Ore Carrier Sinks with Crew

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich. (UPI) — The 729-foot ore carrier Edmund Fitzgerald, with 28 crewmen and one apprentice seaman on board, sank late Monday or early today in a severe storm that kicked up 25-foot waves on Lake Superior. The Coast Guard said there was no sign of survivors. Coast Guard Petty Officer Bob Wiard said search ships in the area—about 50 miles northwest of Sault Ste. Marie—found debris and an oil slick.

"They found no survivors," Wiard said. "We're sure it's from the Fitzgerald." The National Weather Service reported hurricane force winds gusting to 80 miles an hour and waves running to 25 feet. It said the water temperature was 49 degrees and the air temperature 41. A healthy person, it said, would go into shock within 30 minutes in the water. An armada of ships and aircraft, some flown from North Carolina, joined the search operations at dawn today. Other vessels spent the night crisscrossing the area, firing flares into the night for illumination. The first wreckage was sighted at about 4:40 a.m., about 13 miles north of Whitefish Point and eight miles west of Copper Mines Point, Ont. near the area where the Fitzgerald disappeared. The Fitzgerald, built in 1958 at a cost of $8 million, was one of the prize ships of the Great Lakes fleet. Owned by Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Milwaukee and operated by the Columbia Transportation Division of Ogleby Norton Co. of Cleveland, the Fitzgerald departed from the Burlington Northern docks in Superior, Wis. at 1:15 p.m. Sunday with a cargo of 26,216 tons of taconite ore pellets for Detroit. Normal complement for the ore carrier was 28 crewmen but there may have been as many as 35 aboard, officials said. The Fitzgerald was last heard from Monday at 7:10 p.m. EST, when one of its officers radioed the nearby steamer Arthur M. Anderson to say the Fitzgerald was taking on water and had lost two hatch covers. When she was built in 1958, the Fitzgerald was called the monarch of the Great Lakes fleet. She was named for Edmund Fitzgerald, then president of Northwestern Mutual and now its retired chairman.

SLA Plot To Kidnap Governor's Sister Told

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Symbionese Liberation Army sympathizers reportedly are involved in an alleged plot to kidnap Kathleen Brown Rice, sister of California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., and use her as a lever to gain the release of jailed SLA members. Daryl Gates, assistant chief of the Los Angeles Police Department, confirmed Monday that his department was aware of kidnap threats against Mrs. Rice and had received information about the threats from the FBI. An FBI spokesman acknowledged existence of the kidnap plot, but would not elaborate on it. "The threat is still there, the plot is still there," he said. Gates said police were assigned to guard Mrs. Rice, 33, her husband and three children.

"We will continue to provide whatever protection we consider appropriate to the situation," he added. After the kidnaping, it was believed Mrs. Rice, a member of the Los Angeles Board of Education, was to have been used to gain the release of SLA members Joseph Remiro and Russell Little.

'Women Must Assert Worth'

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — Women must throw off their timidity and assert their own self worth, Frances T. Farenthold today told a conference on Women in Politics. "Timidity has restricted our actions and shrouded our ways. That timidity must be replaced by a million acts of courage," Mrs. Farenthold told more than 1,000 women gathered to discuss ways to get more women into power. Mrs. Farenthold protested traditional associations of women with gentility, the veneer of politeness, the squeamishness about mice and other creatures, the dependence upon the male breadwinner, the place in the home.

"The opposite need not be obnoxious — it is simply self assertiveness," Mrs. Farenthold said. Former U.S. District Judge Sarah T. Hughes drew a standing ovation from the packed auditorium at the Lyndon B. Johnson Library urging the women. "Don't say you want to be the assistant to anybody. Say you want to be the person." An Australian feminist warned women interested in entering politics they will be expected to sleep with male politicians. Elizabeth Anne Reid told a Conference on Women in Public Life Monday that male politicians expect women to act as sex objects. "I'm sorry about that but you'll be expected to do it," said Ms. Reid, who recently resigned as adviser to the prime minister of Australia. "If you don't — the press you won't get and press and if you don't — the cabinet members you won't get your programs." "If you don't do it you won't be as effective." Ms. Reid said refusing sexual advances cost her in bad press and failure of some programs she wanted in Australia. She said she did make some compromises on appearances, however, that helped her in relations with male politicians. "The more pleasing the woman is to the eye of the beholder the more likely she is to be listened to," Ms. Reid said.

who said women politicians had to wear lipstick and nylons to get a receptive audience. Male officials, she said, do not even listen to suggestions from women wearing jeans and sandals. "If I turned up as a potential you know what they at least listened," she said. The Australian feminist said women should work to put more feminists in positions of power. "We have to attack the root problem. We have to attack the attitudes, beliefs, myths, cliches about women. These attitudes exist as much in our heads as much as they exist in the heads of men," she said. Ms. Reid drew a standing ovation. The overflow audience included

Lady Bird Johnson, former federal District Judge Sarah T. Hughes and scores of women presently serving as legislators, mayors and other elected or appointed public officials. A group of 17 women disrupted the program briefly parading down the aisle to the front of the Lyndon B. Johnson Library auditorium singing and chanting. "Not just the crumbs." The protesters departed after Liz Carpenter, conference coordinator, said she would be glad to attend their workshop. More than 1,300 women signed up to attend the three-day conference sponsored by the University of Texas and Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs.

Dawn's Early Light

A school-wide assembly and flag raising ceremony at Stephen F. Austin Elementary School honored Veteran's Day this morning. Cub Scouts from Pack 410 Den 2 saluted as Troy Bettis, head custodian, raised the flags to "Call to Colors" and "Taps" played by Clifford Stevens, Pampa High School trumpet player. This was followed by the Pledge of Allegiance and "The Star Spangled Banner" under the direction of Mrs. Pat Surface, music teacher.

Iwo Jima Survivor Recalls Marine Tribute

ARLINGTON, Va. (UPI) — Rene A. Gagnon, a 50-year-old hotel auditor and travel agent from Manchester, N.H., is one of the few living men immortalized in bronze. He was one of the Marines who raised the American flag on Iwo Jima 30 years ago. Gagnon's statue is 32 feet high, along with those of the five other men who heaved the flag and pole up on the top of Mt. Suribachi, a symbol of the valor and dedication of the U.S. Marines, who held a ceremony at the memorial Monday to celebrate their 200th birthday with President Ford in attendance. Gagnon is the last living Marine in the group. A former Navy pharmacist's mate, John H. Bradley, was not present. Most of the others were killed on Iwo Jima. Do you think about it much? Gagnon was asked. "I haven't thought about it much for 15 years now. Sure, when you're young, you think I'm the only living human being on a postage stamp, one of the few living humans cast in bronze. But you've gotta go on, do what you have to do now." He lit a cigarette, cupping it against the wind the old way, and told what it was like. "You don't think about the big things, that's for the generals

You think about the little things, the ground was all volcanic ash, you couldn't dig a foxhole because it would all fall in. "You think about guys I was a battalion runner and I wasn't with them all the time. I would come back and find a guy that I had known, a friend of mine, had been killed. "It's better that you go as a young man," said Gagnon, who turned 20 on Iwo Jima. "You turn cagey when you get old. If it happened now, I'd probably figure out some way to get out of it. "You don't think about that at the time. You think about your job, what you have to do. And you think that you won't get it, that nobody will get you, even though other guys get killed. And you think about the others, and you know that no Marine ever quit and you know that you won't be the first. "It's like being on an undefeated team. You play better than a team that takes a couple losses. That's what's so good about the Marine traditions. You know you're on a winning team. And you know that you'll only turn and run if all the others do. "You're not going to be the first."

Borger Company Gets Plant Bid

By TEX DEWESE
Pampa News Staff
Pampa city commissioners today accepted the recommendation of consultant engineers and awarded a $1,069,383 contract to West Tex Construction Co. of Borger for construction of the city's sewage treatment plant.

Chester A. Green, representing Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, project consultant engineers, Lubbock, told commissioners the Borger firm's bid had been approved by the Texas Water Quality Board which recommended to the federal Environmental Protection Agency that it be accepted. Green told the commissioners it was probable work on the plant could start shortly after the first of the year. The contract calls for completion in 15 months which would put the plant in operation in the spring of 1977. Mayor R.D. Wilkerson said it had been hoped the EPA approval would come in time for today's commission meeting, but it had not arrived when councilmen adjourned shortly before noon.

The commission also accepted a bid of $117,000 for aeration equipment at the plant to the Passavant Corp. It was explained that all but $7,000 of that amount was included in the contract of West Tex.

The commission went into executive session as the last item on today's agenda to discuss possible legal action in the lawsuit that has been filed against Panhandle counties and cities to have the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission abolished on grounds that it is unconstitutional. City Manager Mack Wofford later reported commissioners decided to employ the Amarillo law firm of Garland D. Sells which also will represent the PRPC and the other defendant cities and counties.

Mrs. Terry Strickland and Randy Miller, both of Pampa, appeared today to ask commissioners permission to construct a drag strip for auto racing at the old auxiliary air field four miles south of Pampa off the Clarendon Hwy. Mrs. Strickland told councilmen approximately 100 persons have cars built for racing, but they have no place to race them without going long distances from Pampa. Mayor Wilkerson said the City Staff would study the request and feasibility of the plan and report its findings probably at the next meeting of the commission. In other business today commissioners held two public hearings on zoning changes and ordered legislation drawn to provide for multi-family dwellings on Summer between Coronado Dr. and Somerville and single family units on a portion of the North Crest Addition. Approved a change from retail to commercial zoning on Hobart St. from Cook to Francis. Received seven bids on the purchase of equipment for the fire and sanitation departments which Mayor Wilkerson said would be evaluated and a report made at the Nov. 25 meeting of the council. Authorized the Yellow Cab Co. to move its office from 338 to 820 E. Frederic. Continued a public hearing on proposed demolition of buildings at 330-36 N. Warren. Approved payment of October bills in the amount of $137,007.97. Adopted a resolution naming the Pampa Environmental Beautification Foundation board of directors as advisors to the City on beautification projects within the city. Invested $200,000 in funds from the 1975 General Obligation Bonds for the sewage treatment plant.

Secretary Morton May Be Cited for Contempt

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A House subcommittee recommended today that Commerce Secretary Rogers Morton be cited in contempt of Congress for refusal to provide subpoenaed documents on American companies which have complied with the Arab boycott against Israel. The move, approved 9-5 by the subcommittee on oversight investigation, now goes to the full House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. "I personally regret the necessity to take this action," Subcommittee Chairman John E. Moss, D-Calif., told Morton. But he said Morton's refusal to comply with the subpoena left him no choice. Morton said earlier he had been advised by Attorney General Edward Levi and other lawyers that he need not respond to the subpoena. To do so, he said, would have been a breach of confidence with the companies concerned and would not have been in the national interest. The matter involves alleged discrimination by the Arab states against companies, including American firms, who deal with Israel. The subpoena sought all reports of boycott requests which have been filed with the department pursuant with the Export Administration Act. Morton refused to comply. "These reports include every incident in which a boycott request has been made to an American company, the number of transactions involved, and—most important—they include information on whether the companies have agreed to comply with the boycott," said Moss. "Congress never made boycott a flat prohibition," countered Morton in remarks to reporters following the meeting. "What the subcommittee, in my opinion, is trying to do is to pass on the responsibility which they themselves address and decided not to act on over the years," he added. Morton said he believed the White House was aware of the circumstances concerning his testimony, but that he had never talked about the possibility of a contempt citation with the President. "I have not heard anything from them," Morton said, adding he did not regard this as unusual since he was getting guidance from the attorney general.

'Federal Efforts Ineffective'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights said today the federal government has been largely ineffective in its efforts to bar racial and sexual discrimination in $50 billion worth of federally-assisted programs. In other action today, the commission charged that opposition to school busing may weaken the civil rights movement. The commission made the charge in announcing a new 10-month school desegregation project which will culminate next August in a "Report to the Nation." The commission project will include a Dec. 8 public discussion with sociologist James Coleman on "white flight" and its relationship to desegregation, release of a report early next year on desegregation in Prince George's County, Md., development of a national school desegregation standard, a nationwide survey of desegregation progress, a national desegregation conference, and hearings in two or three cities yet to be named. "In announcing the new school desegregation program, the commission expressed concern that recent opposition to busing may be used to weaken the entire civil rights movement," the commission said in a statement without elaboration. The commission is an independent government agency concerned with the rights of minorities and women. It has no enforcement powers. In an 814-page report on enforcement of Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act by seven federal agencies, the commission said offices set up in those agencies to enforce the act are understaffed, lack sufficient authority to execute their responsibilities, fail to require necessary data for measuring compliance and fail to conduct enough reviews. Title VI prohibits racial or ethnic discrimination in all federally assisted programs. It covers some 400 programs administered by 25 agencies. Discrimination by sex is banned by other laws and regulations. The report said all these non-discrimination efforts have held out "false promises" to minority groups and women. Even where violations are uncovered, it said, they are often not fully remedied. It recommended that President Ford issue an executive order transferring responsibility for coordinating and directing Title VI programs from the Attorney General's office to the Office of Management and Budget. It said the Attorney General had been ordered to develop standards for Title VI compliance, but this has not been done, "leaving all other federal agencies with inadequate direction."

David Holt, Malone's

attorney, asked for an instructed verdict on grounds that his client did not knowingly sell to a minor.

"Knowledge is an indispensable element of defense," Holt said.

Judge Don Cain denied the motion. Later when Warner asked Irwin if he was led to "the kid's room" at the bar, Holt asked for a mistrial. Judge Cain denied that request.

Malone, in testifying in his own defense, said he worked only a few days as a bartender at Dad's. He said he checked a "bunch of IDs — some were 30 years old."

"Isn't it true if you keep your job out there you've got to sell to minors?" inquired Warner.

Malone said it was not true.

Holt asked Malone if he had anything to gain by selling to minors.

"I don't know what it would be," Malone replied.

The trial is scheduled to reach the jury later today.

Trial on Alcohol To Minor Begins

By ANNA BURCHELL
Pampa News Staff
The jury trial of Grady Ray Malone, 421 N. Wells, charged with making available an alcoholic beverage to a minor, began this morning in Gray County Court. Malone was allegedly working as a bartender at Dad's Place here on June 28, 1975, when he sold a bottle of beer to Gayland Irwin, then 17, but now 18, and a Perryton High School senior student.

Under cross examination Irwin said he could not be absolutely sure it was Malone who sold him the beer. "The place was pretty crowded," he said. John O. Fields of Fritch, an inspector with the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission, said he and others drove up that night they observed "a young man coming up with a bottle of beer in his hand."

Another inspector with the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission, Frank Vanick of Dumas, gave similar testimony. He said he was assisting Fields that night. "Are alcoholic inspectors popular in bars in Gray County?" inquired John W. Warner, county attorney. "About like anywhere," replied Vanick. Fred Brown, a detective with the Pampa Police Department, also testified for the state in the case.

Malone's attorney, asked for an instructed verdict on grounds that his client did not knowingly sell to a minor. "Knowledge is an indispensable element of defense," Holt said. Judge Don Cain denied the motion. Later when Warner asked Irwin if he was led to "the kid's room" at the bar, Holt asked for a mistrial. Judge Cain denied that request. "Isn't it true if you keep your job out there you've got to sell to minors?" inquired Warner. Malone said it was not true. Holt asked Malone if he had anything to gain by selling to minors. "I don't know what it would be," Malone replied. The trial is scheduled to reach the jury later today.

COURTS SHOULD REACT

Busing role fading

There is a generally shared conviction in the United States, as the Senate Judiciary Committee continues its hearings on the busing issue, that the days of transporting children solely for the sake of achieving racial quotas in schools are numbered.

Hard data on the subject are controversial and nobody can say beyond challenge whether busing has improved the education that black children receive — or even how many children are being bused solely for integration reasons.

Nevertheless it is plain that the majority of American people, both black and white, now are convinced that busing is not the answer to quality education.

Their feeling is reflected in the most recent Gallup poll which indicates that 72 per cent oppose busing, and would favor a constitutional amendment to prohibit it.

It is further reflected in Congress where both the House and the Senate for the first time since the Civil Rights Act of 1974 have voted by substantial margins amendments that would prevent the department of Health, Education and Welfare from ordering forced busing. It is visible in the statements of President Ford and even in the saddening tempers and raw anger on the streets of Boston and Louisville.

The authority of Congress to prevent busing is limited. About 97 per cent of the racial busing conducted today is by court order, not at the instructions of HEW.

Four constitutional amendments in Congress are aimed at stripping the power of the courts which are following a 1971 decision of the U.S. Supreme Court.

President Ford, however, does not believe that the time has come for a constitutional solution to the busing problem, and we share his conviction.

An amendment to limit the scope of the 14th Amendment is most certainly a last resort. All political avenues must be explored first because a constitutional solution would polarize opinion and keep rubbing open the wounds of integration state by state as legislatures debated whether to approve the amendment or not.

We do not believe that all legislative, administrative and local alternatives have been exhausted, nor can the present ferment in Congress and in the communities be lost on the courts.

The Supreme Court may or may not follow the election returns as Finley Peter Dunne's fictional observer Dooley said, but it does keep attuned to landmark social trends as even its school desegregation opinions over the years exhibit.

It cannot help but hear the voice of the American people saying loudly and clearly that forced busing and equal educational opportunities are not synonymous.

Saving 'slush funds'

It was unfortunate but probably inevitable that the Federal Election Commission backed down on its first regulation, governing the congressmen's office accounts, commonly called "slush funds."

These funds are contributed by friends and supporters of the congressmen and senators for the purpose of defraying some of the costs of public office that are not paid by official expense accounts.

It was a fund of this type ("the Nixon fund") that caused a furor in 1952 and led to the famous "Checkers" speech by the former president.

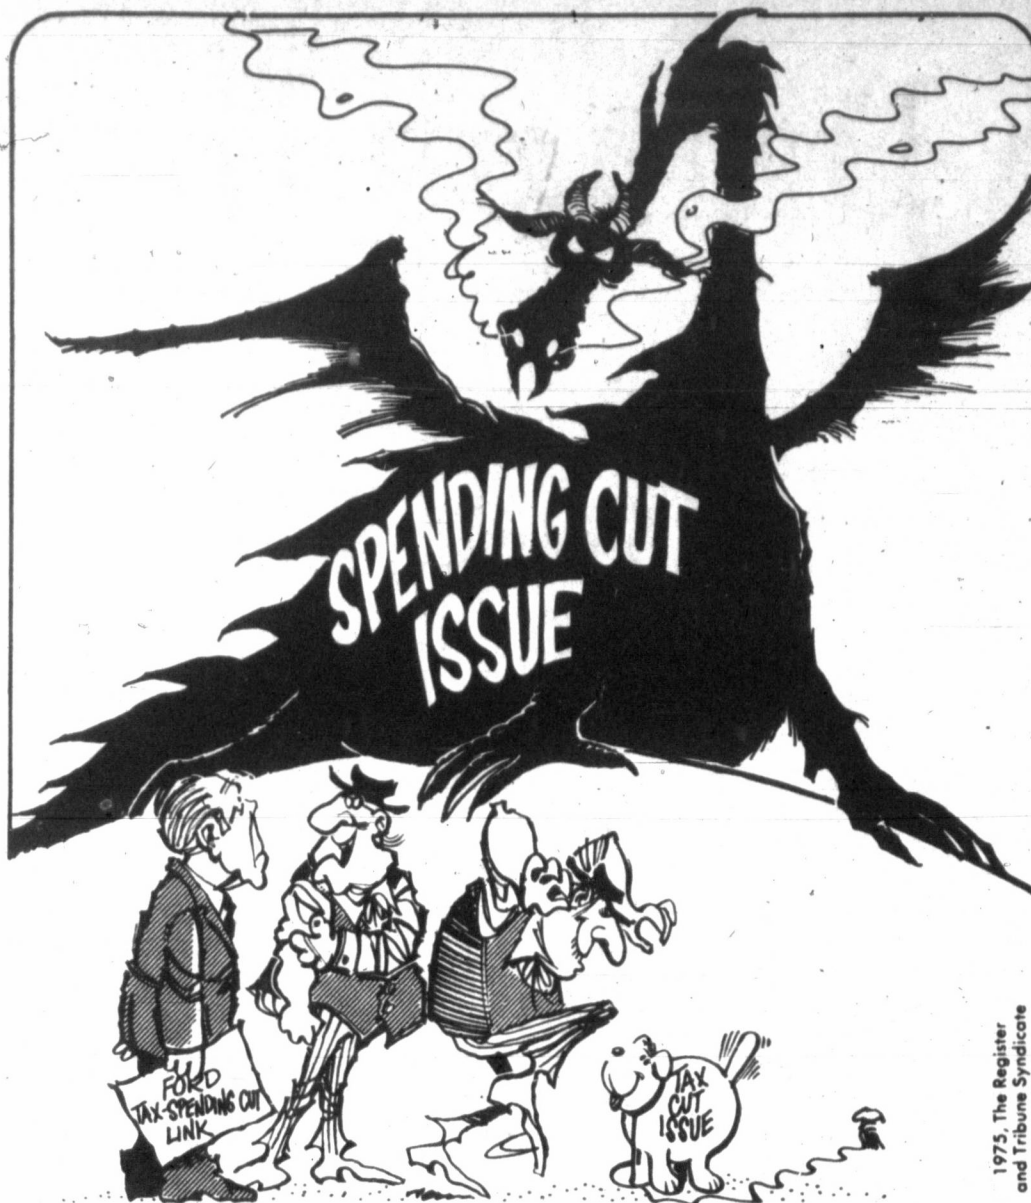

We don't think the voters approve of such funds. They are an open invitation for lobbyists and pressure groups to buy access to a senator or a congressman. Whether or not they have been abused, they undermine confidence in government. The congressmen should incur no office expenses they cannot meet with authorized public funds or out of their own pockets. They should not maintain "slush funds."

The Election Commission proposed to treat such accounts as campaign funds subject to the contribution and spending limits of the campaign finance law.

Congress objected so strenuously, however, that the commission backed down and agreed to treat "slush funds" as campaign funds only during the last two years of a senator's six-year term and during the second year of a congressman's two-year term.

Otherwise the Congress threatened to repeal the regulation entirely, demonstrating that the members of Congress don't want the commission to get too independent in implementing the new campaign reform law passed last year.

"We decided to take 'em on one at a time."

INSIDE WASHINGTON

Postage Hike Bill Is a Phony

By ROBERT S. ALLEN
WASHINGTON, Nov. 11 — That 20 per cent ceiling voted by the House on postage increases is phony.

Don't be misled by it. It's straight - out election year grandstanding.

Come Dec. 28, you will start paying the already - announced postage hikes — 13 cents first class, $1.20 special delivery, etc.

There is an outside chance a special measure dealing solely with mail rates may be maneuvered through Congress in the remaining six weeks of this session limiting the boost to 20 per cent — which would mean 12 cents first class, 72 cents special delivery.

The House definitely would go along on that; it's already decisively on record for it.

The hitch is the Senate. And there, it largely gets down to one Senator — Gale McGee, D-Wyo., chairman of the Post Office Committee.

The one - time college professor and 16 - year congressional veteran swings a lot of weight on postal legislation. He has close ties with the powerful postal unions; strongly favors preserving unchanged the existing fiscally independent Postal Service; and is already busily "running scared" for a fourth term next year.

In practical terms, that means McGee will do his utmost to "clean up" the hedge - podge postal bill passed by the House — starting with axing the Alexander amendment.

This narrowly - approved provision, sponsored by Rep. Bill Alexander, D - Ark., whip-smart member of the Appropriations Committee, would strip the Postal Service of the fiscal independence it acquired in 1969 by the Postal Reform Act. Instead, all mail revenues would again go to the Treasury and, as previously, the Postal Service would submit an annual detailed budget to Congress.

McGee (along with the postal unions) is flatly against this — and the odds are in the end he will get his way and the stormily controversial Alexander amendment will be ditched.

Who Pays Ironically, in dollars and cents, actually it doesn't matter what happens on the Alexander amendment. Whether it's in or out of the legislation, the bumbling and fumbling and unfurling exasperating Postal Service will continue to run billions in the red and taxpayers will continue to have to make up the difference.

In one way or another, the multi - billion dollar deficits will come out of taxpayers' pockets. The reason is plain simple arithmetic:

Overall cost of the Postal Service is $14.5 billion; income around $11 billion. Deficit $3.5 billion.

Thus, regardless of the fate of the Alexander amendment, that deficit is what taxpayers have to make up. Under the Alexander amendment, it would come from the Treasury through the congressional appropriation process. Without the amendment, it also would come from the Treasury but through other channels.

It's six of one or half - dozen of another — with taxpayers in the middle and forking over either way.

Rep. Wayne Hays, D - Ohio, razor - tongued chairman of the Administration Committee, summed it up succinctly. "Regardless of how you figure it, this huge deficit is going to come out of the Treasury. Real point of the Alexander amendment is that the House said to the Postal Service, 'We have lost confidence in you and you had better shape up.'"

Note: Definitely unlikely to assuage your frustrations and ire at the Postal Service is that it's losing $8 million a day, and expected to lose even more next year. Estimated deficit is upwards of $5 billion.

No Rush That probably explains why Sen. McGee is in no hurry to start consideration of the House's jumbled bill in the remaining weeks of this session.

Also why he is evincing no enthusiasm for the 20 per cent ceiling on mail rates. Unless McGee markedly changes his mind, he is emphatically for the announced Dec. 28 increases. His justification is wholly utilitarian.

Those hikes will boost Postal Service income by $600 million. It is McGee's contention the Service has to have this money and that it should be provided by mail users. Otherwise it will have to come from the Treasury.

It is noteworthy that throughout this year, while the House Post Office Committee and the House as a whole wrestled tortuously with thorny postal problems, McGee did nothing. He sat idly on his hands, saying pleasantly, "I'm waiting to see what the House comes up with. Why rush? The system is working; admittedly there are faults and failings, but we can tackle them in due time."

Significantly, that's the attitude of the potent postal unions — strongly backing McGee for re - election.

There is a chance three ranking members of his committee may balk at further stalling and insist on immediate hearings and action before Congress winds up around mid - December.

There are inside hints Sens. Jennings Randolph, D - W. Va., Ernest Hollings, D - S. C., and Ted Stevens, R - Alaska, are thinking that way.

If they are, they will have to do something about it without further delay. Time is passing, and they are going to have to fish or cut bait in a matter of days. Committee hearings take time and there is very little of it left — this year.

We're Falling Victims To an Obvious Fallacy

By MADSEN PIRIE
R.C. Hollis Fellow
Hillsdale (Mich.) College
It seems increasingly fashionable for commentators to tell us that our time of affluence has ended. Howard K. Smith tells us on ABC News that we must all learn to tighten our belts for the lean times ahead, and that what the American people want is an honest politician who will tell them frankly that we are already launched upon an age of declining standards of living.

The Ralph Naders of this world tell us that the earth's "thin slice" of natural resources is running out. Other prophets of doom speak warn us that unless we learn to do without, then disaster looms in the immediate future. The Club of Rome, in a refreshingly original twist, uses computers to tell what any child of ten already knows: that if resources are used up without replacement, then they will eventually be exhausted.

The fallacy of doomspeak is as childish as the calculations. No account is taken of the fact that as resources grow scarce, they become more expensive; as they become more expensive, people turn to cheaper substitutes. It is true that copper is growing scarce; but it is also true that aluminum is increasingly used to replace it for the transmission of electricity, its main use. No doubt when the scarcity of aluminum makes it more expensive in turn, electricity will be conducted along glass - fiber cables or by microwave transmission. Glass - fiber is made from sand, so when the sand begins to run out...

Why is it, that so many people who call themselves enlightened have fallen victims to so obvious a fallacy? I think the answer is that they want to believe it. The prophets of doom speak with relish as they warn us to economize. People who say that the prosperity is over can be seen smacking their lips as they say it; they actually want the prosperity to be over. We are looking at a class of people who style themselves as "intellectuals," and who are completely alienated from American values.

Americans, on the whole, like technological progress. They know that it not only makes life easier, but that it enables them to look forward to giving their children a better start in life than they had themselves. It means that a smaller part of their day has to be spent in simply earning enough to stay alive, and the more time becomes available for them to express themselves as individuals. This is what prosperity is all about. It extends both choice and freedom.

The intellectual derides prosperity as materialism, and claims that technology only serves to make life more complicated. It is true that life was simple when the rest room consisted of a hole dug in the ground on a frozen morning; but life was only simple because there was less to do in it. And the intellectual, with his many opportunities for happiness, finds it easy to sneer at the "materialism" of those whose outlook is necessarily more limited.

The merchants of doomspeak are the new Puritans of our age. They look forward vainly to an imminent time when we can no longer enjoy the opportunities which affluence brings us, but when we must instead live by the values which they themselves esteem. Now I have no objection to people who want to opt out of technology. As far as I am concerned, they can set up their own Puritan commune wherever they like. I am even prepared to extend them the benefits of technologically advanced medicine if they should feel the need. But I do object to them trying to make the decision for all of us; some of us have the future to take care of.

Take a Back Seat While In Law's with the Driver

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1975 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd., Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem with my mother-in-law. She and my husband believe that it is a matter of "respect" to let her sit in the front next to her son when we're in the car together. Of course that means I have to sit in the back. I have tried to tell my husband that this has nothing to do with respect and that I should sit next to him. It burns me up, and they both know it.

My mother is 47 and has no disabilities, so there is no good reason for her to sit next to my husband. I always thought that once married, your spouse becomes the most important person in your life and his family comes next.

It's gotten to the point where if my mother is going along, I just refuse to go. She doesn't drive and won't learn, so you can see that this poses a big problem.

There is no use talking to her because she already knows how I feel. She just thinks I should show her respect and get in the back.

What do you think is the respectable and proper thing to do?

MISERABLE IN BACK

DEAR MISERABLE: When push comes to shove, you should defer to her, not because your husband wants you to, but because she is your elder. Even though she should not have demanded to sit next to her son, since she did, you should have yielded gracefully. Refusing to go along is childish. Knock it off.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 72-year-old widow. I am very active, and believe me, I have all my buttons. My single daughter, Donna, and I live together.

I like people, but my oldest daughter who is married and lives happily with her husband told me that when Donna has company, I should excuse myself and give Donna and her guest privacy. This house is half mine.

Abby, when people reach a certain age, don't they belong to the human race any longer?

WITHHOLD MY NAME

DEAR WITHHOLD: The issue is not age—it's privacy. You need not disappear the moment Donna has company and remain out of sight until the guest leaves, but neither should you join the party the whole time.

Use some judgment, Mother. Your oldest daughter has a point.

DEAR ABBY: My 14-year-old daughter recently spent a month with her father in Colorado. He and I have been divorced since she was 6-years-old.

She closed a recent letter to me with the following words: "When I was born it was a wonderful thing because I grew up and you were there. I just want you to know that I couldn't ask for a better friend than you, Mommy. I love you!"

Abby, I am a witness to the fact that all children who grow up with only one parent do not go bad.

I would like to tell mothers all over the world that if they treat their children with respect and love, they will almost always make you proud of them.

YOUNG BLACK MOM

DEAR MOM: Thank you for a beautiful letter. It made my day.

Judge Rules Against Quinlan Death

MORRISTOWN, N.J. (UPI) — Her mind is destroyed and her body shrunk and twisted. But Karen Ann Quinlan still lives, and a judge says that to disconnect the machine keeping her alive would be murder.

The single most important temporal quality Karen Anne Quinlan has is life. "This court will not authorize that life to be taken from her."

Karen's parents, Joseph T. and Julia Quinlan, said they had not decided whether to appeal. Had Muir granted her parents' request to "take her from the machine and the tubes ...

and allow her to pass into the loving hands of the Lord," it would have been the first time in history that a United States court had authorized the death of a person not convicted of a crime.

despite her comatose and emaciated existence in a "persistent vegetative state," Karen is legally and medically alive.

There is no constitutional right to die that can be asserted by a parent for his incompetent adult child," the judge ruled. Karen collapsed and went into a coma April 14 after taking a mixture of tranquilizers and alcohol at a party. She never regained consciousness. At a five-day trial last month, neurologists testified the 21-year-old girl now lies curled in a fetal position. She weighs 60 pounds — half her normal weight — and sweats profusely. She opens her eyes to pinpricks. Sometimes she yawns.

Her father, Joseph Quinlan, a drug company supervisor, asked that Karen be declared mentally incompetent and that he be named her guardian for permanent damage, the doctors said, and that part of the brain which controls "our capacity to talk, to see, to feel, to sing, think," probably was lost to Karen forever.

Soviet Grain Sale To Cost $1

Deadlock Causes Soviet Brezhnev to Cut Visit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger says he would be willing to meet soon with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko in a major new effort to break the impasse in the Strategic Arms Limitation talks.

At a news conference Monday, Kissinger acknowledged the Soviet-American negotiations — a key piece in the administration's detente policy — were in deadlock and that Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev's projected 1975 visit to Washington has been put off.

If this deadlock persists, he said, President Ford might meet Brezhnev, possibly outside the United States, to try to break the impasse: "If a meeting would appear desirable, we are not going to make an issue of principle of it. No such plan exists, but I don't want to exclude it for all time."

As to a Kissinger-Gromyko meeting, he said: "We are prepared to do it."

But Kissinger said as long as the two sides fail to complete a 10-year accord to limit strategic missiles, bombers and multiple warheads, Brezhnev's planned summit conference with Ford in Washington will not take place.

Kissinger further warned Moscow, at the news conference, that the United States expected a "reasoned response" to the latest U.S. proposal in the nuclear talks, made Sept. 21, not just a summary turnaround.

"We don't believe that because the Soviets rejected the last one (proposal), we have to come up with another," he said. "I believe that 90 per cent of the SALT negotiations are substantially agreed, but the remaining 10 per cent on which there is no agreement as yet are of considerable significance." He said he thought remaining differences were "bridgeable."

In a related arms control development Monday, the Senate ratified, 63-15, a treaty to limit the United States and Soviet Union to a single field of antiballistic missile defenses. This accord was one of the last pacts negotiated by President Richard M. Nixon at the Moscow summit conference shortly before he resigned on Aug. 9, 1974.

The Soviet Union has yet to ratify the pact. But officials at the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency said they expected action by the Russians shortly, now that the Senate has acted. The two superpowers decided to forswear a second antiballistic missile field apiece because of high cost and questionable effectiveness.

Uganda Ousts Soviet

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union today suspended relations with Uganda, ordering the Ugandan ambassador and nine staff members to leave Russia immediately because of "insulting" behavior by Ugandan President Idi Amin.

The "temporary suspension" of relations followed Amin's demand for the immediate recall of Soviet Ambassador Andrei Zakharov.

Amin accused him of "criminal" meddling in Ugandan and African affairs and said he would break relations unless the Soviets sent a top-level delegation to discuss grievances with him.

The Soviet Union said it had "resolved temporarily to suspend diplomatic relations with Uganda."

The foreign ministry refused to elaborate, but diplomatic sources said the order meant the entire Ugandan diplomatic mission would have to leave immediately.

The Ugandan-Soviet feud blew up over Soviet involvement in Angola, which achieved independence today while a civil war raged among liberation factions.

The Soviet Union supplies support and weapons to one of the three Angolan liberation movements—the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola.

The Tass news agency said the temporary suspension in relations—a step below a full break—was because of "unfriendly actions, insulting to the Soviet Union and personally to the Soviet ambassador to Uganda (as well as) conditions not allowing the normal functioning of the Soviet embassy."

Radio Uganda, monitored in Nairobi, said Amin had demanded the immediate recall of Ambassador Zakharov "who is a criminal."

Amin accused the Russian of "considering himself the vice president of Uganda" and meddling in Ugandan affairs by trying to force Amin to recognize the Soviet-backed Popular Movement as the legitimate Angolan government.

Australis Protests

CANBERRA, Australia (UPI) — Australia's Governor General today ousted Labor party leader Gough Whitlam as prime minister, touching off mass demonstrations, strikes and protests across Australia.

Sir John Kerr, Queen Elizabeth's representative in Australia, named Conservative party leader Malcolm Fraser to head a caretaker government until a Dec. 13 parliamentary election.

Kerr said he sacked Whitlam because of the prime minister's failure to get parliament to approve a new budget and his subsequent refusal to resign or call a new election.

The dismissal rocked Australia.

In Canberra, more than 2,000 persons gathered outside the parliament building in support of the former prime minister.

Whitlam told the crowd Fraser would "undoubtedly go down in Australian history... as Kerr's Cur."

Waterside workers walked off ships to protest Whitlam's removal and vowed to stay out for 24 hours.

In Sydney, police estimated 6,000 persons marched through the heart of the city, chanting and carrying placards calling for a general strike.

In Melbourne, nearly 5,000 persons massed in the city square and listened to trade union leaders call for solidarity in the forthcoming election.

Robert Hawke, the leader of Australia's largest trade union, flew from Melbourne to Canberra and appealed to unionists not to be provoked into violence or anarchy.

The governor general said he decided to step into Australia's constitutional crisis in the interests of "responsible government."

Whitlam told a press conference he was certain Queen Elizabeth would never have dismissed him out of hand.

He said Kerr "prevented me from getting in touch with the queen by withdrawing my commission (as prime minister) immediately."

"I had no opportunity to communicate with the queen," Whitlam said. "I am certain the crown did not have the right to do what it did on this occasion."

Fraser accepted his appointment as prime minister, but said his only job would be to arrange a national election for members of both houses of parliament.

"It will be my sole purpose to ensure that Australia has a general election to which it is entitled and which, so far, it has been denied," he said.

The fall of the Labor government climaxed a 26-day crisis in which the opposition used its majority in the 72-seat Senate to block passage of Whitlam's budget.

The 127-member House previously approved the budget.

The failure of Whitlam to get the budget through parliament left his government with a rapidly diminishing treasury. Money had already run out for welfare payments to the aged and handicapped.

Australian Treasurer William Hayden had warned that salaries for civil servants — Australia's biggest work force — would run out by the end of the month.

Plan for NYC Aid in Trouble

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Democratic proposal to save New York City from default with $4 billion in government-guaranteed loans is in trouble, with fewer than a third of the members of the Senate now ready to vote for it, a UPI poll showed today.

The poll of the 100 senators showed 44 opposed or likely to oppose the loan guarantee proposal, 30 for it or likely to vote for it and 20 undecided. The remaining six senators would not disclose their thinking on the issue, could not be reached or said they would abstain.

President Ford, asserting New York City ought to save itself through its own efforts from default or go into bankruptcy, says he will veto a loan guarantee bill if one emerges from Congress.

New York officials say the city could default on its debts early next month. State leaders have said several state agencies might default as early as Friday unless a new source of borrowing can be arranged.

In the House, where a bill to provide $7 billion in loan guarantees is expected to come up next week, opposition is also running strong. House Democratic leader Thomas P. O'Neill, Mass., says there are enough votes to pass the bill in the House, where urban interests have greater strength than they do in the Senate.

The Senate poll found 26 Democrats favoring and 18 opposing the $4 billion loan guarantee bill approved by the Senate Banking Committee by an 8-5 vote to help the city remain solvent. Twenty-six Republicans opposed the bill with only four favoring it.

Sentiment against the bill ran strongest among senators from the South and Southwest, where only three of 28 favored it. The strongest support came from Northeastern and Mid-Atlantic states, but opposition existed even there, among New York's neighbors.

Sentiment was almost evenly divided among Midwestern and Far Western senators.

Wanted New Pistol for Fromme

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — The owner of the .45-caliber pistol Lynette Fromme thrust point blank at President Ford testified Monday she took the gun from him last July although he warned the weapon was "dangerous and complicated."

"I showed her how to pull the hammer back and fire it," said Harold Boro, 66, a retired draftsman who has been described as her "sugar daddy."

Miss Fromme, who wore a red blindfold and was carried into the courthouse by a federal marshal Monday, refused to participate further in her trial and chose to sit in a cell where the proceedings were shown on closed-circuit television.

A marshal said she ignored the screen but appeared to be listening to the trial, in which she is charged with attempting to assassinate Ford Sept. 5.

The defendant told U.S. District Court Judge Thomas J. MacBride she had decided, "as a matter of principle," to boycott the trial because he refused to subpoena mass murderer Charles Manson as a witness.

Boro testified he did not give Miss Fromme step-by-step instruction on details such as how to pull back the slide to load the firing chamber. The gun Miss Fromme thrust at the President contained four bullets in the clip, but none in the chamber.

In a raspy voice, the balding Boro said he tried without success to stop the Manson cultist from abruptly walking away from his apartment with the gun and bullets, and even offered to buy her a new pistol instead.

"I tried to tell her it was too big, heavy, dangerous and complicated. I told her, 'I'll buy that one (in the catalog) for you.'"

"She said, 'You will?' She thought about it for five seconds and then went out."

Marchers Negotiate

By United Press International
Morocco and Spain today turned to negotiations over the future of the Spanish Sahara, with each nation claiming victory in the short-lived "march of conquest" into the disputed territory.

Hundreds of thousands of glum Moroccan civilians poured back across the border under orders of King Hassan II, who said the march had "attained its objective" and it was time to turn to "other methods and new procedures."

Although Hassan did not mention the United Nations, it was expected that Spain and Morocco would compromise on a temporary U.N. takeover of the territory until negotiations were completed.

Morocco claims the Spanish Sahara but Spain has called for a U.N.-supervised election to give the 80,000 citizens a chance to determine their own future.

Neighboring Algeria supports guerrillas fighting for independence of the territory and has threatened to join Spain in a war against Morocco.

In Agadir, Morocco, Information Minister Ahmed Taibi Benhima said Monday emissaries would be in Madrid within 48 hours to begin talks on Spanish Sahara.

In Madrid, Spain, Prince Juan Carlos de Borbon won public acclaim for his handling of the crisis. The newspaper Informaciones headlined "A Success For the Prince," a reference to his tough stance against the Moroccan march.

Spain had threatened to shoot the marchers if they tried to cross its defense line.

The 200,000 Moroccan men, women and children that crossed into Spanish Sahara stopped about six miles inside the territory, just short of Spain's mined defense line.

Cardoso ignored the three rival movements — and their 10-month war for control of the nation — saying Angola's 5.9 million citizens "shall decide the forms" of the new government.

The last Portuguese soldiers stationed in Angola sailed for Lisbon aboard seven frigates Monday without waiting for midnight, when the nation became formally independent.

The Popular Movement staged independence festivities at a local stadium and named its leader, Agostinho Neto, as the nation's first president.

"We are at war," a National Front spokesman said in rejecting major festivities.

The fighting raged closer to Luanda today and the capital readied for a major assault. Platoons of Popular Movement troops guarded key streets and intersections while presidents stockpiled food and other supplies.

Plea Entered, Date Set

By DONALD B. THACKREY
SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A federal judge, rejecting contentions by a defense attorney that Patricia Hearst is mentally unfit for immediate trial, entered a plea of innocent for her to bank robbery charges.

U.S. District Judge Oliver J. Carter also set Dec. 15 for the start of Miss Hearst's trial in accordance with the new speedy trial act, which orders that a suspect be tried within 90 days of arrest.

Carter entered the plea Monday after attorney Albert Johnson refused to let the newspaper heiress speak on grounds she was mentally incompetent to assist in her own defense.

Johnson asked the court to delay the trial until 51 days after the expiration of the 90-day period in his client's case. He said the time used for Miss Hearst's psychiatric evaluation should not count as part of the 90 days.

Carter set Nov. 20 to hear pretrial motions, including a motion to delay the trial.

"The trial date will not be absolute or binding if you bring in convincing proof along the way that she is not competent," the judge told Johnson.

The attorney said Carter had distorted findings of the three court-appointed psychiatrists who examined Miss Hearst when he ruled last week that she was mentally able to stand trial.

Johnson unsuccessfully sought to have the judge unseat the findings and conclusions of the doctors. But the issue will be taken up again at the pretrial hearing.

Miss Hearst, 21, was charged with bank robbery and using a weapon in a holdup in April, 1974, at a branch bank here. She is being held without bail in the San Mateo County Jail in nearby

Redwood City.

Miss Hearst was kidnaped by the Symbionese Liberation Army on Feb. 4, 1974. She later said in tape-recorded messages that she was joining the group.

Throughout her arraignment Miss Hearst sat intently facing the judge with her back to the crowded courtroom, where her father, San Francisco Examiner President Randolph A. Hearst, her mother, Catherine, and a sister sat.

Boro, who said Miss Fromme visited him several times at his apartment after they met in 1974, testified he demonstrated the basics of operating the .45-caliber automatic after she asked to see it. He also said she expressed interest in a .38-caliber gun she saw in a catalog.

"She started shoving the pistol into her handbag along with the holster and bullets," he said. "She abruptly got up and went for the door. I tried to stop her."

US Oilmen Plan Major Campaign

CHICAGO (UPI) — America's oilmen have launched a major campaign to polish their industry's image and block a looming threat that the largest oil giants might be broken up into smaller companies by congressional mandate.

Shaken by the suddenness and force with which the threat of an industry breakup appeared in the Senate last month, oil executives say no project has higher priority than their effort to tell their oil story.

A freshman senator who favors breaking up the big oil companies predicts Congress will pass a bill within one year — or two at most — to keep any single firm from producing, transporting, refining and retailing petroleum.

Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., says failure to make oil companies smaller and more competitive will only lead to eventual pressure for nationalization of the U.S. petroleum industry.

Hart told a news conference Monday that the drive to trim the power of big oil companies and make the industry more competitive originated with "the folks back home" and is likely to increase as more members of Congress hear from their constituents.

A vote last month by 45 senators to break up the oil companies came as a surprise, Hart said, but the sentiment indicated by that vote means a new bill to achieve the same goal is likely to reach Congress early this spring.

Hart's spoke at a news conference at the annual meeting of the Society of Independent Gasoline Marketers of America.

Angola Blacks March

LUANDA, Angola (UPI) — Troops from two black liberation movements marched on rival forces holding the capital of Luanda today only hours after Portugal pulled out of its last African territory, ending 500 years of colonial rule.

The joint army of the National Front for the Liberation of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola thrust at Luanda from three sides and vowed to "flatten" the warravaged capital.

The Soviet-backed Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola proclaimed itself sole ruler of the oil-rich West African nation at midnight Monday and hoisted its flag over Luanda.

The Portuguese high commissioner, Adm. Leonel Cardoso, lowered his country's red and green flag for the last time at sunset Monday, but would only transfer power to "the people of Angola."

Trainer Picks Favorites

By VIRGINIA SPILLER
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — When Rosey Reed of suburban El Cajon gets ready for a trip, she has to pack four horses and a lot of gear.

Reed is a professional horse trainer, has ridden horses to national and world championships, and hopes to "make the really big time" as a trainer.

"I plan to stay in this business all my whole life," she says. "But to hit the very top, I have to win a lot of championships, become well known, impress owners of expensive horses with the way I ride and with the way horses I have trained respond in the show ring."

She drives her own rig, a one-ton crew cab GMC truck with dual wheels and a 35-foot gooseneck trailer painted deep yellow with "Rosey Reed" across the sides in big black letters.

The gooseneck trailer, which fits up over the bed of the truck, preventing swing and making it easier to turn in the radius of the trailer, carries four horses and has a nine-foot dressing room for "lack," which includes saddles, bridles and such equipment, and Reed's costumes and personal effects.

She is a lissome young woman with long, pale blonde hair coiled in a big knot on the nape of her neck, which looks great under the top hat of the English hunter riding habit, and does not detract from her western garb.

Now 20, graduated from El Cajon Valley High School two years ago, she rode in her first parade when she was 3, "in an Indian costume, strapped on my black and white pony, Coconut." She won her first western pleasure class blue ribbon two weeks before her 5th birthday.

The family always was interested in horses, she says. "My dad, Leo Reed of Lakeside, was the first Appaloosa breeder in Southern California."

Reed literally has hundreds of show ribbons and awards, starting with many for "youngest exhibitor."

"I could hardly wait to be 8," she recalls, "so I could join the Tumbleweed Riding Club in nearby Lakeside."

Before she was 13, she had ridden in two Rose Parades in Pasadena, both times "riding Appies," Appaloosas, "all done up in silver saddles and bridles, and I was all sequinned up, too."

When her father opened El Cajon Riding Stables, Rosey guided groups on trail rides.

"That got dull," says Reed, "so dad put me with a professional trainer for three years to learn to ride hunters and jumpers."

Now the awards really began to stack up. Among them was the jumper championship award for riders 14 and under, which she took, riding the only Appaloosa in the class, in the Del Mar, Calif., Horse Show.

In California Professional Horseman's Association shows, she won championships in her age group, from the time she was 14 through 17, in jumper, hunting seat equitation, English pleasure.

She began working with her father, giving jumping and western riding lessons and training horses.

"By 1972," she said, "it had become my livelihood."

She rides, shows and trains "Thoroughbreds, quarter horses, all sorts of horses," but her favorite is the Appaloosa.

Campy Star

Pat Ast, campy star of Andy Warhol's "Heat," is working in the Goldie Hawn movie "The Duchess and the Dirt Water Fox." She credits Warhol with giving her fame and respect but hopes the new movie will be a stepping stone for more and better acting assignments.

Unspoiled Goldie

Goldie Hawn's dad, Ruthledge Hawn, is playing a small part in his daughter's latest picture, "The Duchess and the Dirt Water Fox." He says he's pleased that Goldie hasn't "gone Hollywood" and is down to earth. Hawn has been in the jewelry business, is a professional musician and is vice president of his daughter's corporation. Goldie owned a piece of "Shampoo" and she owns a piece of the current production. According to her father, she and Lee Grant may produce something together.

'That Cat' Assists In New Tumor Treatment

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (UPI) —

That Cat sits on her owner's lap now, purring just like any other pet. But the striped alley cat is more than an ordinary feline — she is the example of a successful experiment to fight some kinds of cancer in animals.

That Cat, found by Dorothy Brown of Albuquerque more than a decade ago, had a malignant tumor on her face. Veterinarians said the cat was beyond conventional treatment.

Miss Brown took her pet to Dr. Phillip Day, a veterinarian at the University of New Mexico, working with the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory studying the use of heat to treat tumors.

The procedure used, hyperthermia, has long been used to treat tumors but the New Mexico scientists have given it a new twist called "Localized Current Fields." They have reported major successes so far in their experiments.

But researchers emphasize that hyperthermia does not work with all kinds of cancer. It is another potential technique to treat cancer, not cure the disease.

Dr. Sterling Edwards, head of surgery at the university medical school, and LASL engineer Danny Doss are in charge of the joint effort funded by the National Cancer Institute and Energy Research and Development Administration. They have treated about 40 animals using hyperthermia.

That Cat is one of the project's successes. The cat's malignant tumor on its face is gone and scientists don't expect it to return.

The key to the success is a system Doss developed using heat produced by radio frequency currents for precisely localized treatment of tumor tissue.

Doss says medical scientists have known more than a century that tumors often grew smaller when patients ran a high fever. "By the 1930's, short-wave diathermy was being used to treat tumors," he says, "but its major drawback was that the heat was not well localized, nor was the temperature controlled."

Cancer cells are particularly sensitive to heat, he says, and much research has been devoted to its use, by itself and in combination with chemotherapy and radiotherapy, to treat these cells.

Doss says experiments have shown total regression of several kinds of benign and malignant tumors in cats, dogs, horses and even an elephant.

Using a compact generator operating off ordinary household current — costing $5,000 to manufacture — the scientists apply current to tumor tissue through several short hypodermic needles. The current is applied until the tumor temperature reaches 113 degrees Fahrenheit.

That temperature, maintained by a thermistor, kills malignant cells but has little effect on normal tissue when applied for the correct time period.

"We have sometimes seen good results after just one treatment in a matter of only a few days," Doss says. "The number of treatments varies, depending on the tumor, its location and so forth, but generally three 30-minute treatments have been sufficient to produce marked tumor regression."

"Used in combination with other therapy, hyperthermia does offer great promise," Doss says. "I believe the excellent results we have seen in animals may be duplicated, in the future, with people."

Infant Tops A Long Line

Leonard McRae Jr., infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard McRae of San Antonio, is the fifth generation representative of two Texas families, and the sixth generation of another.

Pampa relatives include his mother, the former Bonita Miller; Mrs. Bonita Hudson and Mrs. Oleta Bridwell, great-grandmothers; Mrs. Ola Worley and Mrs. Jess Bridwell, great-great-grandmothers; and W.H. "Buddy" Miller, grandfather. Another grandmother, Mrs. Charlotte Miller, lives in San Antonio. His great-great-great grandmother, Mrs. Elizabeth Hudson, lives in a rest home in Bridgeport. She is 99 years old.

Xi Beta Chi Plans Raffle

Xi Beta Chi Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi will sell raffle tickets for a Christmas tree skirt, it was decided at a recent meeting.

The drawing will be Dec. 1. In addition, plans were announced for the annual Thanksgiving Dinner to be Nov. 22, and Mrs. Sherry Carlson was selected 1976 Valentine Sweetheart to represent Xi Beta Chi Chapter in the International Beta Sigma Phi Sweetheart contest.

Recent chapter activities have included a hayride for members and rushees and their husbands Oct. 4, programs on "What Beta Sigma Phi Is" on Oct. 13, and "This Is My Country" Oct. 20. A "Come - As - You - Are" breakfast was held Oct. 18.

Alan Stang Sets Tuesday For Speech

Alan Stang, investigative reporter for "American Opinion" magazine will speak in Pampa at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Gray County Court House.

Stang travels on the national lecture circuit of the American Opinion Speakers Bureau. He will speak on "How Politicians Rob You." He is the author of three books, "It's Very Simple," "The Actor" and "The Highest Virtue." He also writes a nationally syndicated daily radio program, "The Alan Stang Report."

The lecture is sponsored by the Pampa Chapter of the John Birch Society. Tickets may be purchased at the B & B Pharmacy, the Hi-Land Pharmacy or at the door. Tickets are $2 for adults and $1 for students.

Mr. and Mrs. Scott Johnson invite you to hear Paul Burlison in Revival at Hobart Baptist Church tonight at 7:30.

People In The News

By United Press International MAO'S SPEECH LOSS

NEW YORK (UPI) — Chinese Communist Party Chairman Mao Tse-tung has lost so much control over his speaking facilities that he cannot conduct a normal conversation, according to Newsweek magazine.

In this week's edition, the magazine said Mao, in conversations with foreign visitors, is surrounded by three women assistants who read his lips and then confer on what he says. If he nods in agreement, interpreter Nancy Tang translates it for the visitor.

Despite his speech handicap, Newsweek said, the Chinese leader is still sharp. In his conversations with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, he spun off several wisecracks, including a complaint that Henry Kissinger is trying to do too much — "like catching 10 fleas with 10 fingers."

REVOLUTIONS COMPARED CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — America is in the midst of a revolution not unlike the American Revolution 200 years ago, and its outcome will be determined by efforts to "preserve the best we have."

CBS newsman Walter Cronkite told high school students during the weekend.

Cronkite, 59-year-old anchorman of the CBS Evening News, told 1,200 persons attending WBT's Annual High School Convocation Saturday that courage is needed to face today's problems.

The present revolution, said Cronkite, "is about man's aspirations, hopes and dreams and the means of realizing them."

"In our revolution you should constantly keep in mind what we want to do is preserve the best of what we have," he said.

WALLACE SAYS HE'S OK MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — Gov. George Wallace expects his presidential opponents to question his physical condition, but he insists he is healthy enough to serve eight years in the nation's highest office.

Wallace, 56, will announce his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination here Wednesday.

Dr. Hamilton Hutchinson, Wallace's personal physician, said Wallace can serve eight years as president. Despite the fact Wallace is paralyzed from the waist down from a 1972 attempt on his life, Hutchinson said he still is in better physical condition than some former presidents while they were in office.

DANCER ASKS ASYLUM LONDON (UPI) — A Soviet dancer touring Britain with a Russian folk dance company has applied to stay in England, the Home Office said Sunday night.

The Home Office said it had received an application from Syren Arutunian, 26, a member of the Armenian Dance Troupe, which performs traditional folk dances, "and it is being considered."

GRAHAM ON WATERGATE HONG KONG (UPI) —

Evangelist Billy Graham, admitting the aftermath of Watergate left him never wanting "to see another politician again," said today he later realized he had a "Christian commitment to be involved in times of social crisis."

During a news conference preceding his first crusade in Hong Kong in 19 years, Graham, frequent guest at the White House during the administration of President Richard Nixon, said, "My first reaction (after Watergate) was I never wanted to see another politician again."

But Graham said he realized his "Christian commitment is to be involved in social crisis."

Now that leaf-raking time is here, think about next Spring. Begin a compost pile. By using natural compost instead of artificial soil conditioners in your garden you can save money — and help save the fuel that's needed to make and transport the store-bought varieties.

Refurbishing your Fall and Winter wardrobe? Suits and vests are in fashion for both men and women. They're great for adapting to changing temperatures, indoors and out.

African Violet Society Elects New Officers

Officers for 1976 were elected at a recent meeting of the Pampa African Violet Society in the J.R. Carlson home.

Accepted after a report by the nominating committee were Mrs. Dan Glaxner, president; Mrs. Norman Walberg, vice president; Mrs. Lee Moore, secretary; Mrs. V.N. Osborn, treasurer; Mrs. Charles Gilson, reporter; Mrs. Holly Gray is in charge of the 1976 program.

Seven members and two guests were present at the meeting, which included a slide program on France and Guam.

Harvester Returnees

Returning off last year's district champion Pampa basketball team are, from left, junior Brian Bailey, senior Richard Lane and junior Donnie Hughes. Lane, a 6-0 forward, started last year and averaged 4.3 points a game. Lane was one of Pampa's defensive leaders. Bailey, 6-2, and Hughes, 6-4, were not starters but played a great deal, averaging 3.6 and 29.9 points per game, respectively. The three will start in Pampa's season opener against Odessa Ector at 7:45 p.m. Saturday in Harvester Fieldhouse.

IT IT SIMS TO ME Kansas, Pampa Net Big Upsets

By PAUL SIMS
Sports Editor

Apparently, John McKay's recent announcement that he would leave Southern Cal to become head football coach at Tampa, the National Football League's newest franchise, has had an adverse affect on USC's season.

The Trojans lost 13-10 to Stanford Saturday, and that game, coupled with the loss to California the week prior, has eliminated any USC hopes of a Pacific-8 championship and — just as important — a bid to a major bowl.

An even bigger upset Saturday happened when Kansas stunned Oklahoma 23-3, ending the Sooners' 28-game winning streak and 37-game unbeaten string. Oklahoma, unlike Southern Cal, will likely still go to a big bowl.

The Sooners probably will go to the Orange Bowl should they beat Nebraska Nov. 22. The winner of the Nebraska-Oklahoma matchup will probably meet the loser of the Ohio-State Michigan contest in the Orange Bowl. The loser, particularly if it's Nebraska, would likely go to either the Sugar or Cotton Bowl.

The Cotton Bowl's Southwest Conference host representative will probably be decided after the Texas-Texas A&M contest on Nov. 28 should those teams be unbeaten in conference play going into the game.

A three-way tie is possible, though. If A&M wins that game but loses to Arkansas the following week, the Aggies, Razorbacks and Longhorns could tie for the conference championship.

Oklahoma's 20-point loss to Kansas wasn't nearly as dramatic a way to end a long unbeaten string as the way Pampa ended Amarillo Palo's Druo's 21-game string Friday in Harvester Stadium.

The 12-0 win was in doubt until the final few minutes. It was also dramatic for Pampa's defense to pick up the shutout by stopping Palo Duro with a goal-line stand on the Dons' final series of the game.

Pampa can clinch a tie for the District 3-AAA championship with a win over Amarillo High Friday in Amarillo. Amarillo Caprock and Palo Duro, currently tied with Pampa for the district leadership at 3-1, meet Saturday in Dick Bivins Stadium. Should Pampa and Palo Duro win, the Harvesters, by virtue of the 12-0 win over the Dons, will represent District 3-AAA in post-season action.

The question is, if Pampa beats Amarillo, will Palo Duro, which then would have no chance to make the playoffs, play wholeheartedly against Caprock. Caprock, no matter what Pampa does on Friday, would earn the playoff berth with a win over Palo Duro. The Longhorns defeated Pampa 34-22 in the first district game.

Pampa must beat a good Amarillo High team to have any hope at all of advancing to the playoffs. The sandies, in spite of a 21-13 upset loss to Amarillo Tascosa Saturday, have nothing at stake, and it is that kind of team which can give a contender troubles. Just ask Amarillo High.

Tascosa had nothing to lose going into that game.

Amarillo sports writer Pitt Powell listed the top four teams in the district in order, prior to last weekend's game. They were Palo Duro, Amarillo High, Caprock and Pampa. Palo Duro and Amarillo lost. Caprock struggled to a 7-0 halftime lead against Berger and managed a 21-0 win.

Wellington and Clarendon are both 6-0 going into the final District 2-A game of the season. Those teams will meet, with the championship on the line, at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Wellington.

Although Wellington is ranked No. 2 in the state by at least one poll, the game should be an example of high school football at its best. It's also difficult to predict a winner.

In last week's games Wellington (7-1-1 for the season) crushed Claude 62-0, while Wellington (8-0-2) rolled over McLean 49-7.

Actually, the top FOUR teams in District 2-A are solid. Memphis bounced Wheeler 51-0 on the season after being picked to win the 2-A title, and Shamrock (4-5) whipped Silvertown 32-0.

Another district championship, 1-B's, will be decided Friday, as Lefors (2-6) hosts Groom (8-0-1). Lefors upset the Tigers a year ago and went on to play in the state semifinals.

Groom may have its best teams in history. The Tigers Friday erased a 54-8 win over Booker, a team Lefors had beaten on 7-6 the week before. Lefors did, however, look impressive in whipping Texline 35-14 last week.

Chiefs Fumble Less, Topple Dallas

IRVING, Tex. (UPI) — It all seemed to depend on which team could hold onto the ball the most Monday night, and although Kansas City did not do exactly a super job in that department, it was better than the other people could do.

The Kansas City Chiefs fumbled the ball seven times in their struggle with the Dallas Cowboys but managed to recover on four occasions. Dallas, meanwhile, fumbled the ball five times, did not get a one back, had two interceptions and dropped a sure touchdown pass. All of that sloppiness added up to a 34-31 Kansas City upset in a marathon game that took up almost 3½ hours.

"This is a big win for us," said Kansas City coach Paul Wiggin. "This win probably is as exciting as our win over Oakland. There's no explanation for all the fumbles, except that there was a lot of hard hitting going on out there. We were lucky to win the turnover ratio, but there have been games when we haven't."

Cowboy coach Tom Landry found himself without an explanation for his club's shabby performance.

"Fumbles are just something that happen," he said. "We were lucky to be in the ballpark with them. The fumbles beat us more than anything and we were lucky to have escaped with anything."

Kansas City running back Ed Podolak produced three Kansas City touchdowns — two of them coming within 23 seconds of each other just before the end of the first half. The third was the one that won the game, and came with 10 minutes to play.

Podolak's five-yard touchdown reception from Mike Livingston finally ended a scoring barrage that saw the lead change hands six times.

Safety Mike Senibaugh and linebacker Willie Lanier then protected the Kansas City lead with interceptions that ran the Cowboys' turnover total to seven.

The victory improved Kansas City's record to 4-4 and kept alive the Chiefs' hopes of catching Oakland in the AFC West. Dallas, meanwhile, fell a game behind Washington and St. Louis in the NFC East with a 5-3 record.

Kansas City had produced a 51-yard field goal by Jan Stenerud and a touchdown by defensive end John Matuszak on a fumble recovery, but still trailed 17-10 with time running out in the first half.

But Podolak scored from the one with 1:20 remaining in the second quarter and, following a fumble by Doug Dennison on the ensuing kickoff, Podolak dashed in for the 11 to suddenly put the Chiefs in front at the half, 24-17.

After Dallas had tied the game in the third quarter, Stenerud put the Chiefs back in front with a 44-yard field goal and after Dallas moved in front again late in the third quarter, Kansas City came up with another fumble recovery and the Livingston to Podolak touchdown pass that decided the game.

Roger Staubach produced touchdown runs of nine and one yards for Dallas, and three touchdown passes of 15 and 47 yards to Golden Richards. Toni Fritsch contributed a 31-yard field goal for Dallas.

Staubach's excellent night was wiped out by the consistent with which Dallas blundered. The Cowboy quarterback hit on 17 of 31 throws for 243 yards.

Podolak kept Kansas City in the contest in the first half, gaining 75 yards to go along with his two touchdowns runs. The Cowboys, however, shut the veteran running back down in the second half and he finished the game with only 88 yards on 20 carries.

Dallas' mistakes began early with the Cowboys losing a fumble at the Chiefs' one yard line on their second possession.

The next Cowboy fumble came from Preston Pearson midway in the second quarter at the Dallas four. The ball ricocheted off Pearson and shot into the end zone where Matuszak fell on it for a Kansas City touchdown.

Dallas appeared to have overcome its mistakes, though, when it took a 31-27 lead on Staubach's second touchdown pass to Richards. The Cowboys then regained the ball and moved up field before Charlie Young cost the Cowboys the chance for more points by fumbling at the Chiefs' 30.

Dallas regained the ball without losing the lead, but turned it right back again on a fumble by Robert Newhouse at the Cowboys' 41 as Emmett Thomas recovered for the Chiefs. This time the Chiefs capitalized to score the winning touchdown.

USOC Patching Turmoil

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Presidential Commission on Olympic Sports hopes to prevent any future Jack Langer-type incidents by reorganizing the U.S. Olympic Committee to prevent conflicts between the NCAA and AAU. Yale University wanted Langer, a Jew, to be able to compete in the Maccabiah Games in 1969 on the basketball team, the one sport the NCAA refused to sanction.

"Yale was given a two-year suspension covering competition in any post-season activity in any sport and playing on television. Langer was just used as a pawn in the NCAA's battle with the AAU," said Michael Harrigan, executive director of the 22-member USOC commission.

The commission, created in June by President Ford, will be reporting back to the President in February on an overview of the problems and an in-depth analysis of the USOC and other major sports groups, including the AAU and NCAA, as they relate to participation in international competition in Olympic sports.

Included will be recommendations for the President to deal with amateur sports problems. The commission will submit a second report next September with an analysis of the financial and facilities requirements of each sport and recommend ways to provide needed funds.

The commission has no power over domestic amateur sports. Harrigan said the reorganization of the USOC was a key to improving the situation.

"We need to establish a vertical structure to the USOC where any organizations involved with a sport are involved in the governing of a sport," Harrigan said. "We need to have Group B and lower organizations in the USOC, as it's presently constituted."

into a governing position too. "No other country as far as we know has the multiorganization problem we do. No one has the university athletics situation. The result is that athletes are denied their rights and facilities."

"It's not going to be possible to 'bring home the bacon' in the Olympics until we get this situation straightened out."

In the first day of the two-day hearings Monday, the commission called as witnesses USOC President Philip O. Krumm and Executive Vice-President Robert J. Kane.

Krumm called for the establishment of a national federation via the mechanism of changing Public Law 805, which grants the USOC its charter.

Cornhuskers 2nd A&M 3rd in Poll

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Kansas upset of Oklahoma gave Ohio State an even firmer grip on the No. 1 ranking in the latest United Press International Board of Coaches college football ratings.

The Buckeyes, 9-0, received 39 of the 42 first-place votes cast and totalled 417 points in the weekly balloting.

Replacing Oklahoma as Ohio State's chief challenger was Nebraska as the 9-0 Cornhuskers received the remaining three first-place votes and finished with a total of 373 points. Texas A&M, 8-0, was a solid choice for third place with 303 points, while Ohio State's Big Ten rival Michigan, 7-0-2, was fourth with 271 points. The Wolverines barely edged Alabama, 8-1, for the fourth position as the Crimson Tide totalled 269 points.

Texas, 8-1, was sixth and Oklahoma fell to seventh. Undefeated Arizona State, 9-0, climbed to eighth and Notre Dame regained the top 10 as the No. 9 team. Penn State, upset by North Carolina State, dropped to 10th.

Arizona was 11th, followed by a logjam of Pacific 8 and Big Eight teams in the second 10. Colorado was 12th, California 13th and UCLA 14th. Florida captured the No. 15 spot, but Missouri was 16th and Southern California tied Arkansas for 17th. Kansas and Georgia shared the No. 19 spot.

Podolak's five-yard touchdown reception from Mike Livingston finally ended a scoring barrage that saw the lead change hands six times.

Safety Mike Senibaugh and linebacker Willie Lanier then protected the Kansas City lead with interceptions that ran the 20 years he played ball. He says the people in the hospital are treating him fine.

Nellie Fox, the American League's MVP in 1959, is the type person you'd never forget once you had the pleasure of seeing him play baseball, or the extra added enjoyment of meeting and knowing him, and it's nice to report that none of his friends are forgetting him now.

They've all been writing or calling, Jim Busby, Jim Landis, even World Series hero Joe Morgan, whom Fox helped when both were at Houston.

"I appreciate all the cards and letters and mean to answer them all as soon as I get a little stronger," he says.

Hospital officials claim it's best for him if he rests more, but Nellie Fox' eyes lit up over one visitor he had Monday, a fellow he played against for a half dozen years.

"Man, you're wearin' your hair a little different," Foxie greeted Brooks Robinson, propping himself up in bed.

Cancer Won't Stop Fox

NEW YORK (UPI) — Most of the people who know Nellie Fox are crazy about him, so it's only natural that the first thing they do is try to hide the truth from him.

This is to let them know they're wasting their time.

Nellie Fox knows the truth. He's completely aware of the reason he's a patient in the Cancer Research Center at the University of Maryland Hospital in downtown Baltimore.

More than that, he has always had a good head on his shoulders and never been intimidated by anyone or anything he could get in there and take a good swing at, which maybe explains why he never panicked over the word cancer, nor is he about to now.

The 47-year-old ex-Chicago White Sox second baseman knows some malignant lymph nodes were removed from his legs and that he is receiving chemotherapy treatments, so nobody has to go to all that trouble trying to keep anything from him.

Foxie says he feels "a little weak," but other than that he has no complaints even though a couple of cracked ribs make it difficult for him to move around in bed. Nellie Fox never complained about a thing in the PROVO, UTAH (UPI) — The University of Texas-El Paso won the NCAA track and field championship in 1975 with 55 points, all but 11 of them scored by foreign athletes who probably will represent their native countries in the 1976 Olympics.

Health Insurance Would Cost $2 Billion

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A government study says that perhaps for less than $2 billion a year national health insurance plan could protect all Americans under 65 from the financial ravages of catastrophic illnesses or injuries.

A House Ways and Means subcommittee on health planned hearings today on national health insurance proposals. The chairman, Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, said in a recent letter to a colleague the Democrats should get together on health insurance policy that "could form the basis of the position of the Democratic Party."

The report estimated eight million persons, or little more than 4 per cent of the population under 65, is likely to have a catastrophic illness. Of these, 72,000 would have expenses of more than $10,000 a year, 435,000 over $5,000, 1.2 million over $3,000 and $6.4 million over $1,000.

Fourteen types of conditions were cited as requiring the lengthy or repeated hospitalization that a catastrophic insurance plan would likely cover. These included kidney disease, premature birth, respiratory tuberculosis, cancer, diabetes, chronic brain disorders psychosis, nervous system disease.

heart disease or strokes, various types of fractures, head injuries and burns.

Sens. Russell Long of Louisiana and Abraham Ribicoff of Connecticut have proposed legislation that would provide benefits for most persons whose medical expenses exceeded $2,000 or whose hospitalization exceeded 60 days. Their bill also would cover persons over 65.

The government report — based on a study of federal employees under 65 — said catastrophic illness insurance coverage, with the possible exception of psychiatric benefits, could be low-cost and essentially non-inflationary.

The government study focused on one aspect of national health insurance — catastrophic coverage. The study was prepared by the consulting firm Arthur D. Little, Inc. under contract with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The report said 1975 costs for one catastrophic illness proposal would be $1.94 billion for the 184 million persons under age 65.

The study said, "live could be saved at little cost since a relatively small percentage of people require the highest medical expenditures — $10,000 or more in one year."

Corley Gets Electric Chair

WACO, Tex. (UPI) — A psychiatrist says Edward Eldon Corley, sentenced to die for the murder of a Chapel Hill church organist, is a man without a conscience and a sociopath who cannot be rehabilitated.

"He has no regard for another person's life," said Dr. James Grigson during Monday's sentencing phase of Corley's capital murder trial. "Corley has no conscience."

Corley trembled visibly before the jury returned the death sentence, but he only nodded when Judge Carl C. Anderson told him he would die in the electric chair.

The jury of nine women and three men, the same panel that decided the guilt of the 31-year-old Tyler construction worker last week, took 75 minutes to reach its decision on the death sentence.

He was convicted of murdering Vicki Lynn Morris, 21. The woman was abducted from a Chapel Hill church, raped and shot to death Sept. 14, 1974.

"You should not feel one moment's remorse about your verdict," Anderson told the jurors. "You should not leave here feeling that you have done anything other than what's right."

The key witnesses at Monday's sentencing hearing were Grigson and Dr. Tynus McNeel, another psychiatrist. Both said Corley could not be rehabilitated.

During the trial, Corley's attorneys tried to prove that he was insane or unable to understand what he was doing and was deprived of his right to counsel after his Sept. 17, 1974 arrest.

Psychiatrists called as defense witnesses testified Corley had the mentality of a 10-year-old and could be easily influenced.

But two other psychiatrists testified Corley knew right from wrong and knew what he was doing at the time of the slaying, despite his low intelligence quotient.

"Corley knows the difference between right and wrong, but he places little value on it," said McNeel, a Tyler psychiatrist. He said Corley would likely commit further acts of violence if he was freed.

The defense called only one witness, Mrs. Curtis Honzell, the defendant's mother.

"I knew all his life that he was sick," she said. "I didn't know what to do. I tried. I tried. I feel so guilty right now."

Probation Revoked After DWI Charge Here

By ANNA BURCHELL
Pampa News Staff

A 27 year old father of three children pleaded guilty Monday to charges; his probation was revoked.

Leroy Rivera of Pampa was granted a probation sentence in July. Gray County Judge Don Cain Monday revoked the probation and ordered that he begin serving a one-year sentence in county jail.

"You knew that when you were placed on probation that it could be revoked for walking into a bar?" asked John W. Warner, county attorney.

Rivera said he did know that. He also was sentenced to serve six months in county jail and fined $100 for driving while his license was suspended.

"You chose to drive on several occasions after being placed on probation," Warner asked.

"And how many accidents did you have?"

Rivera said he had two accidents. Warner also reminded him that he was to support his dependants as a condition of probation.

He is one month behind on child support which Judge Grainger McIlhenny set at $50 per month per child.

In asking that the probation be revoked Warner said, "Society must do something to protect itself. We are very fortunate that Mr. Rivera has not killed someone or injured himself."

David Martindale, Rivera's attorney, said his client is not a "hardened criminal," and asked the court to lower the jail time to six months.

Judge Cain set the fine at $100 for driving while license was suspended and sentenced Rivera to six months in jail. The sentence is to run concurrent with the DWI sentence.

In seeking a lower jail term, Martindale said the Gray County jail is "a fine facility, compared with others, but you get your head straight pretty fast up there."

Martindale said his client needs to serve some time.

"But 1 1/2 years might embitter him," he added.

In other action Monday, Judge Cain granted a 50-year-old Amarillo woman a six-month probation term and assessed a $200 fine after she pleaded guilty to charges of driving while intoxicated.

Joan Marshall Wolfe, 50, told the court she could live up to the terms of probation. She had no prior convictions.

"DWI is a serious offense," said Judge Cain. "In 1974, the Department of Public Safety counted over 3,000 fatal injuries with 40 to 50 per cent involving someone who had been drinking."

The judge said if Mrs. Wolfe lives up to the probation terms, it will be as though she were never charged with that offense.

'Sugarland Express' Causes Calls

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — The director of the Texas Department of Public Safety says his office has been flooded with telephone calls since NBC's airing of the movie "Sugarland Express."

"I want the citizens of Texas to know that 'Sugarland Express' was not a true story or documentary, but a highly fictionalized screen play," Wilson Speir said Monday. "It most certainly was not endorsed by this department."

"The vehicles wrecked in the movie were owned by the film makers and were not DPS equipment," he said.

He said the network did law enforcement a serious disservice by televising the film, shown Saturday night, without saying it was fictionalized. He said many of those calling DPS offices criticized the department for events portrayed in the film.

"The characters in the film were actors," he said. "It is my belief that no law enforcement officer of this department or any other police agency in Texas would conduct himself in such an unprofessional manner."

The plot of "Sugarland Express," which starred Goldie Hawn, portrayed an escape from a Texas prison unit and subsequent pursuit of the inmates by DPS and other law enforcement officials.

Butz Requests Food Research

HOUSTON (UPI) — Nations must pool agriculture research and increase productivity to prevent a worldwide food shortage in the next generation, says Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz.

"The real challenge lies ahead," Butz said. "The world's No. 1 problem in the generation ahead is how to feed 80 per cent more people from the same amount of land."

Butz, speaking to the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges Monday, said although American farmers are increasing productivity, they cannot feed the world.

"Instead, we must find an acceptable way to establish a worldwide pool of knowledge from which all nations will be able to draw and boost their own food production," Butz said.

At a news conference Butz was asked if the nation had a moral commitment to feed the rest of the world.

"I don't know if we have a moral commitment, but we have had a political commitment for years and it will continue," he said.

He said a main ingredient of American farm success is the freedom of farmers to seek profit.

"The desire to make a profit is the invisible cement that makes the individual farmer put together ... the science, capital and management that gets the job done," Butz said.

He said prices won't come down because of the profit need.

"If we want to keep cheap food at home for the next 10 years, we better put a little profit in the farms," he said.

Politicians To Be Topic For Speech

"How Politicians Rob You" will be the program topic for a meeting tonight of the Pampa Chapter of the John Birch Society.

The meeting is set for 7:30 p.m. in the Gray County Courthouse with Alan Stang, and investigative reporter for American Opinion and The Review of the News magazines, as speaker.

"Inflation is a hidden tax that causes your income to lose its value," said Stang. "Many politicians do not want you to understand this because with inflation, it is possible for them to tax you without taking the blame."

Gene and Don's TV Service

Don Childers and Gene Leigh

Gene and Don's TV Service, owned by Gene Leigh and Don Childers, is one of the oldest shops of its kind in the Pampa area.

Established in 1955, Childers says they specialize in direct owner customer relationship.

"It isn't that we sell something and never see the customer again," he said. "We set it up ourselves. Gene and Don were in business when color television came in."

"It is a fascinating business to keep up with the changing techniques," said Childers.

Gene and Don, now located at 300 W. Foster, will be moved to 304 W. Foster by Dec. 1.

The firm sells Sylvania televisions and other appliances.

The owners expressed appreciation for the business of Pampa and area residents.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 12
Your birthday today: You swing into a healthy cycle of personal growth by streamlining your possessions, methods and position. Skills related to earning improve markedly with a little extra effort. You're tempted to spread yourself too thin socially and to allow others to know too much about your private life. Be discreet this year! Today's natives often thrive best far from their birthplace.

Aries [March 21-April 19]: You have a chance to increase your income by an open move. Avoid secrecy. Check technical advice, get a second opinion and defer acting on it until you think the problem through again.

Taurus [April 20-May 20]: Financial interests are your own affair, not a conversation piece to amuse or impress your friends. You'd be appalled at some of theirs—if you only knew! The soft sell works best today.

Gemini [May 21-June 20]: Anything you do crosses somebody up somewhere, so be reasonable and make what amends you can when trouble breaks out. Business deals go well. Settle them early and quit while you're ahead.

Cancer [June 21-July 22]: Love and money matters both pick up progress; just make sure to keep them separated. Disputes can be reconciled and forgiven. Influential people help out if they feel it won't attract attention.

Leo [July 23-Aug. 22]: Family and neighborhood concerns are related, but be discreet about details of home and personal arrangements. Money is elusive and all too easily spent. Travel and public presentations are favored.

Virgo [Aug. 23-Sept. 22]: Work done early has firm and lasting results. Late in the day, consolidate, regroup and correct minor errors before they become major. Romance may cause you to make serious declarations.

Libra [Sept. 23-Oct. 22]: Watch the small items to save yourself extra work later. You must make decisions in your social life. Commitments are in the making.

Scorpio [Oct. 23-Nov. 21]: Trim excesses, drop losing ventures and find places for surplus equipment. A search for odd information turns up a gem if you have the right ideas. Youngsters need guidance.

Sagittarius [Nov. 22-Dec. 21]: Make sure you spell out what you want. If you are tactful, everybody benefits. Romance thrives and some ties made now are permanent. Formalities are favored.

Capricorn [Dec. 22-Jan. 19]: Go ahead and make those purchases if you've looked into them closely enough. Afternoon dealings are less fortunate and better postponed for study.

Aquarius [Jan. 20-Feb. 18]: Easy come, easy go is today's main quality. You gain more in the long run by taking no more than is fair and by sharing with associates who have been cooperative.

Pisces [Feb. 19-March 20]: You gain perspective this morning. Begin with self-interest and move on to aid those you love and respect. Call it quits when your business judgment becomes overoptimistic in later hours.

GREEK TOURISM ATHENS (UPI) — Tourists visiting Greece brought $290.1 million of foreign exchange into the country during the first seven months of 1975, the Bank of Greece reported.
The revenue marked an increase of $35.4 million (13.9 per cent) over the January-July period of 1974 and an increase of $33.6 million (13.1 per cent) over 1973 figures.
The bank said tourism in Greece during the month of July brought in $81.8 million in foreign exchange.

FISHERDOG SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (UPI) — The Illinois Department of Conservation reported in a recent edition of "Outdoor Highlights" that there is an Arizona fishing license made out to George Cockapoo.
The department's newsletter said the license reads: "Male, 20 lb. 1 ft-6 inch, white hair, brown eyes, born Jan. 1, 1974."
The newsletter also said, "In case you're wondering, George is a dog. Owner Don Whitacre takes him fishing every time he goes, and decided the dog should have his own license. He's also got his own rod, fishing cap and tailored life-jacket, but Don says he's a lousy caster!"
