Governor vetoes 'no pain' speeding

By GARTH JONES
Associated Press Writer
AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Gov. Dolph Briscoe put the brakes on the Texas Legislature's "no pain" speeding bill Saturday as he stamped it — and 25 other measures — with a big black "Veto."

The series of veto messages completed Briscoe's review of the 916 bills passed by the House and Senate out of the 3,772 introduced. Briscoe surprised everyone Friday night by approving without change all of the $15.5 billion general appropriations bill, the first time in 20 years a governor has left a two-year state spending budget untouched.

The vetoes cleared the way for the July 11 special session of the legislature on the financing of Texas public schools, a task left undone May 30 when the 140-day regular session ended.

Ten of the vetoes came on House-approved bills and 16 for Senate bills, including six sponsored by Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas.

The so-called painless speeding bill would have wiped out auto insurance penalties for speeding tickets given for driving over the federal and state speed limit from 55 to 70 miles per hour. It also would have kept such drivers' licenses from being suspended.

Federal officials charged with monitoring state compliance with the federal 55 mph speed limit have not been able to assure me that federal highway funds will not be lost to the state if SB34 by Sen. Bill Moore, D-Bryan, becomes law, Briscoe said.

The Secretary of Transportation has indicated to me that as much as $614 million in federal highway funds over the next two years would be endangered by enactment of any law reducing penalties for violation of the 55 mph limit. Additionally, proponents of the bill have not been able to demonstrate that the declining death rate on Texas highways in recent years is not attributable in large part to the reduced speed limit," he added.

Other general interest bills vetoed, with Briscoe's comments, included:

—Regulation of ice-dispensing machines in hotels and motels. "This responsibility should be dealt with through local ordinances, if a problem of health exists."

—Increase exemption of property taxes to include household furniture. "The legislature made the bill effective only upon adoption of a constitutional amendment and the legislature did not pass the proposed constitutional amendment."

—Accessibility of information of governmental bodies. "This act would amend present law and allow custodians of the records of governmental agencies and bodies to reveal any information in his custody at his discretion unless it was specifically prohibited by the law."

—Re-assessment of taxes on property not validly assessed.

The bill includes no standards for the determination whether a prior assessment was valid and few, if any, safeguards to protect a property taxpayer from periodic reopening of tax bills he has already paid."

Still other bills vetoed included those that would have:

—Decreased the penalty for criminal support of a child.

—Required interpreters for deaf persons in judicial proceedings and confessions. Briscoe said another bill already signed into law provides interpreters for the deaf accused of a criminal act or appearing as a witness in a civil case.

—Prohibited the use of a criminal conviction by state licensing agencies to suspend or deny an occupational license.

—Expanded the offense of arson to cover a person setting afire personal property that is insured, whether or not it is shown the person intended to collect the insurance.

—Eliminated the authority of cities to tax, regulate or prohibit billiard tables which are coin-operated.

—Licensed and regulated speech pathologists and audiologists.

—Changed present law that permits a person to use force to protect himself or another from violent attack.

—Required a court order of mental incompetence before denying a person voting rights.

—Required certain cities and school districts to conduct joint elections.

The 1978-79 state spending bill was signed Friday night without any comment from Briscoe. He said earlier that he felt the 27 per cent increase — from $12.1 billion to $15.5 billion — over the previous two-year budget was justified by the state's increased income.

Among other things, the appropriations bill gives state employees a 3.4 per cent increase each of the next two years, plus another 5.8 per cent in 1979 of salaries up to $16,500 to pay social security payments.

It also includes $78 million for new construction for the state prison system. Another $40 million will go to set up Texas's first statewide adult probation system in 1979.

Briscoe also signed Friday a bill upgrading the 31 domestic relations courts, now financed by counties, to family district courts, funded partly by the state. The governor will appoint the first 31 judges to the newly upgraded courts.

Alaska proves Seward no fool

By ROBERT WELLER
Associated Press Writer

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Alaska has paid the nation back for "Seward's Folly" with interest, but there's no doubt the state has surrendered some of its "Last Frontier" aura in the process.

With completion of the trans-Alaska pipeline, Alaska will be providing the nation with 1.2 million barrels of oil daily.

The oil is only a fraction of the country's oil consumption. But the Prudhoe Bay reserves are only a fraction of the potential of energy development in Alaska. And the state has commercial quantities of 31 of the 32 minerals listed as "strategic and essential" by the Defense Department. Most of these minerals are still unexploited.

The state has shown that it was worth the $7.2 million that William Seward paid Russia for it in 1867. More importantly, Alaska has demonstrated that it can succeed as a state — something opponents of statehood had claimed was impossible.

Oil has made the state the richest in the United States, based on population. Per capita income is the highest in the nation. It has grown from $5,182 in 1972 to more than $10,000 in 1976. State Senate President John Rader of Anchorage describes Alaska as a big oil company and its state officials "as simply a board of directors."

Gov. Jay Hammond says that many outsiders — that's what Alaskans call folks from the lower 48 — believe Alaskans are rich and greedy. But he adds that demands for increased services — partly as a result of the population increase that came with the oil boom — have cost the state immensely.

Still, there's no doubt the state has already benefited economically from energy development.

Jesse Carr, secretary-treasurer of the powerful Alaska Teamsters Local 950, said the pipeline's economic impact goes beyond construction and oil industry jobs. The state will have access to "low cost fuel for heat and energy, two basic ingredients essential to the state's development," Carr says.

The biggest economic impact occurred in Valdez, the pipeline port, Fairbanks, the center of the pipeline's brain, and Anchorage, the center of the project's brains.

But Alaskans from the smallest Eskimo village to fishing ports in the southeastern part of the state worked on the pipeline. A system of hiring that favored Alaskans was set up, and state labor officials believe any qualified Alaskan who wanted to work on the pipeline got the chance.

The state's unemployment rate was high when the project began, and it's almost 16 per cent now that the project is virtually over. But labor officials note that half of those on unemployment rolls are residents of the lower 48 who met residency requirements for unemployment pay while working on the pipeline.

With Alaska's new-found wealth came prosperity.

"We are experiencing the highest volume of home sales in the low to moderate-income class than we've ever had before," says Phil Hubbard, state commerce commissioner. "Nobody anticipated that, everybody excepted a dropoff."

Most state and federal officials agree that environmental impact from the pipeline has been kept to a minimum. But the social impact has been tremendous, as would be expected when the population increases 49 per cent in seven years. In 1970 the population was 302,000; in 1977 it is estimated at 440,000.

A crime wave was predicted when pipeline construction began, and crime did increase. "We knew there would be a certain amount of criminal activity, but we had no way to tell. No one else had ever built this kind of thing. We didn't know how to gauge it. About 95 per cent of the people who worked on the line were solid citizens," said Col. Pat Wellington of the state troopers. And he adds, violent crimes did not increase drastically.

Prices for homes tripled and quadrupled in Anchorage. Fairbanks and Valdez became notorious for rent gouging, and a state board was set up to review rent increases. But most of the damage had been done.

Inflation hurt everyone. Prices in Alaska always have been high. But those on fixed incomes were hit hard when the pipeline pumped prices up even higher.

But newer, larger schools, sewer systems, telephone systems and recreational facilities have been built — paid for mostly by taxes on oil. Oil money also has funded live television — via satellite — through a state operated program.

Carter talks about American family

By ANN BLACKMAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter says the government ought to give married working couples the same tax benefits available to unmarried working people who live together.

He also says the government should remove from welfare programs the economic encouragement for fathers to desert their families.

The President, in a philosophical Fathers Day interview with The Associated Press, discussed the problems of the American family in 1977 and what the government might do to help.

Away from his imposing antique desk in the Oval Office, he relaxed across the room in a salmon-colored wing chair. He talked of the problems his own success has created for those close to him — the aides who spend so much time at the White House that he's had to order them to see their families.

The President, dressed in blue pinstripes, sat with his legs crossed, as casually as he might in his favorite blue jeans.

The interview was scheduled to last 10 minutes but the President stretched it to a half-hour.

Carter, husband for almost 31 years, father of four, spoke of his own family life as a child, of his joy at being a grandfather, of his support for working mothers, including his wife, Rosalynn. Sending her on a diplomatic mission to Latin America "proved to be one of the better things I've ever done," he said.

Then he talked of his hopes for the American family.

In almost every program that his administration puts forward, he said, "the integrity of the family ought to be a factor." Then, pausing almost wistfully, he added, "I would be inclined to put it as a much greater factor, perhaps, than some others."

Even the tax laws discriminate against the most traditional family value: marriage. Federal income taxes total less for twoperson single people who live together than for a married working couple.

Congress has voted this year to reduce the difference, but it still exists.

"And I would like to eliminate the disparity altogether," Carter said.

The new standard deductions effective this year can total $1,200 more for two single working people living together than for a married working couple filing jointly. Under the old law, the unmarried couple could have a $2,000 advantage when each took the standard deduction. Married persons filing separate tax returns cannot get the same benefits available to unmarried persons.

The welfare laws, he said, "quite often benefit handsomely the divided family. If the husband works full-time at the minimum wage, he makes a certain income for his wife and children. But if he leaves home or pretends to leave home and continues to work, and his family draws welfare payments, their standard of living can be greatly enhanced."

This, Carter said, "is a divisive force that the government artificially imposes on the family system."

But what will he do if he finds it expensive to eliminate laws that make it financially beneficial for welfare families to break up?

Carter replied, "We're struggling with that question now. I don't think it would cost a whole lot more to keep families together."

The President declined to spell out proposals he might offer to change tax and welfare laws.

Does he approve of mothers working when they have small children?

"I think it's good," the President replied, adding that his wife went to work before their oldest child was 2 years old.

Should the tax laws be revised to give working mothers a better deal in such areas as child care tax credits and Social Security?

Carter said, "I don't want to presuppose the kinds of help we might want to give working mothers. But I think the day care center concept and the tax laws among other things, ought to be designed to let a parent be employed and also to prevent children from suffering."

But what form the tax laws should take, I'd rather not say because we are now working on a comprehensive tax reform program."

Carter said the country's educational system could be used more efficiently. The President said schools haven't been adequately used after school hours. He said the after-school program for his 9-year-old daughter, Amy, "really appeals to me."

"They have what they call an expanded school program where kids can come to school at 7:30 a.m. and not leave until 6 p.m.," Carter said. "This gives both parents freedom to be employed, or where there is only one parent, that person can do so."

Carter said Amy's fourth-grade after-school curriculum includes computer programming, as well as Spanish and photography. He said there is no truth to a rumor that he plans to transfer her from District of Columbia public schools to private school.

The reporter turned the dis-ussion to homosexuality, a topic of discussion around the country following repeal of a Florida ordinance banning discrimination against homosexuals.

Q. Let me ask you a question that has become troublesome in the last few weeks in Florida and has become a national issue. I wonder if you think homosexuality is a threat to the family. Should they be able to adopt children and teach school? And marry?

A. I don't see homosexuality as a threat to the family. What has caused the highly publicized confrontations on homosexuality is the desire of homosexuals for the rest of society to approve and to add its acceptance of homosexuality as a normal sexual relationship. I don't feel that it's a normal interrelationship. But at the same time, I don't feel that society, through its laws, ought to abuse or harass the homosexual. I think it's one of those things that is not accepted by most Americans as a normal sexual relationship. In my mind it's certainly not a substitute for the family life that I described to you.

Q. Do you think they should be able to adopt children or teach school? Would you be upset if you knew Amy was being taught by a homosexual?

A. That's something I'd rather

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coveting Commandment.

Understanding public policy

One of the primary functions of newspapers is to be a watchdog of government.

If citizens here had the time and desire personally to attend all the meetings of the city council, county commissioners, hospital board and school board then the newspaper perhaps would not have to staff those sessions.

Needless to say our reporters do not sit through countless hours of government hearings and meetings because they can find nothing more entertaining to do with their evenings. They attend and report the meetings because we believe people must be informed about how local government operates.

Without this knowledge we know of no way the people can make intelligent judgments about their representatives and local issues. Then too, while most officials would undoubtedly be honest even without scrutiny, we believe an active and watchful press is one of the strongest pressures on public officials to try to remain free of corruption.

A result of this intense scrutiny is a great deal of time and space devoted by this newspaper to the workings of local government. While necessary, it is in a way unfortunate because one result is an overshadowing of the private sector.

Indeed, it is the private sector that is the real unsung hero of our system. Government doesn't produce. This private sector, on the other hand, is responsible for improving our lives more than any government ever has or could.

Newspapers tend, through the extent of their coverage, to give the impression that the public sector is what is getting things done. Mayors, school superintendents, councilmen and commission members tend to make the news for their actions, while merchants, for example, working six or seven days a week and providing fine, reasonably priced merchandise, tend to be overlooked.

We will continue to report in as much detail as possible what local governments are doing for (and to) the people. It's part of our job.

And we will try to keep abreast of news and features in the private sector.

The purpose of this editorial is not to be an exercise in self-derision. Indeed we are proud of our local news coverage and are constantly trying to improve it.

The purpose is to emphasize that while newspapers should be watchdogs of government, this is not to imply that government is of ultimate importance. It is the private sector that is the real foundation of our well being.

Aren't those politicians nice?

Rep. George Brown, D-California, estimates that 90 percent of politicians engage in small time "dirty tricks" during campaigns.

"I have personally gone out with a sledgehammer and knocked over opponents' signs."

Brown was quoted in a comment to a reporter in Riverside, Calif., who was asking his reaction to the first of the Nixon-Frost television interviews dealing with the Watergate scandal.

Brown said he regarded the Watergate break-in and cover up as "an extension" of the small time dirty tricks he said are carried out by the vast majority of candidates.

Most of the infractions, he said, are committed by over-zealous junior congressmen early in their careers.

'Perhaps if we redesignated them as $500-a-day 'defense consultants'...?'

Mischief instead of free market

An international study group working under the aegis of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has delivered a projection of potential energy shortages more alarming than the ones used by President Carter to dramatize the need for tough conservation measures.

It concludes a serious worldwide oil shortage could develop as early as 1981 if Arab exporters should decide to limit production to stretch out their oil reserves. The study warned that even massive conservation efforts, a doubling of the use of coal and a major shift to nuclear power cannot forestall a crippling oil shortage by the end of the century.

These projections are falling on a Congress that appears ready to scrap or drastically modify President Carter's call for a new gasoline tax and a tax scheme to encourage purchase of compact cars at the expense of "gas guzzlers."

Transportation secretary Brock Adams is attempting to save the gas tax by suggesting that its proceeds be used for mass transit development and energy research. We don't like that idea any better than Carter's original proposal coupling the huge new tax burden with an income-redistribution scheme that muddled the water.

Taxes, transit systems and research for new energy sources do not produce oil and natural gas, and that is where the problem lies. Production must be increased until alternate fuel sources become available. Only the decontrol of oil and gas prices can accomplish the dual purpose of restraining demand and increasing production.

As long as Congress clings to the outworn political concept that the public must be shielded from oil and gas prices that reflect the real value of fuel, the possibility of a paralyzing energy shortage will be all the greater.

It would be great mischief to hand the new Department of Energy a policy based on the illusion that conservation without a free energy market can solve the problem. Congress must not succumb to the idea that the energy problem is something that still more taxes and government meddling can fix.

High unemployment has hit the entire labor force, The Conference Board notes, but the college graduate has been hurt far less than others

Nation's press

Feds subsidize unemployment

(National Review) Hidden within the new tax-reduction law is a plan to solve unemployment where it doesn't exist and aggravate unemployment where it does. If a business has employed 2 percent more workers than last year, it is entitled to a tax credit of up to $1,806 for each additional employee hired. The cost to the Treasury will be at least $3 billion a year, which means higher taxes elsewhere, or more Treasury borrowing. Healthy businesses would be adding more than 2 percent to their payrolls anyway, so the tax credit is just a windfall for them. (Private employment in April was 3.7 percent above a year before.) The tax credit does nothing for distressed firms in depressed areas, however, except strengthen their competitors.

The employment tax credit likewise penalizes firms that have heretofore provided stable employment — those that have little need to rehire in the economic expansion, because they laid nobody off in the downturn. Businessmen are not incapable of adapting to such policies. The appropriate strategy for the future will therefore be massive layoffs in the next downturn because tax credits can be expected for rehiring in the recovery.

Insofar as the employment tax credit might do anything at all, other than foster instability of employment, it must work by substituting labor for capital. That will tend to further depress the weakest link in the economy, namely plant and equipment spending to expand productive capacity. Without sizable doses of such capital spending, the economy is likely to experience shortages and accelerating inflation long before it reaches an acceptable employment rate.

Like so many government schemes, including public service jobs, the real idea behind employment tax credits is to use more people to produce the same output — that is, to reduce productivity. Even before the recent recession, productivity growth had slipped to 2.1 percent a year in 1966-73, down from 3.3 percent a year in 1948-66. Less output per worker necessarily means less real income per worker, and also the visible slip in international competitiveness which is currently inspiring a flurry of protectionist measures.

The private sector has added over five million jobs since the bottom of the recession. Special gimmicks aren't needed for continued progress. All that is needed is to cast off the chains that hold back growth — heavy taxes on income from capital and productive labor, and the risks and burdens associated with ever-increasing government regulation.

Inside Washington

Congressional ire grows over foreign aid

By ROBERT S. ALLEN WASHINGTON, June 9 — President Carter is whistling in the wind if he thinks he can wheedle $375 million from Congress for more economic aid for so-called "developing nations."

That's the giant handout Secretary Vance told the Paris meeting of the Conference on International Economic Cooperation that Congress will be asked to vote as the country's share of a $1 billion "special action program" initiated by the 16 participating industrial powers.

A large portion of that fund would be used to meet urgent debt problems of the "neediest of the developing nations."

Ironically, most of them are heavily in debt to the U.S. As expounded by Secretary Vance at the Paris parley, the Carter administration would help bail them out by putting up much of the money for that.

Also noteworthy is that most of these "neediest countries" are African. With a few exceptions, they are dictatorships of one kind or another, where "human rights" are non-existent, and misrule, violence and barbarism are general.

Virtually all of these despotic rulers are anti-U.S.; some openly allied with Russia and active Kremlin satellites and puppets. Invariably they line up with the Soviet-Arab bloc against the U.S. in the United Nations. UNESCO and International Labor Organization and never pass up an opportunity to berate the U.S. on any convenient score.

Enough's Enough Significantly, Secretary Vance's grandiose announcement met with complete silence in Congress.

Not even the bleeding-heart internationalist, usually so vocal about rushing to the aid of "developing" and "needy" countries, had anything to say. Their silence was downright reverberating.

The reason is simple. Congress is being bombarded with denunciations and protests against large-scale foreign aid spending. People generally are plain fed up with that. With living costs steadily rising, taxes continuing to go up, and the federal deficit topping $50 billion with no end in sight, public sentiment is increasingly explosive against shoveling out more billions for foreign aid.

So far, in the five months' existence of this Congress, no foreign aid measure has yet been flatly turned down. But it's verging on that.

One came within four votes of being killed several weeks ago. The indications are unmistakable that a new request for $375 million to, in effect, bail out the "neediest nations" will encounter the sternest bipartisan opposition — with the prospects of approval dim. If the administration has any doubts about that, all it has to do is to read the record of the long and heated battle over a proposed $100 million giveaway to four African countries — Mozambique, Tanzania, Zambia and Angola.

It skinned through, but it's still a long way from final approval.

Particularly, the bitter fray is a harsh warning to both the Carter administration and the Black Caucus — which engineered this scheme.

Black Caucus Deal In its original form, the $100 million was proposed by former Secretary Henry Kissinger to reimburse white Rhodesians for property and other losses when, and if, black rule is established.

But in the secret deliberations of the Subcommittee on African Affairs, headed by Representative Charles Diggs, D-Mich., Black Caucus leader, the provision was completely transformed into a so-called Southern African Special Requirements Fund with the money designated for the four black countries — albeit Angola and Mozambique are out-and-out Communist satellites.

During the torrid House wrangle, the word was widespread that UN Ambassador Andrew Young had brought a weighty hand in exerting about this backstage transformation.

The scheme was scathingly assailed by Democrats and Republicans under the Armed Services Committee, and Robert Bauman, R-Md., leading opponent of foreign aid spending.

Both blasted the giveaway as hypocritical flouting of all the pious talk about human rights and democratic rule.

Ichord, sponsoring an amendment to kill the proposal, sardonically cited its obviously deliberate ambiguous reference to "majority ruled countries in southern Africa." Turning to Diggs, he demanded:

"What is a majority ruled country? The gentleman is familiar with all the countries of southern Africa, so give us an example. Is it Mozambique or Angola, with its thousands of Cuban mercenaries installed and maintained there with Russian weapons and money?"

Diggs, clearly on the defensive, squirmed all over the place spouting rhetoric but giving no coherent answer.

"I think we all understand what is meant by universal suffrage and political participation without respect to race, creed or color, declared the Detroit politico pompously. "I do not think we ought to get tangled up in semantics or legalism."

Ichord: "I still say exactly what is meant by majority rule. If majority rule does not include representative rule, what countries in southern Africa have representative rule?"

Diggs: "Representative government means full participation in the political process. It's just as simple as that."

Ichord: "Are we to assume that Mozambique has majority representative rule?"

Diggs: "As far as I know, no participation in the political process in that country is denied anybody based on race, creed or color."

Ichord: "That's what you say, but that is not the reality. Who conceived this language; what is its origin? Who wrote this provision and changed it from its original form as proposed by former Secretary Kissinger?"

Again Diggs wasealed and palavered, winding up with the airy assurance, "I think it meets the language of the art in reference to that particular subject."

Something new Rep. Bauman charged flatly the proposed $100 million fund would in effect aid to Communist countries.

"This is the first time," he told the intently listening House, "that Congress has been asked to authorize direct foreign aid to Communist-dominated countries. This was not done in eastern Europe, and no one would ever think of asking for such aid for Russia. But let's have no doubt about it that under this proposal we will directly be aiding Soviet puppets."

This blunt contention was forcefully echoed by Rep. David Bowen, D-Miss., who noted that he has traveled extensively in Africa and visited the countries slated to benefit from the giveaway.

"I have been in a dozen or more African countries," said Bowen, "and I have looked for majority rule in Africa. I didn't find it. I did find oligarchy, dictatorships, monarchies and other autocratic rules. I found people with titles such as His Excellency the Life President, Commander in Chief, Grand Master of Education, Science and Culture, or Emperor for Life and various other concoctions.

"But I did not find any majority rule. That's why it is very disturbing that there are people who want to bestow this taxpayer's money upon Angolans and their Cuban allies, on the Marxists in Mozambique and upon the other so-called front-line countries."

Vigorously echoing this condemnation, Rep. Philip Crane, R-Ill., pointed out, "The political conflict in this area is the direct result not of white minority government in Rhodesia, but because of aggressive action by the so-called front-line countries which we are contemplating rewarding with $100 million of taxpayers' money."

The showdown vote, on Ichord's amendment to delete the provision, was hairline close — 208 to 204.

But that's not the end of the matter. The issue still has to be deliberated by the Senate, and an equally vehement fight will be waged there with the outcome a toss-up. (All Rights Reserved.)

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Helpers may be difficult to come by today unless you handle them diplomatically. Do otherwise and you may be forced to work alone.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Risky or speculative ventures are a no-no today, no matter how appealing or potentially profitable a friend may predict they'll be.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Do nothing today to evoke a rebellious response from your mate. If you do, you may have another Bastille Day on your hands.

Someone very interesting may add a touch of glamor to your life this year. You'll find that the two of you have much in common.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Things could go well for you today provided you operate in the open and aboveboard. If you try to get devious, that's another matter.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) In business today you are both shrewd and impulsive. You might wipe out the good you accomplish with a few ill-conceived whims.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You'll make a big hit with friends today so long as you don't try to engage in one-upmanship. If such a situation arises, extricate yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Give career matters or things that could add to your income top priority today. If you think only of play time, there may be no pay time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Don't be afraid to think big or to tackle a large project today. Rather than depending on others, however, count only on yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You're likely to be far more resourceful and ambitious in business today than your associates. You should mastermind the operation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Compromise, charm and tact are your tools today to reshape a negative situation into something positive and profitable.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) If something's at stake in a joint venture and the other person is a bit frivolous in managing his end, step in. Make some corrections.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) In one-to-one relationships, people are likely to treat you more generously today than you'll treat them. Try to be equally charitable.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Extremely worthwhile accomplishments are possible today, but be on guard lest someone less ambitious than you sets you on the wrong track.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be sociable today, but don't carry it to extremes. You may pick up the tab for your pals and later resent it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Subdue any self-interests you might have today. Expand your energies on shoring up the family's security. You'll feel better for it.

er not answer. I don't see the need to change laws to permit homosexuals to marry. I know that there are homosexuals who teach and the children don't suffer. But this is a subject I don't particularly want to involve myself in. I've got enough problems without taking on another.

Carter said that he thinks political life in the capital puts special strains on marriages. "I think in Washington there is a particular conflict between ambition and the desire to do a good job, which is legitimate on one hand, and the obligations to hold your own families together and meet the needs of your spouse and children on the other. I don't think the two are necessarily incompatible."

Carter volunteered that when he has heard of a staffer's possible marriage problems, "Rosalynn and I have invited the family to come over and let the children play with Amy and let us show them that you can have an aggressive, dynamic, competitive political career and at the same time, maintain your allegiances and your obligations to your own family duties."

Couples should take marriage vows seriously, Carter said. He added: "I'm not trying to be a prude. I'm not going to interfere with the right of people to make their own decisions under our laws."

The President was asked whether he would counsel a member of his staff to marry the person he or she is living with. Carter said, "I think I'd have to judge that on an individual basis. I have to admit that on a few occasions, I have counseled with members of my staff about that subject. I've never tried to tell them what to do. I've never intimated that they would be punished if they didn't."

Carter has, on occasion, offered some advice on the subject. While visiting the Department of Housing and Urban Development in February, he told employees: "We need a stable family life to make us better servants of the people. So those of you who are living in sin, I hope you get married."

The President was asked in the interview whether he thinks a White House staffer living with someone out of wedlock would reflect on his administration?

"I don't want to equate it to the administration," he said. "I think it sets an example on a nationwide basis that is bad."

Carter said also that he has written memos to his key staff members and to his Cabinet secretaries instructing them to spend time with their families.

"This is important to me," Carter said. "And I think it's good for my administration and good for the country because what goes on in Washington, as reported to the rest of the world, the nation at least, has a great impact on the sanctity of marriage and the need to hold the family together."

Resting his head on the back of his chair, Carter reminisced about ideas on marriage and family life when he was a child.

"I think there was a much greater sense of social pressure to hold the family together," he said. "It was a disgrace, at least where I grew up, for a family to be separated. Divorce was not accepted as part of life."

He continued: "And I think there was a much greater sense of religious commitment, that the marriage vow was sacred, and not only was the love of a partner an important part of it, but an obligation to be involved in honesty, integrity, truthfulness and faithfulness — in times of adversity and in times when the ardor of physical love waned. There was almost a sense of betrayal when one left a marriage partner."

President Carter, the parent, is now a grandfather. What does that mean to him this Father's Day? "It's almost as delightful to have a grandchild as it is to have one of your own children... We are now experiencing the same delight in seeing Jason (age 22 months) and James (almost 4 months) develop without the constant responsibility for their care, and that ability to move in and out of the life of a grandchild and not have the constant responsibility for them is an additional element of the joy."

Hail damage lures racketeers

2500 roofs may have been hurt in Pampa

By TIM PALMER
Pampa News Staff
Homes with roofs damaged in the recent hail storm are prime targets for unscrupulous repairmen, and local businessmen warn Pampans to be cautious.

A spot check of four insurance adjusters in the city revealed more than 1,000 reports of roof damage filed thus far. Estimates to the total number of damaged roofs in Pampa range from 1,200 to 2,500.

A potential market of that size could encourage someone "to go into business overnight," said insurance man Lee Fraser.

Amarillo has had its problems with the roofing racketeers. Said Mike Caldwell, of the code enforcement department: "They go through a neighborhood and say 'hey, your roof need fixing and I'll fix it for X number of dollars.' And if we don't catch them in the act they get away with it."

Caldwell added that such operators "generally do substandard work that doesn't comply with building codes."

Some may use inferior materials, do an incomplete job or do unnecessary work at the expense of the customer.

The city of Amarillo has passed an ordinance requiring qualified roof repairmen to be licensed. A licensed repairmen will carry a card to present to this customer.

Pampa has no such ordinance, said David McKinney at the Inspection Department.

Roof repair companies in the city advise Pampans to check the credentials of any repairmen before allowing them to work.

Larry Starnes at White House Lumber Company said lumber companies or other material supply companies can recommend qualified roofers.

"If someone comes to my door they're not going to get the job," Starnes said. "I wouldn't mess with them."

Should a repairman solicit his business at the door, the Better Business Bureau in Amarillo suggests the cautious homeowner watch for certain warning signals. A racketeer may:

- drive a plain truck and be from out of town.
- insist on doing the work immediately.
- offer neighbors' names as references.
- insist on immediate payment in cash.
- accept a check only during bank hours.

The bureau advises a wary customer to check out the references the repairman supplies, consult the telephone directory for a listing of the business or the individual, and obtain the vehicle's license number and check with the Better Business Bureau.

The bureau further advises those who decide to do business with the door-to-door repairmen to insist on paying by check and to obtain a receipt that specifies the quantity and content of the product and clearly identifies the name and address of the seller.

The local office of the Better Business Bureau is at 518 Amarillo Building, Amarillo, 79101. Telephone number is 374-3725.

Texas brews Lowenbrau

FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP) — A domestic version of the beer that made Munich famous is now being brewed here and some claim there is little or no attempt by the manufacturers to tell the public the difference.

With no fanfare or Oktoberfest, Miller Brewing Co. began brewing Lowenbrau Beer a little more than a year ago. In fact, the only difference between the Fort Worth and the German suds is a small mention of the Texas brewery on the label.

Spokesmen for the Fort Worth brewery and the firm's Milwaukee headquarters say they are living up to the 1974 agreement made with Lowenbrau Munchen Aktiengesellschaft, the West German producer. They also claim there is no intention to mislead consumers.

Dallas stockbroker John Landrum and Chicago industrial engineer John Christoffel say differently. And both have filed formal complaints accusing Miller of misleading labeling and deceptive marketing.

Landrum complained to the Texas Attorney General's consumer fraud division, citing deceptions in the sale of domestic Lowenbrau in 12 test markets including Dallas-Fort Worth, San Diego, San Francisco and Chicago.

Christoffel filed suit in Cook County Circuit Court, but thus far, no other legal action has been taken in his case.

Landrum said he filed his complaint after buying what he said was a genuine Lowenbrau in a local store, only to find out it was brewed just 27 miles away in Fort Worth.

"I was just fooled and I couldn't take it back," he said. "The retailer wouldn't do anything. So I complained to the distributor, then the brewery in Fort Worth, then the regional sales manager and finally Miller's headquarters in Milwaukee."

The brewery said it is operating under full Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) approval and has no control over prices set by retailers. The response also said retailers have the right to display the beer wherever they want—including next to other genuine imported beers.

Landrum said the price of a six pack varies widely. Some Fort Worth stores sell domestic Lowenbrau for $2.50 a six pack, which Landrum says is a reasonable price. However, he said other stores sell the same six pack for as much as $3.25 and customers don't know the difference.

Before the beer was taken off the Fort Worth market, Miller's officials said imported Lowenbrau sold for $3.75 a six pack. They said the domestic brand is still a good seller

Carr lashes out at Jaworski

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Austin attorney Waggoner Carr said Saturday that Leon Jaworski has picked "the wrong time, the wrong place and the wrong victim" in publicly criticizing controversial Texas Supreme Court Justice Don Yarbrough.

Furthermore, said Carr in a statement, the former Watergate special prosecutor is violating the State Bar of Texas canon of ethics and should be investigated by the Harris County grievance committee.

Jaworski, a Houston attorney, told the State Bar earlier in the week that Yarbrough should not sit on the state's highest court while facing allegations of fraud and misconduct.

Yarbrough is scheduled to come to trial Aug. 1 in Houston on a disbarment suit filed against him by the Harris County grievance committee. Carr is an attorney for Yarbrough in the suit.

"The people elected Mr. Yarbrough," Carr said in his statement. "He is doing the best judicial job he can considering the harassment he receives from various members of the bar like Mr. Jaworski."

Carr claimed that the "personal vendetta" by Jaworski was an effort "to take away from the people of Texas their present right to select judges and to require judges to be appointed."

"He doesn't mention, of course, that should this plan of his (to require judges to be appointed) be adopted it will give him and the other powerful members of large, big city law firms, who represent big business interests and contributors, a hammer-lock hold on our judges are."

Carr said Jaworski does not speak for the entire state bar.

"He does not speak for me. At least some of us believe Judge Yarbrough has the same constitutional rights as Mr. Jaworski has and among those rights is the right to be rugged in a court of law by a fair minded jury. By his public attacks Mr. Jaworski is wilfully and purposely trying to 'fix' the trial before it begins," Carr said.

Carr said that Jaworski was violating bar canons because "his remarks may prevent prospective jurors from being impartial at the set of the pending trial and may also interfere with the obligation of jurors to base their verdict solely upon the evidence entered in the trial... It is the duty of the Harris County grievance committee to investigate this violation... and bring whatever action the committee feels appropriate."

Krueger cites $ billion error in Carter deregulation plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Bob Krueger, D-Tex., said today that the Carter administration overestimated by at least $40 billion the long-range costs of his natural gas deregulation proposal.

Krueger, sponsor of a deregulation package, listed what he described as a series of calculating errors made by administration energy experts when they determined that deregulation would cost the consumer $86 billion over the next eight years.

He told reporters that errors he could pinpoint, such as in calculating prices, amounted to more than $40 billion. Others, he said, added up to "incalculable billions more."

Krueger would not, however, estimate what his plan would cost. He said he did not have enough data to do that, "and if I were to guess at things I would be guilty of the same mistake they've made."

Krueger said he felt President Carter was ill-served by the advisers who calculated the administration's figures. He said he would still like to work closely with the administration toward long-range energy goals.

Spokesmen in the White House energy office could not be reached for comment.

Krueger's plan would phase in total gas deregulation, starting by deregulating the price of new natural gas discoveries. He has estimated the price on that new gas would rise to $2.50 per thousand cubic feet, although other experts estimate the price could go as high as $4.00. Natural gas sold across state lines is now subject to a ceiling price of $1.45. President Carter's proposal would raise it to about $1.75.

Krueger's plan contains other benefits for gas and oil producers. He would define new natural gas in geologic terms. The Carter plan would define new gas as gas found at least 2.5 miles from an existing well. Krueger said he would need a new study to tell exactly how much gas would be affected by the change in definition.

The Krueger plan also contains protection for Texas consumers in the form of a ceiling on the amount interstate pipelines could bid for intrastate gas. That is designed to keep the escalating clauses in interstate contracts from being applied when interstate pipelines bid high prices for small supplies.

Krueger refused to guess how his plan will fare in coming weeks. It has been adopted by the Energy and Power subcommittee of the House Commerce Committee, but the vote in the full committee is likely to be very close.

Krueger said a Texan in the House leadership, presumably Majority Leader James C. Wright, has assured him that whatever happens in committee, the full House will vote on deregulation this year.

Rig, train crash here

Faulty brakes were blamed for an accident that occurred at 1:30 a.m. Saturday when a truck tractor semi-trailer rig collided with a train five miles west of Pampa on US 80, 200 feet west of FM 2300 (Celanese Road).

Driver of the truck was Richard Allen Tucker, 19, of Gardendale, Tex. He was driving the 1973 International for Sharp Drilling Co. Inc. of Midland. It was loaded with oil rig equipment.

With Tucker in the truck was Rick Freeman, 19, of Odessa. Freeman was taken to Highland General Hospital by Metropolitan Ambulance Service following the accident.

Trooper Wayne Williams with the Texas Department of Public Safety, who investigated the accident, said that Tucker stayed at the scene assisting but that he was limping and was taken to Highland General Hospital by private vehicle. His leg was broken.

Both Tucker and Freeman were listed in fair condition Saturday night.

Williams said that Santa Fe Railroad was pushing four freight cars south, toward Celanese Chemical Plant. Flashing lights in the middle of the roadway were on and working, he said.

The trooper said that Tucker reported having seen the lights, but said his brakes were bad and he could not stop in time to avoid the collision.

"There were almost no skidmarks at all," Williams reported.

He said the truck collided with the first and second cars next to the locomotive and derailed both of them — a tank car and a flatbed car.

"It took us about four hours to get them untangled," Williams said.

He reported that the brakes had to be removed from the truck tractor before it could be moved and he described the rig as "totally demolished."

A Santa Fe crew came to the scene to move the derailed cars. For about an hour traffic on US 80 was confined to a single lane at the scene. The Silver Bullet Citizens Band Radio Club assisted in directing traffic. Williams said.

Kingsmen Corps to practice in Pampa

The Anaheim Kingsmen Drum and Bugle Corps will rest, and rehearse in Pampa Thursday afternoon on its cross-country tour which will take them through 36 states and Canada. They welcome spectators to their practice on the Pampa High School band practice field. The group, consisting of 128 marchers ranging in age from 14 to 21, plans to arrive in Pampa at noon.

American male saint inscribed

By MICHAEL J. DUFFY

Associated Press Writer
VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope Paul VI proclaims John Nepomucene Neumann as America's first male saint Sunday before thousands of U.S. pilgrims, including two Pennsylvanians who believe they owe their lives to the intercession of Philadelphia's "little bishop."

Papal spokesmen said more than 20,000 Americans — including U.S. Vatican representative Henry Cabot Lodge, Philadelphia Mayor Frank Rizzo and eight American cardinals — are expected to jam St. Peter's Square to hear the Pope order Bishop Neumann "inscribed in the Catalogue of Saints."

Among those arriving Saturday were Michael Flanigan, 19, of Philadelphia and J. Kent Lenahan, 46, of Villanova, Pa., whose miraculous cures led to the 19th century bishop's canonization.

Vatican spokesmen said

Flanigan developed terminal bone cancer at age 6, and doctors decided his case was hopeless. His parents took him to the bishop's shrine in Philadelphia to pray, and today his only reminder of the disease is a slight limp in his right leg.

"I remember going to the shrine, but there wasn't much commotion at the time over my cure," he told reporters.

Lenahan, a music teacher, was 19 years old when his head was nearly crushed against a utility pole while he was riding on a car running board. The comatose youth recovered after his parents touched him with a piece of the bishop's cassock.

"They couldn't explain what happened," Lenahan said in a recent interview. "So I guess it was the man upstairs."

The third "miracle cure" attributed by the Vatican to Bishop Neumann involved an 11-year-old Italian girl who recovered overnight from peritonitis, an inflammation of the abdominal lining, after a nun touched her with a picture of Bishop Neumann. Eva Benassi is now 65 and was also expected for the canonization, Vatican spokesmen said.

Previous 4 Americans canonized are two women — Mother Cabrini, declared a saint in 1946, and Mother Seton, canonized in 1975.

In 1921, Pope Benedict XV declared Bishop Neumann "venerable" — the first degree of sanctity — because of "the simplicity of his works," his service to the poor, and his promotion of the parochial school system in the United States. He was beatified in 1963.

The bishop was born in 1811 in the village of Prachatitz in what is now Czechoslovakia. After considering careers in medicine and law, he decided on the priesthood and at age 25 immigrated to the United States in search of a bishop to ordain him.

Bishop John Dubois of New York, eager for German-speaking priests, welcomed the young man and assigned him to a 9,000-square-mile parish in western New York state.

Within four years, the pace of work in the huge frontier parish brought Father Neumann, frail and barely 5 feet tall, to the point of physical collapse. He joined the Redemptorist Order and began a career of service to German-speaking immigrants in New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia.

In Baltimore, Father Neumann became a U.S. citizen and helped save the order of black nuns, the Oblate Sisters of Providence, from extinction. There he also became the private confessor of Archbishop James Patrick Henrick, who had transferred from Philadelphia.

The archbishop recommended Father Neumann as his successor in Philadelphia, and despite his own reservations, he was consecrated bishop of what was then America's largest diocese on his 41st birthday.

The three previous bishops had all been Irish, and there was resentment over appointment of a bishop who spoke English with a thick German accent.

"The Rev. Neumann does not speak English well, and I fear his election would find very little favor with the American people," warned Bishop Michael O'Connor of Pittsburgh. Although his simple dress and unpretentious style were scorned by the city's urbane rich, Bishop Neumann won the loyalty of the common people and the poor, who dubbed him "the little bishop" because of his short stature.

The bishop focused his energies on religious education, increasing parochial school enrollment from 500 to 9,000 in two years, and laying the foundation for a Catholic school system that today boasts 200,000 students in 269 elementary and 30 high schools.

To staff the schools, he encouraged religious groups to settle in the area and founded a new order, the Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis, which today has more than 1,500 nuns.

Dancers to entertain on July 4

Plans for the Independence Day Celebration on July 4 at Recreation Park have been completed by Chamber of Commerce officials.

The program will begin at 7:30 p.m. with entertainment by square dancers from the Lone Star Squares and Calico Capers of Pampa and the Circle L Square Dance Club of Lefors. Caller will be Sammy Parsley.

The Rev. John Hansard, pastor of the Hobart Street Baptist Church, will recite Patrick Henry's "Sign The Declaration."

The fireworks display, presented by the Burnett Fireworks Company of Enid, Okla., again will include ground and aerial pieces. The chamber urges people to take seats in the grandstand.

Admission is free to the public and contributions are being taken at the Chamber office to finance this program.

Police probe 90 offenses here in May

Pampa police investigated 90 class one offenses in May, according to statistics released Saturday.

The department reported 211 class two offenses, 25 drug cases and 22 cases of driving while intoxicated.

Three sex offenses in May brought the 1977 total to eight. At this time last year, only four such cases were reported.

Child witnesses help convict teacher killer

By PETE YOST

Associated Press Writer
DETROIT (AP) — Eight-year-old Regina Robinson cried when she got home from testifying in court last week. The next day she was afraid to go to school alone.

Regina was one of 10 young eyewitnesses called to the stand at a murder trial in a rare prosecution move. But she was too scared to do more than glance at the man she had seen shoot her teacher in the head five times in the classroom last Nov. 10.

Another witness, Pamela Ann Burnett, saw her mother crying in the audience, left the stand and began sobbing herself. She said later she was frightened by the defendant's "yellow eyes."

But 8-year-old Fred Mrozek, who had been so upset at the time of the slaying that he was reluctant to go outdoors for several months, confidently pointed to defendant Al Lewis as the gunman.

His testimony and that of two other pupils helped persuade a jury to convict Lewis of second-degree murder Friday. Lewis, who was teacher Bettye McCaster's estranged husband, will face a maximum penalty of life imprisonment at his sentencing June 24.

Regina's mother, Gloria Robinson, says the experience was so traumatic that her daughter wept uncontrollably afterward and begged her to accompany her to school for the final day of classes.

"She's just upset from the whole ordeal," Mrs. Robinson said. "I'm very sorry I even let her go down there (to court) ... If I had it to do over again, she never would have gone down there to relieve all that. It was like it just happened."

Mrs. Robinson said Regina "could identify the man, but she wouldn't. She was ready to say that was him. And when she went down for the (police) lineup (when Lewis was first captured by police) she could identify him, but she wouldn't."

John L. Thompson, assistant Wayne County prosecutor, defends the decision to call the children as witnesses.

"People don't seem to understand," he said. "We have a legal duty. The eyewitnesses have to be produced. They have to testify. If we did not produce them, the jury can infer that the witnesses would be able to testify against us."

Thompson said he interviewed all 29 of the children who witnessed the killing months ago "and none of them exhibited any sort of traumatic behavior."

The 10 who testified were selected by Thompson based on "a sort of intuitive judgment, based on how I thought they would react on the stand."

Thompson said some parents "did indicate a reluctance to let their children testify," but none asked specifically that their children not be put through the ordeal.

Thompson said he decided not to put all the youngsters in the witness chair because "it was clear to me there was enough testimony and more would be repetitive."

The children underwent preparation for testifying with a trip to the courtroom May 9. Judge Patricia J. Boyle spoke with them briefly in an attempt to relax them for the time they would be called to testify.

But the ordeal of testifying was nothing compared to the trauma after the slaying itself.

Most of the youngsters were so shaken that psychiatric services were offered and special counseling was made available. Miss McCaster's replacement, Emma Jean Tillman, has extensive training in handling youngsters with unusual problems.

For weeks after the killing, the youngsters made up excuses — a hurt finger, upset stomach — anything to get them out of the classroom where Miss McCaster was killed. They got nervous at lunchtime, the time of day the slaying occurred. They jumped at loud noises.

One day Mrs. Tillman fell from a chair and landed with a bang on the floor. The children were so glad to see her get up that they ran up and hugged her.

For two months after the slaying, Lillian Mrozek's son had problems similar to those Regina Robinson is still experiencing.

"Fred is a very quiet person, shy," said Mrs. Mrozek. "After this (the slaying) happened, he had nightmares. He was very nervous. For two months, he would not go out of the house. At nighttime, we would open the door and he would close it." Because of the killing, Fred had a seemingly endless string of questions for his parents about death.

Texas weather

By The Associated Press
Despite a cloud cover in North Central Texas and scattered showers in the southwest, Texans sweltered under yet another day of summer-like temperatures Saturday.

The fact that no measurable amounts of precipitation had been reported by the National Weather Service came as no surprise to anyone as readings soared into the mid to high 90s.

At 3 p.m., Wichita Falls reported a high of 98. Abilene, Dallas-Fort Worth and San Angelo had 95. East Texas was slightly cooler, with Tyler recording 91 and Longview 88. Hot, westerly winds drifted across the entire state at 10-20 miles per hour, causing the thin cloud cover in some central sections to clear out.

Shoplifting report shocks Farrah Fawcett

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Television star Farrah Fawcett-Majors said Saturday she was "stunned" at a published report that she had been accused of shoplifting seven years ago. She said she didn't steal anything but just "took justice into my own hands."

The 36-year-old actress who skyrocketed to stardom in the private eye series "Charlie's Angels" said she took items of clothing from two California shops in 1970 as a protest against the shopkeepers' refusal to exchange unsatisfactory items she had purchased.

"I was making a demonstration, and at the time I felt it was the only thing that I could do," she said.

Her comments came in response to a story in the New York Post that she was arrested and fined on two occasions for taking dresses and coats.

Elliot Abelson, Miss Fawcett-Majors' lawyer at the time of the incidents, said the actress was charged with petty theft.

Win boost for Northern Ireland

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The landslide election victory by former Prime Minister Jack Lynch, whose Fianna Fail party openly opposes British rule in Northern Ireland, raised fears Saturday of increased sectarian strife and a deterioration in London-Dublin relations.

Rev. William Beattie, an ally of Northern Ireland's militant Protestant leader Ian Paisley, said Lynch's victory "is a morale booster" for militants in the predominantly Roman Catholic Irish Republican Army who seek a united Ireland.

Late returns Saturday showed Fianna Fail — "Soldiers of Destiny" in Gaelic — swept at least 70 of the 148 seats in the lower house of parliament, or Dail, during Thursday's balloting. Political observers expected Lynch's party to end up with 84 seats.

Prime Minister Liam Cosgrave's Fine Gael (Family of the Irish) party carried at least 43 seats and his Labor party coalition partners picked up 17.

Independents accounted for four and the rest were in doubt because of recounts.

In a news conference Saturday, Lynch, a 58-year-old attorney and former sports hero, said "we want a peaceful solution" in Northern Ireland and encouraged Britain to "take more initiatives" in the province.

But the respected Times of London said Lynch's unexpected triumph "came as a disappointment to the British government," because of Cosgrave's past efforts to control IRA activity in the south.

The London Evening News proclaimed, "Lynch's Win Is Boost To IRA."

Post and Telegraph Minister Conor Cruise O'Brien, one of three government ministers who lost their parliamentary seats, said he hoped "the size of Jack's majority will strengthen his hand against the dangers of the provo (militant) elements in Fianna Fail."

Authoritative sources in Fianna Fail predicted trouble for Lynch, who was prime minister in 1967-1973, if he tries to keep fervent nationalists out of key posts in the government.

Prominent among the nationalists is Charles Haughey, who finished second only to Lynch in vote-getting ability. Lynch sacked Haughey as finance minister in 1970 after he was involved in a scandal over running guns to the IRA in Northern Ireland.

"Mr. Haughey is only one of the dangerous men," said O'Brien. "There are at least a half dozen more. The electorate hoped that with Jack Lynch in control it was safe."

O'Brien blamed his party's loss on economic troubles, including a 16 per cent annual inflation rate. Eleven per cent of Ireland's work force is unemployed.

Money given to producers for conservation

Gray County producers who complete projects aimed at conservation may receive 80 per cent of the necessary funds through the Drought Flood Conservation Program, said Evelyn Mason, executive director of the county conservation service.

Producers should have the projects approved under the program by June 21. Limit per person is $250, and producers must request the practice before starting it.

Conservation practices offered under the program include well drilling, irrigation system modification, deferred grazing, terracing, construction of dams and reservoirs, diversion terracing and stubble mulching.

Others are construction of pipe and storage facilities, establishment of a permanent grass cover, listing and chiseling and establishment of interim cover.

Gutter talk draws FCC fire

By JOHN D. McCLAIN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Uncle Charlie will overlook "hells" and "damns" on Citizens Band radio channels, but will crack down on "really severe gutter language."

And what does he consider indecent? Language depicting "sexual and excretory activities and organs in a manner patently offensive by contemporary community standards."

Uncle Charlie, of course, is the Federal Communications Commission to CBers.

Use of indecent language is one of six "trigger" violations that determine his priorities in enforcing FCC regulations on the CB airwaves.

Actually, indecent language is lumped with obscenity and profanity in that "trigger" violation.

But Deputy Chief James C. McKinney of the Field Operations Bureau, the FCC's enforcement arm, says the last two violations seldom are among Uncle Charlie's citations.

"Profanity is not a viable term when it comes to broadcasting," McKinney says. "There's never been a court case won on the basis of profanity. So while it appears in the law, it's never enforced."

McKinney says the obscenity charge seldom is made because its definition will vary from local court to local court.

"Hell" and "damn" have never been considered anything we'd take action on," McKinney says. "We're talking about really severe gutter language."

The FCC usually can count on help from the Federal Bureau of Investigation in enforcing its ban on indecent language.

"We can deal with it administratively by fines of up to $500 a day and revocation of licenses," McKinney says. "But more likely the violator will be taken to (federal) district court."

In addition to violating FCC rules, use of indecent language on the air is a criminal offense subject to a year in jail and a $10,000 fine. McKinney says jail sentences no longer are rare.

In fact, an Indianapolis man was sentenced to the full year in jail earlier this year by a U.S. District Court judge on charges including the broadcast of indecent language. Witnesses had testified that his radio transmissions were heard on television sets, radios and telephones in his neighborhood.

"U.S. attorneys tend to want to prosecute violators" because of the volume of complaints they generate, McKinney explains.

"If we get one man spouting off with a considerable amount of indecent language, we hear about it almost immediately and in great numbers."

So, when a complaint reaches the FCC or the U.S. attorney, it's usually turned over to the FBI which works with FCCAGENTS IN FINDING THE OFFENDER.

Court strikes holidays

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress soon will be asked to wipe out the effects of a Supreme Court ruling that says workers have no legal right to take a day off for religious reasons.

The Supreme Court decision is wrong," Sen. Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va., said Thursday after hearing the high court's ruling. "I shall renew my legislative efforts in this issue."

It was Randolph who in 1972 pushed legislation through Congress making it clear that under the Civil Rights Act of 1964 employers would have to accommodate religious employees whenever possible.

But the Supreme Court, in a 7-3 decision Thursday, ruled that employers are not required to give an employee certain days off because of religious beliefs if a seniority system bars such accommodation or if such action would amount to preferential treatment.

"In the absence of clear statutory language or legislative history to the contrary, we will not readily construe the statute to require an employer to discriminate against some employees in order to enable others to observe their sabbath," Justice Byron White said in the majority opinion.

The ruling is a major legal defeat for millions whose religions dictate that they not work on particular days of the week. It carries impact for Orthodox Jews, Seventh-Day Adventists, Seventh-Day Baptists and members of the Worldwide Church of God.

Randolph, a Seventh-Day Baptist, indicated he would seek a new law that could not be misinterpreted by the court.

"Our great tradition of religious freedom and our nation's accommodation of religious diversity has been severely damaged," he said in referring to the high court's action.

The court's two dissenters used even stronger language.

"All Americans will be a little poorer until today's decision is erased," said Justice Thurgood Marshall and William Brennan. "The ultimate tragedy is that, despite Congress's best efforts, one of this nation's pillars of strength — our hospitality to religious diversity — has been seriously eroded."

The case decided by the court involved a Trans World Airlines worker, Larry Hardison, who was fired in 1969 for refusing to work from sundown Friday to sundown Saturday, observed as the sabbath by the Worldwide Church of God.

FDA cuts heroin flow

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — Federal drug agents say there is evidence they are beginning to slash the flow of Mexican heroin into the United States.

Bill Kline, San Antonio special agent in charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), says the supply of heroin finding its way here is more expensive, less available and less pure than it has been for some time.

"It's as sharp and definite a change in activity as I've seen here in recent years," Kline said in an interview.

Kline said his agents and informants report that traffickers who used to deal in kilograms of heroin are now dealing in grams.

As a result, he said, many "big dealers" who once were high priority targets for investigations "have been down-

Loafers look at Hondo

HONDO, Tex. (AP) — Since Mayor Woodrow Glascock wrote President Carter for a list of the hard-core unemployed this week, he's been getting calls from volunteer loafers everywhere.

Glascock said today he has had dozens of calls from people who said they would be glad to come to this small South Texas community and practice their unemployment here.

"And those are the ones who don't call collect," Glascock said. "I'm not taking collect calls."

Early this week, Glascock mailed a letter to President Carter asking for the names of unemployment roll regulars.

He said Hondo needs the money for a badly needed civic center.

The mayor said the city has been turned down repeatedly in its quest for financial help because its unemployment is too low — only about 3 per cent.

Glascock told Carter that if it took a high unemployment rate to get federal funds, well, he would try to meet the requirement — even if Hondo had

Gary Gilmore's life still valuable puzzle

By VERN ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer
SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Gary Gilmore was killed by a firing squad five months ago. But his life remains both a puzzle and a valuable commercial property.

Gilmore, 36, gained worldwide attention when he said he would rather die than spend his life in prison. His execution was stayed three times before it was carried out on the chilly morning of Jan. 17 — the nation's first execution in nearly 10 years.

At least three books and a play about Gilmore have been started. A movie is planned. And sales continue on T-shirts bearing his final comment to the warden, "Let's do it."

Two $1-million suits have been brought against Gilmore's estate by his victims' widows. The killer, who twice tried suicide following unwanted stays of execution, is a puzzling presence in the memories of those close to him at his death.

Gilmore attorney Ronald Stanger says, "He did have a way about him, and if he wanted to be nice, he could. He was very bright."

Stanger, attorney Robert Moody, Gilmore's uncle Vern Damico and promoter Lawrence Schiller witnessed the execution at Gilmore's request. It was a duty Stanger says "shouldn't have been part of my watch." Moody says the experience "still just sickens me."

Damico, Gilmore's uncle says "He was a completely mixed-up man. He wanted the same things you and I want — marriage, a home, a job and love — to live like an average American." Damico and his wife, Ida, took Gilmore into their home when he was paroled from prison in April 1976.

"What he did was beyond me, and I think, beyond him," Damico said of the two murders his nephew admitted.

Gilmore was convicted of the July 20 killing of Bennie Bushnell, 25, a motel night clerk. He also admitted slaying Max Jensen, 34, a service station attendant. Both were shot in the head at close range during robberies.

Jensen's widow, Colleen, teaches art in Clearfield, Utah, where she lives with her 16-month-old daughter, her lawyer said, adding that she has refused to answer questions from reporters.

Relatives said Debra Bushnell is living in Los Angeles and gave birth to a daughter, her second child, within weeks after Gilmore was shot. The relatives refused to say where she could be reached. Her attorney said, "She doesn't even want to talk with me most of the time. It's been a very traumatic thing for her."

Nicole Barrett, 21, Gilmore's former girlfriend who joined him in an unsuccessful suicide pact last November, was committed to the state mental hospital after the suicide attempt but was released shortly after the execution. Her mother, Kathryn Baker, said her daughter is working as a private nurse to a terminally ill couple, but she declined to say where she and her two children are living. "That's all I'm going to tell you. She (Nicole) is doing well and working. She's in a good frame of mind. She's happy."

Schiller, who paid $112,000 for the rights to Gilmore's life story, said he has conducted 116 interviews for the book that is to be completed in about two years by a writer he has yet to sign.

He said a two-character play based on "the concept of the inquisitor and prisoner" similar to a Gilmore interview that appeared this spring in Playboy magazine was being written by an author whose name he would not disclose.

He said if successful, the play, book and movie — to be filmed after the book is published — could gross around $500,000.

Author Norman Mailer, contacted as he left an interview with Damico last week, said he was at work on a book about "violence in America," and that "Gary Gilmore will occupy a prominent chapter." He said the book would take a year or two to complete.

"I don't like to give interviews about the books I'm working on. I'm suspicious of writers who do that, and I'm

FBI agents says gamblers used phone

DALLAS (AP) — An FBI agent testifying at the gambling trial of seven men, including a former Panhandle sheriff, told a jury that more than $881,856 in bets were placed over a Dallas telephone during a 12-day period.

Agent Frank Cross added Friday that more than $106,000 had been placed over the same phone, which the FBI tapped, in one day. He added that a bookmaker's profits on the bets could range as high as $44,000.

On trial in U.S. District Court are Homer Miller Jr. and Thomas Robinson, both of Dallas, Coyle Winborn of Pampa, John Bruzga, Jerry Basden, Glen Clements Jr. and former Oldham County Sheriff William Olsen, all of Amarillo.

The defense is expected to begin its case Monday morning.

Troops hamper Namibia peace

By ARTHUR L. GAVINSON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A South African refusal to withdraw militarily from Namibia is slowing international efforts to win independence for that long-disputed South West African territory by 1978.

And official South African claims to a 106-square-mile enclave around Walvis Bay — the biggest and best Atlantic seaboard port in the region — also could threaten prospects for a peaceful transfer of power to Namibia's black majority.

These were among several difficulties cited Saturday as diplomats of five western nations reported progress on other aspects of their talks with the government of Prime Minister John Vorster over a Namibian advance toward statehood.

The United States, along with Britain, France, West Germany and Canada, already have reported achieving "the basic ingredients of an agreement" with the Vorster government on the future of the one-time German colony.

These relate mainly to political processes by which elections can be arranged for a government to which the South Africans can hand over power.

The State Department said Saturday that Secretary of State Cyrus Vance "was encouraged that momentum is being maintained toward the goal of an internationally acceptable settlement to the Namibian problem."

But several problems remain. Namibia, twice the size of Texas with 750,000 blacks and 105,000 whites living in it, has been under South African management since World War I when Germany was ousted from its colony. The territory is rich in diamonds, uranium and other minerals.

A series of United Nations resolutions in the aftermath of World War II canceled the mandate under which neighboring South Africa had run the country. Most recently, the U.N. Security Council ordered South Africa to do something which the Vorster government already had agreed to do — transfer power to the black majority by next year.

Diplomatic sources, including some Carter administration officials, give this list of disagreements and agreements that have thus far emerged from American-led exchanges with Vorster.

First, the disagreements: —On security, Vorster insists on keeping strong air and land forces in Namibia so long as it is menaced by outside attackers. There have been black guerrilla thrusts mainly from Angola in the north and also from Zambia in the north east. The western nations hope to persuade the black governments and nationalist parties concerned to quit fighting soon, making it harder for Vorster to justify the maintenance of South African units in the border areas and at various base camps.

When completed, Robinson's homebuilt should resemble this one constructed by Calvin Parker, its original designer.

Those magnificent Pampanos and their (homemade) flying machines

Sid Robinson's plane is all-aluminum. A windy day will launch the lightweight craft, he said. (Pampa News photos by Tim Palmer)

H.E. Crocker's Tailwind is 95 per cent completed. With the addition of the wings and some other finishing touches, the plane may be ready to fly by the end of the summer.

"Build This Flying Volkswagen For Less Than $600!" screamed a headline in the May 1968 edition of Popular Mechanics magazine.

The idea appealed to Sid Robinson of Pampa. Gazing at the photograph of the small, engine-powered aircraft, Robinson decided to make a plane of his own.

His decision reflects a growing local interest in the home-construction of aircraft.

According to Robert Burk of the Federal Aviation Administration in Lubbock, "There's been a large increase. I'd say in the neighborhood of 25 per cent more people building airplanes in the last two years."

All a prospective builder needs are a design, some materials and a little practical know-how. Sid Robinson is not a mechanic or an engineer, but he became convinced that he could build his own airplane.

Alabama engineer Calvin Parker designed "Jeanie's Teenie," the craft powered by a Volkswagen engine and advertised in Popular Mechanics. Parker maintained the plane was one "that a rank beginner can build."

"I talked with a lot of experienced aircraft builders and got a lot of ideas," Robinson said, "enough to understand that it could really be done."

The $600 plane Parker introduced in 1968 now costs approximately $1,000 to build. With some sheets of aluminum, the proper instruments and controls, a Volkswagen engine and a pair of go-cart wheels, Robinson soon will be ready for take off.

He works on the plane in his spare time and much of the job is completed. All the work is done by hand with simple tools. Following the directions of a 24-page booklet, Robinson has used 10 aluminum sheets, formed them around 2x4-in. boards and bolted them together to make the body of the plane.

Most of the aluminum is .02 inches thick, just .01 inches thicker than the minimum strength required for a safe aircraft, according to the designer's calculations.

Though the metal is easily bent when in sheets, it becomes firm once it is shaped, Robinson said. The entire plane still will weigh only 300 pounds. The craft will be 12 feet 10 inches long with an 18-foot wingspan.

The plane seats one person, who directs the flight with a one-lever control bar and a foot pedal. "It's called flying by the seat of your pants," Robinson said.

The only instruments will be those required by the FAA: an air speed indicator, an altimeter, a compass, an oil-temperature gauge, an oil-pressure gauge, a tachometer and a carburetor heat indicator.

Brakes are not required on Robinson's craft, since the plane will stop at its 40 mile per hour stalling speed. The plane cruises at 85 m.p.h. but can reach a maximum of 130 m.p.h.

Though Robinson claims flying the craft will be "safer than being on the highway," he has yet to receive a pilot's license and is unsure how he will feel when he and the plane are ready to go up for the first time.

"A lot of little things can go wrong that nobody would dream of. But I know every bolt that's in there. I'll have to wait till it's ready to go before I'll know if I want to go up in it first."

Robinson added that "I think I've enjoyed building it more than I'll enjoy flying in it." The project fascinates the children in his neighborhood; in Robinson's words, "Did you ever build a model airplane as a kid? I'm building a bigger one."

H.E. Crocker of Pampa is building one bigger still. Unlike Robinson, Crocker is both a construction worker and an experienced pilot.

He said that in his more than 30 years of flying experience, he has owned three factory-constructed airplanes; but his current project is his first attempt at home-construction.

The plane he began in 1970 is now "about 95 per cent complete," Crocker said. He, too, works on the craft in his spare time.

Clifford Jones of Pampa owns the shop Crocker works in, and has assisted in the construction. Jones has built three planes of his own, one of which was his own design.

Crocker is building a Whitman Tailwind, a plane similar to Charles Lindbergh's Spirit of St. Louis. It's designer, Steve Whitman, was a race pilot in the 1930s.

The red and white metal plane is 19 1/2 feet long with a wingspan of 22 feet nine inches. The plane seats two and can carry 60 pounds of cargo, he said.

Crocker ordered the materials from a variety of suppliers in California, Illinois and Missouri.

In plane construction, he said, he is a jack-of-all-trades. The entire assembly and instrumentation is done in the workshop. "Building a plane may not be a big job," he added, "but it's about 10 or 15 thousand small ones."

The Tailwind can travel 700 miles on its 72-gallon fuel capacity, and can attain a top speed of 200 m.p.h.

"There are several — I guess about 200 — different types of airplane designs," Crocker said. He chose the Tailwind because "it's faster. I've been in these Tailwinds and they really go. And it's a tried and proven design."

Crocker has invested about $7,000 in the airplane so far, and hopes to fly it by the end of the summer.

But the plane must pass a final inspection by the FAA first. The administration inspects all homebuilt aircraft at various stages of construction before giving the plane flight approval.

"You have to have it inspected because you can cover something up that you won't be able to see, or won't be able to correct," Crocker explained. Both his and Robinson's planes have undergone and passed preliminary inspections.

Burk of the FAA office in Lubbock said that home builders must construct 51 per cent of the craft themselves rather than buying and using large portions of factory-assembled pieces.

The FAA inspectors are confined to determining if the workmanship is of a "fine quality," Burk said. "We do not profess to tell them if this is a good design. That's up to them."

The inspectors look at the construction and "we make a value judgement," Burk said. "We're not the least bit bashful to say that it's no good. And it's kind of hard to tell a man who's spent $500 in materials to put it in the junk pile. It causes some hard feelings."

Burk added, however, that most home workmanship is "excellent. Most of the homebuilders are conscientious people. They don't take it lightly."

Because home-built aircraft is safety inspected, Burk continued, "there's no indication that they're any less safe than any other aircraft. It's safe, very definitely. Rest assured that we at FAA monitor each one."

He explained that each plane must fly in a test area for its first 50 to 75 hours of flight before earning the FAA approval.

The FAA encourages home construction of airplanes, Burk concluded. "There are lots of good aircraft designers out there. We like to encourage creative design and introduction of new concepts."

Community profile: S.M. Chittenden

...from farm to city secretary's office

By THOM MARSHALL
Pampa News Staff

When the buzz from the phone gives notice a call awaits his attention he quickly lifts the receiver and puts it to his ear. It is a single, smooth, efficient maneuver.

"Chittenden here."
His friends call him "Chick." The nameplate on the expansive oak desk in the city secretary's office reads "S.M. Chittenden." His biographical sketch in "Who's Who in the South and Southwest" explains that the initials stand for Stanley Matthew.

There is more, of course, to Pampa's city secretary and finance director than one can read in the "Who's Who" book, but the no-nonsense style used there seems to fit the subject.

"Chittenden, Stanley Matthew, city official; born Hays City, Kan., July 24, 1922; son of Stanley Stewart and Myrtle Heien ...; B.S., Fort Hays Kansas State College, 1948; student Washburn Law School, 1950-51; married Louise Stillwell, Nov. 30, 1947; children — John Stanley, Jill Lynn, Kimberly Kay ..."

Kim, the youngest will be a senior at Pampa High next year. This summer she is dancing in the outdoor drama at Palo Duro Canyon, "Texas."

"So that involves me," Chittenden said. "Anytime my kids are in something ..."

Early in the interview with this reporter, he said, "I'm not used to this, I'd rather you write about my family."

He is a family man with fond memories of his boyhood and his own mother and father and the family farm in Kansas.

"When I was growing up we raised purebred Herefords and had Ayrshire dairy cows. We built our own dairy building and dad made the concrete blocks himself," Chittenden said.

He pulled open a drawer and took from it a tablet upon which he sketched the layout of the farm.

During the depression years there, he said there was "one year when we had a bumper crop of wheat that we sold for 10 cents a bushel."

But another memory is of a crop of purebred wheat that sold to the government for $3.95 a bushel. It was hauled directly from the field to the railroad cars.

"I don't know how these farmers can sell it for $2 a bushel and less and make any kind of living on it," Chittenden commented.

Most of his daytime hours are spent in his City Hall office, but he still has the tanned look of a farmer. And he is lean and fit.

"I enjoy physical exercise," he acknowledged, "bicycle riding, walking, ice skating."

As a child he spent many winter afternoons playing hockey on frozen farm ponds. For a time he had two paper routes — a morning bicycle route and one in the afternoon that he was required to carry on foot, blowing a whistle each time he tossed a paper.

Some of his early formed habits still serve him well. He still gets up early enough to walk the three miles from home to work and often does walk it.

Another of his hobbies is woodworking and antique refinishing.

"It's relaxing," he explained. "And something that's old, that a craftsman has made and taken pride. I enjoy reworking and refinishing it and putting it back in use."

An example of his interest is the old, well cared for blonde oak desk in his office. It was refinished several years ago, he said.

Before joining the city government, Chittenden worked for Brown and Root and Celanese.

To add to his qualifications for the city job, he took some courses in municipal management, acquiring the equivalent of a masters degree in municipal administration.

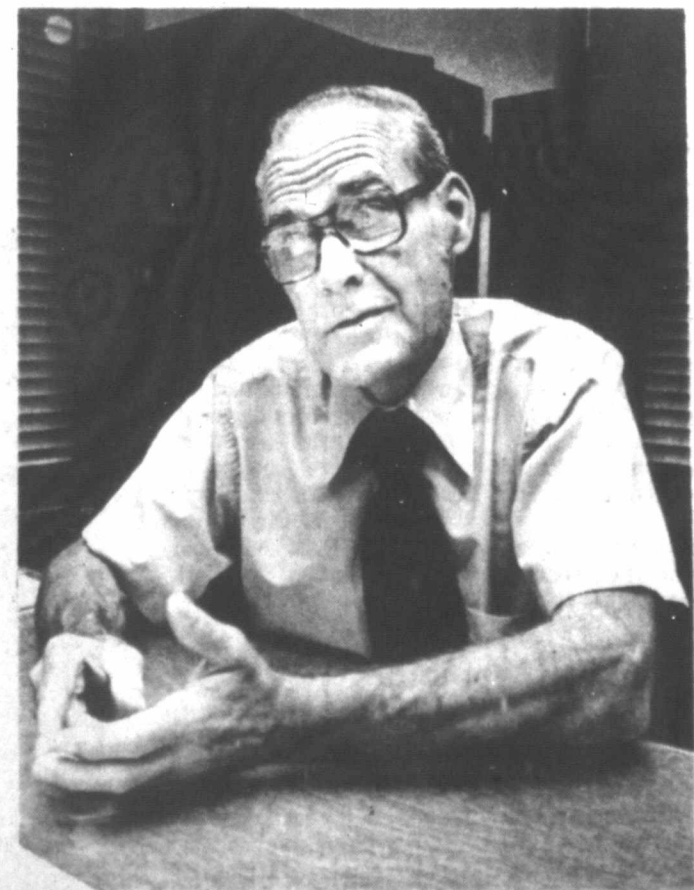

Mark E. Keane, executive director of the International City Management Association, wrote a letter to Chittenden that accompanied his certificate signifying completion of five of the ICMA in-service training courses.

"This is truly an outstanding achievement which is shared by a relatively small number of professional practitioners in the field of municipal management," Keane wrote.

With enthusiasm and efficiency similar to that applied to his work and family life, Chittenden has participated in several community projects.

He served as scoutmaster of Troop 34 and went on many outings including a Philmont trek and a Canadian canoe expedition. He served as a director in the Pampa Shrine and secretary - treasurer and chairman of the barbecue committee for six years. He has assisted for several years in Red Cross Bookkeeping.

Mrs. Chittenden is a bookkeeper at Pampa Junior High School. Son John, 21, graduated from West Texas State University in May and will begin work in the fall semester on a masters degree in Public Administration at North Texas State University in Denton. Daughter Jill, 20, will be a senior at Texas Tech.

Advice

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am having an argument with a friend of mine. He says roosters and hens have teeth. I say they do not. My friend insists that they MUST have teeth, even though they are not visible, or they would not be able to grind up their food to digest it.

Well, I don't know anything about how roosters and hens grind up their food, but I am almost certain they don't have teeth. Who is right?

NEW YORKER

DEAR NEW YORKER: You are, but don't crow about it. Birds and fowl do NOT have teeth. The food they eat is broken down (or ground up) after it reaches their gizzards.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 22-year-old liberated woman who is on the Pill. I've been paying for the pills myself, but I think my boyfriend should share half the cost. Problem is, I don't know him well enough to discuss money with him. Any advice?

SHY

DEAR SHY: Get to know him better. Then you'll be able to discuss anything with him.

DEAR ABBY: Nancy in San Clemente asks you to recommend that people have their pets neutered to keep them from running wild or being killed in the streets. She sounds like a typical neutering nut. I recommend keeping pets home where they belong. It will also prevent unwanted reproduction as well as annoyance to the neighborhood.

Neutering is unnecessary surgery. It is only for the convenience of lazy pet owners who don't care enough for their pets to properly supervise them.

AGAINST MUTILATION

DEAR AGAINST: Properly supervising pets often takes more time than most pet-owners can spare, so in the absence of such supervision, I view neutering as an act of kindness.

DEAR ABBY: Please tell me how a couple can obtain a divorce without having it published in the newspaper. It is imperative that it not be published due to extenuating medical circumstances in my family.

My attorney doesn't seem to know anything about this.

MINNESOTAN

DEAR MINNESOTAN: A competent lawyer would have informed you that there is no law on the books in Minnesota indicating that divorces must be published. If the petitioner (or the defendant) asks that the names be withheld from publication when he (or she) files for divorce, it will be respected.

DEAR ABBY: Someone wrote that she had been approached often by people asking her "who she was mad at" because she never smiled. Then she went on to say that she had trouble smiling when there was nothing to smile about.

You told her that a smile was the universal language of friendliness, and you encouraged her to make a conscious effort to smile more often.

I have just finished sketching a sampler whose message is: "If you see someone without a smile, give them one of yours."

HELEN V.

DEAR HELEN: Beautiful. Thanks for sharing.

Ask Dr. Lamb

By Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I would appreciate it if you would give me some help with my problem. For some time now when ever I get hungry I get real nervous and find myself getting sick if I don't get something to eat right away. The doctor says I have low blood sugar. Is this a serious condition and is it in any way connected to diabetes?

Is there anything special I should eat or not eat? Please help me if you can.

DEAR READER — There are many people who think they have low blood sugar (hypoglycemia) who really do not. It is an over-diagnosed condition and frequently a self-diagnosed illness. Many people who think they have hypoglycemia really have anxiety.

The only way the diagnosis can be properly made is to demonstrate the low blood sugar level at the time typical symptoms occur. Many normal people have low blood sugar readings with no symptoms at all. There are several books sold to the general public — some by well-known names of people who are self-appointed experts who have no professional background at all — that adds to the public confusion.

If you really have symptoms related to low blood sugar you should avoid all concentrated sweets. Avoid the starches and get your carbohydrates from fresh raw fruit and vegetables. Increase the protein and fat in your diet. To give you more information on what to eat and what not to eat I am sending you The Health Letter number 3-9, Low Blood Sugar: Hypoglycemia. Others who want this information can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it.

Real hypoglycemia is a symptom. It can be caused by many different things. It occurs as a complication after some cases of partial removal of the stomach in ulcer patients. This is associated with "dumping" the gastric contents into the small intestine and stimulating a faulty release or over-production of insulin.

A faulty release of insulin, the hormone that lowers blood sugar, may be related to an early stage of diabetes. The faulty release of insulin at the wrong time may be followed by inadequate release of insulin at all and diabetes later on.

Another rare cause of hypoglycemia is a small tumor of the islets of Langerhans, the tissue that produces insulin. When this is the case the hypoglycemia may occur in the fasting state. Many other forms of hypoglycemia occur after eating and are called reaction hypoglycemia, rebound or secondary hypoglycemia. Clearly any meaningful form of treatment must be directed toward finding the real cause and not just treating the symptoms.

Among dietary considerations in people who have reactive hypoglycemia is to avoid sweet liquids, coffee, alcohol and cigarettes. Eating smaller more frequent meals may also help. Fat and protein are emptied more slowly from the normal stomach; that is why they are emphasized instead of carbohydrates.

Nervousness may be associated with a release of adrenaline. The excess adrenaline helps to raise your blood glucose level. But adrenaline may also be released because of anxiety and that is where all the confusion in diagnoses begins.

Hubie Green leads Open by One, after 3 rounds

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Lanky Hubie Green, constantly talking, gesturing, smiling to a heat-wilted gallery, scrambled to a two-over-par 72 that, surprisingly, enabled him to retain a one-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the United States Open Golf Championship.

Green, now only 18 holes away from the major title that so far has eluded him, composed a 54-hole total of 208, two under par on the Southern Hills Country Club course, 6,873 yards of gently rolling hillsides that were scorched by 90-plus degree temperatures and oppressive humidity.

Big Andy Bean, the tour's most noted alligator-wrestler, was the only other man under par after three rounds of this 77th American national championship.

Bean, who, like Green, spent his boyhood summers in weather similar to that which turned this event into an endurance contest, shot a 68 and was one under par at 209.

Green, who needs only a major title to confirm his status as one of the game's leading lights, grew up in Birmingham, Ala., and the 6-foot-4, 210-pound Ocean learned to wrestle alligators in the swampland of southern Georgia.

They were followed by a group at 210—even par—that included Tom Weiskopf, grimly determined South African Gary Player, unawed outsiders Gary Jacobsen and Don Padgett, along with Terry Diehl and Tom Purtzer, one of those previously obscure young men who dominated the tour in the early season.

Player, who needs this one to complete a career double sweep of the game's four major championships—the U.S. and British Opens, the Masters and PGA—finished birdie, birdie for a 71.

Purtzer shot the same score, Diehl, in the last two holes with Green, had a 73. Weiskopf closed up with a 68.

Jacobson, 24, a mini-tour player from Minnetonka, Minn., and Padgett, 28, who couldn't make it on the pro tour and now is a club pro in Carmel, Ind., were the surprises.

"I expected to have a good tournament and put no limits on how well I'd play," said Jacobsen, who shot a 67. "My position is no surprise whatsoever."

Asked his biggest title so far,

he replied: "The Minnesota state junior."

Padgett, son of the national president of the PGA, lost his card after two years of tour activity but unheated a magic putter that produced eight one-putts on the glass-slick greens and propelled him to a four-under-par 66, the best round of the tournament.

Pampa Pizza Hut wins Ruth championship

Pampa Pizza Hut wrapped up the Texas Panhandle Caprock Senior Babe Ruth championship Wednesday with a convincing 17-1 rout of Pampa Keller Trucking.

Keller held a 1-0 lead in the fourth inning of the Optimist Park contest when Hut exploded for 11 runs to win going away.

The victory gave Hut coach Jim Davis managership of the league all-stars who will play the Top O' Texas all-stars in a district championship series, starting July 9th, at an undetermined site.

The winner of that series will advance to the state tournament which will be held in Graham, beginning July 18th.

Geiberger finds encore difficult

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Brent Geiberger, 9, lined up the putter ever so smoothly and stroked an imaginary birdie Saturday in the locker room of the Southern Hills Country Club at the 77th U.S. Open.

"Brent keeps talking about shooting a 59 on nine holes," smiled proud pappy Al Geiberger.

"I think I can do it," replied young Brent.

At a nearby locker, Rod Funseth kidded: "My 9-year-old has already shot 48... but keep working, Brent."

Geiberger reached into his locker and thumbed through the mail.

"I've been getting hundreds of letters wanting a copy of the scorecard," said Geiberger. "Here's an advertising company from Memphis which wants to do a big blowup of the course and see how it went shot-by-shot."

"I guess I just can't get away from it."

Of course, the subject was the Professional Golfers Association record 59 that Geiberger shot June 10th in the second round of the Danny Thomas Memphis Classic—a 13-under-par round.

Only now is it beginning to dawn on the low-key Geiberger just what his incredible score is meaning and may be worth.

"I just wasn't aware that there was that much interest," said Geiberger as he put on his shoes for the third round of the Open. "My wife has been bombarded with telephone calls. People come up to me and want me to give them autographs, saying 'Geiberger 59'."

"Do you know how hard it is to write 59? I've written 69 three times by mistake."

Geiberger said "It's a little early to be thinking about this endorsement-wise."

TEXAS TALK
By Doug Howard

American cattlemen's super efficiency is dramatically illustrated by some of the information released on food production and livestock numbers in the developing countries. About 60 percent of all cattle are in the developing countries... about 8 percent in the United States. Our 8 percent produces as much human food as their 60 percent. In terms of food production that makes the American cattlemen 750 percent more efficient. That's a good thing for all of us. Red meat consumption in the United States last year was over 145 pounds per person. Although beef consumption in other parts of the world is on the increase this year, last available figures showed their meat consumption to be substantially less than ours. In Russia it was just over 46 pounds per person... less than 62 in Western Europe and only about 13 pounds per person in Japan.

Kenyans to train

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Kenya's athletes, recalled from Canada on the eve of last summer's Montreal Olympic Games as a protest against New Zealand's participation, were told Saturday to go ahead with preparation for next year's Commonwealth Games in Canada.

Vice President Daniel Moi issued the statement after returning from London, where he led Kenya's 21-member delegation to the Commonwealth conference.

New Zealand's sporting links with segregationist South Africa caused the row at the Montreal Olympics and a threatened African boycott of the Commonwealth Games at Edmonton, Alta., was discussed at the London meeting.

New Ranger Ellis still a 'bleep'

ARLINGTON, Tex. (AP) — Don't expect Dock Ellis to mellow now that he's with the Texas Rangers. The 32-year-old righthander says "once you become a (bleep), you just don't get over it."

The Rangers bought Ellis from the Oakland A's minutes before the Wednesday night trading deadline. Ranger owner Brad Corbett says he shelled out $250,000 for Ellis' contract despite a 2-4 performance and an earned run average of 6.31 so far this year.

"My rap is going to stay with me," Ellis said while watching the Rangers split a doubleheader with Seattle Friday night. "because I was a (bleep) when I was young. I never thought anything bad about anything that I have done... It just sticks with you."

The man who once wore hair curlers on the field with the Pittsburgh Pirates and got fined for it had nothing but a lot more bleeps to say about his association with Charley Finley's A's.

But, while he's not been seen lighting any of Corbett's cigars, Ellis gives every indication he's willing to call Arlington home.

"Man, these people are contenders and I like that," he said. "And I would have to like it better than Oakland because I am getting paid

A fairway to get clipped

Herman Adams looks like he could be on any farm in the Panhandle, but actually he's cutting the Pampa Country Club's rough to the prescribed four to six inches.

"I've had to mow eight hours a day since those rains came last month," Adams said. (Pampa News photo by Ron Ennis)

PCC's Warren forsees course economic squeeze

By TOM KENSLE
Pampa News Sports Editor

Ever wonder why the price of your club membership or municipal greens fee is always going up?

According to Pampa Country Club Pro Hart Warren, the reason is a simple matter of course maintenance economics.

"To give you just two examples," Warren said, "a greens mower that cost $3000 three years ago now will run you $5000, and fertilizer that had cost $80 per ton is now $200."

He said the total budget for maintenance is $90,000 this year, but that it was $40,000 five years ago, and only $28,000 10 years ago.

"I hope I'm wrong, but the way inflation is going, I don't think 10 years from now there will be as many courses as you see today."

Warren said an automatic sprinkler system alone costs about $500,000.

"The rise in course maintenance has already brought new course construction to a standstill around the country," he said.

Private courses are the first to go, Warren said.

"We get hurt the quickest because we don't get any tax money, and are subsidized wholly by membership dues."

Monthly dues for the Pampa Country Club have risen $10 in the past five years, but things are worse elsewhere, Warren mentioned that the Dallas Athletic Club has been forced to raise its fee from $35 to $60 per month in recent years, and the Dallas Country Club rates are $30 more than charged at the PCC.

Pampa Country Club employs three full-time maintenance men and adds three men for the summer. The men work on daily routines which are altered periodically by the pro for "emergencies."

Warren said emergencies usually entail cleaning up storm-swept debris. "The worst damage from the weather," he said, "is broken branches and roughed up greens from hail storms."

But he said the major damage on the course comes as a result of inconsiderate golfers. The workers spend much of their eight-hour day replacing divots on the tee area, and fixing ball marks on the greens.

"If golfers would take the time to fix their marks, it would give us more time to work on other parts of the course," he said.

Other maintenance duties are cutting the greens, fairways, tee areas, and roughs, aerating the greens, and softening the sand traps.

"In this part of the country, sand traps are a headache. Because of the wind, we have to use a very coarse sand which tends to hold water from irrigation, and it needs to be loosened every day."

Special care must be given to the greens, which consist of seaside bent grass cut to one quarter of an inch. Warren said that particular grass is susceptible to various diseases and must be sprayed with a fungicide every month. Also, the greens are aerated twice per year to keep them soft.

"Greens will become as hard as a table top if not cared for properly, even if they are continually watered," he said.

Golf carts are tough on a course, especially when they are driven off the designated cart paths.

"In England," Warren said, "there are no sit-down carts, only pull dollies. But in America, golf carts are here to stay."

"People are getting lazier and lazier, and until doctors tell them they must walk, they'll continue to ride those carts."

As he has been doing since becoming the Pampa Country Club Pro, Warren is pulling double duty by overseeing the maintenance operations as well as the administrative functions.

"If I can find a qualified man to be the course superintendent, I'll get out from under this."

But one gets the feeling that Warren takes pride in the condition of the fairways, and smoothness of the greens.

"I try to keep the golf course in the same shape for daily membership play, as I do for tournament play," he beamed.

Seaver shines as Red

MONTREAL (AP) — From the subway straphangers to New York City's upper social strata, he was simply "Seavuh." And for 10 years their roars of reverence filled Shea Stadium.

"That's what I'm going to miss. The people. Getting out in front of them. They'd stand up and rock you out of the city."

Tom Seaver's odyssey with the New York Mets is over after 189 victories, 2,406 strikeouts, five one-hitters, four 20-victory seasons and three Cy Young awards as the National League's premier pitcher.

Gotham is in an uproar after having one of its last true heroes shuffled off to an enemy camp.

That kid pitcher with the choirboy looks who won 18 games as a rookie is 32 now—and wearing the dreaded red-and-white colors of the Cincinnati Reds.

"It's even hard for me to believe. I don't think I'll ever get used to red," said Seaver, whose unhappiness with the top level of Mets' management led to his bitter departure.

He found himself locked in a conflict with Mets' board chairman M. Donald Grant. Disenchantment over issues ranged from contract disputes to methods of building a winner bubbled into open hostility.

For a moment it appeared the highly-publicized feud was almost smoothed over. Then Seaver bristled over what he termed "absurd statements" in the press and backed out.

Hours later he was traded to the Cincinnati Reds in a four-for-one package.

"The reason I called them back was I could just see the whole thing carrying on. It was senseless. I was not enjoying life. I had kept things inside for a year," said the man who turned around the Mets' once-hapless franchise.

Ironically, Seaver recalls telling a Mets' coach Rube Walker two years ago: "The best thing this club could do is trade me. You could see what was happening then. They were going for the status quo, standing pat."

Money was not a main matter, he said. "What I wanted them to do more than anything else was make the club competitive. Money was secondary, because if we were going to be competitive and help the ballclub, money would fall into place."

"One thing that really galled me was it was as though I still had to prove myself each year. They made the old argument that if we pay you this much, you'd get complacent."

The Reds did not renegotiate his $225,000-a-year contract, but they did drop "the negatives" aspects of it. For instance, if I don't win X number of games I won't be docked for it."

Holing out a green

Aerating the greens at the Pampa Country Club is one of the many duties performed by W.C. Smithee. "This job isn't too bad, but I really hate to dig up the water

Jackson revolts, Yanks defeated

BOSTON (AP) — Carl Yastrzemski and Bernie Carbo drilled two home runs each and George Scott hit his 17th Saturday to power the Boston Red Sox to a 10-4 victory over the Yankees as Manager Billy Martin and slugger Reggie Jackson engaged in a near-brawl in the New York dugout.

Yastrzemski drove in five runs with his 11th and 12th homers. The Red Sox, stretching their American League East lead to 1 1/2 games over the Yankees, spotted New York a 2-0 first-inning lead, then went ahead to stay on Yastrzemski's three-run homer.

Martin and Jackson exchanged words with Boston at bat in the sixth inning. They then had to be restrained by teammates in full view of thousands of fans and a national television audience.

With one out in the sixth, Fred Lynn singled and Jim Rice doubled.

Martin then brought in Sparky Lyle to replace starter Mike Torrez. At the same time, Martin, apparently believing that Jackson did not go all out on Rice's pop double, also sent Paul Blair to right field to replace the Yankees' high-salaried slugger. Jackson jogged from the field as partisan fans cheered.

Jackson went to Martin immediately and the shouting began.

Boston starter Reggie Cleveland, 6-3, collected the victory with relief help from Bill Campbell, who earned his 14th save by blanking the Yankees for 3 2/3 innings. Torrez, 7-6, took the loss.

Border patrol agents called US soldiers

By MILLER BONNER
Associated Press Writer
BROWNSVILLE, Tex. (AP) — The front-line soldiers in President Carter's war against human rights violators are U.S. Border Patrol agents, said Leonel Castillo, the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) commissioner.

"Our government has spoken out very strongly to the world for our respect and concern for human rights and the dignity of the individual," Castillo, the highest ranking Mexican-American in the Carter Administration told 46 graduates of the U.S. Border Patrol Academy. "In wearing a uniform of the United States government you must be especially careful to reflect that attitude."

"For if our government doesn't demonstrate concern through its actions, then our words are shallow indeed," Castillo continued. "Possibly no other governmental agency has a greater opportunity to demonstrate to the world our concern for human rights that those of us in the immigration service."

Castillo addressed the last graduation class for the Border Patrol Academy in nearby Los Fresnos. The current Border Patrol Academy class is already underway in Glymo, Ga.

"The decision to move the academy was made about two years ago," Castillo said Thursday in this border city after his 18-minute speech. "The decision was made to locate all the federal law enforcement agencies at one place. It does make it a little tough for us to agents in our on-the-border training."

The 38-year-old former comptroller for the city of Houston said during his speech he expected the President and Congress to supply the INS with additional personnel and equipment needed to handle the more than 800,000 arrests made annually by Border Patrol agents.

"I am confident based upon conversations with the President and Attorney General that we will receive the additional resources we need to do a better job," he said.

The INS will need "about $19 million" in additional funding to beef-up the Border Patrol, Castillo said.

"How do we welcome the people who have come legally and properly into our society and how do we deal with those who have come illegally and improperly," he stated. "How do we maintain a friendly, working relationship with those who want to have a close relationship with their loved ones in this country?"

The bald eagle, the national bird of the United States, is not bald at all. It is so called because of its white head feathers.

Names in the news

NEW YORK (AP) — Edel B. Ford II, 28-year-old grandson of the founder of Ford Motor Co., marked the firm's 75th anniversary by leading a nostalgic motorcade of shiny vintage autos down lower Broadway.

Mayor Abraham Beame accompanied Ford on the noon-hour cavalcade Thursday in a 1911 Model T Ford touring car.

As auto buffs watched the dozen gleaming ancient autos, spectators lining the six-block route from City Hall to Liberty Street cheered a 1916 double-decker Fifth Avenue bus laden with passengers.

After the motorcade reached Liberty Street, Beame, Ford and other officials attended a luncheon at the New York Chamber of Commerce.

The performance says he doesn't know when she is getting here or where she is staying.

Pat Twoley, manager of the annual Summer Pops concert, said Thursday that Miss Bryant's arrival and her hotel are not being disclosed "for security reasons."

Church groups backing the Florida singer's stand on homosexuality plan a rally outside the hall where she is to perform Friday night, while homosexuals say they will demonstrate before her Saturday show.

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The widow of Arizona Republic investigative reporter Don Bolles, whose death from a car bombing triggered a lengthy investigation by reporters, will marry a Phoenix insurance executive.

Court records revealed that Rosalie Bolles, 37, and Donald Alexander, 41, took out a marriage license June 9. Alexander confirmed that he and Mrs. Bolles will be married Saturday in Phoenix, but declined to give further details.

Bolles, 47, was fatally wounded June 2, 1976, when a bomb triggered by remote control exploded beneath his car at a midtown hotel. He had been lured to the hotel by a promise of information on land fraud involving prominent Arizona politicians. Bolles died June 13.

John Harvey Adamson, 33, a dog breeder and handyman, later admitted placing the bomb was sentenced to 20 years in prison in exchange for testimony against two alleged confederates, both of whom are to be tried on first degree murder charges next month.

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Ugandan President Idi Amin claims that 19 Britons carried him on their shoulders for 1 1/2 miles on his way to a meeting in the capital of Kampala.

The original plan was for the bearers to carry him for 25 miles, according to a speech by Amin carried by official Radio Uganda. There was no confirmation of the report.

A military spokesman quoted earlier by Radio Uganda said the Britons would carry the burly dictator to demonstrate solidarity with the people of Uganda.

LINCOLN PORTRAIT WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Portrait Gallery of the Smithsonian Institution recently acquired a portrait of Abraham Lincoln painted by Massachusetts-born artist William Willard.

The portrait shows Lincoln in profile and was done, in part, from the Mathew Brady portrait used for the Lincoln head on the $5 federal reserve note. The portrait, painted circa 1864, was placed on display on Lincoln's birthday. It is the gift of Mr. and Mrs. David A. Morse of Washington.

Carter's energy battle evolves into war

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional leaders never said getting President Carter's energy program through Congress would be easy. Judging from recent votes, it hasn't been.

Two months after the President urged Congress to join him in waging what he termed the "moral equivalent of war" against the energy crisis, many of the key components of his plan have suffered setbacks at the hands of congressional committees.

However, there also have been some offsetting victories for the plan, such as the House Ways and Means Committee's decision last week to back the President's proposed tax on oil at the wellhead.

Administration officials and Democratic leaders of Congress claim many of the defeats may only be temporary.

Here is a rundown on what has happened to the major parts of that plan and their prospects:

STANDBY GASOLINE TAX. The House Ways and Means Committee's vote rejecting the tax, which could add up to 50 cents-per-gallon to gas prices in yearly nickel increments if gasoline consumption continued to rise rapidly, will likely stand.

Although Rep. Thomas Ashley, D-Ohio, chairman of a special House committee overseeing the energy legislation, vowed to try to revive the tax on the House floor, many congressional leaders claim the committee vote effectively killed the proposal. And it is unlikely that the Senate will even seriously consider the tax, the most controversial item of the energy package.

WELLHEAD OIL TAX. Handing the administration its first major victory, the Ways and Means Committee voted 21 to 18 to approve the President's proposal for a tax on domestic oil production that would bring the price of oil up to world-market levels over a three-year period.

This proposal would add between seven and eight cents a gallon to the price of gasoline.

Administration officials and congressional allies viewed the vote as an indication that the energy plan is gaining steam, despite earlier defeats.

However, it seemed too early to tell what the ultimate fate of the proposed wellhead tax would be. Both sides are predicting a close fight.

GAS-GUZZLER TAX AND SMALL-CAR REBATES. The rebate plan, widely criticized in both House and Senate as a potential subsidy to manufacturers of small, fuel-efficient imported cars, also was rejected by the Ways and Means panel. There appears to be no major effort to revive it.

That same House committee, where most of the early action on the energy plan has centered, also voted to put off any penalty tax on gas guzzlers until 1979 and to apply it only to cars getting less than 15 miles per gallon.

Carter wanted the tax to begin with 1978 models and to include a greater number of fuel-inefficient cars. House and Senate leaders say chances seem good that Congress will approve some form of gas-guzzler tax.

NATURAL GAS PRICING. A House Commerce subcommittee substituted a proposal to deregulate the price of newly drilled natural gas for the administration plan. Administration lobbyists hope the full Commerce Committee will reverse this vote. But support for deregulation exists in both the House and Senate.

Under the administration plan, natural gas prices in the interstate market would be allowed to rise by about 20 percent while remaining under federal control. These controls would be extended to the now-unregulated markets within gas-producing states.

Fierce floor fights are expected over this one.

HOME INSULATION. On a close vote, the Ways and Means Committee approved the President's plan to give tax breaks for home insulation, solar energy and other energy conservation measures. This part of the energy plan is expected to be enacted.

But rival committees have disagreed over whether the insulation program should be mandatory. A Commerce subcommittee voted to bar financing of home mortgages by federally insured lending institutions unless the homes to be sold were properly insulated. However, a Banking subcommittee on housing backed the President's voluntary approach. The dispute will be resolved on the House floor, with the voluntary program seemingly having the upper hand.

COAL CONVERSION. The President asked Congress to ban new power plants from using oil or natural gas under their burners and to encourage conversion to coal by imposing a tax on existing utilities and industries that still use these fuels.

House and Senate committees are considering this program. The Senate Energy Committee soon will approve a program similar to what Carter recommended, predicts its chairman, Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash.

In a related issue, backers of the coal-conversion plan see a victory in the Senate vote to impose tough new auto-exhaust beginning in 1980. They claim this would allow more conversions to coal than the House-passed bill, which gives the auto industry two additional years to meet less stringent pollution standards.

The more that auto pollution is cleaned up, the more coal that can be burned, backers of the administration plan maintain.

NUCLEAR. Although Congress seems ready to go along with the President's call for expanded use of conventional reactors, his recommendation to cancel the plutonium breeder reactor project at Clinch River, Tenn., has been rejected by a House committee. Sources say they expect Congress to vote to continue work on the project.

Carter urged phasing down nuclear systems using plutonium, claiming the material could be diverted too easily to use in atomic weapons.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY. Both the House and Senate passed Carter's proposal for a new cabinet-level energy department to carry out a national energy policy.

price of oil up to world-market levels over a three-year period.

This proposal would add between seven and eight cents a gallon to the price of gasoline.

Administration officials and congressional allies viewed the vote as an indication that the energy plan is gaining steam, despite earlier defeats.

However, it seemed too early to tell what the ultimate fate of the proposed wellhead tax would be. Both sides are predicting a close fight.

GAS-GUZZLER TAX AND SMALL-CAR REBATES. The rebate plan, widely criticized in both House and Senate as a potential subsidy to manufacturers of small, fuel-efficient imported cars, also was rejected by the Ways and Means panel. There appears to be no major effort to revive it.
