People You Know

By Archer Fullingim
Little red-headed Jerry Archer is as pretty as they come anytime, any place. For some obscure reason she reminds one of Emille of the Dionne quintuplets, or maybe it's Marie. But Jerry is scared of one thing more than anything else and that is a man with whiskers. She thinks they look like a real "booger man."

Yesteryear In The News

TEN YEARS AGO TODAY
Formal application of the Fort Worth and Denver railroad, newly chartered Texas corporation, for a certificate of public convenience and necessity to permit construction of a line from Childress to Pampa, was forwarded to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Stop, Look And Listen!

An official railroad watch inspector in a southern city recently ran an advertisement in a local newspaper. He pointed out the vital importance of the railroads to the farmers and manufacturers of this vast nation. And he said: "Almost one-third of the railroad mileage of the world is in the United States. Have you ever stopped to think what a paralyzing effect it would have on our entire nation if the railroads would cease operation for even 48 hours? It would be well if we would 'stop, look and listen,' considering well what the railroads and their employees mean to our community, their insurance of support to good schools, churches and homes."

Silence Over Spanish Cities

Silence has dropped over the Spanish cities. The new regime, like all fascist dictatorships, will not allow even a modicum of freedom of the press. The dead hand of censorship has stilled the news services and Spain is being reorganized by General Franco in a secrecy that frightens outside liberal peoples.

Sharing The Comforts Of Life ---

By R. C. Hoiles
WHERE IS POSTERITY?
Writing in the Saturday Evening Post, Harry Scherman, the distinguished economist and author of "The Promises Men Live By," says, "There is only one alarming aspect of our national debt, in my opinion—the apathy and ignorance of the American public with regard to it. The common attitude is: If the experts differ as widely as they seem to do, why should an ordinary citizen add the national debt to his other workaday worries, sufficient unto the day are our own debts; if some great national disaster is really involved, poor posterity, not ourselves, will suffer it."

POWER AND CAPITAL, CAUSE OF HIGHER WAGES

Robert Millikan, President of the California Institute of Technology, in an article in "America's Future," under the head of "Our Coming Golden Age," points out very clearly the cause that make higher wages possible. He says: "If, then, you ask me to put into one sentence the cause of that recent rapid and enormous change I should reply it is found in the discovery and utilization of the means by which heat energy can be made to do man's work for him. The key to the whole development is found in the use of power machines, and it is a most significant statistical fact that the standard of living in the various countries of the world follows closely the order in which so-called labor-saving devices have been most widely put into use."

Behind The News Of The Day

BY BRUCE CATTON
Pampa News Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON—It might be worth a good war just to have a chance to try out all the new legislative tricks that are being invented these days. Latest in the field is the proposal of Senator Josh Lee of Oklahoma to conduct a national shakedown for funds to run the war, when it comes. He would make a survey of each person's wealth and then require him to pay out a certain per cent of it to buy Government bonds at low interest.

NOT CONCILIATORY
(Boston Post)
There was high hope when Harry L. Hopkins was appointed Secretary of Commerce that as one of the administration's chief advisers he would make a strong effort to encourage business to greater efforts in recovery.
The reason for this hope was not Mr. Hopkins' record, which is distinctly not that of a business man. The reason was simply that he made a speech in Des Moines, Ia., on Feb. 24, in which he indicated that it was his desire to co-operate with business in solving its problems.

Last week there were five questions about health which you tried to answer. For every one that you answer right you give yourself a credit of 20 points. If you are well-informed you can get 100, but if you get 60 you can consider yourself reasonably well-informed. If your mark is less than 60 you really ought to try to learn more about your body and its care.
Here are five more questions on which to test yourself:
1. The air we breathe is important to health because: (a) it contains oxygen; (b) it is full of iron; (c) it dilates our pores; (d) it cools us off; (e) it kills germs.

STORIES IN STAMPS

JEAN HENRI DUNANT was traveling through the Lombardy town of Solferino in June, 1859, when fighting began between the Austrians on the one side and the French and Italians on the other. Dunant paused, caught by the sheer horror of the battle, stayed to see 20,000 Austrians and nearly as many of the allies go down.
Then it was night and Dunant set to work where the military left off. At Castiglioni, a village in the center of the French position, Dunant persuaded the warring and injured to remain with him to aid the dying and wounded. Literally thousands were cared for, others moved into churches and schools and homes until the little town overflowed with soldiers.

Uncle Sam May Be Nemesis For Boss Of Atlantic City

By PAUL ROSS
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 24.—Had Uncle Sam not stepped in the other day and indicted Enoch L. "Nucky" Johnson on income tax charges, the chances are that Nucky would have gone on being the supreme political autocrat of Atlantic City without let or hindrance until he died. Now he may have come the inevitable cropper—like other bosses before him.

Other bosses have had their hair-shirts and their Nemeses—Boss Tweed a hostile press, Boss Hines a courageous district attorney, Boss Hague the powerful CIO. But in his three-decade reign, Republican Boss Johnson has continued a big, happy-go-lucky, colorful dictator whose absolutism arouses no more than a shrug and a wry smile among his subjects. And no one gets a bigger laugh out of it than Nucky himself.

Johnson was born in 1884 on the truck farm of an early-settler family. His mother, who lived to become a politician also and to hold curbstones forums with younger braves, used to drive the farm wagon herself. His father, Smith Johnson, was sheriff several times. Young Enoch didn't stay in school long, ran around barefoot, put on nifty patent-leather shoes when he turned girl-conscious, began to shuffle the sheriff's office between himself and his father.

Learned Well The Politics Game—He became the protégé of the saloonkeeper-politician boss of Atlantic City, Nucky, learned well. In 1912 there was a revolt against the boss. His toga descended on Nucky where it has remained since. Years later, Johnson repeated this maneuver against the state Republican boss whose lieutenant he had become. From 1923 to 1934, Nucky was allied with Mayor Frank Hague for control of the state.

The only other indictment ever brought against Nucky Johnson came in 1911. It was charged that some books containing the names of real and phantom voters were held by Johnson. He was tried and acquitted.

Since the World War he has been treasurer of Atlantic county at $8,000 per annum. He is also "representative" for a gasoline company. His beer and his gas are widely sold in Atlantic City.

Big Spender And "Waiter"—Johnson lives in a style befitting his overlordship. At one time he occupied an entire floor in a beachfront hotel and a whole floor in a big New York hotel. Close friends simply went and stayed with "the Czar." A Manhattan columnist has called him one of the two real play-boys left. He is known to give $100 tips to night-club actors and $20 to waiters. The grateful waiters' union long ago presented him with a solid gold membership card, No. 508. Johnson himself once told voters, "I've spent about two million dollars in the interests of the Republican party."

Nucky, like any political chieftain, knows how to keep himself in power. Atlantic City residents tell you Johnson "does a lot for charity" for the Boss gives out coal and food baskets. He personally intervenes to save the jobs of roadworkers. He sees that unpaid teachers get some of their back salary, even if it is in scrip.

In a city with large Italian, Jewish and negro groups he makes speeches about "bigotry"—at election time—and in the right neighborhoods. When he faced a critical election in 1936 he came out in favor of pay restorations for the cops and firemen. During elections, his henchmen demanded a "vote of confidence" in Nucky although others are running for office.

Johnson has laughed at efforts to "get" him. His reply to an "investigation" by New Jersey officials was that he enjoyed being a "menace to good government." Once, when some reporters from a New York paper were in town to do an "expose" of him, he good-naturedly said to the boys, "Why don't you guys lay off me? Don't you see you're ruinin' me?"

But this time Nucky is up against tough customers. In 1937 FBI men began looking into Atlantic City. Now Johnson has been indicted, along with three others, on charges of evading income taxes. It may be the beginning of the end for one of the last of the old-time political bosses.

Convicts Mum As Guards Guess At Motive Of Palmer Stabbing

RETRIEVE PRISON FARM, ANGLETON, May 25 (AP)—Four hundred criminals trotted silently to their work today on this steaming swampland prison farm knowing

DRILLER

That among them hid convict Richard A. Palmer's killer. None dared, if he knew, to reveal the name of the man or men who butchered Palmer, a 26-year-old lifer, as he stood in their midst yesterday before they started to jog down the road to the cotton fields.

They stood quietly while Palmer was killed. So deft was Palmer's assassin that prison authorities have not found the knife with which Palmer, twice convicted of murder, was stabbed five times.

Prison officials did not know whether one man or five slashed Palmer with the keen-edged knives convicts make of files and sardetted in their clothing.

They explained fear that has hushed the tongues of the 400 desperadoes ordinarily is not spread by one man. Perhaps, the authorities reasoned, two or more men held Palmer while others jabbed him with the knives.

Even Palmer, often punished during the three years he has been in prison, did not cry out. He limped off alone to the prison hospital and died without uttering a word.

All convicts gave the same answer: None saw the stabbing which took place while the farm captain counted off, army style, the squads of hoemen and sent them down the road to work in the blazing sun.

Grimly guards recalled today the words of James McAllister, who was executed, partially because of the testimony of Palmer in the hitchhiker slaying of Percy Calkins, Houston salesman.

"I've got too many friends, Palmer won't be safe in any prison and he won't live much longer than I do."

There, guards theorized, might lie a motive for the strange prison slaying.

Naval Board Will Probe Sub Sinking

WASHINGTON, May 25 (AP)—A special naval board will defer an inquiry into the sinking of the submarine, Squalus, officials said today, until the craft is raised from the ocean floor off New Hampshire.

The board will try to determine whether the submarine was partially flooded because of mechanical defects or some failure of one or more members of its crew.

Senator Lucas, democrat, Ill., indicated the senate naval committee, of which he is a member, may investigate the disaster if navy reports are unsatisfactory.

Naval technicians explained that two or more of the big air intake valves on the submarine must have been left open during a test dive Tuesday morning. Water poured into some compartments, and the vessel sank.

Moore Talks Hours Against Trade Bill

AUSTIN, May 25 (AP)—It is a hot afternoon, and a perspiring senator, a chunky young man, is standing beside his desk at the rear of the senate chamber, coat sleeves pushed almost to elbows, orating to perspiring colleagues.

He is Senator Weaver Moore of Houston, who some years ago played football with the University of Texas Longhorns and who is bitterly opposed to the fair trade bill, pending in the legislature.

Now, it is considered out of bounds to say flattery anyone is conducting a filibuster in the Texas senate. The senate has a rule against filibustering, therefore no senator, officially or admittedly, ever filibusters to prevent some bill he does not like becoming law.

But as Senator Moore talks, there are heard off-record remarks among senators, and about the press table at the front of the chamber, that his "filibuster" is still going strong.

The senator himself says, from time to time, that he is trying to win other senators to his way of thinking about a certain county road bond bill, the business at hand.

Everyone knows, nevertheless, that the fair trade bill, which independently, merchants favor and chain stores and some consumers organizations oppose, it would forbid selling marked prices—high on the calendar and, if the road bond measure could be gotten out of the way, would be considered in the senate where a majority for it is said to exist.

Moore talks slowly, every expression is carefully rounded out. There are no short cuts in his exposition and argument.

"This bill the bond bill gives with one hand," says he, "and it takes away with another. Or I should say, perhaps, it gives with one hand, and it takes away with both hands."

Everyone knows the issue by heart; but Moore picks up a copy of the bill and reads.

Moore talks slowly, every expression is carefully rounded out. There are no short cuts in his exposition and argument.

Proposed Church Union Explained In Article By Episcopal Rector

EDITOR'S NOTE—Because of the interest created by the recent proposed union of the Episcopal and Presbyterian churches, the Rev. Robert J. Snell, rector of St. Matthews Episcopal church in Pampa, has written the following explanatory article:

By R. J. SNELL
The General Convention of the Protestant Church meeting in October, 1937, and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in May, 1938, adopted the following declaration of purpose:

"The two churches, one in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Word of God, recognizing the Holy Scriptures as the supreme rule of faith, accepting the two Sacraments ordained by Christ, and believing that the visible unity of Christ's Church is the will of God, hereby solemnly declare their purpose to achieve organic union."

This declaration is the result of the work of nine years of Commissions from both churches and looks back to negotiations first entered into fifty years ago at the instigation of the House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church but broken off because no agreement could be reached on the type of ministry that should prevail.

Continuing their work since these general assemblies on the basis of this declaration the commissions of both churches have issued a tentative Concordat which must be submitted to the governing and legislative bodies before it can be approved. This Concordat makes no attempt to set up a united church but provides for the establishment of one church of the Episcopal and Presbyterian in such localities where it is not feasible to have both churches. It primarily concerns itself with the setting up of a ministry for such joint churches and practically ignores the question of lay membership except to state that all baptized members of either church will have full rights and privileges. In setting up such a ministry it clearly states the position of both churches in regard to their ministry. In brief this is: Both believe in ordination by the laying on of hands as initiated by the early church of New Testament times.

The Episcopal church believes in ordination by a Bishop and in threefold ministry of Bishop, Priest and Deacon. The Presbyterian church believes in ordination by the "presbytery" or priest acting in the capacity of a Bishop and in the order of ministers. Under the terms of the Concordat the minister of a joint congregation would be reordained in whichever church he has not been ordained and according to the rite and ceremony of that church. Thus a Presbyterian minister would receive ordination by a Bishop of the Episcopal church and an Episcopal minister ordination by ministers of the Presbyterian church.

This Concordat leaves much to be desired as is to be expected from a first attempt at any basis of interworking of the two churches and does not provide for any final organic unity. It must now undergo the scrutiny of both general assemblies and if it survives in any form, taken back to the committees for further consideration. This will take time as the General Convention of the Episcopal Church meets every three years, the next meeting being scheduled for the fall of 1940.

The most important part of the Concordat is its closing paragraph "All these arrangements are regarded as ad interim, and the two parties to this Concordat hereby agree that conference and negotiations shall continue until organic unity is achieved reports being made regularly to the governing body of the two churches."

Regardless of what happens to this Concordat it has served a great purpose in bringing to the attention of both churches just what their fundamental differences are and given them a basis upon which to conduct further negotiations with a spirit of open-mindedness and a desire to be guided by the Holy Spirit of God.

SERIAL STORY

DATE WITH DANGER

BY HELEN WORDEN

Yesterday, Miss Shirley falls for Duke Martin. Cleverly he invites Clem and Jack to see the town with him.

CHAPTER XIII

FOR the third time since he had begun to dress, Jack Burden lost his collar button.

This was typical of his day. Going to bed at four and getting up at nine didn't make sense, especially if you'd played camel the night before and thought Scotch was water.

Figuratively speaking, collar buttons had been rolling away from him ever since he'd struggled off to church that morning with his father and mother.

The Henry Burdens belonged to a conservative, old New York crowd which achieved simple lives in spite of great wealth. They still lived on Murray Hill and still attended the neighborhood Episcopal church where Jack was an usher.

Mrs. Burden insisted that he go with her each Sunday. It was the one thing she asked of him. This morning she had knocked at his door at nine.

"Be ready at half-past ten, Sonny. Your father is coming with us today."

He dodged the scrutiny of her cool gray eyes by ducking into his bathroom.

"Glad to have come along, boy," his father had said as they climbed into the car. "What time did you get home last night?"

Jack grinned. "Morning, you mean. Four o'clock."

Mrs. Burden said nothing.

"Have you ever been to the Dove, Mother?"

Mr. Burden caught his son's glance and laughed. "Your mother doesn't even know what a night club is, Jack. She probably thinks the Dove is a place where big dancers meet."

The boy's handsome, sensitive face darkened. "Not a bad definition. That guy Martin is a bird connoisseur. He likes them young. He picks on the Janice Frenches."

"It was very sad about that poor child," Mrs. Burden spoke in uneasy tones. "I can't understand why she should want to kill herself. Her mother has served on a great many committees with me. Mrs. French has real executive ability."

"Nerve, I'd call it," Mr. Burden put in. "Let's talk about something more pleasant. What pretty girl did you squire last night, Jack?"

"Clem Shirley."

"Things are rather serious between you two, aren't they?"

"Yes, Dad. If Clem will have me, I'll marry her."

His mother rested her hand on his. "She's a charming girl, dear. I thoroughly approve. But why do you two have to go to those terrible clubs for amusement?"

JACK wondered how he'd got through the day. He'd skipped two sisses when he passed the plate, and he'd been out of step with the other ushers when he marched up to the altar.

At luncheon he'd fallen asleep while a client of his father was discussing the legal point of a case and now he was reduced to chasing collar buttons! He wondered if Clem felt woozy. He'd call and find out. Maybe she didn't want to go to the concert this evening after all. But just as he reached for the receiver, the phone rang.

"Hello, yes this is Jack Burden," he said as a husky voice inquired for him. "Who—Duke Martin?" His tone cooled slightly, then became a little incredulous. "Miss Shirley is at the Dove and wants me to join her there? I don't understand! Oh, you're going to show us the town tonight?"

He paused. "Of course, I'll go any place Miss Shirley wants to, but why doesn't she ask me herself?" There was frank suspicion in his voice now. "All right, I'll hold the phone."—A long silence, then, "Is this you, Clem, darling? What's the big idea? Certainly I'll come if you want me to."

It was already dark when Jack Burden sauntered into the Dove.

"What about a Scotch and soda?" he asked as he joined Clem and the Duke in the tap room. "I want to start this evening right."

Clem gave him a gay smile. "I'll have one with you. I've just been sipping a Vermont."

"Make it three," the Duke called to the bartender. "Then turning to the bartender again, 'Send Pasquale down. We'll order dinner here and have it served in my apartment.'"

"Your apartment?" questioned Clem.

"Yes, I keep one in this joint for the nights I don't feel like going back to the hotel."

"Janice French kept a separate apartment, didn't she?"

Clem's tones were casual. She was plainly making conversation. "I have one, too, but it's in my own house. Daddy gave it to me. Judging from Mary Franklin's story, Janice's father and mother didn't know about hers." She smiled brightly at Martin. "But you're really not concealing anything, are you?"

"How would I be concealing anything if I invited my friends to see it?"

HALF an hour later Clem and Jack were enjoying a special dinner in the quiet of Martin's quarters on the top floor of the Dove.

Jack was surprised to see how Martin lived. When Bill Condon, the valet, had ushered them into the room, he stared with frank amazement at its splendor. Martin, as much as he mistrusted him, appealed to his sense of adventure.

The mysterious owner of the Dove represented something new. It flattered him to be introduced to a retreat of a man with a dark past who might be one of the old buccaners reincarnated.

"Is there any more to this sylvan luxury?" he inquired later, as they all slipped their after-dinner cordials in front of an open fire.

"You mean, have I any more rooms up here?" Martin reached for a cigar. "Yes. There is the game room where I sometimes invite the boys in for poker. My private gym where I come for a work-out after a hangover, and the glassed-in sleeping porch on the back. But I'll show you all that another night." He was looking, however, not at Jack, but at Clem, as he talked. "Now, I guess it's about time to get started."

He glanced at his watch. "Half past ten. Where would you like to go first, Chin Lee's hop joint or May Day's new apartment?" He smiled. "That's in the neighborhood. She's just moved up to Park Avenue."

Clem stared at Jack. "I'd rather go to Chin Lee's. Somehow it doesn't sound quite so bad."

Jack grinned. The drinks and dinner had revived him. "You will go slumming, will you? Better be prepared for anything, even at Lee's. Come on, I'm ready."

It was after eleven when Martin's black car rolled up to the curb at the Bowery and Doyers Street. "We'll walk the rest of the way," he said as he and Jack helped Clem out. Then, turning to Condon, who was acting as chauffeur, "You wait here. If we're not back by twelve, start hunting for us."

Tibbett Carries Around Shotgun That Killed Slayer Of His Father

By GEORGE ROSS
NEW YORK, May 23.—Lawrence Tibbett, the baritone, flew into New York from Hollywood recently. Fellow passengers say that on the trip across the continent he cradled a mean-looking shotgun across his knees.

One of them, a little bolder than the rest asked the singer what the fire-arm was for and jokingly wanted to know whether Tibbett intended to take a few pot-shots at passing birds. So the singer relaxed his hold on the gun and explained.

When Tibbett was a youngster his father was Sheriff of Bakersfield, a small California town. Those were the days of roadside hold-ups and roving outlaws, and the elder Tibbett was in constant danger of his life.

One of the state's most famous bandits then was a bad hombre named Jim McKinney whose name struck terror into the hearts of all who heard it. Sheriff Tibbett swore that some day he would get McKinney and was constantly on the alert for him.

One day Tibbett actually came across the desperado, and getting the drop on him, ordered him out of Bakersfield. The humiliated bandit fled with bullets from Tibbett's six-shooter spraying the dust around him. To revenge his humiliation, McKinney promptly robbed a stage near Bakersfield and Tibbett rounded up a posse to get him.

The posse finally caught up to McKinney after he had circled back to Bakersfield to see his sweetheart. Tibbett was reluctant to kill him and ordered the bandit to emerge from a Chinese joss house where he was hiding.

McKinney came out firing and killed Sheriff Tibbett with his shot-gun. In turn, the Sheriff's brother, Bert, shot McKinney between the eyes.

Not so long ago, Bert Tibbett was cleaning house. Up in his at-

"Here, son," he told Tibbett. "I think you might like to have this. It's the gun that killed the man who killed your father."

Since then Tibbett has been carrying the gun with him wherever he goes, including airplanes, to the chagrin of his fellow-passengers.

San Saba Fish Swallow Hail Stones And Float On River Surface

(By The Associated Press)
When a sun warms the back of his vest and loosens the moisture beneath his durable hat, the Texans—even the native breed—sometimes forgets he is living in the world's trickiest weather belt. Two weeks ago today Lubbock postponed its league baseball game. "Cold weather."

The Texas fathers, who had to be men of foresight before being fathers of their country, never forgot. Along with a jorum of cider they took to the fields a poncho and ear muffs because they knew Texas weather even if they didn't know the effect of demoralizing silver upon the export price of cotton. Tales like that of the horse which froze to death before the emigrant could buy another to replace one that died of heat the day before were familiar experiences and they took no chances.

Dave Cheavens, Associated Press fishing authority who has cast a worm into every lake from Caddo to Tzoctopoztuc, winter home of the oesophagus bird, says that fish stories are open to doubt, except when the weather is a major influence. Thus fortified, the story of the San Saba river fish, including cats of 40 pounds or more that got tight on halibut belongs to Texas' meteorological history.

On one of these spring days a heavy storm descended upon the region west of Menard. Thick hail was washed into the San Saba by the accompanying heavy rain and, because new to them, the fish greedily swallowed the icy pebbles. Soon full stomachs became an interior ice pack, then numbness brought them helplessly to the surface for the passersby to gather in.

Texas weather is as indifferent to precedent in November as it is in May, hence this record of highs and lows in East Texas is timely. An old-time resident of Palestine believes northerners 60 years ago came more unexpectedly and were more ferocious than those of today.

Once, he said, an unheralded blizzard trapped a large flock of buzzards in flight. Many froze to death on the wing and others at their roosting places. Another version is that the next morning the bodies of the seafaring birds were found suspended in midair, but no rational explanation for the phenomenon was offered until word arrived from Austin that the legislature had repealed the law of gravity.

There would be no profit in arguing whether this could happen in a country where the delectable fumes of a thousand smokehouses and stills of ribbon can mingle with the spiky odors of fall plies, but Texas weather never has been known to discriminate when selecting a site for a performance.

In the plains country before Lubbock was admitted to organized baseball weather-generated winds howled, but carried less dust than in late years.

Among legends circulated by old timers is one about a stranger to the country who asked a pioneer whether it wasn't too windy to work his fields.

"None," said the plainsman, shifting his tobacco. "Stranger, see that post out there with the chain hanging to it? Well, when that chain sticks straight out it'll be too windy for me and my boys to work outa doors."

Winds, as well as rain, are specialties of Texas weather and often one so hardly complements the other that history only possible to Texas is made. An example open to argument, of course, involves a wind and rain storm on the plains and an empty barrel. A barrel is adapted for one or several peculiar performances in such circumstances, but this container was unusual in that both ends had been knocked out.

Regardless, the wind was so strong that the rainwater it forced through the bung burst the barrel. In a similar storm, legends record, a West Texas rain barrel took so much water it ran over for three days after the storm ceased.

Venturesome pioneers went so far afield in Texas that many on-the-scene records extraordinary weather they encountered necessarily have been preserved orally. One such experience grows out of a tornado that struck while an early-day farmer was building a windmill. Men above clung desperately to the frame work until the wind turned rescuer. A horse employed on the tackle rope to draw up material was picked up by the gale and as it passed the upper reaches of the derrick the workmen climbed aboard and rode down to safety.

There is a theory that increasing population tends to modulate the weather. Perhaps political campaign oratory and increasingly extended parliamentary sessions raise the common temperature, despite another theory that political hot air does not mass. If the former is true then an incident at Sherman remembered by old timers will not have a return engagement.

North Texas warmth was disturbed so suddenly by a norther that frogs awoke and leaped for a nearby creek. Too late, however, for the water froze so quickly the forefeet and heads of the frogs were caught in the ice while their bodies and hind legs fluttered in the air.

Forty years ago the bay of Galveston froze over, but that, perhaps was no more extraordinary than the behavior of the tornado in south Texas that blew the water out of his well and then deposited the owner at the bottom of the hole.

Faithful Dog Killed
GREENVILLE, S. C., May 25 (AP)—State Rep. A. M. Hawkins and several friends, while cleaning out their favorite fishing hole, threw a stick of dynamite into the water. A dog jumped in, retrieved the stick and started returning it to the fisherman. They ran. The dog followed—until it was blown to bits.

A 134-pound watermelon was recorded in Georgia in 1937.

Power Issue In Dam, Says Senator Lee

WASHINGTON, May 25 (AP)—Chairman Thomas (D-Okla.) said the Senate appropriations subcommittee would act today on a House-passed bill containing $135,000,000 for flood control projects, of which $5,300,000 was earmarked for starting construction of the proposed $54,000,000 Denison dam.

Advocates of flood control projects urged the committee yesterday to pass the bill, which appropriated $50,000,000 more than recommended by the budget bureau.

Army engineers outlined to the committee benefits they said would result from construction of the flood control-power project on Red river between Texas and Oklahoma.

Brigadier General M. C. Tyler, of the army board of rivers and harbors engineers, told reporters he had presented the engineering data to show the work justified. He said protection from floods along the Red River in Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana, and generation of hydro-electric power to serve a great area surrounding the dam would far offset property loss by inundation of lands in the reservoir basin.

Tyler said he explained the town of Tishomingo, Okla., and large areas which formerly feared inundation would not be affected because the proposed lake level contour of 690 feet above sea level had been lowered to 640 feet.

Senator Lee (D-Okla.), who favored the project, stressed that General Tyler testified at the hearing protested one-third of the cost of the dam would be spent for labor.

Power Called Issue
Lee charged Oklahoma's governor Leon Phillips, whose three representatives at the hearing protested the appropriation, had "strangely failed to criticize" ten other dams authorized for Oklahoma by federal flood control acts of 1936 and 1938. None of these dams, he said, would generate power.

Lee said he told the committee opposition the dam arose over its power feature and cited figures tending to show that if Texas and Oklahoma had received power rates equal to those of consumers served by the Tennessee Valley Authority the combined savings in the two states during 1937 would have been $54,165,000, or the cost of the Denison Dam.

Lee said he testified power production at the dam would not be sufficient to serve both states but would be a yardstick for the cost of production and rate making.
