Defense budget includes billions for Texas plants

dent Clinton's fiscal 1997 defense budget request includes billions of dollars for aircraft and missile systems manufactured in Texas, including the V-22 Osprey.

While the $242.6 billion budget unveiled today marks a 6 percent drop from this year's spending and includes some procurement cutbacks, the blueprint holds much good news for defense contractors with a presence in the Lone Star state.

It includes $1.1 billion for the purchase of the first four V-22 tilt-rotors developed for the Marine Corps by Bell Helicopters in Fort Worth and Boeing's helicopter division in Pennsylvania, along with further testing and development money. The craft, which takes off like a helicopter but flies like a plane, has endured a sometimes choppy journey moving from the drawing board to reality.

Texas also would benefit from one of the high-dollar procurement programs in the budget: $2.3 billion for eight more Air Force C-17 cargo planes. While most of the defense work is centered in North Texas, a company outside of Houston also is in line for a big contract. The budget includes $233 million for Stewart & Stevenson of Sealy for construction of 1,603 Army diesel-powered trucks.

Perry has said procurement spending will start increasing in 1998, ensuring that the military maintains an edge in the 21st century. Pentagon officials had said last year they would start increasing spending weapons, aircraft and other needed upgrades this year, but Congressional Republicans are likely to challenge the dip in procurement spending, worried that the military's modernization is falling short.

The budget, for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1, includes a 3 percent pay raise for both military and civilian employees, compared with a 2.4 percent raise this year.

The Army would stay at Defense Secretary William 495,000 soldiers and the Marine Corps would remain at 174,000. The Air Force would shrink by 7,000, to 381,000, and the Navy would drop 18,000, to 407,000.

Reserve forces would shrink by 30,000, to 901,000, and the civilian work force would lose 34,000 people, to 807,000.

Clinton also said PLO chief Yassar Arafat must do more to prevent violence against Israelis. "I am convinced that he wants peace," Clinton said.

He expressed "my deep anger" at the bombings, the latest of which killed at least 10 people today at a Tel Aviv shopping mall, and voiced the determination of the United States to help Israel "stop the killings, to bring the killers to justice.

Tel Aviv Police Chief Gabi Last said the suicide bomber was on foot, crossing with shoppers at the busy intersection of King left peacemaking with the George and Dizengoff streets when he set off the bomb.

Couple tie knot via proxy; groom serves prison term

HOUSTON (AP) — R. Wayne Johnson and Joyce Craig have been married almost five years and have had very few quarrels.

Of course, they haven't seen much of each other, either. In fact, hardly at all. Their marriage in May, 1991, sounds rather commonplace on its face. It took place in a church, one of them wore white and they agreed to devote their lives to one another.

What made it different was that Johnson wasn't there for the wedding. Johnson's vows were handled by proxy from his Daniel prison unit cell in Snyder; her vows were said in person in a Plano church.

His 99-year sentence for aggravated rape prevented his appearance, but not the nuptials.

Kaiser withdraws buyout offer of Alumax

HOUSTON (AP) — Rather than embark on a potentially nasty battle to gain control of Alumax Inc., Kaiser Aluminum Corp. has withdrawn its buyout: offer of up to $2.5 billion in cash and stock.

Alumax had spent the past week fending off Kaiser's bid, which would have created the nation's third largest aluminum producer, and recently adopted a 'poison pill" stock defense to discourage unsolicited buyout attempts.

"We had from the outset wanted this to be a cooperative, constructive transaction, and we had sought to meet with Alumax to discuss the transaction. They decided they did not want to meet with us," Kaiser spokesman Bob Irelan said Sunday, one day after the company dropped its bid.

The world is full of quiet heroes

Trying to keep yourself informed through what the media choose to impart can be depressing sometimes, especially if your interests lead you to pay much attention to politics. But sometimes you come across a story that makes you feel better about the Leon Fleischer was one of the most promising young concert pianists of the early 1960s, moving to the pinnacle of his profession. Then a mysterious injury crippled his right hand, causing the fingers to curl into his palm involuntarily. Perhaps this wasn't the ironic/tragic affliction Beethoven's deafness was, but it was a crushing blow.

There is a small classical repertory for left-hand-only piano, including an astonishing concerto by Maurice Ravel. Mr. Fleischer explored and extended the left-hand repertory, uncovering nuggets and some dross. He continued to play in public, though less than previously, and turned to conducting and teach-

Through the years, he tried dozens of ways to try to bring his right hand back to a semblance of its former dexterity - diets, exotic exercise regimes, massage therapy, hypnotherapy, psychotherapy - anything that seemed to promise help.

Finally, a regime based on a sophisticated version of "rolfing" seemed to offer some improvement. Mr. Fleischer stayed with it. Last spring, for the first time in almost 30 years, he performed in public with two hands - ten fingers. He has since done more concerts and is carefully rebuilding his concert repertoire.

Whether he resumes a full-blown concert career or not, Loen Fleischer has come back from a condition many people believed would prevent him from ever realizing his artistic potential. The tragic challenge and his persistent response might even have deepened his artistic vision. He doubts he would have become so involved in studying and teaching, in trying to penetrate intellectually to the deepest structures of musical architecture in order to convey them to others by means other than playing, if he hadn't been

The country - the world - is, in a way, full of Leon Fleischers people who work through the setbacks life deals them, maintain hope and back up their hope with systematic, intelligent work.

In a cover symposium, the nation's leading conservative journal, National Review, lays out the case for moving toward legalized drugs - a case

use of police-state methods.

"It is the illegality," writes former Police Chief Joseph D. McNamara in one essay, "that permits the obscene markup, enriching drug traffickers, distributors, dealers, crooked cops, lawyers, judges, politicians, bankers, businessmen." Drug researcher and political scientist Ethan Nadelman argues that "drugs are here to stay." William F. Buckley Jr. posits that "more people die every year as a result of the war against drugs than die from what we call, generically, overdosing." And

There may be no more perplexing question on view anywhere - than that of what to do about drugs. No answer seems good. Legalize meaning take away the legal/political social sanction against drug use - and you accord drugs rough equivalence with alcohol and tobacco. Do we need that? Yet, entrenched against legalization, one may forget that millions already regard drugs as no worse than alcohol and tobacco. Has the drug war really been lost? Is it time to seek an armistice? There is an even larger question to put: Why do so many people take drugs in the first place? They didn't 30 years ago. The law didn't inhibit most people. Most people didn't want drugs. What changed things?

William. Murchison

The drug culture grabbed us from behind, like so much else in the mid-'60s: war protests, sexual promiscuity, the war on standards and traditions of all kinds.

The drug laws - certainly the contributors to National Review's symposium are right about this are an anachronism, a relic of days gone by. They no longer express common values.

However, the symposium contributors ignore pertinent questions about repeal. For example: 1. Would legalization do more good than harm?

2. Does the existence of the drug laws serve a symbolic purpose? Are they a useful way of saying that drugs are no good?

3. How does society go about reconstructing a world view in which drugs don't figure?

4. Should society try? 5. Does it matter?

The drugs-are-here-to-stay argument of at least two symposium contributors is too glib. Nothing is here to stay. One could have made the same kind of argument, circa 1963, for drug-freedom-ishere-to-stay, and the argument would have been

The drug problem shouldn't - can't - be reduced to a legal problem. It's at bottom a moral and cultural problem. Law reinforces morality. In the present case, the law protrudes like a pier over a dry lake - seemingly without relevance to its old function. But that is not necessarily an argument for razing the pier. It could just as plausibly be an argument for awaiting the rains that fill up the

What is the matter with drugs? The matter is that drugs - leave aside the function some have in easing physical pain - are moral fire escapes. Clatter up or down one, and leave reality behind.

A culture such as the drug culture, based on escape and avoidance, can't be socially admirable: least of all when it encourages psychic and physical dependency and drains or depletes human resources. That we already have alcohol as a "drug" is no answer. Alcohol, a staple of civilized life, isn't designed for escape or the Higher Consciousness (though it has been used to these ends). This is why Prohibition didn't work: It denied what people knew to be true about alco-

Not that legalization of drugs wouldn't put the drug dealers out of business while empowering their free-market successors. Is that the larger imperative - bowing to Things as They Are in preference to things as they not only used to be but might well be again, with some concentration, hard work and spiritual fortification?

I doubt it. I really do.

Third party hopefuls keep politics alive

Take a long-range historical view of the presidential race. When America is in turmoil - which it is more often than not - third parties or independent candidacies frequently play a big role in shaping a new direction, usually for the better. Will it happen this year? Ross Perot? Jesse Jackson? Ralph Nader? Pat Buchanan? Bill Bradley? Colin Powell?

We tend to regard third-choice options as rare stop-the-presses events. That is just plain wrong, as I hope was clearly demonstrated in the documentary television program, "A Third Choice," which aired recently on PBS stations. As the host/essayist of that film, I had my eyes opened. Third-choice movements, parties and candidates have been omnipresent and omni-influential.

Within a few decades after the United States was born, the Anti-Masonic Party had formed, protesting the aristocratic elitism of the major parties with their do-good, hoity-toity secret societies. By 1832 they had their own presidential candidate, William Wirt. He only got 8% of the vote, but he did send the big boys a message. The Masonic Order shriveled.

The issue was much graver when the most successful third-choice candidate in American history came along. He was an upwardly mobile young corporate lawyer from Illinois: Abraham Lincoln. The Republican Party, with anti-slavery neither the Democrats nor the Whigs would take a solid stand against slavery. The very first Republican presidential candidate, Gen. John C. and the minimum wage.

Ben Wattenberg

Fremont, finished second in 1856. Lincoln won in 1860 and again in 1864. The third party became the first party.

The People's Party - the Populists - angry at low farm prices and Eastern robber barons, ran James P. Weaver in 1892. He only got 9% of the vote. But when a great depression hit in 1893, a fiery, radical "popocrat," William Jennings Bryan, was nominated by the Democrats and pretty well gobbled up the party. Even today there are those who say: "Scratch a Democrat and find a populist.

A former Republican president, Theodore Roosevelt, ran as a third choice candidate in 1912 and finished second with 27% of the vote. He split the Republicans, helping elect Democrat Woodrow Wilson. Roosevelt's Progressive Party lost, but provided much of the substantive fuel as its driving issue, didn't form until 1854 when for both major parties in the years to come: women's suffrage, restrictions on child labor, food and drug laws, the progressive income tax Strom Thurmond's States' Rights Party played the race card and got only 2.4% of the national popular vote in 1948. But he carried the electoral votes of four Southern states. Twenty years later, George Wallace's third-choice candidacy mixed race with crime and social discord and got 13% of the vote, carrying five Southern states, exploding the idea of a Democratic "solid South." Most Wallace voters ended up in the Republican Party, which today seems to be taking over the South.

There were other important third choice candidates over the years: Robert La Follette, Eugene Debs, Norman Thomas, Henry Wallace and John

And today? Well, there is Ross Perot, who in 1992, got 19% of the vote. Will Perot run? He's spending time and money to form a third party, although he says it will probably be a vehicle for someone else. Sure. Look for a Perot candidacy, with the possibility of former Senator David Boren as his running mate.

That's not all. Ralph Nader will be on the ballot in California, Jesse Jackson has always wanted to start a third party of the left, and the liberal New Party already has presidential ballot access in most states. If Buchanan wins the nomination, do the Republicans split? Might Colin Powell be drafted to head a third party? If Buchanan loses, does he head a third party?

I do not know what will happen. I do know that it's normal for American elections to be abnormal. There are usually more choices than two, and there probably will be this year.

DEAR ABBY: On the subject of giving baby showers for unwed mothers

A few years ago, the women's organization board of my church decided to give a baby shower for the young woman who baby-sat in the nursery during Sunday services. (I'll call her "Tracy.") She was unmarried, pregnant and teetering very close to going on welfare, with little support from her family or the father-to-be.

Putting aside the morality of outof-wedlock pregnancies, we and all the young mothers of the children Tracy watched on Sunday reached out to another human being in need. I believe this is what good Christians are supposed to do in such a situation.

Tracy had a baby boy, and not a tongue clucked nor was an eyebrow raised when Tracy and her infant son played Mary and Baby Jesus in our live nativity scene in our Christmas pageant.

I believe it's possible to reach out to someone in need - in this instance, an unwed mother — without condoning the situation, don't you?

MARTHA FOX, ALLENTOWN, PA.

DEAR MARTHA: Indeed I do. What a gracious gesture from a group of compassionate women who practice what is preached in the Scriptures — "Judge not that ye be not judged." God bless you all.

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Early in the Pontiac Excitement 400, Jeff Gordon knew he had the best car in the field. Near the end, he wasn't so sure.

Gordon, the reigning Winston Cup champion, got his 1996 season untracked after a two-week delay, outrunning Dale Jarrett and three Jack Roush Fords on Sunday to win the third race of the season at Richmond International Raceway.

"I got a little nervous there at the end," said Gordon, who moved from 43rd to 27th in this year's standings. "When we started having all those short runs on new tires, I didn't know if I could hold those guys off."

Gordon led five times for 124 laps, including the last 50. After being 41st and 40th in the first two races, the victory came at a crucial time.

"We needed this. I think this is the first time we've really needed a win in a while," said Gordon, who hadn't won since last September at Dover, Del. "This will totally turn things around for the morale of the Gordon had to win five sprints in the last 50 laps, each the result of a caution period that allowed the Fords behind him the catch up. The last came with five laps remaining, and he pulled away to win easily.

Jarrett moved into the series points lead with his second straight second-place finish following his victory in the Daytona 500. In his first year racing for a new Robert Yates team, he said he's been pleased.

"Things have gone really well, and when you have a good race car, it makes things a lot easier," he said. "It is fun

Jarrett said he needs to keep taking advantage of the roll he's on.

"Momentum is a big factor in this series," he said. "Just look at Gordon last year. They got things going and then couldn't do anything wrong. Towards the end of the year they were doing the same things, but nothing went right. We've got to take it and use it to our advantage while we have it."

The race, run under green from the 85th lap until the 349th, turned into something akin to a demolition derby for the last 50 laps. Of the eight cautions, five came during the last eighth of the $1.34 million race.

A spin by Darrell Waltrip caused eight caution laps, then Elton Sawyer and Dale Earnhardt spun out in the second turn. Gordon, Musgrave and Jarrett barely dodged Earnhardt's rolling Chevrolet before the caution went out.

Sawyer, whose spin was caused by a bump in the rear from Ernie Irvan, tangled with Irvan again right after the return to green on the 380th of the 400 laps, causing another yellow flag that lasted until the 382nd lap.

"I'd like two chances (in two Olympics) like other guys. ... I know I could be an asset because I've been playing against all those guys from other countries with my touring team. ... Louisiana Tech had 968 points in the voting, Connecticut (28-3) had 919 and Stanford (23-2) 886. Georgia still got one first-place for 24th. There were no newcomvote, while Connecticut received two and Stanford one.

Old Dominion climbed one place to sixth, its highest ranking of the season, and was followed by Texas Tech, Iowa, Penn State and Alabama.

Iowa, playing without two injured starters, lost to Purdue in the Big Ten semifinals and fell two places. Virginia dropped from eighth to 11th after losing to Clemson in the semifinals of the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament and Vanderbilt went from 10th to 12th after a quarterfinal SEC loss to Florida.

Serb general pleads innocent before war tribunal

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — A leading Serb general whose indictment sparked a crisis in Bosnia pleaded innocent of war crimes charges today at his arraignment before the Yugoslav war crimes tribunal.

Gen. Djordje Djukic was indicted Friday for his role in the Serb shelling of Sarajevo that killed 10,000 civilians. He faces a maximum life sentence if found guilty.

"I have not done anything that would have to put me in front of this tribunal today," a stonyfaced Diukic told the court.

this tribunal means that any member of the (Serbian) army ... can appear here. I will leave it to the tribunal to solve this dilemma."

Djukic was dressed casually in a camel-colored sweater, a white shirt and tie, and blue jeans.

He occasionally took notes as his indictment was read out.

in-law urging an early divorce. Diana took three months to consider before coming around on Wednesday - but that's about all both sides agree that happened at the meeting.

TOKYO (AP) — The body of a U.S. Marine who drowned after a weekend canoeing accident has been recovered in southwestern Japan, Japanese police said today.

Police identified the Marine as Reynold Ledesma, 24, of Weslaco, Texas, a sergeant assigned to the U.S. Marine Corps Air Station in Iwakuni, 445 miles southwest of Tokyo.

The Justice study found that a third of these child victims were the offspring or stepchildren of their attackers.

The department's Bureau of Justice Statistics estimated that state prisons held 43,552 inmates in 1991 who raped or sexually assaulted children under 18. That represents 65.5 percent of the estimated 66,482 state inmates convicted of raping or sexually assaulting victims of all ages.

> As of last September, 14 states had adopted what Beatty's group categorized as community notification statutes, providing some kind of notice to all or part of a community when certain sex offenders were released from prison.

Many of these laws remain under court challenge as unconstitutional. Last year, Attorney General Janet Reno had Justice Department lawyers help New Jersey defend "Megan's Law," a notification act passed in 1994 and named after 7-year-old Megan Kanka who was raped and killed.

The Justice Department data are consistent with a 1992 national survey of crime victims by Beatty's group. "Of those who were sexu-"This high rate of child victims is behind ally victimized, 61 percent said it happened attacked children. The Justice study found that more than half the child victims of rape or sexual assault were age 12 or younger. Among all child victims of violence, three-fourths were female.

A third of child molesters had attacked their own child or stepchild. Another half of the molesters were a friend, acquaintance or more-distant relative of their victim. Only one the child's home. The government found that prisoners who attacked children were mostly male, 97 percent, and were more likely to be white, nearly 70 percent, and married or divorced, 64 percent, than prisoners who had victimized those 18 or older. The average child victimizer was five years older than the average inmate who attacked adults.

The bureau estimated that 327,958 inmates committed violent crimes of all kinds, and 18.6 percent of those inmates, or 61,037, far outdistanced murder, kidnaping and all other violent crimes against children.
