SERIAL STORY

BRIDE ON A BUDGET

BY JANET DORAN

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday Bart and Iris quarrel, but Iris has her dinner just as usual. She has her money, she has her job, she has her friends...

CHAPTER XI

THOUGH it was Monday, and she had recklessly splurged $12 on a dinner party for her friends Saturday night, and Bart had worked at the shop all day Sunday, and Sunday night until long after she slept, Iris left the office with a clear plan in her busy mind...

Now, at four-thirty, she bought a steak, bought everything for a good feed. The way she used to do before they were married. When she was trying every wife she knew to enchant Bart and make him propose to her.

At six-fifteen, Bart came in, tired, dispirited and silent. Iris flung him a radiant smile and started the steak. She took the potatoes out and popped cubes of butter into each yawning seam...

Still he didn't notice. Still he just came in, pulled his chair out and sat down and began scooping his potato out onto his plate. Iris passed him the platter of steak and he helped himself to it. By the time they reached the short-cake, Iris was ready to scream.

"Bart, what is it?" she asked shakily.

DULLY, he looked at her. Wearily, as if trying to brush away a burden he could not bear, he plowed tense fingers through the thick wavy brown hair. Then lighting a cigarette, he started splitting the match a dozen ways with nervous thumbnail.

"What's it to you, Iris?" he asked bluntly. "Bart, you know anything that concerns you, concerns me, too!"

"Don't worry, I'll manage to support you in the manner you're determined to expect, Iris."

"Bart—please!"

"All right, you asked for it. The bank wouldn't give me any more time on my notes, so they took over my insurance as forfeit."

"Bart—why how could they? If you paid the interest and met the payments..."

"I didn't pay the interest, Iris. I couldn't. And I couldn't borrow any money anywhere. Not even from loan sharks. So they took my policies..."

"They'd no right to take all that insurance away from you, Bart! Can't you make them just take out the amount due, and give you back the rest?"

"Iris, you know nothing about business or finance, so quit bothering with this..."

"Quit bothering, Bart Whittaker! The idea. When that was to be our own home, when the policies were paid up..."

He glanced at her curiously. Shrugged finally, as if he gave up. "It's a little late to think of that now, Iris. They're gone."

"That night, Iris woke up toward morning, and a cold fall rain was blowing in. She got up and closed the window, and turned, arrested, when Bart began muttering in his sleep."

"I tell you it's impossible—I'm sorry, I can't help it. I can't do it, I tell you, I can't—don't you understand? My wife's salary has nothing to do with this, this is my affair. Seventy-five a week together and we owe everybody. All right, so what? Do you want all my creditors to be cheated of their money?"

Shivering, she lay still listening, but there was no more. Though he tossed and turned a lot and groaned, shivering, she wondered if she oughtn't take the mink coat back after all. Before it was ever worn. But it was so cold in the morning, a sharp wind, and the driving rain. And remembering her heavy coat was worn, she put the anxiety out of her mind. Bart was always borrowing trouble. This was probably just another false alarm because he hadn't made $50 clear profit this week, or something like that.

They breakfasted hastily, and Bart hurried away as soon as he was finished. At noon, when she telephoned, Iris was informed he was out. And Ellen was lunching with her husband, and neither offered to invite her to join them.

So she ate a solitary lunch at the soda bar around the corner. And finishing, heard the news about her husband losing his radio and washing machine agency.

"Sure, didn't you know? Truck's over there now, taking the stuff. I heard he couldn't make a lot of dead-beats pay their weekly installments, so the company took them over. But this will be a bad omen to the shop all right. Hurts her.

At 7, when Iris awoke again, he was delirious and did not know her. Frantically, she called a doctor.

a business when any thing like that hits them."

IRIS didn't answer. She walked out and went back to the office. Past Professor Kitteridge's little bungalow where the young men and girls of the senior and junior classes gathered to discuss serious things, nightly from 4:30 to 10. Past the Gamma sorority where girls often dashed out in mid-winter to set a pan of chocolate peanut butter fudge to cool in the snow; where gay lighted music blared forth during prom week-ends. Where smart roadsters swooped up to tootle musical horns for the fortunate few who were dated.

Iris felt almost old, hurrying past them. Nodding to one or two she knew. Knowing they thought of her as "Mrs. Whittaker, of the dean's office." Because she'd been there so long. Longer than any of the present crop had been in college. Two college terms longer. Eight years.

That night, Bart was home ahead of her. Lying on his bed, covered with a satin puff. Ill with a severe cold. Tired, and ill, and silent. Iris tried to make him take some medicine, some aspirin, or a gargle, or something but he refused. He was all right; leave him alone. She tried to make him have a doctor.

"I don't want a doctor, and I couldn't pay one if I had him. Now get out and leave me alone, will you?"

In the kitchen, feeling rather abused and neglected, she scrambled two eggs and made coffee. There was some short-cake left, and some salad. Eating her solitary supper, Iris decided budgets weren't much fun. Not mixed with marriage they weren't. Because the budgets were to blame for all this.

In the middle of the night, she heard Bart prowling around. And speaking to him sharply, was alarmed to discover he was walking in his sleep. His voice sounded queer and thick, and a Life shrill, but he got back into bed again directly when she spoke to him. And right after that he had a chill. Shaking so her own bed three feet away trembled, Iris was alarmed and got up.

She got her heavy winter coat, and her spring coat, and his overcoat and piled them on his bed. She lighted the gas and boiled water and got a hot water bottle. Still he shook so his teeth trembled and he kept sneezing in awful spasms of seven or eight sneezes at a time.

At 7, when Iris awoke again, he was delirious and did not know her. Frantically, she called a doctor.

NYA Employees Back On Jobs For Time

Pampa youths employed on NYA projects resumed work today after a two-weeks layoff, occasioned by an order suspending NYA projects in the Panhandle, pending a new federal appropriation. Current NYA funds have been exhausted.

While the youths returned to their projects this morning, it does not mean that the work is to be continued after July 1, as no information has been received on any new appropriation, according to C. N. Cochran, local NYA superintendent.

Cochran said the resumption order, authorized in a letter he received here Monday from Phil C. Wilson, Amarillo, district NYA supervisor, means that boys who still have time left to work will have nine more days to work the allotted hours for June. The monthly number of hours is 48.

Negroes Leave Town To Observe June 19

It was "travel week" this past week-end for Negroes of Pampa. From noon Friday up to 3 o'clock Monday afternoon, local Negroes went in large groups to Amarillo where ball games and a barbecue featured the seventy-sixth anniversary of the presidential decree freeing their forefathers from slavery.

Locally, no celebration was held, the only observance here being an address last night at the Church of God in Christ.

In Hutchinson county, Negroes of Berger, Phillips, and Stinnett were invited to a big barbecue at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon at "Curly" Tasy's place on Eleventh street in Berger.

Services commemorating the day were held last night by the Negroes at Holman's church in Berger with Rev. Russell, pastor, conducting the ceremony.

President Abraham Lincoln issued his emancipation proclamation Jan. 1, 1863. The order freed all Negro slaves in the Confederate states fighting the Union. The proclamation was confirmed by the Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution, emancipating all Negroes held in slavery in the United States.

Carloadings Increase

The Santa Fe System carloadings for the week ending June 17, 1939 were 22,925, as compared with 21,894 for the same week in 1938. Received from connections were 4,814 as compared with 4,577 for the same week in 1938. The total cars moved were 27,739 as compared with 26,471 for the same week in 1938. The Santa Fe handled a total of 26,168 cars during the preceding week this year.
