AMARILLO — A top contractor at the Pantex nuclear plant wants a waste management subcontractor investigated for unspecified allegations of wrongdoing.

Officials confirmed Monday that Mason & Hanger-Silas Mason Co., which operates the plant for the Energy Department, is conducting the initial probe of subcontractor Battelle-Pantex. The inquiry is being done at the request of Mason & Hanger's general manager, Dr. W.A. Weinreich.

Energy Department spokesman Tom Walton says details of the allegations can't be released until the investigation is completed.

"If there's any question about it, then we could bring in outside investigators to do a full-time investigation," Walton said. "We're obligated to investigate any allegations of improper activities, especially in the waste management arena."

WHITE DEER — Candidates for the position of maintenance supervisor for the White Deer Independent School District will be interviewed Thursday during a special meeting of the White Deer school board.

The board will meet at 6:30 p.m. in the board room of the school administration building, 601 Omohundro.

The agenda calls for the candidate interviews to be followed by an executive session.

NATIONAL

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — Maine won't get a single crumb of taxes from the Girl Scouts.

Judge Donald Alexander ruled Monday that the state can't slap a 6 percent tax on the cookies the scouts sell each year to raise money. He also chastised state officials as "arbitrary and capricious" in applying the snack tax.

In 1991 the state imposed the tax on cookies, chips and candy bars. Initially, the Bureau of Taxation taxed Girl Scout cookies on the wholesale level, but backed down when challenged and returned $100,000 to the organization.

In its latest action, the state argued that the Girl Scouts must pay taxes at the retail level because they're running a major retail enterprise.

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) — A judge has ordered a manslaughter trial for a woman accused of shooting herself in the abdomen because she couldn't afford an abortion.

Kawana Ashley, 20, was six months pregnant, had a 3-year-old child and was living with her grandmother last year when she was turned away from an abortion clinic because she could not pay, authorities said.

The unemployed St. Petersburg woman reportedly told a friend that she would have to shoot herself in the belly. On March 27, she did.

Her baby girl was delivered by Caesarean section three months premature and with a bullet wound to the wrist. The child's kidneys began failing and she died 15 days later.

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — A woman has sued the Starbucks Coffee chain, claiming she was seriously injured by hot coffee that spilled from "defective and unsafe" paper cups.

Darby L. Bullivant is seeking unspecified damages in her lawsuit, which was filed Friday in state court.

She says the lids on two cups of coffee she bought in January 1994 came off because the paper cups were flawed.

Clinton freezes assets of terrorists

WASHINGTON (AP) — Outraged by the weekend suicide bombing in Israel, President Clinton today ordered the freezing of U.S. assets belonging to 12 groups and 18 people accused of undermining Middle East peace plans with terrorist acts.

The Islamic Jihad faction that claimed responsibility for the bombing that killed 19 people was cited in the executive order, which took effect after midnight. The order mentioned at least one right-wing Jewish group linked to terrorism.

Clinton's directive also seeks to prevent suspected terrorists and their organizations from getting charitable donations from U.S. sources, the White House said.

Press secretary Mike McCurry released a partial list of the groups cited in Clinton's executive order, including Islamic Jihad, Hamas, Hezbollah, the Palestine Liberation Front and Kach, the extremist Jewish group.

He said the move was part of the administration's sweeping effort to strike back at terrorists. Clinton joined world leaders deploring the bombing in Israel that left 19 Israelis dead, most of them teen-age soldiers. The two Muslim bombers were also killed.

Calling the terrorists "enemies of peace," Clinton on Sunday expressed the administration's fear that continued violence in the Middle East will thwart efforts by Israel and its Arab neighbors to make peace.

"We have reason to believe they are specifically involved in an effort to disrupt and destroy the peace process," McCurry said of the list.

McCurry said the groups and people targeted by the administration are "foreign organizations and individuals who we believe lend support to terrorist activities."

The action, taken under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, is aimed at blocking the U.S. assets of the targeted groups. The Treasury Department was notifying banks today of accounts suspected of being tied to the groups, he said.

The order would forbid financial transactions with the groups, McCurry said, and seek to restrict the flow of charitable donations to the organizations.

The FBI has been concerned for a long time that terrorist organizations have been able to collect money in the United States on a charitable basis for powdered milk and blankets but then use it to buy bazookas and weapons for criminal activity abroad.

Law enforcement officials have argued that any group designed a terrorist organization by the secretary of state should be barred from any fund-raising in this country.

The issue first arose in the late 1970s over contributions to the Irish Republican Army and only more recently applied to Middle Eastern groups.

The internal government debate over what to do was extensive because the Supreme Court has ruled that the Constitution provides substantial protection for fund-raising in this country.

One of the last times the International Emergency Economic Powers Act was extensively used was by President Jimmy Carter. While employees of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran were held hostage, Carter froze Iranian assets in the United States and barred financial transactions with Iran.

Judge Ito turns down O.J. Simpson's request to directly address jury

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The judge in the O.J. Simpson trial today turned down his request to address the jury directly during opening statements but said he could show jurors scars on his knees.

Superior Court Judge Lance Ito made the ruling with little comment, after prosecutor Marcia Clark denounced the idea as "a blatant attempt to impress the jury with his charisma and star appeal."

"The motion to allow the defendant to directly address the jury will be denied," Ito ruled. "The motion to allow him to exhibit to the jury his knee injuries or the result of the scarring and the surgeries will be allowed."

He ruled as the court took care of last-minute items before opening statements were to begin. Another item on the agenda: a defense videotape of the crime scene, and whether the jury would be allowed to see it.

Simpson made the unusual but not unprecedented request Monday, asking Ito to let him be a walking, talking court exhibit to go with his lawyers' photo blowups and charts during their introductory statements.

Defense attorney Gerald Uelmen had told Ito that Simpson wanted to introduce himself and his lawyers, and "simply reiterate his plea of not guilty."

Andy King of Wheeler 4-H, right, shows his Grand Champion steer purchased by Tejas Feeders and Carmichael-Whitley Funeral Directors. With him is Jerry Sullins of Tejas Feeders.

He argued that it would "focus the attention of the jury back where it belongs in the midst of all this hoopla — and that is on the defendant."

He said that simply restating an innocent plea is not testimony. Prosecutors had argued that a defendant shouldn't be allowed to address jurors without giving the prosecution an opportunity to cross-examine.

One defendant who spoke to her jury during opening statements was black activist Angela Davis, who was acquitted in 1972 of helping plan a courthouse escape in which a judge, two convicts and an accomplice were slain.

Davis, who received permission to be her own co-counsel, gave the entire opening statement but never testified or faced cross-examination.

The scars on his knees, which Ito is letting Simpson exhibit, would presumably illustrate how old football injuries would have hindered his ability to overpower two people and stab them to death.

Simpson's recently produced exercise video, O.J. Simpson: Minimum Maintenance Fitness for Men, shows him playing basketball, doing aerobics and performing pushups on a desk.

Juror selection continues for Skinner murder trial

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

FORT WORTH - By 11 a.m. today, no additional jurors had been chosen to join the pair selected Monday to hear evidence in the capital murder trial of Henry Watkins Skinner.

One prospective juror was excused this morning for medical reasons, said 31st Judicial District Bailiff Wayne Carter.

A white man and a black woman were chosen from the five prospective jurors interviewed Monday by attorneys for the state and defense, said Carter. The prosecution, led by District Attorney John Mann, used one strike to disqualify a juror, he said.

Henry Watkins Skinner, 32, is accused of bludgeoning to death Twila Busby, 40, and stabbing her two sons Elwin Caler, 22, and Randolph Busby Jr., 20, in their Campbell Street home on Dec. 31, 1993.

The jury selection process, called voir dire, includes interviews with prospective jurors conducted by attorneys for prosecution and defense and District Judge Kent Sims, who is hearing the case.

Three interviews are scheduled for each morning and two for each afternoon. Depending on how much time attorneys use for the voir dire questions, a sixth prospective juror may be called for an interview or fewer than the five planned daily interviews may be conducted, Carter explained.

Fourteen jurors - 12 plus two alternates - will be chosen to decide the verdict.

Skinner was held without bond in Gray County jail until his transfer to Tarrant County jail for the trial.

The trial was moved to Fort Worth on a change of venue motion filed by his Pampa defense attorneys, Harold Comer and Ken Fields.

Forecast: Texas economy to grow despite Mexico's troubles

AUSTIN (AP) — The state's economic growth over the next year will be determined in large part by the volatility of the peso in Mexico, according to Texas-based economist Ray Perryman.

Perryman said today the state stood to gain $4 billion in exports in 1995 prior to the recent devaluation of the peso in Mexico. He said the state now stands to gain $2.5 billion in exports.

"We won't see a fall in export growth, but we will see significantly lower growth," Perryman said.

The peso has plunged 39 percent against the dollar since Dec. 20. Ensnuing investor flight sent the Mexican stock and bond markets hurtling downward.

Perryman said 40 percent of the state's exports are tied to Mexico.

"Our trade is very concentrated, which says that the great economic success we have had lately is pretty fragile," he said. "If Mexico were to suddenly go into the tank, we would have some real problems economically."

Perryman said he believes Congress will approve some type of package to help stabilize the peso.

The Clinton administration has proposed a $40 billion loan-guarantee package, which is under fire in the Congress.

The loans would back new debt securities that the Mexican government would issue to foreign investors to replace $28 billion in dollar-linked bonds coming due this year.

Russians unleash barrages

GROZNY, Russia (AP) - Russian troops unleashed fierce artillery barrages today against Chechen positions in Grozny, while Chechnya's president said no more Russian POWs would be released until a cease-fire was signed.

Lightly armed Chechen separatists tried to hold their positions in Grozny with hit-and-run attacks, but Russian officials said the resistance consisted of "small independent groups of fighters who have no interaction."

From their positions near Grozny's railway station, the Russians let loose an all-night barrage on the southern part of the city with artillery, mine launchers and mortars.

"The Chechens could only long for such weapons."

"I wish I had a sniper's rifle," said one rebel fighter, Magomet Abdugapov, after sneaking behind Russian lines to harass enemy positions. "I could have cracked them in the nose."

In an interview on Echo Moscow radio today, Chechen leader Dzhokhar Dudayev said he was in Grozny and described the ruined city as "a layer cake," with Chechen and Russian forces overlapping.

"Russian troops don't control anything - they have just accumulated in various spots and are surrounded everywhere," he said.

Dudayev said he had heard that his son Avtur had been killed, but he had much more to think about than that.

"Such (outstanding) sons have been killed here that my heart aches remembering them," he said. "I have 30,000 innocent victims among civilians, and I can't think about Avtur. My heart goes out to those miserable people whom I was not able to defend."

Witnesses in Grozny said at least six civilians were killed by a mortar attack Monday while waiting in a bread line.

Some Russian POWs have been returned, but Dudayev said no more should be set free until a cease-fire is signed.

"There's a war going on," he said. "We're not a peace organization."

A group of Russian soldiers' mothers, meanwhile, tried for a third time to make it into Grozny on Monday in hopes of retrieving their POW sons. They got to southern Grozny but had to turn back because of an artillery bombardment.

Crowd protests abortion ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) - Violence at women's health clinics was on the minds of demonstrators who rallied and marched to protest the 22nd anniversary of Roe vs. Wade, the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

"Violent attacks on the abortion clinics recently set us back because it mixes the message. This is a cause for life," the Rev. Tom Petteri of St. Francis Preparatory School in Fresh Meadows, N.Y., said Monday, flanked by a knot of students.

"I don't think that these little hiccups with violence will affect the overall trend," Bob Whitlock of Huntsville, Ala., said at Monday's demonstration and march to the Supreme Court. "I think we're going in a positive direction; it's just going awful slow."

"I'm very much against violence," said Randi Grantham of West Palm Beach, Fla., a sculptor who wore four baby-shaped grenades pinned to his jacket and waved a baby-shaped gun he had carved himself. "This is more theatrical than anything."

Nellie Gray, organizer of Monday's "March for Life," said some had urged her to cancel the event to cool emotions and prevent more violence at clinics that provide abortions.

"Now you know I wasn't going to cancel this," she told the rally, sparking cheers. "The babies need us and the mothers need us."

Four people were killed and six wounded at shootings at abortion clinics last year in the United States and Canada. In response, the Justice Department posted U.S. marshals at clinics around the country.

Gray blamed legal abortions for violence throughout society.

"The violence of intentionally killing 'pre-born' children ... has brought the violence of intentionally killing a born human being," she said.

Gray estimated the crowd at the rally at 100,000, but U.S. Park Police put the number at about 45,000.

Anti-abortion members of Congress assured the crowd that the new Republican majorities in the House and the Senate would be helpful to their cause.

"I'm a new member of Congress, a member of a new majority who is there to serve the people - born and unborn - in the Congress of the United States," said Rep. Bob Barr, a freshman Republican from Georgia.

He also proclaimed that the new Congress is "the most pro-life in modern memory."

"We need to make very, very sure that abortion is never considered a health care service," said Rep. Roscoe Bartlett, R-Md.

Rep. Steve Stockman, R-Texas, borrowed from the gay rights movement when he said he thought he should "come out of the closet."

"I'm here. I'm pro-life. Get used to it," he said.

After the rally, demonstrators streamed into the street, chanting, "Pro-choice is a lie. Babies don't choose to die" and "Rejoice, rejoice, my mom was not pro-choice."

At the Supreme Court, a line of police officers - some in riot helmets - stood behind barricades blocking the steps. But the demonstration was peaceful.

Some protesters knelt and prayed in small groups on the sidewalk, while others sang hymns or shouted slogans. A pair of demonstrators propped up a 30-foot-high poster of an aborted fetus. A man dressed as a surgeon carried a chain of red-painted broken dolls and posed for pictures.

Clinton to give State of Union address tonight

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton stands before Congress tonight with the promise of a leaner, kinder government, a growing job market, a safer world — and with hopes of winning back voters who deserted him after his last State of the Union address.

Working in his study most of the day Monday, the president prepared an address that aides predicted would welcome Republican cooperation whenever possible on a line-item veto, reduced bureaucracy, immigration control, and welfare and campaign finance reform.

But he will be combative — defending a few pet projects, resisting intrusions on foreign policy and accusing the Republicans of threatening the poor with some of their welfare reform plans, aides said.

Few new programs or ideas will be unveiled, with the most likely exception being a proposed increase in the $4.25-an-hour minimum wage. Aides said Clinton has decided to seek a rate of $5 an hour over two years, but he won't spend much time on the idea in the nationally broadcast speech, scheduled for 8 p.m. CST.

Sure to draw GOP opposition, a minimum wage increase is viewed in the White House as a way "to try to keep people interested in work rather than in welfare." Chief of Staff Leon Panetta told Fox TV today.

"So, I wouldn't be surprised if the president would address at least the theory of protecting the minimum wage in his speech," he said. Proposing a higher rate would please the liberal wing of Clinton's party, at a time when he is trying to cast himself as a moderate.

Republicans argue the wage increase would cost teenagers jobs, and question whether Clinton can work with them on the sweeping centrist agenda he is promising.

"The fact is, the minimum wage is a very destructive thing — especially to people's job opportunities at the lower end of the job spectrum," House Majority Leader Dick Armey said today on Fox. "We have a proven history of minimum wage increases in eliminating ... low wage jobs. That works very, very perniciously against the ability of the unskilled, untrained, inexperienced worker getting their start in life."

One year ago, Clinton stood at the House lectern, waved a pen at a Democratic-controlled Congress and bravely vowed to veto any health care legislation that didn't suit him. "We will make history," he declared, "by reforming the health care system."

The political environment today is drastically different: Republicans are now in charge, massive health care reform is no longer in the script, and the focus will be on the political future of the president, not one piece of legislation.

To keep his re-election hopes alive, Clinton must begin tonight convincing voters that he learned from the November Republican landslide.

"There is a lot of uncertainty out there. There's a lot of anger. There's a lot of frustration," Panetta said Monday. "We saw it in the election. We continue to see some of that in the polls."

To stem the slide, Clinton hopes to recapture the themes of his 1992 campaign, arguing once again that he is a new Democrat, not an old tax-and-spend liberal.

He will promote what the White House calls "A New Economy," promise more "New Government," building on Vice President Al Gore's initiative to rethink the way taxpayer money is spent; and dust off the "New Covenant" theme, which promises a commitment between a caring government and its responsible citizenry.

Outgoing Texas Insurance Commissioner Rebecca Lightsey, right, visits with Elton Bomer, Gov. George W. Bush's nominee to replace her, before they testify to a Senate subcommittee Monday in Austin.

Lightsey to step down early as insurance commissioner

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. George W. Bush's nominee for insurance commissioner is praising the current commissioner for her decision to hand over the reins early.

Commissioner Rebecca Lightsey says she will resign Friday, five days before her term expires, to allow the Senate to act on the nomination of Elton Bomer.

"I thought it was gracious of her to step down," Bomer said Monday. "It does give the Senate an opportunity to act and confirm if they want to ... because before, there wasn't a vacant seat so they couldn't consider confirmation."

Ms. Lightsey also canceled a hearing scheduled for today on proposed changes to automobile insurance rates.

"It is now imperative that the transition go forward quickly and that Mr. Bomer be given sufficient lead time to prepare for the rate hearings and to acquaint himself with the workings of this office," Ms. Lightsey said in a written statement.

Bush spokeswoman Karen Hughes said "it's probably for the best" that Ms. Lightsey is resigning early and that she canceled the auto rate hearing.

"We had requested that Commissioner Lightsey refrain from taking any major action ... during the transition period," Ms. Hughes said.

Lightsey was appointed by former Gov. Ann Richards to fill out the term of J. Robert Hunter, who resigned in December.

Earlier this month, Lightsey angered the industry and stepped on Bush's toes when she adopted anti-discrimination rules for Texas insurers. Bush had asked her to hold off until her term expires.

"In my limited time here, my priority has been to work to assure that Texas citizens and businesses have fair access to the insurance necessary for their economic well-being," she said. "The anti-discrimination rules ... are an important step in providing consumers who have been denied access to fair insurance with the protection they deserve."

Jerry Johns, president of the Southwestern Insurance Information Service, said Lightsey "made a responsible and prudent decision" by postponing action on the auto rate proposals.

"At a time when state government is going through a transition, it seems logical that decisions of this magnitude be left for a new commissioner to consider," Johns said.

John Hildreth, of Consumers Union, said Lightsey's action "reflects her desire for a smooth transition at the department."

State announces its ag game plan for 21st century

By JEAN PAGEL
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK (AP) — Experts in agriculture say the future looks like this: Technology, global markets, fine-tuned crops.

"To make the yield gains now will take research," sorghum breeder Gary Peterson said. "You're dealing in a dynamic ecosystem."

Peterson and his colleagues at the Texas A&M Research and Extension Center northeast of Lubbock run a gamut of labs and greenhouses that test the way sorghum tolerates drought and disease. Their studies aim to enhance the grain's resiliency and export potential.

Such research forms a cornerstone of what Texas Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry hopes will shape this state's farming future.

Perry this week will announce a blueprint that reaches from nutritionists to financiers in an attempt to better coordinate Texas agriculture. His plan encompasses response to consumers and private ventures with government.

"Texas is uniquely situated — geographically, politically, natural resource-wise — to go into this 21st century prepared," Perry said last week while unveiling the plan to reporters. "We will be working together the way Texas agriculture has never worked together before."

Perry plans to outline the proposals, beginning today, during economic conferences in Austin, Dallas and Houston. He proposes five initiatives:

— Texas Agribusiness Research

Promotion Council, to eliminate duplicated research and solicit additional funding. The council will compile a business recruitment portfolio from the state's research capabilities.

— Food Technology Information Team, to dispel rumors and to educate retailers and consumers about food safety.

— Business Structure and Training Program, to help broaden financial options.

— Connect the Links, to reduce the misunderstandings among producers, processors, shippers and retailers within a specific market.

— Trade missions abroad, to promote Texas crops. The inaugural trip, to France and Israel, is slated for September.

Perry predicted the initiatives would strengthen rural Texas. But he emphasized agriculture's evolution from a way of life, to a global business that Texas is poised to lead.

"As good as we've been in the past, we're going to have to be even better," he said. "We will have to take more risks."

Sam Curl, dean of agricultural sciences at Texas Tech University, applauded the idea of more coordination and publicity for research.

"We simply have to run agriculture like a business," Curl said. "Margins are not so great that we can afford anything less than that."

The agriculture department said the initiatives Perry proposes will require no statutory changes or new appropriations.

He described agriculture as the industry to "make or break Texas" next century. It was time for a game plan, he said.

Japanese Cabinet declares Kobe a disaster zone

KOBE, Japan (AP) — A week after an earthquake devastated Kobe, the Cabinet shouldered huge rebuilding costs today by declaring the once-vibrant city a disaster zone.

Opposition lawmakers assailed the government of Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama for its slow response to the Jan. 17 quake, which killed more than 5,000 people.

"What were you thinking of?" opposition delegate Akira Kuroyama screamed at the prime minister in an emotional parliament session. He demanded Murayama apologize to the nation "for the suffering of the people."

Murayama did not apologize but said the government would spare no effort to improve disaster preparedness. The Finance Ministry unveiled a series of tax breaks for quake victims based on their income and property losses.

As the government came under attack for its response to the earthquake, a newspaper reported a lack of communication and coordination in the key early hours following the quake.

Aftershocks jolted Kobe today, including one measuring 3.6. Buildings swayed and glass shattered, but there were no reports of major damage or injuries.

The aftershocks gave new urgency to the task of demolishing heavily damaged structures, some apparently on the verge of collapse. Police roped off areas around precarious buildings to keep pedestrians away.

Japan's Kyodo News Service reported that nearly half of the 3,936 dead who have been identified were more than 60 years old. They included two men aged 103 and 100, the agency said.

City officials said the dead included at least 142 foreigners, most of them Koreans and Chinese.

The overall toll from the quake stood at 5,063 dead and 68 missing. The government said 26,500 people were injured and at least 56,000 buildings were damaged or destroyed.

The Cabinet declared Kobe a disaster zone today — agreeing, in essence, to foot up to 90 percent of the bill for rebuilding public facilities such as railways, roads, ports, and schools.

Kosaku Inaba, head of the Japan Chamber of Commerce, said the overall cost of the quake to the nation's economy would amount to more than $100 billion.

Foster parent sentenced for sexual assault

BEAUMONT (AP) — A man who had been honored as the state's best foster parent has been sentenced to 30 years in prison for sexually assaulting a teenage girl who had been placed in his care after she was sexually abused in her own home.

Cleveland Lenord Casmire, 46, of Port Arthur, was sentenced Monday by District Judge Charles Carver after he pleaded guilty last Oct. 24 to aggravated sexual assault of a child.

Authorities said the 13-year-old girl and another foster child, a 10-year-old girl, were living with Casmire and his wife when the assault occurred June 7, 1993.

A pre-sentence report quoted the girl as saying Casmire began fondling her in March 1992 and continued until June 1993. She said Casmire had sexual intercourse with her several times.

Marion Tanner of Child Protective Services said the girl was reluctant to speak up about the offense because even though she was being sexually assaulted, she felt the Casmire home was "the first place she felt secure."

CPS spokesman Ranny Voight said Casmire was a foster parent for 5 1/2 years and that Casmire and his wife were among three area couples the Texas Department of Human Resources honored in 1993 as Foster Parents of the Year.

Prosecutor Wayln Thompson said he was pleased with the sentence.

"I think that crimes of that nature call for stiff sentences," he said.

Two pastors wrote to the judge praising Casmire's character and asking that he be given probation.

"His family needs him and the church needs him," said A.W. Scott, pastor of the House of Refuge Church of God in Christ, where Casmire was a member and a trustee.

Clayton E. Davis, pastor of Saints Center Church of God in Beaumont, described Casmire as "dependable, honest and exceedingly trustworthy."

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Homeless stats are exaggerated

Statistics that overstate homelessness are hardly new: they're a fixture of appeals for more government intervention and can be counted on to work their way into ritual news coverage of the homeless around the holidays.

What's more disturbing, though, is when seemingly credible scholars weigh in with statistical manipulations of their own in an attempt to give the seasonal homeless "crisis" more credibility. Such was the case with the release of a new Columbia University study purporting that some 13.5 million Americans have been homeless in the conventional sense (living in shelters or on the streets) for at least a few days at some point in their lives. Moreover, the study asserts, fully 26 million Americans have experienced "some form of" homelessness in their lives. Sigh.

Such flagrant disregard for reality is hardly becoming of those who bill themselves as professional researchers.

To begin with, counting all of the people who have ever been homeless is as relevant to homelessness as assessing all those who have ever been jobless is to unemployment - or how many people who have ever had the flu are to the state of the nation's health. As well, the Columbia study - in surveying 1,507 adults and asking if they recalled ever being homeless - could at its logical limits include almost all of us, from students looking for apartments just before the new semester to well-heeled professionals scouting out new homes after changing jobs.

Real homelessness is indeed a problem and certainly merits human compassion as well as a voluntary helping hand. But no credible reckoning of the number of Americans out on the streets can make the case for a massive mobilization of government, tax-funded efforts to rescue the homeless.

On the contrary, myriad nonprofit organizations, often using only private contributions, can and do attend to the physical, psychological, emotional and spiritual needs of the nation's 400,000 homeless who have been estimated by the Census Bureau to exist at any one time.

The Columbia study's accompanying editorial insists that the findings debunk the notion that "homelessness is an aberration affecting Americans who have distinct personal histories or who are situated on the fringes of society." Actually, that is precisely how to characterize much of the nation's homeless. The hardcore homeless are disproportionately the victims, not of society or our economy, but of mental illness or their own substance abuse. These people need help and, to the extent that they accept it, they typically get it. Sure, misery loves company, but finessing their numbers only deceives the rest of us.

MID-COURSE CORRECTION?

The majority rule in Congress

Congressional Republicans, who have been known to castigate Democrats for disdaining the lessons of history and circumventing the intent of our founding fathers, spent all of 20 minutes in debate earlier this month before proceeding to overturn two centuries of congressional practice and a central principle of the U.S. Constitution: majority rule. For a party so sure it owns a mandate from the people, the GOP shows a strange distrust of democracy.

One of the first acts in the 104th Congress was a vote engineered by Newt Gingrich - isn't everything engineered by Newt Gingrich? - changing the rules of the House of Representatives to require a three-fifths majority to pass any increase in personal or corporate income tax rates. A simple majority of the House can have its way if the issue is something trivial - declaring war, impeaching the president, quadrupling the national debt or legalizing crack. But for the tiniest increase in the income tax rate applied to any person or corporation, a "super-majority" must consent.

House Republicans believe this change is within their powers because the Constitution explicitly says that "each house may determine the rules of its proceedings." Since the Constitution does not ever stipulate that bills should be passed by a majority vote, Gingrich and Co. think they may set the threshold higher if they want.

This is absurd. Some things are too obvious to mention, and the right of the majority in a legislative body to pass laws was one of them. When the framers wanted to depart from that custom, they knew how to do it - by insisting on a two-thirds majority vote to amend the Constitution or override a presidential veto, for instance. They also allowed that the vice president, who presides over the Senate, "shall have no vote, unless they be equally divided" - that is, unless his vote is needed to form a majority.

Stephen Chapman

If this House can insist on a super-majority for some bills, could another House require unanimity? Could it demand a super-majority to repeal any law? Could it allow legislation to pass with just two-fifths approval? Or refuse to count the votes of any member from east of the Mississippi? Anyone named "Newt"? Once you abandon the presumptions that have governed House deliberations for 200 years, anything goes.

Gingrich's supporters say the majority can still prevail anytime it wants, since the rule can be waived by a simple majority vote. In that case, though, the 60 percent requirement would be ridiculously easy to evade. So why bother having it in the first place?

But 12 law professors (including Bruce Ackerman and Akhil Amar of Yale, David Strauss and Cass Sunstein of the University of Chicago and Michael Perry of Northwestern) wrote Gingrich arguing that "this claim is simply false." Suspending the rules requires a two-thirds vote - and the speaker can "refuse to recognize a motion to suspend the rules even if two-thirds wished to allow the majority to have its say."

Allowing the majority to have its say is becoming a novelty in what is supposed to be a democracy. While the House was erecting a new barrier to majority rule, the Senate was preserving an old one: the filibuster.

This device, which is supposed to assure the right of the minority to debate an issue as long as necessary for an informed decision, has become a routine trick for the minority to frustrate the majority. Since you need 60 votes to end debate, you effectively need 60 votes to pass anything consequential. A single senator can foil 59 colleagues representing a clear public consensus, just by threatening a filibuster.

This procedure, unlike Gingrich's super-majority rule, does have a long history behind it. But originally, it was reserved for the most weighty national issues. There were only 16 filibusters in the entire 19th century. By contrast, the threat was used 90 times during the 1980s alone - and at the current rate, it will be used twice that often during the 1990s. What was tolerable in small doses becomes poisonous in large ones.

What is being poisoned is our democratic system. The founders didn't want pure democracy, of course, which is why they split Congress into two houses and gave both the president and the judiciary a say in the fate of all legislation. It's also why they included a Bill of Rights.

But the checks and balances they created ought to be adequate without inventing more that they didn't want. In the Federalist Papers, James Madison warned that under super-majority requirements, "the fundamental principle of free government would be reversed. It would be no longer the majority that would rule: the power would be transferred to the minority."

Republicans could come to feel differently about the filibuster if the Democrats use it as promiscuously against the repeal of laws as the Republicans have against the passage of laws. Then they may see the folly of letting the few habitually overrule the many. Rule by the majority has flaws, but not as many as rule by the minority.

Putting nukes on the table

Bill Clinton doesn't need it, but the Egyptians, of all people, are preparing a little foreign policy crisis for the president in 1995.

The Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty expires and must be re-signed and, according to an article published in the Israeli press, the Egyptian foreign minister has been urging Third World countries to decline to sign the nonproliferation treaty unless Israel also signs it.

The Israeli article suggested the United States should pressure Egypt to stop, and since Clinton does whatever the Israelis tell him to do, I assume U.S. pressure is already being felt in Cairo.

Perhaps, however, the Egyptians won't buckle. After all, they are right. Israel, which is a nuclear power and which has never signed the nonproliferation treaty, should lay its nukes on the table. And, most of all, the U.S. government, which seems to be terrified of even talking about Israel's nuclear weapons, should stop acting like a baby and address the issue openly.

Everybody knows Israel has nukes and has refused to sign the treaty. Books have been written about its nuclear program. Newspaper articles have been published. Individual Israelis have spilled the beans about it, but just try to get a U.S. official to comment.

Charley Reese

I asked one career foreign service officer about it in an off-the-record meeting and his reply was, "This is a subject I will not comment on." That's ridiculous. Why should American officials act as if the world would collapse if they mention Israel's nuclear weapons program?

Well, actually, there is a reason. Mainly it exposes our government's hypocrisy on the nonproliferation treaty. Presumably our moral position is that no nation that doesn't have nukes should get them. Clinton practically suggested going to war with North Korea over its nuclear program, and certainly Iraq's nuclear research was a factor in George Bush's decision to bomb the bejabbars out of that country.

But, of course, it was Israel that introduced weapons of mass destruction into the Middle East equation. The Iraqi program was a reaction to Israel's nuclear program. Ditto the pursuit of chemical warfare by the Middle East countries. Thus, by remaining silent on the subject of the Israeli nukes, the United States looks both hypocritical and ridiculous in the eyes of the world.

The United States should tell Israel to get rid of its nuclear weapons and sign the nonproliferation treaty. It should tell Israel what some of Israel's military men have already told the government - that Israel is too small a country to play the nuclear game.

If it got down to a nuclear exchange, Iran, with 65 million people dispersed over 632,457 square miles, could probably take 20 hits and survive as a nation. Israel, with its small population just over 5 million jammed into only 7,992 square miles, couldn't survive three hits. And Saddam Hussein demonstrated that even fairly primitive missiles can strike the Israeli heartland despite the best efforts of the world's remaining superpower to prevent it.

It's Israel's nukes that are holding up peace with Syria. The Israelis want the Syrians to get rid of their missiles, and the Syrians are saying no unless Israel gets rid of its nukes. The nukes have made Israel less secure, not more.

If the Egyptians can force Clinton to face the question of Israel's nuclear weapons, they will be doing the world a favor and furthering the cause of true nonproliferation.

Let's look beyond abortion politics

When a lone person commits a horrific act, it is often hard to respond. The feeling isn't quite outrage. Outrage is what you feel when you hear about a large company spewing toxic waste in your neighborhood or a politician embezzling public funds.

No, it's closer to the way you feel when you hear about a terrible earthquake or a raging flood. There is fear, and there is despair. Something terrible has happened, something that could happen again, something you cannot control.

On Dec. 30 a man opened fire on two Boston abortion clinics, killing two and wounding five. The next day bullets flew at a Norfolk, Va., abortion clinic, and John Salvi III was arrested and charged with these crimes.

Salvi has been described as "just an oddball," a "loner," someone who "looked like he was ready to go off." He is a man who hung a picture of an aborted fetus in his pickup truck. A man who piled furniture in front of his windows to block the ocean view. A man whose mother made him get a perm.

It's easy to dismiss Salvi's alleged killing spree as an aberration, something that could not have been prevented.

But we'll never know for sure if that's the case, just as we'll probably never know whether the gunman at the Boston clinics acted alone or not. (Police investigators are wondering just how one person managed to accomplish the shootings in such a short time without anyone seeing him flee the scene in a car.)

What we do know is that in the eyes of many radical anti-abortion activists, Salvi is now a hero. "We love you," shouted Pro-Life Virginia's Donald

Sara Eckel

Spitz into a megaphone outside the prison where Salvi awaits trial. "Thank you for what you have done in the name of Jesus."

"Salvi deserves a medal," pro-lifer Andrew Cabot told the Sunday News in Manchester, N.H. "He's a hero."

Such praise, such adulation - exactly the kind of thing a lonely, mentally imbalanced religious zealot might seek. A reason to live, a reason to die, a reason to kill.

Some anti-abortion groups have condemned the murders. "We are very eager to do whatever we can ... not to glorify these people," National Right to Life Committee President Wanda Franz told USA Today. "The pro-life movement is driven by biblical morality and these acts are clearly contrary to the teachings of scripture," Robert Shenck of the National Clergy Council said in a statement.

Even Rev. Pat Mahoney, former spokesman for the anti-abortion group Operation Rescue, has begun to doubt some of the tactics of the pro-life movement. "I am rethinking my position," he said after the killings. "There may be a link between advocating the use of force and people acting on it."

Cardinal Bernard Law, head of the Catholic Church in Massachusetts, has gone a step further. To the dismay of some pro-lifers, the cardinal has not only condemned the shootings, but also called for an end to protests in front of abortion clinics. He is also working with William Weld, Massachusetts pro-life governor, to convene a negotiating session between pro-life and pro-choice advocates, according to the journal Abortion Report.

"Maybe it's an impossible dream," said Law, "but I wouldn't be surprised if there were some allies. The rhetoric needs to be cooled down."

As Law obviously understands, the people who have the most power to keep abortion-clinic violence at bay are not the police, or the federal government, or the pro-choice organizations. The best way to contain the growing number of crazies who invade abortion clinics is for abortion opponents to send a strong message that one cannot advocate life by taking life. That killing abortion providers will lead to scorn, not praise.

Cardinal Law should be applauded for his willingness to overlook the politics of abortion in the interest of the cause anti-abortion activists claim is theirs, life. The pro-life organizations who denounce these killings deserve a nod, too. Hopefully, their works will discourage other loose cannons from trying to become a "hero."

Unfortunately for Shannon Lowncy and Leeann Nicols, the two women killed in the shootings, the words didn't come soon enough.

Middle school elects mayor and vice mayor

Last Friday, Pampa Middle School students elected a mayor and vice mayor to lead the student council for the spring semester. The new mayor is Lori Lindsey (left), the daughter of Tom and Suzie Lindsey, and the new vice mayor is Amanda Johnson, the daughter of Jim and Glenda Anderson. They were elected by a majority of the sixth, seventh and eighth grade students of the middle school. Their goals are to increase student, parent and teacher participation in middle school activities, build up school spirit and student pride and provide leadership to accomplish these goals through dress up days, booster sales, poster contests, and renewed enthusiasm for athletics, band, choir, and all other school activities. Also new homeroom officers were elected to make up the student council for the second semester.

Couples married in common law entitled to same benefits as ceremonial marriages

Today, more than three million men and women live together without the benefit of a marriage ceremony. In some cases, their co-habitation may become common-law marriage and they could be entitled to the same Social Security benefits as couples who have had ceremonial marriages performed. A common-law marriage is one which was solemnized by either a religious or civil ceremony, but in certain states, may be entered into by the mutual agreement by a man and woman to be married. Other states recognize common-law marriages up to a date in the past. If a claimant can establish that a common-law marriage was entered into before that date, entitlement as a common-law spouse is permitted. Most states — even those in which a man and woman could not enter into a valid common-law marriage — will recognize a common-law marriage validly entered into in another state. For Social Security purposes, the basic requirements for a valid common-law marriage are both parties must (1) be legally capable of marrying each other; and (2) agree to become husband and wife in a state which permits nonceremonial marriages. Evidence to prove a common-law marriage include a statement from each and a statement from a blood relative of each. If either of the parties are dead, then a statement from two blood relatives of the decedent are needed. The statements required by the husband, wife and relatives must be made on special forms that are available in any Social Security office. Evidence such as mortgage receipts, bank records, insurance policies, etc., may be required to show that the couple considered themselves husband and wife. While Social Security follows state law, couples can be considered married under the "sojourn doctrine." The sojourn doctrine stipulates that if a couple travels as husband and wife and holds themselves out as such in a state which recognizes common-law marriages, a common-law marriage may arise under the law of the state they are visiting. Those who are interested in more information regarding Social Security and common-law marriages should contact their local Social Security office.

New modern art museum opens in San Francisco

By JAMES O. CLIFFORD
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — With an imposing five-story museum that has just opened in the city, San Francisco leaps into second place to New York in the amount of space devoted to modern art. Designed by architect Mario Botta, the $62 million San Francisco Museum of Modern Art is the latest addition to a redevelopment area that 25 years ago was reduced to rubble and naked foundations. The 225,000-square-foot building, topped by a massive skylight, looks like a ship run aground south of Market Street, San Francisco's main thoroughfare. "The building is a work of art itself," spokeswoman Sandra Farish Sloan said as she guided reporters on a preview tour. The skylight that juts through the intricately patterned brick-panel exterior dominates the interior as well. Visitors enter a luxurious atrium lobby space that soars toward the skylight, 145 feet above. A monumental staircase rises to the museum's five exhibition levels. Sloan wore a gray vest and black pants on the tour, color-coordinated with the alternating gray and black granite floor. It made the perfect setting for an exhibition of William Klein's black and white photos of New York in the 1950s, one of the exhibits set up for the opening. Rays of natural light flooded through the skylight. "We can cut the amount of natural light entering a room if marginal light is needed for an exhibit," Sloan explained. A 38-foot-long bridge, 75 feet above the main floor, lets visitors enter the fifth floor gallery, affording a spectacular view of the atrium lobby below and the skylight above. The atrium walls are paneled with large squares of finely textured Nordic birch. Slender maple slats adorn parts of the ceiling. In addition to the Klein show, the new museum's visitors will be able to see highlights of the permanent collection, including works by Henri Matisse, Paul Klee, Diego Rivera, Jackson Pollock, Andy Warhol and sculptor Richard Serra. The new building, which provides space for the museum's 15,000 works of art, replaces the previous quarters in the War Memorial Veterans Building, opened 60 years ago. The new museum's 225,000 square feet of floor space house a theater, workshops, offices and storage space. The total of 50,000 square feet for exhibits can be expanded to 75,000 feet with an addition in the rear. In contrast, the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York has 25,000 square feet of exhibition space, as does the Museum of Contemporary Art in Los Angeles. Only Manhattan's Museum of Modern Art, which dates back to the 1930s, offers more viewing space, with more than 100,000 square feet of galleries.

Grant provides for analysis of historic estate

PRAIRIE DU CHIEN, Wis. (AP) — A thousand historic photographs are helping architects restore a 124-year-old Victorian estate on the Mississippi River. The Villa Louis, one of the oldest nationally registered landmarks, has operated as a historic-house museum since the 1930s. It was built by the family of Hercules Dousman, who rose to prominence during the early 19th-century fur-trading era.

The Jeffris Family Foundation in Janesville awarded a $40,000 grant for restoration planning of the mansion that became the State Historical Society of Wisconsin's first historic site in 1952. The grant will pay for studies to complete a master plan for a mansion and office building on the estate. Three generations of the Dousman family occupied the estate and established and maintained a large archive of family records, photographs and other documents. The photographs document wallpaper, carpets, furniture and other decorations present during the mid-1890s. More than 85 percent of the exhibited furnishings and accessories are original to the house. Work is expected to begin this winter and continue through July.

Wildlife watching — month by month

By JAMES E. WALTERS
For AP Special Features

In a world dominated by man-made, artificial time, Ben Guterson sees it as a grievous mistake to ignore nature's own timing. "It is a wonderful thing to rediscover these more fundamental cycles, to directly experience a world impelled not by our wrist-watches but by such things as temperature and length of day," he says. In "A Seasonal Guide to the Natural Year," he has compiled a fascinating, month-by-month tour of the rhythm of days and seasons in Arizona, New Mexico, Utah and Colorado (Fulcrum Publishing, 336 pages, $15.95). Each chapter provides an in-depth look at natural events from wildlife watching to wildflower spotting. Guterson is a high school English teacher who lives on the Navajo reservation in northwestern New Mexico. His guide emphasizes when to go as much as where to go because "nature reveals herself throughout the year in an astonishing variety of guises, all delicately in tune with the season." He lists among the monthly highlights: January: Desert bighorn sheep are difficult to see most of the year but this month is outstanding for spotting them in the Kofa National Wildlife Refuge near Yuma, Ariz. Also, the Colorado River marshlands to the north are a major wintering site for many waterfowl. February: Spring comes early to the desert as trees and flowers begin to bloom and reptiles emerge from winter barrows. A special treat is Arizona's Grand Canyon when snow doesn't make the roads too dangerous for travel. March: The most colorful show starts among the desert wildflowers. Guterson recommends the 42-mile drive along U.S. 89 between Tucson, Ariz., and Phoenix or the road to Kitt Peak National Astronomy Observatory west of Tucson. April: The roadrunner birds are best seen from early morning to early afternoon in lower elevations of Arizona and New Mexico. He lists as an outstanding spot the 4-mile road into Oliver Lee Memorial State Park just outside Alamogordo, N.M. Sabino Canyon near Tucson also is recommended. May: More than 100 million ladybugs per acre gather in certain mountain areas "so thickly it seems as if an electric red mist has descended." Listed as hot spots are Signal Peak east of Phoenix, the Pinaleno mountains northeast of Tucson and Sandia Crest east of Albuquerque, N.M. June: While the saguaro cactus is the preeminent symbol of Arizona, it takes years to mature and is about 75 when it grows its first arm. Saguaro National Park near Tucson is the place to see them flowering now. Carlsbad Caverns National Park in southeastern New Mexico draws hundreds of people nightly to see millions of bats stream out of the cave. July: The West is visited regularly by 15 species of hummingbirds and Madera Canyon in Arizona's southeastern corner features all of them. Rocky Mountain wildflowers are at their peak through August, and Colorado's Yankee Boy Basin is spectacular now. Also great are Utah's Wasatch Mountains. August: Kokanee salmon spawning in the Rockies. While sockeye salmon are better known, the red kokanee are common in mountain lakes and begin migrating upstream this month. Two good spots are Little Bear River and Sheep Creek Geological Loop in northern Utah. September: The bugling of mature elk resounds through Rocky Mountain National Park in Colorado. New Mexico's Brantley Lake is a great place to watch migrating white pelicans. October: Guterson says it would be difficult to find an autumn drive more scenic than the quaking aspens along the Nebo Loop Byway south of Salt Lake City. November: Golden eagles can be spotted around Maxwell National Wildlife Refuge in New Mexico, Arizona's Sulphur Springs Valley, Utah's Bear River Migratory Bird Refuge and Colorado's Mesa Verde National Park. Snow geese arrive in wetland areas. December: One of the best places to see wintering birds, from tiny wrens to waterfowl to eagles, is the Nature Conservancy's Patagonia-Sonoita Creek Preserve in southern Arizona.

Bus survey shows elderly, disabled are poorly served

NEW YORK (AP) — City bus drivers largely ignore federal law requiring them to make sure that old and disabled people have smooth sailing on public transit, according to the city's public advocate. Mark Green said a survey of bus routes throughout the city showed nearly two out of three drivers failed to announce major intersections and transfer points and 58 percent didn't stop riders from taking seats reserved for the aged or handicapped. More than half the 400 people surveyed reported having to wait more than 10 minutes for late buses. A number of riders also said they would be more likely to use buses if there were benches at bus stops. Transit spokesman Jared Lebow did not take issue with the findings and said the city's 8,500 drivers were being educated about the requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act.

Postage hike gets woman's considered stamp of approval

DEAR ABBY: Oh, brother — here we go again. Another increase in U.S. postage! Has it been only four years since the last one? Don't you think it's outrageous to charge 32 cents to send a letter? I can remember when you could get a postcard for a penny!

I considered protesting the hike in postage by delivering my local mail personally, so I got in the car and drove 15 miles to our utilities payment center. As I was standing in line waiting to pay, I thought about how I had just spent $1.26 for gas and an hour of my time; so next time, I'll just put a 32-cent stamp on it and drop it in the mailbox.

Then I called the airlines and asked how much I'd have to pay for a round-trip ticket to deliver this letter to you in person. The price ranged between $600 and $900 — so I thought I'd put a 32-cent stamp on it instead.

Maybe 32 cents to mail a letter isn't so bad after all.

DEAR G. JOHNSON: Postmaster General Marvin T. Runyon Jr. was quoted in the Los Angeles Times as saying that he already had fielded several objections to the Nixon stamp.

He explained that traditionally every president is honored with a stamp after his death, and he had no intention of changing tradition by denying the Nixon family the honor of having his picture on a postage stamp.

The McLean girls last Friday night ended the non-district season on a high note by defeating Higgins, 67-52.

Heather Hess led McLean's scoring attack with 21 points while Angel Harris added 17.

The Tigerettes' 8-11 record is the best non-district mark among the four 5-1A girls teams.

McLean suffered a 65-59 setback in the boys game. Monty Joiner and Ben Reeser had 18 points each for the Tigers.

PRO FOOTBALL

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — The Arizona Cardinals signed former New Orleans reserve quarterback Mike Buck to a one-year contract Monday.

Buck, 27, will compete for the No. 3 slot with John Bonds, a former Northern Arizona player signed earlier this month.

Buck was released by New Orleans before the start of the past season. He appeared in only four games during his first three years as a pro, throwing only six passes. In 1993, he completed 32 of 54 attempts for 448 yards and four touchdowns. He was intercepted three times.

Buddy Ryan, the Cardinals coach and general manager, brought Buck in for a tryout early in the season. Buck and Bonds will take turns next month when Ryan conducts a 16-week offensive school at the team's training facility.

The Cardinals didn't renew contracts with Jay Schroeder or Jim McMahon, who now are unrestricted free agents, but Ryan has said he'd like to bring one of them back. Schroeder started half of the team's 1994 games and is believed to be Ryan's choice.

Their third quarterback, Steve Beuerlein, has been made available to expansion teams.

BASEBALL

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — The independent minor leagues may be the biggest beneficiaries of the baseball strike.

The Northern League, a six-team circuit based in the upper Midwest, already has sold the contracts of about 10 players and is working out deals to send several more of its 132 players to major league training camps. The Texas-Louisiana League estimates it has auctioned the contracts of at least 20 players.

"The phone has rang a lot more," said former major leaguer Jack Lazorko, director of operations for the 10-team Texas-Louisiana circuit which stretches from Mobile, Ala., to Pueblo, Colo.

Oil Can Boyd, Leon Durham and Pedro Guerrero played for the Northern League last season. Dwight Gooden and the league have spoken about the possibility of him playing there this year.

These minor leagues aren't part of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues, the governing body of the organized minors. Striking major leaguers could wind up in these leagues, in such remote locales as Tyler, Texas, and Thunder Bay, Ontario.

"It makes sense," Matthew Riley, general manager of the Mobile BaySharks, said. "We're open to anything. Having major leaguers in our league would help us from a financial standpoint, a perception standpoint and a fan enthusiasm standpoint."

Gooden, barred from baseball this year for testing positive for cocaine, would be considering the independents whether or not there was a strike. He is ineligible to play in any league affiliated with the National Association.

Lazorko raises the prospect of others following Gooden's lead when the Texas-Louisiana League begins play about Memorial Day.

"If the strike is still going on, I would not be surprised to see major leaguers playing in this league," he said. "They can come here to stay in shape and play."

Lazorko said his managers already have been in contact with some big leaguers, but he wouldn't reveal names. With the majority of teams in Texas, he said it would be logical for his league to consider players from the Texas Rangers and Houston Astros.

"A lot of professional athletes live in the Dallas and Houston areas," he said, and could remain close to home if they wanted to play in the independent league.

Any player who joins an independent league would have to deal with a salary cap, the major point of contention in the strike. In the Northern League, each team can pay its 22 players a total of $76,000 — $39,000 less than the major league minimum for one player.

But the independent leagues likely would be willing to raise their caps if it meant signing a big leaguer. However, don't count on American League MVP Frank Thomas playing for the Mobile BaySharks.

"It's probably too early to tell what's going to happen," Dan Moushon, executive director of the Northern League, said. "I wouldn't be surprised if later on in the season, if the majors are still using replacement players and there's no foreseeable end to the strike, perhaps some fringe (major league) players or end-of-the-line players who are hanging on and need to stay in shape may contact an independent league."

Chargers arrive in fighting mood

By BERNIE WILSON
AP Sports Writer

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Perhaps buoyed by a screening of the movie "Scarface" on their flight to Florida, the San Diego Chargers arrived for their first Super Bowl in a fighting mood.

Few people give them much of a chance to beat the San Francisco 49ers, who are 19-point favorites — the biggest spread in Super Bowl history — for Sunday's game at Miami's Joe Robbie Stadium.

"I know we're going to hear about that all week," coach Bobby Ross said after the Chargers' charter flight arrived Monday night. "I've never seen one that was decided by the media, yet."

"We honestly think we can win the game. That's why we will play the game. That's why people are buying tickets for it. I told our squad this morning, first and foremost, we're coming down to win this football game."

The Chargers relish their underdog status, which they've faced several times this season.

Linebacker David Griggs, who used to play for the Miami Dolphins, said the Chargers aren't getting the respect they deserve, but understands why.

"The 49ers won, what, four Super Bowls, and the Chargers haven't won any. It's our first time here, and for the past 10 years the AFC has gotten stomped. So of course we're going to be the underdogs," Griggs said.

"But it's motivational for us. They're not unbeatable."

They were the last time they met the Chargers. On Dec. 11, Steve Young threw for 304 yards and two touchdowns as the 49ers routed the Chargers 38-15 in San Diego.

The 49ers arrived Sunday, but the Chargers did not want to leave San Diego until they had finished their game plan. They had a short practice on Monday, then flew here.

Free safety Stanley Richard worried about balancing final preparations with all the Super Bowl distractions. But he said he felt the Chargers could win.

"The big question is whether we come together as a unit on Sunday," Richard said. "We've had success back and forth on defense, and we've never been consistent and played a complete football game."

"But it could happen this Sunday, and if we do, our defense is good enough to stop these guys, and our offense is definitely good enough to score a lot of points, because we've done it in the past."

The 49ers are loaded offensively, from Young to receiver Jerry Rice to halfback Ricky Watters.

"I think the one guy that puts the package together is Steve Young," Richard said. "If you understand him, then you understand how to stop this offensive team."

The Chargers have lived on the edge in the playoffs, relying on late rallies to beat the Dolphins 22-21 and the Pittsburgh Steelers 17-13. In those two games, they've led for only 5 minutes, 48 seconds.

"Really, we don't want to put it up to that coming into the Super Bowl," wide receiver Tony Martin said. "I think if we get behind in the game, that's to their advantage. It's a hard team to come back on. We've got to play ahead of them."

Martin will be playing in his hometown. He was traded by the Dolphins to the Chargers in March.

"I don't think a lot of people wanted us to be here, but hey, we played physical football, and we played team football," Martin said. "We're not here because of luck. We're here because we played physical and sent other guys home."

"We've got a feeling we can beat them," Martin said. "They're not an unbeatable team. Somebody beat them this year."

The 49ers were an NFL-best 13-3 in the regular season, while the Chargers were 11-5, including a 6-0 start.

Ross said the Chargers are in their best health since the start of the season.

However, backup defensive tackle Reggie White did not practice Monday because of gout that developed in a foot over the weekend. He is on medication, and Ross said he expected the swelling to be down in time for a practice in pads on Wednesday.

The Chargers are scheduled to participate in media day today, but otherwise will have the day off.

Harvesters prepare for round two

The Pampa Harvesters are getting ready for round two of the District 1-4A basketball race. The Harvesters have a little more time to get ready this week since tonight is an open date for them.

The Harvesters, who beat Hereford, 82-57, last week to take command of first place in the 1-4A standings, travel to Randall Friday night for the second meeting of the season with the Raiders.

Pampa downed Randall, 72-54, in the first go-round, 72-54, as senior guard Duane Nickelberry led the way with a season-high 26 points.

In that game, Randall had jumped out to a quick 9-2 lead before the Harvesters ran off 14 straight first-quarter points and never trailed again.

At this point in time the 11th-ranked Harvesters carry a 19-6 record and are 5-1 in district.

The Harvesters have responded with a vengeance since losing to Canyon, 66-55, the second week of the district season. They've beaten Dumas, 91-44; Borger, 69-51, and Caprock, 106-44, before routing Hereford last Friday night.

Randall hasn't lost since that first meeting with Pampa and is tied with Hereford for second place in district at 4-1. Randall and Hereford meet tonight to break the tie. For the season, the Raiders are 15-10.

Randall's latest win came against Caprock last Friday night. David Whitely, a 6-0 junior, had 15 points and Josh Warnica, a 6-1 junior, had 14 to lead the Raiders to a 77-59 victory.

In other district action tonight, Borger hosts Dumas and Canyon travels to Caprock. Canyon holds down fourth place in 1-4A standings with a 3-2 record. Borger and Caprock are both 1-4 while Dumas is 0-5.

Former Longhorns receiver enrolls in community college

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas wide receiver Mike Adams has enrolled in a community college after being forced to drop out of the university for the spring semester due to academic problems.

Texas coach John Mackovic said Adams twice talked to him about the prospect of entering the April NFL draft before enrolling at Austin Community College to make up courses and improve his grade-point average.

"He wants to come back to Texas," Mackovic said. "He's got plenty of course work to do (to regain his eligibility)."

Adams has an unlisted phone number and couldn't be reached for comment Tuesday.

Two Texas juniors, wide receiver Lovell Pinkney and offensive tackle Blake Brockmeyer, forfeited their last season of eligibility to enter the draft.

Heels are hungry

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — No. 3 North Carolina has returned with a vengeance this season after an uncharacteristic early exit from the NCAA tournament and late season turmoil over playing time.

The Tar Heels (14-1) have been very consistent as they head toward their record 25th straight 20-win season.

North Carolina started the preseason ranked No. 2, moved to the top spot for five weeks, then dropped as low as fourth after losing at North Carolina State Jan. 4.

The Tar Heels are 6-0 against ranked opponents.

"Through the first five or six guys, they look like they can be about as good as any of the Carolina teams," said Virginia Tech coach Bill Foster, who saw several Tar Heels teams when he coached at Clemson for nine seasons.

"They don't have the luxury of going to the bench and bringing off the caliber of kids they've had in the past, but the guys coming off the bench know their roles."

A shorter bench may be the key to the Tar Heels. The five starters — led by Jerry Stackhouse and Rasheed Wallace — average more than 30 minutes per game and score in double figures.

Last season, it was difficult for coach Dean Smith to strike a balance when Stackhouse and Wallace started pushing seniors for playing time late in the year.

This season's team is averaging 91 points per game. The school record is 91.3, set during the 1986-87 season.

Key defensive plays lift Jazz past Mavs

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Dallas Mavericks' plan to trap Utah's John Stockton almost worked.

The Jazz trailed 22-12 in the first quarter Monday night while Stockton was being double-teamed, but Utah got back in sync offensively and used some key defensive plays down the stretch to escape with a 116-111 victory.

"We wanted to trap Stockton as much as possible, and it worked for a while," Dallas' Jamal Mashburn said. "But they caught on to it because they are a smart ballclub."

Under the plan, center Lorenzo Williams left Jazz center James Donaldson to trap Stockton, and Utah scored on just three of its first 12 possessions.

Then Jazz coach Jerry Sloan started the second half with Tom Chambers at center and David Benoit at small forward, and the Jazz outscored the Mavericks 67-55 in the second half.

"They did a terrific job of taking us out of our offense during the first part of the game. They doubled us a great part of the game. Finally, we got back into our rhythm in the second half," Sloan said.

On the defensive end, the Jazz tried several players against Mashburn before Karl Malone took over, and he held Mashburn scoreless in the last five minutes.

"The way he was rolling, I knew he wanted to take some more shots. I just tried to get out on him and move my feet," Malone said. "I don't profess to be a great defensive specialist, but it's a matter of pride sometimes. It's up to you to get the job done."

It was a good move for us to change Karl over to Mashburn defensively near the end," said Sloan, whose team has won 18 of 20 games.

A key play came with 1:22 left and Dallas leading 111-110. Mashburn tried to drive the baseline on Malone, they collided and Mashburn was called for an offensive foul.

"I sort of read the direction he wanted to go. I felt like he wanted to go to the baseline," Malone said. "He started to mess with the ball a little; when he decided to go, I just tried to be there."

Dallas' Jimmy Jackson, who finished with 34 points, had only 1 point and three turnovers in the closing minutes. Mashburn scored 26 points and Jason Kidd 15 for Dallas.

Malone led Utah with 28 points, and Antoine Carr finished with 22 points. Jeff Hornacek scored 18, and Stockton had 12 points and 17 assists.

Utah held the lead just once before Carr hit a 17-foot jumper, putting Utah in front for good, 112-111, with 41 seconds left.

On the next possession, Jackson tried to drive, but got caught in the air and dropped the ball in the lane. Popeye Jones recovered the loose ball and put it in the basket, but the officials ruled Jackson flicked the ball to Jones after it hit the floor, so they called traveling.

"The call at the end was really wrong," said Dallas coach Dick Motta, whose team has lost eight of 11 games. "It's unfortunate, but we're getting more than our share of unfortunate stuff."

The Mavericks were forced to foul and picked David Benoit, who sank four free throws in the final 13 seconds to ice Utah's ninth straight victory and their 17th straight over Dallas.

Angry Israelis claim peace process failed

BEIT LID JUNCTION, Israel (AP) — At a bombed-out bus shelter alight with memorial candles, a woman clutched a scrap of khaki she had picked up off the pavement where dozens of soldiers had fallen in a double blast.

"I came here to cry," said Yona Tsanani, 65, from nearby Kfar Saba. "My heart hurts."

"If the government continues in this manner," she added, "we are all lost."

Dozens of people wandered about this junction near Netanya on Monday, while workers rebuilt the bus stop and snack bar gutted by Sunday's explosions. Some prayed, others lit candles and cried.

All, however, criticized Israel's autonomy accord with the Palestinians, saying it is producing only more violence and victims. Islamic militants opposed to the accord claimed responsibility for the suicide bombing.

"We are sitting ducks," asked Tal Hanan, 44, from Moshav Yanuv. "They shoot to see if we are dead, then they shoot again."

A busload of Americans from San Diego laid flowers next to the concrete shell of the bus stop. On it, someone had pasted the front page of a newspaper showing the 19 victims of Sunday's bombing, most of them teenage soldiers.

The two suicide bombers were also killed.

More than 60 civilians and soldiers were wounded in the attack, many in a second blast that felled those who rushed to help people injured in the first explosion.

Attacks by Islamic extremists have killed 52 Israelis since October. Seventeen Palestinians have been killed by Israelis in the same period. The bloodshed is fueling Israeli opposition to Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's government and its peace policies.

"The myth that this is the price of peace is finished," said Eli Dadon, 49, who lost his son in November when a suicide bomber on a bicycle set off explosives that killed himself and three Israeli soldiers at a checkpoint in the Gaza Strip.

Dadon collected about three pages of signatures on a petition against the Rabin government.

"I want to show the government how many people don't want them," he said. "Send them home."

In an attempt to ease an angry public, Rabin made a rare address to the nation Monday night.

"The way to peace is not easy," he said. "Do not give in to moments of weakness."

Rabin promised to hunt down and destroy the Islamic militants responsible for the bombing.

His security advisers decided Monday to give agents of the Shin Bet security service a freer hand in fighting terrorism, Israel radio said. It was not clear what that would mean.

In retaliation for the bombing, Israeli soldiers raided mosques and arrested dozens of Muslim militants in the West Bank today.

Games zapped from computers in Texas House

AUSTIN (AP) — There will be no fun and games in the Texas House this session. Well, no games at least.

Computerized games that had come pre-installed in laptop computers at each House member's desk have been removed.

The discovery was made Monday when a House member jokingly asked Speaker Pete Laney why, during a computer lesson last week, legislators hadn't been told about the games.

"Well, they're not on there anymore," Laney responded.

The Dell computers are equipped to display amendments to bills as they are debated. But the machines also contained games such as chess and solitaire that were included in the pre-installed software.

Lawmakers were instructed last week how to use the computers, although their lesson covered only the amendment system.

But when news reporters started asking about the games, eyebrows shot up.

"It seemed to be somewhat of a distraction," said John Bender, director of communications for the House, who asked the Legislative Council to remove the games.

"I asked them if it served any purpose ... and I asked them if it could be removed," Bender said.

Laney said he didn't even know about the games before someone told him, and neither did any other legislators.

"None of the members ever knew about them ... because we didn't have anybody that could find it on the computer," he said.

Texas isn't the first state to zap its games.

In December, Virginia Gov. George Allen's chief of staff banned computer games from the state's 103,000 computers.

Santa Fe continues merger deal

CHICAGO (AP) — Santa Fe Pacific Corp. and Burlington Northern Inc. said Monday they are considering sweetening their merger proposal in response to the latest bid from hostile suitor Union Pacific Corp.

The two railroad companies are discussing possible revisions to their $3.8 billion deal "to make sure we have alternatives that meet all shareholders' needs," Santa Fe spokeswoman Catherine Westphal said.

Santa Fe's board rejected Union Pacific's $3.6 billion all-cash offer Sunday, saying its proposed cash-and-stock transaction with Burlington Northern Inc. is a better deal. Analysts say the proposals are close in value.

A change under consideration would have Santa Fe repurchase 10 million additional shares of its own stock under certain conditions, the Wall Street Journal reported Monday. Westphal and Burlington spokesman James Sabourin declined comment on the report.

The current agreement calls for Santa Fe to buy back 20 percent of its stock.
