

Russia prepared for arms limitation

MOSCOW (UPI) — Italian Communist leader Enrico Berlinguer bluntly stated today that his party has the right to set its own policies, independent of the Kremlin.

He told the 25th congress of the Soviet Communist party that Italian Communists would continue to seek a "democratic way out" with Socialists and Christian Democrats, with full respect for existing individual and civic liberties.

Despite several warnings by Soviet and Kremlin-line orators about parties that jeopardize the unity of the Communist movement, presumably including that of Italy, Berlinguer pulled no punches in calling for an independent path.

"We are for the open and frank confrontation of diverse experiences and positions," he said. "It is well known that in the Communist movement there exist different points of view, even on important questions."

Berlinguer said differences "should be discussed in a climate of amity, taking into account the inalienable right of each party to equality and respect for its autonomy."

Berlinguer said, in fact, that allowing independence to each party would strengthen rather than weaken the Communist movement.

"The autonomous development of each party constitutes a decisive factor for the progress of the movement toward socialism and for the very creative development of our theory," he said.

Berlinguer said he was convinced that the success of the Italian Communist party—the largest in the West and the winner of a third of the votes in regional elections last June—was due to its ability to adapt "to the special characteristics of the historic, civil and political development in our country."

Earlier, an expert on American affairs said the Soviet Union wants progress on arms limitation and is prepared to give the United States details of Soviet weapons that are similar to American weapons it wants banned.

Georgi Arbatov referred to a statement by Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev Tuesday that the Soviets had proposed a ban on the American B1 bomber and the missile-carrying Trident submarine as well as on similar Soviet systems.

Brezhnev said at the time, "Deplorably, these proposals were not accepted by the U.S. side" but remained on offer.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said, "We found it to be a one-sided proposition inasmuch as they were never willing to discuss what equivalent systems they were thinking of banning or limiting."

Arbatov, director of the Institute of the U.S.A. and Canada, said in a news conference the Soviets had "analogous systems" to the American weapons.

"It is not a question of trading a submarine for a machine gun," he said, adding that details would be given to American Strategic Arms Limitation Talks negotiators "if they want to discuss it."

Brezhnev's remarks came in his keynote speech opening the 25th Communist party congress, in its fourth day today. Arbatov's called his news conference to allow foreign reporters to ask questions on the speeches to date.

Debate at the congress has settled into a harmonious pattern of moderation, despite a friendly plea by Romania to let small Communist nations determine their own political future.

Romania's Nicolae Ceausescu made his customary plea Thursday for the independence of small countries from the might of big countries like the Soviet Union.

But the plea was oblique and mild, and well spiced with praise for the Soviets.

Alvaro Cunhal, the Portuguese Communist party leader and a Stalinist hard-liner, told the congress he did not believe in leading a revolutionary minority to power by force.

Even mention of Soviet officialdom's archenemy, 1975 Nobel Peace Prize-winner

Andrei Sakharov, was relatively restrained and indirect.

Sakharov, who was not at the conference, told UPI he was the first to agree with the fellow scientist who objected to his Western title — "father of the Soviet hydrogen bomb."

For the most part, speaker after speaker reiterated the concepts expressed by General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev on the opening day, trumpeting Communist achievements and avowing the continuation of detente.

Many speakers included a denunciation of China, but Ceausescu gently begged to differ. He said Romanians believe they have the right to be on friendly terms with all Communist parties, presumably including China.

He said every Communist party has the right to its own political line and strategy, and called for "free and independent relations of complete equality between nations."

Turdakun Usubaliyev, the Communist party chief of Kirgizia bordering on China, denied reports that appeared recently in the Chinese and Western press that there had been clashes along his frontier.

Cunhal was quoted by a congress spokesman as having "refuted claims that the Communist party in Portugal wanted to seize power with a revolutionary minority."

"We are not Blanquists," he said, referring to followers of the 19th-century advocate of direct revolutionary action, Louis Auguste Blanqui.

The new president of the Academy of Sciences, Anatoly Alexandrov, told the 5,000 delegates in the Kremlin palace of congresses that it was "amazing the way they speak in the West of a certain well-known person as the father of the atomic bomb."

"There was no father," he said. "Thousands and thousands of our people worked on the project. This was the result of a collective mind."

They laughed, made him jump

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — Nineteen years ago, Raymond C. Britt says, he stood on a narrow bridge over the Alabama River with four other Ku Klux Klansmen and watched a 25-year-old black man plead for his life.

Willie Edwards Jr. was "crying, sobbing and begging," but it did him no good. Accused of some unspecified insult to a white woman, he climbed to the railing of the bridge and, with a pistol at his head, leaped into the darkness.

The Klansmen drove away "laughing and joking," Britt says, and three months later Edwards' body was found.

Britt no longer finds it funny. "I lived with this for 19 years," he testified Wednesday. "When they asked me, I told the truth."

The 44-year-old mobile home salesman's testimony was enough for County Court Judge Sai Taylor to order the case of the other three Klansmen taken to a grand jury. Prosecutors said they would send the murder charges to the jury Monday.

Britt, who turned state's evidence, was not charged. The three men charged with the murder of Edwards on Jan. 23, 1957, are William "Sonny" Kyle Livingston, 38, a bail bondsman; James York, 43, a retired city sanitation worker; and Henry Alexander, 46, a plumbing contractor, all of Montgomery.

An investigator for the attorney general's office, Tom Ward, said he reopened the case last Dec. 31 when Livingston asked him if he remembered "that nigger truck driver" who had jumped off a bridge. He quoted Livingston as boasting "I was there."

Ironically, Edwards, a grocery truck driver, turned out not to be the man the Klansmen were seeking.

Lee Williams, a driver for the same supermarket chain, testified that a third driver "didn't report for work that night and Edwards was sent on the trip," the first time Edwards had ever driven a company truck. Williams said he had heard the driver Edwards replaced that night was involved with a white woman on his route.

The drowning of Edwards took place just 13 days after 10 black churches and ministers' homes were bombed following the integration of the Montgomery bus system. Britt and the three defendants were charged with bombings but not convicted.

Judge dismisses charges against Attica inmates

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UPI) — State Supreme Court Justice Frank R. Bayger, saying "there can be no useful purpose served by continuing," has dismissed all charges against 10 former Attica Prison inmates, who had been accused of kidnapping guards during the nation's bloodiest prison riot in 1971.

Bayger's decision Thursday followed a motion to dismiss the charges "in the interests of justice" by chief Attica Prosecutor Alfred J. Scotti.

Another state Supreme Court Justice, Carman F. Ball, took under advisement Scotti's request to dismiss charges against three other inmates and the only state trooper indicted in connection with the uprising that claimed 43 lives. Thirty-nine died when state troopers and correction officers stormed the prison on Sept. 13, 1971.

"Personally I am not at all sure that justice will be accomplished by the granting of this motion," said Bayger. "However, in view of the unique prosecutorial responsibility associated with the Attica investigation, there can be no useful purpose served by continuing."

In seeking the dismissals of all but one pending indictment, Scotti harshly criticized the state's investigation of the rebellion.

"There is one standard of justice for all," the special deputy attorney general said.

"The name 'Attica' should be a symbol, not only of riot and death, but also of the capacity of our system of criminal justice to redress its wrongs," Scotti said in an eight-page statement, which included an attack on the state's investigation of the riot and the prosecution effort.

"Serious failures to comply with basic investigatory practices make it impossible, now, to conduct an effective investigation," Scotti said. He called the failures "flagrant deficiencies in the state police investigation of the retaking."

Scotti's action left only one charge pending, a murder indictment against former inmate Mariano Gonzales, now a fugitive. He is accused of killing fellow-inmate Mickey Privaterra before police re-took the maximum-security facility.

Scotti also said that two potential indictments stemming from the uprising were still being investigated. Both involve "serious criminal conduct by law enforcement officers."

Police try to fit suicide puzzle

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Texas police today are trying to fit together pieces of a puzzle that led to the suicide of a young, promising Alabama manufacturing executive who shot himself in a Texas hotel room rather than talk to police about a murder.

Jerry Martine Pittman, 30, of Center Point, Ala., shot himself in an Abilene, Tex., hotel room Monday before police could question him about the murder of a secretary and the shooting of her boss at an Abilene mobile home sales lot.

The Abilene businessman, who survived the shooting, said Pittman came into his office, pulled a gun, ordered him and a secretary to lie face down on the floor, then shot each in the back of the head and drove away in the woman's car.

Before police could capture

Pittman they found him in his room dead. They said he shot himself.

"Perhaps the most tragic thing about the whole case," said Abilene Detective Garland Wade, "is that there seems to be no rhyme or reason connected with it. He apparently just wanted a car, but then after he got it he went to this hotel with it."

When police found an Air Force serviceman's identification and duffel bag in Pittman's hotel room, another piece of the puzzle was added.

Charles Scott, of Pine Bluff Ark., told police his recollection was hazy but he remembers being beaten and shot. He was found near Little Rock Saturday unconscious with four bullets in his head. The airman is in critical condition, but police hope to question him further when his condition is favorable.

The airman, who was stationed at Columbus AFB, Miss., says he recalls picking up a life-long friend but he doesn't know who shot him.

Pittman's wife says she last heard from her husband when he called last Friday to say he would be home soon from his job at Butler Manufacturing in Birmingham. She said they were planning a weekend in Florida.

She reported her husband missing the following day.

Lee Nelson, plant manager at Butler, said, "He was topnotch. He seemed to have everything going for him."

"We just can't believe this has happened."

No preempt for Angie

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford's recent televised news conference on CIA reforms was set at 8 p.m. est instead of a more popular later hour to avoid preempting "Policewoman" — one of his favorite television programs.

The President's television adviser, Robert Mead, said Ford is so fond of the show starring Angie Dickinson that it was the determining factor in choosing the time for the news conference Feb. 17.

At the start of the news conference, Ford announced a reorganization of the U.S. intelligence community. Mead, speaking in San Francisco, said that was "a pretty important subject, and one the people needed and wanted to know about."

"My recommendation to the President was 9 p.m. EST," said Mead. "More viewers on the East Coast... Midwest, the 6 o'clock viewer out here (California), as opposed to the 5 o'clock viewer. It couldn't be done and I'll tell you why. Policewoman was on at 9 p.m. That's one of the President's favorite shows."

Committeemen endorse Ford

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Twelve former Republican National Committee chairmen today unanimously endorsed President Ford's presidential candidacy.

Ford's performance since he took over the presidency in August, 1974, had earned him their endorsement, the former chairmen said.

William Miller, a former GOP party leader and vice presidential candidate on the 1964 ticket with Sen. Barry M. Goldwater, R-Ariz., told reporters after a White House breakfast meeting with Ford, "We are united in support of President Ford for the nomination of our party and for election."

Miller said, "We feel we represent three decades of the Republican party... and the President's performance for the past 19 months leads us to believe he deserves the nomination of the party."

Ford invited eight of the ex-chairmen to the breakfast, along with current chairman Mary Louise Smith, who must remain impartial between Ford and three ailing former party leaders: Ohio's current national committeeman Ray Bliss; New Jersey's Guy Gabrielson and Thurston B. Morton of Kentucky, brother of Rogers Morton.

Ford Thursday said Richard M. Nixon's trip to China may have hurt his campaign in the New Hampshire primary, but he would not want to make that categorical comment at this time.

Ford was interviewed by Ralph Renick of Miami television station WTVJ.

The President's remarks about Nixon were tougher Thursday than Wednesday when he told members of the Inland Press Association he thought the former president's trip had only a "minimal effect" on his election chances.

His second thoughts came after a strategy meeting with his political lieutenants, most of whom had expressed strong beliefs that the Nixon trip had hurt Ford.

"I think the weight of the evidence we have so far — we don't have all of the evidence in — is that it probably was harmful," Ford said.

Ford gave a reception for members of the Republican National Committee Thursday evening and Rogers Morton, his political counselor, expressed the belief that most of its members supported Ford.

He noted their "enthusiastic" applause "for Ford, who in a brief speech forecast a GOP victory Nov. 2.

Ford told the gathering the "economic trends are all good" and said "we are going to continue to get good economic news."

Ford heads south this weekend for a second round of campaigning in Florida.

He said in the WTVJ interview he is encouraged but hesitates to "pick a number" on how well he will do in the March 9 primary.

He also repeated it was "not inconceivable" that Reagan could be his vice presidential candidate.

Security system took over the program in January, 1974.

The 24 per cent error rate "has the appearance of very serious mismanagement," Cardwell said, but it's lower than the 30 per cent error rate for family welfare across the nation.

The errors resulted in part from "nightmarish problems," Cardwell said, and there's little chance that the error rate will ever drop below 15 per cent.

Of the $547 million in missed federal and state SSI funds, about $128 million has been collected, waived or determined to be uncollectable, Cardwell testified. He predicted "limited recovery" of the outstanding $419 million.

Cardwell complained that Congress had loaded the agency with new and costly responsibilities. The new requirement that all family welfare recipients be issued Social Security cards, he said, will cost $22 million.

"We are now heading for the point in our programs where we are going to break down," Cardwell warned.

In Defense Of The 'Whodunit'

By JOHN A. SPARKS
R.C. Holmes Fellow
Hillsdale (Mich.) College

Agatha Christie's death reminded me of one thing for which we seldom express gratitude — the mystery novel. Fortunately, I read my first one — THE DOOR by Mary Roberts Rinehart — before I knew that Edmund Wilson thought such undertakings were "wasteful of time and degrading to the intellect." I grant that many of the over 8,000 "whodunits" written in English between 1870 and the present are not worth reading. Then again, I've felt the same way about much of modern literature. But, the detective thriller, as a genre, is very much worth preserving. If I had my way I would prefer "a mystery on every nightstand" to "a chicken in every pot. Why?"

First, the mystery novel humbles us. Its pages provide us with clues enough. But as hard as our highly developed rational faculties try, they cannot pierce the veil which jealously encloses the solution. For a time, at least, we flounder. We are unable to master the inscrutable facts. Some faint cracks appear in our cock - sureness; our prideful selves are ever so gently humiliated. Ironically, there is the benefit. Twentieth century man needs to experience uncertainty. Too often he arrogantly delighted in being able to "analyze away" the unexplainable. Gradually, he has even been allowed his receptivity to religious Mysteries to atrophy. A pulp-back puzzler is a poor substitute for proper awe and true Faith, but it is the closest some come to retaining at least a sense of "things unknown."

The mystery story teaches us as well as humbling us. It teaches us about detecting, an art which has nearly become a lost one. I'm not just talking about police detecting. Detection, in a broader sense, is the analysis of events in such a way that their true significance is discerned. The low quality of current economic, historical and social analysis results, in large measure, from faulty "detective work."

Would Conan Doyle allow Sherlock Holmes to attribute the slow - kill of inflation to "big business"? Would Dorothy Sayers have sleuth Peter Winsey explain the death of Soviet agriculture as a case of perpetual "bad weather"? Would Agatha Christie write dialogue for her criminologist Poirot in which he seriously claimed, after careful investigation, that wage and price controls were new economic inventions? Would Elery Queen be expected to say, on the basis of evidence, that large numbers of "Third World" peoples hover near death because of imperialist blows dealt them by Western running dog capitalists? Of course not. Yet journalists, scholars, church leaders and other "observers" have reached similar conclusions because they have allowed their "detecting powers" to become impaired by ideology and special interest. Wouldn't the mystery detective's example of disciplined objectivity, dedicated keenness, and disregard of his own interests be an excellent one for opinion - makers to imitate?

Therefore, I offer a verbal toast to the mystery novel, that portable institution which humbles us and teaches us to observe, all for $1.25.

IN CONGRESS Freshmen Strangely Silent

By ROBERT S. ALLEN
WASHINGTON, Feb. 27 — If you haven't noticed it — those tough talking, free - wheeling House Democratic freshmen have undergone quite a change.

They are saying little and doing less.

Only a month or so ago at the start of this session, they were loudly proclaiming intention to throw their weight behind a series of "reforms." Rep. Jerome Ambro, N.Y., chunky "president of the freshmen class," staged a press conference to announce their "priorities."

Interestingly, foremost among them was public financing of congressional election campaigns.

Also on this pie - in - the - sky list was unspecified tax reform, similarly nebulous national health insurance, welfare reform, budget process revision, and something called "direction of foreign policy."

It was a characteristically bombastic pronouncement that produced headlines at the time — and nothing since.

In fact most of this array of "reforms" has been legislatively junked. Senate leaders flatly turned thumbs down on tapping the Treasury to fund congressional elections, and national health insurance and other freshman "priorities" have run into similar roadblocks.

This is a remarkable switch for the 75 brass first - timers.

A year ago they were charging around high, wide and bellicose. Under the canny manipulation of Rep. Phillip Burton, leftist Californian who used them to make himself chairman of the Democratic caucus, the rambunctious rookies had ditched the veteran chairmen of three major committees and rammed through rules and procedural modifications.

Triumphantly and noisily the freshmen let it be known that a new era had arrived — they had taken over.

Running For Cover

It took only a short time to prove them dismally wrong on both counts.

The fanfare committee upheavals and operational revisions made no consequential difference in legislation or any other way; and far from being high and mighty, the rookies are admittedly on the defensive.

Acknowledged "class president" Ambro: "Yes, we are concerned about being reelected. There have been definite changes in public sentiment and mood. But we are keeping in close touch with our constituents and responding to their needs and opinions."

This frank admission doubtless explains Burton's unwonted moderations and placidness this session, and the little noticed discarding of the Democratic caucus's "unit rule."

In striking contrast to Burton's tough stridency last year, he is now saying little and inciting no ideological clashes. He is clearly pursuing a course of unity and harmony. Unlike last year when he baldly high - handedly opposed Democrats and tried to finagle a seat on the Democratic National Committee, the Californian is carefully minding his manners and antics.

Significantly he said nothing about Ambro's reform "priorities." And Burton bowed quietly to repeal of the "unit rule" — under which the caucus could require Democratic members to vote as ordained by the caucus.

This authority had long irked legislators. Some openly defied it. Rep. Wilbur Mills, Ark., former Ways and Means Committee chairman, bluntly served notice he was taking no order from the caucus: "I wasn't elected by the caucus, and the caucus is telling me nothing."

The caucus still meets regularly, but attempts no whip - cracking. And neither does Burton.

Once described as the "raging tiger at the gates," he is now downright mild and conciliatory, saying pleasantly, "I'm really not a bad guy. Liberal, yes, but reasonably and responsibly so."

Clearly "King Caucus" isn't what it used to be — and neither is "King" Burton!

Still Pondering

To hear Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld tell it, President Ford is calling the shots on those mystery - cloaked SALT II negotiations.

While Secretary Kissinger is conducting the dickering with the Soviets, according to Rumsfeld, it is the President who is laying down the terms and making the decisions. It is under this arrangement that Kissinger functioned during his recent Moscow talks and will continue to do when he returns there.

This version was detailed by Rumsfeld in response to questions as to just who is deciding what in the long drawn out SALT parleying.

Asked, "Does the administration have an agreed - on position on SALT?" Rumsfeld, chief of staff to the President before being abruptly made head of the Pentagon, replied:

"The status of SALT is a complicated subject. It is a serious subject. It requires study and analysis. Secretary Kissinger's Moscow discussions were useful discussions. He returned with information that has been put into the National Security Council system. It's being discussed and considered. I wouldn't want to put a deadline as to when the President will make judgments with respect to it."

"Are you close to an agreed position, and when Kissinger goes back to Moscow?"

Rumsfeld: "I am, not in a position to say. We have not concluded the process. That's about all that can be said at this time."

In other words — Rumsfeld hasn't been given the word yet. (All Rights Reserved)

Ray Cromley Congress caught in unconstitutional act

By Ray Cromley
WASHINGTON — (NEA) — The Supreme Court caught Congress with its hand in the cookie jar.

In attempting to make themselves creators, judges and enforcers of the election commission's requirements they included in the election campaign act of 1974, Senators and Representatives were attempting a power grab, or so decreed the Supreme Court. They were taking over authority the constitution vested in the President and their "just-let-my-head-in-the-tent" practice, if allowed to continue, would weaken the constitutional system of checks and balances between the president and the courts.

It is clear that Congress, action here would not have materially weakened the power and influence of President Ford or his successors. But in the past year, taking advantage of Watergate and the forced resignation of President Nixon, activists in the Senate and House have been jabbing and slashing in repeated attacks aimed at gaining broad powers for Congress and cutting deeply into the powers of the presidency.

Their touted thesis over the years, and culminating with Mr. Nixon, was that the influence of Congress has gradually eroded and, that the presidency has strengthened to a dangerous degree.

Congressional committees have taken on themselves a new day-to-day authority in foreign and domestic affairs, not only peering over the shoulders of department and agency officials, as they correctly should, but in some outrageous instances, attempting to direct operations.

Now there is no doubt Congress has, and rightfully, the authority to set policies, to declare war or refuse to declare war, including semi-wars and covert actions, to vote for or against programs and their budgets, and to act as a tight check on everything the president and his agents do or don't do. But of late Congressional committees have stepped into executive roles which could seem to be unconstitutional. Whether Congress or the president is right or wrong in any particular instance is not the issue.

In an attempt to shift the balance still more, a series of bills have been submitted in the Congress:

— To create an attorney general independent of the president but answerable to Congress.

— To create a consumer protection agency which would be answerable to Congress in considerable measure — with the President having but limited control.

In this struggle, the election commission's creation was but one small battle in a campaign.

The significance of the Supreme Court decision thus goes far beyond its effect on the campaign law. It suggests the Court will strictly rule that any other attempts by Congress to absorb new powers will be stricken down.

As Justice Byron White expresses it, "The basic approach (of the men who framed the Constitution) was that official power should be divided between the Executive, Legislative and Judicial Departments."

"The decision to give the President the exclusive power to initiate appointments was thoughtful and deliberate. The framers were attempting to structure the three departments of government so that each would have affirmative powers strong enough to resist the encroachment of the others. A fundamental tenet was that the same persons should not both legislate and administer the laws . . ."

Loading Question

Pollsters, not to mention politicians, are well aware that the way a question is put often dictates the answer it will receive in response. "Loading" a question, the practice is called.

Not all, of course, are deceived by questions slanted to elicit predetermined answers, but the trick works often enough to enable pollsters and politicians to get the kind of "public opinion polls" best suited to their purposes.

Are you, the reader, susceptible to this kind of manipulation? Before answering that question, perhaps you would like to study the following list sample questions put first in one way (A), and then in another form (B). To test your ability to detect a loaded question, first answer the question in its "A" form, then, in the privacy of your own mind, ask yourself if your answer would have been different had the question been put in the alternate form of "B."

A. Are you in favor of zoning laws regulating the use of privately-owned property?

B. Do you believe that some people should be empowered to dictate what other people may read or see?

A. Do you support the concept of government schooling?

B. Do you believe that individuals should be forced to purchase services they do not want; further, that parents should be forced to send their children to classes they think will damage their children?

A. In your opinion, is it a proper function of government to license business enterprises?

B. Do you believe it is right that fallible individuals be given the power to decide who may and who may not try their hand at serving the public?

A. Are you in favor of the concept of forced busing of children to achieve integration?

B. How would you react to a command to get on a bus and go somewhere against your will?

A. Do you favor the city fathers making use of tax funds to build a convention center and parking facility?

B. How much would you, personally, contribute to the building of these facilities were the choice left up to you?

A. Do you favor laws regulating the amount of profit a businessman may make?

B. Just what do you consider to be a fair profit? By what process of reasoning did you arrive at that particular figure? And why should that particular amount, rather than some lower or higher figure, be considered fair?

A. Are you opposed to industrial development that would disturb the environment?

B. Can you think of any human activity that does not alter the environment in some way?

The foregoing should serve as a few thought starters to help test one's consistency.

The busiest guy in the office is the one who does nothing.

Locking the barn after the horse is stolen is one way to get rid of the feed bills.

Shooting a movie is what should happen to a lot of the present crop.

Abby Resolves Not To Interrupt in 1976

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1976 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: It started out to be a blue holiday season until I saw you on the Dinah Shore show on New Year's Eve, Abby, just seeing you on that show changed my life. You announced to millions of people that you were making a New Year's resolution that you weren't going to interrupt anybody!

When I heard you say that I realized that had been my problem all my life. I always talked too much. I never let anybody finish a sentence.

I am a salesman, Abby, and I'm a good one, but my boss used to take me aside and suggest that I listen instead of talk so much. I never took him seriously. I don't know why it didn't hit home until I heard you say it.

Thanks for the best idea I've had in years!

L. IN LOS ALAMITOS

DEAR L.: Making a resolution is one thing — keeping it, another. So far, I've kept it, but it's not easy. Write to me in June and let me know how you're doing. And lotsa luck!

DEAR ABBY: I think I have the perfect way to shut off the flow of gossip from an older woman without being disrespectful.

An acquaintance used to bring me gossip I didn't care to hear, so when she'd tell me something, I would ask, "Are you praying for her?" (Or him, or them, as the case might be.)

She admitted that she was not. Then I would tell her that they needed a lot of prayers, and she should be praying for them every day.

A few instances of that, and she didn't bring me any more gossip.

C. S. IN LAKELAND, FLA.

DEAR C.: Beautiful. Your suggestion may inspire people who haven't prayed in years to resume praying.

DEAR ABBY: We are the parents of two adopted Oriental children, and we'd like to say a word on behalf of all adopted children of different ethnic backgrounds.

Strangers constantly stop us in public places and gush variations of the following: "Look at those dolls! Aren't they precious? Look at those eyes!" Then they ask, "Where did you get them? Are they Chinese, Korean, Vietnamese, Filipino or Japanese?" (They never guess correctly.)

Meanwhile, our children stand there wondering why their blood lines and ancestry are so all-fired important to these loud strangers who carry on as though the children are deaf. Such scenes have already made the little one painfully shy.

We adopted these children because we wanted to share our lives with them, not because of their doll-like cuteness.

Please tell people that if they want to gush, they should find a poodle to babble over. One man even picked up our little daughter and carried her off to "show his wife" in another part of the store. We were horrified when we discovered she was missing.

Next time I hope he picks up a Doberman to "show his wife."

Please print this, Abby. It may make those who behave this way realize that we parents don't appreciate such compliments, and it only makes our children feel like freaks.

OREGON MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Here's your letter. I hope it helps.

Researchers says cancer stems from environment

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Between 60 and 90 per cent of all cancer stems from environmental causes—many of them manmade, President Ford's Council on Environmental Quality said today.

The council's 6th annual report underlined concern over environmental causes of the disease by saying the incidence of cancer in the United States has more than doubled since the start of the century and there has been almost no improvement in survival rates since the 1950s.

The CEQ, headed by former industrial chemist and Delaware Gov. Russell W. Peterson, said its estimates on the amount of cancer caused by environmental factors were based on extreme variations in cancer rates at different locations around the world and in the United States.

Law would stop energy

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Big oil companies would be prohibited from acquiring alternative energy sources such as coal or geothermal steam under legislation introduced Thursday in the California state senate.

Designed to break the hold large oil companies allegedly have on such sources, the measure bans such acquisitions starting in 1979 by companies possessing more than $2 billion in assets.

If the companies held such alternative sources, they would be required to have them in production by 1981.

"One industry is obtaining control of all of our nation's energy resources thus eliminating competition," said Senate Democratic Floor Leader David Roberti of Los Angeles.

In a statement, the organization said big oil companies now control 50 per cent of the uranium, 70 per cent of the natural gas, 35 per cent of the oil and in California 75 per cent of the geothermal resources.

Roberti added: "It appears that several corporate entities have secured the necessary competitive positions and are waiting only for other events to hasten development. They are waiting for someone to improve the present profit conditions."

A spokesman for Roberti said some of the oil companies falling in the classification of $2 billion or more in assets are Standard Oil of California, $9 billion; Union, $3 billion; Arco, $5 billion; Shell, $5 billion; and Mobil, $10 billion.

He said Exxon was included in the group, but the company's total assets were not available.

The legislation would also require each oil company operating in California to file a report with the state Energy Commission each year beginning on May 1, 1977 disclosing the company's assets.

It would also void any contract or agreement that lies the price of one energy resource to another.

Carter becomes popular target

By LEWIS LORD
United Press International
Jimmy Carter's newly won frontrunner status suddenly has made him a popular target on the Democratic campaign trail.

Birch Bayh claimed Thursday that Carter, the winner of Tuesday's New Hampshire primary, sounds more like a Republican than a Democrat, and Henry Jackson said it's time the public knew "the truth" about the former Georgia governor.

Meanwhile Ronald Reagan stumped Florida for his March 9 showdown with President Ford there. George Wallace told a Boston crowd the Democratic party is moving closer to the positions he took a decade ago.

and Sargent Shriver leaned on his Kennedy connections in Massachusetts.

Bayh, who finished third in New Hampshire, said in Boston he has "some very basic differences" with Carter.

"We don't need a Democrat running around the country peddling Republican principles," Bayh said. "No Democratic nominee can run in November nor can we long survive as a party if we talk and act like Republicans."

Jackson, making his first primary race of the campaign, told a Boston news conference he wasn't involved in any "stop Carter" movement but he added, "this is the beginning to get the public the truth movement' and if the shoe fits, so be it."

Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel said he and many other Democratic governors oppose Carter's candidacy and have misgivings about things Carter did while representing Georgia at national governors conferences.

"People who can judge you best are people who have served with you in other capacities," said Mandel.

Reagan told a predominantly elderly crowd of 10,000 in St. Petersburg that President Ford's proposals to keep Social Security healthy were a "band-aid" approach.

Reagan's Florida campaign manager, Tommy Thomas, who had been predicting a 2 to 1 "landslide" win for the Californian, lowered his estimate. "I still say we'll win by a landslide," Thomas said.

Shriver, a brother-in-law of John F. Kennedy, said in New Bedford, Mass., he had felt close to Massachusetts for many years.

"A lot of these fellows are from Alabama and Georgia and a lot of other places," Shriver said.

Rule given to civilians

LISBON, Portugal (UPI) — Twenty-two months after seizing power, the Portuguese armed forces have signed a formal pact handing over most of the day-to-day government work to civilian politicians.

The military's policy-making Revolutionary Council no longer will be Portugal's supreme executive and legislative body, although it will retain veto powers on constitutional questions and defense for at least four years.

Under the agreement, Portugal's first freely elected government in 50 years will take power after election of a legislature on April 25 and a president on June 27.

When the president has been elected, he will name a prime minister, who will form a government on the basis of the legislative vote.

The current Socialist-led government will serve until the new government is formed this summer. Portugal has had six provisional governments since the April 25, 1974, "Flower Revolution" that ended 48 years of right-wing dictatorship.

"The lack of democratic experience for many years has resulted in rivalries and misunderstanding during the past 22 months," President Francisco da Costa Gomes said at the pact-signing ceremony Thursday at the Belem presidential palace.

"This fact makes it advisable for the armed forces to continue playing an associate role, even if temporary, in the construction of a new society."

The pact signed between the military and the nation's five major parties was for a four-year "transition period," during which the armed forces will switch from a dominant to consultative role in governing.

Although Costa Gomes reminded the parties the military would continue to play a role in defense and constitutional affairs, he said, "The armed forces does not want to reserve for itself a significant share of political power."

"On the contrary, we want to restore it to civilian powers chosen by popular will."

Hitchhikers probed

SOCORRO, N.M. (UPI) — Three hitchhikers being questioned in the shooting death of a bar owner were arrested because they fit the description of persons spotted near the murder scene, authorities said.

Socorro County Sheriff Junior Gutierrez said the three suspects were two men and a woman who were arrested while hitchhiking near Roswell in southeastern New Mexico Wednesday.

Earlier the same day, the body of Frank Chavez, 59, was found at his home behind the Owl Bar and Restaurant which he owned and operated at San Antonio in the central part of the state.

State police said two unidentified men and a woman were seen driving slowly past Chavez' establishment Tuesday night prior to the slaying and it appeared they may have been "casing the place" for a robbery.

Chavez' body, clad in pajamas, was found in his home Wednesday morning. Authorities theorized the victim had interrupted a burglary and was shot during a struggle.

Chavez had bullet wounds in the stomach and the neck. Police said his wallet, a bank bag and some envelopes believed to contain money were missing. An unopened safe had been dragged from the house but left in front of the door. Several weapons in the house also had been taken.

Chavez was the father of Las Cruces City Attorney Frank N. Chavez.

Phnom Penh says US planes bombed Cambodia

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Radio Phnom Penh said today U.S. warplanes killed at least 15 persons and wounded 40 Wednesday in two bombing raids on the Cambodian town of Siem Reap.

U.S. military and embassy spokesmen in Bangkok issued a joint statement saying the report is "ridiculous and completely without truth."

The statement reportedly came after U.S. officials here contacted higher authorities in Washington.

A Thai spokesman said his air force was "absolutely not" involved in the incident. "We had nothing to do with it," he said. "We don't even know whether it's true."

(In Washington, Maj. Duane

Austin, duty officer at the Pentagon, said. "I have no word on anything like that. I am totally unaware of it.")

Té Cambodian broadcast, monitored in Bangkok, said American F111 swing-wing bombers killed at least 15 residents of Siem Reap and wounded 40, badly damaging the center of the city and its hospital.

The radio said the planes flew toward the Thai border, about 80 miles to the west, after both passes.

Siem Reap, about 150 miles northwest of Phnom Penh, lies beside fabled Angkor Wat, the almost perfectly preserved ruins of the past Khmer civilization.

There are no U.S. warplanes stationed in Thailand. Spokesmen confirmed the last F111s stationed here left last June. The closest known F111 station to Cambodia is South Korea.

State ousts wildlife exhibit

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — Children visiting an office building at the state capital will soon find nothing more than offices there, and not a wildlife exhibit which has become popular on school tours.

Parks and Wildlife Department Executive Director Clayton Garrison said Thursday the exhibit of native Texas animals and fish was being dismantled to make room for offices, and probably would not be reassembled.

He said House Speaker Bill Clayton asked the department to remove the display by April 1 so work could begin on renovating the building.

Jack Gullahorn, Clayton's executive assistant, said a plan was being drawn recommending use of the 69 by 29 foot exhibit area as a tiered, theatre-type hearing room for the House Appropriations Committee.

"There is a shortage of committee rooms throughout state government," Gullahorn said. "That's the most economical and practical thing we can do with it right now."

"What we're trying to do is use it for something. That is probably as expensive a space in cost analysis as you'll find anywhere in state government. We're not using it for anything."

Parks and wildlife officials said the display cost $200,000 to put together and required about $3,500 a year to maintain. Garrison said part of the reason it would not be replaced, even though the department was moving to a new $7 million building, was that many of stuffed animals were in disrepair.

He said some of the stuffed animals and birds were in poor condition, but the biggest problems was the fish ponds.

"We had a lot of difficulty with the exhibit because it leaked and had problems with circulation," Garrison said. "We still have trouble with some species of fish keeping them alive. You've almost got to have climate control." Gullahorn said funds for replacing the exhibit will come from a $1 million appropriation to the State Board of Control for building renovation. He said he hopes the renovation of the John H. Reagan Building will end the regular reorganization of legislative offices.

"Every two years we have a mass shuffling of offices. There's no need of this; it wastes money. I think we've got some neat ideas. I think we're going to end up saving a bunch of money," he said.

Citizens makes complaint on driver

Pampa Municipal Court Judge Don Lane issued a warrant for the arrest of a Pampa resident today after a citizen filed a complaint that he had driven through two service stations without stopping and almost hit another vehicle.

One service station attendant obtained a license number, and another said he could identify the suspect.

Chief Mills said it is unusual that a citizen will actually sign a complaint to allow a suspect to brought into court.

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Yellow Kid, king of the con men, is dead.

Joseph "Yellow Kid" Weill, perhaps the greatest con man the nation has known, gave the slip to a life of flimflam at the age of 100 Thursday.

He had spent his last years in a wheelchair at the Lake Front Convalescent Center, relishing a career based on the theory that you can't cheat an honest man but, happily, there's a sucker born every minute.

He said he lost most of it — even got swindled himself once or twice — but salvaged enough to show that a life of crime can buy the good long life.

The Kid died only a few days before attorneys for William T. Brannon, who wrote several books about Weill, planned to file suit against producers of the movie "The Sting." Brannon contends the hit movie was stolen from Weill's life.

The Kid spun his life story often, usually beginning by saying, "I don't want to be a braggadocio, but ..." and then launching into descriptions of how he:

— Rented an abandoned bank, hired pool hall characters as "tellers" and filled money sacks with slugs — all to fool a soap magnate from out of town.

— Tried to sell Cook County Hospital for $150,000.

Weill spent just six years in jail and he was hardly repentant.

"It was so fascinating that I didn't have time to regret my activities," he said before his 99th birthday. "There was so much happiness and joy in swindling."

Weill was always nattily attired, often in a vest and a tie with a big pearl stickpin, spectator shoes, a magnificent beard, and the yellow gloves that helped win him his name.

Whaley petitioned for school board

Foster Whaley, the recently retired Gray County agricultural extension service agent, has been presented petitions asking him to run for a place on the Pampa Independent School District board of trustees.

"I received petitions of close to 200 names," Whaley said today, "and I understand there are other petitions out. It's also my understanding that a fairly small group worked on the gathering of signatures for only two days."

Whaley said that the wording of the petition is: "We, the undersigned registered voters, residing in the Pampa Independent School District of Gray County, respectfully petition that the name of J. Foster Whaley be placed on the ballot of election as a candidate for the board of trustees of the Pampa Independent School District for the election to be held on April 3, 1976.

Whaley said that "although it was not in my plans to run for a school trustee position when I retired, I plan to file on one of the positions sometime next week."

He said that many of the names on the petitions "are of people I have only a casual acquaintance with or don't know at all."

Weill spent just six years in jail and he was hardly repentant.

"It was so fascinating that I didn't have time to regret my activities," he said before his 99th birthday. "There was so much happiness and joy in swindling."

Weill was always nattily attired, often in a vest and a tie with a big pearl stickpin, spectator shoes, a magnificent beard, and the yellow gloves that helped win him his name.

UT dean indicted on theft charges

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — A University of Texas dean and two other school employees, a Houston school teacher and the head of a private engineering firm were indicted on 23 counts of theft Thursday.

The Travis County Grand

Jury charged the five stole more than $15,000, apparently through fraudulent consultant fees in some cases.

Indicted were W. E. Barron, dean of UT's Division of Extension; Charles Kelso, director of the division's Industrial and Business Training Bureau, and John C. Hunt, an employee in Kelso's department.

Also charged were Michael Barron of Houston, the dean's son, and Kenneth Sheppard, president of Pleco, an Austin-based engineering firm.

Barron is named in 25 of the indictments for thefts of UT checks and state warrants dating back to 1971.

His son, a Houston school teacher, faces nine counts of theft, all involving checks made out to him.

Indictments naming Barron, Kelso and Sheppard allege they stole $2,100 in checks made out to Pleco.

Sheppard is president of the company; Barron and Kelso are major stockholders.

Hunt is accused of stealing about $1,500 in checks made out to his son, Skipper Hunt.

Investigators indicated the checks were for consultant work that may not have been done.

Dallas schools losing whites

DALLAS (UPI) — A member of a research group says efforts to desegregate the city's schools have resulted in losses in white student population — but unlike other city's desegregating schools, the loss in Dallas has not stopped.

David J. Armor, a senior scientist with the Rand Corp., said Thursday any additional plan for court ordered busing in Dallas should attempt to stop the decline of whites students.

"The thing one notices with Dallas is that beginning with the first year and continuing to the present there has been a substantial loss which is almost monthly," Armor said. "The problem in Dallas is to stop the trend. Very clearly, Dallas is in a white loss situation."

Armor, a consultant for desegregation plans in California and Pennsylvania, testified in federal court the Dallas Independent School District had a normal 10 per cent annual loss of white students in the first two years after the 1971 busing plan went into effect.

But he said the loss rate had not diminished in succeeding years as it had in other cities.

Armor was hired by a group of North Dallas intervenors to study the city's white flight problem. He said he based his testimony on observations in Dallas and studies in 16 other cities which were undergoing court ordered desegregation plans.

"Busing orders in the school districts have had significant and substantial effect on the loss of Anglo students in all 16 of these school districts," he said. "By substantial, I mean on the order of five times as much loss of white students than before court orders."

In the two years before orders were installed, the districts lost about 2 per cent of their white students. After busing, he said, the rate jumped to 10 per cent and leveled off to 7.9 per cent in the third and fourth years.

"Looking at a loss rate in Dallas more prolonged than the average," Armor said, "my feeling is there will be even more white loss."

Armor's testimony was the first of its kind to be allowed in the record of a federal desegregation hearing and plaintiff's attorney Sylvia Demarest objected strongly to its admission.

Judge William Taylor, who has heard the presentation of six desegregation plans since the hearing's beginning Feb. 2, denied Ms. Demarest's objection and said the admission of Armor's testimony was no guarantee it would affect his decision in the case. Testimony was expected to continue for another week.

Texas guest

An internationally acclaimed maestra, Dr. Antonia Brico, will be the guest conductor for the 20th annual Texas Woman's University all-girl music festival. The festival is scheduled April 8-10 in Denton. Participation in the TWU festival is restricted to outstanding high school juniors and seniors and junior college students from across the United States who submit tapes and are screened by the festival committee.

Officials don't pay tax

ADDISON, Tex. (UPI) — The political clout of this north Dallas suburb belongs to a constituency seldom heard from — the people who live in apartments.

Though they don't pay real estate taxes or water, electric or gas bills, the city's 4,300 apartment dwellers overwhelm homeowners more than 10 to one, so it is they who call the shots.

The mayor and three of his aldermen live in apartments or townhouses. City ordinances often are debated and created in an apartment clubhouse where the official literature is passed out on a pool table covered by a sheet of formica.

Not all the people with the power are aware they have it nor has a solid sense of community arrived among the transient, commuting townfolk of Addison.

City Administrator C.J. Webster says many citizens think they live in Dallas.

But political aspirants have surprised themselves with their successes. Fay Edmiston says it occurred to her apartment people needed representation, too.

"So I decided to help do something about it and ran for the council. I was surprised. I didn't really expect to win but I knocked on a lot of doors and asked people to come out and vote. Of course, I hope they would vote for me."

Two aldermen and the mayor, all of them apartment residents, were elected a year ago in a 70-voter turnout — seemingly small, except that in 1973 the mayor was elected in a total turnout of nine voters.

"I think there will be even more voters this year," says Alderman Edmiston. "We'll all be knocking on doors."

Webster says encouraging greater representation is one reason council meetings are being conducted experimentally in various apartment clubhouses.

"Apartment dwellers, often young, often single, always mobile and many times on the rebound from a change in jobs or marital situations are almost a disenfranchised group," Webster says. "Because their living environment depends almost solely on the apartment management, they scarcely concern themselves with the city. The council, because of its own composition is quite sensitive to this problem."

Quints born in Japan

TOKYO (UPI) — Quintuplets born to the wife of a Japanese newsmen Jan. 31 are all well and growing normally, doctors said Friday.

The five babies, two boys and three girls, still are in the municipal hospital at Kagoshima City on Japan's southern island of Kyushu.

They are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Yorimitsu Yamashita. The father is a reporter for the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK).

Eye specialists who examined the children Thursday said they show no signs of retinopathy, an ailment common among premature babies kept in incubators. It can result in loss of eyesight.

However, the quintuplets will be examined by specialists weekly for signs of the ailment until they are 100 days old.

Doctors said the largest of the children, a girl named Hisako, now weighs 4.49 pounds.

The smallest child, Satoko, also a girl still weighs only 2.46 pounds.

Hearst judge gets threat

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A death threat against the judge, prosecutor, chief defense attorney and two witnesses at the Patricia Hearst trial has been received from "the SLA eastern region," the FBI reports.

Copies of the document were sent to U.S. District Court Judge Oliver J. Carter, U.S. Attorney James L. Browning Jr. and defense lawyer F. Lee Bailey.

The threat was also directed against two prosecution witnesses — Thomas Matthews, a Los Angeles student kidnaped briefly by the Symbionese Liberation Army, and Anthony Shepard, clerk in a sporting goods store shot up by Miss Hearst.

One paragraph in the message read: "Carter, Bailey, Browning, Matthews, Shepard have sealed their fate. The Symbionese Liberation Army will not be mocked. All those mentioned will die." It was signed by "the SLA eastern region."

Reagan worth $1.5 million

MATTOON, Ill. (UPI) — Ronald Reagan is a millionaire, despite some financial problems involving water.

There isn't any on his vacant investment property in Riverside County, Calif., so he has been unable to sell the land for seven years.

But the Republican presidential challenger is far from hurting financially. He disclosed Wednesday that his personal net worth is nearly $1.5 million—nearly five-times that of President Ford.

Reagan, under pressure to make a financial statement since Ford outlined his own finances Feb. 12, released his statement during a campaign flight through eastern Illinois.

The former California governor listed his net worth at $1,455,571. Ford's net worth was listed at $323,489.

Reagan had said previously that he could not make an accurate statement because he had placed his holdings in a blind trust.

According to Wednesday's statements, holdings in that trust totalled $586,775, including the land at Rancho, Calif., valued at $417,500. Peter Hannaford, Reagan's research director, said Reagan had hoped to sell the land for a development but has been unable to find a buyer in seven years because there is no water on the land.

Wednesday marked Reagan's third straight day of campaigning in Illinois, his one-time home state. He visited homes from his boyhood earlier this week before flying to New Hampshire to await the results of the nation's first primary.

Joplin wrote for club

SEDALIA, Mo. (UPI) — A document discovered this week indicates Scott Joplin's 1899 hit "Maple Leaf Rag" was composed in recognition of a gentlemen's social club and not a brothel as popularly believed. Ushering in the ragtime era at the turn of the century, the song was composed a year following incorporation of the Maple Leaf Club of which Joplin was a member.

Pettis County Recorder of Deeds Naomi Brown discovered the original incorporation papers for the club.

Patrolmen join force here

Three new Texas Highway patrolmen will assume duties in Gray County on March 12.

The announcement was made today by Sgt. David Womack of Pampa.

They include James Joseph-Geery of Austin and Wayne Clark Williams of Houston, who recently graduated from the Department of Public Safety Academy, and will be stationed in Pampa.

John Mitchell Holland of Clarendon will succeed James Estes of McLean, who transferred to Spring, near Houston.

The Pampa patrolmen succeed Phil Altman, who was promoted and transferred to San Angelo, and Jerry Havins, who resigned to go into the farming business with his father.

Sgt. Womack said the new patrolmen will still leave this six-county sergeant area one short of the authorized number of 13 patrolmen. The area includes Gray, Hemphill, Lipscomb, Roberts, Wheeler and Collingsworth counties.

New books: skillful spy tale

By United Press International
Saving the Queen,
By WILLIAM F. BUCKLEY JR.
(Doubleday, $7.95)

Conservative columnist Buckley, in his first foray into fiction, has concocted an agreeable, skillful spy tale with an aura of an English drawing room drama.

The reader is propelled along by one clever conversational byplay after another, rather than by the supercharged chase and violence themes common in popular espionage novels.

Most of it is great, if well-mannered, fun. The action takes place in the early 1950s when the CIA enlists Yale engineering graduate Blackford Oakes to find who in England is passing atomic secrets to the Russians.

Buckley sets up England of that time as the center for Russia's American intelligence effort — the British and Americans were sharing information about the development of the hydrogen bomb. Stalin, Buckley recalls, was "the principle agent — now that Hitler was gone — of humor misery."

He places a make-believe Queen Caroline on the British throne, which allows the author a great deal of latitude. Anglo-American relations are depicted as intimately warm.

Oakes, a young fellow irresistible to the ladies, finds that Queen Caroline offers his best entrée into the espionage plottings. The beautiful, witty queen is either in cahoots with the Russians or their unwilling tool.

Buckley ties his story in with an undercurrent of Anglo-American rivalry. In fact, the book's major violence occurs in Oakes' painful recollection of being bloody-throated at an English public school.

Many contemporary figures, such as Allen Dulles and Dwight Eisenhower, are woven into the narrative. He has crafted some genuinely amusing scenes. As when Oakes, visiting Windsor Castle, waits in his chambers for the promised arrival of the Queen, hardly able to believe that the ruler of England may soon lie in his bed.

"England has taken the initiative," she remarks before he leads her into the bedroom. And, the business concluded, he murmurs, "Courtesy of the United States, Ma'am."

Buckley sometimes writes as if he were pushing out the next day's column, working in as many clever observations and comments as will fit. The dialogue often is stiff and cumbersome. Still, Buckley, in his snide, Yale way, can be very funny and this book, like his other writings, exudes a civilized charm.

And as one would expect of a guest in the drawing room, he stays away from controversial politics.

John Hanauer (UPI)

Power Shift, by Kirkpatrick Sale.
(Random House, $12.95)
The basic premise of this well researched and well written work is, simply, that the southern half of the United States has eclipsed the Northeast in economic and political power and will proceed to dominate it in coming years.

It will be that way, says author Sale, whether anybody likes it or not. The Southern Rim, as Sale calls this newly defined region, is the 13 full states from North Carolina to Arizona plus the southern (and most populous) parts of Nevada and California.

This area already leads, or has a rapidly increasing share, in the fastest growing of the post World War II industries — agribusiness, defense, technology, oil, leisure, real estate. It has the most comfortable climate and attracts 650,000 immigrants from the more northerly sections of the nation every year.

It is also the most corrupt segment of the country, Sale contends, and he reels off enough big business names to rile many a Chamber of Commerce. He says the exciting, growth oriented and often shady handling of money and power on the Rim derives from the "cowboy" character, which he traces through the Nixon White House and to Nixon himself.

Much of the book is taken up with politics. The Rim has supplied presidential candidates since 1960 (Nixon), including two in 1964 — both Lyndon Johnson of Texas and Barry Goldwater of Arizona qualify as Southern Rim residents. In Johnson and Nixon the region gave the nation two presidents.

To Sale, the Ford presidency is but a temporary "counterattack" by the Eastern Establishment, and the South — or at least the Southern Rim — will rise again to occupy that office. He expresses uncertainty as to the consequences next time around. He is not at all sure he will like them.

Ashley Cheshire (UPI)

Nightmare: The Underside of the Nixon Years, by J. Anthony Lukas. (Viking, $12.50) Fine reporting and a strong narrative flow give this account of Watergate a power that will surprise even those who are most familiar with the story. Lukas displays absolute mastery at organizing the complicated facts that filled 73 volumes of testimony before the Senate Select Committee and the House Judiciary Committee. The book is an expansion of two articles that appeared in the New York Times.

The Search for Samuel Goldwyn, by Carol Easton. (Morrow, $8.95) Of all the Hollywood moguls, Sam Goldwyn has retained a reputation as a serious producer of some of the film industry's most expert entertainment. The author strives to delve deeply into the private Goldwyn in order to explain how a former glove maker could evolve into a movie maker of such ability. Even though she never quite manages to explain this complex human being, hers is an intriguing effort at biography.

Harmattan, by Thomas Klop. (Bobbs-Merrill, $7.95) In this interesting first novel of suspense, we follow the trouble-strewn path of an American businessman in search of his nephew who disappeared after he was booted out of the Peace Corps for airing his political opinions. The businessman stumbles into a confusing civil war and finds that his idealistic nephew is involved in a near-fatal game. Harmattan is a brisk, well-paced thriller with the proper ingredients of sex, action and adventure.

Gristmill, by George S. Caldwell. (Stein and Day, $6.95) A mother and daughter are being ejected from their ancestral home, a 17th Century mill, when dilettante architect Jordan Page-Thomas rides to the rescue. The swirl of events gets violent and highly improbable, but at least Gristmill escapes the most frequent fault of the gothic novel — the plot in this book proves pleasantly unpredictable.

IN COSTUME on the set of "Murder by Death", this sterling cast is one of the most impressive groups assembled for a movie in years.

Zingy cast plays 'Murder by death'

By Dick Kleiner

HOLLYWOOD — (NEA) — Ray Stark has put together one of the zingiest casts in years for the Neil Simon original, "Murder By Death." It's so big and so powerful that the only way they could solve the billing problem was to list everybody alphabetically.

Listen to this list: Eileen Brennan, Truman Capote, James Coco, Peter Falk, Alec Guinness, Elsa Lanchester, David Niven, Peter Sellers, Maggie Smith, Nancy Walker and Estelle Winwood. There haven't been so many big names in one place since the last Oscar ceremony.

Maybe one of those names made you look twice. Truman Capote. He's a writer, isn't he? You're right. But he's making his acting debut in this.

The rest are all veterans. Miss Winwood, for example, is 92 years old, which makes her the veterans' veteran. Anc. any smokers around might be happy to learn that, at 92, Miss Winwood is still smoking four packs a day and puffing away happily.

Curiously, all this wealth of talent is being directed by a man who has never directed a movie before. His name is Robert Moore and, although this is his first film, he can hardly be called a rookie.

Bob Moore is an old-timer on Broadway, having directed "The Boys in the Band" and several of Neil Simon's plays. He also directed most of the first season of Rhoda on TV. "That was the year," he says, "when I couldn't find anything I liked on Broadway. I felt the TV thing was better than anything I'd read for the stage, so I did it and I enjoyed it."

But "Murder By Death" is his first crack at a movie, and he says he's enjoying it, although he finds the length of the day surprising. I asked him what the budget was for this film and he seemed surprised at the question.

"I have no idea," he said. He says when he and Simon and Stark began casting the piece, they had some ideas — and they got everybody they wanted to do the parts they wanted them to do.

"People wonder how Ray Stark got such a great cast," he says, "but there's really no mystery to it. He just showed everybody the script, and it's such a great script that they were all anxious to do it."

It's a story of an eccentric millionaire (Capote) who invites the five greatest detectives in the world (Coco, Falk, Lanchester, Niven, Sellers) to a dinner and murder. The one who solves the crime gets one million dollars — tax-free. Capote says he's enjoying his acting debut. Up to now, he hasn't thought too highly of actors, and this experience really hasn't changed his sturdy mind.

"There is really no correlation," he says, "between talent and intellect. You can be a brilliant actor and be dumb. Most actors are dumb. And a lot of directors and even many writers are dumb."

"Just because a person is talented is no reason to assume he has any brains. Tennessee Williams is a brilliant playwright, but he's not very bright. William Saroyan, too, is pretty dumb. "Brando is dumb. That endless rhetoric he spouts says nothing. He'd like to believe that he's an intellect, but he isn't."

"Most of them are dumb — but there's a good reason for it. They have to keep in touch with their childlike selves to be successful actors. After all, acting is a very childish profession.

"I've always been a child myself — a super-intellectual child, but a child."

Although this is his first acting job, it is far from his first visit to a motion picture set. He has written "five or so" screenplays so he's been on many sets.

"I knew pretty much what to expect," he says. "Still, it's harder work than I had anticipated. The waiting is tiring and the attempt to put every scene in context is difficult."

He doesn't have to do this for money. His writing is a lucrative profession, to say the least. He has a new novel, "Answered Prayer," and he said that 20th Century-Fox paid him $200,000 just to read it.

"But they wanted to take the manuscript out of my home," he says. "And I knew that meant it would be Xeroxed and shown all around, and I couldn't have that. So I gave them back their $200,000."

As an experienced screenwriter, he says there is the constant temptation to make script suggestions.

Aid for beating blahs

By Betty Stearns

What's getting you down these days? Is it too much stress? Too little stimulation? Are you tired all the time and do you have a general case of the blahs?

If so, an eminent psychiatrist, an internist and several medical journalists are at hand to counsel you on "The Courage to Create," "How to Beat Fatigue," and "Keeping Whole in the 20th Century."

Rollo May's "Courage to Create" is a book in praise of creativity in painting, music, mathematics, physics, psychology and in life. If you are a discouraged or an untried artist, De May leads you by the hand through at least some of the difficulties and anxieties of giving shape to a new idea.

But even for those who have no intention of trying a hand at a potter's wheel, or a couplet, Dr. May believes that creativity is the very source of life. We drink from its well-spring to solve everyday problems, to apply a pleasing form and structure to our own lives.

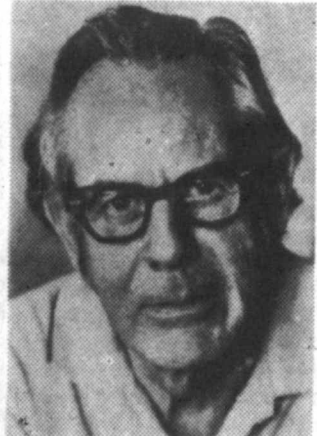

The book suffers from a lack of cohesion and in fact we learn from the preface that the various chapters were lectures given at colleges and universities.

But if you enjoy enlightening anecdotes about the creativity of Einstein, Mondrian, Auden and even the Greek god Apollo selected by a man with a genuine feeling and understanding for the inventive spirit then dip into Dr. May's new book.

"Keeping Whole in the 20th Century" is actually the subtitle for John C. McCamy and James Presley's book called "Human Life Styling." The authors are that reliably readable combination of doctor and journalist and they serve up a pleasant salad of right thinking with good dressing.

In a novel turn for a popular medical book, the authors provide an environmental check-list and suggest that "earning" a minimum of 30 points a year is desirable. You get 20 points for organizing a local ecology group and 5 points each for turning off unnecessary lights, using the bus or other mass transit, lobbying to outlaw disposable products,

COURAGE TO CREATE by Rollo May (W. W. Norton, 143 pages, $7.95) HUMAN LIFE STYLING: KEEPING WHOLE IN THE 20TH CENTURY by John C. McCamy, M.D., & James Presley (Harper & Row, 190 pages, $8.95) HOW TO BEAT FATIGUE by Linda Pembroke (Doubleday, 223 pages, $6.95)

Dr. Rollo May: "Creativity is the very source of life." (from "The Courage to Create.")

Dr. McCamy points out that we are getting sicker in this country and we are getting sicker younger. "In one study of subjects from ages 17 to 24, almost 50 per cent had some kind of degenerative disease."

Since the authors' thesis is that disease is both predictable and preventable, "the techniques of human life styling all revolve around the concept of how you can learn to build up your resistance factors and thereby lower your susceptibility to illness."

Their platform for good health is built on ecology, nutrition, exercise and stress reduction.

In a novel turn for a popular medical book, the authors provide an environmental check-list and suggest that "earning" a minimum of 30 points a year is desirable. You get 20 points for organizing a local ecology group and 5 points each for turning off unnecessary lights, using the bus or other mass transit, lobbying to outlaw disposable products, and growing your own garden. There is counsel on vitamin supplements (the doctor believes in them), eating more fresh fruits and vegetables along with whole grain cereals, and avoiding foods like sugar and refined flour.

From deep breathing to giving up smoking, from getting enough exercise to being reasonable about your own great expectations, McCamy and Presley present age-old wisdom folded into a contemporary context.

"How to Beat Fatigue" by journalist Linda Pembroke is a compendium of research on what makes you tired, and some very general suggestions about how to better use your time, exercise and relax.

Each chapter makes generous use of already published books and articles and concludes with a bibliography of the author's sources.

This technique for turning out a book is hardly new, but the author's blatant use of very common materials (articles that have appeared in Reader's Digest, Family Circle, and Today's Health, for example) catches me between awe and annoyance. On the other hand, if you're not a regular reader of Medical Times, the Archives of General Psychiatry, and Patient Care, then you may find something new. But not much.

"How to Beat Fatigue" dispenses both sides of some well known theories, and concludes with common sense: get plenty of rest, exercise, think about pleasant things, avoid anxiety and depression.

Require written test?

DALLAS (UPI) — Prospective college students should be required to take a writing test, even if it is harder to grade than a multiple choice examination, according to a member of the College Entrance Examination Board.

Dee Brock, a member of the Dallas County Community College District English faculty, told a forum sponsored by the college board Thursday such a test "would give colleges the meaningful measurement of an applicant's writing skills."

"In an age when language is so often used to conceal information rather than to reveal information, we feel it is unfortunate that students take a test which says it measures English composition when it contains no composition," said Miss Brock, a member of the English Discipline Committee of the college board.

The meeting was one of a series to be held around the nation in an effort by the board to obtain information from teachers and administrators on the best way to include actual writing on the tests.

The tests currently are all multiple choice. The primary objection to testing writing is the expense. Multiple choice can be graded by computer but essays require individual attention.

Miss Brock and others participating in the forum said the students, if required to produce an essay on the all-important college entrance examinations, would work harder at sharpening their skills. It would also encourage high schools to emphasize essay writing in their curricula.

Albert G. Sims, vice president of the college board from New York, explained four options the writing test could take. They included a 20-30 minute centrally graded essay, a one-hour session of two to three centrally graded essays, a one-hour essay graded by the college to which the student applied and central grading of a group of essays written in high school English class.

Science question of ethics today

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Despite increased attention recently to the ethics of human experimentation, a Columbia University sociologist contends there still is inadequate concern among some biomedical researchers for the rights of test subjects.

Dr. Bernard Barber, writing in the February issue of Scientific American, said there are scientists using "excessively risky procedures" in their pursuit of medical knowledge. For some, he said there is an emphasis on results at the expense of ethics.

"Our basic finding was that whereas the majority of the investigators were what we called 'strict' with regard to balancing risks against benefits, a significant minority were 'permissive'. That is, they were much more willing to accept an unsatisfactory risk-benefit ratio," Barber said.

"How does it happen that the treatment of human subjects is sometimes less than ethical, even in some of the most respected university hospitals?"

"We think the abuses can be traced to defects in the training of physicians and in the screening and monitoring of research by review committees, and also to a fundamental tension between investigation and therapy."

Barber reached his conclusions on the basis of a questionnaire answered by 293 teaching and nonteaching hospitals and other research institutions, and with the help of interviews with 350 scientists actively engaged in research with human subjects.

The questionnaire asked scientists to respond to six simulated research proposals of the type that might come before a committee reviewing their ethical considerations.

One mock experiment proposed that the thymus gland be removed unnecessarily from a random sample of children undergoing heart surgery. Since the thymus gland is a component of the body's immune system, the idea of the make-believe study would be to learn the effect of such removal on the survival of an experimental skin graft made at the same time.

Another simulated test would study the lung function of patients kept under unnecessarily long anesthesia after a routine hernia operation. And one would investigate the effect of radioactive calcium on bone metabolism in children.

Barber, a professor of sociology, said the replies to the thymus, radioactive calcium and anesthesia projects provide measures of the scientists' attitudes toward balancing the risks facing the patients with the benefits anticipated from the study.

"A clear pattern emerged," he said. "In the case of the high risk thymectomy (thymus removal), for example, 72 per cent of the respondents said the project should not be approved no matter how high the probability was that it would establish the efficacy of thymectomy in promoting transplant survival.

"On the other hand, 28 per cent of the respondents said they would approve the experiment. Six per cent said they would approve it even if the chance of significant results was no better than one in 10."

With the radioactive calcium experiment, he said 54 per cent were against doing the study at all. But 14 per cent said they would approve it even if the odds were only one in 10 that it would to an important medical discovery.

Barber said the same general pattern of a strict majority and a permissive minority emerged from the interviews.

Officials said they had adopted a budget of slightly more than $1 million for the conference.

CRUISE IN THE OFF-SEASON

Although most people prefer to take their cruise during the peak of the season for all the glamour, excitement, and crowds it offers, others enjoy the quiet and restfulness of the off season cruise. Tourists are not present in such great numbers; interesting places can be visited more leisurely and at greater length.

Some people prefer to pray only when they are in church or at some great public gathering where the prayers are led for them. But our Lord said to pray in the "off-season." He said, "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." The real joys of prayer are truly found when you are praying alone with God. The scripture says to be instant in season and out of season.

The church would encourage you to pray both in church and at home. Prayer can uphold, support, and strengthen our churches, ourselves, and our country.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

Oilman seeks grassroots money for Ford campaign

HOUSTON (UPI) — There's a saying among Texas wildcaters who back million dollar deals with their word that in the oil business money comes from the ground and not from other men.

No one knows this better than independent oilman Robert Mosbacher who came to the Southwest with just enough money to go out and make more. But as finance chairman for President Ford's election campaign, Mosbacher has the tough task of seeking contributions from grassroots supporters and traditional Republican money men apprehensive about Watergate campaign contribution violations. With his reputation for raising funds, he may be the man to do it.

"A lot of people are scared to give and a lot who can are too disenchanted," Mosbacher said. "For those who are willing to give, there is fear and confusion. Some are in a very gray area. They don't want to look like they have done anything that would be wrong."

Mosbacher, who divides his time between supervising his oil interests from a Houston bank building and a Washington office, has his sights set on a $10 million campaign fund for the GOP nomination this summer in Kansas City, Mo.

Under guidelines of the new campaign contribution laws his job is laid out in black and white. "It ain't easy," he said, affectionately using down-home slang. "The day of the big contributor is over, regardless how you view it philosophically or any other way."

"You are not going to be able to get $50,000 contributors and even if we were or did, I'm not sure we would want it. There's $1,000 limitation per person. Our goal is to raise $10 million plus the cost of raising it, which is limited to 20 per cent.

"We need to turn to everyone. But there's a lot of apathy. There's a lot of (people) who are turned off by Washington, government — all aspects of it."

The steely blue-eyed Mosbacher, 48, has a reputation in Texas as a man who can always find a dollar somewhere, whether it is for a school, hospital or cancer research. Unlike many of his counterparts — the rough black gold seekers who became rags to riches legends overnight — Mosbacher is a native New Yorker from a blue-blood family known for years in yachting circles.

We won the Long Island midsize sailing championship at age 12. He took the Atlantic Class championship at 14, again at 16, and the coveted Bermuda Trophy the next year. In both 1969 and 1971 Mosbacher won world sailing championships in two Olympic classes.

Mosbacher, a graduate of Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Va., came to Houston in 1948 and opened a branch of his father's office.

He is a dedicated Republican who worked aggressively in 1960 for Richard Nixon, ran the former president's Harris County campaign in 1968 and contributed $24,675 to Nixon in 1972, his brother, Emil "Bus" Mosbacher Jr., served as Nixon's chief of protocol.

Mosbacher now likes to spend quick vacations at his mountain ranch outside Vail, Colo., where he and his family ski. For exercise the youthful and trim Mosbacher walks to work in Washington and bicycles on the quiet streets of his fashionable West Houston neighborhood.

Above all, he believes in Ford's brand of chief executive and has made it clear he will throw himself full force into the next five months' work.

"It's a fairly brief time and it's a fairly minor sacrifice I'm willing to make for what I believe is a great president and a good government," Mosbacher said during an interview in his walnut-paneled office.

"As a president and as a man I view Ford in many ways as my ideal. He's completely honest and has complete integrity. He believes in an open White House. Whatever we raise and whatever we do is open for scrutiny at any time whether it's under any law or not.

"Having been involved in lots of different kinds of fund raising, I've found there always lots of people who are delighted for any excuse not to give. There are also a lot of very basic, generous people."

Mosbacher and his workers have devised a four-part plan to raise campaign funds — national direct mail, state and city chairman mail and personal contact programs, appearances by administration members and GOP congressmen supporting the President, and regional groups of professional and business supporters.

Mosbacher said the national direct mail plan "is something we had not done previously — to lay out the method the way people can give."

He said former California Gov. Ronald Reagan's quest for the GOP nomination provided a unique impetus to his fund-raising campaign.

"Anyone on either side of the spectrum has an easier time raising funds from a minority or devotees of that cause. There's more emotion," he said. "But Ford is a president who is middle-of-the-road. He's not going to raise that sort of emotion."

"In my mind that makes for good government and a good president, but it doesn't make for good fund raising."

Appeals court grants woman murder trial

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has granted a Wichita Falls woman a new trial for the murder of her husband.

Mildred Opal Batten was sentenced to life in prison for hiring a man to murder her husband, George Batten. But the appeals court said the trial court limited the number of peremptory jury challenges entitled to her under the state's capital murder law.

The trial court said the death penalty did not apply in the case because the state did not file a written notice it would seek capital punishment.

The appeals court said the prosecutor's announcement he would not seek the death penalty did not remove death as a possible penalty, and the jury still could assess death in the case.

In other cases, the criminal appeals court: Upheld the prostitution conviction of Karen Krapek, who contended her offer to "do some business" with a Ft. Hood soldier working with police could not be taken to mean sexual conduct.

Ordered a new trial for Roy Wayne Beeman of Wilbarger County, sentenced to five years in prison for dealing drugs. The appeals court held the trial judge abused his discretion in declaring a second mistrial in the case and should have sustained Beeman's plea of former jeopardy in his third jury trial.

Texas bank is closed

HOUSTON (UPI) — The South Texas Bank was closed Wednesday because loan losses far exceeded capital funds, the state banking commissioner said.

Robert Stewart, who ordered the bank closed, said the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. has assumed control of the bank's assets.

Stewart said the loan losses were more than $800,000 and capital funds were about $600,000. He said the banking commission had notified the bank last June that additional capital funds were needed, but the bank was unable to raise enough money.

The FDIC said it would begin paying depositors up to the maximum $40,000 within a few days.

Ten cords of wood should be more than enough to heat the average home for an entire year.

Mail dumped in landfill

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) — First class mail destined for delivery was instead dumped at a city landfill, officials of the U.S. Postal Service said Wednesday.

Memphis Regional Postmaster General James J. Symbol said the "unfortunate incident" occurred when the wayward mail, including parcels and first-class letters, "inadvertently found its way into a rubbish container at the Memphis Bulk Mail Center."

The contents of the container were then collected with the weekly trash pickup and taken to the city landfill.

John Johnson, acting foreman of the landfill, said eight postal employees trailed directly behind the sanitation truck when it returned from its run Monday.

"I thought it was unusual. They were in two cars, a station wagon and a sedan both with red flashing lights," he said.

Johnson said the postal inspectors sifted through trash with rakes and recovered enough of the mail to fill "the whole back end of a station wagon."

"Some of the stuff they found was unbelievable," he said and included food stamp booklets, small and large packages, magazines and cancelled checks.

"The head honcho told me every bit of it was live mail," Johnson said. "None of it had been delivered yet."

$300 million to Egypt

CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — Saudi Arabia will give Egypt an immediate cash grant of $300 million and has urged other rich Arab nations to help shore up the Egyptian economy, a joint communique said today.

The communique was issued simultaneously in Cairo and Riyadh, the capital of Saudi Arabia, at the end of a five-day official visit by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

The visit to Saudi Arabia was the first leg of an Arab world tour that will take Sadat to Muscat, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar and Kuwait to seek economic aid and support for his Middle East policies.

The communique said talks between Sadat and Saudi King Khaled re-emphasized "collective Arab responsibility" for a just solution to the Arab conflict with Israel "by all available means."

It called for unification of Arab ranks and "mobilization of all resources" to foil any attempts at freezing the Middle East situation.

The communique said Arab countries should take action to help "restore the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including its right to self-determination and return to its homeland."

The communique said King Khaled believes Arab countries should "extend speedy aid to sister Egypt and to cooperate among themselves in bolstering up the Egyptian economy at this critical stage."
