and spiritual transformation elsewhere.

His people are responsible. Christians can, for example, change conditions by providing good government, taking care of the needy, raising moral standards.

God has a plan for our cure. Because we have been proud, we must humble ourselves. Because we have been prayerless, we are called to prayer. Because we have sought everything else, we must seek the face of God. Because we have walked in wicked ways, we must turn from them.

Few evils exist without being condoned or supported by church members. We have trouble because we have preferred the trouble to the cure. It will be remedied when God's people turn to God.
