No tax cuts in sight

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Carter is joining leading congressional taxwriters in predicting the traditional election-year tax cut will go by the wayside in 1980 as federal officials concentrate on trying to balance the national budget.

"I doubt very seriously that we'll have any tax cut in 1980," Carter said Tuesday at a news conference.

'If we have the option between substantial reductions in the deficit and controlling inflation on the one hand, and having tax reductions for the American people in an election year on the other, I would forego the tax reduction and insist upon controlling inflation and cutting the Similar sentiments have been expressed by the two most influential tax experts on Capitol Hill - Sen. Russell Long, D-La., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, and Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

"The top priority is to control expenditures and balance the budget." Ullman said last week. "That pre-empts any tax cut, unless the country is dropping into an obvious recession.

Long told a U.S. Chamber of Commerce seminar recently he also believes balancing the budget over the next two years should take priority over tax cuts. "I don't think a ... tax cut should keep us from balancing the budget." Long said.

The historic tendency is for Congress to approve tax cuts in election years, largely because it's a politically painless vote to cast. With inflation pushing taxpayers into ever-higher tax brackets, dollars flow into the federal treasury in ever-larger amounts. Legislators can thus vote to cut the tax rate every few years without reducing the funds available to pay for government programs.

That phenomenon, often called "taxflation" by government taxwriters, is working overtime now and could yet provide a way for Carter and Congress to balance the 1981 budget and approve a tax cut at the same time.

To help locate missing parents

Welfare Board to employ unit

By DAN LACKEY Pampa News Staff

The Gray County Child Welfare Board has approved the use of the Department of Human Resources Child Support Unit in helping to locate missing parents who may be liable for child support payments for children under temporary foster care.

The Amarillo based unit works throughout the Panhandle, and has immediate access to Social Security records, military records, and other files which make it more equipped to trace missing parents, Child Support Unit caseworker Susan Coleman told the board at Tuesday's meeting.

The Amarillo unit would aid local DHR caseworkers in cases where missing parents could not be located to help with child support.

Under present law, county welfare receives no state aid for children who do not qualify for Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) money. Board Chairman Bob Carmichael said the cost of maintaining foster care for children who have been placed temporarily in foster homes could stretch the county's child welfare budget if non - AFDC parents are not requested to help with child support. The board agreed to utilize the services of the child support unit only on a case by case basis. The cost of using the support unit to locate one parent is $18, or $20, if legal action is required. Coleman said. The county presently pays $5.50 a day for the foster care of each child under 12, and $6.50 a day for the care of each child 12 and over 223rd District Judge Don Cain and 31st District Judge Grainger McIlhaney were present to make recommendations to the board on the program.

Cain said he could not prejudge individual cases of child support until they were heard in court, but asked if it wasn't "a little bit inconsistent to terminate parental rights, and then request support from the

Cain said the board should decide whether the expense was justified in terms of its return in child support payments on each case. He said members would often find the missing parent, only to discover that he or she was genuinely unable to pay child

Carmichael said that in most cases the process from temporary custody to permanent custody could not be "moved along very rapidly."

McIlhaney said the expense was due to the emphasis on rehabilitation of the parents, and the attempts to return the child to his original home if possible.

"The hope of DHR is to return the child to his home. if possible. If it's a clear case of the need to terminate parental rights, then the court can move fairly fast. But the inclination is to hope the parents will do better. We lean back and give them a chance.

McIlhanev said that in responsibility toward child support "the biggest percentage of people pay routinely, or pay with a little nudging from the court.'

DHR caseworker Joyce Shimek said some support from parents whose children were under temporary foster care was usually requested as "a discipline. It may not be much, maybe $20 a month, but it shows that they still are involved with the welfare of the child.

Agents seeking judge's killer

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) - An army of federal agents, commanded by the FBI's foremost criminal investigator. have begun a sweeping search for the assassin who shot U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. to death.

The judge, known as 'Maximum John' because of the stiff sentences he assessed drug offenders, was shot once in the lower back in the parking lot at his apartment Tuesday morning. He was dead on arrival at a San Antonio hospital.

The bullet tore through his abdomen, damaging vital organs and lodged in the upper right chest, said Frank Castillon, chief investigator for the medical examiner's office.

Cassens in Washington said the assassin probably used a small-caliber rifle.

Wood, 63, the second federal official involved in West Texas drug investigations to become the target of a shooting in the last seven months, was believed to be the first federal judge assassinated.

Attorney General Griffin B. Bell, declaring "we cannot have a country where judges are assassinated or killed," assigned top FBI criminal investigator James O. Ingraham to direct a team of 40 agents in the case.

'We don't intend to leave a stone unturned," said Bell, a former federal judge.

Government has been suffocating the domestic supply side of petroleum production and causing the increased import of oil at more than twice the price domestic producers are allowed. For the past nine weeks oil and gas drilling has declined. This is a direct result of confusion about the regulations created by last year's natural gas "deregulation" bill and uncertainty concerning future controls.

The tattered myth that government can take positive action to better economic progress, limps along. Senior Citizens 'new class'

By OSCAR COOLEY

Did the congressmen who voted for the Social Security bill in 1935 realize that they were creating a new class of Americans? Before that time, there were no "senior citizens." There were just old folks. There were no "Sun Cities" or other sanctuaries for the aged. They lived in their home communities, occupying their own homes, owned or rented, or sharing the homes of their grown - up offspring or other relatives. No special apartment houses were built for them, nor were there any "meals on wheels" or other boons provided for them with taxpayer funds.

They received no monthly checks from Washington, D.C. They lived on their own savings, accumulated during their working years in anticipation of the time when they could no longer work and earn. In the cases of many this period was short or non existent, for they worked as long as they could, often to the day of death.

In those days you did not automatically 'retire' at a magic 65, or at any other age. 'Retirement' was something the well - to do indulged in. When the old folks' earnings were no longer sufficient, they were helped by their kinfolk. Whether this help was given cheerfully or grudgingly depended on the character of the givers and of the recipients, and on the relationship that prevailed between the two. In some cases the presence of Grandpa and Grandma generated friction, in others, family

I recount these facts of yesteryear in the interest of history. The change in the status and the way of life of the elderly, as well as in the public concern for them, has been great, perhaps greater than the young realize. I think the change stems from the Social Security act of 1935.

This act was revolutionary in that it relieved people of the urge to save for their old age. Instead of each being responsible to save voluntarily and create his own nest egg, each was forced. He and assuming he was a wage worker, his employer were taxed by the U.S. government and a fund presumably - was built up. In return the government promised to make payments to the taxpayer in his old age.

the payments would be, nor did it describe them as pensions, but the people looked upon them as such - a compulsory pension system - and still do. Social Security has come to take the place of private security.

A result, as must have been forseen, is that vast numbers of people look forward to living on their Social Security benefits, and hence their incentive to save, voluntarily, during their earning years and insure their own security in their twilight years has been greatly weakened, if not extinguished.

Thus has come into being a new class, the elderly idle, birthed by act of Congress and dependent upon the government. Special benefits, services and discounts are extended to them. Special homes and even cities of refuge are built for them. They are sutdied as though they were a newly discovered biological species, and learned essays, even books, are written about them. Entire college courses are devoted to them and their special problems. Society cares for them, and in the caring segregates them.

There seems little chance that the aged will be admitted to be just folks and readmitted to the human family. Set apart by a political act in 1935, they are exceedingly useful to politicians, for they all vote - this is one act in which they can join with their younger neighbors. Politicians find it very convenient to spend public funds to buy goodies for them and so to bid for their votes.

Peliticians love to divide people into classes, for then they can make speeches about the ills and misfortunes of each class, seek public compassion for that class, and make a persuasive bid for its vote.

The senior citizen class is especially well suited to this strategy. In 1935 Congress aid, "You old folks are in special trouble. When you labored, your profit - hungry employer paid you so little you could not save for the future, and when the future came, the cost of living had risen beyond your, humble means. This must not continue. We shall set up a system that will provide security for all in their advanced years. Trust us. We love you. Back us up as we'll not let you down.'

Thus came into being the new class, dependent for a livelihood on the legislator, who in turn depend considerably on them for their office.

Generally speaking, the people who have been legislated into the new class are not unhappy. Many of them "never had it so good." They play golf by day, bridge and scrabble by night. They enjoy a busy social life, going from one club luncheon to another. They eat well - too well for their stomach's sake

Some go to church and deplore how few youth are there. They support causes, especially those which labor to preserve health and defer death. They enjoy being by themselves and avoiding the frictions that occur when living with relatives.

But some are vaguely conscious of living on the town and of being a burden on society. The recent change of the forced retirement age to 70 may be taken as a gentle warning from society that the burden must not increase too rapidly.

c) Western Europe Heavyweights all, but the answer, as it turns out, is none of the above. The best market for U.S. exports is that block of several dozen nations known collectively as the Third World, the economically underdeveloped majority of mankind. Roughly 40 percent of U.S. manufactured products entering world trade is absorbed by these nations. It follows that strengthening their economies, and therefore their ability to buy foreign goods, ultimately benefits the United States. That point is central to discussions that have been going on recently in Manila, where the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) has been in session. It is not only the U.S. relationship with the underdeveloped world that is under study, however, but that of all major industrial nations.

Most of the developing countries seek prosperity through industrialization. In process, their often more cheaply produced products inevitably bring them into competition with the developed economies.

The natural response of the latter, seeking to protect their industries and the jobs of their workers, is to raise barriers. These generally are not traditional tariffs, but take the form of import quotas, market sharing agreements and government subsidies of domestic industries.

This is the "new protectionism" that concerns not only the Third World but many in the West, such as Robert S. McNamara, president of the World Bank. He has warned at Manila that such short term self - interest is actually self - harmful in the long term. If the economic development of the poorer countries is limited, so is their ability to buy products of the newer industries that are the developed economies' real future, not the obsolete operations being protected.

The Manila session is the fifth such UNCTAD gathering of the well - off, and generally northern, nations with their less fortunate, and generally southern, trading partners. So far the effort has generated much talk but little action.

Much more than talk is going to be needed before the north - south economic relationship becomes one of genuine mutual advantage rather than self interest. As McNamara and others see it, the developed nations in their own best interests are going to have to:

a) Allow easier entry into their markets for the products of developing countries; b) Cease propping up declining

c) Restructure their own economies to emphasize the most efficient enterprises; d) All of the above.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - A lack of direction and a business lobby blitz that one representative compared with a tank assault were the distinguishing traits of the 66th Legislature, according to some lawmakers.

It was a session that had some unpleasant and difficult chores to do and got them done, others said in end-of-session interviews.

"The thing that really provokes me is the lobby had so much control," said Sen. A.R. Schwartz, D-Galveston, mentioning passage of bills establishing "documentary fees" for car buyers and weakening the Deceptive Trade Practices

"The lobby was bold. They moved in with the tanks," said Rep. Bob Bush, D-Sherman.

Lobby bills often were chewed up by the legislative process, Bush said, but "they kept us in a defensive posture rather than go forward with constructive things we might have done."

He said the fact that Gov. Bill Clements was new in town and, therefore, not predictable kept things off-balance and affected Speaker Bill Clayton and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

"The fact that the leadership was tentative, playing games with one another, gave the House the opportunity to accomplish something," Bush

But Rep. John Wilson, D-La Grange, who has announced as a candidate for Clayton's job next session, said the House accomplished nothing. Wilson said Clayton ran the House like a "traffic cop," giving the green light to some bills and a red light to others. He said this kept legislators from performing to capacity

"We failed on many occasions to balance the public interest with special interests. ... I find it hard to point to any significant accomplishment for the public benefit. That sums it up," Wilson

Rep. Bob Davis, R-Irving, said "special interest" is a matter of definition, and "there were no major issues that were special interest bills as I would define the term.'

He said the biggest issue that was dealt with, raising home loan interest rates, was "a question of whether the political downside of voting for it offset the impact on the Texas economy if we refused to face up to it.'

"If you look at what we had to do and ask, Did we do it? the answer is yes," Davis said.

There were problems in the Senate between the leadership and moderate-to-liberal senators who felt rules and traditions were being trampled to make way for a presidential primary bill.

Schwartz said the flight of the "Killer Bees." including himself, "had a good effect on the Senate. People began to appreciate the fact that they had to deal with people

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, was less impressed

"There were some stalemates. There is no primary bill. That was a stand-off. I was shocked, frankly, that 12 persons would leave. I wasn't just being melodramatic about it. I just don't see the issue as being that important," he

FRIENDS OF THE PAMPA LIBRARY netted $3,038 from their recent annual book sale and spring membership drive. State colleges have $130 million in taxes coming

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) -Requiems would be premature for 17 state colleges that effectively lost their source of construction funds during the 1979 Legislature.

Lawmakers also refused to create a special fund from general tax revenues to replace money flowing to the universities from the 10-cent per $100 assessed valuation state property tax.

It might sound bleak.

The good news is that $130 million will be available from accumulated property taxes whenever Rep. Wayne Peveto drops his suit challenging the tax's constitutionality. His federal lawsuit filed last year has prevented distribution of the Peveto, D-Orange, says he will drop the suit since the Legislature effectively repealed the property tax by lowering its assessment ratio to .0001. That rate would generate only $25,000

"It looks like they're (the colleges) going to have funds for the next two or three years," said Norma Foreman, senior college division chief for the Texas College Coordinating Board. "It's not a crisis situation

A replacement source of construction money died in the Legislature's final hours Monday. The substitute would have been the State Higher Education Assistance Fund (SHEAF) composed of approximately $40 million annually in general tax revenue.

The fund would have covered institutions not within the University of Texas or Texas A&M systems. UT and A&M campuses get construction money from the Permanent University Fund. The PUF is a constitutionally dedicated source of dollars derived from oil and gas leases and production royalties off university-owned land.

Colleges could have spent SHEAF money not only for new construction but also for repair and rehabilitation of existing structures. State property tax proceeds can be used only for new buildings.

Since SHEAF failed, the 17 colleges must compete for funds appropriated by the Legislature. Lawmakers already channel general tax revenue to the schools for non-construction purposes

Mrs. Foreman says that for at least the next two years, the colleges will have enough building money from the $130 million in accrued property tax

In addition, legislators established a joint committee to study the problem and report back to the 1981 Legislature. Schools that benefitted from the state property tax were:

University of Texas at Arlington, Texas Tech University, North Texas State University, Lamar University, Texas A&I University, Texas Women's University, Texas Southern University. Midwestern University. University of Houston, Pan American University, East Texas State University, Sam Houston State University,

Southwest Texas State University, West Texas State University, Stephen F. Austin State University, Sul Ross University and Anelo State

PAMPA NEWS Wednesday, May 30, 1979 3 Teachers union 'thanks' Clements

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - The Texas president of the teachers union said Tuesday that Gov. Bill Clements had furthered unionization of teachers by holding their cost-of-living raises to 5.1 percent.

June Karp of Austin, president of the Texas Federation of Teachers, also said teachers should start working to pry additional increases from local school boards.

She called the pay raises voted by the Legislature — under threat of veto from Clements if they went higher than 5.1 percent annually

'We know that there will be a great deal of 'loose' money in various districts because of increases in equalization money and compensatory education monies. Since Governor Clements' recalcitrant actions have left us with no choice, we will begin to collectively bargain with school districts for wages," Ms. Karp said. "In a way, Governor Clements has done what he didn't want to do.

and that is further the unionization of teachers and educational workers.

'So we thank him for that.

low Pampa Tent and Awning Incorporated, and new owner John C. Ferguson says the major change in the business's day to day operation will be a switch in emphasis from retail to manufacturing.

Ferguson purchased the business from former owner and operator Melvin Clark in April.

The new owner is from Fort Dodge Iowa where he was head of manufacturing and research and development for Burch Manufacturing Company, a producer of canvas products. The switch in emphasis to manufacture will involve increasing industrial supply and development of business accounts, Ferguson said. But the new owner said the emphasis on manufacture will not eliminate retail service. "We will still have retail service, particulary

In moving toward wholesale accounts, the business will have a shop minimum of $15. Ferguson said that despite "changing some things, I don't want to discourage retail trade. A large amount of our work will continue to be custom fit work.'

"The major industrial supply will probably be in oil field windbreakers," Ferguson said. He

As a designer with Burch, Ferguson developed a number of original canvas-related products, including a hospital surgical aid known as Kolapse-A-Tank, a device used in aiding the treatment of patients suffering from hyperthermia (radical rise in temperature) in response to surgical anaesthesia.

He has also designed oil field windbreakers made to custom fit oil drilling equipment, and a collapsable water tank widely used by fire departments as a hold for auxiliary water

Texas weather

By The Associated Press

Thunderstorms rumbled through North Central Texas and along the coast early today, causing some street flooding and prompting the National Weather Service to issue special marine warnings for high winds and rough seas.

Street flooding was reported at Fort Worth and Corsicana, where an estimated six inches of rain fell during the evening and early morning hours.

Forecasts called for more scattered thunderstorm activity, including some potentially heavy thunderstorm activity for North Texas today. A cold front moved into the Texas Panhandle early today, dropping temperatures into the 50s and triggering some thunderstorm activity. Patchy fog was reported in Northeast Texas early today with visibility limited to about half of a mile at Texarkana. Forecasts called for mostly cloudy skies in North Texas, partly cloludy skies in South Texas and clear to partly cloudy in West Texas. Highs were expected to range from the 60s in the Panhandle to the 90s in Southeast and South Texas.

The thunderstorm activity early today moved southeastward through North Central Texas into Southeast Texas where special marine warnings were issued for the Galveston area and the area southwest of Houston along the coast.

Although rainfall reports were mostly sketchy early today, official rainfall at Dallas was .78 of an inch and Fort Worth had .56 of an inch.

Heavy thunderstorms moved across the southern Plains and the lower Mississippi Valley today after dropping large hail over eastern Texas, southern Louisiana and southern Mississippi.

High winds caused minor damage in the New Orleans area, and a tornado touched down northwest of Biloxi, Miss. There were no reports of damage or had described Lisa and Elisa as healthy children who were perfectly normal, both physically and mentally, except for their being joined together.

In Fort Worth, Texas, water was six to eight inches deep on some streets. Flash flooding was reported Tuesday in Corsicana, Texas, where thunderstorms dumped more than six inches of rain.

During the surgery, Dwan said doctors - including neurosurgeons, plastic surgeons, anaesthesiologists and pediatricians — worked more slowly for a time because they encountered scar tissue from four previous operations which set the stage for final separation.

However, he said doctors were able to accelerate their pace during other stages of the operation, which doctors had predicted could last 20 hours.

Doctors have said the girls' brains were separate, although touching. They had shared veins carrying blood away from their brains, and their skulls were fused together, but there was a slight indentation where Lisa's head stopped and Elisa's began.

Dear Abby

abigail van buren

DEAR ABBY: Enclosed please find my check for $1 and a long, stamped (28 cents), self-addressed envelope for your booklet "How to Have a Lovely Wedding."

This wedding has to be specially lovely, because it is for a special daughter and a special young man. Both were labeled retarded as children, but have overcome their handicap and grown into mature, capable people. (She is 31 and he is 29.) Both work and are able to manage their own affairs with a little assistance from both sets of parents.

Friends and relatives are so happy that this beautiful couple found each other. If they were growing up today I'm sure they would not be labeled retarded, but would be considered to have "learning disabilities." They will be married in a church because their religion means so much to both of

NEIL WITH THE IRS

DEAR REJOICING: Thank you for a beautiful letter bearing a message of hope for all "special" children and their families. May the happy couple enjoy all of God's blessings.

DEAR ABBY: Frannie asked if birth control pills were deductible, and you replied, "Only if they don't work." Cute answer, but for your information, according to Internal Revenue ruling 73-200, birth control pills are deductible whether they work or not-if prescribed by a physician.

DEAR NEIL: Thanks for the info. Who am I to argue with the IRS? They're the nice people who know you can't take it with you -- so they remove the temptation.

DEAR ABBY: I have two big, good-looking sons. One is 18 and the other is 16, but he's as big as his older brother. These boys have been fighting each other ever since they were old enough to swing their arms. The 18-year-old just bought himself a secondhand car with his savings. He drove past his brother walking down the road and wouldn't even give him a lift. The younger brother keeps his clothes in better shape, so the older one helps himself to his brother's clothes without asking. These boys fight and cuss like a couple of mule

DEAR DR. LAMB - I read in your column about the new medicine Tagamet. I have had an ulcer for 30 years and have chewed lots of Gelusil and drunk lots of Maalox. I carried milk with me almost everywhere I went. I was willing to try anything one more time. I went to a local clinic and tried desperately to get a prescription for Tagamet and was told I would have to have a check up first. I couldn't get the prescription without the examination so I submitted. I got the bill yesterday and waited a day to cool off before I wrote to you. You wouldn't believe it but the bill was $158 just for X rays. I could have told them they wouldn't find an ulcer in my chest. When everything was done I got the prescription for a total of $400 and three days time. DEAR READER - I can understand why you would be annoyed. People often feel that when they have had expensive examinations that don't reveal any significant disease that they have spent money unnecessarily.

That really isn't true. I know it's expensive but per-haps you should be thankful that nothing more serious was found.

Doctors can't just prescribe medicine on the basis what their patients tell them their problem is. In your case, for example, what if you had had an early cancer of the stomach which could have been cured and wasn't found because you didn't have any X rays done. In that case you could have lost your life because of the lack of concern by your physicians.

The way this problem is usually solved is that you have a family doctor who manages your medical problems. In your case your family doctor should have known that you've had an ulcer because he would probably have treated you for years for it. It would have been unnecessary for him to have done a complete total reexamination to find out that you had a peptic ulcer and to give you a

When patients go to new doctors who do not have the benefit of the previous studies, the only choice the new doctor has is to examine you adequately to find out exactly what your problem really is. You cannot properly treat a patient without knowing what you are treat-

There are many kinds of shoe polish so no one method will remove all. You may have to try more than one. Sponge with a solution that is one part than one. At first glance, country singer Lynn Anderson's "new image" is a trifle confusing. The title proclaims Outlaw Is Just A State Of Mind. But on the cover, the clear-throated warbler (who made "You Never Promised Me A Rose Garden" famous) is wearing a luxuriant fur she obviously didn't get by armed robbery

Lynn Anderson's sense of 'outlaw' is not the scruffy sort favored by Waylon and Willie, but then she's never been one to stick by what Nashville considers tried and true either. Onstage she may be all country cogeniality, but behind the scenes Anderson's a tough (although still very sweet) "I've been in the business now for 12 years, and as far as I know, this is the first time for a country artist that people have made a concerted effort - call it a blitz treatment - to coordinate everything that goes into the making and selling of a record," she says.

Lynn Anderson is making an attempt to reach the pop market with her new lp, featuring songs by people like the Eagles and Karla Bonoff. It was produced by The Entertainment Company, the outfit responsible for Dolly Parton's crossover. Streisand's continued success, and the recent reappearance of Judy Collins on the charts. 'My records were not quite reflecting what I did onstage," admits Anderson. 'They reflected more my record company's image of

Weaving brightens an otherwise drab outlook for women

ZUNIL, Guatemala (AP) -Most of their lives are spent in a kind of graying darkness, marked by poverty and ignorance and the burying of infants who couldn't beat the

Through it all, from swaddling cloth to burial shroud, the Indian women of Guatemala weave a brilliant tapestry, their looms filling an otherwise drab existence with the beauty of their heritage. Borrowed from the radiant plumage of the Quetzal bird and the flaming hues of nature, the colors collide like a jostled paint box to become their native dress.

The costumes aren't for tourists or dramatic effect. They are as personal as a Wall Street banker's pin-striped suit or a student's favorite pair of denims. The clothes are worn until they fall apart.

own more than two huipils, the sack-like blouses ablaze with roses, lightning bolts, moons and stars.

Design changes little from one generation to the next. What was earned from mother is passed on to daughter.

"If they weave at all, they are good weavers by the time they are 14," says Janet Klepper, a U.S. Peace Corps volunteer who has run a weavers' co-operative in this moutain village for five

"By 30, they have reached their peak...They weave for their husband and children, perhaps a widowed father or uncle who has no one else to make his clothes.

"In between grinding the corn for the tortillas, doing the washing in the river, taking coffee to the husband in the field, and feeding the children, the women weave," says Mrs.

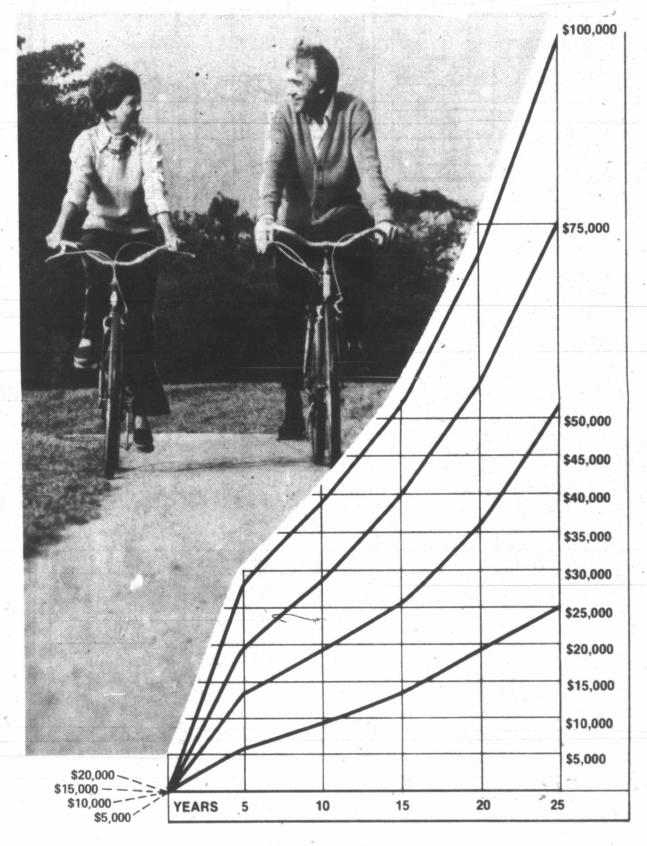

They usually weave in front of the house. They sit on the ground with one end of the loom pulled tight via a strap around their backs, and the other tied to the tallest pole. The cloth is as wide as their arms can reach, usually about 20 inches. It will measure as long as the tension holds before the threads break, usually about 21/2 yards.

"By the time they are 45 or 50," the Long Beach, Calif., native says, "they are worn out. The loom and responsibility for the family's clothes falls to younger women.

Mrs. Klepper's co-op is one of the most successful ventures of its kind in this Central American country of 5.1 million persons, 80 percent of them descendants of Mayan Indians. But it is small, and Mrs. Klepper doubts that the country's weavers could ever organize as a cottage industry to handle mass orders like other countries.

In 1973, when Mrs. Klepper took over management of the co-op, annual sales totaled $15,000. Last year's gross was $44,000. Half comes from tourists, a quarter from Artexco, the regional co-op outlet in Quetzaltenango, and the rest from mail orders as far away as Boston.

"The extra money hasn't changed their lives very much," Mrs. Klepper says of the 350 women weavers. "They still have all those other responsibilities, and that's why I don't think the supply could ever keep up with the demand on a

Jack Cooke sells LA teams

By TOM HARRIGAN

Associated Press Writer INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) - The House that Jack Built - and household names like Kareem, Magic and Marcel - are being bought by Los Angeles real estate man Dr. Jerry Buss.

The purchase for about $67 million of the 16,000-seat Forum, pro basketball's Lakers and the pro hockey Kings from Jack Kent Cooke gives Los Angeles a homegrown sports entrepeneur.

Until now the baseball O'Malleys from New York, former Canadian Cooke and football franchise owners moving from the East have controlled the pro sports market in the Los Angeles area. One exception was formation of baseball's Angels by former movie cowboy Gene Autry.

The 46-year-old Buss, who holds a doctoral degree in physical chemistry from the University of Southern California, showed the necessary financial muscle when he bankrolled a great deal of the struggles of World Team Tennis for five years.

He owned the Los Angeles Strings, putting Ilie Nastase and Chris Evert together to win a WTT title last year. Buss also was a part owner of the San Diego, Anaheim and Indiana franchises before the 10-team WTT folded last fall.

Winning the WTT trophy only cost him "a couple of million," he joked. He has estimated his fortune in 20 years of real estate has grown to $350 million. He quit a research job with an aircraft company in 1958 and sunk his entire savings into one apartment building — the first of very many with 5,000 units in Los Angeles and another 5,000 in other cities.

The 66-year-old Cooke and Buss made separate announcements Tuesday that they are finalizing the package deal, the largest transaction in sports history. In addition to the Lakers, the Kings and the 11-year-old Forum, the sale also includes Cooke's Raljon, a 13,000-acre ranch in the California Sierra.

For generations, diagnostic X-rays have been hailed as a boon to mankind, a benefit for which all of us should be grateful.

Now, debate over the proper use of X-rays is swirling into a major health issue - and it seems inevitable that the arguments will become much more strident in the months to come.

Even as more sophisticated forms of X-ray technology develop, antagonists are protesting that you and I - the consumers - are subject to far too much X-ray exposure.

Ironically, it was fear of excesses of ionizing radiation that pushed the U.S. and Russia into signing one of their first major agreements in the field of nuclear testing. Uncomfortable scientists from both countries agreed that atomic testing had to go under ground - not only as evidence of detente but also out of concern for the survival of future generations.

The U.S.-Soviet pact has served as a guidepost for most of the increasing number of members in the international atomic society, with the exception of China and France.

The Three Mile Island nuclear near-disaster has helped to focus public attention even more on the dangers of radiation. The material and rhetorical fallout from this experience well may alter the whole course of public debate for years — as government agencies agonize over the delicate question of "culpability."

A recent U.S. task force draft report discussed the many sources of ionizing radiation, including X-rays, exposures that are received by employees of nuclear facilities and atomic bomb testing

The evidence suggests that low-level radiation could increase the risks of some cancers for the exposed as well as for their children. But even critics of so-called X-ray overuse emphasize that you, a would-be patient, should not avoid an examination that requires the use of X-rays, assuming your physician can sufficiently justify its Defendant or critic — both agree that exposure of fetuses to X-rays is extremely risky. This has been so overwhelmingly demonstrated and detailed that there no longer is debate about it.

A recent network TV show on the plight of a pregnant young mother suffering from Hodgkin's disease, who faced the decision of therapeutic X-ray treatment that might stem the cancer while causing the fetus to abort, brought the scientific problem involved to the attention of millions. With the exception of natural background radiation - the kind we get from exposure to our environment medical X-rays make up the largest single element of radiation exposure that you and I will receive, usually with gratitude and no concern whatsoever.

By the very nature of their training, health officials are cautious, and have taken the conservative, prudent approach that there is no level of radiation which is "positively" safe.

Such prestigious organizations as the American Medical Assn. and the American College of Radiology are against taking X-rays without sufficient reasons that establish there will be a contribution to diagnosis of the patient's condition.

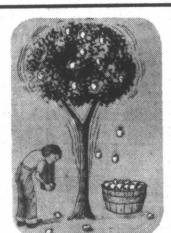

Even more ominous is the fact that, according to a report by the National Academy of Sciences, upublished early in May, the risk of developing cancer because of exposure to radiation appears to be almost twice as great for women as for men, and much greater for the younger age groups than for those 50 and over.

More specifically, if you are under 35, you run a four-times greater risk of radiation-caused cancer than if you are over 50, according to

If you are a woman between the ages of 20 and 30, you are in the most vulnerable group.

"At low doses, the risks are very small," says Dr. Edward P. Radford, of the University of Pittsburgh Graduate School of Public Health, and National Academy of Sciences panel chairman. "There is a risk, but it's not the end of the world."

'We have no idea what the effects are from very low levels," retorts Dr. Harold H. Rossi, of Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, in a direct dissent to the NAS study. "And in any case, they are undetectable."

Windfall

Profit. Business operation and growth are impossible without it. But higher profits from oil companies are leading many people to ask how much profit is too much. Later his week, oil companies will begin to make even larger profits when the decontrol of oil and gasoline prices goes into effect. President Carter believes Congress must pass a "windfall" profits tax on these new "unearned" profits. The term "windfall" has come to mean a sudden piece of good fortune. For example, when the wind blows apples from a tree, more are available to sell without any extra work. Oil companies and others argue a tax on their new profits will take away the incentive to develop new oil supplies.

DO YOU KNOW - Which U.S. oil company is the world's largest?

TUESDAY'S ANSWER - James Schlesinger is the secretary of the Department of Energy.

Washington briefs

'Scalawag" 1973 Kirk

WASHINGTON (AP) -President Carter has been accused of unfair labor practices after meeting with a group of government workers to discuss his plans for reorganizing the federal bureaucracy.

The charge, filed by Local 12 of the American Federation of Government Employees, is believed to be the first against a president. One of those who met with Carter was covered by the union. The union charged Tuesday in the complaint that in discussing working conditions with the Labor Department employee, Carter "effectively deprived departmental employees of their collective bargaining rights." The White House had no direct response.

WASHINGTON (AP) - About 70 Taiwanese pilots are going to North Yemen to help defend that country, the State Department Department spokesman Thomas Reston refused to say Tuesday whether the pilots would fly the F-5E jet fighters President Carter ordered to North Yemen. Carter ordered the planes dispatched in March after the Iranian revolt raised concern in Saudi Arabia about the U.S. commitment to the Persian Gulf area. North Yemen was involved in border conflicts with Soviet-backed South Yemen. A ceasefire has held up since early March between the two Yemens.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Justice Department says negotiations involving an East German refugee convicted in a hijacking case were proper.

The department defended the negotiations Tuesday. U.S. District Judge Herbert Stern of New Jersey had criticized prosecutors, saying they made "an improper, unethical and unlawful attempt" to remove his power over sentencing. Stern sentenced Detlev Tiede to nine-months in jail for taking a stewardess hostage when he forced a Polish airliner to fly to West Berlin last August. Tiede was freed Monday, having served his sentence while in custody. U.S. military authorities still control a sector of West Berlin.
