SMOKE AND FLAMES pour from the windows of the 42-story Westvaco Corporation building in mid-Manhattan Monday as firemen observe the scene. The five-alarm blaze erupted on the 20th floor of the office tower on Park Avenue at 49th Street, and firefighters were searching the building for people who may have been trapped inside.

Tower firefighters overcome by smoke

NEW YORK (AP) — It was the kind of blaze big-city firefighters have learned to dread — flames spurting from a 42-story Park Avenue skyscraper, about 125 firefighters felled by toxic smoke and heat and an unknown number of people trapped inside the concrete and glass tower.

Fire marshals returned to the 20th floor of the building this morning, seeking the cause of the fire in the Westvaco Building, opposite the fashionable Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in midtown Manhattan. The blaze raged out of control for three hours Monday night as shards of glass fell onto the streets below.

Streams of water gushed from the executive offices of the Bank of America, where the blaze apparently began. Firefighters were able to contain the fire to that floor, but acrid smoke mixed with noxious fumes from plastic furniture rose as high as the 40th floor.

Parts of the building were heavily damaged in the fire, which went to five alarms and was battled by some 250 firefighters. The structure, workplace for thousands of people, was closed today. Officials said it was expected to reopen Wednesday.

The smoke was so thick that two firemen lost their way in the glass tower for 45 minutes and 15 people trapped on the 32nd floor stuffed absorbent items beneath a door to keep from inhaling the toxic fumes.

Fire marshals said the cause was undetermined and the fire did not appear suspicious. The building did not have a sprinkler system, and one was not required.

No fatalities were reported but officials said four firefighters suffered heart attacks and up to 75 people were taken to area hospitals. A total of 125 people, mostly firefighters, were treated for smoke inhalation and cuts from flying glass.

Firefighters were forced to break windows to keep the fire from consuming oxygen on the floors above. On the street below, thousands crowded police barricades to watch.

"The smoke is just indescribable and the heat is like an oven," firefighter John Pistelli said before the blaze was doused as he stood at the makeshift emergency ward set up in the building's lushly appointed lobby. "The smoke is so thick you can lean on it."

For workers in the building, the problem was finding out about the fire and then finding a way to get out. Fire officials could not say how many people were caught in the building when the blaze erupted at about 7:30 p.m. but all were either evacuated by firemen or left safely by way of stairs or elevators.

"We never heard any alarms," said a law firm employee who was working on the 35th floor. "One of the attorneys looked out the window and saw billows of smoke."

Fire Commissioner August Beekman said Monday the fire was "not an unusual fire for a high-rise building" but he said that "not unusual" still meant lots of problems.

Among them he listed the difficulty of knowing how many people are stuck in an office tower and the problem of finding ways to remove them. He also said that getting oxygen to firefighters is a problem.

Said Deputy Fire Commissioner John Mulligan: "It's allegedly a fireproof building. But firemen say there's no such thing."

The building, located between 48th and 49th streets, also houses the corporate headquarters of the SCM Corp. and offices of Republic Steel Co.

Pays tribute to Tito

Carter reaffirms support of Yugoslavia

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — President Carter arrived in Belgrade today, reaffirming America's commitment to "a strong, independent and non-aligned Yugoslavia" and its support for detente.

Emphasizing his backing for Yugoslavia's unique role in Eastern Europe, Carter paid tribute to the late Josip Broz Tito, the architect of the communist country's independent policies, and laid a wreath at his tomb.

"My pleasure in visiting this proud and beautiful land is tempered by the sorrow we all feel at the passing of President Tito. He was a great man, one of the greatest of the 20th century," Carter said as he arrived in Belgrade to a 21-gun salute, and a personal welcome by Tito's successor, Ovijetin Mijatovic.

"President Tito left a precious legacy, a strong, independent and non-aligned Yugoslavia," Carter said at Surcin airport. "I have come to Belgrade to assure you of the friendship and support of the United States as you build on that legacy."

The foundation of U.S.-Yugoslav relations is "firm and durable," Carter said, after he arrived aboard Air Force One at 8:39 a.m. (3:39 a.m. EDT) on a flight from Venice, Italy.

Proclaiming his administration's support for detente, Carter said that this policy "must be based on reciprocity. It must be based on mutual restraint. It must be based on the principles of sovereignty, territorial integrity, and non-interference in the affairs of other nations."

"These are the principles of international life for which Yugoslavia has always struggled," the president said, recognizing the long fight Tito conducted for his country's independence from both Moscow and the West.

After the formal welcome, which included honors by Tito's personal guards outfitted in light blue tunics, Carter drove to the late president's white marble tomb to lay a wreath.

The American president has been sensitive to criticism from some quarters that he should have attended Tito's funeral in early May — an event that brought together Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev and many other world leaders.

Asked at a news conference in Venice on Monday if he felt he had made a mistake, Carter said his absence from the Tito rites was not intended to be disrespectful and he quickly noted that more than 40 national leaders, including the presidents of France and Mexico, did not go to Belgrade at that time.

The American president also claimed the results of a trip now "will be much more beneficial" than a visit in the immediate aftermath of Tito's death.

In an interview with Yugoslav journalists released on the eve of his arrival, Carter said he and Tito had "exchanged many long letters which were private and confidential in nature but exceptionally open in the discussion of our two countries and relations and also about events in other countries which attracted our attention."

Tito counseled him, Carter said, on the Soviet drive into Afghanistan, a move opposed by both U.S. and Yugoslav leaders, and on nuclear arms limitations and the American hostage crisis in Iran.

After his arrival and a trip by motorcade to place the wreath inside Tito's tomb, Carter's schedule called for meetings with President Cvijetin Mijatovic and other Yugoslav leaders, a trip to a Belgrade park to plant an American sequoia as a "friendship tree" and a tour of the ancient ramparts overlooking the Danube River. A state dinner in Carter's honor was planned for tonight.

The visiting president, who was accompanied on his European tour by his wife, Rosalynn, and their daughter, Amy, will fly to Madrid on Wednesday and stop in Lisbon on Thursday before returning to the White House.

Government approves Chrysler loan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government board today approved a $500 million federally guaranteed loan to the ailing Chrysler Corp., a loan delayed repeatedly by balking banks worried about the automaker's ability to survive.

The final approval was postponed for 90 minutes this morning because of a fire Monday night in a New York City office building where some of the crucial loan documents were located.

The Chrysler Loan Guarantee Board approved issuance of $500 million in guaranteed notes and affirmed its commitment to back another $1 billion in future loans.

The actions come despite continued deterioration in the auto industry, with sales declining amid a fast-deepening recession.

Frederick Schultz, vice chairman of the Federal Reserve Board and a member of the loan guarantee panel, called the decision a "close call," but he and other members voiced optimism that actions by Chrysler will prove successful.

The major action is imminent introduction of Chrysler's K-car, a front-wheel drive, lightweight intended to compete with imports.

Crucial papers relating to the Chrysler loan were in offices in the damaged Westvaco Corp. building on Manhattan's Park Avenue. The documents were not destroyed, but they had to be transferred to other buildings before the meeting in Washington could proceed.

The board's completion of its part in the legal proceedings to authorize the loan guarantee had been postponed repeatedly last week as Treasury Department and company officials worked feverishly to persuade a handful of reluctant banks to participate in the intricate bailout package.

The last holdout, Deutsch Genossenschaftsbank of Frankfurt, West Germany, agreed "in principle" Friday, and, according to a Chrysler spokesman who asked not to be identified, signed up Monday.

The bailout package restructures Chrysler's $4.4 billion debt and involves about 400 banks and insurance companies owed money by the nation's No. 3 auto manufacturer. The bailout eventually will involve $1.5 billion in guaranteed loans.

Following the approval, documents are to be signed in numerous offices around New York City, where lawyers for the many parties involved have worked to complete required documentation, the Treasury official said.

Cloak with Virgin's image to undergo tests

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Scientists have suggested another series of complex scientific tests be run on a cloak with the image of the Virgin Mary.

The tests were suggested after scientists concluded five dozen infrared photos on the image of Our Lady of Guadalupe taken last year failed to explain how the image of the Virgin Mary was applied to the cactus fiber cloak and why both have lasted 450 years.

Monsignor Enrique Salazar, representing the abbot of the Basilica of Guadalupe in Mexico City where the image is enshrined, agreed Sunday to allow scientists to conduct a second battery of tests.

Salazar and the scientists, historians, theologians and sociologists were in San Antonio over the weekend for a two-day talk concerning the overall study of the cloak to be conducted under the auspices of the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate. The scientific analysis of the Indian peasant cloak is only one phase of the project. Earlier historical phases traced through five countries missing documents containing a written narrative of Juan Diego's accounts of appearances in 1531 by the Virgin Mary, and how her image appeared on his cloak as a sign to a disbelieving bishop.

The Rev. G. Gordon Henderson said the two-year-old study included exhaustive efforts of Jesuit scholar the Rev. Ernest Burrus in locating key documents. Henderson said it had been believed the documents were taken by Gen. Winfield Scott during the Mexican-American War to discredit the story of the miraculous image. Burrus, however, followed a trail from Mexico to Spain, France, England and then the United States where the Indian dialect account was found among a collection of documents donated to the New York City Public Library.

The document is now being studied while searches for others are being conducted in Europe.

But tests have yet to determine the nature of the colors or how they were applied to make the image or why such raw, crude cloth untreated in any way and usually lasting 20 years at most is still intact 450 years later.

Illegally seized evidence can be used

WASHINGTON (AP) — A criminal defendant has no right to challenge the government's use of evidence illegally seized from someone else, a 6-3 Supreme Court majority says.

The court's dissenters contend that federal courts now have become "the accomplice of the government lawbreaker and accessory after the fact."

A tale of government intrigue and blatant, intentional violations of constitutional rights by government agents served as a backdrop for Monday's decision.

The case involved the Internal Revenue Service's investigation into the use of a Bahamian bank as an illegal tax haven for Americans, the so-called Operation Trade Winds probe.

IRS agent Richard Jaffe in Jacksonville, Fla., paid an informant who in turn enlisted the aid of a private investigator, Sybil Kennedy, in Miami.

Ms. Kennedy was paid to befriend the vice president of Nassau's Castle Bank and Trust Co. One night in 1973, while the couple was at dinner, the informant stole the bank official's briefcase so Jaffe could photograph more than 400 documents in it before replacing it at Ms. Kennedy's apartment.

The documents eventually led to the federal indictment in Cleveland of Ohio resident Jack Payner for tax evasion.

A federal trial judge initially convicted Payner after studying all the evidence against him, but later learned how the Nassau bank documents had been obtained. The judge then ruled that the result of such a flagrantly illegal search of the banker's briefcase could not be used as evidence, and further ruled that the remaining evidence was insufficient to convict Payner.

The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld that ruling, but both lower courts were reversed in Monday's decision.

"No court should condone the unconstitutional and possibly criminal behavior of those who planned and executed this briefcase caper," Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. wrote for the court.

But Powell said exclusion of the illegally-obtained evidence could not be used as a means of preventing such misconduct. He said to do so would exact "a costly toll upon the ability of courts to ascertain the truth in a criminal case."

Justices Thurgood Marshall, William J. Brennan Jr. and Harry A. Blackmun voiced strong disagreement. In other decisions Monday, the court:

—Ruled that federal law, specifically a section of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, effectively requires all complaints about on-the-job discrimination to be filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission within 240 days of the allegedly unlawful act if the alleged victim wants to sue his or her employer in federal court.

—Ruled by a 5-4 vote that a lawyer who "unreasonably and vexatiously" delays or complicates a federal case can be forced to pay the other side's attorney's fees. The justices said federal courts have the "inherent power" to assess such fees personally against lawyers who operate in bad faith.

Bizarre information uncovered about gunman

DAINGERFIELD, Texas (AP) — Residents here still were reeling from the bloody attack on a church congregation that left five dead as unexpected elements of the accused gunman's past continued to surface today.

A reclusive former schoolteacher, Alvin Lee King III, has been charged with five counts of murder and 10 counts of assault with intent to murder.

A heavily armed man burst through the doors of the First Baptist Church Sunday and began blasting at Sunday worshippers with a rapid-fire rifle. Fifteen persons were hit before the flak-jacketed gunman shot himself in the head, police said.

King, 45, was in critical condition with "unstable vital signs" at John Sealy Hospital in Galveston, a spokesman there said. Known to Daingerfield residents as an intelligent, but often unsociable person, King also was involved in the 1966 fatal shooting of his 49-year-old father.

Records discovered by the Corpus Christi Caller-Times show King's father, Alvin Lee King Jr., died instantly when he was struck in the head by a blast from a .12-gauge shotgun.

On a Sunday morning, Feb. 6, 1966, King was visiting from Longview and the family was looking over a gun collection, the records show. King was holding a .12-gauge shotgun moments before the fatal blast, said Justice of the Peace Armando Flores, who ruled the death accidental.

"At that time I was coroner," Flores said Monday night. The gun was supposed to have fallen to the floor. They (King, his father and mother, Hazel) were looking at the gun and it had fallen from the son's grasp and discharged, hitting the old man in the face and neck."

Lillian Leathers, 73, whose drugstore is near the King family home in Corpus Christi, said the Feb. 6, 1966 shooting was very hard on Mrs. King, who still runs a liquor store there.

"She's been through so much," Mrs. Leathers said. "Her husband was killed right in front of her and now this. It (the 1966 shooting) was ruled an accident, but a lot of people didn't think so."

"It was pretty hard on her, but she seemed to be in control." King's mother, Hazel, said she had "nothing to say at all" about Sunday's shooting spree.

Mrs. Leathers said the Kings were "well respected" but talked little of their children.

"I heard the son used to travel a lot and trap animals," she said. "His parents had a couple — a lion and a monkey."

"I remember, yes," Flores said. "They had a weird collection of animals. A mountain lion in the city and a chimpanzee or a baboon in a cage that scared the heck out of me."

Daingerfield authorities say they still have no motive for the mid-worship attack, although several residents have speculated it was tied to King's impending trial on incest charges.

He was slated for trial Monday in nearby Sulphur Springs on incest charges brought on behalf of his 21-year-old daughter, Cynthia.

The Rev. Donald Sinclair, a Methodist minister who recently moved from a Daingerfield church to Houston where he is also pastor, who with his son had encouraged the daughter to bring the charges, said he was to appear in court to "support Cynthia."

"King had tried to go to court with witnesses in his behalf from the First Baptist Church, but the witnesses would not go," Sinclair said. "If I had been in town, it (the shooting) probably would have been (at) me."

Sinclair believes his family was punished for encouraging the charges.

His son, Stanley, was stabbed to death by two joggers Dec. 28 in Houston in what Sinclair termed "a professional killing." Houston police said they have no suspects in the death.

"My son was the one she (Cynthia) told about the incest. He tried to help the girl understand that a father has no right to do this to his daughter," Sinclair said. "They (the killers) knew exactly what they were doing. There was no other motive other than to punish my son for something."

Investigators said they also were puzzled by a "bizarre" note and papers found at the King home that indicated the part-time farmer once had applied for Russian citizenship.

"There was a letter from the Russian embassy denying him citizenship and explaining that Russia does not grant citizenship to Americans," said Cass County sheriff's deputy Emit Kennedy.

Other documents showed King had deposited money in a Swiss bank account in April and May.

Kennedy said he did not understand a note he found after Sunday's bloodbath on the kitchen table at King's secluded home.

"I don't know what to make of it," he said of the note. "It really didn't make any sense to me. It was just a strange, weird scribbling on a piece of paper there."

A Daingerfield police officer who saw the note said it was "dealing with a nuclear Armageddon" and a "nuclear first strike by the Russians."

Kennedy said he found King's wife, Gretchen, bound hand and foot to a chair at the farmhouse, unaware of the morning slayings.

He said Mrs. King told him, "He (her husband) told me to sit down, he was going to tie me up. He told me he loved me and he didn't want to hurt me."

Church members spent the day Monday preparing for today's funerals. Church secretary Mary Allen said the carpet — more than one quarter of it stained with blood — would be ripped out and the floors sanded.

The church was to host funerals for three of the five victims: City councilman Kenneth Truitt, 49; Thelma Richardson, 78, and Gene Gandy, 50. Seven-year-old Gina Linam, the first to die in the spray of bullets, was scheduled for burial in DeKalb today.

Funeral arrangements for James Y. McDaniel, 51, who died after struggling with the assailant, were pending.

RIVER RIDER ALBERT MARLIN checks the Texas side for signs of stray or smuggled livestock with the Rio Grande and Mexico in the background. Harlan is a county supervisor of the federal Tick Eradication Services that helps protect the nation against cattle tick fever coming from Mexico. (AP Laserphoto)

Range riders corral strays from Mexico

HIDALGO (AP) — In 24 years of patrolling the Rio Grande on horseback, Albert Harlan has dodged bullets, stumbled over dead men, watched illegal aliens swim from Mexico and spotted signs of drug smugglers.

But none of that really concerns him. Harlan rides and ropes for Uncle Sam, watching for stray or smuggled livestock from Mexico that may be carrying dangerous fever ticks.

Harlan is one of the 108 people — including one woman — working for the Tick Eradication Service within the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Animal Health Services — government cowboys, in a sense.

It's a close-knit organization that helps protect the nation's livestock industry from devastating outbreaks of cattle tick fever. The service's territory covers eight Texas counties bordering Mexico from Del Rio south to the mouth of the Rio Grande.

Harlan, 53, a large man with a weathered face and a no-nonsense manner, wears a straw cowboy hat, boots, spurs and chaps. Harlan is the real article.

Harlan supervises 14 inspectors in Hidalgo County. Each furnishes his or her own horse, trailer, saddle and equipment. The job pays $11,243 for beginners. The government throws in another $2,600 a year to compensate its cowboys for the use of their own horses.

The government's tick quarantine zone ranges in width from 1 mile to 6 miles north of the river. All horses and cattle leaving the zone must be dipped in or sprayed with pesticides.

Any livestock found straying within the zone are rounded up and treated. Since Oct. 1, the force has corralled about 180 cattle and horses, said Dr. Wilson Boaz, tick force director.

Problems most often arise when Mexican cattle stray across the Rio Grande, or when they are brought into the United States by smugglers.

During the trail drives of the 1880s, Texas cattle spread fever-carrying ticks north into Kansas and into the Southeast. Texas cattle had built up an immunity to the blood disease carried by the ticks, but other cattle died in droves.

A federal eradication program began in 1906 and ultimately pushed the line of defense down to the current buffer zone between the Amistad Dam near Del Rio and the Gulf of Mexico.

The State of Texas pays $525,000 a year for chemicals and other expenses while the federal government budgets $3 million.

The tick force is the only mounted patrol along the river border and federal cowboys like Harlan often tip U.S. Customs and Border Patrol agents to illegal activity such as drug smuggling.

"You come up on all sorts of things. I wouldn't send anyone out alone at night," Harlan said. "If you come up to somebody sitting over $40,000 worth of marijuana, they're not going to have any qualms about killing you."

Each inspector in Hidalgo patrols about 10 miles of river. They know all the curves and sand bars, which horses and cattle belong there and the favorite smuggling spots. The cowboys can cover about four miles of river an hour, riding through the thick brush and high grasses along the banks.

The area abounds in owls, ground squirrels and some bobcats. For a break from the unrelenting south Texas sun, the riders often slice open cantelopes growing in nearby fields.

Inspectors spend a lot of time alone and that can be dangerous. Derley Guerra, an eight-year veteran working Hidalgo County, once lay for three hours with a broken hip after his horse fell on him. He coaxed a man to cross the river and help him and was back in the saddle three months later.

An inspector drowned eight years ago near Brownsville. "He was roping some cattle when a bull thrashed around, hit his horse and he fell off and drowned in the river," said Tom Garcia, Cameron County supervisor.

Another inspector stationed at a camp outpost north of Laredo was murdered four years ago in an unsolved slaying.

Inspectors are trained to work with pesticides and must complete a course in tick identification. As a precaution, their blood is tested every three months for possible pesticide contamination.

Formerly, the job required a satisfactory score on the civil service test. But, Garcia said, supervisors persuaded central office directors to drop the test after some new employees with high test scores could barely sit in the saddle.

Carter campaign camp naming own march tunes

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's campaign camp is marching to the tune of its own delegates on anti-nuclear power and pro-abortion planks to retain clear control over the Democratic Party's 1980 platform.

As the Democratic Platform Committee completes its work today, the administration has yet to lose a single floor vote to the rival forces of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

But the president's supporters have achieved an unblemished record before the 158-member committee only by accepting compromise positions to forestall defeats that they fear would be interpreted as signs of administration weakness or Kennedy triumphs.

"The basic objective (of the administration) was not to lose anything," even if it meant bending presidential policies to fit delegates' positions, complained Peter Edelman, Kennedy's chief issues adviser.

Martin Franks, one of Carter's floor managers, agreed. "Our instructions were to win every vote," he said.

On Monday, the administration reluctantly accepted language calling for the eventual elimination of nuclear power plants. The compromise was agreed to at the last minute when it became clear that despite intense White House pressure, the Carter-dominated platform committee would not go along with the president's policy of continued reliance on nuclear energy for the foreseeable future. In fact, the revolt was led by Carter delegates.

The nuclear plank, which was adopted unanimously, put the committee closer to the position of Kennedy, who has made the phase-out of nuclear power a key issue in his campaign. And the Kennedy forces, repudiated on all their other major issues, latched onto the compromise as their first — and only — significant victory on the platform committee.

However, Carter aides interpreted the compromise as a victory for their side. They said they were able to tone down a more strongly worded plank for phasing out nuclear plants into a position closer to Carter's policy.

If there was a clear victor on the issue, it was the Campaign for Safe Energy, an anti-nuclear coalition that attracted backers from both the Kennedy and Carter camps by urging delegates to transcend campaign differences.

The anti-nuclear plank may prove to be symbolic anyway. Carter and other western leaders attending the economic summit conference in Venice coincidentally issued a joint communique Monday calling for expanded use of nuclear power to reduce their reliance on imported oil, and Carter aides here raised doubts as to whether the president would abide by the platform language.

The Carter forces averted another potential loss before the committee Monday by accepting a pro-abortion plank that supported the 1973 Supreme Court decision on abortion rights and opposing a plank agreed to after it became clear that a united coalition of Carter and Kennedy delegates would not accept the administration's proposal to merely state that a constitutional amendment "in this area is not appropriate."

However, the committee rejected a plank proposed by Kennedy delegates to endorse federally financed abortions for poor women.

In several minor areas of disagreement between the Carter and Kennedy camps, the administration made compromises to prevent floor fights. But on every other major issue that came before the full committee Sunday and Monday, the Carter forces consistently prevailed by margins of up to 2-to-1.

During a marathon Monday session that continued into today's early hours, Kennedy lost on proposals to ration gasoline, impose new controls on oil prices, increase spending on solar power, enact a comprehensive national health insurance bill and immediately lift the administration's grain embargo against the Soviet Union in protest of the military intervention in Afghanistan.

On one issue that enjoyed broad support from both Carter and Kennedy delegates, the party for the first time went on record in favor of full civil rights for homosexuals by urging an end to discrimination on the basis of "sexual orientation."

Council will decide water rate July 7

A further study will be conducted July 7 at 4 p.m., by the Pampa City Commission to determine if the proposed water rate change will be approved.

Councilmen were asked to hear the arguments of several city residents as they protested the proposed rate change.

Walter Shed presented the council members with a petition containing 59 signatures representing 218 multiple properties in the city.

"Everyone should have to pay the higher rates, not just the few who own multiple properties. The higher rates will just be passed on the renters, and they sometimes cannot afford the higher charge," Mayor Thompson told the large crowd at the council meeting, "the rate ordinance will not be acted on at the meeting and at the future meeting, councilmen will review the proposed rate hike."

"You cannot just keep raising the rates, because we older persons and working people cannot afford to pay," one older citizen told the councilmen.

Protesting citizens were advised to have their petitions put in writing and sent to the city manager before the July 7 meeting.

"There will be no action taken on the water rate change proposal at the July 7 meeting, it will just be a study session," Mayor H.R. Thompson said.

In other action the council accepted the bid of $10,198.00 from Culberson-Stowers for a new animal control vehicle.

Hospital rampage leaves child dead, eight injured

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Rose Lombardi tried desperately to rescue her 6-year-old son when she saw a man swing a thin-bladed boning knife at him. But when it was over, little Anthony Lombardi was dead and Mrs. Lombardi and four other people were wounded in a bloody hospital stabbing spree.

"It was panic," said hospital guard George Bishop. "There was blood all over the place...people screaming...running in every direction."

William B. Robinson, a former ice cream factory employee, was charged with murder and eight counts of assault with a dangerous weapon and was hospitalized under police guard after the Monday incident.

His sister said the rampage came one day after Robinson, 42, visited the same hospital, seeking admission and warning he might kill.

"If they had put him in the hospital, this never would have happened," said Edna Hooks. "These people wouldn't have been hurt. He was threatening to kill everybody that got in his way."

The hospital issued a denial that Robinson had sought admission. According to security guards at the Springfield Hospital Unit of Bay State Medical Center, the man walked into the emergency room about 10 a.m., grabbed a woman and began stabbing her. Guard Harold Ferrier, 62, radioed for help before he was stabbed in the back.

Bishop heard the call — "Somebody's been stabbing everybody over here!" — and came running. He said he found the man outside on the ambulance dock, crouched over, with young Lombardi in his arms.

"At first when I saw his hand moving up and down I thought he was trying to assist him," said Bishop. "But then I saw the knife."

Bishop, 55, said he persuaded the man to drop the weapon. Mrs. Lombardi, 30, of Agawam, was hospitalized in stable condition with stab wounds received when she tried to save her child. Police said she and her son had gone to the hospital to pick up a patient.

Besides Ferrier and Mrs. Lombardi, three women patients were treated for knife wounds.

Police said the violence began an hour earlier at Robinson's house. Lt. John Coville said Robinson burst into a bathroom and threw a caustic drain cleaning chemical at his wife, Norma, burning her and his 5-year-old granddaughter, Shandolyn Reynolds. He then stabbed his wife, police said, and headed toward the hospital.

Mrs. Robinson was in fair condition and Miss Reynolds in good condition at Baystate's Wesson unit.

Robinson, who received first- and second-degree burns on his arms and chest from the chemical, was in fair condition at the same hospital.

Family members said he never fully recovered from a stroke several years ago and had been taking Valium and other tranquilizers.

Ms. Hooks said she and her brother had gone to the hospital on Sunday seeking admission for him. She said he told a doctor, "My wife wants me to kill her and I'm gonna kill her."

Hospital spokesman Joseph Bradley said emergency room physician Dr. Malcolm Fairweather treated Robinson for "a physical ailment, not a mental one," which he declined to disclose.

DETERMINED TO PICNIC, the Leonard Olson family stopped at the Interstate 90 rest area east of Onalaska, Wis., recently, only to find that recent high winds had left the place strewn with uprooted trees, including an oak which landed on the picnic

State department says mother can visit hostage son again

By The Associated Press
Iran's foreign minister said the U.S. hostage crisis may be resolved in about a month and the State Department granted an exemption to Barbara Timm to see her captive son again. But any optimism about a quick release for the Americans was dampened by a radical Islamic party which urged Parliament to have the hostages tried as spies.

"Imam Khomeini and the Iranian nation believe that the hostages are spies and must be tried," the Struggling Moslems' Movement, which is close to the Americans' captors, said in its party newspaper Ommat. "Those deputies who do not ask for trying the hostages are in fact compromisers who resist the demands of Imam Khomeini."

Azerbaijan province, and six revolutionary guards including the town's guard commander.

In an interview Monday with French television, Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh said the hostage issue would be taken up by the Iranian Parliament after it chooses a new prime minister. The hostage crisis "could be settled in four or five weeks," he said.

Child victim of plot to attain stardom

HOUSTON (AP) — She's still young enough to play with dolls, but old enough to have ambitions of wanting "everyone on earth to know my name."

Tina Payne, a 10-year-old model, recently struck a sexy, provocative pose for the camera.

Her parents had no objections, but the Los Angeles Division of Labor Standards Enforcement disagreed.

"I think Tina has a come-hither look in the picture," said her father, Joe

Payne of his daughter's controversial black-and-white photograph. "She can't help it if she looks that way."

The hoopla began after the full-page photo appeared in several trade publications accompanied with the caption: "Would you believe I'm only 10?" — Tina Payne.

The government agency fined Tina's mother, Dorothy, $1,100 for "taking indecent photographs of a minor."

The publicity shots were the brainchild of Tina's agent, Tom Masters. The aspiring starlet has a "25-year-old face and a 10-year-old body," Masters said.

"I think they just wanted to pick on the little rich girl from Texas," Masters says. "If people have accused us of poor judgment, let them. I think it (the publicity campaign) has served its purpose."

The purpose was to make Tina, now 11, a star. Although Tina's family is from Highland, Texas, she has moved to Hollywood with her mother and sister to pursue her career.

"I want to be like John Wayne," Tina said during a recent interview. "I want everybody on this earth to know my name."

The child model said she saw nothing wrong with the $7,500 campaign paid for by her parents. The ad ran daily for a week last fall, although "Variety" refused to run the ad.

"We just wanted to make my career go farther faster," Tina said.

The Paynes paid

Hollywood photographer Harry Langdon $2,000 to shoot the pictures of Tina for the campaign. Langdon says he never coached the 65-pound actress to be sexy, only to look confident.

The shot that aroused the ire of the Labor Standards Enforcement bureau ran last November and featured Tina nude from the waist up, with her hands tucked under her face and her arms together in front of her.

The only other controversial photo was straight cheesecake, showing Tina clad in a dripping bathing suit and staring into the camera. "And I'm starting to look my age — 10," the caption read.

Residents vote on tax to bring home doctor

FORT COBB, Okla. (AP) — For the past 16 years, as Bruce Mackey grew up and went off to medical school, the 750 townspeople of Fort Cobb have been driving 11 miles to Carnegie to see a doctor. Today they vote on a penny tax that would bring Bruce back home — as Dr. Mackey.

The one-cent sales tax would help pay for Mackey's education at the University of Oklahoma College of Medicine. In return, Mackey, 23, says he would agree to practice in this central Oklahoma town for five to seven years.

"It's something Colleen (his wife) and I have been thinking and talking about for a long time," said the second-year student. "She's studying medicine, too. But I'd be the one to sign on the dotted line."

Floyd Ratliff, Chamber of Commerce president, said Fort Cobb would raise $15,000 for half of Mackey's schooling. The rest would come from the Government Manpower Division, he said.

Ratliff is convinced the tax, which he said would be limited to one year, will be passed.

"Everybody says they're against taxes — rarely do they know where the money ends up. But we'll know where every penny of this goes," Ratliff said. When Ratliff handed out a questionnaire asking whether residents would prefer the sales tax or a fund drive, 84 percent said they would prefer the sales tax, he said.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coveting Commandment.

Dangerous game is played on Potomac

A dangerous game plays on quietly in Washington, D.C. The players are specialists in chemical weaponry. At stake is intensified stockpiling of germ warfare capabilities.

On one side are contestants who insist the U.S. needs increased chemical weapons on the order of nerve gas to maintain national defense. Opponents claim our potential for such instant human destruction not only is sufficient, but a menace to ourselves as well as would-be enemies.

Their battle has created little public attention, largely because advocates of chemical killers want it that way. They work in the background, gradually garnering Congressional support, hoping to avoid publicity because citizens fear large-scale stores of human poisons. As well we should. Consider the inherent horrors:

—Scientists, including those promoting chemical warfare, admit long-range side effects cannot be predicted — generations following a war can suffer mutation.

—Chemicals can spread far beyond the area for which they are intended with such unpredictable variables as a wind shift. Along with the bomb-bearing enemy soldiers, children inadvertently die.

—Storage facilities are not foolproof. With all the government's concern about private industry polluting the environment, it neglects cleaning its own house. Witness Love Canal as the latest example of the government dumping its waste in the citizen lap.

Given government's sloppy record regarding environmental protection, how can we feel confident that lethal chemicals won't accidentally turn up in the best bass lake around?

—Government also shows a history of colossal goofs. Remember this spring when a military pilot accidentally dropped a bomb, starting a major forest fire in North Carolina. No lives were lost, but that was due to amazing luck or divine fortune, not military intelligence. Imagine if the bomb had been binary, capable of destroying the nervous systems of all living creatures as well as incendiary.

—Even government experts don't agree on the necessity for intensified chemical capability. Those whose research dates back to World War I when toxic chemicals first were applied against man say they are "non-essential weapons." One reason is that man cannot be protected against the chemicals; the good-guy-users are as susceptible as the bad-guy-recipients. Opponents argue this point not as a moral issue, but one of military pragmatism.

There is a moral issue involved, however. Rep. Patricia Schroeder of Colorado, raised it recently on a MacNeil-Lehrer news show. "Let's not try to be bigger outlaws than the Soviets," Rep. Schroeder said in response to U.S.S.R. analyst Amoretta Hoerber. Ms. Hoerber, a U.S. Department of Defense consultant argues that as the Soviets, apparently, stockpile mass human eradicators, the U.S. should follow suit. To Ms. Hoerber, amassing chemical weaponry amounts to no more than keeping a reserve of insecticide on hand to combat a roach attack. That eye-for-an-eye, tooth-for-a-tooth preparedness has kept mankind from achieving civilization since recorded time.

Rep. Schroeder raised another issue, one which involves a more direct moral consideration. The silent, but strong move to increase chemical strength came to her attention because Colorado is a primary storage area: Six chemical warfare sites border Denver alone and the government seeks to expand them. Colorado residents pressure their Congressional representatives to get the sites moved to Utah. You don't have to be a seer to know how Utah residents react to the proposal. As Rep. Schroeder observed, "No one says hippy-skippy" over living nextdoor to nerve gas lockers, binary bomb test sites or pit-viper breeding grounds, the latter included in the government's chemical defense plan.

No one should be forced to live with hazard and in constant trepidation whether in Denver, Gastonia or Hoboken. Such pernicious projects as chemical warfare expansion cause us to fear our own government more than any imagined enemy abroad.

A bill that is truly criminal

By Richard L. Lesher, President
Chamber of Commerce of the United States

WASHINGTON -- More and more Americans now believe this country is never really safe until Congress goes out on recess. It follows that when Congress stays in Washington, remains hard at work, and then comes up with a piece of legislation officially described as broad, sweeping, and vague, all of us should be on guard. This is especially true of a bill now awaiting final Senate approval that has been in the works for years, and that has the full support of America's favorite liberal, Senator Edward Kennedy.

Mr. Kennedy's legislation, S. 1722, is certainly broad and sweeping, for it is nothing less than an attempt to rewrite and consolidate the nation's criminal laws. What's more, it is VERY vaguely written. A man whose intelligence and diligence I greatly admire, Senator Jim McClure of Idaho, tells me he first became interested in Kennedy's bill two years ago, when he learned it would inadvertently invoke a two-year mandatory prison sentence for hunters who shot ducks out of season.

Now that McClure, working with the staff of the Senate Steering Committee, has thoroughly dissected the bill, he has reached a far more ominous conclusion that should horrify the entire American business community: In his words, "...a broad judicial interpretation of S. 1722 would put large numbers of businessmen in jail."

The bill makes literally hundreds of changes in current law. With only minor exceptions, those provisions governing business liability are made looser, more ambiguous, and thus, easier to interpret. Those provisions dealing with drug abuse, pornography, and sex crimes are made narrower and more difficult to interpret.

McClure observes: "It could be that these two divergent trends in the bill are wholly coincidental, and that the staff of the Senate's most liberal Senator has made hundreds of painfully constructed changes — many with cleverly executed liberal implications — innocently and without any ideological purpose. I, for one, think that is a fairy tale."

Take a look at some of the principal ways S. 1722 could transform America's approximately 14 million businessmen into our largest criminal class.

Under current law, the voluntary manslaughter statute does not apply to business because the crime must be committed "in the heat of passion." But, by turning manslaughter into a generalized "reckless homicide" statute, the Kennedy bill would open up a broad new area of business prosecution.

Next, remember the Supreme Court decision upholding Bill Barlow — the gutsy small businessman in Idaho, who said OSHA inspectors violated the Constitution by attempting to enter his company without a search warrant. Well, you can forget it. Mr. Kennedy's bill would make it unlawful to evict OSHA and other government inspectors from your plant or home. As long as a government inspector testifies he thought he was complying with the law and operating in good faith, i.e., with a "clean heart and empty head," (is this definition meant to prohibit many bureaucrats from having to commit perjury?) YOU WILL GO TO JAIL for threatening to evict him.

Police officers, of course, cannot take such stern measures — even against suspected murderers. So just think: In this land where we came to be free, a suspected murderer would have more rights after passage of the Kennedy bill than an innocent businessman who has not been accused of anything!

Next, the bill would make it a federal crime to refuse to obey an agency subpoena to appear as a witness or produce documents. An agency subpoena will now be considered "an order." It does not make a bit of difference if you are convinced the subpoena is unlawful.

Next, in the Senate version of Kennedy's bill, one section — endangerment — would bootstrap certain OSHA, environmental and mine safety violations to class D felonies. That could mean prison sentences of up to five years, and fines of up to a million dollars per violation.

Next, while expanding the old strikebreaking law to make it more useful against business, the Kennedy bill takes the extraordinary step of freeing labor unions from current criminal statutes dealing with extortion and blackmail.

These are just some — though by no means all — of the objectionable features of S. 1722. Together, however, they demonstrate that in terms of potential impact, this bill is one of the most destructive Congress has considered in many years. My advice to the business community is simple: Unless significantly amended, we should resist it tooth and nail. If we do not, we may well witness the final nail being driven into our own coffin — the one containing what's left of free enterprise in America.

Today in history

Today is Tuesday, June 24, the 176th day of 1980. There are 190 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On June 24, 1497, the first recorded discovery of the mainland of North America occurred as explorer John Cabot sighted land between what is now Halifax and southern Labrador.

On this date: In 1940, during World War II, the French government of Marshall Petain signed an armistice with Italy.

In 1948, the Soviet Union began the Berlin blockade by halting road and rail traffic between Berlin and West Germany. The confrontation was ended by the Berlin Airlift.

In 1956, Col. Gamal Abdel Nasser was elected president of Egypt.

In 1968, Congress set the observance of five annual national holidays on Mondays to increase the number of three-day weekends.

Five years ago, an Eastern Airlines jetliner carrying 124 people from New Orleans to New York crashed in flames at the edge of Kennedy International Airport. A total of 110 people were killed.

Last year, dozens of people were hurt and 100 were arrested as 1,000 motorists and truckers, angered by a gas station closing, blocked an intersection in suburban Philadelphia.

Today's birthdays: Entertainer Jack Carter is 57. Magazine editor Norman Cousins is 68. Pro golfer Billy Casper is 49. Thought for Tday: To his god, every man is Napoleon... hence the popularity of dogs — Aldous Huxley (1894-1963)

Sexual harrassment

by ART BUCHWALD

WASHINGTON -- If you want to know where I stand on sexual harassment in the office — I'm against it. When women talk about sexual harassment, they immediately think of men forcing their attentions on innocent young ladies and threatening them with dire consequences if they don't respond favorably to their advances.

But there is another side to every story. There are some women (we won't know the numbers until the latest census figures are released) who are provoking the men in their offices, either to advance their careers, or just because they're bored with their jobs.

The biggest question the white-collar worker faces is to decide who is harassing whom.

The answer is obviously in the eye of the beholder.

This is how the women's liberation people see it:

"Miss Samuels, after you finish typing these papers would you bring them over to my apartment tonight?"

"No, no — a thousand times no. I'd rather die than say yes."

"I'll remember this, Miss Samuels, when your efficiency report comes up. You know they will be laying off people next month."

"Oh please, Mr. Schlitz, don't give me a bad report. I am the sole support of my mother, and if I lose this job we will not be able to pay our mortgage and we will be thrown out of our condominium into the street."

"It's not my decision. It's yours. Shall we say eight o'clock at my place?"

"You don't give me any choice. Oh mother, please forgive me. I'm doing it for you."

Now this is how the men in the office tell it:

"Mr. Schlitz, I don't believe I will be able to finish the typing you want by five o'clock. Would it be all right if I call you at home when it is done, and then you could come over to my place and pick it up?"

"Miss Samuels, do you mind not leaning against my desk in that slit skirt. It's very distracting."

"I'm sorry, but these skirts are so comfortable in the hot weather. If you wish, I can pick up some wine on the way home so you can relax and study the report."

"I don't think my wife would approve of that idea."

"Oh tush, Mr. Schlitz. You're entitled to a mid-life crisis like everybody else."

"The offer is very attractive, but I don't believe a man should get personally involved with someone in his own office."

"That's your business. I'll tell Mr. Carlyle your reports won't be ready by tomorrow and the client will just have to wait. By the way, there's a big rumor that heads are going to roll next week. I hope yours isn't one of them. You're an awfully nice guy."

"All right, Miss Samuels. I'll be over, but I have to be home by 11:30. My wife is afraid to watch Johnny Carson alone."

The real truth concerning sexual harassment in the office may lie somewhere between the two:

"Miss Samuels."

"Call me Linda."

"Do you mess around?"

"What a terrible question. Why do you ask?"

"No reason. It just came out."

"Well, the answer is I don't."

"Forget I mentioned it. Shall we get to work?"

"Okay. I'm free Friday night."

Gold watch fine in Peking

By Don Graft

There have been some amazing developments out of China in the few short years of its turnaround from xenophobic keeper of the ultra-radical communist faith to cooperative member of the world community.

It has turned from reviling the industrialists of the capitalist world to inviting their business and advice.

Instead of slamming its door on the outside world, it is now promoting itself as a tourist attraction.

After decades of squaring off against the America paper dragon, it is now a virtual ally.

An authoritarian society in which there is only one truth and that is the one laid down in Peking. It even briefly experimented with semi-free speech.

But the most amazing may be yet to come.

Deng Xiaoping, the diminutive vice premier who is the political giant of the post-Mao regime, has repeated his intention to retire from his government post shortly. To be sure, he will remain Communist Party vice chairman and thus in position to continue exercising real power.

But even this job he intends to relinquish by 1985. By that time, he anticipates he won't be functioning so effectively and, as he recently told visiting American journalists, he wishes "to live a little longer."

An attitude that many Western leaders, political and business, will find the least inscrutable. Deng by then will be 81, so there is nothing unusual in thinking of retirement.

But there definitely is so in the context of Communist leadership. In opting for voluntary withdrawal from the active exercise of supreme power, he has for all practical purposes no predecessors. If communism's strongmen are known for one thing other than the ruthlessness necessary to achieve power it is their determination to hold on to it until the end — ultimate in the form of departure from this earth, naturally or otherwise, or forced abdication.

Lenin, Stalin, Mao and even heretic Tito went with their official boots on. Brezhnev appears intent upon following suit. Krushchev, Poland's Gomulka, Czechoslovakia's Novotny and other lesser lights had to be shown the door. The pattern holds largely true even among the non-governing parties of the West.

Deng's phased retirement is reported to have a very practical purpose. He wants to position in power younger pragmatists of his own bent well before his final departure in order to ensure against a return of the hardliners.

In so doing, he is turning once again to the West, employing a tactic democratic leaders have often found of use in promoting continuation of policies.

And if he carries it off, he will be doing more than effecting a turnaround of Communist custom. He also will be going against thousands of years of Chinese custom. Emperors and dynasties, like commissars and central committees, traditionally have hung on to the bitter end.

And in a past-conscious culture, where today's communist rulers have just rehabilitated the reputation of the last emperor, that could be the more challenging reversal.

No trade-off
In other news from the same quarter, China and the Soviet Union have signed a new trade agreement.
It does not signal a mending of their badly frayed relationship, however. It is reported to call for a 1980 bilateral trade total of some $375 million — down 25 percent from 1979.
By way of comparison, China's trade with its top partner, Japan, hit $6.2 billion last year. With the United States, the figure was $2.3 billion and West Germany was close behind.
The Chinese are clearly putting their money where their international politics are these days.

Divorce counseling helps families on brink of split

By TIMOTHY HARPER
Associated Press Writer
MADISON, Wis. (AP) — When he was six, Bobby wanted to live with his mom and dad. The problem was, Mom and Dad didn't want to live with each other any more.

Both of them wanted to live with Bobby. Their divorce, already messy, became downright nasty in a bitter legal battle over custody of their child.

Each began lining up psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers and other expert witnesses. Then one of the lawyers suggested a different approach, an impartial University of Wisconsin-Madison "divorce counseling" program.

The parents agreed, and went to see Dr. Jack Westman, the UW psychiatrist who runs the program geared to helping judges decide custody cases according to what's best for the child rather than what's best for the parents. Along the way, the whole family undergoes extensive counseling to prepare for life after divorce.

"Most parents going through divorce aren't aware of how it's affecting the kids," Westman says. "Parents get so involved in their own personal problems that they are preoccupied with tending to their own needs."

"The divorce decision is made in the interests of the adults, not the child. It's part of our long tradition of children being treated as chattel." Westman says children, often bewildered by the whole divorce process, usually try to withdraw from the situation rather than be manipulated by their parents' selfish interests.

"One prominent feeling," he says, "is that they don't want to take sides."

Parents, he says, should realize that a child's problems, even years after the divorce, may be related to the breakup of the family. Children under age 6 may develop defiant attitudes, unfounded fears or regressive behavior such as bedwetting or thumb-sucking. School-age children most often have academic troubles, while teenagers frequently become involved with alcohol, drugs or sex.

"Children need someone to understand their entire life structure," says Westman, himself the father of three boys. "They need someone to go to bat for them."

When Westman is called into a divorce case, usually by a lawyer or judge, he organizes a "team" that includes the child's court-appointed lawyer, UW psychiatry students and other university specialists.

"The whole thing is really counseling, trying to advise the parents and the court," Westman says. "The primary purpose is to make everyone concerned with the case more aware of the needs of children." Spending an average of three months on each case, the team typically conducts about 20 interviews with everyone from school teachers and employers to the parents.

"We interview all family members in all possible combinations," Westman says. "We find people beginning to relate to each other in different ways."

He says that as parents realize that the counseling team is genuinely concerned with the child, they are willing to make concessions.

"No matter how inept a parent is, deep down he or she wants what is best for the child," Westman says.

He says that in about two-thirds of the cases, one parent is finally persuaded to sacrifice custody in the interest of the child.

In cases where the parents never do agree, judges have invariably followed Westman's custody recommendations.

Even after a decision is reached, Westman stays in contact with the family. "In most cases we remain involved, sometimes on the order of the judge, but usually because the parents ask us," he says.

That's what happened in Bobby's case. After the judge followed Westman's recommendation and granted custody to the father, the mother continued counseling.

"The more I went, the more I understood," she says. "At the time, I was pretty tired of fighting. I was worn out, and it was affecting the way I could take care of my son."

After re-establishing her life, the mother went back to Westman to seek custody. Bobby, meanwhile, was not adjusting well to his father's second wife and her children.

So when Westman recommended that the mother be granted permanent custody, four years after the divorce, the father reluctantly agreed.

"Divorce doesn't just happen the night mom or dad walks out," Westman says. "It starts well before and continues long after. Divorce is a way of life."

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck
Every time my husband and I take a trip, we have visions of coming home and sharing it with our friends.

We don't expect to enter the city on donkeys traveling streets lined with palm-carrying enthusiasts, or deliver a message from a hillside while thousands sit at rapt attention.

But is it too much to ask for a small group to listen politely and occasionally say, "That sounds wonderful!" or "I hope you took pictures?"

Well, it never happens. We always draw the couple who (a) were there 20 years ago before it became run down with tourists or (b) saw the only thing there worth seeing.

The other night, we regaled a group with our trip to Athens. We told them we had seen the Acropolis by day and night, Hadrian's Arch, Mt. Lycabettus, Constitution Square, the Royal Gardens, the Stadium, the Athens Cathedral, the National Archaeological Museum, the Gennadeion, Daphni, Eleusis, Piraeus, the Temple of Poseidon and Cape Sounion.

One of our guests, Stan, looked at me and said, "You didn't eat at Styros Herculoburger?" I shook my head. "Then you didn't see Greece," he snorted. As his wife entered the room he said, "Doris, can you imagine the Bombecks went all the way to Greece and didn't eat at Styros Herculoburger?"

Doris dropped into a chair like she was just bitten by a viper. "YOU'RE KIDDING! Next thing you'll tell me you didn't visit the Athos Flea Market?"

"Where's the Athos Flea Market?" I asked. "Oh, Stan!" she moaned. "I cannot believe what I am hearing. Tell me they didn't pay more than $1.50 for genuine 500-year-old icons!"

It isn't just Stan and Doris. Every trip we take is a step backward.

When we saw the Pope in Rome, Fred and Ellis said,

"You didn't meet his boss?" When we went to Hawaii, Frank and Mary Ann said, "You missed Don Ho?"

When we ate at a fashionable restaurant in New Orleans, Marge and Joe said, "You didn't get in the back room?"

When we went to Florida in the summer, Sheila and Mark said, "Pity! You missed the alligators."

Stan and Doris aren't always lucky either. As my husband flipped the switch on the projector to show the first of 700 slides, I turned off the lights and locked the door. "You missed your chance," I smiled.

French want to cut draft as Americans ponder reactivating

PARIS (AP) — While Americans talk about bringing back the draft, the French Parliament is talking about shortening conscription — and perhaps even abolishing it.

Pacifists want the draft abolished on moral grounds, while some generals and civilian defense experts are saying it should be eliminated because it nets far more recruits than France needs.

The most concrete proposal before the parliamentary committee probing France's military readiness is to shorten the period of conscription from 12 months to four.

The proposal was made by committee head Yves Lencien, a Gaullist and veteran of France's Indochina wars. Lencien complains that the army that made Napoleon great is today "half-motivated, half-trained, half-equipped for half-clear missions."

In testimony before Lencien's committee, Defense Minister Yvon Bourges said he was in favor of keeping the year-long period. "It shows the enemy that the will to resist him will go as far and last as long as is needed," he said.

France has the biggest armed force in Western Europe. Britain, Ireland and Luxembourg are the only Western European countries that have no draft. The rest conscript their young men for periods ranging from up to 32 months in Greece to as little as six months in Austria and three in Finland.

The Lencien committee's work ties in with other critical military choices facing this country, such as whether to build the neutron weapon. A decision is expected next month.

French military generals are sharply divided on the draft issue. Those who believe France's security depends on its nuclear power think the government is drafting far more youths than it needs. Those who expect another European war to be fought on the ground see conscription as a vital factor.

Former Defense Minister Pierre Messmer proposed to the Lencien committee that it abolish the draft and depend wholly on volunteers. Lencien believes the elite strike forces used to protect France's overseas interests can be manned by paid volunteers.

Jewish group sponsors defensive training

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The 32 people, some of them in their early teens, take turns aiming their guns. Those who've never fired before use .22-caliber rifles, while the more experienced shoot semi-automatic weapons.

Their targets are silhouettes of human figures, each with a swastika painted in the middle.

"We want to psych up the Jews a little," says Irv Rubin, national chairman of the Jewish Defense League. The militant group has stepped up classes in weaponry and martial arts this month in response to what Rubin sees as a trend toward anti-Semitic candidates recently attracting considerable votes in California.

Sailing for England for the filming reminds him of his favorite film, "Yankee Doodle Dandy," which he said he almost didn't star in.

BOONE, Iowa (AP) — President Dwight D. Eisenhower and his wife Mamie may have lived in the White House for eight years, but their long-time friend, comedian Bob Hope, says they were "middle class America to the core, right out of a Norman Rockwell painting."

Hope told a crowd of about 5,000 at the dedication of Mrs. Eisenhower's birthplace Sunday that the former first lady was "the most down-to-earth person I ever met."

He recalled how she once chided her husband. "Ike was complaining about autograph hounds, how they always were after them. She said to Ike, 'Suppose they never asked you,'" said Hope.

Names in the news

NEW YORK (AP) — Rosalynn Carter's in, but her mother-in-law Lillian Carter and her brother-in-law Billy are out. Pierre Elliott Trudeau is in, but his estranged, swinging wife Margaret is out. Martina Navratilova's in, rival Tracy Austin's out.

The Ins are among the 73,500 people listed in the 41st edition of Who's Who. The Outs are the people Who Aren't Who anymore. But the whys and wherefores of the ins and outs are somewhat mysterious, People magazine says.

"I guess people just do get overlooked in the grand scheme," explained Who's Who associate publisher Oscar Treiman.

The Ins have done "something constructive that will enhance our lives," he said.

NEW YORK (AP) — He won't be swinging fists as a gangster or hoofing as a "Yankee Doodle Dandy," but James Cagney says the reason he's going back into films is "to keep me busy."

Cagney has a role in "Ragtime," his first film in 19 years.

"The doctors said I should do something to keep me busy, to stay healthy. So I'm doing 'Ragtime' for Milos Forman," Cagney told the Daily News in a copyright story today.

Fighting the effects of a stroke and diabetes, Cagney, at 80, is pleased with his farm life in Stanfordville in upstate New York, but looks forward to filming in September.

"What the hell else could a man ask for? Look at the land. What else is there in life? This is it. I've got 90 head of cattle, nine horses and we grow and sell hay. I've got it all."

Bricks falling from cathedral

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bricks are falling from that hallowed cathedral of broadcast journalism, CBS News.

Last week, in a strange little turn, CBS' longtime diplomatic correspondent and onetime disciple of Edward R. Murrow Marvin Kalb, left the network for NBC.

What was strange about the move was not just Kalb's leaving after 23 years (in which he established himself as one of the pillars in the CBS News shrine), but the manner in which it was announced. CBS seemed awfully defensive about Kalb's departure, suggesting Kalb was leaving because he'd demanded a guarantee that he would appear in a specific number of Evening News reports each week.

That, CBS suggested, would be like managing the news. "We would have distorted our news content," CBS News chief Bill Leonard said in a statement. "This, of course, we would not do."

The statement angered NBC News President Bill Small, who said, "I can't believe Bill Leonard said that. He must have been misquoted." (He wasn't, a CBS spokesman said.)

Neither was Kalb pleased. He lamented CBS' "unquenchable desire to always make as many details (of a contract) public as possible," and said: "It simply boiled down to the fact that Bill Small is an old friend, a crackerjack newsman and a superb television manager. He offered me a contract with a far broader and wider range of opportunities."

Small did not, he later said promise Kalb guaranteed appearances on the NBC Nightly News.

The buddy factor probably figured large in the Kalb move. Small, after all, had been a CBS News honcho himself.

He had been CBS bureau chief in Washington before becoming a senior vice president, and figured to succeed former CBS News President Richard Salant, who was retired out of the company. Small, the story goes, demanded to know where he stood on the matter, CBS said it wouldn't be rushed, and Small said goodbye.

In coming to NBC, Small followed none other than Salant, who was made vice chairman of the board of NBC.

Walter Cronkite, who, in so many ways is CBS News, will soon be leaving his anchor chair to Dan Rather.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I read you regularly, but I've never written before because I haven't had any problems. However, I must comment about the letter from the woman with multiple sclerosis.

She asked if she should tell her 13-year-old daughter about her condition. I speak from experience as a woman who has had MS for about 23 years. (The first 10 years I didn't even know I had it, as I had no visible symptoms — just fatigue.) I have been in a wheelchair for nine years, but it hasn't curtailed my activities. It's electric, and I zip around everywhere. I drive a van with a wheelchair lift, so I'm fairly mobile.

First, that woman should tell all her children that she has MS without making a big deal out of it. When I was finally diagnosed, our three boys were 2, 5 and 6. I can't recall actually telling them — they just grew up knowing.

The easiest way to explain MS to children, and adults as well, is to explain that the messages from the brain are carried through the spinal cord to the other parts of the body much like the electricity for a lamp is carried from the plug in the wall outlet to the switch and light bulb. The electrical cord has insulation around it, as the spinal cord has myelin.

Multiple sclerosis means "many scars." The insulation on an electric cord should not be cut into at various places, or a short circuit might result. (What child has not been told not to play with electrical plugs and cords?) Multiple sclerosis simply means that there are many scars in the myelin, or insulation, so that the messages from the brain are unable to get through properly to make the body work. A person's particular disabilities depend upon where the scars are, which is why everyone who has MS has different problems. Kids readily grasp this idea, certainly a 13-year-old will!

My husband said from the very onset that I should do only what I WANTED to do and save my energy for family fun. Whatever I want to do, he says, "No problem, honey," and we do it.

He's packed me up five flights in temples in Japan and carried me on and off Mexican airplanes, without once hinting that being married to me was at times inconvenient. Our boys grew up sharing this attitude, and her children will, too. In return she'd better try to keep her weight down. She should also thank God it is she, not her husband, who has MS, because it would be harder for HER to get HIM up and down stairs.

As for it being a "heavy burden" for her 13-year-old to help at home, it won't be. By the time my eldest was 8, he could go to the bank, cash a check for $100, do the grocery shopping from my list and come home with the correct change. All my sons can cook, sew, do the laundry, make beds and manage money.

At first I used to lament to myself, "Poor boys, their mother can't play baseball with them," but I soon stopped after seeing how much more self-sufficient they were than other boys. My eldest is now in his second year of college — 2000 miles from home. We all had hysterics when we read his letter describing how the other boys threw their red T-shirts into the washing machine along with their white pants, and they were running around with pink clothes after doing their first laundry at college — away from Mom. Not my Kurt; he'd been doing the family laundry for five years!

Our middle son, Dirk, is a super cook and baker, and the youngest (Clark) does the home repairs — including servicing my wheelchair. If I've made them sound like angels, they aren't. They're just ordinary boys, now 19, 18 and 15. But they're very special to me.

MS has brought our family closer together. We tend to do things NOW rather than postponing them; because things may get worse, we're having our fun while we can. If everyone lived that way, the world would be a happier place.

MS is no fun, but there are worse things. I consider myself very lucky. I am only inconvenienced — not handicapped.

BECKY ZELLER IN PORTLAND

DEAR BECKY: Yours is one of the longest — but one of the most heart-warming — letters I've ever printed. Thanks for a real "upper." And God bless.

DEAR ABBY: Last Sunday a woman called and asked to talk to Victor (my husband). I said he wasn't home (which he wasn't), and then she asked if he was out of town. I asked her who wanted to know, and she said, "It's none of your business," so I hung up on her.

She called back in about an hour. This time Victor was home, so I let him answer the phone.

All he said was, "I told you not to bother me," then he hung up. I asked him who it was, and he said, "Some dizzy broad who works at the plant," but he wouldn't tell me her name. If you were in my place, would you try to find out who this "dizzy broad" is? And do you think there is some funny business going on? Victor has always been honest.

ME IN JERSEY

DEAR ME: Since Victor has always been honest, skip it. A man isn't responsible for who calls him.

MENDING MATURE MARRIAGE

By Louise Pierce

Otis and I consider ourselves good listeners. But one night I was deep in the paper and he was reading a magazine. He started our detached conversation like this:

"Do you know that people still dig cisterns?"

"What? Oh, yes, my sister's coming over for dinner."

"Thinner? Sure, I guess I am a few pounds overweight."

"Uh huh. I pounded my finger handing a picture today."

Now that was bad listening. All of us do it sometimes. But I hope that use, and you, will cut it down until it's non-existent.

Many years ago I read that one of the causes of discord in marriage is failure to listen to each other. I believe it. It's extremely annoying to be excited about something that happened to you, start relating the incident — and suddenly realize that your spouse's attention isn't with you at all.

It has been said that you can say at a party, "Did you know 99 people were shot dead at my house last night? We must do it again soon!"

If that is excusable when a big crowd is milling around in a little house, it is not pardonable in a private talk with the one you love. You should assume that anything either of you says is important enough to be given your listening and you interest.

You don't have to take my word for it. The U.S. News & World Report has an article by Lyman K. Stell of the University of Minnesota entitled "Secrets of Being a Good Listener." The blurb says, "People spend far more time listening than in reading, writing or talking. Yet few know how to hear what's being said and evaluate the message."

This author's comments are a challenge to all of us older mates. He says we were never taught how to listen well, which is why he founded a firm that now teaches this art.

His message is contained in a paragraph that states: "Listening is complex. What we read is locked on the printed page. If people are distracted, they can put aside their reading and return to it later. If they don't understand the message, they have the means to repeat it. But in listening, the message is written on the wind. It's transient. If we don't get the message the first time, there's usually no going back."

We can't refute that argument. I am reminded of the time, during World War II when Otis was overseas and my only help in our store was a deaf 4F.

Q. My husband is receiving chemotherapy for cancer. The drugs causes many hours of nausea and vomiting each time they are administered. He has no appetite and has lost a lot of weight.

We've heard that marijuana is sometimes helpful for this kind of problem. We don't want to get involved in anything shady, but we are getting desperate. Is there some way we can get it legally?

A. Cancer chemotherapy frequently produces uncontrollable bouts of nausea and vomiting that may last for days at a time. You are quite right that people who do not respond to traditional anti-nausea medications may benefit from marijuana. Improved appetite may be an added bonus.

Unfortunately, the Food and Drug Administration has not yet approved the medical use of marijuana and so doctors who are not affiliated with a major research center may have problems prescribing it directly.

However, the main active ingredient in marijuana, THC (Delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol), can be obtained from the U.S. National Institute on Drug Abuse as a research substance.

Physicians who register with the Drug Enforcement Administration, as researchers can receive either capsules or purified marijuana cigarettes after applying to the FDA for an investigational new drug application.

Florida, Michigan, Illinois, Washington, Louisiana and New Mexico have eliminated much of the hassle for doctors by obtaining FDA approval for their individual states.

More information can be obtained from the Drug Abuse Staff, FDA, Bureau of Drugs, HFD-123, 5600 Fishers Lane, Rockville, Md 20857

With a little effort from your doctor, you should be able to get your husband therapeutic marijuana (THC) legally.

Q. I am terribly worried that I may be going bald. In the last three weeks I have been losing my hair by the fistful every time I brush it.

I'm a woman in my mid-twenties. Isn't that too young for my hair to be thinning from age?

I've always been healthy, but a bit overweight. Recently I lost 25 pounds to get into better shape. Is there anything I can do to keep my hair from falling out?

A. Unfortunately, hair loss like yours is often a mystery because there are so many possible causes.

Some women temporarily lose hair after childbirth or when they discontinue birth control pills. Some medications, anti-thyroid drugs, and even some high blood pressure pills (Inderal) may also make hair fall out.

Men as well as women can experience overall hair thinning after major surgery or a serious illness with a high fever.

Hormonal imbalances, especially hypothyroidism, may also be contributing factors.

Your difficulty, however, could well be from your recent weight loss. Crash dieters frequently complain that their hair starts falling out a few weeks after shedding excess pounds.

Doctors often prescribe "tincture of time" for this kind of hair loss since it usually disappears within a few weeks or months. But if your problem persists, you should see your doctor in order to rule out any underlying illness.

Q. My five-year-old daughter recently came down with a urinary tract infection. After the doctor treated it with antibiotics, he warned her not to take any more bubble baths.

She misses them. Can a simple bubble bath actually cause urinary tract problems?

A. Yes. The FDA has received many reports of redness, rash, itching and urinary tract infections after prolonged exposure to bubble bath.

Play it safe and follow your doctor's advice.

Removing makeup stains from clothes

There's no need to panic if you accidentally get lipstick or blusher all over your favorite blouse. For non-greasy stains like those caused by powdered makeup, dampen stained areas, rub with a bar of soap or liquid detergent, rinse soap out and launder as usual. Oily stains, like those caused by lipstick, cream blusher and foundation, should be treated with a soil and stain remover, then rinsed and laundered. Oily stains can also be removed by placing stained area face down on a paper towel and sponging the back of the fabric with a dry cleaning solution. When stain is gone, moisten fabric with water, rub with soap or detergent, rinse and launder. Always treat stains promptly.

FARM BRIEFS

WASHINGTON (AP) — A small increase in the number of cattle and other livestock allowed to graze on national forest land could be permitted over the next half century, says a new report sent to Congress.

The report was delivered to Capitol Hill last Friday and primarily addresses the problems of managing timber, mining, recreation and other resources through the year 2030.

Rangeland is included in the national forest system administered by the U.S. Forest Service, an agency of the Agriculture Department. Most of it is in the West and the Great Plains.

Farmers and ranchers pay annual fees to let their animals graze on the rangelands. The fees are based on "animal unit months" or AUMs, as those are called. One AUM is the grazing for one month by one bull, cow or horse, or five sheep or goats.

Last year, the Forest Service issued about 16,000 permits for the grazing of about 1.3 million cattle, 1.2 million sheep and goats, and 14,000 horses and burros.

The fees are adjusted annually to reflect the "economic value" of the forage eaten. This year's fees are expected to total around $22 million, a $4 million boost from last season.

According to the report, the Forest Service "would work to improving range conditions so that the land can be brought back to full productivity" in the coming years.

"On land where it is clearly economical to produce forage, every effort would be made to achieve optimum production, as national policy requires," it said.

"Then a balance would be sought between forage production and grazing use. ... Land that proved to be submarginal for grazing would be put to some other use."

By 2030, the report said, livestock grazing would be increased by about 6 percent, from less than 10 million AUMs to nearly 11 million.

"As would be expected, demand for forage follows demand for red meat, although at a slower rate," it said. "With the overall rise in per capita consumption of beef and the projected growth in population, demand for beef is expected to double by 2030."

The Sierra Club's Rocky Mountain chapter in Denver filed comments on the report, signed by Connally Mears, the chapter's wilderness coordinator.

Mears said the projection for beef production "strikes a consumer like myself as just plain silly" because "a lot of people are cutting back on beef consumption for dietary and price reasons."

But Mears acknowledged the Sierra Club "understands the need for careful grazing on selected public lands, as long as grazing fees are in line with those on comparable private land."

The State of Utah, in its statement, took another view and complained "that existing upward trends in range grazing fall far short of meeting projected future demands."

"The livestock industry in the West is heavily dependent on federal grazing lands," it said.

Great Britain's Parliament, Texas Legislature similar

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Believe it or not, there are some similarities between Great Britain's Parliament and Texas' Legislature.

On a recent visit to the staid old chambers in the shadow of Big Ben's tower, a Texan listened to the House of Lords discussing money for athletes going to the Moscow Olympics while the House of Commons argued budget matters, including a 5-pence tax on margarine.

Lords opposing the government's stand against participation in the Olympics said the athletes that are going should be supported because "they are our boys, from our home villages."

The proposed margarine tax was called an attack on "the poor man's butter."

Visitors to Parliament's "strangers gallery" see government in action that is affected by more than 700 years of tradition. The big gold maces are paraded into each chamber to formally open and close each session. A wigged clerk keeps account of proceedings and attendants in frock coats and white ties keep order.

But the actions of the lawmakers in business suits, plus a sprinkling of women, are little different from those of Texas lawmakers. Maybe a little quieter.

Sessions begin at 2:30 p.m. and Commons frequently goes until 10:30. Members sit on long benches, similar to church pews, with the Government, now represented by the Conservatives, on the right of the chamber, and the Opposition, now the Labour Party, on the left.

At one late night session, one front row Lord felt the need to rest his feet on the clerk's table in front of him. A lady Lord has her shoes off and feet tucked up on the bench beside her.

In the House of Commons, one member obviously was catching a snooze, while several others were engaged in a conversation that apparently had little to do with the agenda.

You could see only a few of Parliament's 630 members in either house. Some sessions of the Texas Senate feature only the presiding officer and a few clerks.

Actually, the Houses of Parliament seat only 437 members with the other expected to be busy in other offices and meetings.

The debating style in Parliament was more conversational than the Legislature's. One member presents a subject, others question him and still others rise at their seats to add to the discussion. The Speaker settles any differences over who has the right to speak.

Occasionally there will be a "hear, hear" from those agreeing with a speaker or even a discreet hiss of disapproval.

Microphones pick up remarks of the British lawmakers as they stand at their assigned seats. Amplifiers in the backs of the benches assure everyone hears the proceedings.

A closed circuit television camera in the House of Commons advises visitors, and reminds members, of the discussion at hand.

During the afternoons, long queues of tourists, including many school children, form outside the Houses of Parliament to get a view of the legislators. However, late at night there are few visitors to the usual sessions.

One decided difference between Parliament and the Texas Legislature is security. From the days of Guy Fawkes and the gunpowder plot to current terrorist bombings, members of Parliament have been targets. Guards are everywhere.

Kennedy forces fighting for anti-nuclear platform plank

WASHINGTON (AP) — Backers of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, seeking their first big victory in the Democratic Party's platform, are fighting to retain an anti-nuclear power plank that won unexpected approval on a preliminary vote.

In the first repudiation of one of President Carter's major policies, a platform committee task force voted 17-11 Sunday night to recommend a phaseout of nuclear power and a moratorium on licensing of new nuclear power plants.

A second task force also managed to loosen the tight grip the White House has held on the platform proceedings by adopting a pro-abortion plank containing stronger language than the administration initially wanted.

Despite Kennedy's hopes of winning on these issues, the full committee continued to hand the Carter campaign victory after victory today as it went through a section of the platform dealing with government and taxes.

The panel rejected, 94 to 42, a Kennedy-backed proposal intended to keep Carter's proposed Energy Mobilization Board, now in its final stages of congressional approval, from being able to waive state environmental laws.

The committee also turned down, 90 to 44, a Kennedy proposal to repeal $5.2 million in various oil company tax advantages.

One Kennedy plank that Carter supporters willingly accepted called for curbs on "tax deductions like those for three-martini lunches, conventions, first-class travel and other expense-account deductions." Carter has long made elimination of such tax deductions one of his main tax revision themes.

Astro-Graph

by bernice bede osol

June 25, 1980

Projects or enterprises that require new techniques, methods or products should prove fortunate for you this coming year. Keep your eyes peeled for the unique and different.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be very careful today that you don't make promises for the sake of expediency. You will be held to your word, and anyone you disappoint will not readily forgive you. Find out more of what lies ahead for you in the year following your birthday by sending your copy of Astro-Graph, Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Everyone finds your generous and charitable traits admirable. However, they shouldn't be carried to extremes today. Temper your deeds with prudence.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Distinguish between positive thinking and merely being opinionated. You're more apt to be the latter than the former.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Certain types could make you feel inferior today, and you might be tempted to exaggerate your accomplishments. Boasting has a hollow ring.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You may find quite as fortunate as you.

Don't call attention to the differences.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Accomplishments that normally come very easily to you may be a trifle difficult today. Be prepared to exert adequate efforts to achieve your goals.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your ideas are apt to be quite clever today, but they could be hard to implement. Timing is all-important. Wait for the opportune moment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Think twice today before involving yourself in a friend's tangled affairs. This is especially important if financial problems are concerned.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Things done on your own today are likely to turn out successfully. Involvements requiring associates may not be so fortunate.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A failure to take your duties or responsibilities seriously could cause complications down the line. Rationalizing leads to regrets.

TAURUS (April 20-May 10) This is not a good day to gamble or speculate financially where you feel you don't have all the facts. Probe further until you do.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You are a trifle too easily swayed by others for your own good today. Listen to their advice and counsel, but also think for yourself.

Area man convicted on tax charges

Dr. Austin B. Tibbitts, DO of Amarillo, founder of the United Tax Action Patriots, (a tax protest organization) was convicted Thursday, in Midland, on three felony counts of income tax evasion, and three misdemeanor counts of willfully failing to file income tax returns.

The trial for Dr. Tibbitts was held in Midland, where he had formerly resided. Each count of the three tax evasion counts carry a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment or a $10,000 fine or both together with the costs of prosecution. Each count of failure to file counts carry a maximum penalty of one year imprisonment and a $10,000 fine or both.

Dr. Tibbitts was well known for holding public meetings and appearing on local television programs in which he would reveal his opinions as to the legality of the tax laws and other government programs.

"The best kept secret of the Internal Revenue is that the tax protest movement is gaining," Dr. Tibbitts has said.

The investigation of the Dr. Tibbitts tax liability was conducted by Special Agents of the Internal Revenue Service who are stationed in Midland, Lubbock, and Amarillo.

The three felony counts on which Tibbitts was found guilty accused him of evading federal income taxes for the year of 1974, with taxes amounting to $540, 1975, with taxes amounting to $520, and in 1976, with taxes amounting to $2,022.

MARK JENNINGS, Pampa High second baseman who graduated this spring, is headed for Seward County Community College on a baseball scholarship. Jennings hopes to play pro ball after a year or two at the Liberal, Kansas junior college. Jennings carried an overall .407 batting average as a three-year starter for the Harvesters. He batted .467 as a senior. (Staff Photo)

Jennings hopes to play pro ball

Mark Jennings is hoping a successful two-year stint at Seward County Community College will help land his signature on a professional baseball contract.

"One of my goals is to play pro ball," said Jennings, the ex-Pampa High slugger who led the Harvesters in hitting the past three years. "Hopefully, I'll do good enough at Seward and someone will see me."

Jennings, despite a composite .407 batting average and being an all-district pick for three years, hasn't had many college baseball offers. He recently accepted a baseball scholarship to attend the Liberal, Kansas junior college.

"The coach at Northwestern (Alva, Okla.) wanted to take a look at me, but I didn't go up there. There's a lot of pro scouts around the Liberal area, so I figured maybe that was the best place to go."

Jennings, whose play at second base may be just as steady as his hitting, was bound for stardom ever since he earned sophomore of the year honors in 1978 by batting .383. He hit .373 as a junior when the Harvesters claimed their first ever District 3-AAAA title.

Pampa didn't win district this season, but Jennings closed out his prep career with a flourish by batting a whopping .467.

The solidly-built 190-pounder is staying in shape by playing softball this summer.

"I don't want to get fat," he added.

Dodgers blank Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — When Los Angeles pitcher Rick Sutcliffe fizzled early this season after earning National League Rookie of the Year honors in 1979, two people didn't give up — Sutcliffe and LA Manager Tommy Lasorda.

The confidence of both player and manager showed Monday night when Lasorda kept Sutcliffe on the mound in the ninth inning to complete his first game since Sept. 30, 1979, a three-hit 3-0 shutout of the Houston Astros.

"It was a big boost to my confidence for Tommy to give the ball to me in a big game like this," said Sutcliffe, who went into the game with a 1-4 record and 7.04 earned run average. "It showed he hasn't given up on me and I certainly haven't given up on myself."

Sutcliffe had been relegated to the Dodger bullpen since May 9 because of a slow start. He got his chance to break back into the starting rotation because of an injury to Don Sutton and he was ready.

Challenging batters as he did a year ago, Sutcliffe dispensed a triple and single to Joe Morgan and a double to Cesar Cedeño in blanking the Astros, who lost their second straight game after winning 14 in a row at home.

"I owe it all to Red Adams (LA pitching coach)," Sutcliffe said. "He showed me how I wasn't getting enough momentum into my motion. I wasn't being aggressive and challenging the batters. I was able to do that tonight and that's my game."

Sutcliffe also was aggressive with the bat, clubbing a two-run single in the Dodgers' three-run fifth inning that iced the first game in an important three-game series.

Los Angeles' big fifth inning offensive ended a rare starting assignment for Houston's Joaquin Andujar, who pitched four perfect innings before yielding a lead off single to Steve Garvey in the fifth.

Andujar, 0-3, then walked Ron Cey and Bill Russell drove him home with his 12th double of the season. Andujar continued to lose control, walking Steve Yeager, who trotted home along with Russell on Sutcliffe's single up the middle.

The Astros, who came out of the game with a two-game lead over the Dodgers in the National League Western Division, credited Sutcliffe with an outstanding performance but failed to panic.

"This series is critical to Los Angeles, not us," Morgan said. "We are in first place. It is the Dodgers who have to catch us."

Sutcliffe tired in the ninth inning and Lasorda went to the mound considering taking his pitcher from the game.

"But I had to open my big mouth and asked Rick if he could get the guy out and he said yes," Yeager said. "So Tommy said 'Well, go get him out.'"

Sutcliffe retired Jose Cruz to end the game and kept Yeager's foot out of his mouth and the Dodgers a step closer to the leading Astros.

Rotary meets Glo-Valve tonight championship

Rotary used an 11-hit barrage to overwhelm One Bull Ranch, 10-4, Monday night to advance into the finals of the Little League City Tournament against Glo-Valve Service at 8 p.m. tonight at Optimist Park.

Winning pitcher was Jeff Gaines, who aided his own cause with three doubles while limiting One Bull to only five hits.

Terry Rodgers had two doubles for the winners while teammates Darin Coleman and Jackie Goldsmith had two hits each. Deirk Milum and Paul Smethers rounded out Rotary's hitting with one hit each.

Loosing pitcher was Bryan Gordzelik led One Bull at the plate with two doubles. Troy Gardner had a double and Dean Wilson and Robert Perez each singled in One Bull's losing effort.

Rotary, the American League regular season champion, is now 17-2 for the season and 4-1 in tournament play.

National League titlist Glo-Valve Service is 14-4 for the year and 4-0 in tournament play. Glo-Valve won the City Tournament in 1978 and were runners-up to One Bull Ranch last year.

Glo-Valve is coached by Wesley Simpson and managed by John W. Warner.

Rotary is coached by Ronnie Haynes.

Lau is hit as instructor

NEW YORK (AP) — After 11 years as a major league player, Charley Lau had a batting average of .255, but as the adage goes: "Them that can't do, teach."

As a teacher, Lau is batting closer to 1.000. The 47-year-old hitting instructor is baseball's premier student of swat.

Lau spent a year each with the Baltimore Orioles and Oakland A's before beginning an eight-year stint in 1971 as hitting instructor at Kansas City, where he molded hitters like George Brett and Hal McRae. In 1979, he went to New York, where he has worked with many of the Yankees' young hitters.

"I don't know a happy .200 hitter," says Lau. "They are always searching, always trying."

When they come to him, he stresses four things.

"When I analyze a hitter, there are four things I look for — position of the head, balance in the stance, weight shift and rhythm in the stance and extension with the bat," Lau said.

"If you discussed the basics with a tennis teacher or a golf pro, the same terms would come up," Lau said. "I use a golf swing to illustrate the basic principles, especially in terms of transferring the weight."

Two years after Lau took up with the Royals, a pair of hitters named Brett and McRae came along.

"When I started with Charley, I was hitting .188," McRae said. "I had just come over from the National League (Cincinnati) and was trying to hit the ball out of the park."

"He changed my style of hitting and also my philosophy."

Lau's philosophy is consistency. He allows hitters to reach their potential by teaching them to make an unatural motion look and feel natural. He believes in spraying the ball to all fields and letting the home runs come when they may.

"He helped me a great deal, and I'm sorry he left," said McRae, who would have won the AL batting title with a .332 average in 1976 had it not been for Brett, who batted .333.

"He studied hitting as much as anybody and has a better understanding than most coaches of what it takes to hit consistently," McRae said. "He tried to keep you from getting streaky, he taught from that standpoint."

The highest Lau ever hit in the majors was .295 with Baltimore in 1966, but the previous year was more representative of his hitting skills — he batted .264. He was better known in his playing days with the Milwaukee Braves when he caught Warren Spahn's second no-hitter in 1961.

Palmer hates to run, but loves to compete

By L.D. STRATE
Pampa News Sports Editor

Wendell Palmer, a 48-year-old Pampa middle school coach, will be out to set a new decathlon record this weekend.

"Wait a minute... you might say 'Isn't that gruelling 10-event contest of strength, stamina, and speed designed for guys half Palmer's age?'"

Well, it's not if you're competing in the Masters, a track and field meet of international proportions for young and old alike. For every participant, there's a division to fit his age level.

For example, Palmer is entered in the 45-49 division where he was the dominant figure in the Hill Country Classic Meet last weekend in Mason, Texas.

Palmer brought home six gold medals and one bronze medal, taking first in the shot put (36-0), discus (130-4), javelin (125-7), high jump (5-2), long jump (15-11), 100-meter dash (13.1), and third in the 110-meter hurdles (21.1).

After that impressive display of all-around ability, Palmer feels he's ready to try for the decathlon mark this weekend at Salina, Kansas.

"The record is 4,400 points and I feel I can surpass that if I play my marbles right," Palmer said. "There's seven events I'm pretty strong in, but there's a couple I won't mention that I need to work at."

However, Palmer hinted he was weak in the hurdles and pole vault.

"I need to get out on the track and work on those two events, even though the hard surface here (Randy Matson Field) hurts my legs," Palmer said.

Palmer started participating in the Masters while a graduate student at East Texas State in 1974.

"I feel it's a worthwhile program and I really enjoy it," he said. "The Masters program had its beginnings in Texas, but it's really getting to be a big thing all over now."

The Masters has expanded to include not only national meets, but worldwide meets as well, Palmer added.

"There's past world record holders and former Olympians entered," Palmer said. "Of course they're older now, but they still like to compete."

Palmer recalls a 74-year-old man running in last weekend's Masters meet.

"He ran the 10,000 meters in 55 minutes which is pretty outstanding for a man his age," Palmer said.

WENDELL PALMER...chasing decathlon record.

Palmer, who coaches football, basketball, and track, said the Masters meet is just perfect for persons who want to do more than just get out and jog.

"Personally I hate to run," Palmer confessed, "I guess that's why I concentrate on the field events. But it's a good program for older people who like to run competitively."

Brewers shut out Oakland A's, 8-0

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Reggie Cleveland, making only his third start in three years, pitched a six-hitter and fill-in second baseman Jim Gantner drove in six runs, leading the Milwaukee Brewers to a 8-0 victory over the Oakland A's Monday night.

Gantner singled in the second inning, scoring Ben Oglivie from second, and hit a grand slam home run in the sixth to wrap up a six-run outburst against A's starter Brian Kingman, 3-7. He picked up his sixth RBI with an eighth-inning single.

The grand slam was Gantner's first homer of the year. He moved into the starting lineup recently when American League batting leader Paul Molitor suffered a minor injury.

Cleveland, 5-2, pitched his first complete game since 1977 when he was a starter for the Boston Red Sox. He became a reliever in 1978 but started one game for the Brewers late last season and another last week.

Cecil Cooper singled with one out in the sixth to open Milwaukee's big rally. Gorman Thomas doubled and Oglivie was walked intentionally to load the bases.

Kingman forced in a run by walking Sixto Lezcano, and Mark Brouhard singled to left for the second run of the inning.

Consumer prices rose .9 percent in May

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices rose 0.9 percent in May, the same as in April and far less than the rampant pace set during the first three months of 1980, the government said today.

If May's price rise continues for an entire year, the annual inflation rate would be a compound 10.9 percent, the Labor Department said. From January through March, that rate exceeded 18 percent.

Some economists predict that the annual inflation rate could fall to 8 percent or less by the end of the year, as interest rates continue to fall and the recession continues.

In a companion report, the Labor Department reported that Americans' take-home pay in May fell 0.9 percent. In the past year, earnings adjusted for inflation have dropped 7.7 percent.

The moderating inflation trend in May was led by gasoline, which declined in price by 0.6 percent, and food, which increased a slight 0.3 percent, two-tenths of a percentage point less than the month before. These figures are seasonally adjusted.

The drop in gasoline prices was the first since August 1977, the department said.

Only housing costs jumped sharply — 1.5 percent — as recent drops in mortgage rates have yet to show up in the Consumer Price Index, the department reported. Housing expenses accounted for three-quarters of May's increase in the Consumer Price Index, it said.

The report also showed: —Substantial declines in the price of beef, pork, and eggs, which offset increases for fruits, vegetables, dairy products, cereal, bakery products and sugar. Restaurant meals and alcoholic beverages rose 0.5 percent and 0.7 percent, respectively, in May.

—Home financing costs shot up 3 percent, while the price of homes rose 1.3 percent. Although government-backed FHA and VA mortgage rates dropped substantially, conventional rates continued to rise.

—Natural gas and electricity charges increased 4.8 percent and 2.5 percent, respectively, while oil prices were down.

—Rents rose 1 percent.

—Despite rebate programs to stimulate an ailing auto industry, new car prices were up 1 percent. Automobile financing charges also continued to increase substantially, up 4.3 percent.

—Taking public transportation cost 1.5 percent more last month. This increase was particularly evident for airline and intercity train travelers, as well as taxi riders.

—Apparel prices and upkeep costs declined 0.2 percent, reflecting early summer sales.

—Medical care rose 0.5 percent, the smallest increase in the last 12 months.

—Entertainment cost 0.6 percent more in May than April, but that was the smallest monthly increase this year.

The drop in real spendable earnings — what is left after deductions for Social Security and federal income taxes — was slightly less in May than in April, when it fell 1.1 percent.

As a result of double-digit inflation and now the recession, this measure of take-home pay has now fallen for 12 consecutive months.

The Consumer Price Index stood at 244.9 in May, before seasonal adjustments. This means that goods and services that cost consumers $100 in the 1967 base period cost $244.90 last month.

The index was 14.4 percent ahead of the level in May 1979, the Labor Department said.

Public Notices

NOTICE OF INTENT TO ABANDON OR TO DISCONTINUE SERVICE

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company ("Santa Fe") hereby gives notice that on or about June 30, 1980 it intends to file with the Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D.C. 20423 an application for a certificate of public convenience and necessity permitting the abandonment of a line of railroad known as the Clinton District of Santa Fe's Plains Division, extending from Mile Post 0.0 at Pampa, Texas to Mile Post 136.69 at Clinton, Oklahoma, a distance of 136.69 miles in Gray Wheeler and Hemphill Counties, Texas and Roger Mills and Custer Counties, Oklahoma. The line for which the abandonment application will be filed includes the stations of Heston, Texas (Mile Post 8.4); Laketon, Texas (Mile Post 18.6); Mobeetie, Texas (Mile Post 30.3); Briscoe, Texas (Mile Post 39.4); Allison, Texas (Mile Post 50.3); Beydon, Oklahoma (Mile Post 61.3); Cheyenne, Oklahoma (Mile Post 69.3); Hammon Junction, Oklahoma (Mile Post 105.4); Butler, Oklahoma (Mile Post 116.6); and Stafford, Oklahoma (Mile Post 126.4).

The reasons for the proposed abandonment are that the Clinton District is unprofitable and that the line requires substantial maintenance expenditures which are not justified from an economic standpoint.

This line of railroad has appeared on the system diagram map in category 1 S 1,21.20 (B) (1) since March 31, 1977.

The interest of railroad employees will be protected by conditions specified by this Commission in Oregon Short Line and the Union Pacific Railroad Company—Abandonment Portion Goheen Branch (Docket AB-36 (Sub-No. 2)).

Any interested person, in response to this notice, is entitled to take either of the following actions:

1. File with the Interstate Commerce Commission written comments containing:
  - a. Exact name and address to the commenting party;
  - b. Brief statement of interest in the abandonment or discontinuance proceeding;
  - c. Specific statement of position and summary of evidence with regard to any or all of the following:
    1. Intent to offer financial assistance;
    2. Environmental impact;
    3. Impact on rural and community development;
    4. Suitability of the properties for other public purposes; and
    5. Recommended provisions for protection of employees.

Kennedy wins nuclear plank in platform

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy finally has won his own corner of the 1980 Democratic platform, but President Carter quickly made it clear that his rival's plank on nuclear energy may be worth no more than the heat it would throw from a wood-burning stove.

Interrupting its drumroll for Carter on issue after issue, the Democratic Platform Committee, meeting in Washington, threw one Kennedy's way on Monday by unanimously calling for the virtual elimination of nuclear power plants.

Though that represented a clear, if solitary, victory for the Massachusetts senator, the Carter camp got behind the plank after the Kennedy minority agreed to softer language which set no timetable for a nuclear energy phaseout.

But the proposal, for which the panel broke into long applause upon the final vote, did in fact declare that "as alternate fuels become available, we will retire nuclear power plants in an orderly manner."

Given the lack of a deadline, the president's delegates might just as comfortably have agreed to windmills on the moon — when practicable. For while Kennedy spokesman Jim Flug was insisting that "We got what we wanted," the reality of the matter had the president himself signing off on a call for more, not less, nuclear energy.

A lengthy communique issued Monday at the seven-nation economic summit in Venice declared that "We underline the vital contribution of nuclear power to a more secure energy supply. The role of nuclear energy has to be increased if world energy needs are to be met. We shall therefore have to expand our nuclear generating capacity."

The president remarked separately at a news conference in Venice that nuclear power development was more crucial in countries such as France than the United States, which has abundant coal reserves. But "we believe nuclear power will have to play a viable part" to meet U.S. energy needs, he added.

Elsewhere on the political front:

—Independent John B. Anderson declared that a tax cut now rumored under consideration by the administration would come too late to help those suffering most from the recession. "We are fooling ourselves if we believe that a simple $20 billion to $30 billion tax cut... to boost consumer spending offers much hope of alleviating the immediate suffering of the unemployed or the financially hard-pressed," he said in Washington.

—Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker Jr. said he would accept, if asked, the No. 2 spot on Ronald Reagan's ticket but "I don't think that particularly suits my political personality... I don't think the diligent performance of vice presidential duties leave much room for dissent."

Baker is often mentioned as a contender for the slot, but Reagan insiders say off the record that George Bush and Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana are the top prospects.

—House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, in Boston, called Anderson a political opportunist who changed his views as a longtime conservative Republican only when "a gleam came in his wife's eye a few years ago that her husband was smart enough to be president."

Stuart Eizenstadt, the president's chief domestic adviser, acknowledged at the Democratic platform session that the energy plank seemed to be at odds, at least in tone, with the Venice communique. But he said the two positions were essentially consistent, and the compromise language adopted by the panel "is closer to our policy as expressed in Venice."

Late Monday night, the platform group rejected Kennedy's call for a single national health insurance bill, favoring instead Carter's step-by-step proposal.

NEWS SUMMARY

PULLOUT ANNOUNCED MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin announced the withdrawal of about 10 percent of its 85,000 troops in Afghanistan but indicated there were no immediate plans to pull the rest out. President Carter downplayed the announcement and said it would be meaningful only if it leads to "total, permanent withdrawal."

Radio Moscow said Monday that a Soviet division, which numbers between 7,000 and 14,000 troops, was being withdrawn from Afghanistan along with 108 tanks, in accordance with the partial pullout formula announced by the official Tass news agency over the weekend.

TUITION AID CONSIDERED WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is deciding whether to break with the past and permit some students at private and parochial schools to receive federal aid for the first time.

But opponents say the move to aid "needy" students at such schools would be unconstitutional, would represent a foot-in-the-door precedent to obtain aid for private schools on a larger scale at a later date and would undermine the nation's system of public schools. The proposal by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., would permit a maximum grant of $750 a year to help pay private school tuition for a student from a family with income of not more than $15,000 a year.

NEW YORK BLAZE NEW YORK (AP) — It was the kind of blaze big-city firefighters have learned to dread — flames spurring from a 42-story Park Avenue skyscraper, more than 100 firefighters felled by toxic smoke and heat and an unknown number of people trapped inside the concrete and glass tower.

The fire in the Westaco Building, opposite the fashionable Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in midtown Manhattan, raged out of control for three hours Monday night as shards of glass fell onto the street below. Streams of water gushed from the 20th floor executive offices of the Bank of America, where the blaze apparently began.
