-Every law enforcement body has complaints about "brutality," some as small as "the handcuffs are too tight." Criminal brutality to police, however, far, outweighs police brutality to criminals.

-All sheriffs and police chiefs, if for no other reason than the FBI is always looking over their shoulders, investigate complaints.

-Few brutality complaints hold enough water to get before a grand jury. Grand juries on their own periodically look into brutality charges. A grand jury in Jefferson county reported this week that it had investigated brutality reports and found nothing.

-Police chiefs and sheriffs say they will not tolerate a policeman or deputy who brutalizes prisoners for the sheer joy of it. Occasinally such a man will get a law enforcement job and work a few months before he is found

-Most police chiefs and sheriffs in Texas do not want a legislative investigation. They feel they and grand juries can take care of the problem.

Demand Investigation

Two state representatives-Don Brown of Hitchcock and Don Gladden of Fort Worth telegraphed Byron Tunnell, speaker of the House, on Sept. 30 and demanded a general investigating committee report of police brutality in Texas.

Brown charged that. . . "Texas Rangers and Texas city police officers failed to expedite the bringing of prisoners ! efore a magistrate because they took them out and abused them first," He cited the shooting of Henry Nix in Texas City Sept. 28.

Mrs. Lilli Nix accused policemen Joe Stanley and Thomas Mansky of entering her home with out a search warrant last July and beating her. She hired Brown as her lawyer and filed charges. While the grand jury was investigating the matter, Nix was killed with a 22-caliber pistol. Nix had said the grand jury did not believe his testimony.

A justice of the peace ruled that Nix committed suicide.

In Fort Worth Sept. 24, Carswell Smith, 42, a private detective was arrested as a suspect in an interstate theft ring.

A Texas Ranger and two investigators for the district attorney's office quesioned Smith and booked him into jail 22 hours after his arrest. The following day he was Only their concurrent bad luck on the home screen would cause these two firms to even be mentioned in the same sentence, because so far as I know the only thing they have had in common over the years is effective slugging and good defense.

Nevertheless, even the most Impartial television viewer must admit that songbird Joseph Valachi's informing over CBS-TV about his underworld "Cosa Nostra" associates is a better show than the Yankees are offering on NBC-TV in the World Series.

The Yankees were doomed in the first game not when Sandy Koufax of the Los Angeles Dodgers took the mound, but even before - when they had Guy Lombardo and his band play "The Star-Spangled Banner." Lombardo hasn't swung with distinction for years, and his effect on the Yankees was predictable. They stopped, too. The Dodgers get their musical inspiration from Nat (King) Cole and Doris Day.

Likewise, the New York fans are about as exciting as a convention of college economics professors. Anyone who ever frequented the late Ebbets Field in Brooklyn can recall the thrilling anticipation when the National Anthem was delivered by an organ and a lady vocalist who sounded like they were giving the preamble to a free-for-all political ward party.

Yet, the current World Series, which resumes Saturday in Los Angeles, has its benefits. For one thing, it finally gives New York fans a chance to see two major league baseball teams on the field at the same time. For another, the fact that the Yankees have been humbled thus far in two games has meant that Mel Allen, the voice of the team, has been forced to be restrained in his video announcing. His broadcast partner, Vin Scully of the Dodgers, has long since practiced two rules given him by his mentor, Red Barber: Shut up and

The coast-to-coast playing sites have been difficult on viewers. In the New York games, those in the Far West watch the start of the contests at 10 a.m. When the games emanate from Los Angeles, those in the East will watch starting at 4 p.m., which interferes with cocktail hour.

Still, who would miss any of it? The other day, the wonderful newspaper cartoonist, Interlandi put it 'his way with a contented husband sitting before a video set and saying: "I'm no critic, mind you, but the new television season looks promising - the World Series, football, basketball, TV gets better every year."

Needless to say, the Yankees are no more completely washed up than, say, the Cosa Nostra. Nevertheless, television exposure has its effect on public images. The new saying in our neighborhood is: "Break up the Cosa Nos-

the twists and turns of Communist foreign policy there is at present a wonder whether Red China is making some attempt to change her image as the great advocate of war.

The speculation arises from a statement last Sept. 18 by Liu Shao-chi, president of Communist China and Mao Tsetung's chosen successor. Visiting North Korea, he said:

"It is impermissibl for any socialist country to be the first to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances."

The speculation received further impetus on Oct. 1 from a speech delivered by Peking Mayor Peng Chen at a parade marking the 14th anniversary of the founding of the Chinese Communist Republic.

He said world war could be prevented through united effort and "concerted struggle" by the peoples of the world, including those of the 'nited States. .. Cast Different Light

Both statements seemed designed to cast a different light on Chinese foreign policy whichhas held that force is the only means of settling differences with the Western world and that in the event of nuclear war it would be the Communists who would inherit the earth.

Since previous attempts over the last 20 years to forecast dayto-day turns of Communist policy have been markedly unsuccessful, it would be a mistake now to take statements by even two such high officic's to mean that But as items of temporary expediency they r'ay have some meaning.

This stems from what is known

Official statements, reports in counts of travellers coming out bosses are agriculture and light industry in that order.

Since heavy industry is recognized as the key to any nation's ability to wage all-out war, this would mean that Red China is moving away from the possibility of any immediate threat to world

The recovery was due largely to the methods and efforts of Ludwig Erhard, West Germany's dynamic Minister for Economic Affairs. And now a collection of his speeches and articles - under the title, "The Economics of Success" (D. Van Nostrand Co., 120 Alexander St., Princeton, N. J.; $6.50) - provides a detailed account of his policies and actions.

When the war ended in 1945 in the shattered towns and villages of Germany, people eked out a hopeless existence, without food and without warmth. Erhard, then the Minister of Economics in Bavaria appointed by the US Mili-

Question Box

QUESTION: "Does capital puntishment promote the well-being of mankind on this earth?"

ANSWER: Before that question can be rationally answered, it might be well to interpret what one means by capital punishment. If a man is put to death with the idea of punishing, it isn't beneficial to all mankind. If, however, he is put to death by a group of individuals that voluntarily agree to protect each other's lives, and it is done with the sole purpose of attempting to protect and defend each others' lives, then it would seem that capital defense, or capital protection, is beneficial. Capital punishment is a bad name because it represents the idea that you want to punish someone. Rational men are those who have convictions and can defend them without evasion or without contradicting themselves. Rational valued at five hundred dollars. Debate

People began to debate the fueconomy. Only a small number of far-sighted politicians, scientists and economists pleaded from the very start for a free economic system. Erhard was among them. The Germans had to learn that nothing but hard work could produce the goods needed to achieve personal and national recovery.

It became evident in 1948 that a currency reform must provide real wages for real work. The reform was instituted, and led to boom conditions. If the economy was to be based on the principle of constructive competition, it was going to be necessary to effectively prevent political restrictions of any kind. The Petersburg Agreement of 1949 between the Allied High Commissioners and the Federal Government (of West Germany) eased restrictions on production and brought assurances that dismantling of plants would

Principles

Throughout every crisis of the recovery period, Erhard did what any responsible politician or statesman must be prepared for: To say and do whatever he considers necessary, even though it may be unpopular. Since 1945 he was compelled to devote a considerable part of his time to combatting the socialistic ideas of a planned economy. He stood against extravagance in government spending and less work for higher wages - against anything that would subvert individual responsibility to the power and will of the State. He stood unequivocally for the principles of a free market economy

He proved by example that such principles provided the restoration of private initiative and caused inevitable prosperity and freedom.
