THE FIRST AND THE LAST: I am the first, and I am the last; and besides me there is no God. . . . Is there a God besides me? Yea, there is no God: I know not any.—Isaiah 44:6-8.

COME to hand three little tracts which illustrate some of the points we've been studying in this column lately. The first is headed "Exports to Device Land Use in America." The preface advises that "The present generation of farmers can no longer produce to the limit of the land's capacity." It continues: "Since the war, the area required to produce crops for export has declined by some 40 million acres. At the same time, the decrease in numbers of horses and mules has released about 30 million acres for production of food for human beings." In short, motorized vehicles are disloyal to the soil in that they do not require its products, working or "resting."

WHETHER we shall again need the retired acres, we are told, depends upon what national policies we choose to follow in the future. Oh well, that obvious: We can be nationalists, internationalists, or adopt a middle course. We are told that "if we reopen export markets there will again be a demand for more plow land." Which is true, but try to tell that to the manufacturers and the employes who make the articles which it is proposed to import.

OUR second pamphlet differs sharply with the idea that exports are necessary. It comes from the Committee for America Self-Contained, recalling by way of greeting that George Washington said in his farewell address "Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor or caprice?" What Washington would say after a lifetime lived today might be another matter, the Committee seems determined to "set us back on the path down which Washington pointed in his last prophetic message to the American people."

THERE is considerable truth in the premise of the pamphlet that science is more responsible than anything else for destruction of our foreign trade. Nations deprived of essential imports by the war learned by privation the folly of depending too much on other nations for necessities. Building up of home industries in all nations have tended to make all of them more self-contained. A breakdown of international credit as a result of the war is another factor. International trade in the old sense is out-moded. Meantime, America has hiked her wage average and her living standard until her people are unwilling to compete with cheap foreign labor and machinery, American developed and often American installed abroad.

THESE paragraphs are so striking that we reproduce them verbatim:

Intoxicated by the profits of 1919 we set out to capture the trade porting nation.

Our war loans, even after drastic reductions, amount to some twenty-one billions, including principal and interest to the end of the period of payment. And the Department of Commerce estimated our long-term private lendings by the end of 1922 at fifteen billions.

Had we kept bookkeeping accounts of these transactions, we might have asked ourselves if our debtors had the capacity to pay these thirty-six billions—and if they were to be repaid in goods, how this could be done without destroying certain home industries, creating unemployment, throwing our economic machine out of balance and lowering our standard of living.

The buying power of the farmer must be restored to achieve a balance between agriculture and industry, essential to the nation's prosperity. This buying power, however, cannot be restored unless the farmer is properly protected and our foreign trade is put on a bookkeeping basis. The American self-containment program aims to do both.

of the world. We lent huge sums exceeding a billion a year from 1925-1928 to pay for our own exports. This was a purely artificial stimulation, for it is obvious that export trade cannot be maintained indefinitely on unpaid loans; but the idea developed, and on a brisk basis in many quarters, that American prosperity depends on a brisk export trade. Yet in these years our exports did not increase in proportion with money advanced. In fact, they rarely exceeded the general average of 8% of our national production, and were less than in some years of our history when we were not considered an ex-

NOW we turn and find some equally true observations by the Committee on Commercial Policy, which opens its story with the observation that Mr. Roosevelt's policy so far has chiefly concerned domestic affairs. It makes the telling claim that while America is well-contained industrially, it is not so agriculturally. We are told that half of the cotton, more than a third of the tobacco, and one-fifth of wheat produced in this country are normally sold abroad. Economic isolation would spell doom for the farmer and trouble for the country. Farmers of the south and of the middle west are especially concerned. Other exports include 15 per cent of our apples, 30 per cent of our lard, 30 per cent of our lubricating oil, and much of our lumber, resin, turpentine, and citrus fruits. Many railroads were built to haul these to export cities.

IT is recognized that drastic reduction of tariff walls would bring industrial chaos. But this group claims that to pay $200,000,000 per year in penalties under the sugar tariff is just too much protection and is a policy that encourages inefficiency in the domestic industry. The committee thinks that the nation as a whole is more important than the protection of any individual industry. Like the group previously quoted, this one would place exports and imports on a bookkeeping basis with reciprocity as the key word. . . . So the self-appointed committees on the welfare of the nation are not as far apart as their titles indicate.

Others in the meet were Philip Berg, LeFors; Milford Williams, LeFors; Wilbur Irving, Pampa; Don Jones, Shamrock; Russell Hall, LeFors; Billie Walter, LeFors; Edgar Harvey, Borger; Phil Berg, LeFors; Melford Williams, LeFors; Martin Stages, Shamrock; and Eugene Berkley, Shamrock.

Two Fires Occur On Friday Night

The Pampa fire department answered two calls Friday night but no damage resulted from either blaze reported. The first call was received at 7:15 o'clock from the negro section of the city. Weeds and grass being burned in a cleanup move had ignited a culvert on the Fort Worth and Denver right-of-way.

A trash fire in the alley of the 200 block on South Chuyler street was the cause of the alarm at 11 o'clock. It was extinguished with water from the booster tank on one of the large trucks. No damage resulted.

BACK IN JAIL

Shields Defeats Wilmer Allison In Tennis Finals

PINEHURST, N. C., April 14. (AP)—Frank Shields of New York strengthened his bid for a place on the United States Davis cup team with a straight set victory over Wilmer Allison of Austin, Tex., member of last year's team, in the finals of the north and south tennis tournament today. Although Allison failed to take a set, it was a close battle until the final set when the Texan fell and sprained his back and appeared near collapse. The scores were 10-8, 14-12, and 6-0.

After a short rest, Allison came back and paired with George M. Lott, Jr., of Chicago, defeated Shields and J. Gilbert Hall, of South Orange, N. J., for the doubles title, 6-1, 4-8, 6-2, 6-3. After he submitted to an examination by a physician and was told that the sprain was not serious, but that he should rest for a few days.

NEW TYPE OF SUBSISTENCE FARMING ANSWERS NEEDS OF MANY FAMILIES FOR LIVING

BY ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

I have just had a letter from a woman whose story bears so closely on the present undertakings of the government, that I think I should tell you about it. She and her husband were married while young and he had a particularly successful business career. They had a fairly expensive apartment in a large city, and spent their winters in Florida, in winter trips abroad or anywhere they wished in summer. She came from one of our New England states and had a background of hard working, well educated New England farm people.

Suddenly they awoke to the realization that they had a daughter in college, a farm which was her heritage in a New England village, and nothing else left in the world. The daughter was sent for and the whole problem turned over. Mother and daughter decided to move to the farm, taking all possible expense off the father, that he might try to salvage what he could of his business.

They have been there over a year and the woman writes that it has been the happiest one of their whole life. She adds that she would like to offer their land which is suitable for camping purposes for the benefit of unemployed people or people of very small incomes. She can not provide any equipment or food, but they will provide guidance and leadership in showing people how to live in the country and in organizing recreational activities. The spirit of helpfulness has come to them through their own experience.

I wish everyone might profit so much from the experiences of life, but from this tale I think perhaps we can get an idea of what lies back of the government's undertaking in its subsistence farmsteads project. Looking at it casually, one might think the government inconsistent in advocating farmsteads while curtailing agricultural production in many lines and proposing that many move back to the farms. It must be understood first of all that subsistence farmsteads have several different objectives. First among these is feeding the family. Right here it may be well to remind you that few farm families actually starve to death unless they raise none of their own food. The very object of these small farms or garden homes is to have families raise much of their own food. True, they may have a small surplus which they can sell in the neighborhood, but they will never have enough to have any effect on the general market. They will be buying their homes over a period of years on payments which it will be easily possible for them to meet, granting that their source of income is not entirely cut off.

Each of the farmsteads undertakings centers around some method by which at least one individual in the family can be sure of fairly steady employment over a good part of the year. This means that industries throughout the country which have remained in the congested districts will move out to the rural sections and there will sometimes be a fairly wide area sending some member of the family to work in a factory. And so, the objective

Flowers Being Made For Poppy Day Sale

Five million paper poppies to honor their fallen comrades have now been completed by disabled veterans of the World war, according to Mrs. S. A. Burns, memorial poppy chairman of Pampa unit of the American Legion Auxiliary. The disabled veterans, working in 50 hospitals and workrooms in 40 states, are expected to complete another five million of the little red flowers before May 26, when poppies will be worn throughout the country in America's annual tribute to its war dead.

Manufacture of the poppies is giving employment to hundreds of veterans unable to do other work. The employment is restricted to veterans receiving little or no government compensation and those with dependent families are given preference. In addition to providing earnings for the support of themselves and families, the poppy-making is of decided physical and mental benefit to the disabled men.

The poppies which will be worn in this city on May 26 have been ordered by the local Auxiliary unit from Texas hospitals. Plans for a city-wide distribution of the flowers are being developed by the Auxiliary.

Norris Claims Dallas Officer Is Barrow Aide

DALLAS, April 14 (AP)—J. Frank Norris, Fort Worth preacher, came to Dallas today under an official summons to testify before the grand jury concerning his charges that a Dallas deputy sheriff was a go-between for Clyde Barrow, southwest killer, and his mother, who lives just west of this city.

He had charged that the deputy supplied arms and ammunition to the Barrow crowd and had assailed the district attorney for what he termed as failure to cooperate with Texas Rangers in their crime investigation.

Shortly after he reached this city, he accused the sheriff, district attorney, police and city and county officials of being "in collusion with the bookmakers, bootleggers and gamblers."

Judith Lane

SYNOPSIS: The report that oil is being drilled for up stream a short way threatens to disrupt Judith Dale's effort to build the Rio Diablo dam according to Tom Bevins' plans, and with the five million dollars left her by Bevins for the purpose. She fears it is a faint to annoy her, engineered by Morton Laineper, who is trying to break the Bevins will in favor of Mrs. Bevins and her daughter. She fears too that a visit from Scoggins, who holds a key piece of land, may mean trouble; he talks about his wife's desire for pretty things.

Chapter 35
PACIFYING SCOGGINS
"Well, sir, then we looked in a store window and there was a dress all shimmerin' like it had fish scales on it." Scoggins went on.

Judith felt that the fate of the Rio Diablo Dam hung in precarious balance as she sat watching Scoggins. Without his land there could be no dam, it formed a queer shaped snake's figure jutting far out into the flood basin.
