50¢ DAILY/SUNDAY $1

Low tonight in low 60s, high tomorrow in low 90s. See Page 2 for weather details.

PAMPA — Pampa police today are looking for a man who relieved a woman of her wallet and cash about 11:40 p.m. Wednesday.

The robber, described as a black man, 17 to 22 years old, 5 foot nine inches tall and weighing about 150 pounds, may have had a gun when he took Belinda Renea Brookshire's $30 wallet and $20 in cash. The robbery occurred at the intersection of Huff Road and Crawford, officials say.

Brookshire is uninjured.

PAMPA — The Top O' Texas Chapter of the Fellowship of Christian Cowboys Inc. will meet at 6 p.m. Saturday, June 24, at the Clyde Carruth Pavilion at Recreation Park east of Pampa.

A fajitas supper will be served, with those attending asked to bring a dessert.

For more information, contact Jim and Kathleen Greene, 665-8067, or John and Carolyn Stokes, 665-7896.

The Top O' Texas Chapter meets the fourth Thursday of each month. The July meeting is set for 6 p.m. July 22 at the Clyde Carruth Pavilion.

AMARILLO — The Texas Cattle Feeders Association will hold a heavy equipment safety seminar in July.

Scheduled for July 13, at the Ambassador Hotel in Amarillo, the seminar is designed to train feedyard employees in heavy equipment safety, according to Derrell Havins with the TCFA.

For more information, call Havins at 806-358-3681.

LEFORS — Former graduates and ex-students of Lefors are invited to attend the 1995 All School Reunion on Saturday, July 1.

Registration will be from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Lefors High School Library. Planned activities include the General Assembly, a barbecue and a street dance.

For more information, contact Keith Roberson, 835-2302; Carole Watson, 835-2754; or Omega Chisum, 669-2573.

AUSTIN (AP) — Two winning tickets to a Lotto Texas jackpot Wednesday night estimated at $4 million were sold in the town of Richland (population 320), about 70 miles south of Dallas, a spokesman for the Texas Lottery Commission said.

The winning numbers were 9, 17, 21, 24, 28 and 40.

Richland is about 15 miles south of Corsicana, a few miles west of Interstate 45.

The jackpot for Saturday night's drawing will again be approximately $4 million, lottery officials said.

Man arrested in kidnapping, sexual assault

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

Bond hearings were expected today following the Wednesday arrest of an Amarillo man who stands charged with aggravated sexual assault and aggravated kidnapping of a Miami woman.

Vincent Reno Hulseley, 32, was to face Judge Ed Noble at 1:30 p.m. today in Potter County's 47th District Court on the kidnapping charge which stems from the June 15 abduction and rape of a 20-year old woman.

Hulseley was expected to be transported to Shamrock later in the day for a bond hearing before Justice of the Peace Guy Hardin on the sexual assault charge.

The victim was en route from Lubbock to Miami when she was snatched from her car at gunpoint on FM 1912 near IBP and Highland Park School between 11 p.m. and midnight June 15 and sexually assaulted by a pair of men who put duct tape over her eyes after one of them forced her into their pickup truck.

She was abandoned on Pakan Road in Wheeler County and discovered at 6:50 a.m. June 16 by a county employee as she walked stooped over along the side of the road.

Hulseley was arrested about 6 p.m. Wednesday at his Amarillo home on the Wheeler and Potter county warrants, said District Attorney John Mann.

Another "prime suspect" has been discovered and is being sought by authorities, Mann said.

He declined to name the suspect.

Hulseley became a suspect after three people called the Potter County Sheriff's Office responding to a composite sketch circulated in the area, Mann said.

Hulseley was subsequently identified from a photo line-up by the victim and the night attendant of a truck stop where the men stopped for a fan belt to repair the truck which carried them and the woman, Mann explained.

On Wednesday night, officials questioned a witness in whom Hulseley supposedly confided about the episode, Mann said.

Justice of the Peace Guy Hardin said he plans to recommend a $1 million bond when he sees Hulseley today.

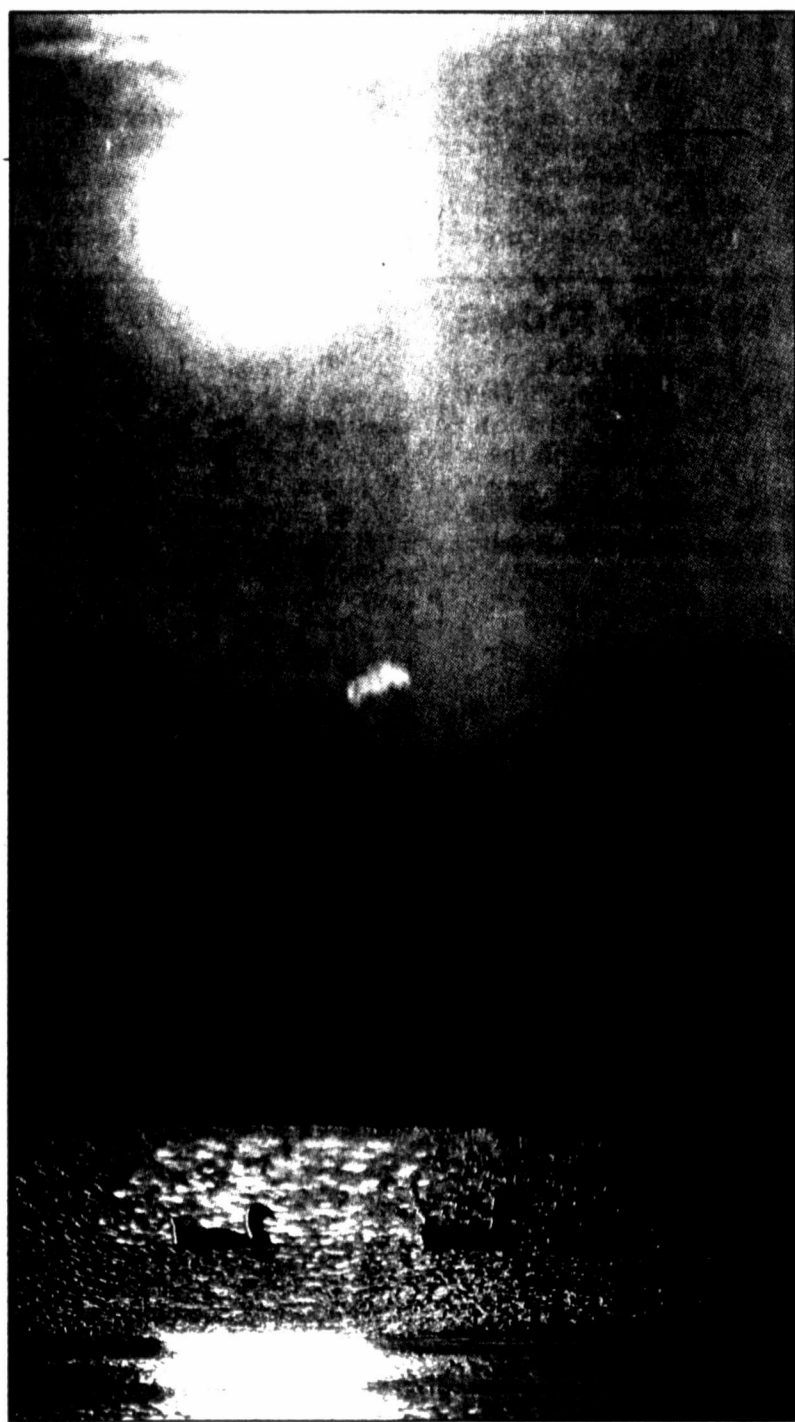

Mann said he plans to ask District Judge Kent Sims to deny all bond on the two charges.

Hulseley is under indictment in Potter County on charges of aggravated kidnapping and attempted aggravated sexual assault stemming from an Oct. 24, 1993 abduction and attack on a woman.

According to the indictment, Hulseley was convicted of indecency with a child on Oct. 4, 1985.

Hulseley was arrested by a Potter County deputy, District Attorney's Office investigator Bill McMinn, and Texas Rangers Gary Henderson and Alvin Schmidt.

Family gives 'Glad You're Still Alive' birthday party for tornado survivor

By MELINDA MARTINEZ
Lifestyles Editor

"Happy Birthday and Glad You're Still Alive" was the theme of a party family members held for Lewis Marcy Wednesday night at the Schneider House. He turned 84. And what about this "Glad You're Still Alive" part?

Marcy's trailer house was demolished by the tornado that ripped through town June 8. Fortunately, he wasn't home when it hit.

"I was standing at the door," said Marcy, and that was when he saw the tornado.

"He thought he would stay and ride it out," said his granddaughter, Brenda Zedlitz. "And then a voice told him to get out of there."

Zedlitz said he must have moved pretty fast but Marcy said he took his time to lock the door before leaving.

"I didn't feel like I was in a hurry," he said. Then he got into his van and took off.

"By the time I was two blocks from the house, it (the house) was already gone," said Marcy. He had lived in that trailer house since 1972.

"He lived there for 23 years," said Zedlitz. The only things they were able to recover from the rubble were some clothing and a telephone.

Since he was then homeless, Zedlitz took her grandfather in for a couple of days while they were in the process of looking for a new home for him.

"We were able to put him in the Schneider House on the Monday after the tornado," said Zedlitz, who added that they had the help of the Red Cross in helping him find his new place. "The people were good to help him settle in."

Zedlitz said she and her mother and sister decided to hold the party for him as a way to help him meet his new neighbors.

"They've been good to him," Zedlitz said. Knowing that he was one of the victims who lost his home to the tornado, the residents have given him canned goods and other food items to help him out.

And his new surroundings appear to agree with him.

"I like it fine," said Marcy about his new home at the Schneider House. "Couldn't want any better place."

Bagley presents GCAD two budget formats

Gray County Chief Appraiser Pat Bagley presented the Gray County Appraisal District Board of Directors with the 1996 appraisal district budget in two formats today at the board's regular meeting.

The board took no action on either format and agreed to examine each further before the next meeting.

Two formats were utilized at the suggestion of Pampa Independent School District

Business Manager Mark McVay.

The first format was consistent with budgets in the past, grouping appraisal and collection costs in one budget. The second separated them out with a difference of $7,800.

Board members appointed Gerald Laughlin as an appraisal review board member and Billy Davis as an alternate.

The board will continue discussion on the hiring of an architect to bring the office building at 815 N. Sumner up to Americans With Disabilities Act standards. Under consideration are four Amarillo architects and one from Austin.

Bagley also discussed with the board the final appraisal estimates from the June 8 tornado.

In all, 155 homes, 14 mobile homes, eight businesses, 49 industrial properties and nine properties northeast of Pampa were damaged at a total loss of $9,601,190.

Five homes in rural McLean were destroyed at a loss of $117,730.

Stormy weather brings scattered showers to area

Despite some scares near Alanreed Wednesday, National Weather Service officials say it is highly unlikely that any tornadoes touched down.

Doug Crowley, warning coordinating meteorologist, said the NWS received two reports of a possible touchdown north of town, but Department of Public Safety spotters could find no indication of a tornado.

"With the type of thunderstorms we had yesterday, the possibility is very unlikely," Crowley said.

Ken Hall, Gray County emergency management coordinator, echoed Crowley's response.

Hall said when he called the NWS Wednesday during the storms, officials there told him that cold and hot air masses were likely colliding, causing some swirling in the clouds, but no actual touchdowns.

"The wind velocities were not sufficient," Hall said.

Despite the official ruling, Dixie Jo Crockett of Alanreed said that the residents of Spradlin Ranch north of town stayed in their basement until the storm passed.

Crockett's home was one of a number of homes in the McLean area damaged by the June 8 tornadoes.

Alanreed received about 0.8 inch of rain in Wednesday's storm.

The rain totals went down from there - Pampa received about 0.45 inch and Lefors about 0.7 inch.

McLean City Secretary Stella Lee said she read about 0.2 inch from her rain gauge.

Wheeler County Heritage Day activities set July 1

OLD MOBEETIE - Wheeler County Heritage Day is set for July 1 at the Jail Museum in Old Mobeetie from 9:30 a.m. until 5 p.m.

The theme for 1995 is "How The West Was Fun: Soldiers, Settlers, Sinners and Saints." Living history groups portraying life in the 19th century will give 20th Century guests a sample of life during the final days of the "Old West."

Living history groups will include reenactments by the 4th Cavalry, Troop E, Old Fort Griffin Memorial Regiment; a medicine show and musical entertainment by the Faldler String Band; and rides by Arrington and Sons Horse Drawn Vehicles and Thompson Mule Drawn Wagons.

Other historical exhibits include buffalo hunters, a blacksmith and Indian traders. Visitors will also have the opportunity to eat lunch cooked and served from chuck wagons.

All activities except food and drink are free.

For more information, call the museum at (806) 845-2028.

Court rules against long-haired student

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court today said that courts should not interfere with public school district dress codes.

The decision came in the case of Austin Barber, who was forced to cut his hair to avoid in-school suspension as an 18-year-old senior at Colorado High School in Colorado City in 1992.

Pat Barber, the student's father, and James Harrington, an attorney for the Texas Civil Rights Project, argued last November that a rule prohibiting male students in Colorado City schools from wearing earrings and hair below their collar is unconstitutional.

Barber's case was the first to question public schools' denial of equal rights provided to 18-year-olds — legal adults — under the Texas Constitution.

In the Supreme Court's majority opinion, Justice Raul Gonzalez wrote, "We refuse to use the Texas Constitution to micro-manage Texas high schools."

"It is a matter of common sense that the state judiciary is less competent to deal with students' hair length than a parent, school board, administrator, principal or teacher," Gonzalez wrote.

In separate dissenting opinions, justices Rose Spector and Bob Gammage said the court should have found the dress code unconstitutional based on gender bias.

"Today, this ... court turns its back on an indisputable finding of sex discrimination, and unashamedly proclaims that such matters are not worthy of this court's consideration," Ms. Spector wrote.

"By its decision today, the majority renders meaningless the action of the people of Texas in placing the ERA (Equal Rights Amendment) in their state constitution," Gammage wrote.

The Supreme Court's ruling today was 7-2.

Previously, many courts had declined to rule on the merits of such lawsuits.

State District Judge Jess Holloway ruled the Colorado High School dress code unconstitutional in late 1993.

The 11th Court of Appeals in Eastland, however, overruled Holloway, contending that courts should not intervene in the matter. The appeals court's opinion said that school board trustees have the "exclusive power" to adopt regulations "as they may deem proper."

McLean family appreciates tornado benefit shower

McLEAN — At least one family in McLean is very appreciative of the benefit shower held for local victims of the June 8 tornadoes that hit outside the town.

Dixie Jo Crockett said she received laundry supplies, kitchen items, towels and more at the benefit at the Devil's Rope Museum on Tuesday. "Just knowing our community cares helps," Crockett said.

Her family took the brunt of the destruction of the storm. Her son Brock and daughter Julianna Burnett also had their houses destroyed by the tornado. The houses were built side-by-side on the family ranch. "Despite the damage, Crockett feels her family will pull through."

"We blew away in 1970, so we know we can rebound," she said.

The family hopes to rebuild on the same site, as they did after the 1970 storm.

Cattle trade slow in Panhandle, western Oklahoma

AMARILLO — Cattle trade was slow early today in the Texas Panhandle and western Oklahoma.

The USDA Market News Service reported today that there wasn't enough slaughter steer or heifer confirmed sales for a market test. They said a lower under-tone was noted.

Feedlots reported limited inquiry from buyers. Sales were reported on 1,200 slaughter steers today bringing to 75,200 head confirmed for the week including 9,900 head of formulated cattle and 1,500 head of previously contracted cattle to be shipped this week. Select and Choice 2 and 3 slaughter steers weighing 1100 to 1150 pounds were reported at $63 today.

The market apparently peaked Wednesday morning at $64 before dropping off Wednesday afternoon to $63 to $63.50.

Researchers add Pampa, Allison to study of tornado-blown debris

NORMAN, Okla. — Pampa and Allison, Texas, have been added to a study of tornado-blown debris following the Thursday, June 8, tornado that struck the communities that date.

Pampa joins the other Texas cities of Friona and Dimmitt, which were struck by tornadoes on June 2, in the study being conducted by the University of Oklahoma at Norman.

Because of the damage produced by these tornadoes and others in West Texas, these storms have been selected for detailed study by the Verification of the Origins of Rotation in Tornadoes Experiment (VORTEX) at the university.

Researchers are asking for assistance from residents in the Texas and Oklahoma panhandles, northwest Oklahoma and central and southern Kansas to be on the lookout for debris possibly blown or dropped into these areas by the tornadic storms.

Previous research has shown that such debris may be carried more than 200 miles from its source.

Residents finding any materials such as household items, building materials or especially papers with legible names and/or addresses (such as canceled checks, envelopes, invoices and photographs) from one of the towns struck by these tornadoes are asked to call the toll-free Tornado Debris Hotline at 1-800-3DEBRIS or write to Dr. John T. Snow, Energy Center Suite 1310, 100 E. Boyd St., Norman, OK 73019.

Computer users may contact the center via e-mail at debris@metgem.gcn.uoknor.edu.

Those finding such materials are requested to note the time the material was found, its exact location and any other details that might be helpful.

A team of researchers may be dispatched to the location to investigate the find. If the item is large and does not pose a threat to human safety, finders are asked not to disturb it until the research team has seen it.

If it is necessary to move objects, finders are asked to please attempt to photograph the objects before moving them, as well as try to protect all materials that might be damaged by wind and rain from the elements after finding them.

Researchers say that by contacting the scientists promptly, finders will be assisting in the research of these tornado events, adding that results of this research will lead to better understanding of tornadoes and enhanced public safety.

Social Security representative schedules area visits

A representative of the Pampa Social Security office will be in area towns during the months of July, August and September to assist with Social Security matters. Judge switching to GOP may not feel welcome

FORT WORTH (AP) — One of the state district judges who accepted Gov. George Bush's invitation to switch to the Republican party may not be welcomed by some of his new GOP colleagues.

State District Judge George Crowley said he was one of the Democrats who accepted Bush's invitation to switch parties in a ceremony to be held Monday in Austin.

Crowley, 63, a lifelong Democrat, was appointed to the bench in 1983 by Gov. Mark White.

Since announcing his plans, Crowley has been criticized by conservative Republicans for his rulings in cases involving abortion and school prayer.

Tarrant County GOP Chairman Steve Hollern said Wednesday he will ask the party's judicial candidate committee to review Crowley's qualifications and political philosophy.

In a news release, Hollern also said Crowley "should also be aware of the possibility that one or more additional candidates may join him in seeking election to the 67th District Court."

"I certainly do not think and have never thought that there wouldn't be those considering running against me," Crowley said after reading Hollern's statement.

Crowley said he decided to switch parties after speaking with Bush's political consultant, Karl Rove, and other judges rather than county party leaders.

State GOP Chairman Tom Pauken said he was not involved in Crowley's recruiting and does not plan to attend the governor's party switching ceremony Monday.

"I'm not going to be a cheerleader for everybody who puts an 'R' behind their name," Pauken said.

Crowley has been criticized mostly strongly about a March 1985 case involving Pregnancy Problem Center, a Fort Worth anti-abortion counseling service accused of misrepresenting itself as an abortion provider.

Crowley's final judgment in the case bars the clinic from advertising itself under the "abortion services" telephone book listings and compels the center's staff to tell clients upfront that the clinic does not provide abortions.

In 1992, Crowley issued an injunction barring the Carroll school district from sponsoring organized prayer or other religious expression at any school activities. That case, which stemmed from team prayers, ended in a 1993 settlement.

Librarian sues over censorship

McALLEN, Texas (AP) — The former librarian in tiny Weslaco has filed a federal lawsuit against the city, alleging that she was forced to quit after expressing her opinions about alleged censorship.

Pam Antonelli seeks unspecified damages for lost wages, attorney fees and emotional distress in her federal lawsuit. The American Civil Liberties Union filed the case on her behalf in McAllen on Wednesday.

Weslaco assistant city attorney Carlos Garza said authorities hadn't been served with the lawsuit and wouldn't comment on specific allegations.

H. "Buddy" de la Rosa, head of the Weslaco City Commission that makes policy for the library, told The Monitor in McAllen that "anybody can sue anybody."

"Based on my limited knowledge of this, I feel it would be a frivolous lawsuit," he said Tuesday.

Ms. Antonelli, who now works for the Houston Public Library, claims city officials in Weslaco ordered her to remove a copy of Howard Stern's best-selling autobiography Private Parts from the library in January 1994.

She says she later was told to remove copies of Alice Walker's Warrior Marks and Penny Alexander's How to Make Love to a Man - Safely.

Ms. Antonelli resisted the orders for months before relenting during a July 1994 meeting of the City Commission.

She later told a news reporter about the book removals and her comments appeared in a local newspaper.

"Antonelli was told by her supervisor that the City Commission was very upset with the newspaper articles," the lawsuit states. "Unexpectedly, in August of 1994, Antonelli was told she could quit or be fired the following morning."

She chose to quit with two months' pay.

Hakeem's jersey

The Woodrow Wilson Elementary School Booster Club is raffling off a Houston Rockets jersey signed by Hakeem Olajuwon. Tickets may be purchased at T-Shirts and More of Pampa, where the jersey will be on display until it is raffled off during Chautauqua on Labor Day in September. The booster club plans to hold additional tickets sales elsewhere in town. Holding the jersey signed by Hakeem Olajuwon, are Woodrow Wilson Elementary School students, from left, Stephen McCarley, Joshua Cook, Michael Eskridge and Dusty Cook.

Riverboat freed after four days

HAWESVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The 3,707-ton beached behemoth is finally free.

The American Queen, the largest paddlewheel steamboat ever built, was dragged off a sandbar Wednesday evening after being stranded for four days.

Five towboats, representing more than 7,000 horsepower, used ropes to pull the 418-foot luxury ship into a channel that had been dredged over two days. The Army Corps of Engineers had opened floodgates upstream earlier in the day, raising the river level by about 1 foot.

As the ship came free its steam whistle began playing tunes, the towboats let out a triumphant blast and a shout went up from the crowd of about 300 people lining the Indiana shoreline.

Female veterans will finally be recognized by memorial

WASHINGTON (AP) — Col. Ruby Bradley, an Army nurse and World War II prisoner, tells her story slowly, allowing the listener to feel the tension, see the sun set, hear the rumble of the tanks.

"Things were quiet. A tank came down to the gate. It was a little after 7 p.m.," Bradley recalls of her 1945 rescue from a Manila internment camp.

"You could hear talk, chattering, and it sounded like Americans. One of them said, 'Go ahead. What's holding up the works?' The Americans didn't know what they were going to find on the other side of that gate."

They found hundreds of half-starved U.S. military men and women who had waited nearly four years for deliverance. Bradley weighed 86 pounds.

When she went home it was the fighting men who got a hero's welcome.

"Women weren't given much status," says Bradley, now 87 and living in McLean, Va. "They could do the job, but they were still women."

Today, the 1.8 million women who have served in the U.S. military since the American Revolution will get that public recognition as ground is broken on The Women's Memorial, a planned $25 million monument and educational complex at the gate of Arlington National Cemetery.

Retired Air Force Brigadier Gen. Wilma Vaught, as president of the board of directors of the Women in Military Service for America Memorial Foundation Inc., led the effort to commemorate women who served in uniform.

"What we want to do with this memorial is to tell the story, to tell the history of women's service to the country," Vaught says. "They never really told their story. They came home and went on with life."

Vaught said the ceremony will result in another milestone — the largest number of female veterans and active duty personnel ever brought together, with 3,500 to 4,000 expected to attend the noontime dedication.

President Clinton was scheduled to be there along with his wife, Hillary, Defense Secretary William Perry and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. John Shalikashvili.

The Women in Military Service Memorial will repair an existing retaining wall at the gate, dedicated in 1932, and use it as a building facade. An upper terrace will be built to include an arc of glass panels etched with quotes from servicewomen.

The glass will let natural light into an education center below with a Hall of Honor, theater and computer registry of servicewomen's military histories, personal recollections and, often, photos. A reflecting pool will glimmer in front of the center arc surrounding a Court of Honor.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveyng commandment.

High court's small racial departures

It is a tribute to how far the United States has traveled down the road toward race conscious public policies that the U.S. Supreme Court's decision to apply stricter scrutiny to race based policies of the federal government is considered such a radical departure. The ruling was a "major hurdle to affirmative action," one wire-service headline had it.

In fact, what the Supreme Court has done in the Adarand Constructors case is quite modest. Adarand Constructors is a highway subcontracting firm that makes guardrails. It submitted the low bid for a federally funded highway project in Colorado. But a federal highway funding regulation gives prime contractors a bonus if at least 10 percent of its subcontractors are "disadvantaged business enterprises," and the contract for guardrails went to a Hispanic owned firm.

Adarand sued, claiming "reverse discrimination," but lost in the lower courts. Recently, the U.S. Supreme Court asked the lower courts to reconsider the case, using a stricter form of scrutiny to determine whether the racial preference was justified.

Federal laws that establish racial preferences "are constitutional only if they are narrowly tailored measures that further compelling government interests," wrote Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

The court's decision applies the same standards to the federal government's affirmative action programs that the court in 1989 applied to state programs. In a 1990 decision effectively overturned (Metro Broadcasting Federal Communications Commission), the court had given more leeway to the federal government to establish programs with racial preferences.

Under those stricter standards for state and local governments, however, a great many racial preference programs are in place that seem to violate the principle that government should offer equal protection of the laws to people as individuals rather than as members of arbitrarily determined groups. While the Supreme Court seems to have determined that such programs are constitutional, they are bad public policy.

Indeed, Justice Antonin Scalia, concurring only in part with the 5-4 majority, wrote that "In my view, government can never have a 'compelling interest' in discriminating on the basis of race."

This decision suggests that, as observers have often noted, the Supreme Court, despite its lofty status far above the political fray, pays attention to election returns. Another decision - in which the state of Missouri was allowed to discontinue extra court ordered funding for the Kansas City school district even though students hadn't yet achieved the national average in test scores - also suggests that the court is ready to pull back from some of the extreme "desegregation" measures it has approved in the past.

Opponents of affirmative action, however, cannot rely on the courts to eliminate such programs entirely. Ultimately, such decisions must be made in the political arena by building a consensus and persuading legislative bodies to honor the principles of equal protection under the law.

The population debate continues

Stephen Chapman

Popular fear of immigration is as old as America, but it is not growing feeble with age. In fact, anti-immigrant feeling is clearly gaining strength. In the near future, Americans will have to decide whether the noble tradition of welcoming newcomers will be preserved or repudiated.

Plenty of people think it is time to pull up the draw bridge, and the next Republican presidential nominee may be one of them. Both California Gov. Pete Wilson, who advocates getting tough with illegal immigrants, and conservative commentator Patrick Buchanan, who doesn't like foreign arrivals even if they're legal, hope to make it a winning theme in their campaigns.

A new book by conservative journalist Peter Brimelow, Alien Nation (Random House), says the influx of outsiders is changing the nation's ethnic makeup at a rate that invites catastrophe. As a result, he predicts, 21st-century Americans will face bitter racial conflict, repression and even national disintegration.

A congressional commission headed by former Rep. Barbara Jordan, created to make it politically easier for Congress to deal with the issue, has chosen to side with the exclusionists. According to The New York Times, its forthcoming report calls for reducing the annual volume of newcomers by one-third. That sets the stage for a battle in Congress, where Republicans are split on the issue.

Given the prevalence of simple xenophobia and bigotry, those who favor curbing immigration may not need facts to win the political fight. But they insist that some important developments argue for the changes they want. They make the following claims:

The flood of immigrants is too large to absorb.

Actually, the number of newcomers relative to the total population is quite low by historical standards - about 3.2 immigrants for every 1,000 Americans. That's about one-third the level in the early part of this century and well below the average over the last century and a half. By American standards, we are experiencing a lull, not a storm.

The skill and education of immigrants is declining. Not so. University of Maryland scholar Julian Simon, author of The Economic Consequences of Immigration, notes that the proportion of immigrants with less than eight years of education has fallen, while the percentage with 16 years or more has risen. High-tech industries abound with Ph.D.s from all over the world.

Immigrants are taking jobs from natives, particularly unskilled blacks. Economist Robert Topel of the University of Chicago says the evidence is clear that blacks are not worse off due to immigration. One study found that states with more immigrants generally have lower unemployment rates than states with fewer. If all the Koreans and Arabs left tomorrow, black Americans would lose grocery stores, but they wouldn't gain jobs.

Recent immigrants are prone to go on welfare and commit crimes. There is some abuse of the welfare system - particularly by refugees, who are immediately eligible for public assistance, and by elderly immigrants. Congress is already moving to restrict eligibility for the elderly, and there is no reason it couldn't restrict it for all immigrants. But overall, newcomers are about as likely to become a public burden as natives. As for crime, it is mostly home-grown. Many cities with large immigrant populations (San Jose and Anaheim, Calif.) have low crime rates, while many violent places (Atlanta, St. Louis) have few foreign-born residents.

The foreigners coming today are racially different from natives, generating ethnic strife. This ignores 200 years of U.S. experience at digesting supposedly indigestible groups. Brimelow wonders if we can cope with so many Asians and Hispanics, just as Americans of Northern European ancestry worried about the dusky Mediterraneans who came a century ago. But Asians have assimilated so well that they are jokingly known as "honorary white people." Hispanics, far from adopting an "us against them" posture, are more likely to identify with whites than with other Latinos. This is the stuff of racial war?

The doomsayers hold the perennial American belief that yesterday's immigrants were a boon but today's are a burden. They fail to grasp that immigration is to this nation what an underground spring is to a freshwater lake: a perpetual source of nourishment and renewal. It is part of the reason America is one of the freest, most inventive and most dynamic societies in the world. It has served us well throughout our history and will continue to do so, if we let it.

Today in history

By The Associated Press
Today is Thursday, June 22, the 173rd day of 1995. There are 192 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
Fifty years ago, on June 22, 1945, the World War II battle for Okinawa officially ended, with 12,520 Americans and 110,000 Japanese killed in the 81-day campaign.

On this date:

In 1611, English explorer Henry Hudson, his son and several other people were set adrift in present-day Hudson Bay by mutineers.

In 1815, Napoleon Bonaparte abdicated a second time.

In 1868, Arkansas was readmitted to the Union.

In 1870, Congress created the Department of Justice.

In 1938, heavyweight boxing champion Joe Louis knocked out Max Schmeling in the first round of their rematch at Yankee Stadium.

In 1940, during World War II, Adolf Hitler gained a stunning victory as France was forced to sign an armistice eight days after German forces overran Paris.

Federal courts could stand overhauling

Charley Reese

There's one problem I see with a constitutional amendment to ban burning the flag. It's the same problem I see with a constitutional amendment to permit prayer in public schools.

Every time the Supreme Court makes a bum decision, we have to amend the Constitution to overturn it, then we aren't going to have much time to do anything else.

Believe me, the Supreme Court, as slow as it is, can turn out bum decisions a heck of lot faster than we can amend the Constitution to overturn them.

Why not properly define the problem and attack it with just one amendment? The problem is not flag burners or prayer-banners. The problem is the Supreme Court.

John Marshall, chief justice from 1801-35, and the man who set the precedent that the Supreme Court could test law against the Constitution, was not nearly the radical many of today's judges are. After all, Marshall accepted the idea that the Constitution, plainly written, meant what it said and said what it meant.

To accept that view is also to accept the view, which was common in Marshall's day, that the Constitution itself left a majority of issues to the exclusive purview of the state governments; that is, on a majority of subjects it was silent. And that view is true. The Constitution is not, nor ever was, intended as a one-purpose-fits-all piece of legislation that would resolve every human conflict imaginable.

The main business of the Constitution, in fact, is merely to set up a federal government, define it, define its powers, define its relationship to the states and spell out certain basic rights that the federal government cannot abridge. For example, at the time of its ratification, it was understood that whereas the federal government could not have an official church or religion, a state government could. And so did.

It was after the Civil War that the Constitution was amended specifically to apply the Bill of Rights to everyone. The modern view of the Constitution, however, is that it is simply an excuse to do something you can't get done through the democratic process. Can't persuade a majority to abolish the death penalty? Then shop for a federal judge who will rule it unconstitutional. Can't decide whether or not to let people sleep all night in public parks? Let's make that a constitutional issue. I could cite example after example. Some resulted in decisions - such as ending racial segregation - with which I agree, but they were arrived at by a process with which I don't agree.

And it's corrupted and trivialized both the Constitution and the federal courts. Abraham Lincoln, federalist to the core, said that if the Supreme Court is the supreme law of the land, then Americans do not govern themselves but are instead ruled by an unelected oligarchy.

To maintain a democratic country requires, among other virtues, patience. If every time we lose a legislative battle, we try to short-circuit it in the federal courts, then we will, just as Lincoln said, find ourselves being governed by oligarchs appointed for life - not by our elected representatives.

So the answer is to use the amendment process, not to overturn specific decisions, but to overhaul the federal courts, including the Supreme Court. We could by constitutional amendment severely limit the jurisdiction of the federal courts, including the Supreme Court; we could establish mandatory retirement ages; we could require that federal judges, including Supreme Court Justices, be reconfirmed every six or eight years.

In the meantime, we should insist that the U.S. Senate take its confirmation process seriously and stop playing politics with that gaggle of special interest groups which covers Washington like maggots on a dead rat.

The Senate does not need to know a darn thing about the sex lives of nominees. It needs to know their legal philosophy. For every lousy federal judge there is a lousy Senate vote. If we can't get the judge at the ballot box, we can get the senators.

Time for shamesmanship not censorship

Ben Wattenberg

Bob Dole's box office bonanza in Hollywood spotlights the value of cultural politics, and its weakness.

Dole went to Tinseltown and trashed the entertainment industry for promoting "casual violence and even more casual sex." He singled out Time Warner Inc. for purveying the most rotten sort of "gangsta rap," ghetto music that glorifies rape, mutilation, torture, dismemberment and murder-of women.

Dole followed all the established political rules for cultural politics. He named names. He delivered his lecture on the home ground of the male-factors. He dealt with a serious situation, more serious than Murphy Brown's illegitimate baby. He didn't manufacture the issue: John Leo had launched the attack on Time Warner in U.S. News, and the team of Republican Bill Bennett and Democrat C. Delores Tucker had already aired television spots denouncing the company. Dole was selective, noting that, in general, "The American entertainment industry is at the cutting edge of creative excellence... and dominate(s) worldwide competition today." (It's even better than that.)

Dole won a political Oscar. The Washington Post headlined: "Dole's Blast at Hollywood Resonates - Theme Has Appeal Far Beyond Social and Religious Conservatives." Dole was even attacked by Hollywood liberals for endangering free expression, even though Dole abjured censorship, while peddling shamesmanship. (Similarly, Bennett and Tucker call themselves "virtual absolutists on the First Amendment.")

Dole did right. Voters deserve to know about the values as well as the policies of their potential leaders. Symbols count in politics, as in life. Worried parents can use a morale booster when arguing with their kids. And when corporate culture values know that big shots will rap them publicly, they are more likely to mind their manners. That is particularly so for a huge company like Time Warner, which is vulnerable to boycotts in their other businesses (theme parks, HBO, retail stores and magazines).

Fine. Sort of. The weakness of cultural politics - and not just regarding the entertainment issue - is that it is largely ineffectual in the governmental realm. Shame cannot be legislated. Assume further that other big, vulnerable companies do likewise (German-owned Bertelsmann and Japanese-owned Sony.) Will that end the matter? No. Smaller, less vulnerable companies will produce the stuff. If they don't, new companies will emerge. Why? Adolescents buy it, yielding profits to peddlers.

That too can be stopped. By censorship. Except that the vast majority of Americans (69 percent to 27 percent) don't want it. They do want tighter parental supervision (93 percent to 6 percent), warning labels on records (83 percent to 15 percent). Right. The labels tell kids it's a hot one. In rebellion mode, the kids buy the records. And new upstart culture vultures make money. That's still probably a net plus from what we have now, but not by much.

So too with most of the stark issues of cultural politics now on the table. They lack either major public consensus, or appropriate governmental response, or both. There is not much the government should or could do about homosexuality. The feds could legalize abortion, but solid majorities don't want them to do it. The prayer in the school argument, as made by the Christian coalition, "would not restore compulsory, sectarian prayer or Bible-reading dictated by government officials..." and would be "voluntary, student and citizen-initiated free speech in non-compulsory settings..." Which leads to the question: If you agree with that, and get it, what do you get if you get it?

Polls show that the catchall term "values," in one form or another, is seen to be the "most important" issue in America. That shows voter wisdom, but not precision. The "cultural" part of the values issue is good ground for personal activism, but hard for government to legislate. Not so in the "social" part of the values issue. In that realm there is plenty the government can do, and a broad consensus to do it.

Americans want to reinstate punishment for crime, restore disincentives to welfare, reestablish rigor in schools, and go back to an earlier non-preferential form of affirmative action.

There is a role for cultural politics. There is a more important role for social politics.

The toxic tort case against Hoechst Celanese

Editor's Note: The following, part three of a series, is a reprint of an article originally published in the April 20, 1995 issue of the Houston Press

By BRIAN WALLSTIN
The Houston Press

Plaintiffs' attorney Upchurch used the results of a routine test by the Texas Water Commission in November 1991 to sketch another "worst-case scenario" for Carolyn Hood. The test seemed to suggest that the benzene-contaminated water had spread beyond the Ogallala Aquifer to the well that provided water to the 40 households in Kingsmill Camp. "It's drifting," he told Hood excitedly. "It may already be into the Pampa water supply ... They are keeping this a damn secret ... It's now beyond the fence line of Celanese, moving in a pocket."

"Oh God," replied a horrified Hood. Mike Baker, a former Texas Water Commission official who now works for the Texas Natural Resources Conservation Commission in Amarillo, confirms that levels of benzene found in samples taken directly from the Kingsmill well in November 1991 were "above what they should have been." But Baker says samples taken from the well's distribution system — that is, the water that was actually consumed — were clean.

"The water coming out of the well did show some slightly elevated levels," Baker explains. "But by the time it was chlorinated and went through the standpipe, there were no samples taken that showed any violations of any levels."

Hood was told as much in a conversation with Neal Pflum, an EPA official in Dallas. Pflum explained that the contamination was restricted to a "perched water zone," a dry area between the earth's surface and the clay layer atop the aquifer. Pflum said the benzene and other chemicals found in the state's test "don't really correspond to anything" that could have been coming from Celanese.

He suggested to Hood that if the company's offer to make the well deeper or build a new one wasn't enough, she could take Celanese to court and try to prove it polluted the well. But that would be "very difficult to do," he warned.

It's clear from the conversation that Hood didn't believe Pflum. And no wonder: while her attorneys were telling her how Celanese was going to make her sick — maybe even sick enough to die — they also were telling her that state and federal regulators were helping the company cover up its dirty work.

"The EPA is supposed to be the protection agency," Barfield told Hood after her chat with Pflum. "But, you know, we're concerned about all these agencies conspiring to help these chemical companies."

Upchurch, typically, was more blunt: "I have no respect for the EPA or the Texas Water Commission or the Texas Air Control [Board]. I think all three are basically crooks."

The three attorneys often expressed similar contempt for Pampa doctors, who they were convinced were afraid of Celanese or, worse, parties to the "cover-up" engineered by the company. On more than one occasion, however, Upchurch advised clients that they needed to visit their physician every time they were stricken with so much as a sore throat.

"I mean, you've got to," he told one, "and you got to complain and faint and fall down ... I'll tell you, nobody is going to win any money if you never go to see a doctor."

And there would be no money if Celanese wasn't convinced that the plaintiffs had an intense fear of toxic chemicals from the plant. To underscore that point, the attorneys gave their clients a study guide which bore the title "MENTAL ANGUISH." The document suggested 47 different types of fear that should be shared with Celanese attorneys during depositions, so the company would understand the "worry in your life and fear of the future." But it also stressed that — should the Celanese lawyers ask — the fear originated "NOT FROM WHAT YOUR ATTORNEY HAS TOLD YOU" but from conversations with friends and family or from newspapers and television.

Although laden with grammatical and spelling errors, the document was, if nothing, thorough. Not only was fear of pain and death listed, but so was fear of "serious illness pain and slow death." The clients also were instructed to express a "fear of never being compensated enough for all the possible damages" inflicted by Celanese. And there was No. 42: "Nightmares of toxins oozing from their bodies."

Less than a year after the Texas Water Commission found the benzene traces in the Kingsmill well, the Kingsmill Water Supply Corporation — a community co-op that owned and operated the well — sued Celanese. Upchurch, Wayne Barfield and Charles Haden also named as a defendant in the suit Santa Fe Railway, whose employees, the suit alleged, had drained chemicals from railcars into the soil near Kingsmill Camp.

Barfield would later tell a group of clients that the railroad was included as a "ploy" to get a trial in Sweetwater, where Santa Fe has regional offices. He explained that the three attorneys had hired Temple Dickson, a former state senator from Sweetwater and "an absolute close friend" of a judge there, as a co-counsel.

J.D. Bashline, an attorney with the Houston firm that represented Santa Fe in the case, says it was common knowledge that Upchurch, Barfield and Haden sought Sweetwater as a venue for the new lawsuit. "They thought they could sign up Temple Dickson as their local counsel and all good things would happen and the money would roll in," Bashline says. "That's not something you can count on, but I know that's why they filed that suit over there."

If Barfield sounded desperate, it may have been because, at least the way he made it sound, the attorneys had already signed the settlement agreement, accepting the $2 million before getting approval from the clients.

By the time the Kingsmill water suit was lodged, the toxic tort affair had been under way for four years. The clients, now numbering more than 800, were suitably scared — and weary. Many fretted that even if they won they would be long dead before the appeals process was through. In September 1992, Celanese offered to negotiate with the Kingsmill Camp residents for purchase of their property. Some thought it sounded like a good deal.

But at a meeting at client Ann Malone's house, Haden warned them that Celanese would try to undercut their property values and reminded them that the real issue was the long-term effects of the plant's "fugitive emissions," all of them carcinogenic, that they already had been exposed to. Many caused "deformities" in the unborn, he said.

"Just remember that," he said. "You have been smelling it for years ... Even if nothing bad happens to you, and you have to live out your days wondering if and when the other shoe is going to fall, that's worth money ... We will win this case. If we try this case ten times, we will win it ten times."

But they tried it just once and, by all accounts, it wasn't pretty. In fact, Upchurch, Barfield and Haden ran into trouble immediately, when it was learned that no one on the plaintiffs' team had paid the $15 fee required for jury trial. That omission cost them their right to present their case to a panel of Harris County residents, something they had coveted from the very beginning.

Then, while their witnesses were being manhandled on cross-examination by Celanese attorneys, the lawyers became convinced that Judge Eugene Chambers — who in the absence of a jury was hearing the facts and would render a decision — was biased against them. Then they thought they caught him napping during testimony and tried to have him recused.

"That became the key for them to get out," Celanese attorney Hartline says of the plaintiffs' lawyers' problems with Chambers. "But you have to understand, they were falling on their face."

Another theory for the poor courtroom showing is offered by William Kilgarlin, a former Texas Supreme Court justice who was appointed case master to oversee pre-trial proceedings, including the depositions of expert witnesses. Kilgarlin suggests that the potentially lucrative, high-profile case brought out a clash of egos among the attorneys.

"There was always a very disjointed effort by the plaintiffs' lawyers," says Kilgarlin, now in private practice in New Mexico. "It was very difficult for me to handle it because I tried to get them to just allow one lawyer to speak for all of them. But Upchurch would come in and take one position, then Barfield might take an entirely contrary position to what Upchurch had just said. So it was difficult dealing with the plaintiffs' lawyers."

But the best explanation was offered by the attorneys themselves in meetings with the clients during and after the trial. These conversations must have been confusing to the clients, if not downright shocking. What they learned was that despite all they had been told for the past five years, their attorneys could not prove that Celanese was responsible for any illness or birth defects in the region. Moreover, Celanese's expert witnesses were so superior to the plaintiffs' they could probably prove most of the clients "don't have a damn thing wrong with them," according to Barfield.

The clients' first indication of trouble came two days after the trial began, in a November 6, 1993, meeting in Pampa to discuss a $2 million offer by Santa Fe Railway to settle out of the toxic tort and Kingsmill water cases.

Barfield urged the clients to accept the offer. He explained that all they really had on the railroad were a couple of workers who said they had seen chemicals dripping from a few boxcars.

"That case is tremendously weak," Barfield said. "We would be looking like we were fools to say this ... this sly activity of the railroad was what caused all this harm."

But there were other reasons his clients needed to agree to the settlement, Barfield stressed, the main one being the "insurmountable" financial demands that threatened to sink the toxic tort case. He told them that an Amarillo bank was pressuring the plaintiffs' team for $1.1 million "immediately" and that the lawyers owed $700,000 in unpaid expenses.

"We have notes coming due on November 15," he said. "We have never paid any of the court reporters in this case and they are threatening to sue us ... We have experts in this case that are saying, 'We expect to be paid up front and we're not coming to testify if we don't get paid.'"

Among the experts yet to be paid was the plaintiffs' key liability expert, Al Baxley, who was scheduled to begin testifying when the trial resumed two days later. The attorneys also owed about $100,000 to two medical experts who were set to testify.

The bottom line, Barfield told his clients, was this: "We desperately need the $2 million to pay the people and pay these experts and to pay these bills ... If anyone is not willing to sign this agreement, then we're all finished."

If Barfield sounded desperate, it may have been because, at least the way he made it sound, the attorneys had already signed the settlement agreement, accepting the $2 million before getting approval from the clients. When one of the clients asked about the deadline for the settlement, Barfield replied:

"It's not a deadline situation. We've signed. We have had to sign our names on the agreement as attorneys and promise with our bar licenses that we would get this done. It's one of those deals where you have to take the risk ... You either make a decision or you're going to get murdered anyway."

In fact, Barfield had an inkling they were about to get murdered in the toxic tort trial as well. He told the clients that Celanese had "every major doctor in the world to come in and say you are not injured by these chemicals." He told them that the company controlled Baylor College of Medicine and "entire medical complexes in Chicago." He admitted to them that their own medical experts "can't match up."

Dog Who Marks His Territory Puts Husband in the Doghouse

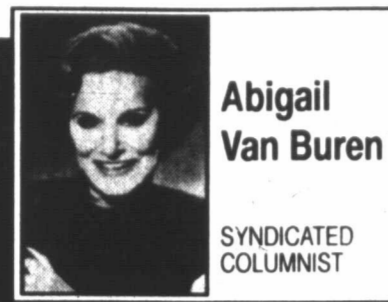

DEAR ABBY: I have a real problem. My husband and I decided to breed our cocker spaniel last year. When Sadie had her five puppies, we decided to keep a male we named Ernie. Well, Ernie is now a little over a year old. Males seem to mark their territory wherever they go, and that's my problem.

I have had numerous arguments with my husband because I insist we should get Ernie neutered not only because of his urinating everywhere, including the house, but also to reduce the risk of cancer. My husband says he just can't do that to his dog! He thinks Ernie will lose his drive to play ball and walk all the time. He actually phoned the vet when he caught Ernie urinating on the plant in our living room. Then he canceled the appointment because he "just couldn't do that to Ernie."

Am I wrong to want to get our dog fixed before he wets the entire house? I love Ernie, and I really don't think he's going to know the difference being neutered or not. But my husband insists that neutering a dog is like taking away his manhood.

ERNIE'S MOM
IN CLEARWATER, FLA.

DEAR ERNIE'S MOM: I took your problem to my veterinary expert, Dr. Erwin David, who told me that your idea about neutering Ernie is correct. Neutering has a 50 percent chance of eliminating "urine-marking behavior in male dogs. And in the 50 percent of cases that fail to respond to neutering, hormone injections can be helpful."

He also told me that neutering has other health benefits: It eliminates the risk of testicular cancer and greatly reduces the risk of prostate disorders. Keeping that in mind (not to mention a serious pet overpopulation problem in the United States), male dogs that are not intended for breeding should be neutered.

He closed his letter to me as follows: "Not surprisingly, the opposition to neutering male pets invariably comes from male members of the household. However, neutered male dogs can be just as active as intact ones if their exercise programs are maintained."

DEAR ABBY: I tried to quit smoking several times, but wasn't able to. How I wish I had never started! I am 47, and was placed on a respirator last May, after having smoked for 31 years.

Please send all the young people who want to smoke to visit me. They can watch me wait for the respirator to give me enough breath so I can get a few words out. They can see that my mobility is limited to 12 feet of blue tubing. They can see all the medical equipment I rely on to keep me alive. They can talk to my husband, who is constantly by my side, and learn how his life has been affected.

Abby, we should give up trying to get smokers to quit, and crusade to prevent kids from starting.

GAIL H. IN GEORGIA
DEAR GAIL: Your speech may be limited, but your letter shouts the dangers of tobacco loud and clear.

Parents should begin letting children know that smoking is unhealthy and undesirable as soon as their children are old enough to understand and recognize what smoking is. Later on, the schools should impress upon them the many reasons why they should not smoke.

Horoscope

Your Birthday

Friday, June 23, 1995

In the year ahead, you might establish two new primary objectives. It probably won't be easy, yet there are indications that you can achieve them before your next birthday rolls around.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your possibilities for advancing your latest interest are very strong today. Move forward in a positive manner. Get a jump on life by understanding the influences that govern you in the year ahead. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today by mailing $2 and SASE to Astro-Graph c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, NY 10163. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You could be lucky today in your financial involvements, but you'll need to take a very active role in bringing about success.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Left to your own devices, you'll be capable of substantial achievements today. Do not let others infringe upon your time with frivolous projects or activities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) It looks as if the obstructions to something you've been hoping for will be lifted today. Once this occurs, follow through with alacrity.
SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) It will prove important in this cycle to maintain good relationships with entrepreneurial friends. A close pal might point you toward something profitable.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Although it might require extra effort and dedication, an important career objective can be achieved in this time frame.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You might do better than usual today in endeavors with pronounced elements of chance. With the odds in your favor, a few calculated risks may be in order.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) This could be the right day to implement a change to benefit to your household. Use your initiative instead of just dwelling on matters.
PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Authorship won't be as important as success today. If you feel your companion's suggestions are better than yours, use them.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Industriousness will not only give you pride of achievement today, it could also increase your holdings. Doing good work will reward you amply.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) It could make you feel very uneasy today if an endeavor involving others isn't managed effectively. You mustn't hang back; step in and take charge.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Give domestic matters priority today. If you've left something critical unresolved, now is the time to settle it to your satisfaction.

HOCKEY

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The New Jersey Devils now have the home-ice advantage in the Stanley Cup finals, not that they necessarily want it.

What they hope to do tonight in Game 3 at the Meadowlands against the Detroit Red Wings is make believe they're on the road, where they've had most of their success in the playoffs.

"Maybe we just have to say: 'Men, we're on the road tonight, let's play another game on the road,'" said defenseman Shawn Chambers. "Maybe we'll have the same mentality."

The Devils remember all too well what happened in the previous series against the Philadelphia Flyers. They won the first two games on the road, then were beaten twice at home in a real confidence-shaker.

"We let up (against the Flyers)," forward Randy McKay said. "Personally, I think we were a little overconfident and tried to win it the easy way."

MONTREAL (AP) — The Houston Astros hope that home will be as accommodating as the road.

Houston defeated Montreal 5-3 Wednesday night capping a 7-2 road trip with a three-game sweep of the Expos. It was the Astros' 11th win in 13 road games.

"Now we have to carry it over at home," said manager Terry Collins, whose club has a 19-9 road record, but a 7-15 mark at home, including six straight losses. "I think we try too hard at home, keep pressing and try to make too many things happen. There are no secrets, we have to go out and have some fun. Just go play."

Greg Swindell (4-3) pitched six strong innings for his first win in a month. The left-hander allowed one run on four hits, struck out four and walked one, sending Montreal to its fifth straight loss and seventh in eight games.

Tony Eusebio had two hits and drove in three runs, including two on a double off Butch Henry (2-5) in the third inning that gave Houston a 3-1 lead.

"We got some key hits, they made a couple of key errors, and our bullpen was strong," said Swindell, who hadn't won in five starts since beating Montreal on May 21.

"When that happens, you should win." Montreal made four errors and several bad judgment plays that raised the ire of manager Felipe Alou.

"This was one of our worst games since I came on," Alou said. "Nobody's having fun here right now."

"Some of the young guys seem to be getting nervous. The important thing is not only wins or losses, but that they don't get overwhelmed by losses or mistakes."

Houston's top four in the batting order did little wrong on the Eastern road swing. Rookie Brian Hunter hit .310 in the nine games, Craig Biggio .342, Jeff Bagwell .341 and Derek Bell .316.

"When we get good pitching, we're going to win a lot of games," said Bagwell, who went 2-for-5 and extended his hitting streak to 11 games. Bagwell has hit safely in 17 of his last 19 games, raising his average from .183 to .250.

"I'm starting to get my swing back, but it's not quite there yet," he said. "We've all been struggling at different times this year, playing well six games, then badly six games. But it's coming around. Up and down the lineup, we're starting to get this thing going."

Hunter, the Astros' leadoff hitter who was called up from the minor leagues to begin the road trip after James Mouton was injured, also had two hits and went 6-for-13 in the series.

"He did what we hoped he'd do for us," Collins said. "He sparked the offense."

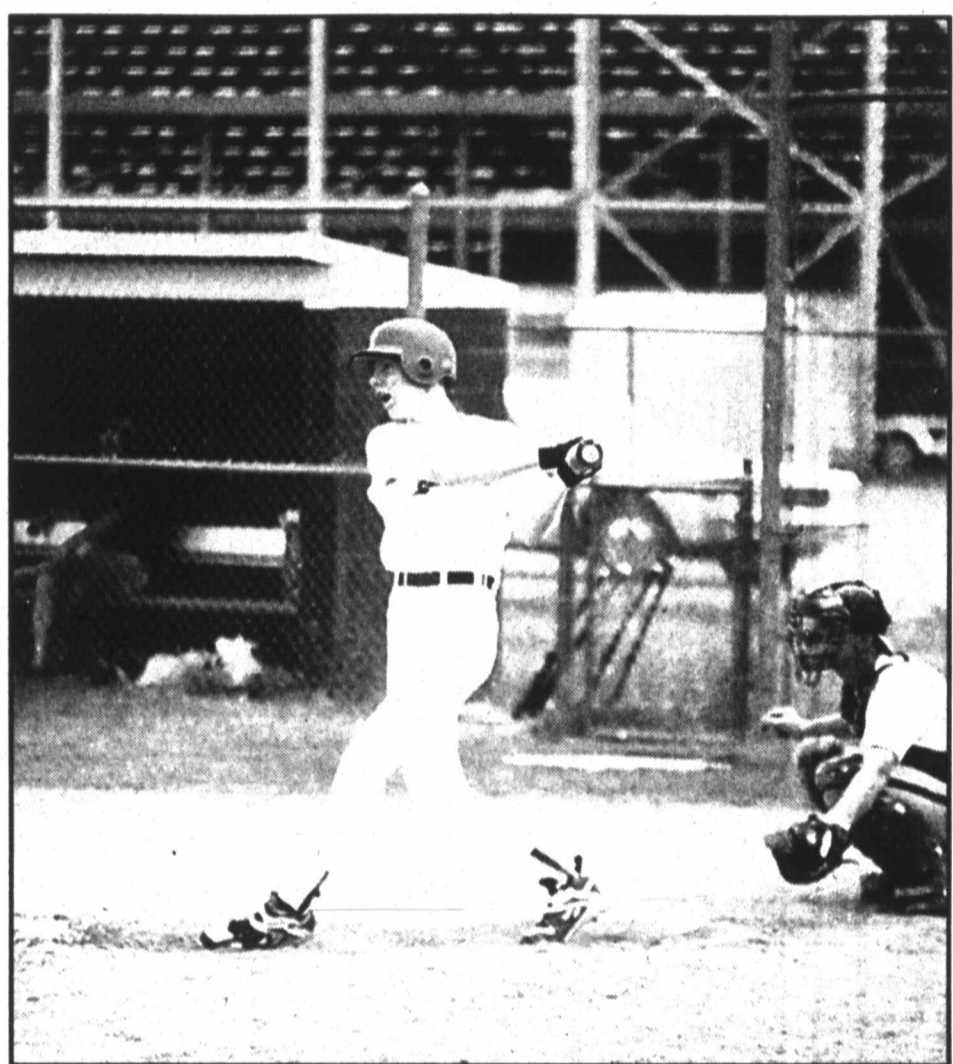

Hunter was hit on the thumb by a pitch from Luis Aquino in the seventh, but remained in the game.

He shrugged off the suggestion that the Astros' recent string of success has coincided with his arrival.

"They've been playing good on the road all year," the rookie said. "I didn't change that."

"But when a guy gets on base, it puts pressure on the opposing team. When I get on, I look to run," said Hunter, who has six stolen bases in the nine games.

Pampa shortstop August Larson had three hits, including a home run, in the Panthers' 13-8 loss to Amarillo Caprock Tuesday. Pampa will try and rebound against Dumas at 6 p.m. tonight at Harvester Field. The Panthers, an 18 and under team, are still looking for their first win after three games.

Drexler returns home to await championship ring

By MARTHA IRVINE
Associated Press Writer

BEAVERTON, Ore. (AP) — He won his championship. He made the cover of Sports Illustrated. And business is booming at his family's restaurant in Houston.

Now Clyde Drexler has returned to Portland. And he's ready to sit back, play some golf with his former Trail Blazers teammates and wait for his championship ring to arrive.

A news conference at the Avia sports-wear company headquarters marked Drexler's first Oregon appearance since he and the Houston Rockets won the NBA championship last week.

He said it was difficult to describe how much the championship means to him.

"It's been a fantastic ride," Drexler said. "At night I still wake up thinking, 'Is it real?'"

Drexler, who has been affiliated with Avia for 10 years, sat next to a birthday cake, celebrating his 33rd birthday on Thursday.

As he spoke, his wife, Gaynell, sat on a nearby sofa with two of the couple's three children. Their son, Austin, 5, sat grinning at Drexler and the swarm of reporters and photographers. His daughter, Kathryn Elise, 3, seemed worn out by the whole proceeding, yawning and laying her head on her mother's lap.

Meanwhile, Adam, 20 months, shot baskets in toy hoop in a back room.

Drexler said the trade in February was traumatic for his family and the long season made it difficult to spend time at home. "My kids say, 'Dad, you're working too long,'" he said.

Their plans for next season remain unsettled.

Gaynell Drexler said she is willing to move to Houston, even though she prefers life in Oregon.

"From the standpoint of being a mom, I would say Portland has a lot more to offer," she said.

For the short term, Drexler is looking forward to getting together with his former teammates.

"We'll talk about old times and what has happened," he said, adding that he intends to "test their $2 game on the golf course."

He said he has no bitter feelings or animosity toward the Blazers' management. In fact, he all but thanked them for sending him in February to the team that finally won him his championship.

"In Portland, we were so good so quick that the expectation rose too quickly," Drexler said. "I gave it everything I had while I was here. We came close but always came up short."

In Houston, all of the pieces fell into place.

He said contract talks will resume with the Rockets later in the summer.

"Right now, I just want to rest," Drexler said with a relaxed smile.

Brewers slip by Bluejays, 10-9

TORONTO (AP) — Jose Valentin's grand slam with two outs in the ninth inning Wednesday night lifted the Milwaukee Brewers to a 10-9 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

With the Brewers trailing 8-6, Greg Vaughn worked reliever Woody Williams for a leadoff walk and Darryl Hamilton chased Williams with a two-out single, the only hit he allowed in three innings. David Hulse greeted Mike Timlin (3-1) with a single to load the bases.

Valentin worked the count full before sending Timlin's pitch to right for his second career grand slam and the Brewers' sixth win in their last seven games away from County Stadium.

Bill Wegman (1-3) allowed one run on two hits in two innings for the win. Mike Fetters pitched the ninth for his seventh save despite allowing a run-scoring double by Ed Sprague.

Alfonsi joins Team Texas for junior national mat tourney

LAWTON, Okla. — Cory Alfonsi of Pampa is one of six area wrestlers who will compete for Team Texas at the USA Wrestling Junior National Dual Championships, which opens a four-day run today at Great Plains Coliseum.

Alfonsi, who was coached by Steve Kuhn in high school, plans to attend Fort Hayes University in Fort Hayes, Kan. on a wrestling scholarship.

Others competing for Team Texas include Rowdy Lundegreen of River Road, Johnny Cobb of Tascosa, and Mason Thornburg, Justin Turner and K e e g a n F a r i s o f D u m a s .

Alfonsi advanced to the state finals this past season. Cobb also reached the state finals while Thornburg and Turner also earned medals.

Team Texas will also include seven other state qualifiers, including state champions Robbie Rogers of

Alfonsi

Flower Mound Marcus and Tom Grossman of Carrollton Newman Smith.

The team will be coached by Mike Dominguez of Dumas, Johnny Cobb of Tascosa and Maverick Club director Henry Harmoney.

The competition, which pits teams from 16 states in dual-meet competition, begins today with pool competition in Greco-Roman wrestling. The winners of each pool advance to Friday's semifinals. Freestyle competition will get under way Saturday with the pool winners advancing to Sunday's semifinals.

Pampa's Dearen chosen to coach in all-star scholar-athlete games

PAMPA — Coach Larry Dearen of Pampa High School has been chosen by the Institute of International Sport and the University of Rhode Island to coach an All-Star Scholar-Athlete basketball-track team during the week-long games June 24-30.

Coach Dearen will also help during the games' Theme Day presentations each morning on Wellness Idea and Fitness Programs before the morning activities begin.

Dearen is one of 20 coaches selected for the games. He is the only Texas coach selected.

The University of Rhode Island, located in Kingston, Rhode Island, is a member of the NCAA Division.

The Rhode Island Scholar-Athlete 1995 Summer Games will serve as a Model Athletic, Cultural and Educational event to be replicated by the remaining 49 states, by 1997.

The Games will be divided into three separate programs: Sports, Cultural Exchange, and Special Events. Over 800 contestants have been selected to compete at the Games.

The Institute for International Sports will be a major leader during the games on applying major goals of exceptional performances and goodwill to all candidates appointed.

Tiger hurlers shut out Rangers, 1-0

DETROIT (AP) — When pre-season talk turned to promising young pitchers in the Detroit Tigers organization, Felipe Lira's name was rarely mentioned.

Now he's the talk of the Tigers, most recently after combining with Mike Henneman for a 1-0 blanking of the Texas Rangers on Wednesday night.

Lou Whitaker hit the first home run allowed by Bob Tewksbury this year and the Tigers made it hold up in a game taking just two hours to play, the shortest nine-inning game in the American League this year.

Lira (4-3), who has allowed just three earned runs in 21 1-3 innings over his past three starts, left after surrendering a one-out double to Juan Gonzalez in the ninth.

Henneman came on and got Mickey Tettleton and Mike Pagliarulo on groundouts for his 11th save.

Lira, who wasn't supposed to make the club this year, is 3-1 in five starts with a 2.50 ERA.

"Nobody ever talked about him," manager Sparky Anderson said. "We decided to keep him the last couple of days of spring training, and that's only because we were taking 28 players north."

Lira didn't mind that he didn't get to finish what he started Wednesday.

"We got the win," he said. "Maybe if I would've stayed in there, the next guy would've got a hit."

"That's Mike's job. He's one of the best stoppers in the major leagues."

Tewksbury (5-3) allowed nine hits in eight innings, struck out four and walked two. He was one out into his 10th start of the season and had not allowed a homer in his first 61 1-3 innings when Whitaker took him deep in the first inning.

"I just threw a fastball in and he hit it out of the ballpark," Tewksbury said. "It's pretty simple."

Whitaker pulled the 1-0 pitch high down the right-field line, and it landed just fair in Tiger Stadium's third deck.

"I'm always looking for a fastball," Whitaker said of his fifth homer.

Lira cruised until the seventh, when Pagliarulo hit a one-out single and Luis Ortiz followed with a double off the left-field wall.

Pagliarulo tried to score all the way from first. But left fielder Bobby Higginson chased down the ball after it caromed back toward the infield and threw home. Catcher John Flaherty tagged out Pagliarulo as Ortiz took third, where he was stranded when Lira got Dave Valle on an inning-ending grounder.

"The farther he had to run, the better you'd think our chance of scoring was," Rangers manager Johnny Oates said of Higginson. "It was just one of those right-on-the-money throws."

"That's a great gamble. If he doesn't make that throw you've got a run. You have to do that every time."

It was the Tigers' first 1-0 victory since Sept. 30, 1990 at Minnesota and the shortest game played in Detroit since a 1:54 contest June 29, 1982.

St. Louis and San Diego played a 1:59 game June 14, the shortest in the majors this year.

Anderson credited both starters with shortening Wednesday's game.

"If you have two guys who can pitch and not walk around out there like those two did, they'll shorten the game automatically."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's possible the Los Angeles area won't have an NFL team this season for the first time in 50 years.

It's also conceivable there will be two new stadiums in the vicinity housing teams before the turn of the century.

The Rams, who moved to Los Angeles from Cleveland in 1946, received approval from the NFL two months ago to move to St. Louis. The Rams played at the Los Angeles Coliseum from 1946-

79 and at Anaheim Stadium from 1980-94.

The Raiders might be leaving, too. There were unconfirmed reports Wednesday that managing general partner Al Davis had decided to return the team to Oakland, where it played before moving to Los Angeles in 1982.

Sports attorney Leigh Steinberg, who was head of a group trying to keep the Rams in Orange County, said the NFL opened the door to a move by the Raiders when it approved the Rams' move — "and that Al Davis was likely to have the city of Los Angeles as well as the NFL in a bargaining position down the barrel of a gun."

"If the Raiders' move occurs, it has a devastating effect on the NFL's master plan for football dominance," Steinberg said. "In essence, the league would have admitted Jacksonville, Carolina and St. Louis as new franchises at the expense of the second-largest market in the country."

The Jacksonville Jaguars and Carolina Panthers are expansion teams that play for the first time this season.

NBA players agree to labor deal

NEW YORK (AP) — The NBA and its players have a labor deal. Now the arm-twisting and lobbying begin.

And that will be at least as hard as getting a new collective bargaining agreement was. To do it, the union will have to quiet dissent from one-third of the league's players, override the influence of high-powered agents and sell the deal to 27 player representatives.

Even if the deal is approved Friday when owners and players vote, a de-certification effort launched by some of the game's most powerful agents could nullify it.

The NBA and the players association finalized their pact agreement about 9:30 p.m. Wednesday night, hours after Michael Jordan, Patrick Ewing and 15 other players filed a petition with the National Labor Relations Board to decertify the union. If the dissenting players accomplish their goal, the union would lose its authority to represent the players.

In announcing the agreement, NBA commissioner David Stern and Simon Gourdine, the union's executive director, expressed confidence the deal would be ratified.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO ISSUE CITY OF PAMPA, TEXAS, FUNDING BONDS

TAKE NOTICE that the City Commission of the City of Pampa, Texas, shall convene at 6:00 o'clock P.M. on the 25th day of July, 1995, at its regular meeting place in the City Hall, 200 W. Kingsmill, Pampa, Texas, and, during such meeting, the City Commission will consider the passage of an ordinance authorizing the issuance of funding bonds in a principal amount not to exceed $375,000 to provide for the funding and cancellation of a legal obligation and indebtedness of the City of Pampa, Texas, by the United States District Court of the Western District of Texas, Austin Division, in Cause No. A-93-CA-243-53, styled Louis David Wilkinson and Nicholas L. Forner v. City of Pampa and Glen Hackler, and to pay costs incurred in connection with the issuance of such funding bonds.

The proposed funding bonds shall bear interest at such rate or rates (fixed, floating, variable or otherwise) and not to exceed the maximum rate permitted by law at the time of issuance of the bonds) as in its discretion the City Commission shall determine and shall mature serially over a period of years, the maximum maturity date to be not later than December 31, 2005.

This notice is issued pursuant to authority and direction of the City Commission of the City of Pampa, Texas, and in accordance with the provisions of Article 2368a, V.A.T.C.S.

I really don't know if I'll ever be able to retire. Just when I think that I see a light at the end of the tunnel, along comes another obstruction that blocks my path. Last year they tore the blasted highway up and that hurt business more than I care to admit. This year it's Mother Nature and those dreadful tornadoes. I doubt if you're interested in my tale of woes but you will like my sale prices. Who say's an ill wind blows no good.
