DIPLOMATIC GAMBIT? — Cuban leader Fidel Castro, left, awaits the results of the current Organization of American States convention in Georgia to see if his country will be returned to membership in the OAS. U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, right, has consented quietly to a Mexican proposal to poll the OAS governments on inviting Cuba to the next conference in March.

Economy Is Headed Towards Recession

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The cost of living rose 1.1 per cent in March, the third highest monthly increase in 27 years. Higher prices for food and gasoline accounted for nearly half of the increase.

The report today on the Consumer Price Index (CPI) came as the second piece of bad news for the U.S. economy in two days. The Commerce Department reported Thursday the nation's economic growth rate fell by the biggest rate in 16 years and inflation was at a 23-year high.

The 1.1 jump in the CPI last month has exceeded only twice since 1947 — a 1.3 advance in February this year and a 1.8 per cent increase last August, the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said.

In the first three months of the year the CPI has increased at an annual rate of 14.5 per cent, greatest three-month increase since consumer prices went up at an annual rate of 15.2 per cent in the first quarter of 1951.

In spite of the dark news on two consecutive days, Gary Seevers, acting chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, expressed some cautious optimism about future economic trends. He said prospects appeared favorable for a leveling-off in the key categories that showed big rises last month.

"We believe we are now in a period when the sharp rise in food prices is moderating," Seevers said, and on fuel prices, he said it appeared that "most of the expected bulge ... is behind us."

The CPI rose in March to 143.1. This meant that goods and services which cost $100 in 1967 base period cost $143.10 last month—an increase of 43.1 per cent in the past seven years.

Consumer prices in March were 10.2 per cent higher than a year earlier, the biggest 12-month increase since the year ending in October 1947. The BLS said these were some of the items that accounted for the big March increase:

- Gasoline and motor oil accounted for about a fourth of the rise, going up 7 per cent to a level 39.3 per cent above a year ago.
- Food accounted for another quarter of the jump, although the price increase of 1 per cent was lower than the 2.5 per cent rise in February and a 1.6 increase in January.
- Nonfood commodities went up 1.5 per cent, largest monthly increase since statistics were started in 1956. The previous high of 1 per cent was set in February.
- Postal charges were up 20 per cent in March as the price for mailing a letter was raised 2 cents to a dime, and doctor's fees increased 1.7 per cent.

The Commerce Department said Thursday that economic growth, as judged by the Gross National Product (GNP), fell at an annual rate of 5.8 per cent in the first quarter while inflation was going up at a 10.8 per cent annual rate.

The GNP index measures inflation nationwide in wholesale and retail prices, while the CPI gauges prices including changes resulting from inflation and "real" growth in selected urban areas.

The GNP index of 10.8 per cent reflected effects of price increases on the economy as a whole, while the CPI is a more accurate reflection of the effect on the average consumer.

The bad news Thursday on GNP and inflation was attributed largely to the energy shortage and had been anticipated.

U.S. Assents To Cuba Debate

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Quietly, without debate, the United States has assented to a Latin American diplomatic gambit aimed at bringing Cuba in from the cold.

Without discussion, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger consented Thursday to a Mexican proposal that hemisphere governments be polled on whether they want Cuba invited to their next foreign ministers conference.

If everyone agrees, Fidel Castro will send his representative to a parley of American states—this one in Buenos Aires next March—for the first time since the Organization of American States (OAS) imposed a diplomatic and economic quarantine against his government in 1964.

Not Even Mentioned

This quiet little piece of business did not even rate mention in the eight-page communique that ended the two-day Washington meeting of hemisphere foreign ministers Tuesday. But enthused Latin diplomats made clear they viewed it as a major breakthrough.

"This is the first step toward ending the isolation of Cuba," Mexican Foreign Minister Emilio O. Rabasa said.

State Department officials refused to describe Kissinger's agreement to the poll as reflecting any major change in U.S. policy toward Cuba. But the United States never before has agreed to support a procedure that could return Cuba to participation in the inter-American system since Washington broke relations with Havana in January, 1961.

Castro told Rabasa, when the Mexican foreign minister paid a recent visit, that he was ready to send his man to Latin American conferences "in a constructive spirit," so long as the affair took place outside the formal framework of the OAS. The Buenos Aires invitation would fit his bill perfectly. Like the Washington meeting, it is considered an "informal dialogue."

Invitation Doubtful
State Department

officials said they doubted any invitation would be issued to Castro because only six of the 24 Latin American governments to be polled have diplomatic relations with Havana.

But the collective hemispheric policy of quarantining Cuba has shorter roots than the United States' own version and it has been crumbling for some years.

Although the OAS kicked Castro's government—but not Cuba as a state—out of its organization in 1962, it did not require each member state to break relations and embargo trade with Havana until 1964.

Warren Hasse, who has served on the board since 1968, and Mrs. Dorothy Stowers, who was appointed in January to fill the unexpired term of Ben Sturgeon were the outgoing members of the board. Mrs. Stowers was a candidate in the April 6 election, coming in fourth in a field of five seeking election to the two vacant seats.

Prior to the swearing in ceremony, conducted by school attorney Don Lane, the old board approved due bills and invoices and minutes of past meetings, as well as several personnel considerations.

The board unanimously approved raising the salary of high school head basketball coach Robert McPherson by $2,000 per year and the payment of $300 to Betty Chamberlain for her work with the girls' track team this spring. Several resignations and one recommendation to hire an instructor for the remainder of the school year were also approved.

Following the swearing in of the two new members, the board elected officers for the 1974-75 term.

Simmons was nominated by Anderson for the board presidency. The motion was seconded by Beck and Simmons was elected by a 4-1 vote. He voted no.

Beck was nominated for vice president by Arrington. The vote was 4-0 with Beck abstaining. Anderson was elected secretary of the board after being nominated by Beck. Arrington seconded that nomination.

At one time after the regular business of the board had resumed, the board paused to present plaques to outgoing members Stowers and Hasse.

After being presented with her plaque, Mrs. Stowers returned it, saying she did not feel she had served enough time on the board and had not learned enough about its operation to deserve the recognition.

In an emotional tone, Mrs. Stowers blasted Pampa Daily News editor Tex DeWeese for insinuations allegedly made by him about her appointment to the board. She said she was appointed by the unanimous vote of the board and that no one person appointed her to the position.

Asked today if he had any comment on Mrs. Stowers' remarks, DeWeese said:

"The News merely stated facts regarding the issue in the school election, facts recorded in minutes of the February 11 school board meeting. There would seem to be no doubt this was borne out of the election results."

Hasse said after being presented with his plaque that he had enjoyed his six years on the school board. He further added that he hoped the board and the community realize that Superintendent James F. Malone is a fine man and a top educator.

In routine business, the May meeting of the board was set for Thursday, May

NEW MEMBERS SWORN IN

Board Conducts Busy Session

By CLAY LIVELY

Two new members of the Pampa Independent School District Board of Trustees were sworn in last night at the April meeting of the board at Carver Center.

Sam Anderson and Bill Arrington, elected to the board in the April 6 school election, were sworn in following the canvassing of the returns of the election by the old board.

Arrington and Anderson joined current members Bob Carmichael, Curt Beck and Paul Simmons on the board.

Warren Hasse, who has served on the board since 1968, and Mrs. Dorothy Stowers, who was appointed in January to fill the unexpired term of Ben Sturgeon were the outgoing members of the board. Mrs. Stowers was a candidate in the April 6 election, coming in fourth in a field of five seeking election to the two vacant seats.

In routine business, the May meeting of the board was set for Thursday, May 16. Subsequent regular meetings of the board will then be held on the second Monday of each month in the evening.

Approval was given for the purchase of a lot at 19th and Lea on which the building trades department at Pampa High School will construct a house. The lot will be purchased at a cost of $2,800.

Several requests for the use of school facilities by private groups were then considered. A request from the Bible Church of Pampa to use the cafeteria and four classrooms at either PHS or the junior high was tabled until a representative of the church appears before the board.

A request for the continued use of Carver gym for religious and recreational purposes was approved, as was a request by Leon Ricketts of San Antonio for the use of the junior high school auditorium April 26 for a program by a music group traveling under the auspices of the Church of Christ.

Consideration of the district's workmens compensation coverage was tabled until the May meeting. W.B. Jackson, W.A. Morgan and Robert Mack were reappointed to the school district's board of equalization.

Action on establishing a written policy with regard to the handling of teacher re-employment recommendation lists was deferred to a later meeting pending a written recommendation prepared by a counsel of the board president's choice.

Bird Watchers Tour Set Near Lake Meredith

An adventure in Panhandle Springtime will be offered to area residents by the National Park Service Saturday when Mrs. Fern Cain will lead a walk through McBride Canyon at Lake Meredith Recreation Area.

Mrs. Cain, president of Texas Panhandle Audubon Society, and NPS employee, specializes in birds of the Panhandle. She explained that birds are now migrating to the north and since the area is situated along the central flyway, a good variety of species is possible.

The walk tomorrow will begin at the McBride House at 8 a.m. Participants should wear sturdy shoes and a long-sleeved shirt and bring binoculars if possible.

"And don't forget your sense of adventure," she added.

Anyone interested in identifying birds in the field is welcome.

Arrington said he did not feel the board should establish a policy which might contradict section 6 of the Texas House bill 6 concerning "Governmental Bodies — Access to Information by Public."

Arrington was joined by Beck and Anderson in his motion to have counsel appointed to give an opinion on the necessity of the board establishing a policy on the matter. Simmons and Carmichael voted no.

A plan raising the wages of school district employees to the new federal minimum wage of $2 per hour was approved. It calls for an increase May 1 for cafeteria and custodial employees in other departments who are not directly affected by the minimum wage change.

In other action, the board approved the purchase of 12 instruments for the high school and junior high bands.

In some cases the low bid for a particular instrument was not approved because of uncertainties about when the instrument could be delivered.

Discussion of school district liability insurance was carried over to a later meeting pending completion of a report by school attorney Lane.

Member Curt Beck presented a report to the board on his recent trip to Houston for the annual convention of the National School Boards Association.

Assistant superintendent James Trusty presented a report on energy usage in the district for January 1973 compared to January 1974 and on energy usage for the first three months of 1974 compared to the first quarter of 1973.

In January of this year, the district had a nine percent decrease in electricity usage over 1973 and showed a one percent increase in natural gas usage.

For the first three months, however, Trusty said, there was a decrease of between 40 and 50 percent in electrical usage this year over last and a decrease of not quite that much in natural gas usage.

He said that during the same period the district has used 43 percent more gasoline this year than last. Trusty attributed that to the addition of three mid-day kindergarten bus runs and the fact that all other bus routes in the district are 10 to 12 miles longer this year.

The board has scheduled a breakfast meeting Monday at 7 a.m. at the Coronado Inn to consider submitting an application to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Office of Education, for a grant of not more than $10,000 for Drug Abuse Prevention and Early Intervention Projects.

Briscoe Approves 4 Law Aid Grants

AUSTIN — Gov. Dolph Briscoe has approved four grants for a total of $120,228 for improving law enforcement and justice in the region served by the Amarillo-based Panhandle Regional Planning Commission.

The money comes from the Criminal Justice Division of the governor's office. CJD administers the state's block grant from the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration under the Crime Control Act of 1973.

Largest of the local awards, $38,095, goes to Collingsworth County in second-year funding of a regional probation project. With 1974 funding, the project has been expanded to serve approximately 250 adult and juvenile probationers in the counties of Carson, Childress, Donley, Hall, Wheeler and Collingsworth.

During the project's first year of operation, only 147 referrals, all juveniles, were received from three counties.

Hartley County gets two criminal-justice awards. A $28,327 grant initiates a fugitive apprehension unit aimed at reducing the number of unserved felony warrants by increasing apprehensions in the 69th District Court. Goal is to reduce the unserved felony warrants in that district by 50 percent.

Hartley County will also hire a criminal investigator and secretary, with a $19,423 award. The project staff will serve the entire 69th Judicial District, under the direction of Michael P. Metcalf, district attorney.

Hemphill County gets $34,383 to continue its law-enforcement consolidation project, under the direction of Elton Corley, sheriff. The project has provided unified law-enforcement services through a contract between the city of Canadian and Hemphill County.

Benefits of this project so far have included unified record system, elimination of duplication of services, and implementation of a 24-hour patrol and dispatch service.

The local grants were among 53, for a total of more than $3.8 million, which Gov. Briscoe approved.

OAS Convention Beginning Today

ATLANTA (UPI) — The Organization of American States (OAS) opens its convention today amid new U.S. promises of nonintervention in Latin affairs and possible efforts to have Cuba's full membership in the group restored.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, who will address the OAS session, arrived Thursday night along with the foreign ministers from 22 participating Latin American and Caribbean countries.

Along with the meeting came promises of "several demonstrations," aimed primarily at the display of the Cuban flag and expected efforts to have Cuba's OAS membership restored. Cuba was suspended when the OAS withdrew recognition of the Fidel Castro government in 1962.

Another group promised to protest the military overthrow of the Allende Marxist government in Chile. The spokesman said all protests were expected to be peaceful, but security precautions were tightened.

State troopers were stationed at the Georgia Capitol where more than 1,000 persons were expected for the 11-day session.

An OAS official said the restoration of Cuba as a full member was not on the agenda and was not expected to come up during the session. But he said the Argentine delegation might move to allow the group to renew diplomatic relations with Cuba.

Led by the United States, the OAS repeatedly has gone on record in the past against communism. But the Communist Allende government was accepted, and this new liberal outlook was seen by some observers as possibly reflected in a historic document being prepared to update the OAS charter.

A special committee is to make a status report to the assembly on steps being taken to bring the charter more in line with changing world conditions and allow member nations to "respond adequately" to them.

Other expected issues include new talks on whether the United States should divest itself of the Panama Canal.

Simmons was nominated by Anderson for the board presidency. The motion was seconded by Beck and Simmons was elected by a 4-1 vote. He voted no.

Beck was nominated for vice president by Arrington. The vote was 4-0 with Beck abstaining. Anderson was elected secretary of the board after being nominated by Beck. Arrington seconded that nomination.

At one time after the regular business of the board had resumed, the board paused to present plaques to outgoing members Stowers and Hasse.

WITH FIRST AIR STRIKES

Israel Intensifying Attrition War

United Press International

Israel intensified the war of attrition on the Golan Heights front today with its first air strikes well beyond Mount Hermon. There was tank and artillery fighting on the Golan Heights for the 39th day, and Syria said its Soviet-supplied air defenses were confusing and inflicting heavy losses on the Israeli air force.

Syrian military communiques said that by 11:10 a.m. (4:10 a.m. CDT) seven Israeli planes, one of them a pilotless reconnaissance aircraft, were shot down today. This brought the total which the Syrians claim to have shot down since April 8 to 16. Israel said all its planes returned safely to base.

Syria sent its air force into action Thursday for the first time since the October war and the Israeli cabinet went into emergency session today to hear an assessment of the situation by Defense Minister Moshe Dayan and the new chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Mordechai Gur.

An Israeli command communique said Israeli aircraft for the first time since the 18-day war attacked Syrian targets away from the Mount Hermon area. It said the planes strafed Syrian positions south of the bulge Israeli forces thrust into Syria in the war.

The Jerusalem Post said Syria's attack Thursday with 14 MIG21s may have been an attempt to lure pursuing Israeli aircraft into a strengthened network of SAM6 missiles.

The Syrians "have been consolidating their anti-aircraft missiles (and were reported to have recently strengthened their defense with a dense network of missile batteries supplied by the Soviet Union," the Post said.

"Most of these were of the SAM6 type."

Syria said "our air defense systems are engaging enemy aircraft and preventing them from fulfilling their objectives. The confusion created by our air defense systems made enemy aircraft bombard their own (Israeli) positions in the Tel Al Araea area and inflicted casualties."

Beirut newspapers and diplomatic sources in London have reported the Soviet Union has sent Syria new missile systems and advanced MIGs in an effort to restore the Soviet position in the Middle East. The Russian position was further weakened Thursday when Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said he was ending 18 years of reliance on Soviet arms and would look elsewhere.

In Cairo, the newspaper Al-Ahram said despite the escalation of fighting on the Golan Heights, Washington official circles are optimistic about the prospects of realizing the disengagement of Syrian and Israeli forces.

BRIEFCASE FULL OF BILLS

Stans Continuing Testimony On Contribution From Vesco

NEW YORK (UPI) — How does a man look and what does he say when he hands over a briefcase full of $100 bills—2,000 of them—at 11 a.m. on April 10, 1972, to the boss of the Nixon campaign finance committee?

"My impression is he put his chin on his chest," said Maurice H. Stans, who was that boss at that time.

Prosecutor John R. Wing asked him to demonstrate.

Stans, 66, who served as commerce secretary for Nixon and budget director for Eisenhower, was a gray-haired man in the witness chair Thursday, wearing a solid gray suit, pale blue shirt and tiny American flag in his jacket lapel.

He lowered his chin onto a gray tie with big red and white dots.

"In other words, he was talking into his necktie?" Wing asked.

"Yes, in a timid voice that didn't match his normal voice."

"What did you hear?"

"As best I can recall, he said: 'Mr. Vesco hopes this will be of help. That's what I thought I heard. Harry Sears interjected immediately. 'Now wait a minute. This is a proper contribution. There is no quid pro quo here.'"

The man with chin on chest was Laurence B. Richardson, president of financier Robert L. Vesco's top company, Harry L. Sears, who had come to Stans' office with him, was a New Jersey Republican politician and a part-time Vesco employe as an attorney.

Richardson's timid-voiced delivery led ultimately to this federal court trial of Stans and former Attorney General John N. Mitchell on charges of trying to impede a Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of Vesco in exchange for the $200,000.

Stans was the last big defense witness. The trial will go to the jury next week. Now Wing was turning on an intense cross-examination.

"Did you say anything?" he asked.

"Not at that time," Stans said.

"When you heard those words, 'quid pro quo,' didn't you think Richardson was asking you to help out on the Vesco case?"

"No, I thought I just missed something."

"What do you think quid pro quo means?"

"Consideration: One thing for another."

"What do you think Sears meant?"

"I thought," Stans replied, "what my answer to him was: 'I wouldn't accept the money on any other basis.' I thought perhaps Sears had misunderstood Richardson."

"You thought Richardson was referring to the campaign?" Wing continued sarcastically.

"Did you turn to Sears and say: 'Wait a minute, Harry, he's just talking about the campaign.'?"

Stans stared at the prosecutor and shook his head.

FOUND IN HQ's
Police Studying SLA Notebook

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A notebook mentioning "guns" and an "action" against Patricia Hearst was found by police in a burned and hastily abandoned Symbionese Liberation Army (SLA) headquarters three weeks before the girl was kidnapped, it was disclosed today.

A federal investigator said the notebook notations, including Miss Hearst's name and school, were perhaps made by someone taking notes on a telephone call.

Newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst said the notebook was a "questionable proof" his daughter was not involved in the abduction.

Hearst and his wife, Catherine, also defended their daughter after U.S. Attorney General William B. Saxbe called the girl a "common criminal."

However, Hearst said that the girl shown in the photographs taken during a holdup at the Hibernia Bank Monday probably was his daughter, as the FBI has reported. Earlier, Hearst had said he had enough doubts that he would have had difficulty testifying about the girl's identity in court.

"The man (Saxbe) made irresponsible statements and evidently talks off the top of his head when he should be listening," Hearst said.

However, Hearst said he could not understand why neither he nor his daughter was notified by police when the notebook was discovered after an arson fire January 10 in a Concord house used by the SLA.

Woman Has 4th Set Of Twins

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI) — The chances it could happen are one in 65 million, but Mary Morris of Powhatan, Va., has beaten those odds and given birth to her fourth consecutive set of twins.

She and her husband, Howard, a school custodian, now have 13 children.

Mrs. Morris, who has not taken fertility drugs, said Thursday she was surprised at first but now is "just a proud mother, that's all." She said her husband was also a bit surprised at the birth of more twins, "but as the days go by we get more and more used to it."

A spokesman at the Medical College of Virginia, where the twin girls were born April 11, said the chances of a woman bearing four sets of twins in a row are about 65,610,000 to one.

Asked how she managed to cope with such a large household, Mrs. Morris said, "It gets pretty rough sometimes, but we make out."

The Morris' last twins, a boy and a girl, were born Oct. 2, 1971. The others were born in 1965 and 1962.

Police Search In Zebra Hunt Gets Criticism

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Mayor Joseph Alioto has defended as constitutional a police tactic of stopping and questioning young blacks in an effort to capture the "Zebra" killers.

And, Alioto told a crowded news conference Thursday night, he welcomed a civil rights lawsuit challenging the validity of the stop-and-search program.

Twelve white persons have been slain by blacks in random street attacks since November. Six others have been wounded. The stop-and-search program was instituted Wednesday after the 12th victim was gunned down in a quiet neighborhood.

Civil rights groups criticized the police action on grounds it was violating the constitutional rights of blacks who were being stopped on city streets, searched and questioned.

"I want first of all to dispel the notion that there can be any racial implication in what we are doing," Alioto said.

He added that, when officers were hunting the "Zodiac" killer, they were spot-checking hundreds of whites.

Police Studying House Burglary, Vandalism Case

Police are investigating the burglary of the Alvin McGill residence, 513 N. Wells, sometime between April 12 and yesterday morning.

According to reports, entry and exit were apparently made through a bedroom window on the south side of the house. Taken were 110 stereo tapes valued at $500, a tape player with a value of $65 and a bottle of liquor worth $6.

Mrs. Teresa Reed, 428 N. Cuyler, reported several houses owned by her located on a lot at 806 Harvester St. had been entered and considerable damage done to them.

Reports said part of the ceilings in the houses were torn down, along with room partitions. The houses have reportedly been unoccupied for a number of years.

A registered collie puppy owned by Gene Bresse, 612 Reid, was found shot to death in a pen at the residence yesterday morning. The $150 dog had apparently been shot in the stomach with a 22 caliber bullet or a pellet gun. Other dogs in the pen were not injured.

Two rabbits, one a male and the other a female, were reported stolen from a cage at the 321 Finley St. residence of G. L. Williams. Williams said he was in the process of moving to another house when the thefts occurred.

French Candidates Begin Campaigning

PARIS (UPI) — A dozen candidates officially began campaigning today for next month's French presidential election, with a Socialist and two Gaullists leading the field.

The Constitutional Council, which oversees French elections, announced the names of the candidates Thursday night and said the contenders would share an estimated $12 million in broadcast time provided by state networks.

The candidate list included the names of the three top contenders — Francois Mitterrand, secretary general of the Socialist party; former Gaullist Premier Jacques Chaban-Delmas and Gaullist Finance Minister Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

The council said an additional nine candidates qualified to get their names on the ballot. The rest of the 30 candidate hopefuls failed to get the necessary backing of 100 elected officials.

The campaign was scheduled to begin officially on radio and television today with an evening broadcast by the lone woman candidate, Trotskyite Arlette Laguiller, a bank employe.

The council has promised to let each candidate have a total of 65 minutes on television and 65 minutes on radio during the campaign for the May 5 election to succeed President Georges Pompidou, who died April 2 of bone cancer.

If none of the candidates manages to get a majority in the initial balloting, the two top finishers would meet May 19 in a runoff election.

Chaban-Delmas, candidate of the main Gaullist party, and Mitterrand, choice of a broad group of leftists including the Communists, began campaigning a day early, crossing the country Thursday to seek votes.

Mitterrand traveled east to Metz and Strasbourg for speeches. He attacked the splintered conservative Gaullist majority, saying, "I see discord setting in on the French rightwing — it doubts itself."

James Buchanan was the only President who did not marry.

Tech Researcher Conducts Tests On Causes Of Broken Glass

LUBBOCK — In violent windstorms, tornadoes and hurricanes, the crash of broken glass is part of the noise and a great part of the destruction.

In addition to possible injury to building occupants, the greatest damage is to the contents of a building after windows break. Damage to contents may total as much or more than the value of buildings themselves, according to Dr. Joseph E. Minor, director of Texas Tech University's Institute for Disaster Research.

Minor is studying the reasons for window breakage, and in his research has deliberately broken more than 250 panes of glass in study of the problem.

The high speed of winds is not the only cause of glass breakage. Minor said. Windborne missiles break the glass and the most common missile is gravel, some of it no larger than a cottonseed or a small marble.

Gravel, carried by the wind, at speeds as low as 30 mph can impact with sufficient force to break some kinds of window glass, Minor said.

Gravel roofs are economical to construct and maintain," Minor said. "They are common in urban areas and provide a ready source of potentially hazardous missiles."

In investigations of damage caused by more than 20 storms, including severe windstorms, tornadoes and hurricanes, Minor has found similar patterns of glass breakage and much evidence relating window breakage to roof gravel.

"More windows are broken in the lower stories of buildings than in higher stories where they are subject to the highest wind pressure," he said.

"Damaged, but not broken, windows usually are pitted and abraded in lower stories," said Minor, "and gravel particles are frequently found inside rooms where windows have been broken. Gravel particles have been found in rooms as high as the 18th floor in some buildings."

Minor collected samples of roof gravel from buildings in Lubbock and Corpus Christi from roofs near where window damage had occurred during storms. San Antonio also was surveyed to determine gravel size and locations of gravel roofs in the urban area.

Analysis of gravel samplings showed common roof gravel to range in size from one-quarter inch to one-half inch in diameter and to weigh between 0.61 and 5.55 grams, said Minor. Laboratory studies have shown that gravel in this range of sizes can be lifted into the windstream by windspeeds as low as 80 mph, he said.

"Winds blowing through an urban area can be channeled down streets and alleys bordered by tall buildings. This channelization increases windspeed and force," Minor said. "This increase is often enough to carry gravel."

The glass industry currently is oriented toward making glass resistant to wind pressure," he said. "Glass manufacturers also should begin to look into making glass more resistant to impact."

Minor and team of research assistants used gravel-sized steel balls and an air-powered gravel gun in their laboratory experiments in the mechanics of glass breakage. Their tests were conducted using simulated missile impact speeds ranging from 27 to 61 mph.

The researchers determined that window glass under pressure is extremely strong for short periods of time. Glass strength is dependent upon the size and depth of surface flaws, and flaws tend to increase under pressure, said Minor.

"We found that glass that has been slightly damaged by one impact is weakened and that subsequent windstorms may break it," he said. "When under wind pressure a lower missile impact speed is required to break the glass."

"While we have begun to learn a little about how and why glass breakage occurs, much more research is needed to find ways of improving the missile resistance of glass," Minor said.

The researcher explained that the needed research will take time, and when new methods are found, it will take still more time for them to be implemented by the glass industry and the construction industry.

In the meantime, he said, there are some things which can be done to lessen the potential hazard of windborne missiles.

Architects and builders can be made aware of the hazard posed by gravel roofs and can adjust their design concepts to reduce their number. New buildings can be positioned to place window walls out of the line of potential missile sources.

New design concepts in construction and in glass production will be costly, according to Minor, but the savings in damage to property and building contents should offset increased construction costs.

In addition to window glass studies, the Institute for Disaster Research of the Texas Tech College of Engineering is investing the economic impact of disasters; wind-structure interaction; wind resistance of mobile homes; protection criteria for schools; glass impact phenomena; and windstorm documentation. Other studies currently in progress in the College of Engineering include wind chargers and support structure in the Institute for Energy Research and wind energy systems analysis in the Institute for Systems Research.

Business Today

By LEROY POPE
UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK (UPI)—Not so many years ago the executive who made rapid-fire decisions was greatly admired.

Today such a boss is likely to give his associates a bad case of the jitters. He not only may harm his company but may pose at least some threat to the nation's economy or its environment, says Prof. Howard Raiffa of Harvard.

Raiffa teaches a course called "Analysis of Decision Making." It has been reduced to a home study format composed of 10 loose leaf books and some audio cassettes and is being marketed by Encyclopedia Britannica Educational Corp. Either as taught at Harvard or in the home study version, it has been used and endorsed by executives at General Electric, Pillsbury, DuPont, Ford Motor Co., Arthur D. Little, Inc., General Motors, Polaroid, Procter & Gamble and others.

Reduce Risk

It can reduce or eliminate risk in many kinds of decisions says Raiffa. "A personal one, for example, an executive of one big company who was transferred to a new location for a fixed period of three years used the principles of the course to decide whether he would come out better by renting or buying a house at the new location."

Most examples given were weightier. "Pillsbury used the method to decide to shift from a box to a bag container for a popular grocery product," Raiffa said. "The bag proved successful and the cost of an expensive test marketing program was averted."

General Electric had to decide whether to raise prices on a mature product whose sales were declining or to expand manufacturing capacity and cut the price in the hope of expanding sales. The Raiffa method showed it would be wiser to raise the price.

An Agonizing Process
Raiffa said the need for his course developed because modern business conditions have made effective decision making a poignant, even an agonizing process.

"Bad decisions not only can be costly, they can help deplete our growing list of endangered resources," he said.

Professor Raiffa said the decision making process is now so complicated "there is no longer any element or factor which may not at some time become relevant to a decision." Naturally, he said, realization of that makes many executives who must make decisions feel personally overwhelmed.

In an apparent paradox, Raiffa said many executives are too frightened by the unavailability of some data they feel they ought to have in order to make a correct decision. Actually, he said, the manager must realize he never will be able to have all the necessary facts.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

SATURDAY, APRIL 20
Your birthday today: The Sun enters Taurus today at 7:20 a. m. Eastern Daylight Time [the time is different in other years]. For both late Aries natives and early Taurians, the coming year is one of intense experience and expression, dramatic in personal terms. Changes made this year are permanent as a rule. Get rid of old troublesome habits. Today's natives: Aries is highly idealistic, visionary; Taurus has a keen approach to organization, the arts.

Aries [March 21-April 19]: So much has been left over for the weekend that various plans conflict. Everybody has his own idea and is enthusiastically waiting to promote it.

Taurus [April 20-May 20]: Don't exert yourself beyond your usual Saturday habits. If you are delayed in keeping an appointment, which is likely, avoid detours and abrupt changes of direction.

Gemini [May 21-June 20]: Teamwork is noisy but effective today, so pitch in to do your full share despite distraction. Creative endeavors thrive, some projects come to essential perfection.

Cancer [June 21-July 22]: Work tends to encroach on time you had expected to spend on personal projects. The sooner you get it straight, the more likely you can smooth things out.

Leo [July 23-Aug. 22]: You're just as well off staying put, unless you do have some definite place to be, with a sound commitment made in advance. In any case, avoid haste and waste.

Virgo [Aug. 23-Sept. 22]: Avoid making any promises until very late in the day, and then only for the near future. Give plenty of consideration to home and loved ones.

Libra [Sept. 23-Oct. 22]: Personal hopes suffer a let-down; you encounter very slow going as nobody is inclined to cooperate beyond amenities. Find some creative endeavor.

Scorpio [Oct. 23-Nov. 21]: Speak up where others need to know your objectives. Whatever time you take from your vocation to attend personal welfare, health care, is well spent.

Sagittarius [Nov. 22-Dec. 21]: Today is an exercise in being tolerant of close friends and their ideas, but not for joining their financial schemes. Romantic attraction seems hindered.

Capricorn [Dec. 22-Jan. 19]: Complete neglected or interrupted negotiations early. It's a day that fluctuates, has many puzzling phases. You can discover a great deal.

Aquarius [Jan. 20-Feb. 18]: With all the best intentions and the greatest of deliberation, results are yet mixed and doubtful. Avoid extreme action or an invitation to quarrel.

Pisces [Feb. 19-March 20]: Relationships at all levels must be seen as works of personal art. Whims are strong and can raise havoc with your short-range finances.

Spring Cleaning—Store Chemicals Safely

COLLEGE STATION — When "spring cleaning," make sure dangerous chemicals are stored safely — or else discard them.

This advice comes from Lillian Cochran, home management specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System.

"Concentrate this home safety check on three major areas — the medicine cabinet, laundry area and garden supply storage area. "These places usually contain potentially dangerous items — especially for small, curious children."

The specialist pointed out that medicine cabinets hold prescription medications, cough syrups, aspirin, boric acid, camphorated oil and oil of wintergreen.

"So, keep these and other medicines where small children can't get them.

"Also, discard medicines without labels, and don't reuse a bottle for something other than its original purpose," she advised.

In a home laundry area, several cleaning aids represent potential dangers. "To keep curious little hands away from these products — bleaches, drain cleaners, dyes, detergents, dry cleaners, floor and rug cleaners and ammonia — store them up high. Never store them under the sink," Miss Cochran emphasized.

Some garden supplies are extremely dangerous, the specialist continued.

"They include toxic chemicals used to control or repel insects, plant diseases, rodents and weeds. Lock such chemicals in a separate storage area.

"When using these products, always read the labels carefully. Don't stir any chemical solution with your hands.

"Also, rinse and drain all empty pesticide containers with water. Then discard these containers in such a manner that children or animals can't come in contact with them," she concluded.

KARPIN ON BRIDGE
 By FRED KARPIN

There is a recurring type of "book" situation that is frequently mishandled by quite a few bridge players. It is embodied in today's deal.

Neither side vulnerable. South deals.

 ♠ 8 6 5 3
 ♥ K 6 4 3
 ♦ 8 1
 ♣ Q 9 5

EAST
 ♠ Q J 10 9
 ♥ J 9
 ♦ Q 10 2
 ♣ K 8 7 6

The bidding:
 1♣ Pass 1♥ Pass
 3NT Pass Pass Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♠.

North made an inspired guess when he elected to respond with one heart (instead of passing) on his five high-card points. And South made the winning decision when he chose to rebid three notrump (instead of two notrump). But South messed things up in the play.

West made the normal opening lead of his fourth from the highest diamond, and when East put up the queen, it was allowed to win the trick. East continued with the ten of diamonds, and when declarer again played low, West overtook with his jack. A third diamond lead then drove out South's ace, a low spade being discarded from the dummy.

Dummy was now entered — for the first and last time — via the king of hearts. The queen of clubs was then laid down, and East played low. When the queen won the trick, the nine of clubs was led. Once again East played low. As is evident, South was forced to overtake the nine with the ten.

South next cashed his ace of clubs, with the hope that he would catch East's king. But, as can be observed, he didn't. All declarer could now come to were eight tricks: to spades, two hearts, one diamond, and three clubs.

I am sure that declarer recognized that his sole hope of fulfilling the game contract depended on bringing home four club tricks. This, in turn, depended on East being the possessor of the club king, so that repeated successful finesse could be taken against that key card. But declarer went about it in the wrong way. As he played the hand, he was able to take only two finessses against East's king. By proper play, he would have been enabled to take three finessses against the key card.

The NINE of clubs (instead of the queen) should have been led on the initial club lead. With the nine winning, the queen would then follow. And when the queen would win, declarer would still be in dummy to take a third club finesse. He would not bring home four club tricks, to fulfill his contract.

Dear Abby

When the phone rings,
it's a call to duty

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1974 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd., Inc.

DEAR ABBY: Here is the big argument between me and my mother. If I am home alone, should I have to answer the phone when it rings? I say only if I feel like it. She says I must, regardless!

Let's assume the phone rang, and I didn't answer it. If the call is for a member of the family who isn't home, he or she would not be home to talk anyway, so if it's important, the caller would call back later, right?

If the call is for me, if I chose not to answer it that means I don't feel like talking, so that's my privilege, isn't it?

That's my argument, and my mom disagrees. I see no reason why I should have to tear myself away from what ever I'm doing to answer the telephone. I am tired of being a secretary for my parents and taking messages for them when they're out. If messages are that important to them they should get a mechanical box that answers telephone calls with a prerecorded message.

I am curious to know your opinion on the matter.

TIRED TEEN

DEAR TIRED: I think your mother is right. It could be an emergency or an important message for someone in your family. Now, get off your duff and answer the telephone when it rings!

DEAR ABBY: In a few months we will be moving into our new home, and I'd like to throw a question out to you, and your readers.

We will have a swimming pool, and I want to enjoy using it; however, I've observed other pool owners having problems with uninvited friends who overstay their welcome. Also neighbors who get hurt if they are told: "No, not today."

Someone suggested the flag system [when it's out, come on over], but how do we keep the undesirables from joining in, too?

How can we ask people nicely to leave at a certain time without turning them off completely?

There it is. Am I making a mountain out of a molehill?
NEW POOL OWNER

DEAR OWNER: The flag system is the best. Who are the "undesirables" who "might" join in, too? If you mean strangers, ask them to leave. If they're neighbors who have been invited by you to "come on over" when your flag is out, when you want them to leave at a certain time make it plain beforehand, so they won't be surprised.

DEAR ABBY: At a banquet recently, I was being introduced to my husband's boss and employees when a secretary piped up, "Your hair is very pretty. Or is that a wig?" [It was]. There was total silence while everyone waited for my reply. Having been put on the spot, I had to tell the truth, but I don't know when I've been so humiliated. Another time, I was asked by a woman I hardly knew: "Those aren't your real eyelashes, are they?" [They weren't.]

I have witnessed nervous questions being asked of others. For example: "How much did that cost?" Also: "How come you never had any children?"

Are people getting less considerate of others? I have never noticed such bad manners before. Please tell people to cut it out!

PLEASE DON'T ASK

DEAR PLEASE: Rude, thoughtless and presumptuous people always have been with us, but no one is compelled to answer a question he doesn't want to answer. An appropriate response is, "I don't think it's any of your business." And don't hang around for a rebuttal.

Different Sets for Different Styles

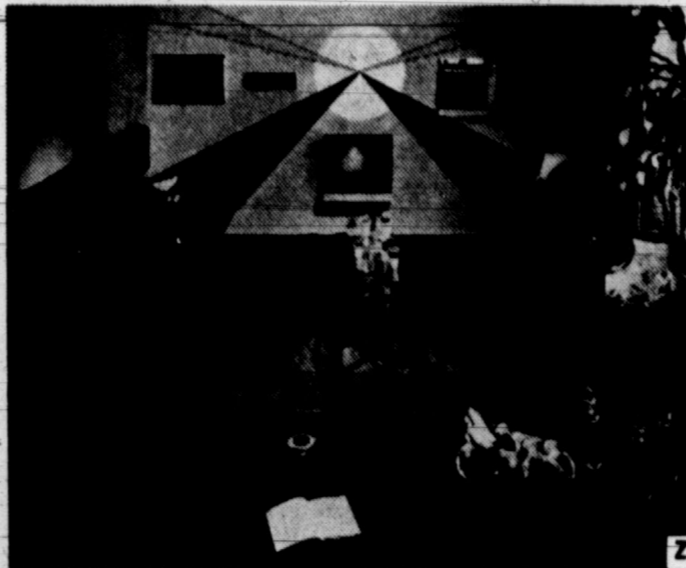

NEW YORK (ED)—When television was first invented, the family set had a prominent place in the living room. It was a dominant piece of furniture. Today, many families have a second or third television set for the kitchen, bedroom or den. A television set need not look out of place. It can be integrated into any room's decor. A big help is the wide range of designs to choose from.

For families who like to watch the evening news while they eat dinner, a television in the dining room makes sense. This TV cabinet with grained Pecan-finish blends beautifully with the mellow wood tones of the room's paneling and the oval dining table. It is inconspicuously placed in a shuttered alcove along with fine china and bibelots. Easy to hang wall shelves or a cupboard would also make good spots for a television in a period-style room.

The television cabinet and stereo console blend well with the wood paneling in this Early American dining room.

with the television cabinet and the Early American decor. The rule of thumb here is similar style and wood grains. Remember, carpeting enhances the acoustics for background or dinner music. Audio buffs often operate on the "If You've Got It—Flaunt It" theory. They display their stereo equipment with pride. Here the Magnavox color television set (built into the wall) becomes part of the graphic design adding its own special dimensions to the total design. The room's decor is conducive to relaxed listening: floor pillows, rug covered banquettes, wall-to-wall carpeting, and restful colors. And all of the soft surfaces serve to improve the acoustics as well. The stereo, tape deck, speakers, and tuner/amplifier add a sculptural dimension to the sight-and-sound wall design.

Audio-visual equipment need not be an eyesore to be hidden away in the closet. There is a stereo console component system to complement every lifestyle. And to fit in with every period of furniture, be it Early American, traditional or modular futuristic.

"AT WIT'S END"

The movie industry has trifled with my affection for the last time.

Throughout the years, I have believed that if I saw something on the Silver Screen it was true.

City Life for Falcons?

LINCOLN, Mass. (UPI) — City life may, surprisingly, be the salvation of the wild peregrine falcon, the Massachusetts Audubon Society reports. The birds have been nearly killed off by DDT in rural areas.

Until little more than a decade ago, wild peregrines bred throughout the Northwest and occasionally along the Appalachians as far south as Lookout Mountain in Georgia. They began to disappear. Scientific evidence blamed DDT's interference with egg-shell production in females. DDT remains in the environment for years. Experts feel that captivity-reared peregrines released in rural areas would face the same fate. Experts have suggested that only cities are free enough of pesticide contamination to risk a transplant of the birds.

The society said the day may arrive when peregrines reared in captivity will nest on tall buildings in Boston, Hartford, Providence, New York, or even Atlanta.

and it made her go blind. I believed that Shirley Temple kicked a confederate officer in the shin and made him release her Daddy and end the whole, silly Civil War. I believed that Gregory Peck is living in a small apartment in the stomach of "Moby Dick" and that John Wayne actually did hold the reins of a stallion in his teeth, a gun in each hand and came out blazing in "True Grit."

I believed so much in "Psycho" that I haven't taken a shower since 1961. But one by one my illusions have been destroyed. Many stars do not do their own singing in musicals, play their own guitars or ride their own horses. A body was dubbed in for the close-ups in a sex film. Good guys rarely do their own stunts and never their own bleeding, and children do not do their own profanity.

The thing that brought all this to a head was "The Exorcist." The child in the movie, Linda Blair, is up for the best actress of the year despite the fact that another actress stood in for her, another screamed for her, another vomited for her and another was possessed with the devil for her. It seems all she brought to the role were her own teeth.

It wouldn't surprise anyone if she indeed won the Oscar and 18 people would rush to the stage to claim it.

This country is going through a rough time when we have to believe in something. Ever since Marlon Brando made love fully clothed in "The Last Tango In Paris," credibility has been fighting a losing battle.

I guess I want someone to say, "Yes, Erma, there is a Movieland where Donald O'Connor stages a show and saves the college from bankruptcy... where King Kong suffers from heights... where a 90-piece orchestra follows Kathryn Grayson around just in case she opens her mouth... and Gidget never has a fever blister.

We need illustrations and we need them now. The next thing you know someone is going to tell me Donald Duck has his voice dubbed in.

I couldn't stand that.

Oil: Profits Up, Image Down

As a nation we seemed to have weathered the storm of the 1973-74 oil crisis without serious scars. The oil industry cannot say as much for itself. Profits may be up, but its public image is way down.

A Gallup Poll during the height of the gasoline shortage last winter showed that more Americans were blaming the oil industry for the state of affairs than were blaming the Arabs. With the industry reporting record profits for 1973 — a 51.2 per cent jump in one year for the top 10 U.S. oil companies — it was hard to argue that higher fuel prices were only lining the pockets of the shinks.

A Senate committee was told recently that an economist for one oil company was warning in 1968 that there might be a glut of petroleum on the market by 1973, driving down prices and profits. This report has breathed new life into the "conspiracy" theory — that oil companies deliberately contrived a shortage to manipulate prices. Conspiracy theories have a way of seizing the imagination when there are no facts at hand to rebut them. We can anticipate that the oil companies will continue to be on the defensive with their own explanation — that petroleum production fell behind through failure to anticipate worldwide demand, and that oil-exporting nations chose an opportune moment to produce less and charge more for their most valuable natural resource.

The companies deserve some credit for discussing their financial affairs more candidly in recent months than they ever did in the past. We are now assured that the big profits of '73 will be plowed into exploration for new sources of oil. Congress should not have to enact tax legislation to nudge the companies in that direction if they can offer credible evidence that their profits are indeed being applied to the estimated $800 billion cost of developing new gas and oil production from presently untapped sources in the next decade.

Credibility is the industry's big problem so far as the American public is concerned. Even with all the cards on the table, it is hard to follow a barrel of oil, which costs between 12 and 15 cents to pump out of the ground in Saudi Arabia, through the pipeline of royalties, taxes, posted prices, market prices, buyers and sellers, shippers and refiners to come out as gasoline at 60 cents or more per gallon at our neighborhood pump. Congressmen who think more control and regulation by the government would help are wading into deep water.

What the public wants is an adequate supply of fuel at a fair price. Oil companies now face the fact that a great many Americans are no longer convinced that a massive and intricate multinational industry responsible only to itself is dedicated to that end. This unfavorable image can probably be corrected by a maximum of candor on the part of the oil companies. If it is not corrected, the industry can be assured of a serious assault in the U.S. Congress.

Shockley Debate Gets Hotter

By GARRY WILLS The strangest people are discovering free speech these days. This used to be considered a "liberal" monopoly, and I remember the time when William F. Buckley Jr. traveled up to Yale to urge that school's Political Union to disinvite Gus Hall on the grounds that such an organization should neither dignify nor trivialize the communist menace of which Mr. Hall was a symbol. (Buckley won his case, by the way, and Gus Hall was told not to come after all.)

But a strange thing happened to Right Wingers in the Sixties. As government spokesmen for the Vietnamese war were banned or booted or harassed on many campuses, the Buckley people began to think they liked absolute free speech after all. At first it was just a matter of asking liberal protesters to be true to their own principles. But, as time went on, the reactionaries began to voice those principles as if they, too, believed in them.

Now they are among those who call most frequently for the right of William Shockley, a Nobel laureate in physics, to preach the genetic inferiority of blacks and the desirability of "discouraging" them from breeding. The more respectable Right Wingers assure us they do not agree with Dr. Shockley — or do not know enough, yet, to say whether they might or might not agree with him — they just (shades of Voltaire) agree with his right to express his own views, whatever they are.

Why this lapse into liberalism if the actual tenets of Shockley are beside the point? People who gladly banned Gus Hall are sudden converts to civil liberties when it is a Shockley speaking. They must pardon us if we doubt their total indifference to what Shockley is saying.

The liberal arguments against Shockley are not much more convincing. They say he has no credentials as a geneticist — i.e., he has taken no courses in it and received no degrees. That is the old escape hatch for fundamentalists of free speech — you can teach any crazy old thing as long as you are licensed (preferably by a doctorate) in the area of your craziness. That argument has some force — but not much — when the teaching of a course is at issue. But would someone claim that Robert Frost could not teach English literature because he had no higher degree in it?

Besides, Shockley is not trying to teach a course on those campuses he has tried to speak at recently — just to make a one-shot appearance for debate or lecturing. William Buckley has done no graduate work in political science, but people are quite properly interested in hearing him discuss current events.

No, neither the right-liberal nor left-liberal arguments from free speech could possibly disqualify Shockley. What is at issue is not the right of the individual to hold and disseminate his views, but the duty of a university to exercise its influence responsibly. If I send an article to the "Wall Street Journal," and that paper refuses to print it because they think it wrong or dumb or immoral, I cannot claim that my rights of free speech have been violated. We were not all born with an equal and inalienable right to commandeer space in the "Wall Street Journal."

But a university, we are often told, is different, or should be — it is open to all ideas, as long as there are qualified people to express them. That is not true, of course. Cannibalism is the object of anthropological study on many a campus, but has no serious advocates as a political system. Certain things are excluded. People do not get up every morning, and erase what they held the night before, and start shopping around for a philosophy. A rough orthodoxy exists in most fields, including the political field — an orthodoxy in favor of our democratic system.

The orthodoxy should be open to challenge, for its own good, if nothing else. Serious objections should be considered — and Shockley, along with those who hold similar views, has been published in prestigious journals, and his arguments are currently being considered in a broad range of disciplines.

But that is not enough for Shockley. What serious distinction does he think he will be able to get across in the turmoil of a public debate, often with a big-name figure opposing him, meant to emphasize the political consequences of his theory? He does not come to analyze, but to proselytize; he raises questions that are moral and political as well as scientific, and which a healthy academic consensus finds disreputable. Why lend respectability and give a platform to such a program — a program questionable in its scientific foundation, odious in its political repercussions, and offensive to this society's moral code?

Colson Coaching Teamsters

By VICTOR RIESEL WASHINGTON — Chuck Colson, once one of the toughest of special White House counselors and now a latter-day amateur theologian, isn't exactly spending all his time at prayer meetings until his June trial comes up. He's moved right into the field to do battle in the vineyards for the Teamsters against Cesar Chavez's United Farm Workers (UFW).

Colson is a hard-nosed pragmatist. So when the Western conference of Teamsters high command policy committee met in Los Angeles recently, there he was analyzing, "strategizing," and advising regional Teamster chiefs. They are now planning to spend a million dollars in an attempt to crush Chavez's tiny AFL-CIO union and drub the giant George Meany all in the same game. Destruction of Meany's influence long has been one of the most emotional objectives of Colson, now the $125,000-a-year Teamsters counsel.

So this is the big payoff. The Colson - Frank Fitzsimmons - Teamsters combination has a political-industrial Hank Aaron clout. So has their opposition. It has not yet been reported. But Meany has just mobilized his own forces. There will be money. Manpower. And unity with the United Auto Workers which now is pouring $10,000 a week into Chavez's boycott war chest.

Meany has fought these campaigns for some 50 years. He's never lost one. A battle, yes. A war, no.

So it's vital to know that on April 10 he dispatched what will become an historic letter to "Presidents of All National and International (AFL-CIO) Unions." As president of the huge AFL-CIO, Meany calls on them to "mobilize." He wants all Teamsters - picked table grapes and lettuce boycotted. In every city. This pits him, his federation and the mini-farm workers union, which has but one table grape contract in the field against the behemoth Teamsters which has signed up 300 growers. Meany personally signed this letter. He is committed. He rarely retreats. The war is on.

"Now the farm workers have undertaken a national product boycott of non-UFW lettuce and table grapes with the full support and endorsement of the AFL-CIO," Meany wrote in his nationally powerful fellow labor chiefs. "The success of this action depends on the wholehearted cooperation of every union member and his family, friends and neighbors."

"I call on you to rally your entire membership to help the farm workers by mobilizing their purchasing power and that of other sympathetic citizens of the community."

Then Meany called for a "united labor campaign." These are strong words and commitments. Especially since the letter says the growers can only end the boycott when all of them swing over to Chavez.

Obviously the Teamsters will do some swinging of their own. In many areas the Teamsters are shadow members of AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Councils. They attended meetings. They speak. They even vote. They don't pay dues. So it's unofficial. But they have influence. Further, they have non-raiding pacts with some 30 AFL-CIO national unions.

They could break these. They could raid AFL-CIO unions far from the Coachella Valley or the El Centro and Delano produce ranches. As, for example, in the skeletonized New York Yankee Stadium where Teamsters now are doing the electrical work instead of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL-CIO) which ordinarily would handle the renovation job.

Further, Teamsters public relations may even go modern. Fitz has been contemplating bringing some 400 farm workers into Washington to demonstrate their loyalty to the Brotherhood and denounce Meany and Chavez.

Anything can happen anywhere. Both sides are maneuvering nationally. Those close to Meany say he had to move for many reasons. Above all, quixotically he's for the United Farm Workers, especially since Chavez has said — in writing — that there would be no wholesale picketing of stores, big and small, which sell non-UFW table grapes and lettuce. Just the products will be boycotted. There will be no shouts of "Pass this store by." Just "Don't buy non-union grapes."

Further, the Teamsters, Meany believes, have been chipping away at the AFL-CIO and boring from within. Not too long ago, the Teamsters absorbed a large chunk of the AFL-CIO brewery workers. Also, they conferred secretly with some AFL-CIO unions which then ran anti-United Farm Workers propaganda campaigns. Now comes their final effort to crush a small AFL-CIO union — Chavez's farm workers.

These actions, according to intimates, Meany couldn't "tolerate." Too many precedents. Too much of a deliberate public challenge by Fitzsimmons. So, his letter accused the Teamsters of raiding Chavez's jurisdiction. And of signing "sweetheart (collusive) contracts" with the growers. Which is much like insulting someone's mother's virtue.

Question Box

QUESTION: Attorney General William Saxbe recently said he would make a "monumental effort" to persuade the public to join law enforcement authorities in combatting crime. He said young people have not been instilled with a respect for law. What can the politicians do to help instill the youth with respect for law?

ANSWER: They can do a great deal toward teaching others respect for law by making laws respectable.

Whether politicians like Saxbe understand it or not, the fact is that there are untold thousands of laws on the books which destroy the respect of thinking people for legislation, legislators, administrators and the courts which are supposed to enforce them.

A veteran former legislator from a Midwestern state once said that every year when the legislature opened, an old timer proposed wiping every law off the state's statutes and replacing them with the Ten Commandments. "We used to laugh at him then. Now I think he was right," he said wryly.

If members of law-making bodies were to stick by a set of principles without deviation, there would be little problem with respect for law and law enforcement, in our opinion. However, there are few who are interested in principles in political life. Politics consists of compromise, and when principles are compromised, the individual is lost. Even the constitution of the United States, which was a series of compromises, has been negated by politicians unwilling to abide by the terms of the supposedly controlling document. Legislators, executives, and members of the judiciary from both major parties have stretched the constitution beyond recognition.

Several years ago out in California, the Liberty Amendment people made a strong pitch before a legislative committee and seemed to be making progress, until the chairman said the people would be unwilling to eliminate various unconstitutional activities as would have been required by the amendment. Attempts to set aside pretty clearly unconstitutional court rulings by legislation or amendments meet the same kind of fate.

Politicians seem to think laws are made to be enforced against some and evaded by others. Income tax laws with their opportunities for smart politicians and others to evade payment help create disrespect for laws. Legislation which deprives a peaceful individual of his life and his life's products destroy respect for law. We think of the military draft as a form of slavery; so is taxation by taking one's earnings and requiring him to work for nearly half his life to finance spending in many ways the individual may disapprove.

A thinking individual can see many examples all around. And when legislation is enforced against one and not against another, it makes it even worse.

We believe that when the young people are given cause to respect the law, they will respect it — and happily.

INSIDE WASHINGTON

McGovern 'Politicking' With Taxpayers' Funds

By ROBERT ALLEN WASHINGTON — When it comes to ingenious politicking, Sen. George McGovern is again graphically demonstrating that he is a dedicated practitioner of that ancient axiom, "the gods help them that help themselves."

Illustrative of the South Dakota radical's conviction is the deft way in which he is funneling public funds into his heavily embattled re-election campaign.

For weeks the Senate has been embroiled in a rancorous hassle over public financing of federal elections — for President and members of Congress. McGovern has evinced little interest in that protracted wrangle, while personally adroitly applying the idea to his electioneering.

His handy kitty for that is the $288,000 "refresher" recently voted by the Senate for that self-serving boondoggle he has been operating since 1968 — the honorously titled "Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs."

McGovern staged what he called a "statewide field hearing" in, of all places — you guessed it — South Dakota.

The site was Mitchell, S.D., with an official population of 13,425.

McGovern was the only committeeman on hand — at this taxpayer-financed proceedings whose proclaimed purpose was to "explore the nutritional problems of the elderly."

According to an account in the local paper, McGovern announced he is "preparing a four-point action plan to better insure that South Dakota's senior citizens' nutritional needs are met." Key feature is a "model transportation system to help the elderly get to centers where food is available or to have the food delivered to those who aren't capable of leaving their homes."

If that isn't electioneering at public expense — you name it!

An incumbent Senator tooting his political wares at a carefully contrived meeting, financed by the federal government, to which his opponents were not invited, and at which campaign literature reportedly was distributed outside.

What could be cozier!

All Set It's highly unlikely legislation to publicly finance federal elections will be enacted this year; even if such a bill should somehow get through, it faces certain presidential veto — and that will be the end of it. But this doesn't bother McGovern. The South Dakota leftist has his own cache of public funds — that "Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs."

No one is telling him how or where to spend the $288,000 "refresher" he wangled from the Senate with only a few members present, no record vote and no publicity. This grant brings the total taxpayers' cost for the six years McGovern has been operating this boondoggle to around $1.5 million.

Actually, he sought $399,000, but the Senate Rules Committee balked and much to his annoyance cut $111,000.

Petulant, McGovern served notice he wasn't giving up on that. He insisted the money was necessary for a so-called "national nutrition policy conference" which he proposes to put on in June — again, you guessed it, the same month South Dakota's primary takes place.

Intriguing coincidence! So far, McGovern hasn't gotten that $111,000. Whether he will remain to be seen. Behind the scenes, he is busily lobbying and agitating for it.

Museum Acquires Pioneer Home

LUBBOCK — A picket and sotol house, evidence of the ingenuity employed by pioneer ranchers to "make do" with whatever building materials were at hand, will be dedicated April 27 at the Ranch Headquarters, a part of The Museum of Texas Tech University in Lubbock.

John Ben Shepperd of Odessa, first president of the Texas Historical Commission, will make the dedicatory address at 11 a.m. at the Ranch Headquarters, a 12-acre outdoor museum tracing ranching history with 22 historically significant structures. The public is invited. There is no charge.

Like the picket and sotol house which came from Crockett County, each of the Ranch Headquarters buildings is authentically restored. After April 27, eleven will have been dedicated and others are in the process of being moved and restored.

For the house to be dedicated April 27, pickets, sotol stalks and sacahuiste grass for the roof thatching have been brought from the Ozona, Tex., area where the house originally stood.

It was built in 1904 by Mr. and Mrs. D.B. Kilpatrick who moved by wagon from their home in Val Verde County, near Del Rio, to Crockett County. They were going to "prove up" four sections of state land made available to homesteaders.

They settled 25 miles from Ozona, five miles east of the Pecos River, near Howard Draw. The only building materials were crumbly caliche rock, small brush and desert plants.

The Kilpatricks built the first two rooms, with dirt floor and thatched roof. In 1905, they sold their holdings to a Mr. and Mrs. Mills who added the picket room.

The Kilpatricks' home combined picket-type construction with a more primitive type which utilized a yucca-like plant called sotol.

In picket construction, the builder used small logs which he stood upright and close together — in a trench dug in the outline of the house. When the walls of the house were complete, the tops of the small logs, or pickets, were sawed off level at the top, and a roof of planks or shingles was added.

The first two rooms of the house were built by beginning with a similar rough framework of pickets placed about two or three feet apart instead of close together. Stalks, or stems, from the woody sotol plant were then nailed close together, horizontally, to both the inside and outside of the pickets. The space between the shells of sotol was filled with dirt and stone rubble.

At the Ranch Headquarters, the structure retains its original stone chimney. The picket room has a plank and shingle roof, and the two sotol rooms are thatched with bundles of sacahuiste grass tied with fiber from the maguey plant.

Mills to S.S. Millsbaugh and again, in 1939, to L.B. Cox, came into the possession of the Ranch Headquarters through the Cox family. Mr. and Mrs. Bascomb Cox of Ozona, the donors, will take part in the dedication.

Before it was disassembled, every post and rock was numbered to make restoration as accurate as possible.

Claude Denham of Lubbock wrote a master's

They used the chuck box from their wagon as a kitchen cabinet. They also brought with them a bed, springs and feather mattress, a trunk, sewing machine, bachelor stove with a drum oven — inset in the stove pipe — and a few boxes. All of this was in one room. The other room was used to store saddle and harness and other working equipment. There was no barn.

thesis on the history of Crockett County, and he is chairman of furnishings for the house.

Denham, who was superintendent of schools in Ozona for almost two decades, has a record of what the Kilpatricks moved into the house to make it their home.

Outside there were two water barrels to hold water hauled from a well about 200 yards from the house. The windmill and well had been provided by a rancher who had used the land previously.

A wooden bucket and a tin dipper standing on a shelf outside the door was important. There were no washing facilities inside the house.

Juarez Avenue Business Dying

By BOB YBARRA

EL PASO, Tex. (UPI)

They once called it the main drag, the whoop, the wazoo, but by any name Juarez Avenue across the Rio Grande was the only part of the Mexican border city Americans ever saw.

Americans once packed the wide street gawking at bronskinned natives and the wares they offered. But now Juarez Avenue is dying. The tourists are gone and so is the business.

The Central Cafe, a favorite for Americans young and old, including stars Gilbert Roland and Ralph Edwards, has shut its doors after having been in business since the early days of Juarez nightlife.

Few Waiters.
Few Customers

La Poblana, favorite eating place for famed jockey Ismael Valenzuela, is out of business. Fewer waiters and even fewer customers are evident in the once-crowded, tourist popular Martinis, Florida, and Alcazar restaurants.

Eight curio shops, including the older Rios Curios, City of Mexico, and Bob's Boots have closed their doors in the last month.

"The only reason I'm still in business is that I am also a wholesaler," explains Francisco Mercado, a curio shop operator. "The energy crisis has stopped many New Mexicans from coming to Juarez. Persons from El Paso don't come to Juarez to buy curios, so it is these shops that are the first to be affected."

Saturday Sales Just $3
"We're just paying rent, and utilities. We have very little income," said Mrs. Jose Posada, reading a magazine in her empty curio shop. "Our total sales were $3 on Saturday, and that used to be one of the better days."

Missing are the sidewalk musicians, ranging from the native mariachis to the lone guitar player and the man with his homemade harp.

In earlier years, there was whooping it up at the original Juarez Race Track, even as far back as the years of the Mexican Revolution. Then came the gambling casinos.

Now only the stale odors of the older adobe, plaster, and wood frame constructions remains of the "Old Juarez," the exciting nightspot and curio shopper's mecca that was to attract millions of visitors during World War II and post war years.

Song-Writing Judge Arrested In New York

NEW YORK (UPI) — A songwriting judge who wants to retire to stage a musical in London was arrested Thursday on a warrant taken out by New York special state prosecutor Maurice H. Nadjari.

Brooklyn Senior Civil Court Judge Fred G. Moritt was arrested on a warrant signed by Judge John Murtagh accusing him of grand larceny, conspiracy, tampering with witnesses and perjury.

Moritt was taken to Nadjari's Manhattan office where he was handed an indictment charging him with conspiracy, grand larceny, perjury and tampering with a witness.

Moritt Wednesday had demanded the arrest of Nadjari for official misconduct, forgery and libel, among other charges.

Moritt, 68, has accused Nadjari of harassing him in probing the financing of a musical comedy, "The Love Lottery," and said that he cannot retire until the case is cleared up. His wife is president of a corporation called Participating Investors Ltd., which is attempting to raise $300,000 from the public to finance the production.

Moritt spent seven years writing the music and lyrics for "The Love Lottery," and collaborated on the book under the pseudonym "Shane N. Voile." He has been publishing songs for years during his spare time.

He has been a justice since 1958 and a former New York state assemblyman and state senator.

Other taking part in the dedication ceremonies will include Mrs. Lucille Harrell of Ozona, Dr. W.C. Holden, professor emeritus of history at Texas Tech who has worked continuously with the planning committee for the Ranch Headquarters since its initiation, and Dr. Clyde Childers, for many years pastor of the First Baptist Church in Ozona.

Those were the years when American soldiers would scurry past the taxi driver's invitations to "where the girls are boys" and, taking the precaution to hide their "one-cent" bridge fare, would venture into the burlesque palaces, specializing in exotic performances.

And inside, the tuxedoed emcee incited the frantic fervor that preceded the bump and grind of the scantily-dressed brown-skinned girl introduced pompously as "Lola from Paris," followed by a low-voiced "Paris, Chihuahua, Mexico."

Mixed drinks at burlesques were a stunning 50 cents each. Other places sold drinks at a low 15 cents each.

There was something for everyone in Old Juarez. The tourists would come in hoards, "recalled some of the shopkeepers. "They left with bundles of purchases on both arms, a souvenir sombrero on their head and bottles of liquor under each arm."

And now they are gone.
Nowhere But Down

"Taxes, utilities, and prices keep going up, but for us business is going nowhere but down," said Jose Posada Pompa, operator of a Juarez Avenue curio shop for the last 25 years.

Others blame the Mexican government's fiscal policies of collecting taxes retroactively after having taken a hands-off policy. Many point to the drop in importance of the military installations in El Paso.

But none of the shopkeepers has forgotten the serious economic blow dealt the area by the termination of the famed Juarez easy divorces in 1970.

More than 17,000 divorce-seekers a year once celebrated their liberation along the main drag. That business came to an abrupt halt when Mexico stopped the 35 year old practice that brought many movie-land stars to the border.

Soviet Consumers Faced With Shoddy Merchandise

By RAY MOSELEY
MOSCOW (UPI) — The textile factory at Zarva produced thousands of blankets last year that it could not sell. This year state planners told the factory: Produce more blankets.

Shops in the Belgorod district have accumulated a 10-year supply of unsold cigarette lighters. But factories are continuing to send more lighters.

"How are such unplanned stocks being created?" the Communist party newspaper Pravda asked recently. "First of all, because of the low quality of the goods."

In a country where the consumer has been short-changed for years at the expense of heavy industry, few subjects draw so much comment in the press.

By all accounts, consumer production remains a mess.

Unsuitable For Markets

It is not merely a case of a consumer revolt against shoddy merchandise that is left unsold on store shelves: In some areas, goods of high quality are overstocked while other parts of the country go without. And sometimes, factories turn out goods that are completely unsuitable for the markets they are intended for.

For example, a Urals mountain town in the north recently ordered children's coats from a factory in central Asia. The factory sent coats that could be worn comfortably in the hot climate of central Asia but not in the north. The entire shipment had to be sent back.

Western economists blame the Soviet consumer crisis on the nature of the system. In Soviet practice, decisions about how much to produce and how to distribute it are not made by factories on the basis of consumer demand but by bureaucrats in the central planning organizations.

Productions Targets

Workers earn bonuses simply by meeting production targets, with no regard for whether the goods sold or whether they are defective.

Pravda told of one clothing factory where 97 people worked in quality control and checked an entire shipment of suits without finding a single defect. Yet state inspectors found one-third of the suits defective and ordered them returned.

Why did the factory inspectors approve the suits? Under the Soviet system, every employee, from cloth cutter to quality control inspector, has a vested interest in seeing that the production plan is met regardless of quality.

"Sometimes plants work to full capacity, struggling to fulfill and overfill the plan," Pravda said. "The workers get bonuses and they are considered elite workers. But on the contrary, they are producing only defective goods, not needed by anybody."

Lady doctor honored

DALLAS (UPI) — The Texas Medical Association has honored Dr. Mary Owen, a Fort Worth pathologist, who in 1961 was the association's first woman president.

Dr. Owen formally established a Mary Owen Trust Fund in 1966 to provide financial assistance to 57 students in the state and earlier this year completed arrangements to make the trust irrevocable.

Environment note

DAVIS, Calif. (UPI) — The Food Protection and Toxicology Center at the University of California, Davis, has been granted $1,035,000 to study the environmental effects of DDT's chemical relatives. The research grant for the five-year program was given by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

WORRY CLINIC

By George W. Crane, Ph.D., M.D.

Beth changed her "Silas Marner" mate into an affectionate husband in one night. And this made him so generous that he let her handle all their money thereafter. Men who are liberal with love are magnanimous with money.

CASE A-611: Beth G., aged 39, is the wife whose husband suddenly grew miserly.

"Dr. Crane," she said, "do you really believe he'd return to his former generous self if I'd serve him more enticing boudoir cheesecake?"

"For I admit that I have always been rather passive in the bedroom, figuring it was the husband's role to be sexually aggressive."

"So our marriage has been very platonic for a couple of years."

LOVE VS. GREED

Love is the antithesis of greed, avarice and miserliness.

And this love is not even limited to the husband-wife variety.

"Don't you recall the story of Silas Marner?"

He was a greedy miser whose main joy was in fondly counting his gold pieces every night.

Then little Eppie came into his life, and remember what happened?

He became a friendly, more extroverted neighbor.

And lost his mania for gold pieces.

Marital love also works in much the same manner.

For when men grow panicky about losing their libido, as after the age of 40, they look to some other means of exerting power over their wives.

"Money is power," runs an old adage.

So platonic husbands frequently become twins for Silas Marner.

This change may occur subconsciously, so the stingy husband may not be conscious of why he has changed from a generous mate into a Scrooge.

So I urged Beth to seduce her husband via an enticing menu of boudoir cheesecake.

For a man's haunting fear of impotence can drive him into a totally platonic state in one night!

Conversely, if a wife can make him function in the bedroom, she usually can demolish several years of their semi-platonic or even totally platonic marriage.

As a rule, it is somewhat embarrassing for a formerly passive wife to become seductively aggressive.

But it delights her fearful husband.

For men have labored under a disastrous sexual misconception ever since Adam.

Thus they have felt they were responsible for their own erotic arousal, even before they approach their mates.

That's false.

It is the woman's role to arouse the male and if a husband is platonic, that is an indictment of the wife!

So I helped Beth by an interview with her and her husband, during which I reminded them that a wife is to blame for an impotent husband.

This fact relieved his mind greatly.

Then I advised him to let his wife take the erotic initiative and prove her feminine charm!

For any attractive woman, whether wife or "Call" girl, can make the usual platonic male function (even if he doesn't want to) if she remembers there is no Emily Post in the boudoir of husband and wife.

Men who drink excessively, or are unduly caustic, or chew out the children unduly to "punish" their wife — these are usually platonic symptoms of a man who wishes to keep his wife on the defensive so she will never guess that the man can't function with her in the boudoir.

So send for my booklet "How to Prevent Platonic Marriage," enclosing a long stamped, return envelope, plus 25 cents.

Always write to Dr. Crane in care of The Worry Clinic, Hopkiss Bldg., Melrose, Indiana 47868. Enclose a long stamped, addressed envelope and 25 cents to cover typing and printing costs when you send for one of his booklets.

Price Ends Week Tour Of District

MARILLO — Congressman Bob Price today concluded a week-long tour of the 13th Congressional District with an appeal to members of the Amarillo Chamber of Commerce to get more involved in government, and a warning about maintaining the nation's defense posture.

"We need more businessman participation in the nation's business of government and politics and more representatives in the Congress with real business experience," Price said.

Earlier in the day, Price met with Republican Women here and reminded them (as he did yesterday to Young Republicans at West Texas State University) that they have "a good record to take to the people and one we can be proud of."

"Our troops no longer serve overseas under combat conditions; our nation has opened up new lines of communication worldwide and opened the way to lasting peace, and our economy is improved, hitting a record unemployment low last year before the energy shortage dampened that economic growth," Price said.

Price and his wife, Marty, have maintained a rigorous schedule this week, making 20 appearances over the 5-day period during the Congressional Easter recess.

Price told the Amarillo Chamber of Commerce today that he is concerned about the nation's determination to keep up a strong defense posture.

"We must maintain such a strong military posture that none will dare attack us," Price said. "This posture has worked well over past decades in helping to preserve peace, and we can't afford to embark on a program of unilateral disarmament."

"As a member of the House Armed Services Committee, I feel that I know what we need to do now, in the research and development field to be assured of a second — to none defense in the 1980s," Price said, "but I'm sure the American people and the majority of my colleagues in the Congress are ready to support the expenditures which will be required if we are going to maintain a superior military posture."

"Even our own defense leaders today are talking about parity. I think we should keep talking about maintaining superiority. If we can gain a real arms limitation agreement with the Soviets, good. But we can't act unilaterally to weaken our military posture and still expect our negotiators to be able to obtain any meaningful reductions in the Soviet stance," Price commented.

Accent on Health

A weekly public service feature from the Texas State Department of Health

J.E. PEAVY, M.D., Commissioner of Health

If you've got your health, you've got everything.

Those with good health may not fully appreciate this often-used statement, but hundreds of Texans with chronic kidney disease are well aware of its meaning. To them life is a day-to-day affair, says the State Health Department.

Some 562 persons are being helped to meet each new day through the Kidney Health Care Division of the State Health Department. This new program started last September and is making great strides in meeting its responsibilities.

An individual with chronic kidney disease has two means available for maintaining his life. The individual may undergo hemodialysis, that is, have his blood purified by means of a dialysis machine, or he can undergo a kidney transplantation.

Recognizing that chronic kidney disease patients face financial crises for lack of personal financial resources to pay for the expensive equipment and care necessary for survival, the 63rd Texas Legislature passed the Texas Kidney Health Care Act.

Under this act, the State Health Department assists persons with renal failure in getting treatment and in paying for this treatment.

Who are these persons receiving assistance? Among them are:

- A migrant worker from McAllen, who was admitted to the program with acute renal failure. A month later he was flown to Galveston for a transplant operation, the first time an air ambulance was used in the program.
- A west Texas radio announcer who, even with a good salary, couldn't afford the expenses. He's getting dialysis and regular checkups.

—A former Health Department employee from Victoria who had a transplant before the program started. He suffered complications due to anti-rejection medications which prohibited his working. He now receives aid for medications and medical checkups.

When the state program began last September, it was estimated that 500 persons in Texas would benefit each year. During its first month, the new program picked up more than 300 persons who had been on dialysis. The ones entering since have been new patients who have just suffered kidney failure.

The law attempted to make entrance into the program as uncomplicated and as speedy as possible, but certain guidelines must be followed. Application must be made through a medical facility approved by the federal Medicare program. Private physicians normally help with the applications — first step to entering the program.

Proper applications submitted to the State Health Department's Kidney Health Care Division are approved and an identification card issued. Then, any bills received on these patients — if not covered by Medicare, health insurance or Medicare, payment is made at the same rate that Medicare would pay.

Persons with kidney failure can easily spend up to $20,000 a year to stay alive. Experience has shown that costs of a kidney transplant, hospitalization and other services is more than $25,000.

Even after a kidney transplant operation, there still is no assurance that the patient's body won't reject the transplanted organ. The transplant has a greater chance for success if the donor is a close relative.

Dialysis — substituting a machine for the kidneys — also is expensive, and the procedure is tedious. In dialysis, a person's blood is routed outside the body through a filtration-type process.

Dialysis machines for use in the homes may now be purchased for considerably less than $5,000. But, expendable supplies may cost as much as $50 for each dialysis.

Each dialysis period takes up to 200 gallons of purified water which must be available in the home for those with home dialysis systems. Since the average person may need dialysis three times a week, these never-ending costs mount steadily.

In a kidney care center, each dialysis may take from five to eight hours. This is a limiting factor on the number of persons who may undergo dialysis at such a center.

However, progress is being made in the field in cutting the time necessary for dialysis, and less expensive expendable materials also are being developed for home use.

Japanese Climbing Expedition Considering Scaling Mountain

KATMANDU, Nepal (UPI) — A Japanese climbing expedition that lost its base camp in an avalanche on Mt. Annapurna April 4 will either scale the peak in two more weeks or abandon the effort, the Foreign Ministry said.

A ministry spokesman said a message received from the Gamagori Alpine Club team's leader, Tsuneo Suzuki, told of severe supply problems created by the avalanche and planned to continue the climb only 14 more days.

The nine-member expedition reported the avalanche swept away the team's base camp at the 18,000-foot level. One Sherpa guide was recovering from serious injuries, the message said, while other members of the party suffered only minor injuries.

The avalanche wiped out much of the expedition's food and equipment.

Suzuki's team is trying to scale 21,600-foot Annapurna in Central Nepal along the mountain's unconquered south ridge.

Jean Separated From Edith

By VERNON SCOTT
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Jean Stapleton (UPI) — Jean Stapleton, the wonderfully wacky Edith Bunker of "All In The Family," suffered her first real critical blast the other day for carrying Edith into a play where she didn't belong.

Jean, starring in a Los Angeles production of "Time of the Cuckoo," was accused of hiding behind the dim-witted Edith in her performance as a frustrated old maid on holiday in Venice.

In self-defense, Jean said, "I believe the critics who felt that way came to see the play with that inseparability in their own minds."

"They have a problem because Edith and I have the same face. Some people have trouble making the adjustment."

"But the public comes to see the play with an open mind and they aren't at all confused between the two characters. I acted for more than 20 years before Edith came along."

"My character in the play, Leona, and Edith are poles apart. Leona is highly intelligent and much younger than Edith, who isn't too bright. Leona is a spinster and not as mature as Edith."

"Anyhow, Leona is more attractive and less dowdy than Edith."

It's not that Jean is putting down Edith. She loves the daffy Mrs. Bunker. But after three years in the role the actress is in danger of being a twin of the long-suffering Edith.

An overwhelming number of strangers call her Edith. She invariably sets the fans straight.

"I'm nice about it," Jean said. "After all, they love Edith, but they really don't know what to call me. Carroll O'Connor runs into the same thing when fans call him Archie."

"Playing Edith Bunker is a job. Her personality is foreign to me. She is a composite of other roles I've played and a favorite aunt of mine who is deceased.

"Edith isn't a difficult role. In fact, it sometimes seems so easy that I have to be careful not to fall into a rut."

"That's why I like working in the theater during every vacation from the show. My concentration is doubled on stage and I have to work at that sort of concentration to keep Edith believable."

Jean Stapleton and Edith Bunker do share the trait of naivete.

In real life Jean is the wife of producer-director William Putsch and the mother of Pam, 14, and John 12.

There is a sweetness, an unaffectedness about Jean that is at once appealing and disarming. She is untheatrical and as impressed by major motion picture stars as Edith might be.

"Edith's character has grown since we first went on the air," Jean said, speaking with affection for her alter ego. "This past year she has been warmer and is asserting her convictions."

"In one episode she actually slapped Archie in the face. She is a decent woman who likes people. She is kind and good and compassionate."

So is Jean Stapleton.

Authenticity of Shroud of Turin Defended by Rinaldi

The Rev. Peter M. Rinaldi, pastor of Corpus Christi Roman Catholic Church at Port Chester, N.Y., has, for many years, been the chief advocate of the authenticity of the "Shroud of Turin."

His latest book in defense of the accuracy of the cloth, believed to be the one in which Jesus Christ was wrapped after the crucifixion, has appeared in a paperback edition called "It Is The Lord," published by Warner Paperback Library.

Fr. Rinaldi, a member of the Society of St. Francis de Sales, sometimes known as the Salesians of St. John Bosco, was born near Turin, Italy, and served once as an altar boy in the Turin Cathedral where the shroud is preserved and venerated. In 1970 his long research was supported by a statement by Cardinal Michele Pellegrino, Archbishop of Turin.

Question: In the Catholic Church is there a difference between Passion Sunday and Palm Sunday?

—St. Louis, Mo.
Answer: Not under the new church calendar. Formerly, Passion Sunday was observed the week before Palm Sunday, but now it is the same day. This holds true also in the Episcopal Church and in the major Reformed and Protestant liturgical churches.

In 1974 Palm Sunday (also Passion Sunday) was April 7. This year the Eastern Orthodox calendar coincided with that of the Western Churches, so all major Christian denominations of the world observed Palm Sunday April 7 and Easter April 14.

Question: Is a Presbyterian minister a member of the church of which he is the pastor? Does he have a vote in meetings of the congregation?

—Troy, N.Y.
Answer: No. In the Presbyterian order, an ordained minister is a member only of the Presbytery, which is the governing body over the churches within a designated geographical area somewhat comparable to a diocese.

The pastor votes in the Presbytery but not in the congregation. Local congregations vote only on the question of requesting a particular person to become their pastor or in the election of church officers such as elders and deacons.

As in other denominations, individual congregations also are incorporated under the laws of the state. The corporation elects trustees and votes on questions of property management, subject to the approval of the Presbytery. The pastor presides over meetings of the congregations but, again, has no vote.

Question: The Syrian Antiochian Orthodox Archdiocese of New York and North America formerly had its headquarters in the Bay Ridge section of Brooklyn. I do not find it listed there. Has there been a relocation of its offices?

—White Plains, N.Y.

Answer: There has been a change not only in the address but also in the name of the church. It is now called officially the Antiochian Orthodox Christian Archdiocese of New York and all North America.

The Metropolitan Archbishop is the Most Rev. Philip Saliba, whose headquarters are at 358 Mountain Road, Englewood, N.J. 07631. The church is under the jurisdiction of the Patriarchate of Antioch which is now located in Damascus, Syria.

This church is not to be confused with the Syrian Orthodox Church of Antioch (Archdiocese of the U.S.A. and Canada) which has headquarters in Hackensack, N.J. The latter church has 10 parishes in the United States and two in Canada.

Land Of Christ's Passion Remembered During Easter

By DAVID E. ANDERSON
UPI Religion Writer
WASHINGTON (UPI) —

The Easter season, as it starts Christians back to reconsideration of the historicity of Jesus, also urges them to remember and consider that land where the passion of Jesus was played out.

In the atmosphere that has become known as the Middle East crisis, religious values are nearly as important as political values because the Middle East — for Christians, Jews and Moslems alike — is sacred and holy land.

At the center of much of the religious controversy over the Mideast is the question of Jerusalem, site of shrines that are holy to both the Islamic and Christian religions.

In a recent exhortation to Catholics about the future of the church in the Holy Land, Pope Paul VI singled out Jerusalem as "the Holy City and the capital of monotheism, towards which there turn more intensely these days the thoughts of Christ's followers, and of which, on a par with the Jews and the Moslems, they ought to feel fully citizens."

Series of Messages
The Pope, in a series of messages and statements over the past few years, appeared to be moving toward calling for internalization of Jerusalem.

Calling on all Roman Catholics to strengthen the small Christian community in Jerusalem, the Pope singled out the Holy Land as "the spiritual heritage of the Christians of the whole world."

Only a few days before Easter, the Vatican withdrew and corrected a statement the Pope made in an audience in which the Pontiff seemed to suggest the Catholic church was taking a hardened line toward the issue of internationalization.

In the original statement, Pope Paul called for an "appropriate international juridical guardianship for the holy places" in the Middle East.

Later, the Vatican reissued the papal statement to call only for an "appropriate statute with international guarantees for the Holy City of Jerusalem and a convenient juridical guardianship for the holy places."

Diplomatic hairsplitting aside, many Christians, particularly those in the West, would like to see Jerusalem internationalized because it would guarantee access to Christian holy places.

THE PAUSE THAT REFRESHES

Scientists tell us today that our waters are becoming quickly polluted. As a matter of fact, one day we may turn on our water faucets and all that will come out is mud, black mud.

Even today, we turn our faucets on to find our water clouded with chemicals designed to purify it. The industrialization of our nation has increased our need for pure water. Perhaps someday we will say with the Ancient Mariner "Water, water everywhere, but not a drop to drink." There is, however, a thirst greater than the physical, life: Jesus. It is the water that He offers that is pure and truly able to quench our spiritual thirst. Are you thirsty?

Some people think they can quench their thirst through the things of this world and so they seek many earthly pleasures. People wish to be happy but they too often look for a physical happiness only to find they thirst again. They seek contentment through food.

This can be seen in the fact that there are so many pleasure foods on the market. The world is no longer satisfied with meat and potatoes. Contentment is also sought through money.

People lie, cheat, steal, and even kill for money. They gamble, they play the stock market all to have more — money. This is nothing new. Remember in Jesus' day how the rich young ruler would not give his riches to the poor and he left the presence of Jesus sorrowful. What had Jesus said? "Go and sell what thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come and follow me." Matthew 19:21.

Perhaps the most driving power of all, the desire for power. It is this desire that keeps many people going when they have no strength. It is this drive that causes many to attempt to control no matter what the cost. This is with Pharaoh, who wished to control the Israelites even to the extent that he allowed harm to come to his family. Does this desire for power control you so that you would allow harm to come to those you love, or yourself? After all, when these pleasures wear off, what is left?

Slowly the things of this world shall pass away but those who search for heavenly riches will find true spiritual filling — this filling is everlasting. The Lord Jesus has provided us peace. Jesus told us: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." John 14:27.

Through Jesus we find joy. When one finds the joy which Jesus gives there is no longer the overpowering drive for the things of this world for his joy is everlasting and gives a true fulfillment.

The most important promise that Jesus has given us is that of everlasting life. Jesus gives the everlasting water of life, water overflowing from the heart with love. Jesus offered the woman at the well — not physical but spiritual water. To live a life for and with God one must be filled with the everlasting water of life.

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

Worried About Son's Nerves

By G.C. THOSTESON, M.D. Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have a married son, 28, who has had a very busy schedule for the last four years. He goes to school in the morning and to work in the afternoon full time. I know he is overburdened because he stays up the biggest part of the night doing homework. The problem is his nerves, and I am afraid they might get worse. He'll be sitting, and off and on his head is moving up and down. I've sat next to him and the nerves in his legs are going all the time. What can be done to control this? Please help me so I can help him. —Mrs. M.G.

I admire fellows who work their way through school, who handle a job well and go to school so, eventually, they'll be able to handle a bigger job. But... BUT I don't want to see them doing it at the expense of their health, because health, as well as education, is going to be invaluable to them later on. Your son evidently has passed the point at which he can do that much work (studying is work) without his body starting to rebel. Hence the nervous symptoms you notice. Is there any reason why he can't cut his school schedule in half? Sure, it will take him longer to finish up, but isn't it better to take a little longer and wind up with sound nerves and body? From his age, 28, I would judge that he may be in something of a hurry to finish his schooling, but slowing things down a bit now will pay off for him later on. If he has been carrying such a schedule for four years, he may think that he can keep it up forever. Many people can't. Or maybe nobody has suggested slowing down — and he may be so busy that he never got around to think about it.

only 30. I have been told that operation can be performed through the vagina and would like to know if that is true. Also is it possible to keep the uterus in place by any means other than surgery? —Mrs. L.P.

Hysterectomy (removal of the uterus) can be performed through the vagina or through the abdominal wall, but anatomical factors make it necessary that your gynecologist decide which way must be employed. Sometimes a prolapsed uterus can be corrected by tightening the ligaments holding it in place — this is, of course, an abdominal operation. Only non-surgical means would be the use of a pessary in the vagina to hold the uterus up, but that is not always successful and in any event requires a good deal of attention to help keep it clean.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have a prolapsed or sagging uterus and at times, especially after I have been on my feet a lot, it is uncomfortable. My gynecologist has mentioned hysterectomy but is hesitant because of my age — I am hair when they have their period. It will have an effect on them during menopause. —Mrs. O.K.

That's an old, old notion, but actually there is no harm whatsoever in washing hair (or taking a bath) during the menstrual period. So let them wash their hair whenever they want and let there be peace in the family.

Betty Rejects 'A Gimmick Thing'

By EARL WILSON NEW YORK — "They all want me to go back to Hollywood and do pictures but I never will if it's a gimmick thing," down-and-out one-time glamor girl Betty Hutton said. "I found the Christ I've been reading about in the Bible in this little town," Betty said. "The people don't dress fancy and they put nickels and dimes in the basket but their faith is so strong you can walk on it." She added, about working as a cook, "Sure I cook. Two things I can do, cook and sing!" To prove the latter, she broke into song over the phone: "ANYTHING YOU CAN DO I CAN DO BETTER." Broke and ready to kill herself, Betty came upon priests who gave her new hope. She became an enthusiastic convert. "I shake them up, I make them laugh, that's my racket," she said. "They can tell my faith from what they see on my face."

Under Twenty

By TOM WILLIAMS Angelo Bolla runs a small, two chair barbershop in a medium sized city. "At first the trend to long hair hurt our business," he admits, "but then as styling of men's hair became more important our business improved. I learned my trade from my uncle but my barber went to barbering school. If you like people and have the flair, barbering is a good business," Angelo says. There are an estimated 180,000 barbers in the country, most of them men. There is, however, a growing number of women barbers, particularly in the larger cities. Employment of barbers is expected to grow slowly through the 1970's with most job openings resulting from retirement. The average age of barbers is high with a resultant high retirement rate. Small shops, such as Angelo's, with only one or two chairs, will probably remain the most common type of establishment. The growth of suburban communities, however, should result in opportunities to open larger shops and expand staffs. As hair styles and trends change, however, there should be increases in the need for barbers. Styling for men has also made for added opportunities and the necessity for additional skills. To obtain a barber license, which all states require, a candidate must have graduated from a state approved barber school. In addition the applicant must meet health requirements. All but a very few states require the beginner to take an examination for an apprentice license. After working one or two years as an apprentice, he usually takes a second examination for his license as a registered barber. Barber training is offered in many public and private schools and a few vocational schools, in addition to commercial barbering schools. Courses usually last six to 11 months. Weekly earnings of experienced barbers ranged between $150 and $175 in 1970. Apprentice barbers earned about $85 to $125 per week while some expert barbers and those who owned their own shop earned more than $250 per week. Information on state licensing requirements and approved barber school may be obtained from the State Board of Barber Examiners or other State authority at each state capital. Minister Sentenced For Fraud

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A 51-year-old Baptist minister from Arkansas was sentenced to 18 months in federal prison this week for his part in a $4 million fraud. The Rev. Tellman Sherroon Jackson, of Foreman, Ark., pleaded guilty to conspiracy and three counts of mail fraud last Sept. 4. He testified for the government in the trial of James Dondick, one of 11 other co-conspirators, five of whom are now in prison. During the Dondick trial last January, Jackson testified that he had started the Baptist Foundation of America as a charitable effort. He failed to raise funds, however, and allowed the other defendants to take over. The government charged that the group lured victims into loaning money to the foundation and, through the use of worthless promissory notes, acquired many luxuries, including a yacht.

"I haven't been able to put it down."

Black Lawyers Needed In South

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The number of black lawyers practicing in Mississippi has increased from 3 in 1965 to 49 in 1973, but there is still only one black lawyer for every 16,000 blacks in the state.

By contrast, the 1.4 million whites in Mississippi can call on the services of 3,200 white members of the bar, a ratio of one lawyer for every 450 whites.

All black law students who took the Georgia bar examination in 1972 failed, including a few black graduates of the Harvard and Columbia law schools. Court action has since been filed charging discrimination in the Georgia bar exam and those of at least three other southern states.

These are just a few of the problems facing a black student who is considering entering the legal profession in the South, according to a special Carnegie Corp. of New York study that reviewed the success of grant and recruitment programs to increase the number of black attorneys in the South.

Access A Major Need
Access to the court system, particularly access to a black lawyer, is still a major need in the South.

In the words of former Supreme Court Chief Justice Earl Warren: "Those of us who have been concerned about the problem recognize that a deprived minority, such as the black community, has never had easy and open access to the courts, largely because there have been far too few lawyers who are deeply and personally committed to the community."

"One black lawyer for every 16,000 blacks in Mississippi does not begin to approach even minimal requirements for legal representation. It is this aspect of the problem that is so critical to the aspirations of the black community."

Robert Spearman, who wrote the Carnegie Corp. study, said most black people still view the law as a force that acts to deny them justice, not protect their rights.

They Work for Change
"To most of them," Spearman wrote, "the law is still the sheriff and the white jury, not the black lawyer or the impartial judge."

Spearman said the increased power of the black community at the ballot box and the impact of integration on law students of both races are working to change this attitude and increase the number of black lawyers who stay in the South to practice.

The fears of social and political pressures or segregationist policies by southern white law schools are no longer the roadblocks against trying to increase the number of black attorneys in the South, he said. The major hurdle, said Spearman, is money.

Although a number of successful grant and fellowship programs are working to increase enrollments in the southern schools and support young blacks who open their practices in communities where there has never been a black attorney, Spearman concluded there is still "a long way to go."

The Concerns Now
The concerns now must be recruitment of black students, more scholarship aid — both public and private — for the would-be lawyer and financial stipends to enable the black lawyers to handle civil rights cases for impoverished clients while trying to establish a practice.

Spearman cited two concerns that could devastate the efforts to increase black enrollment in the southern white law schools, however. The first is a court case filed against the Washington University Law School, by a white student who charged he was denied admission when black students with lower predicted grade averages were admitted.

The case, DeFunis v. Odegaard, is pending before the U.S. Supreme Court following a Washington State Supreme Court ruling in favor of the law school. Spearman said he fears that

Paladin Creator Seeks Proceeds

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — Victor Decosta, who created the firefighter hero—Paladin, spends his weekends teaching children the dangers of firearms.

"I look tough, and you can bet that the youngsters listen to me," he says.

Now 65, Decosta claims he originated in 1946 the idea that was later made into "Have Gun Will Travel," a successful television series starring Richard Boone. The shows were first aired on the Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS) in 1957.

A U.S. magistrate here ruled Monday that the network must reimburse Decosta for the idea, a decision that could make Decosta a wealthy man. Employed by the state of Rhode Island as a heavy equipment mechanic, he has five children and 14 grandchildren.

Magistrate Jacob Hagoian ruled that CBS is "required to hand over the proceeds of their wrong to the plaintiff by reason of their unjust enrichment." The show realized a profit of $14 million by 1966, and had an estimated weekly audience of 29 million.

"CBS says it will appeal the judgment," Decosta said Tuesday he started legal action in 1957 "two weeks after he first saw the program."

"I just couldn't believe my eyes when I first saw it," he said. "I had a tough time convincing my friends that that guy on the screen was not me." Decosta, who bears a remarkable resemblance to Boone, said he has spent $28,000 in legal fees.

He still has several black cowboy suits which he wears when making public appearances, most of them for charity causes. A former bronco buster, Decosta started in the rodeo business in 1919 and stayed until 1953, when he was thrown from a horse.

"I had all kinds of people requesting photographs and the business cards, some from as far away as California," he said. In his rodeo acts, Decosta did trick riding and shooting, fast drawing and roping.

"There wasn't anybody who could beat me in the fast draw."

He said he has no hard feelings against CBS but feels he was "sort of taken. In fact I sure would like to meet Mr. Boone some day. He sure is a fine actor."

The name "Paladin" originated while exercising one of his horses in his hometown of Cranston, R.I., an old Italian gentleman yelled out "Paladin."

"It just struck me that Paladin would be a good name for a Western hero, and I used it as my name in the rodeo act," he said.

Granberry Hits Proposals For Agency Shops

ABILENE, Tex. (UPI) — Republican Jim Granberry in a speech highly critical of organized labor said Thursday he would veto any agency shop bills passed by the legislature if he is elected governor.

"Last year, the labor forces rammed an agency shop bill through a House committee," Granberry said at a luncheon sponsored by the Taylor County Young Republicans. An agency shop requires all employees to pay union dues whether or not they wish to join the union.

"It did not pass the legislature, but last summer the state AFL-CIO convention voted unanimously to make agency shop the number one legislative goal," Granberry said.

"If I am elected governor I would veto an agency shop bill."

Granberry also criticized Gov. Dolph Briscoe for not taking a stand on whether the so-called right to work provision should be included in the proposed new state constitution.

Harry Hubbard, president of the state AFL-CIO, has said the governor is helping the labor forces keep right to work out of the constitution. Price Daniel Jr., president of the Constitutional Convention, says the governor told him in a private meeting he was opposed to right to work in the constitution, he said.

The governor denies all this, but if he continues to take a hands-off position, he is, in effect, helping Hubbard and the AFL-CIO.

FOR PILL, PARENTS

Good News, Bad News Greet Population Meet

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) — For those interested in sex, there's good news and bad news today. Good news for men who are waiting and can wait a little longer, for their PILL. Bad news for parents of teen-agers.

Dr. C. Alvin Paulsen, a researcher from the University of Washington, said at a national meeting of doctors on planned parenthood and world population Wednesday that "the pill" may be ready for men within five years.

And along came a government official, Dr. Louis M. Hellman, who warned American moms and dads they had better join in "realization that we live now with an openly and actively sexual generation of teen-agers."

"Sure, sex is a family matter," the deputy assistant secretary for population affairs in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare added in a news conference.

Parents are rightfully concerned about the furor over sex education in schools and such. But do they want their children to learn sex in the gutter? Can they do it alone?

Hellman said the public should get away from "the old feeling that fear and ignorance of sex has kept women from being sexually active."

Paulsen, 50, is a professor of internal medicine who has been testing 100 volunteer males with a combination of the male potency hormone testosterone and the artificial hormone danazol via injections and orally since mid-1973.

Paulsen said that "a reversible method of male contraception" has not been perfected yet.

"I hope we can have something within five years."

Some want the pill. Some might prefer injections. We would like to have lots of options," he told UPI.

"We started the first administration of the combinations last March," he said. "The men are married and unmarried, between 19 and 35 years old and the ones who tested out 'safe' have not impregnated any women."

Less than 7 per cent of the gross farm income in California is in the form of government payments, says the California Farm Bureau.

The Woman's View

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — The more the scientific experts study our food habits and idiosyncrasies, the more confused the whole thing seems to get.

For instance, some researchers project that the foods we prefer as adults are the ones we ate as children.

We've also acquired a predisposition for very high levels of flavoring. As one expert puts it, "Americans have been weaned on imitation flavors and are not even aware of it."

The name of a food often decides whether it will be accepted. For instance, we'll accept sole, trout, salmon, bass and several other well known fish species. But a spokesman for the National Fisheries Institute says "American fish dealers no longer can sell Brazilian black-finned snapper as red snapper although it tastes the same and is from the same family."

Attitudes Change
Our attitudes toward foods have had many changes, however. They're more liberal and there is less regionalism. Still, "whether we will be (one day) eating honeysuckle-meal hotdogs with sage flavored imitation milk, or whether we will still be wolfing steaks 20 years from now is at present a question that cannot yet be answered," says Michael Creedman.

Creedman examines foods and flavors, why we eat the way we do, and a myriad of other factors in feeding our faces in the current issue of "Human Behavior," a newsmagazine of the social sciences.

One conclusion: Most lower animals are guided in their eating habits by their bodies...but unless man is starving, he eats what he likes, not necessarily what he needs.

Flavor alone is enough to throw the researchers. Rosemarie Pangborn, assistant dean of the College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences at the University of California at Davis, says that by definition, flavor is a "sensation that requires human judgment."

"Genetic Background"
So depending on genetic background, body chemistry and our earliest experiences with food, everyone perceives flavor in a world of his own. "As a result, chemists don't know how to fabricate new taste sensations that will be universally accepted."

"If anyone knew how to do that, he'd be a millionaire," says Henry Rollens, general manager of F. Ritter and Co., a flavors firm in Los Angeles. "Flavor is still a black art."

Sometimes habit is the reason we eat what we do. As Howard Schultz, a consumer psychologist at UC-Davis, puts it, most consumers don't like fresh potato chips. "They've come to expect the slightly rancid flavor in the oil that develops after a few days storage."

People also do learn to like food from cultures other than their own. Look at the Americanization of pizza. Or Coca-Cola, which Europeans spat out when they first tasted it but now is accepted around the world.

Investment Chatter

NEW YORK (UPI) — The technically oversold market was in a good position to respond to First National City Bank's prediction that interest rates would drop significantly by late summer, says E. F. Hutton & Co. Monday's rally of more than 17 points was "sufficiently far enough from last week's low to further suggest that it has been its worst for at least the immediate future," the firm continues. But it also warns that more tangible evidence than predictions on interest rates are needed before the market faces clear sailing ahead.

"Since gold is not about to be restored to its former monetary throne, the investor would be wise to view it as just another commodity and a commodity whose demand curve is subject to far more than the usual list of vagaries," according to Argus Research Corp. The current gold fever is fueled by political uncertainty, rising inflation, shortages and a drop in the world production of gold, it says. But leading gold authorities expect the supply of gold to expand, it adds, easing the demand for a commodity which is no longer cheap.

The volatility of the current market stems from "institutions trying to move huge blocks of stocks when they become encouraged or discouraged by events," according to Malcolm B. Smith, president of General American Investors Co. Inc. The heavy concentration of institutional involvement in the market place and the pressures they apply to certain stocks "lead to a different kind of market gyrations than existed before," he says.

Broadway

By JACK GAVER
UPI Drama Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — The current Broadway revival of "Ulysses in Nighttown," a dramatized version of a portion of James Joyce's celebrated novel, "Ulysses," stirred some memories of the original off-Broadway production in 1958. Especially about actors.

There is, of course, Zero Mostel, then-as-now, the leading man. Leopold Bloom, the Dublin Jew. Joyce's conception of a modern Ulysses in terms of the Irish mystique. Wonderful then. Mostel again is superb, but he is not the target of these reminiscences.

In that original cast were four players whose combined names wouldn't have lit up a single electric bulb on a theater marquee. Today, they would create a power shortage. They were and are:

Carroll O'Connor of television's "All in the Family,"
Beatrice Arthur of television's "Maude,"
John Astin of television series and films,
Anna Meara of the Stilller-Meara comedy team of television, theaters and night clubs.

Four O'Connor Roles
"Ulysses in Nighttown" is a play of many scenes with close to 100 characters, many of them seen very briefly. Most of the actors are called upon to play two or more characters.

In that 1958 production, O'Connor played four characters: Miss Arthur, two; Astin, seven; Miss Meara, four.
There was another busy actor in that off-Broadway production, outstanding actor-dancer Swen Swenson, who played seven roles. Of the original cast, only Swenson and Mostel are in the revival. This time Swenson plays only one part, but he also served as director of the choreographed movement which is a big thing in this production.

Producer Alexander H. Cohen has achieved a spectacular effect with this new version of the play adapted by the late Marjorie Barkentin. Actor Burgess Meredith directed the hectic proceedings, and this was a plus because he staged the original production.

Dreamlike Sequences
Of great importance to achieving a sensational theatrical effect are the lighting by Jules Fisher, the costumes by Pearl Somner, the scenery by Ed Wittstein, the sound by Sandy Hacker and a background score by Peter Link.

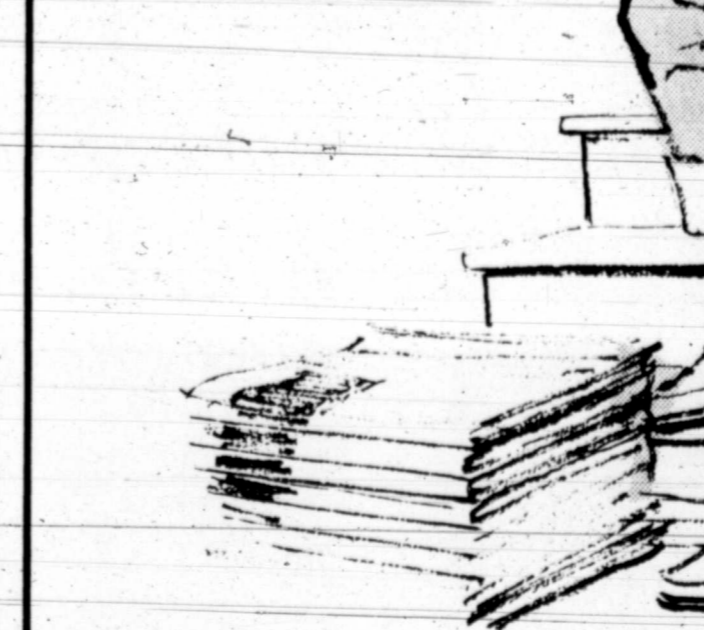

"Ulysses in Nighttown" has a phantasmagoric quality, as it relates the adventures of the middle-aged Bloom and young artistic Stephen Dedalus during a night in Dublin's redlight district in 1904. It is Joyce's version of the classic myth of Ulysses searching for his son, Telemachus, and the son's search for his father.

Cohen's production has sexed up through the staging the sex-oriented script. The prostitutes are seen with breasts exposed much of the time, and in a big scene by Fionnuala Flanagan as Bloom's unfaithful wife, Molly, she plays it nude and uncovered in her bed.

For this scene there has been injected from the last portion of the novel the celebrated Molly soliloquy in which she speaks of her sexual experiences and her body. This was not in the 1958 version.
The play is an absorbing theatrical experience, although it probably is not for just everyone. It helps if you know something about the novel, especially about the unique Joyce writing style, which is represented in the dialogue to a considerable degree.

SITTING ON TOP OF THE WORLD

... with a business of his own!

We'd like for you to meet the Executive Officer of a thriving business... the boy who delivers your daily newspaper.

As the owner and operator of his newspaper route, this Junior Independent Merchant must solve problems and shoulder responsibilities, just like all other businessmen.

He buys his product, your newspaper, at wholesale and then retails it to his customers. He must make daily deliveries, do his own accounting, billing, and even struggle with a collection problem here and there.

He is discovering, through actual experience, the rewards for promptness, dependability, self-reliance and initiative.

One of the rewards is his profit, the difference between the wholesale and retail prices of the paper. His route means money for a savings account for college, a new bicycle, a week in camp, many things.
But he is earning even greater rewards. As he learns about sales and salesmanship, he is equipping himself for the future. From boys who learned the principles of business as newspaperboys have come presidents, governors, mayors, industrialists and professional men... those who determine the quality of our civilization in their generation.
It's his world to conquer... and he's off to a good start.

NEW YORK (UPI) — Twenty years ago, a shy, young British medical student peeled off his street clothes and astonished the whole world.

Not so much because he streaked, but because of the utterly amazing time he did it in.

Roger Bannister, of course, had the good sense to wearing his track shirt and track pants when he became the first man ever to break the four-minute barrier on May 6, 1954, by running the mile in 3:59.4 in Oxford, England.

His performance immediately became known as the "Miracle Mile," and in many regards that is exactly what it was.

Now we turn the clock ahead 20 years.

Dr. Roger Bannister, 45, is practicing medicine in Britain and keeps in touch with all sports as chairman of British Sports Council. He retired from competition shortly after he became the world's first four-minute miler because he said he couldn't be content with "second-rate performances."

Upsets Spicing Playoffs In NHL's Stanley Cup

UPI Sports Writer
After a dull, conventional start, a few upsets are beginning to add spice to the Stanley Cup playoffs.

When Boston and Philadelphia won their quarter-final series in the minimum four games and Chicago needed only five, there wasn't too much for hockey fans to get excited about. But the situation changed drastically Thursday night.

The New York Rangers, after falling behind two games to one against Montreal, knocked out the defending Stanley Cup champion out of the playoffs with a comeback 5-2 victory and the Black Hawks scored an upset 4-2 triumph over the Bruins in the opening game of their semifinal set.

Rangers Advance
In overcoming an early deficit for the third consecutive game, New York advanced to the semifinals against the Flyers. This series will open Saturday night at Philadelphia. The Rangers' victory also marked the third consecutive season they had eliminated the previous year's Stanley Cup winner from the playoffs.

"I don't know if this is some kind of omen, but I think it's about time we got it ourselves now," New York Coach Emile Francis said in reference to the Stanley Cup, a prize the Rangers haven't won since 1940. "Anytime you can come from behind three consecutive times against a club like Montreal you've certainly got to have something going for you."

After falling behind 2-0 on Montreal goals by Henri Richard and Steve Shutt, the Rangers drew even midway through the second period on their home ice when Bruce MacGregor and Bill Fairbairn scored 46 seconds apart.

Jean Ratelle, held to only one goal in the previous five games, then provided the winner at 11:04 of the final period when he converted a pass from Rod Gilbert. Pete Stelmowski padded the score with a pair of empty net goals in the final minute of play.

In Boston, it was brother against brother, and Chicago goaltender Tony Esposito, with 46 saves, came out on top although his brother Phil scored the first Bruin goal to give them a 1-0 lead. The Hawks, outshot 21-10 in the second period, nevertheless got goals from Stan Mikita and Randy Rota to go ahead 2-1.

Pacers Gonna Keep On Truckin'—Lewis

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI) — "We're gonna keep on truckin'—we're gonna really go out and push 'em," said Indiana Pacers Captain Freddie Lewis after his 40-point contribution to the 118-107 victory over the Utah Stars Thursday night.

The ABA champion Pacers are behind 3-1 in the best-of-seven Western Division playoff against the Stars. A series victory with four straight final wins would be unprecedented.

The next game is at Salt Lake City Monday night or Tuesday night.

The question is can the erratic Pacers last against a Utah team that has been delivering consistently balanced performances?

Even with the loss Thursday night, Utah's Willie Wise shot colder than usual, delivering 22 points; Ron Boone got 19; Zelmo Beaty and James Jones got 18 each, and former Pacer Rick Mount averaged a point a minute with 14.

That gave the Stars four men with 18 points or more compared with only two men that high for the Pacers—Lewis and George McGinnis, who got 30 points.

Pacer Bob Netolicky's injured wrist comes out of a cast today, so there's a chance he can help next week. And Roger Brown tested his sprained ankle briefly and earned a basket in Thursday night's game.

Astros Lose To Giants

HOUSTON (UPI) — Moving San Francisco shortstop Chris Speier to sixth in the lineup was one thing, but walking the fifth hitter—twice—to face Speier was quite another.

Both times Steve Ontiveros was given a free pass Thursday night Speier, entering the game hitting .200, singled to drive in three total runs.

That was all Giants' pitchers Tom Bradley and reliever Randy Moffitt needed as they limited the Houston Astros to six hits for a 5-2 win and an end to a four-game losing streak.

"I feel, hitting second, that I had a lot of things on my mind such as moving the runner ahead, hitting behind the runner and this type of thing," Speier said after the win. "I was concentrating on this but I didn't do my job of getting on base."

So Giants' manager Charlie Fox moved him to sixth spot.

Both walks to Ontiveros proved costly but Fox said he thought they were good moves.

"I'd have done the same thing that (Astros' manager) Preston (Gomez) did," he said. "The kid in front of Speier is a good hitter."

Ontiveros, entering the game in the fourth for the injured Dave Kingman, saw only intentional walks but his teammates collected nine hits. Garry Maddox got three hits including a double.

San Francisco broke on top with an unearned run in the fourth on leftfielder Bob Watson's error and added two runs in the sixth on Speier's bases-loaded single with two outs.

That hit drove Houston's Dave Konieczny, a 22-year-old flame thrower who started his first game this year, from the mound. He pitched 5 2-3 innings and gave up five hits. He also drew praise from his manager.

"If he keeps pitching as well as he did tonight," Gomez said, "he'll take somebody's (starting) job."

Konieczny replaced Don Wilson as the Thursday starter after Wilson bruised his finger in batting practice.

AFTER 2-UNDER Cullen Pacing Women Going Into 2nd Dinah Shore Round

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (UPI) — Betsy Cullen's, whose best finishes this year are a pair of thirds, leads the field as the $200,000 Dinah Shore Colgate Winners Circle tourney enters today's second round.

Psyched up by the biggest purse in women's golf history, the 35-year-old University of Oklahoma graduate from Tulsa outbatted winds gusting to 25 miles per hour Thursday to card a two-under-par 70 for the first round lead.

"This tournament means a lot to us," said Muss Cullen, her eyes red from the wind and blowing desert sand. "This is a lot of money we're playing for."

The first prize in the 72-hole tournament, scheduled to end Sunday, is $32,000 and a 1974 automobile.

Miss Cullen, whose best finishes in two previous Dinah Shore tournaments—viewed as the Master of the Ladies Pro Golfers Association tour—are 11th (in 1972) and 17th (last year), said she wasn't bothered by the wind.

"It would bother me if I was missetting the ball," she said, "but I wasn't missetting the ball today."

The shortest of her four birdies—she also had two bogeys—was a one-inch tap-in at the 10th hole.

"I can handle those," she quipped.

All alone in second place with a one-under-par 71, the only other sub-par round of the opening day's play, was Jo Ann Prentice, of Miami, Fla. The only other player to equal or better par Thursday was Sandra Haynie, of Fort Worth, Tex., who managed a par 72.

Six players were bunched at 73—Jocelyne Bourassa, Beth Stone, Judy Rankin, Kathy Cornelius, Jane Blalock and Mary Mills.

Bjorn Makes Tennis Semis

HOUSTON (UPI) — Teen-age tennis terror Bjorn Borg of Sweden defeated Argentinian Guillermo Vilas in surprisingly easy 6-2, 6-4 sets Thursday to gain the River Oaks-American General Tournament semifinals against Floridian Eddie Dibbs.

The win for Borg, the blond, blue-eyed 17-year-old who wowed Wimbledon this year, assured him of a berth in the World Championship of Tennis finals next month. He will be the youngest player ever to make the eight-man field.

Borg is sure now to add at least 35 points to his standings in the WCT Green Group. He stood in third place right behind Rod Laver entering River Oaks.

Education Today

By P. McCORMACK
NEW YORK (UPI) — Along the college trail what's new is attention to super-bright students. At many state universities, for example, an honors program enables genius types to ask for and get special privilege in the pursuit of the sheepskin. One of these, the University of Connecticut at Storrs, even has a center for its honors students. They cluster together during non-class time, leaving little chance to be bored. Some of the Ivy League schools assign professors to shepherd super bright students, opening doors that are closed to regular students.

At the University of Rochester in Rochester, N.Y., a unique scholarship program benefits students judged to have greatest potential. The Wilson Scholarship Program was instituted two years ago in memory of Joseph C. Wilson, an alumnus, trustee and benefactor. He was head of Xerox Corporation. The Wilson scholars, exceptionally bright, are selected each year from the incoming freshman class. Throughout undergraduate years, each Wilson Scholar works with a distinguished faculty sponsor, usually as an assistant on a research project. Each scholar gets an annual award of $500.

regardless of financial need. They have an opportunity to develop an individualized, accelerated academic program under supervision of his sponsor.
