159 bodies pulled from charred club

SOUTHGATE, Ky. (AP)—The parking lot at the Beverly Hills Supper Club is still crowded. Scores of cars sit as silent sentinels for the people who never drove away.

As recovery efforts resumed today, 159 bodies had been pulled from the charred ruins where a fire Saturday night had panicked 3,500 to 5,000 partying patrons. One other person died later at a hospital, raising the toll to 160.

We're bringing in an additional crane to search, but all reports are there are there are no more bodies," the mayor of Southgate said today. "We have found no more clothing or personal belongings."

On Sunday, Fire Chief Dick Huesenberg had said he didn't think any more bodies would be found, but rescue supervisor Jim Lanagan said he feared more victims still lay under the rubble.

Richard Schilling, who owns the club with his brother and father, said today he would have no comment on the fire. "All we are trying to do is cooperate as much as possible," he said.

The disaster left relatives weeping at an armory turned morgue and officials talking about inadequate safety laws.

Many survivors said they thought the electricity failed. They said the club was pitched into darkness shortly after the fire became known. A local policeman said when he arrived at the club, he saw no lights, including exit lights.

As best as I can remember, when I got there at 9:30 there wasn't a light inside or out," said patrolman Tom Reber, south of neighboring Fort

Thomas, Ky. "The big light out front was out. It was the first time I could remember it being out."

Campbell County Coroner Fred Stine said more than 130 people had been hospitalized for burns or smoke inhalation.

The bodies, many of them uncovered after a crane lifted parts of the collapsed roof, were ferried to the armory in Fort Thomas on military trucks.

Early in the effort, the trucks had to pick their way through traffic jams on the narrow quarter-mile path from the club, high atop a bluff across the Ohio River from Cincinnati.

Later Sunday, they bounced past begrimed, exhausted firefighters catching naps on the ground.

During early rescue efforts, Southgate Mayor Ken Paul had to ask police to guard the bodies.

Can you believe it, we caught people taking stuff off those dead people," Paul said. Three persons were arrested.

There was no water sprinkler system in the club. Such systems were not made mandatory until after 1970, when the club was rebuilt following another fire. Kentucky Gov. Julian Carroll and Mayor Paul said at the site Sunday that the law should be made retroactive to include all public places.

Carroll said he would lead an investigation. "So we can, my God, see that it never happens again."

The fire apparently began at about 9 p.m., starting in the basement of the three-story brick building then breaking through the floor of the Zebra Room, one of several rooms and alcoves used for private parties.

Stine, the coroner, said he had been told that the manager of the club had said the blaze began in a faulty generator. A state fire official said the cause had not been determined.

In one room, 35 persons held a birthday party for Ona Mayfield, a teacher from Trenton, Ohio. Fifteen of them died, among them her son, Clark Mayfield, coach of the Jacksonville State University football team. It was not known if the guest of honor survived.

The structure also had a 900-seat theater, the Cabaret Room, where comedians Jim Teter and Jim McDonald were on stage. Entertainer John Davidson, the main attraction, was next on the bill.

The smoke and flames spread quickly. "It happened so fast, it's a wonder anyone got out," said waitress Mary Ann Kutka.

Busboy Walter Bailey, just graduated from high school, heard about the fire from a waitress and took over the theater microphone.

Bailey interrupted the act and told the patrons to head for the exits. But the fire wasn't yet evident in the theater, and some people thought the busboy was part of the comedy.

The worst thing of all was that a lot of people didn't believe me when I said there was a fire," said Bailey.

But quickly there was heat and smoke.

Davidson, who was shaving when he was told of the fire, escaped unharmed, but also underestimated the blaze.

The fire spread so fast there was no smoke when I first went down from my dressing room, and so I went out thinking I'll come back for my stuff because we didn't see any fire at all," he said Sunday after returning to Los Angeles.

Just seconds after we got out, the door we came through was engulfed with smoke and flames. Among the dead were Davidson's music director and five members of club's house band.

Lanagan, a 30-year-old ironworker who had earned hero's laurels in several other fires, was not at the club but responded to a radio broadcast about the fire in Cincinnati. He said bodies were stacked three feet high inside the structure.

When firefighters arrived, they worked on evacuating those inside rather than on putting out the blaze. It wasn't under control until 1 a.m. Sunday and still was smoldering as firefighters doused it this morning.

Bodies in charred evening clothes were strewn around outside the building. The coroner said most of the dead probably died of smoke inhalation, and he noted it can kill even after the victim reaches fresh air.

But many of the bodies were burned.

"They were stacked up five feet in front of the bar," said Darrell Meader, a member of the Red Cross emergency team. "They all ran. They all panicked."

The Saturday night fire was one of the worst in the nation's history. It prompted memories of another nightclub fire, which killed 491 people at the Coconut Grove in Boston in 1942. The worst fire in a U.S. building killed 602 people at the Iroquois Theater in Chicago in 1903.

Calls bill 'window dressing'

By THOM MARSHALL,
Pampa News Staff

Newly-wed U.S. Senator John Tower in Pampa today to speak at a luncheon in the Senior Citizens Center, said in an interview with The News that the farm bill passed recently by Senate is pretty much to the liking of the farmer. It's certainly more than the administration requested or the House passed.

Tower's bride, the former Lilla Burt Cummings, a 48-year-old Washington, D.C. attorney, did not accompany him today. The two were married Sunday in a private ceremony at Southern Methodist University.

It is the second marriage for both of them. Tower's divorce from his former wife, Lou, became final in December. They had been married for 25 years.

Asked this morning when final energy legislation might be expected, Tower said, "It's hard to say because this energy thing is going to be debated and cussed and discussed and it's going to be piecemeal in the Senate, you see, there's no one committee that handles all energy legislation."

A member of the Senate Ethics Committee, Tower called the recent Ethics Bill "window dressing." But said, "I'll enforce the provisions of it."

Tower was one of four senators who weren't present to vote on the measure. Asked about that this morning, he said, "I was positioned on it. I was positioned in opposition, to try to distinguish between earned and unearned income and say one's ethical and one's not doesn't make too much sense to me."

Asked when he last visited Pampa and the Panhandle area, Tower replied, "Oh, I've been in the Panhandle fairly frequently. I can't remember precisely the last time I was here. I've been in Pampa several times. I don't recall the specific dates. I think the last time I was in Pampa was probably a year and a half or so ago."

Tower is in his third term. He won a special election in 1961 for Lyndon Johnson's seat, was re-elected by 200,000 votes in 1966 and by more than 300,000 votes in 1972.

One of his opponents in the last election, Barefoot Sanders, recently began looking into the possibility of running again for Tower's seat.

Asked if he knew of others who will oppose him in the next election, Tower said, "Oh, I think there will end up being maybe half a dozen."

Commenting on the Carter administration, Republican Tower said of the President, "He talks about balancing the budget, but so far he hasn't told us how he's going to do it. He hasn't shown any disposition to me to cut expenditures in areas where we need to cut them—that's a lot of this social spending."

Tower said that he feels the trend has been toward more spending not less spending. "We keep getting proposals from new bureaucracies," he said.

"We've got a Consumer Protection Agency coming up that they're trying to get through on us. We need that like we need another hole in the head."

Asked to predict the trend of economy in the nation, Tower said, "I think the economy will continue to improve if the government will leave it alone. What some of us have to do in Congress is to make sure we minimize government intervention in the economy."

Getting back to energy, he said, "Government action is what helped create energy problems in the first place, through too much government regulation, price fixing. Now they propose to try to solve the problem by more government intervention, which to me doesn't make a whole lot of sense."

At least the President properly recognized the problem, we are facing up to an energy crisis. And the most constructive thing the President did was to note that we do have a real crisis and not a contrived one. But in terms of trying to solve the energy crisis he didn't propose anything that was a constructive solution," Tower said.

He said that conservation alone will not solve the energy problem.

"We're still going to have to expand the supply of energy and that means incentives. The President's proposal is a disincentive if I ever saw one. I think it's a combination of bad advice and political pressure."

Tower spoke in Canadian early today at a Memorial Day service at Edith Ford Memorial Cemetery.

Following the Pampa appearance, he went to Borger for more Memorial Day activities, then to Amarillo.

More stops in Panhandle towns were set for Tuesday and Wednesday.

Carter stops, visits children

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. (AP)—The sign said: "Mr. President, please stop." He couldn't resist.

So Jimmy Carter waded hip-deep into a gaggle of screaming school children who ambushed him on his way back to this off-shore Georgia resort from bidding his wife, Rosalynn, farewell on her Latin American tour at the nearby Brunswick, Ga., airport.

The President's tan-and-cocoa limousine stopped abruptly on the main road. Secret Service cars braked to a halt behind Carter. He climbed out, took 9-year-old daughter Amy in low and started patting heads, shaking hands and hugging shoulders.

He told the two or three score youngsters, "Thank you all for stopping me. I'm glad to see you all."

Time runs out for lawmakers

By LEE JONES,
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP)—Crowded by the legislature's midnight deadline, House negotiators on school finance offered experienced teachers faster pay raises today as a step toward compromise with the Senate.

Also working toward compromise on the final day of the legislative session was a conference committee on medical malpractice that has been stalled for weeks.

Senators laid out a new malpractice proposal, and Rep. Tom Uher, chairman of House conferees, said, "I think we'll have a bill."

Similar optimism was expressed on school finance.

"I do think now we'll get together. I didn't yesterday but I do now," said Rep. Tom Massey, D-San Angelo, chairman of House members of the joint conference committee on school finance.

The conferees recessed until noon so senators could have time to study the latest House proposal and its impact on individual school districts.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe said he had spoken with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, presiding officer of the Senate, this morning and "I share chairman Massey's optimism."

The $900 million House school finance offer would give an immediate raise of $1,474 a year in state-subsidized minimum pay to bachelors degree teachers who have been locked into the top step for at least two years. They would advance another $1,117 in another two years. House conferees earlier had insisted on three-year waits between each of the three new steps proposed for the top of the scale.

Farther down, however, a beginning teacher would start this fall at $8,084, only $84 more than the present scale provides.

House conferees also dropped their insistence that local districts' taxes to pay their share of Foundation School Program costs be frozen in 1978.

"We have the truth in taxation" provision that everybody agrees on and does away with the necessity for another limit," Massey said.

The "truth in taxation" provision requires school districts to post notice and hold public hearings before raising taxes. And tax notices would have to show both appraised and assessed value of property, the percentage of appraised valuation that a district taxes, the tax rate and the amount of tax to be paid.

Briscoe prodded conferees Sunday night to get together so that the clock wouldn't run out on the session without action on malpractice or school finance.

Flanked by John Poerner and Howard Richards, his chief lobbyists, Briscoe prowled the halls of the Capitol Sunday night to search out members of both conferees.

Rep. Tom Uher, D-Bay City, head of House conferees on malpractice, said Briscoe found them in Speaker Bill Clayton's office.

Professional 'finders' for hire

By THOM MARSHALL,
Pampa News Co-Editor

The reasons for inflation are myriad, fellow taxpayers, but one of them — the money given away by the federal government — was emphasized recently via a "news release" that came to the newspaper.

It was a promotion for International Systems, Inc., a firm that cities and counties can hire to help in getting money from the federal government.

Today the leaders of cities, towns, counties, and school districts in the South will tell you one of the reasons they have been able to get their hands on such a big piece of the government pie is they've hired professionals to help them track down the money — the firm boasts in its news release.

A specific instance bragged about occurred in Uniontown, Ala. — a town of approximately 15,000, where a new civic complex is being built at a cost of $480,000.

Mayor A.M. Hayden says ISI found that money for Uniontown.

That's what it said — "found it. Buried treasure. A money tree in the forest. An unexpected legacy. Something for nothing."

Hayden says he and the city council "don't know what money we might get, and none of us is trained to go out and get it. But we're making sure we get our piece of the pie."

Rump pie it is, my fellow savor-fanned taxpayers. The attitude prevalent in the country that has insured the success of firms like ISI is: "If we don't get it they'll just give it to someone else." ISI, in announcing expansion into Texas claims a 600 per cent increase in client base in the past year.

ISI's Community Assistance Program includes computer matching of client's needs with available federal funds, technical assistance in applying for grants, funding assistance through the company's Washington office and the opportunity to maximize efficiency by obtaining refunds for overhead costs — according to the release.

Nation's press

Repeal the inventory tax

Santa Ana Register

The state of California in the past two years has seen its reputation as a good business climate sink abysmally. Numerous industries have pulled out, seeking areas with a more favorable business climate — i.e. places with less taxation and fewer government regulations.

Whereas politicians and the feeble-minded will salute the fact that our golden state is losing a greedy collection of malefactors ("Businessmen are finally getting the walling they deserve," to quote one campus ignoramus), the truth is that the wellbeing of all Californians is seriously jeopardized accordingly.

What the exodus means at its most fundamental level is fewer jobs and higher prices. A healthier business climate means a more prosperous region. That is an economic truism that has not been overturned, no matter what textbook you're studying. Moreover, such nasty conditions antibusiness legislation was supposed to correct — e.g. occupational hazards and environmental despoliation — show absolutely no signs of abating.

The reason is simple: you cannot improve conditions by penalizing the one source of all improvements: civilization has ever enjoyed, the free market economy.

One of the major impediments to California business over the years is the badly conceived inventory tax. An inventory tax is inherently unfair, hitting smaller businesses harder than their larger competitors. Plus, the tax is passed along to customers. Never let any public interest activist tell you customers don't pay business taxes, in fact, do not allow this activist to change the subject until he or she concedes that the people are the only means business has of paying taxes. (Journalists are notoriously permissive with these antibusiness zealots, so it is important that you confront them.)

A while back the legislature, alarmed by the flagging state economy, did act to relieve part of the inventory tax burden. Chastened a little, Sacramento reduced the tax by 50 per cent, remaining still hits Californians, small business people and consumers alike, unfairly.

State Senator Jerome Smith, D-San Jose, has introduced a measure (SB-443) to phase out the remaining 50 per cent of the inventory tax. This would be accomplished by increasing the exemption 10 per cent every year over the next five years, beginning in 1978. The measured pace of the repeal is so that the state might soften the blow to itself, finding other revenue producers.

Frankly, we should like to see the rest of the inventory tax abolished right now, and forthrightly without the five-year concession to the tax collector. But if some legislators are beginning to recognize the adverse relationship of taxes to the economy, then the position of the zealots is slipping perceptibly.

That is a good thing

Jaworski on power abuse

By RICHARD L. LESHER,
President
Chamber of Commerce of the United States

WASHINGTON — Today's column consists of excerpts from a letter written by Leon Jaworski, former Watergate special prosecutor, to Rep. Jack Brooks (D-Texas), chairman of the House Government Operations Committee. Dear Mr. Chairman:

The new Agency for Consumer Protection, as it is called in the bill (H.R. 6118), would be vested with authority so broad that it could easily be turned to the political advantage of those who control it. There are no checks sufficient to harness that authority. Under these circumstances, creation of the new agency is unwise.

The Agency for Consumer Protection would be charged to "protect" and to "represent" the interests of consumers in nearly every activity of our federal complex. The legislation would grant its administrator the right to appear before agencies and departments of government, the right to collect information by compulsory process from within and without government, the right to sue the government in federal court, and the right to speak from any platform — all on behalf of the "consumer interest" which he "represents."

Let us consider the implications of this authority. To do so, we must first inquire who are the new agency's constituents. They are called "consumers" as if there were a difference between a consumer and a person. In fact, of course, there is none. The agency will ostensibly represent the interest of every man, woman and child in this nation.

This conclusion leads to the question of how the interest of the people will be determined in any given matter. There are no criteria in the bill for defining that interest, nor could there be. Definition of the national interest is the most difficult and most fundamental objective of government, and ultimate responsibility for its accomplishment is placed by the Constitution upon the elected Members of Congress and the President. I have severe reservations about the delegation of so broad and basic a role to one unelected official.

The political authority inherent in such an assignment is literally enormous. If the Agency for Consumer Protection were to function as it is conceived in the bill, the power of the administrator could not be checked by the President.

Neither could Congress nor the judiciary provide an effective balance against the activities of the agency, so long as it remained within its practically limitless statutory authority. Congress could theoretically abolish the agency or limit its appropriation, but in practice would probably not do so. As the designated representative of all consumer interests, the administrator would have far greater opportunity to influence public opinion than most Members of Congress. I would expect the agency to make the argument that its mandate could not be carried out without substantially greater appropriations. Given the administrator's public platform and his designated status as the representative of all consumers, it is not unlikely that he would prevail. For these reasons, I am skeptical as well about the "sunset provision" contained in Section 23 of the bill.

I do not care to speculate that any person would use the new agency as a vehicle to distort the political process for personal gain or for any other reason. I need not do so to prove my point. Power would be vested in the administrator of the new agency that could be wrongfully manipulated. That alone is sufficient to justify laying the

Worsening postal crisis

By Don Oakley

Saturday delivery of mail seems fated to go the way of the three-cent stamp. Unless Saturday service is eliminated, Postmaster General Benjamin J. Bailar has told a Senate subcommittee, the first-class rate will have to be raised to 16 cents early next year, along with increases in other classes, to meet projected deficits. Without Saturday service, however, the first-class rate could be pegged at 15 cents. For a while, anyway.

But while the Postal Service cites surveys showing that most people would be willing to trade mail-less Saturdays for a smaller increase in the cost of a stamp, no combination of service cuts or postage increases can do more than postpone a crisis that is fast approaching.

That crisis is in the form of instant electronic, computerized communication, a development which critics of the Postal Service say it has utterly failed to anticipate or become involved in.

Since some 70 per cent of first-class mail is business and banking transactions, which are especially adaptable to electronic handling, the loss of this volume to private companies would be a tremendous blow to the Postal Service.

No clipping penalties

Your typical "coupon clipper" these days is not someone enjoying dividends from Wall Street stocks. It is the ordinary housewife who, in increasing numbers, is trekking to the store with a pursful of coupons clipped from the newspaper or received in the mail. Her dividend: a slightly smaller grocery bill.

Last year, American companies distributed more than 45 billion cents-off coupons for a wide range of products, enough to give every man, woman and child in the country a couple hundred opportunities to save money — not to mention a monumental headache to checkout clerks.

More than 65 per cent of the nation's households are expected to redeem at least one coupon this year, says RJR Foods. Six years ago, only 58 per cent took advantage of discount coupons.

Even though it costs about seven cents to process a coupon over and above its face value, food companies consider them a key strategy in the merchandising battle. Since the average grocery store contains some 9,000 different products competing for the shopper's attention, coupons are one way of generating sales.

Another factor that contributed to a 28 per cent jump in the number of coupons issued in 1976 compared to 1975 is the growing impact of restaurants and fast food chains. It is predicted that by 1980, one out of every two food dollars will be spent outside the grocery store, and food companies want to halt that trend.

Winter's deadly toll

Another side effect of the terrible winter just passed has been reported, one much more tragic than high heating bills and fuel shortages.

According to the National Safety Council, the winter-ravished month of January 1977 saw home accident deaths soar 33 per cent over the same period in 1976. Preliminary statistics show that all classifications of home deaths were far above those for an average January.

Fire deaths, for example, zoomed at least 60 per cent and poisonings by gases and vapors, mainly carbon monoxide, jumped 40 per cent because of the strain put on home heating units and the use of makeshift heating devices to combat the bitter cold.

About the only good thing that can be said about the month is that traffic deaths were down 10 per cent.

Surprisingly, the severe weather which forced people to remain at home, away from jobs and schools and off the highways, hit the younger population the hardest. Home deaths for all ages groups rose except for the elderly aged 65-74, with the largest fatality rates occurring among children and young adults.

And readers write

Recently in California, a man was arrested because he was promoting a scheme in which he promised to pay people a high rate of return on their investment if they invested their money with him. As it turned out, he was taking money from new investors and paying it back to the investors who had previously given him money. This procedure was labeled a fraud and the man was thrown in jail. If it is illegal for an individual to promote such a fraud, then why is it legal for the federal government to promote the same fraud upon the American people? This is exactly the same thing that our Social Security system is doing. It is paying out benefits to people who have not earned them and will continue to extort money from workers just as it has always done to cover benefits now being paid.

A spokesman of the Illinois Department of Insurance in talking about Social Security has been quoted as saying, "If a private insurance company attempted to sell a plan in Illinois which cost so much and paid so little, we would run them out of the state as frauds."

The only way out of the present Social Security mess which the federal government has illegally created is for the government to get out of it. This will be difficult to do because politicians have used Social Security to buy votes for years. But people would be better off investing with private industry and the vehicle is already available through individual retirement plans, Keogh plans, and private pension plans. Congress should terminate the Social Security program at once — to the extent of taking in no more workers. Every living person should be refunded, with interest, except certain benefit beneficiaries for whom this would mean undue hardship. Determination of which individuals should continue receiving benefits in conformity with present provisions of law should be made strictly on a financial basis, with sociological and political considerations rigidly excluded.

Planned Parenthood clinic stays put

Affluent suburb protests new neighbor

EDITOR'S NOTE — As the residents see it, abortion isn't the issue. Abortion in Highland Park is. That's why this affluent suburb of St. Paul doesn't want the state headquarters of Planned Parenthood...

...but they say they aren't the ones who set fire to the clinic.
By JAMES CARRIER
Associated Press Writer
ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) —

The two-story red brick building is a near shell, its upper walls bulging outward, its steel beams buckled, its roof jacked up, great cracks staggering toward the ground.
It's a bitter symbol in suburban Highland Park, an upper-middle class neighborhood of large homes and tree-lined streets.

The building, a converted pancake place, was headquarters of Planned Parenthood of Minnesota. It also housed a bustling clinic that dispensed contraceptives, gave venereal disease and cancer tests, and abortions.

The clinic spelled out "in a concrete way" the reality of the 1973 Supreme Court decision allowing voluntary abortions, said the Rev. Leo Dolan, who condemned abortions at all five masses of St. Leo's Catholic Church. To the people of the neighborhood, the abortion issue was no longer an abstraction.

The next day, 5,000 signatures were handed to the Planned Parenthood executive board with the clear message: You're not wanted.

"I was mad," recalled John Healy Jr., an attorney and resident of Highland who later headed the Citizens for Community Action, a group opposed to the clinic.

To him, abortion was not the issue. Abortion in the neighborhood was. So was the counseling that provided teenagers with contraceptives or an abortion without parental consent.

Today, the clinic is closed. In the basement and what is left of the first floor, the Planned Parenthood staff works on. Overhead, workmen begin a $300,000 repair job.

But some things cannot be repaired — the memory of a year of picketing and violence that culminated in a deliberate fire Feb. 23.

It began when Planned Parenthood decided to move to more pleasant surroundings, and the Catholic Bulletin, the official newspaper of the St. Paul-Minneapolis archdiocese, headlined "First St. Paul Abortion Clinic To Open." That was April 16, 1976, Good Friday.

From then, Planned Parenthood was on the defensive. Flanked by a car wash and fast-food restaurant, the building stands in an area heavily trafficked by children. Across the street is a library and a softball field.

On the weekend after Easter 1976, the first petitions appeared — at a nearby shopping center on Saturday, and in five churches on Sunday.

"Not Wanted" Message Made Clear

A fire gutting the new headquarters of the Planned Parenthood of Minnesota in St. Paul last February brings to a climax a year of community conflict. At the scene are Kit Briggs, left, president of the board, and Tom Weber, center, executive director of the center's clinic. The key words in the antagonism, oversimplifying the issues, were "abortion" and "Catholic." But local residents' groups, petitions and vandalism made the message to the center clear: you're not wanted here. No one expects the battle to end soon.

Austin undecided on suit

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Mayor Carole McClellan says the city council will decide within two weeks whether to approve a proposed settlement of Austin's gas pricing suit against Lo-Vaca Gathering Co. and Coastal States Gas Producing Co.

The suit was a legacy left by the former council, which went out of office — with three holdovers out of seven members — earlier this month.

Mrs. McClellan met for two hours Friday with officials of San Antonio and the Lower Colorado River Authority to discuss the proposed Lo-Vaca settlement.

Suits against the gas utility total $1.8 billion and result from Lo-Vaca's charging higher prices than the approximately 25 cents per 1,000 cubic feet called for in contracts signed in the early 1960s.

The settlement negotiated by lawyers for the companies and the customers would spin off Lo-Vaca from Coastal, its corporate parent, and place half the ownership in the hands of its customers. Coastal would agree to spend $230 million over an 18-year period to find new gas, which Lo-Vaca would buy at below market price. Coastal's Texas lignite properties would be transferred to Lo-Vaca.

San Antonio has agreed to accept the plan, but there is a push within the city council for a vote to change direction and pursue the city's $500 million suit.

rector of Planned Parenthood. "We do help them understand the consequences of their decision."

Operating from a base in St. Paul on an annual budget of $1.7 million, Planned Parenthood had for years referred women wanting abortions to hospitals or other clinics.

But the organization needed more room, found the Highland Park building, and bought it, knowing the abortion issue would raise a ruckus, particularly because of the community's strong religious institutions.

The building quickly became the target for growing community opposition. There were rallies, angry city council meetings, charges that real estate values would drop, court suits, thrown eggs.

In August someone cemented door locks shut, splashed red paint on the door, broke a window, phoned in bomb threats and wrote "Death" and "Abortion Kills" on the walls.

In September there was an anti-clinic advertising campaign in local papers, with the names, addresses and phone numbers of Planned Parenthood board members and sponsors.

There were pickets daily and prayer services on Saturdays. In October someone fired two shots into the front windows. In December, more broken windows and glued locks.

On Jan. 10 the medical clinic opened and performed the first five abortions. Two hundred protesters marched in front of the building.

Nevertheless, Planned Parenthood stayed open. Some 80 abortions were performed at the clinic through Feb. 3.

Of the 30 patients seen each week, half were abortion cases and the other half were for contraceptives or other family planning services, although the number from Highland is unknown.

At 9:30 p.m. Feb. 23, while the night janitor was out, someone walked into Webber's office, splashed gasoline on wood paneling and lit a match. In 30 minutes a local radio station received a call from a man who declared: "We've finally gotten rid of the abortion clinic in Highland Park."

Planned Parenthood officials began implicating the opposition. The "Ash Wednesday" fire grew out of an "atmosphere of violence," they said.

Pro-life supporters said it did their cause no good and denied involvement.

The fire brought some support for Planned Parenthood. Volunteers and contributions increased. One woman even walked over from the fast-food chain and donated her change.

The clinic will reopen in five months, but some supporters say the fire only hardened positions. A court appeal by the city still is in the works. And the resolve of the opposition has not diminished.

"I can't believe they'll go on as long as we're fighting for nothing, and we're fighting for our neighborhood," said Healy. "We've got to raise our kids there."

Memorial Day deaths climb

By The Associated Press
Traffic deaths led a tragic parade of violence in Texas over the Memorial Day weekend with nearly a full day remaining in the holiday.

By 11 a. m. today, 323 traffic deaths were reported. The National Safety Council had estimated that between 400 and 500 persons could lose their lives over the three-day weekend, which began at 6 p. m. Friday and ends at midnight tonight.

Last year, 442 persons were killed during the three-day Memorial Day weekend. The largest number of traffic deaths for the weekend was in 1968 when 629 persons died during a four-day observance.

Early today, The Associated Press had counted 35 deaths by violent causes in Texas since 6 p. m. Friday. Traffic accounted for 17 dead. Shootings and drownings claimed 15 lives and three more died from miscellaneous causes.

The tabulation was to continue until midnight Monday. Among the victims included: Three members of a Midland family and a friend drowned in the Devil's River northeast of Comstock in Southwest Texas. The dead were identified as Henry Torres, 35; his daughters Jackie, 7, and Virginia, 9, and Vincent Larez, 24, all of Midland. Witnesses said the two girls stepped into a hole and were swept away and their father and Larez drowned trying to save them.

Jonathon C. Durman, 21, of Los Angeles and Laird Adran Laird, 21, of Phoenix, two U.S. Navy sailors, were killed Saturday when their motorcycle crashed into a guardrail. The mishap occurred on IH 40 in Amarillo.

The bodies of two men shot to death late Friday night or Saturday morning were found Saturday at a residential construction site in Arlington. The men were identified as David Leon Caldwell, 27, of Haltom City and James W. Kier, 30, of Arlington.

The mayor of New Summerfield in East Texas was killed Sunday night when he was pinned beneath his car after it was struck by another vehicle that plowed into a service station where he was getting gas. Officials said the body of Eugene Boone Spaulding Jr., 24, was stuck beneath his car for two hours after the accident.

Antonio Perez Moreno, 59, of Lubbock was shot to death Sunday morning at a Southeast Lubbock residence during an argument.

Texas third for tourists

By The Associated Press
Texas now ranks third in the nation in total tourist revenues, behind California and Florida, a jump of 20 places from 1963.

The Memorial Day weekend is now the kickoff point for a summer-long tourist blitz that is centered on the Texas Coast but reaches every corner of the state.

Texas overtook New York in tourist dollars in 1975 and cashed in about $3.3 billion in travel receipts that year, according to the U.S. Travel Data Center.

In 1963, Texas was 23rd in the nation in tourist dollars. "People are spending two-thirds of their time in Texas, compared to half their time in 1972. We are becoming a destination point," said Frank Hildebrand, executive director of the Texas Tourist Development Agency.

Hildebrand and other tourist industry spokesmen say Texas' most popular resort area is the Gulf Coast.

"We are considered the new sun destination for the winter visitor," said Ralph Thompson of the South Padre Island Tourist Bureau. "Florida has become overcrowded and expensive. We are a new area and we still have that true Southern hospitality."

Hildebrand estimates that only about 15 per cent of all tourist traffic in the state is en route to Mexico, and no more than 20 per cent of all visitors are conventioners.

Names in the news

MIAMI (AP) — Gloria Steinem, appearing during a fundraising weekend for the Dade County Coalition of Human Rights, urged Miami women to vote June 7 in favor of a county ordinance outlawing discrimination against homosexuals.

At a press conference, Ms. Steinem criticized singer Anita Bryant for leading a campaign against the ordinance.

"Any woman who fights for her rights and does not conform to the traditional feminine role may be condemned as a lesbian," Ms. Steinem said Sunday. "That word is a way of keeping all women imprisoned."

Voters will decide whether the homosexual rights law should be repealed. The campaign has attracted much attention because of Miss Bryant's efforts to get the ordinance repealed.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Doctors Hospital has filed suit to collect about $16,400 for medical care it says it has provided to singer Jerry Lee Lewis and his wife.

The Circuit Court suit claims Lewis and his wife made 18 visits to the hospital for both emergency and long-term care from March 1976 through May 3, 1977, but never paid the bills.

Lewis' doctor, Hall Worthington, said the singer had his gall bladder removed at Doctors Hospital and had been sick much of 1976.

Lewis, 41, also has had a collapsed right lung, pleurisy and a back injury from an accident in his Rolls Royce in November.

In 1976, Lewis went to Doctors Hospital six times for treatment, the suit said. This year he allegedly sought and received treatment seven times.

Lewis could not be reached for comment.

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — Television news commentator Howard K. Smith says he's a bit melancholy, but not pessimistic, about the ability of today's college graduates to solve long-range problems.

The ABC-TV personality spoke and received an honorary degree during commencement ceremonies at Lehigh University here.

"Consider our assets," he said. "We are still the most nearly self-sufficient nation in the world."

"You are the first generation to graduate without any traumas like Watergate hanging over your heads, except for a mild recession," Smith said.

Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and his wife Nancy also received honorary degrees. Kissinger did not speak.

Kissinger received an honorary doctor of laws degree, as did Smith. Mrs. Kissinger's degree was a doctorate of humane letters.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. John Tower of Texas and Washington attorney Lilla Burt Cummings were married, each for the second time, in a ceremony at Southern Methodist University.

Tower, 51, is the chairman of the Senate's Republican Leadership Conference. His first marriage ended in divorce six months ago.

Mrs. Cummings, 48, is a former member of the zoning board of adjustment for the District of Columbia.

The ceremony was performed Saturday by the Rev. David Switzer, a former college roommate of Tower.

Tower's office said that the senator's daughters and a few close friends of the couple attended the ceremony.

Texas weather
By The Associated Press
Very heavy rains and hail fell in Northwest Texas from Abilene southward to San Angelo Sunday night before dissipating early today.

A tornado was sighted Sunday night 14 miles northeast of San Angelo and severe thunderstorm warnings were issued in several counties as golf ball-sized hail and heavy rains were reported during the afternoon and evening.

But early today the thunderstorms had dissipated and only a few light showers lingered south of San Angelo.

Elsewhere, generally clear to partly cloudy skies prevailed

National weather
By The Associated Press
Severe thunderstorms continued in the high plains of Colorado this morning. There was a report of six inches of hail east of Colorado Springs, along with some flash flooding, and a tornado was reported late Sunday night north of Kit Carson.

A tornado watch was issued early today for an area that covers portions of northwest Kansas and southwest and west central Nebraska.

The area of most intense thunderstorms covered the high plains of Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota and Wyoming. Showers and thundershowers also were scattered from the western Great Lakes to the lower Ohio Valley. Other areas were in Virginia, southern New England, central Texas and central Florida.

Elsewhere, skies were partly cloudy to clear.

Overnight temperatures ranged from 85 at Phoenix, Ariz., to 31 at Butte, Mont.

Billy joins CB fest
LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — "Movin' on 1777" brought Billy Carter and 30,000 other people here this weekend to celebrate truckdriving and citizens band radio, but the festivities were dampened by a water shortage at Pocono International Raceway.

"This whole thing is a mess...dusty, dirty," said jewelry saleswoman Linda Shaker of New London, Conn.

A 6,000-gallon water supply, provided for the three campgrounds, somehow had not been hooked up until late Saturday night.

Even Carter, the President's brother, was inconvenienced by the shortage. He planted a peanut patch Saturday, then looked around for some water to give the goobers a start. There just wasn't any.

The resourceful Carter walked over to a cooler, grabbed a can of beer and poured it over the first peanut patch in northeastern Pennsylvania.

The scarcity of water compounded the generally dry conditions. A lack of rain has left the region somewhat parched, and the slightest breezes stirred up little duststorms.

As for the festivities, some didn't amount to much.

A motor-mouth contest, for CB enthusiasts, in which participants were to speak a steady stream of their lingo for minutes, was canceled because too few entrants came forward.

And the mud wrestling championship ("a sight to behold," according to the CB program) was postponed several times, partly due to lack of mud, partly to lack of entrants.

Most of those at the festival made their own fun in the campgrounds, a sea of camper vehicles, CB antennas, American flags, barbecues and tents.

"We're waiting mainly for the country music show," said Carol Miller of West Milford, N.J.

The top attraction was the two country music shows, featuring blind singer Ronnie Milap Saturday night and country superstar Tammy Wynette Sunday.

Welder to run for gov
AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Donald R. Beagle, welding shop operator in Beagle, said today he is a candidate for governor in the 1978 Democratic primary.

Beagle wore a T-shirt emblazoned "Men's Equality Now," which he said was an "international" organization based in Nederland.

He said he was also a member of "Texas Fathers for Equal Rights."

"Draft the women in the service and put a gun on their shoulders," said Beagle's announcement. "Hire men as secretaries in all branches of government, where the females dominate."

"Give the children a chance to grow up knowing both their parents, and their grandparents. Let them grow up in a man's world too."

Beagle said he was divorced two years ago and still fighting for custody of his little boy.

Carter predicts better terms

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. (AP) — President Carter said today he expects "indications in the next few weeks" of improved relations between the United States and Cuba but said they would stop "far short of recognition."

Chatting with reporters in nearby Brunswick, where he saw wife Rosalynn off on a seven-nation Latin American tour, Carter said, "It would be better for this hemisphere if Cuba did have good relations with the nations here."

Saying that it is obvious that the United States wants better relations with the Communist-governed island off the coast of Florida, Carter said, "We haven't had any firm indication yet that (Cuban President Fidel) Castro wants to normalize relations with us."

Asked about his reaction to Cuba's sending military advisers into Ethiopia this month, the President said, "Obviously it would be better for the peace of Africa if other nations would not send forces... We would like very much for Cuba to refrain from this intrusion into African affairs in a military way."

Citing this as one of the problems posing roadblocks to improved relations with the United States, Carter also expressed concern for political prisoners in Cuba.

But the President said that he hoped the recent negotiation of a fishing and maritime agreement between the United States and Cuba would be a harbinger of "similar small steps toward an increased ability to communicate."

Phone lines linking Moluccan terrorists cut

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer
ASSEN, The Netherlands (AP) — Dutch authorities cut the telephone link between two groups of South Moluccan terrorists and strung barbed wire around a school where they are holding hostages.

But the Dutch reported no progress in negotiations Sunday night with the 11 armed extremists who hold 59 hostages in the school and a train 10 miles away.

The government's telephone lines to the school and the train remained in operation.

The Justice Ministry said the Moluccans continue to demand the release of 21 compatriots imprisoned for previous terrorist offenses and a jumbo jet to fly all of them out of the country.

Their demands remain the same as at the beginning of the terror actions, and the two sides have not come any closer to each other," a Justice Ministry spokesman said.

The Moluccans, who demand independence from Indonesia for their ancestral islands in the former Dutch East Indies, have indicated they also want to take hostages with them out of the country. The government says it will not agree to that.

Dr. A.J. Fontein, a senior Justice Ministry official, said 1,200 soldiers and hundreds of state police were surrounding the school at Bovenmerinde and the train, which is sitting on a track in open farmland north of Assen.

The government installed the phone hookup early in the siege, which began last Monday when the terrorists seized the train and school in simultaneous operations in the northern Netherlands. The gunmen released 105 children and a teacher from the school Thursday and Friday after about half of the youngsters developed diarrhea and fever, but they are still holding four teachers in the school and 55 persons on the train.

Doctors said 18 of the children showed symptoms of meningitis, a sometimes-fatal spinal inflammation, but only one child still had the symptoms Sunday.

Toos Faber of the Justice Ministry said the barbed wire was put around the schoolhouse with the permission of the terrorists to prevent unauthorized persons from approaching the building and possibly provoking the four gunmen inside.

Police turned back about 20 persons who offered themselves on Sunday as substitutes for the hostages held on the train.

The leader of the terrorist operation, who is on the train, talked for 75 minutes Sunday night with Dr. Dick Mulder, a psychiatrist who is conducting negotiations for the government. The Moluccan refused a third time to release a 23-year-old pregnant woman from the train, but officials said negotiations to free her would continue.

The Moluccan islands lie between the Celebes and West Irian and became part of Indonesia with the rest of the Dutch East Indies in 1949. The Moluccans, who had been supporters of Dutch rule and some of the best fighting units in the colonial army, rebelled against the Indonesian government in Jakarta but were defeated. Many fled to The Netherlands.

"It's the same difference that existed between (Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A.) Gromyko and (Secretary of State Cyrus R.) Vance" after their SALT talks in Geneva earlier this month, Carter said.

The President said he and Vance "keep the hope alive" for a Carter-Brezhnev meeting later this year. But he added, "We've never set a date."

Carter said the United States still wants to "do everything we can" to reduce dependence on nuclear arms but added "it would be a mistake to underestimate the great differences between us."

Carter, calling U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young a "very valuable and very compatible" spokesman, praised him for "a great sensitivity about the yearnings, the frustration and, in the past, even the animosities and hatred of many developing nations' people toward our own country."

Advice

Dear Abby
By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am being married in June at a formal church wedding. This will be my first marriage, and I want everything to be perfect.

The bridesmaids are wearing pastel gowns, and my mother is wearing powder blue chiffon, but my fiancée's mother wants to wear what she described as "beige lace." I saw it, and it is NOT beige. It is more like eggshell. It has a matching lace cap with a small nylon net veil attached. She had this outfit made two years ago for her second marriage, and it looks very much like a bridal outfit to me. I raised a big stink about it because I don't want two "brides" at my wedding.

She isn't hard up for money and could easily buy another gown for my wedding, but she insists on wearing that one. My fiancée is her only child, so I hate to tell her to either wear something else or stay home.

I feel it's MY day, and she should respect my wishes. My fiancée refuses to get involved.

What is your advice?

SILVER SPRINGS BRIDE

DEAR BRIDE: I agree with you. She should wear something less bridelike. You've stated your objections, and if she chooses to ignore them, don't tell her to stay home. If there appears to be two "brides" at your wedding, she, not you, will look out of place.

DEAR ABBY: A woman signed TEN YEARS TOO LATE wrote to say that she deeply regretted not letting her husband go to "the other woman" when he wanted to. She said she knew that they really loved each other, but she hung on to him for security and regarded the other woman as a "tramp" who had stolen her husband.

She closed her letter by saying, "As my husband lay dying in the hospital, her name—not mine—was on his lips. Perhaps if I had let him go when he wanted to, he'd be alive today, for heartaches, pressure and frustration can undermine a man's health. I saw it happen. I won the battle, but lost the war."

Abby, here's my answer to that wife:

Please don't berate yourself for winning the battle you fought 10 years ago. You loved your husband and fought for him with whatever weapons were available.

He decided that you needed him more than I did, and although his decision hurt you, it was no surprise to me.

When he was dying I fought the urge to call you and ask if I could see him briefly one last time. He enriched my life, and I wanted him to know it. But I spared you my phone call. It was part of the price we "other women" must pay. Now, spare yourself.

You have suffered enough. Please don't feel guilty for "hanging on to him." He considered you a good wife and mother. "That's what makes it so tough," he told me often. You have no reason to feel guilty. Hold your head up and honor his memory. Enjoy the children you raised together and those wonderful grandchildren, too.

Be proud to have been his wife. The real irony in this whole sad story is that you are the only person who can understand the pain I felt when he died. And we can't console each other.

Shalom,

HER

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY: Box, No. 69700, L.A., Calif. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Ask Dr. Lamb
Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I would appreciate some information on Librium. My daughter has been on Librium for over six years. Will you please let me know if a person becomes addicted to Librium or not and how does it affect a person? I have noticed quite a change in her.

DEAR READER — Librium is one of the most popular tranquilizers. Its use is widespread. Early studies of the drug showed it would tame hostile monkeys. It has also been used to tame other animals, so in a way you can think of it as the taming drug. Apparently a lot of people need to be tamed.

It relieves anxiety and nervousness without causing a person to become sleepy or sedated. It is usually given in the least amount needed to induce the desired effect and well below the amount that would cause sedation.

It has very few side effects as medicines go. It can cause problems in a few cases but reducing the dosage usually relieves these. Nevertheless a person on Librium should be cautious about driving automobiles or engaging in activities that require full alertness.

There are two other precautions that people using Librium should take. Never use alcohol and Librium together. The effects are additive and can be harmful, the same as using barbiturates and alcohol together. And never stop your medicine abruptly as that can cause symptoms, including convulsions.

Librium is not thought of as an addictive drug, despite the withdrawal response I mentioned. Nevertheless it should be used with caution in persons who are addiction prone or those who are unreliable and may increase their dosage on their own.

I would like to add that any one needing a tranquilizer should not be drinking coffee, tea or colas. These contain caffeine which has the opposite effect of tranquilizers. Many cases of anxiety and nervousness in our society are really caused by drinking too much coffee. I am convinced that if everyone cut down or stopped taking coffee the psychiatrists in the country would have far fewer patients. In any case it doesn't make sense to take medicines to calm your nerves and wash them down with a nerve stimulant.

I am sending you The Health Letter number 1-1, Coffee, Tea, Cola, Cocoa which you can give to your daughter. Others who want this information can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Just send your request to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I've just discovered I have borderline high blood pressure. I take medication twice a week.

My question is will taking cod liver oil make my blood pressure rise? I took it last winter and my skin seemed to have improved. It gets dry in cold weather.

DEAR READER — No, cod liver oil will not raise your blood pressure, unless you take so much in combination with the vitamin D you get in your milk and food that you develop vitamin D intoxication. In that condition you may damage your kidneys from calcium deposits in them. That could affect your blood pressure and a lot of other things.

I don't really approve of cod liver oil for your skin. If your skin is dry use any good moisturizer. You could even use any cooking oil to spread over your face and lock in the natural skin moisture without running the risk of vitamin D overdosage.

Polly's pointers
Polly Cramer

DEAR POLLY and Mrs. L.R. I have repaired vinyl jackets across the shoulder seams and under the arms the following way. I put a piece of material (the good parts of old jeans cut in strips) cut to three-fourths to one inch wide on each side of the seam and sew it. This does not pull out so easily. Of course, the stitching is done on the wrong side. — MARY H.

DEAR POLLY — Those price tags pinned on merchandise can prick one's fingers badly, but no more if you use the following method for removal. Tear the tag up the middle and the pin will pop out quickly and easily. — ALFREDA.

DEAR POLLY — Instead of using regular dish cloths that wear out so quickly and get to looking bad even quicker, I use small fingertip towels. They do a much better job and last longer, too.

Any empty bottles or jars that are to be thrown out are first used to hold potato peelings, grease, etc. This makes for a much sweeter smelling trash bag. — MRS. D.R.

From hors d'oeuvres to tennis duds

By Ellie Grossman
NEW YORK — (NEA) — Poof. She was gone just like that. One minute Sheryl Gurfein had a partner in her active sportswear company, Tenbridge, and the next she didn't.

That was two weeks ago when the partner, who helped found the company two years ago, succumbed to personal pressures and problems and said, "I'd love to stay but I can't." Ms. Gurfein is somewhat shaky — like a tightrope walker whose balance pole has been whisked away — but determined to make it on her own.

Well, she's got the heritage and experience to pull it off. "As a kid growing up on Long Island, I knew I was going to be in business," she says. "My father, who's in the aircraft industry, always believed I should work, so in high school I was a restaurant hostess and a counselor in the school system."

At Syracuse University, where she had the same number of charge plates and cashmere sweaters as the other girls, she alone had to have a summer job.

"It was unusual for parents to do this with a daughter, especially in the '50s," she recalls, "but I believe in teaching my children to work, too. You get a feeling of self worth from a job."

After college, she married a man in the jewelry business, had children, did some freelance wallpaper designing and then, 13 years ago, she and a partner organized a small frozen food business.

"I would make great dinner parties without any hassle and people would say, would you do that for me? So I finally said, why not? We started the Sic-a-derv company and produced frozen hors d'oeuvres and desserts which we sold to Bloomingdale's and the Hilton Hotel chain."

There were different roulaides and long rolls of strudel or cream cheese dough with various fillings. "The hostess broke off what she needed and popped it in the oven."

The business got quite big, she says, but so did the pressure from her husband who found it all exasperating and embarrassing.

"The anxieties I had then! I just didn't fit in. I used to think why can't I be poor enough to have to work, or enjoy taking my child to the park enough so that I don't want to work."

When the marriage seemed about to fail, she gave up the business.

The marriage failed anyway and she became a fabric designer for Cohama, among others, which involved another set of frustrations.

"I like to make my own decisions," she says, "but working for a converter, someone who makes fabric, is like working in a 'poppa' business."

"If there's a son or son-in-law or a nephew around, that person is going to be geared for the management post."

Never mind that Sheryl Gurfein had developed successful fabrics for the company, whichever it was, that she was a head stylist with a good salary and people working under her. She was still a woman and she'd go no further up the ladder. That's when she and Monique, her just-departed partner, formed Tenbridge.

"Monique had a good sales background and had done some designing, so I approached her and we decided to enter the tennis market."

"You see, if you're going to make a name very quickly without much capital, it has to be in an area that's very hot. I'd watched a dowdy tennis dress move out of Gucci incredibly fast, so obviously there was a market for an elegant woman who didn't want to wear tennis shorts, who didn't have a junior figure and who needed tennis clothes."

Tenbridge, named for a spot on the map where their collective finger landed one day, was born, and created a stir with its classic knit tennis sweaters, pull-on pants and dresses, all in small, medium and large, selling for $50 to $100.

"Now, we're moving the line into an active sportswear look because tennis outlets are closing up," she explains. "The fad is over."

But active sportswear is burgeoning, and Tenbridge's line for summer features bright Terry rompers, baseball jackets and assorted Terry tops, clothes to be worn on court, on bikes, while jogging, perhaps even to work, she says.

TERRY KNICKERS and top exhibit both class and comfort on the courts. In gold with kelly trim, navy with gold or kelly with periwinkle. (about $59). By Tenbridge.

Elegant evenings

Long dresses take the spotlight along with dinner pajamas in new loungewear for home and gala events. For Cira John Kloss designed the top gown in brushed nylon. Below is tunic in tricot with palazzo pants by Ralph Montenero for Blanche.

Brownie troop thanks leader
Linda Richter

Brownie Troop 185 ended its year by presenting an appreciation pin to troop leader Linda Richter.

Each of the brownies received a one-year membership star and other patches earned during the year.

Scouts present at the ceremony at the Girl Scout Little House were Shara Vaughn, Shelley Moran, Martha Nichols, Tina Rogers, Melinda Richter, Brandi Beck, Kristi Brock, Shani Williamson, Tammy Stephens and Susie Shay.

Assistant troop leader is Linda Rogers.

Ambassador college leaves

School days at Mary Lou's

Classes have ended at Mary Lou's Pre-School, 1148 Terrace, for the 25th time. Among youngsters paying close attention to teacher Mary Lou Douglass during a final session are Brenda Tidwell, left, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Don Tidwell, and Matthew Hamon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Hamon. "It's a joy to watch little children begin their learning, and follow their progress after they leave us," Miss Douglass said. She is assisted at the pre-school by Mrs. R.K. Douglass. (Pampa News photo by Gene Anderson)

By DON HARRISON
Associated Press Writer
Editor's Note: For 13 years, Ambassador College stood as a 2,000-acre promise of the future for Big Sandy; a small East Texas town whose biggest brag came in 1974-75 when their Wildcats won the state Class "B" schoolboy football crown. But the team has fallen on hard times. And last week, the flamboyant religious chieftan of "AC" announced the sprawling institution would close. Obscurity, like a dark cloud, looms overhead and nobody in Big Sandy is quite sure where the next economic windfall is coming from—or if it will ever.

BIG SANDY, Tex. (AP) — Like a guidebook, the big plate glass window in Bennett's Cafe points out where Big Sandy's interests lie. Big blue letters shout: "Go Wildcats Go" and "Welcome Worldwide Church".

Five students on honor roll at San Angelo

Five Pampa students have been named to the dean's honor roll for the spring semester at Angelo State University in San Angelo. Named to the 3.0 to 3.49 honor roll were Mary Lois Holman, a distributive education major; Joe Travis Holt, marketing; Stephanie Secrest, sociology; and Clifford Ray Stephens, pre-pharmacy. Named to the 3.5 to 4.0 honor roll was Troy Lee Hester, accounting.

Inside, souvenirs of East Texas, 25-cent coffee — "no warm-ups" — are sold along with the standard menu offerings. The only "free" items are pamphlets placed strategically near the door that promise passersby "You Can Have a New Life." Religion had never been an economic factor in Big Sandy — population 1,022 in the 1970 census. But 13 years ago, the Worldwide Church of God arrived amidst the mimosa and pines and overnight, religion in Big Sandy meant not only food for the soul, but food for the table as well. Two miles east of the city limits, church founder Herbert T. Armstrong broke ground for a series of buildings that would later become Ambassador College. Church of God families arrived in Big Sandy Homes were built. The school system even passed two bond issues totaling some $2 million to accommodate about 100 additional Church of God youngsters.

But the boom is over. Ron Kelly, Ambassador College's vice president and provost, estimates about 35 of the school's 150 fulltime staff will move to the church's parent institution in Pasadena, Calif. Thirty-five more, mostly custodial workers, will be retained here to keep the campus in shape for summer festivals and youth camps. The other employees will be terminated. "I honestly thought it would be another year before this happened," said Big Sandy banker Marion Dingler. "It's something we weren't ready for. I'm sure we're going to feel the pinch, but it's our responsibility to take a sad situation and turn it around." School officials remain cautiously optimistic. Supt. Charles Penny said the withdrawals will mean less classroom overcrowding. "We never would have gotten that last $750,000 bond issue passed except for that overcrowding," he said. "When we passed it, all of us thought the college would continue but... Big Sandy residents are not exactly sure why the college closed. From all outward appearances, the Church of God's coffers are anything but empty. The campus is a landscaped showcase. Flowers and manicured shrubbery of every description flank the curbside roads and buildings. A stream winds its way through huge pines and under stone bridges between the main dormitory and a massive fieldhouse-office complex. The sprinkler system would shame many major golf courses. Armstrong's son, Garner Ted Armstrong, has been criticized as being too lavish with the church's funds. The younger Armstrong is perhaps best known for his prophetic broadcasts — "The World Tomorrow" — which use up a sizeable chunk of church funds. "Mr. Armstrong has been accused of lavish spending the last 20 years — ever since I've known him," said Kelly. "I will say he goes first class and he doesn't apologize to anyone for it." Kelly said the church hierarchy decided to consolidate the two schools' liberal arts programs after a study showed it would cost about $15 million to operate the Texas campus four more years. The college's last graduating class totaled 111 of a total enrollment of 650. The remaining 400 or so undergraduates have been invited to make the move west. Annual tuition at AC was $2,300, including room and board. In California, Kelly said the rate will jump to $2,800 or $2,900 annually. Kelly said he believes most of the students will transfer. The church is providing buses to move whatever personal belongings can't be carried by car. The campus is all but deserted now. School is out for the summer, but a few stragglers can still be seen bidding tearful farewells and driving away in ones and twos.

Harvey and Bob collect alligators

By JULES LOSE
AP Special Correspondent
WADESBORO, La. (AP) — When Harvey Kliebert and his brother Bob were adventurous boys, there was nothing they liked better than to go fishing and frogging and trapping mink in nearby Manchac Swamp. Occasionally they came across a baby alligator, took it home and tossed it in the pond behind their house. They liked alligators. They still like alligators. It's a good thing. Now, about 30 years later, they have 10,000 alligators. They have dug three more big ponds for them, one of them a 4 1/2-acre swamp crawling with the beasts. They have built big concrete pens for alligators and are building more pens because they don't know what to do with all the alligators they have.

They are up to their hip pockets in alligators. "The government," Harvey Kliebert said ruefully, "closed down the hide business for so long there's not much else you can do with alligators except raise them. It's no longer a good business. I don't know what we're going to do. Just keep building more ponds and pens, I guess. Walking around the Kliebert alligator haven — on the other side of the fence, that is, and jumping nonetheless at every strange noise — walking with the Klieberts, listening to Harvey and his son Mike talking fondly about those menacing creatures, watching them pick up a baby gator and stroke its belly, you get the impression they really don't want to get rid of many alligators after all. Their main business is raising turtles, so the alligators are a sideline anyhow. Turtles are fascinating enough. "Turtles are laying now. They start in April and will go about three months. We'll get between 600,000 and 700,000 eggs and hatch about 90 percent of them or more. We're working about 10 or 11 hours a day digging turtle eggs. Digging turtle eggs? The turtle digs a hole in the ground with her tail, lays the eggs in the hole and covers it up. You're standing on a turtle nest. There's another. There's another. There's another." Harvey Kliebert took up a pick and with each thrust in the hard-packed dirt unerringly uncovered a nest. He did not break a single egg. Why not let them hatch in the ground? "Lose too many of the babies. Other turtles eat them up." How do you teach somebody where to dig? "Can't teach an adult. You have to grow up just knowing." Getting eggs out of an alligator's nest, now that's another matter. The Klieberts incubate alligator eggs too, for the same reason, cleaning about 125 nests of about 50 eggs each. It is done by armed robbery. "A couple of guys beat the mother away with poles and a third guy runs up and snatches the eggs. Female alligators protecting a nest are not friendly." Charles A. Lindbergh made his New York to Paris non-stop flight on May 20-21, 1927. The flight took 33 hours, 29 minutes and 30 seconds. More than one third of the population of the island of Trinidad is East Indian.

Lucas' 35, Walton's boards deliver Philly first setback

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — After dropping the first two games in their National Basketball Association championship series against the Philadelphia 76ers, the Portland Trail Blazers were in desperate need of a psychological lift.

Two hours later, Lucas had scored 25 points in leading the Blazers to a 129-107 rout that diminished to 2-1 the Philadelphia edge in the best-of-seven series.

through the third quarter. Then Bill Walton came up with a couple of classic Waltonian plays that doomed the 76ers' hopes for a four-game sweep.

Portland's Bob Gross lofted the ball towards the basket and Walton battled Dawkins somewhere above the rim.

3,500 bills presented; 600 bills passed

By GARTH JONES
Associated Press Writer
AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — The 65th Legislature comes to a usual cliff-hanging end at midnight, leaving many Texans wondering what happened to all those "good old bills" they heard so much about the past 140 days.

Out of the more than 3,500 measures presented, only a little over 600 were approved and sent to the governor.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe hints he will trim that number with vetoes before June 19, his deadline for consideration.

Of those passed, about 85 per cent sped through on so-called local and uncontested calendars with little or no debate and few lawmakers paying any attention to the proceedings.

A big majority of the bills introduced died without a hearing, often due to the wishes of the author. When a lawmaker has no backing for a bill, he usually does not push it.

The list of successful bills has to be led by the $15.5 billion general appropriations bill which spent all expected state income the next two years except about $1 billion.

The $1 billion will disappear if last minute compromises settle the public school financing and teachers pay issues.

The $528 million highway financing bill, passed early in the session at the urging of Anti-crime bills recommended by Briscoe came on strong with legislators with accent on organized crime and premature release of felons who are likely to turn to crime again. Briscoe said his main failure in the package was a measure to authorize wiretapping for certain crimes. A bill recognizing oral confessions also was tied up in a last-minute conference committee.

Execution by injection will replace Texas' electric chair on Sept. 1.

Legislators also found $19 million to finance the first statewide adult probation system, which begins operating in 1979.

The big failure of the session has to be that of property tax reform. The No. 1 issued by one and all before the 181 legislators convened last Jan. 11. The idea of having all tax appraisals made by one countywide agency finally made it through the House but never had a chance in the Senate.

Briscoe considered the failure to repeal the state sales tax on light and gas utilities the biggest gap in his program. The House passed the $258 million tax relief bill but it snagged in the Senate, finally coming out as a token $52 million measure that ended up in a conference committee.

Presidential primaries was another big defeat for some. A short-lived Senate filibuster took care of the measure in the final days. Opponents claimed, among other things, that could best be handled by the 1979 legislature before the 1980 presidential elections.

Several issues were passed on the voters for final decisions. Proposed constitutional amendments will be on the November 1978 ballot that would increase the size of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, abolish the Building Commission, deny bond to those who commit a crime while out on bail and authorize electronic banking machines.

And when voters mark their ballots they won't have to sign the stub, thanks to a new law effective Sept. 1.

Authorization for construction of coal slurry pipeline to convey Wyoming coal to Texas was the principal energy conservation success. Opponents say the pipeline likely will never be built.

New apartments will have to be built with separate light and gas meters as an energy conservation measure.

And there was plenty of action on special interest bills—measures of particular interest to a specific group. Counties are now empowered to regulate message parlors. The controversial cancer drug treatment, laetrile, was legalized. Stricter rules were laid down on control of state banks to prevent the rent-a-bank schemes of recent years. Fraudulent use of food stamps can be a felony now.

Auto inspection fees were raised from $2 to $4 but you have a five-day grace period now after the sticker expires.

Both houses passed a bill that would excuse motorists with 55-70mph speeding tickets from insurance penalties but Briscoe said it heads his possible-veto list, because it might cost the state a wad of federal highway money.

Racehorses and bingo fans were unlucky and lost all their wagers.

they were given seven days to get out.

Briscoe, also did its part in depleting the $3 billion "surplus" that legislators had when they started last January.

At least two important governmental streamlining measures made it through. The "sunset" bill will require almost every state agency to prove its worth once each 12 years or be abolished by the legislature. Another bill would create one super water agency out of the Water Development Board, the Water Rights Commission and the Water Quality Board.

Auction netted millions

By RICHARD BLYSTONE
Associated Press Writer
MENTMOR, England (AP) — Mentmore meant more ... and more ... and more.

More pieces were on sale, 2,700, and more money was taken in, just under $10.9 million, from Baron Mayer de Rothschild's old country seat — Mentmore Towers — than at any estate auction ever before.

More money than ever ($120,000) was paid for a clock — a 1730 Augsburg timepiece that doesn't cuckoo but has almost everything else, including a cross-legged Oriental figure on top, an engraved Cupid inside and a Meissen tea set in a drawer.

More was paid for an artifact of amber, $88,400; for Sevres porcelain, $102,000; for ivory, $51,000; for Victorian silver, $22,100. And more was paid for a half-dozen lesser-known Old Masters.

What it meant beyond that was debatable.

Throwing a heritage to the carpetbaggers, some conservationists called it. Some Continental dealers said it afforded a chance for Europe to retrieve treasures that Rothschild bought at fire-sale prices a century ago.

"The end of an epoch in the history of European taste," said art historian Sir Francis Watson. The laudable dispersal of hideous rarities, answered some critics.

"The ultimate auction scene," said a man from Sotheby's auctioneers, and nobody disagreed with that.

Numbers more suited to astronomy than a man's house raced each other in lights across the computerized board that showed bids in six currencies to the auction tent at Mentmore Towers, 50 miles northwest of London, in a nine-day sale that ended Friday.

A 1757 mechanical orange tree with a concealed pipe organ to play calls for its perching bird — a frivolity on a scale now hard to imagine — fetched $153,000, the top price of the sale. Marie Antoinette's writing desk from Versailles went back home for $86,700.

An antique reporter from Philadelphia checked the swank shops of London's Mayfair and found there for the pound sterling equivalent of $3,000 an ornate clock similar to one that sold at Mentmore for four times as much.

It was as if the baron's treasures ennobled every doorstep ing more than they could afford.

The seventh Earl of Rosebery, selling his Rothschild great-grandfather's collection to meet inheritance taxes on his father's estate, showed no emotion as the crates moved out to Europe or America with pieces that might have felt the touch of Disraeli or Matthew Arnold or Henry James.

"We've known all our lives we could never keep this house going," he said. "We have a perfectly good house in Scotland with 100 or 200 years more tradition than this one and about one-third or one-half the size."

Mentmore Towers, too, is up for sale. The real estate agents think it might bring $1.7 million.

Drawbacks: it will take half the sale price again to repair the roof and about $136,000 a year to maintain the property.

To Sotheby's it meant the high point in 233 years of genteel auctioneering. The cost of six months' preparation and of staging the sale was reliably reported to be more than $170,000. But Sotheby's 10-percent cut from the buyers brought in some $1.08 million and it was believed the auctioning firm would receive half as much again in commission from Lord Rosebery.

"This sale will set international standards for antiques for years," said a Texan who spent $204,000 in two days and asked not to be identified. "You can't eat 'em, but otherwise there's no better investment."

But Dr. Annela Brown, a Boston, Mass., surgeon, said: "This is not an historic moment in the annals of collection." She had arrived by helicopter and paid $57,800 for a pair of cupboards. Later she turned down an offer of $74,800 for them.

Many pointed out that Rosebery had taken "the cream of the collection" to his Scotland home, including Turner paintings and a Louis XV desk for which only $450,000 was bid. The British government moved in and took other furniture and the most important paintings out of the sale.

What was left, critics said, was mostly second class, and in poor condition at that.

During the nine days of the sale, with bids mounting into the millions, the staff of the cafeteria sold cold cuts and salmon sandwiches for a democratic $2.55 each.

and soap dish in the down-at-heels 80-room mansion. Brass and wood coat hangers fetched up to $30.00 each as souvenir hunters charged into the waning days of the sale.

Two damaged pillows brought $8.50 and a 200-year-old chest in about 18 wormy bits and pieces cost its buyer $4,300 — 57 times its estimate.

"It's crazy that people should pay such prices for this rubbish," said the dowager Countess of Rosebery. "If I had thought this was going to happen I would have had a raffle. I hate to think people were bid-

East Texas mayor killed

NEW SUMMERFIELD, Tex. (AP) — The mayor of this East Texas town was killed Sunday night when he was pinned beneath his car after it was struck by another vehicle that plowed into a service station where he was getting gas.

Officials said the body of Eugene Boone Spaulding Jr., 24, was stuck beneath his car for two hours after the accident.

Investigators said the car that hit Spaulding had careened into the station after being involved in a collision at the nearby intersection of US highway 79 and Texas highway 110 in Cherokee County.

Rosalynn tours Jamaica

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. (AP) — Rosalynn Carter, described officially as a "very effective messenger" for her husband, is heading for Kingston, Jamaica, the first stop on a 13-day tour of Latin America.

Mrs. Carter planned to leave from Brunswick, Ga., today on a trip to seven nations. The President, vacationing here, arranged to see her off at the airport.

Mrs. Carter's 24-hour visit to Jamaica includes an informal working lunch with Prime Minister Michael Manley and Jamaican officials, a reception for American embassy personnel and Peace Corps workers and a visit to a workers' cooperative.

Although no specifics of talks on her first stop were revealed in advance, Mrs. Carter probably will discuss American aid to the Caribbean country and U.S.-Cuba relations.

The democratic, socialist government of Jamaica has full diplomatic relations with Cuba.

The White House said in advance of Mrs. Carter's departure that she would hold "serious discussions" with heads of state on human rights, nuclear proliferation, the Panama Canal, Cuba and economic problems.

"Her role is uniquely to convey to countries and their leaders what her husband and this administration stands for. She is a very effective messenger," said a State Department official, citing her "very particular political association with her husband and her own energetic political outlook."

Mrs. Carter, who has been studying Spanish since February and was briefed extensively by Latin American specialists in the past month, described the trip as "goodwill." She said she is hoping to establish a "close personal relationship" with leaders of the countries she is visiting.

In addition to Jamaica, Mrs. Carter's stops on a 12,000-mile, zigzag swing through Latin America are Costa Rica, Ecuador, Peru, Brazil, Colombia and Venezuela.

In a recent interview, the First Lady said she would be explaining the "new directions" of her husband's foreign policy.

"I think I can convey to these leaders a sense of Jimmy's goals and priorities. I cannot negotiate ... but I can give them an over-all view of our foreign policy," she said.

Accompanying Mrs. Carter on her trip are Mrs. Cyrus Vance, wife of the secretary of state, and Mrs. Evan Dohelle, wife of the chief of protocol.

Army cinema comes to town

The Army Multivision Cinema will bring its exhibit to Pampa Thursday through Sunday at Coronado Center. The air-conditioned van accommodates 30 viewers for a 14-minute, three screen slide show depicting various aspects of Army life worldwide. The show covers combat service as well as supporting army jobs. The program is entitled, "It's Your World, it's Your Turn." Army personnel will be on hand to answer questions after the show. More information is available from local army representative John R. Newman, 115 N. Cuyler, 665-2022.

World economic talks: setback or advancement?

PARIS (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and foreign ministers of 26 other nations opened the final round in 18 months of economic bargaining today, uncertain whether the meeting would mark a major advance or a serious setback in relations between the industrial and the developing nations.

Western officials believe considerable progress has been made, particularly in the past three weeks, in negotiations on energy, raw materials, development aid and world finance.

"But there are a number of snags in each area which could prevent the ministers getting a package together," one official said Sunday night.

One Third World representative said the industrialized nations were showing a "new spirit," but they had not yet translated it into "concrete terms."

The developing nations started off with an impossible list of demands and we started being impossible negative," one Western official said. "This confrontation has disappeared. Both sides now have much greater understanding of the others' needs and problems, which we can take on to other international bodies where we negotiate."

Much of the movement has come since the elections last year in the United States, West Germany and Japan. The Carter administration has made considerable movement toward the developing nations on such key demands of theirs as establishment of a Common Fund to stabilize the prices of the raw materials they sell and increased aid commitments.

The whole range of world trade and finance has been involved in the negotiations. But there are predictions that the ministers' conference will end Wednesday with a trade agreement.

would be a promise of $1 billion in immediate aid from the industrial nations to the poorest nations plus further negotiations to stabilize the prices of raw materials. In exchange, the oil-exporting nations would agree to continue negotiations to stabilize the supply and price of oil.

The talks started two years ago as an attempt by the West to set up such an energy forum. They broke down when the developing nations demanded they be broadened to lay the foundations for a "new international economic order" more favorable to them.

The Bridge of Sighs is a narrow, covered bridge which connects the Doge's Palace in Venice with a prison known as the Carceri Prigioni. It was built in the late 18th century and spans the canal Rio Della Paglia.

San Antonio enters homosexual rights issue

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — Residents in this South Texas city have dug into their pockets to donate money to both sides of the controversial homosexual rights issue now raging in Miami.

The first money was collected Sunday afternoon at a rally in the Alamo Plaza where a crowd estimated at 600 persons by police heard the pastor of a local Baptist church say that opponents of gays are going to be militant.

The Rev. Dr. Joe West, pastor of Towne East Baptist Church, said he and his supporters would make sure "what is happening in Dade County, Fla., and in San Francisco will never happen in San Antonio."

Organizers of the demonstration had said they expected 10,000 persons would attend the rally.

The second round of donations came Sunday night when an estimated 1,000 persons attended a dance in support of homosexual rights at a night club several blocks from the Alamo Plaza.

Organizers of the dance, sponsored by the Bexar county delegation of the Texas Gay Task Force, said $2,000 was collected for the Dade County cause.

Ordinances in San Francisco and Dade County, where Miami is located, prohibit discrimination against homosexuals.

Voters in Dade County will go to the polls June 7 to decide if that county's ordinance will remain law or be taken off the books.

Dr. West told those attending the Alamo Plaza rally that the homosexual issue is a moral one, not a political one.

"I am not opposed to people doing whatever they want in private but I am not going to stand by and let them teach their life styles in our schools like they are going to do in San Francisco," he said.

"We are going to be visible, vocal and even if some people don't like it, we're going to be militant," Dr. West said.

A highlight of the rally was to be a long distance telephone connection with singer Anita Bryant, who is leading the fight to repeal the homosexual rights ordinance in Miami.

But the telephone connection was poor.

Dr. West said the bad connection was because the attorneys for the Daughters of the Republic of Texas, owners of the historic Texas shrine, withdrew the permission to use the phones at the Alamo. The connection was made through a mobile phone.

Miss Bryant said she was carrying on the battle with "prayers and a lot of hard work."

Broker swims channel

NEW YORK (AP) — A 53-year-old insurance broker swam across the Narrows channel from Staten Island to Brooklyn today, the first half of what he hoped would be a notable double.

Frank Coughlin, 53, went into the water under the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge at 7:45 a.m. on a chilly, drizzly morning and swam to the Brooklyn side — a 4,260-foot path of the bridge — in 46 minutes.

Next, he was to board a noon flight at Kennedy Airport and fly to San Francisco to make another swim the same day along the path of the Golden Gate Bridge.

The Golden Gate span, which stretches from San Francisco to Marin County, is 4,200 feet long.

The Verrazano-Narrows and Golden Gate are the two longest suspension bridges on the continent.

Coughlin, who lives in the San Francisco area, is a broker for the Royal Globe Insurance Co.

Ghost haunts Virginia church

By Tom Tiede
AUSTINVILLE, Va. — (NEA) — For as long as anyone can remember there have been strange doings at the Olive Branch Methodist Church. In the dead of the night, when conditions are right, an eerie light glows in the window of the hilltop tabernacle. The cause is unknown, but some people here think a ghost is at play.

Undeniably, the church is an ideal location for a mischievous spirit. Constructed in 1833, it is isolated on the bend of a lonely road and sits hard by a seedy cemetery. Believers reason that one of the graves in open ended, that is to say it has access to both worlds, and its restless inhabitant comes back and forth at will.

This seems melodramatic, residents admit, but how else to explain the phenomenon? Kenneth Dean, who lives down the road from the church, swears he has not only seen the night light, but "once when I came be I saw this white thing floating across the road." Scott's honor, Dean says: "Ask my mother, she saw the same thing."

Assuredly, many people have seen and heard the doings at the Olive Branch Church. On the weekends here, cars full of witnesses line the road. Currie Moore, a miner, says people see the light almost every evening now: "When the light appears, the people get noisy, then they quiet down again and wait for it to come back."

For all of its regularity, the light is variously described by those who've experienced it. Some say it's a blue light, which squares with the color of the lint in the church window. Others, however, insist the light is white. And 15-year-old Fred Coble says the glow is "yalla," which in southern Virginia is yellow.

Whatever its color, arguments concerning the light's origin are equally confusing. Some believe the glow is an effect of the church furnace, but others point out the furnace is in the basement and the light is on the first floor. Similarly, many feel it's some kind of prank by children — but night after night for decades?

Currie Moore says that nearby high-voltage wires have often been suspect. "When it's very dark, the wires will glow, and some people think this may be reflected by the church window." Possibly. Yet here again the eyewitnesses scoff. The high-voltage wires glow occasionally, they say, but the church light can be seen every night.

Rationality thus denied, many people in this hill country community attempt to explain the light in other ways. Legends abound. One man says the light is caused by a veteran of the Confederacy, buried in the cemetery, waiting for the South to rise again. Yuk yuk. Most believers here harbor senses of humor as well as superstition.

Church members, however, fail to see the whimsy of the situation. Eighty-five-year-old Bowie Goodman, in attendance at Olive Branch since he was a tad, says the ghost stories are an affront to Christianity. He also says they make the congregation nervous, and the 30-member chapel can ill afford to lose a single jittery soul.

What's more, says Goodman, the hordes of people who come here to see the light are a potential problem. "One of these nights one of them is going to get a load on, storm the church, and tear the place up." Already someone has broken into the building, perhaps in search of the light, Goodman says almost anything might happen.

For the sake of the church, then, several members recently conducted an investigation to find the source of the light. Led by church superintendent Luther Armbrister and Goodman's wife, Gracie, the members armed themselves with synchronized watches and common sense.

Says Mrs. Goodman: "There is a bend in the road beyond the cemetery that drops sharply over a hill. We suspected that when cars came over that hill, their lights might hit the church. Sure enough, we tested it and they do. We did it several times, and each time the car lights were clearly reflected on the side of the church."

Case solved? Well, not for some people. Critics of the experiment point out that the car lights came from the north side of the church, but the eerie window light appears on the southern face of the building. Besides, car lights reflect in all the windows and the mystery here is that the ghost light appears in only one.

And so the superstition remains alive and well at the Olive Branch Methodist Church, even if the ghost is dead and fitful. Many townspeople, especially the younger ones, are just as happy; this is a small village, there's not much to do, and kids say Olive Branch is an ideal place to take one's date and, uh, watch for ghosts.

BOWIE GOODMAN, an 85-year-old parishoner who has attended Olive Branch church since he was young, says the ghost stories are an affront to Christianity. He is afraid that efforts to catch the ghost might result in harm to the church. (Photo by Tom Tiede)

At wit's end

By ERMA BOMBECK
My kids said they never made it big in athletics because they wore hand me downs and were never dressed properly for the sport.

They always wore three pairs of socks with the toes folded under when they ice skated and played basketball in their stocking feet. There was always a scurrying for gloves on the first day of a snow and one day as I adjusted a pair of crushed kid gloves up to the elbow my son whined: "I'm going sledding Mom not to a wedding SLEDDING!"

Another time another kid stomped off the ski slopes and said he wasn't going back. He was the only one sking in a long, black overcoat and looked like a Rabbun. Fiddler on the Roof.

I assured him Rabbun also skied and he bought it — until his black hat flew off.

It never occurred to me how intimidating it can be not to be dressed properly until I competed this week on three sweatbands, three matching pantsies, three wrist score keepers, and three pairs of footlets with a chenille ball at the heel.

Somewhat I knew before I began — pedal pushers finish last. So do dark blue gym shoes. So do T-shirts with Paul Newman's face on the front. So do red sweat socks that make your ankles look like fire hydrants.

My partner started to serve. "You want me to store you other ball in my pants pocket?" I offered.

Her racket dropped. "No, I can hold both of them in the same hand."

Your racket seems to be a lot lighter than mine, I observed.

That's because mine is out of the press, she said coldly.

She served. The ball was returned and she was all over the court running, slugging, and lobbing.

You certainly are fast, I said. "I'll bet it's those shoes. I've seen them advertised. Do you really jump higher in them?"

These probably don't cost any more than the ones you're wearing, she said, but then you probably got a pen knife with yours.

A kite. I smiled.

By this time there was a group waiting for the court. They all looked like ads for Gatorade.

It was my turn to serve. I looked around for a place to put my second ball.

If you can't hold two of them while you serve, said my partner, just tuck one under you pantleg.

I can't, I said. There's a leg in it already. I tossed the ball down my T-shirt, giving Paul Newman a lump over his right blue eye.

I found out something else about tennis. Varicose veins also finish last.

Each year, the population of India increases by more than 13 million.

Texas cities listed

Although many of our major cities have lost population in the last 20 years, they are still considerably larger than they were at the turn of the century. Some, in fact, grew incredibly — a reflection of the industrialization of the nation. Here's how they grew, according to The World Almanac.

For cities of more than 100,000 in 1973, the one which shows the greatest growth may be Las Vegas, Nev. Its 1973 population was 144,333. In 1900 the city did not exist, for all practical purposes.
